Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Thursday, February 4, 2010

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated January 20, 2010, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome. Join me in the opening day prayer.

Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Lorieau.

That enthusiasm, ladies and gentlemen, will carry through this whole Assembly through the spring session. Thank you. Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude, the details of which are in your program. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. It was reconstituted here, in Alberta's capital city of Edmonton, in 1997, and the band is today under the direction of Captain David Shaw, who is in the Speaker's gallery. Maestro.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, please admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and Mrs. Kwong, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Please be seated.

Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen, and welcome to the Third Session of the 27th Alberta Legislature. It is my honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne, as it has been my honour to serve Albertans as Lieutenant Governor over these past five years.

I hope the House will indulge me for a moment as I reflect on what a privilege it has been for my wife, Mary, and me to see so much of our province and meet so many of its amazing people during my time as Her Majesty's representative in Alberta. This job has been the highlight of a rewarding career that took many unexpected turns, such as being in a Grey Cup, Stanley Cup, and a few other things. No one could be as surprised as I am that my road brought me to where it did. I'm grateful for every day and every experience I've had as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor.

Much has changed in our province since I was appointed to this role. The unprecedented growth we knew has given way to the deepest recession the world has seen in half a century. Our world may have changed, but our people have not. They remain hard working and innovative, entrepreneurial and compassionate, and, most of all, confident about our province and its future. That confidence is well placed. Our province has substantial cash reserves and low taxes, providing a solid foundation from which we can make a strong recovery. Albertans have worked hard to earn this fiscal advantage, and the actions we take now will ensure that our province emerges from these difficult times even stronger than before.

Alberta's Fiscal Advantage

Alberta's resource-based economy brings with it one of the most volatile revenue streams in North America, providing surpluses in good times but prone to sudden economic reversals. Your government took aggressive steps to create a cushion for the inevitable downturn, improving the fiscal position of the province by almost $50 billion while maintaining low taxes. A $23 billion debt was paid off in full, and nearly $25 billion has been saved and invested on behalf of the people of Alberta.

Most of the money we saved went into the sustainability fund, $17 billion in cash reserves which could be called upon quickly if the province experienced a sudden drop in income. These dollars are now at work protecting municipalities, social programs, educational institutions, and the health care system from the kind of cuts seen in other places. The sustainability fund enables Alberta to keep investing in the public infrastructure we know we will need for tomorrow at a time when we can take advantage of lower costs. We will continue to strengthen the province's transportation, health care, and education infrastructure in all regions of the province.

The government's wise financial and capital planning is now supporting tens of thousands of jobs across the province. While other jurisdictions are cutting back and growing their infrastructure deficits, Alberta is improving its competitiveness and looking forward with confidence.

Alberta capital bonds will be introduced later this month, available only in Alberta and only to Albertans. Albertans are proud of our province and want to invest in its future. Backed by our province's triple-A credit rating, the bonds will be one of the safest investments possible in today's economic climate and offer Albertans a way to invest directly in our province. Proceeds raised through this sale of bonds will go toward building accommodations for Alberta seniors, including continuing care and supportive living facilities.

Alberta's fiscal strength has allowed the government to keep taxes low and maintain support for health and education. As we work to be back in the black in three years, Albertans will continue to enjoy the highest incomes, the lowest taxes, and the most advanced public infrastructure in Canada.

The sustainability fund is a great backstop in difficult times, just as this government planned, but we can't rely on it alone to carry us through. Government must live within its means. We must and will carefully manage spending, with a focus on key priorities such as health, education, and supports for vulnerable Albertans.

With a shared effort over the next two years this year's budget will bridge the recession and position Alberta to take full advantage of the recovery.

Improving Health Care

Alberta ranks near the top in Canada on health spending per capita, yet the results are not what Albertans expect. Your government believes Albertans deserve better results for their health care dollars.

The Minister's Advisory Committee on Health has recently proposed improvements to the publicly funded health system to make it more patient focused. Your government will act on these recommendations, including creating a new Alberta health act this fall and setting principles for the development of legislation, policy, and program delivery changes across the system. This work will be guided by Albertans themselves, who will be engaged in the evolution of the health system from its first steps.

Part of this evolution will be predictable funding. Budget 2010 will provide stable, five-year funding to Alberta Health Services. This will give our health care partners the security of knowing that growing cost pressures will be addressed. At the same time we will share the challenge of focusing ever more vigorously on better performance in key areas such as wait times and access so Albertans will proudly be able to say that their health care system is the best in the country.

The health system must be accountable to Albertans. Your government will go beyond statistical measures of the health system's performance and seek input from Albertans themselves on whether the system is performing to their expectations. We will report back to Albertans on action taken and progress made.

Building Safe, Caring Communities

Albertans believe that safe, strong, and caring communities are important to our quality of life. Government actions will continue to support these values.

The Alberta gang reduction strategy will provide a comprehensive, long-term approach to suppress gang crime in Alberta. Civil forfeiture legislation is already in place, and witness protection legislation will be tabled this session. We will bolster the front lines of Alberta police forces with 100 new officers, the fulfillment of a three-year, 300-officer commitment.

Government's goal of creating 14,000 new child care spaces will be met and surpassed this year, allowing us to focus on maintaining existing spaces and supporting the creation of new spaces in the areas of most need.

Your government will continue working with its partners to deliver on the pledge to develop 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012 and on the 10-year plan to end homelessness.

Social programs for Albertans will become better integrated and more focused on the people they were created to serve. These improvements will make it easier for Albertans in need to access information and assistance as well as transition between programs as they move from childhood to adulthood to their senior years.

This government is concerned that only one-third of Albertans belong to workplace pension plans. We will continue to push the national agenda for reforms that help people plan for a financially sound retirement. A pan-Canadian solution is preferable, but if an agreement cannot be reached, we are prepared to join with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to develop options for a regional plan to improve retirement income prospects for future retirees, of which I'm one, I think.

Increasingly Competitive in a Global Economy

The global economy is undergoing profound changes, with significant impacts on the lives of Albertans. Our people are naturally entrepreneurial, and government has supported their drive to succeed with training, information, services, and counselling, but we can do better.

Albertans know that a good education is an essential foundation to prepare for the future and that our thinking in this area must constantly evolve. In the coming months we will launch a new vision for education, making the improvements needed to ensure that learning in Alberta is flexible and ready to meet the needs of the next generation.

Your government will strengthen the province's research and innovation system under the Alberta Innovates umbrella. The new system will be more responsive to the needs of researchers and entrepreneurs and help Alberta maintain a leadership role in the global economy. Our great Alberta spirit of competition will do the rest.

Our province must be a magnet for the talented individuals and businesses its economy needs. Your government will ensure that the workforce has the right skills to keep Alberta strong.

As Alberta's profile increases in the global economy, our trading partners will expect greater contact and the ability to travel directly to Alberta. We will continue to work with the federal government to expand direct air access between Alberta and its key markets. This is what business, trade, and tourism need to be competitive.

Much of Alberta's economic growth will occur in the north, and we will invest in new transportation infrastructure to support this growth.

We are working toward a western economic partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to create Canada's largest boundary-free trade and investment market. The three provinces will also work together on a joint trade mission to China and Japan to market western Canada to the growing Asian market.

Government regulation must accomplish our collective goals

while at the same time promoting business entrepreneurship, individual liberty, and creativity. Your government will aggressively pursue improvements to ensure we have effective regulations that are both clear and practical. For example, with respect to conventional oil and gas development government's approach will put more focus on assuring compliance with environmental outcomes rather than creating hurdles at the approval stage for companies accessing the land.

We will complete the review of the First Nations consultation policy and guidelines on land management and resource development this year, which will give us another tool to improve competitiveness.

Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are key and sustainable economic drivers of our province. We are a responsible producer of safe, high-quality food products that are in demand all over the world, but we need to break into new markets and beat the competition from other countries that export agricultural products, including the United States and Australia. So we will continue efforts to increase our competitive edge, foster value-added opportunities, and increase access to important international markets.

Alberta is now a major global energy player with enormous untapped potential. This sector is vitally important to all Alberta communities, with 50 per cent of our province's gross domestic product tied to energy in some way. Energy development is a partnership between Albertans, who own the resources, and industry, which develops them on Albertans' behalf. It's a partnership that has yielded tremendous benefits in economic activity that touches every corner of our province.

But the best days in Alberta's energy story are yet to come. Your government is committed to ensuring that this industry remains vibrant and continues to attract investment and create new technologies. We have the resources the world needs, including renewable forms of energy, and the know-how to develop them responsibly.

The review of Alberta's competitiveness will point the way and ensure that Alberta is an attractive place to do business. Your government will partner with industry to design the right model to encourage the investment in technology Albertans are known for. All of these initiatives are part of the government's plan to enhance competitiveness. As we lead the way out of the recession, we know there will be tough competition for investment and jobs. Those economies that offer speed, controlled costs, superior innovation, and extraordinary talent will flourish.

We must succeed in maintaining and growing our markets and attracting and developing people and innovation. This is the route to the strong communities, healthy environment, quality of life, and prosperity that we want to pass on to future generations.

Bill 1 of this legislative session, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will signal our government's resolve to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in North America. To do this, we must minimize the cost of doing business here, including the cost of regulation, while at the same time providing the world-class services that are the hallmark of competitive jurisdictions.

Alberta's next generation economy will see emphasis on attracting new industries in new sectors, serving the world's expanding need for safe food and sustainably produced minerals, forest products, and energy.

We will continue to work on a world-class, integrated petrochemical hub, drawing on the raw materials from the oil sands and adding value before they reach our markets, not afterward. The bitumen royalty in kind policy will accelerate this effort to promote new upgrading opportunities in Alberta.

A Clean Energy Future

Albertans value our province's environment. To protect our eastern slopes and boreal forest, we will continue to fight the mountain pine beetle.

Alberta's oil sands are the focus of a great deal of world attention. Your government recognizes that customers of our energy are looking for a better understanding of our environmental values and improvements in our environmental management. This is what Albertans want, too. We take great pride in our environment, and we are committed to ensuring that the right policies are in place to address the challenges of being a global energy provider.

Alberta's energy industry has met and exceeded every challenge to limit the impact of oil sands extraction and return the land to a natural state. Our history of technological breakthroughs and engineering excellence will go even further in the future toward shrinking our environmental footprint.

Around the world the drive toward cleaner energy is a fact of our times and a welcome one. The Alberta government and Alberta business leaders have chosen to lead by example in developing the cleaner fuels and clean energy know-how our customers are seeking.

As a result of the international agreement in Copenhagen we will work with the federal government to reach a thoughtful, continental approach to controlling greenhouse gas emissions, one that spurs Alberta-based investment in new technologies and the next generation economy.

While we must develop new opportunities to participate in markets like China and India, our economy will be seriously harmed if access to the U.S. energy market is impaired. Alberta fought hard for free trade, which has proven a boon for our people. We cannot lose those hard-fought advantages. We must secure access to the emerging clean energy market south of the border.

To be competitive in the new global marketplace, we must take a hard look at our own backyard. Albertans value a clean and sustainable environment, but that is not always the perception beyond our borders. Your government will continue to promote Alberta and the amazing technological advances our industries have made in environmental management such as their work on carbon capture and storage, and we will act to improve environmental performance in the oil sands. We will continue to invest in research and technology solutions to the significant environmental challenges posed by oil sands development, including the eventual elimination of tailings ponds.

Energy conservation and renewable sources of energy will become popular economic choices for consumers in the 21st century. Our province has what it takes to succeed in this economic environment, the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve.

These qualities were illustrated recently when 110 Albertans participated in the Solar Decathlon, an international competition hosted by the United States Department of Energy, in which 20 selected teams of university and college students from around the globe competed to design, build, and operate the most attractive, practical, and energy efficient solar-powered home. Team Alberta's home reflected not only the natural landscape of our province but also our values: innovation, excellence in education, and the willingness to meet the energy challenges our world faces head-on. I should mention that Team Alberta placed sixth against the best in the world, an outstanding achievement for its first time in this competition. I should say that project manager Mark Blackwell and representatives of his team are with us today. I would ask that Mark and his fellow solar decathletes rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

Alberta's Place in Canada

Albertans have always been committed Canadians. Our province's economic success has provided benefits across the country, and our economic renewal will be an essential part of the nation's economic recovery.

Albertans are proud contributors to the well-being of our country, and we have a right to be treated fairly under universal federal programs like health care or unemployment insurance. If a person is sick or out of work, the challenge to that family is no less difficult in Alberta than in any other province. Whenever Alberta receives less than other provinces for basic transfers, your government will work with the federal government to provide options to address that fiscal imbalance and close the gap. Equality is a matter of principle and basic fairness, the very hallmark of our nation.

A strong economic recovery requires an Alberta that is constantly striving to be better, stronger, and smarter. We will use expert advice from the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy to set a path to a secure and prosperous future for Albertans.

We will proudly share Alberta's story at the Olympics and elsewhere on the global stage to make the world more aware of our unique talents, products, and capabilities.

We will be a leader in clean energy production.

We will help the forestry and agricultural sectors adapt to new market realities and seize new opportunities.

We will continue to build world-class universities of the 21st century.

We will foster a competitive and innovative economy.

And we will build public services and transportation systems that unite our communities in commerce and culture.

Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen. [Standing ovation]

Thank you for that great farewell.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, please remain standing.

Your Honour, on behalf of all of the people here and on behalf of all of the citizens of Alberta thank you so much for being Alberta's Lieutenant Governor, and thank you as well for sharing your very delightful and gracious partner, Mrs. Kwong, with the people of Alberta. [Standing ovation]

I would now like to call on Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour now to table a copy of the speech graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 1

Alberta Competitiveness Act

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

The world-wide recession has highlighted the fact that we're living in a truly global marketplace. One economy can greatly influence another. That is why we need to look at the world as being one economy, one in which Alberta is determined to be a leader. To do this, we need to make sure that we are as competitive as possible.

Our government is committed to creating the conditions that will attract new businesses, innovators, and the next generation of entrepreneurs to our province. That's what Bill 1 is all about. If passed, the Alberta Competitiveness Act will increase collaboration among government, industry, business, and Albertans to enhance Alberta's competitiveness. This is the best assurance of sustainable prosperity and a high quality of life for Albertans for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I move that the speech from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration the week of February 8, 2010.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back.

I'd ask members to remain standing after the prayers so that we may pay tribute to former colleagues who have passed away.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Hon. members, there are three memorials today, unfortunately.

Mr. Ronald Armor Moore July 28, 1925, to January 9, 2010

The Speaker: On January 9, 2010, Mr. Ronald Armor Moore, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 555, passed away. Mr. Moore was first elected in the election held November 2, 1982, and served until May 18, 1993. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Lacombe for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Ron Moore served on several committees: Select Committee on Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act; Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform; Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations; Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts; Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs; Select Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act; and the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services.

Mr. Harry Elliott Alger April 8, 1924, to January 27, 2010

The Speaker: Mr. Harry Elliott Alger, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 547, passed away on January 27, 2010, at the age of 85 years. Mr. Alger was first elected in the election held November 2, 1982, and served two terms, until March 20, 1989. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Highwood for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Harry Alger served on the standing committees on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, Private Bills, Public Affairs, Law and Regulations, Public Accounts, and the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform.

Mr. William (Bill) John Yurko February 11, 1926, to January 28, 2010

The Speaker: Mr. William (Bill) John Yurko, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 440, passed away January 28, 2010, at the age of 83 years. Mr. Yurko was first elected in the by-election held February 10, 1969, and served until April 24, 1978, at which time he resigned to seek the nomination in a federal constituency. During his years of service he represented the constituencies of Strathcona-East and Edmonton-Gold Bar for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Bill Yurko served as Minister of Housing and Public Works and Minister of the Environment. As a private member he served on the standing committees on Private Bills, Standing Orders and Printing; Public Accounts; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education; Public Affairs; Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; Law, Law Amendments and Regulations; Law and Regulations; and Automobile Insurance.

Mr. Yurko was elected to the Canadian House of Commons for the constituency of Edmonton East May 22, 1979, and was re-elected on February 18, 1980. His term ended September 4, 1984. He was a recipient of the 2002 Michael Luchkovich award for outstanding public service by a parliamentarian of Ukrainian origin.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of these families who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them. In a moment of silent prayer I would ask you to remember hon. members Ronald Armor Moore, Harry Alger, and Bill Yurko as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I'd invite all present to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 32 visitors from Annunciation school. Now, we have a group of grade 6 students, some of the best and brightest in our constituency and in our province, accompanied by Mrs. Kathleen Korner, Miss Christine Melnyk, Mrs. Linda Girard. These are young people who want to grow up to be teachers, veterinarians, hockey players, pediatricians, and I'm hoping that after they enjoy their day today, some of them will want to serve the public and join us here in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, they had an unfortunate fire last summer at Annunciation school, so they had the privilege of being in a makeshift school in trailers. Lo and behold, their school has been renovated and reopened, and it's better than new. I'd like to congratulate these young folks for joining us. I'd like all members to give them a round of applause, and I'd ask the young people to rise and receive their warm applause.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students from Meyonohk elementary school from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. These students are participating in the School at the Legislature program this week. I had the privilege of meeting them this afternoon in the rotunda. I would ask all the students and teachers Mrs. Sylvester and Miss Peterson to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Terry Alston. Terry has served as a member of the board for the Association of Alberta Registry Agents for the past two years and was recently elected as the new incoming president of the association. Terry is also the vice-president and managing director of Crowfoot Plates Registry Inc. He's a very positive individual with a great enthusiasm for all the registry offices across Alberta. I now would like to ask Terry to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Blaine Maller, who is seated in the public gallery. Mr. Maller has been a great supporter of mine. I look forward to working closely with him as my political adviser and, I think more importantly, a friend. I'd ask Mr. Maller to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the audience our vice-president of policy for the Wildrose Alliance Party. I'd ask that John Hilton-O'Brien rise to receive the warm welcome of this audience.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Leduc Recreation Centre

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to share with the House a success story in my riding that helps my constituents lead healthier and more active lives. The Leduc Recreation Centre, constructed with nearly $5 million in grants from this provincial government, had its grand opening in November, which was attended by the hon. Premier and my colleague the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. It features an NHL-sized performance arena with seating for 1,800, home to the Black Gold Rodeo, and twin NHL-sized arenas, which have hosted NHL team practices and the Canadian Olympic women's hockey team. It is the only sledge hockey compatible facility in Western Canada. It serves as the official practice facility for the Edmonton Rush lacrosse team. The LRC's two indoor field houses are used for soccer, lacrosse, volleyball, badminton, basketball, and banquets.

It also features a modern aquatic centre serving from babies to seniors. The eight-sheet curling complex, with reputedly the best ice in Western Canada, served as the year-long training facility for the Chinese women's Olympic team. It has a fully equipped fitness centre, four-lane walking and running track, and a youth/education centre containing a school space and the Boys and Girls Club of Leduc. The facility is completely barrier free and has been nominated, Mr. Speaker, by the Canadian Paraplegic Association for the Percy Wickman accessibility award. It is also environmentally friendly, utilizing recycled heat and low-use water fixtures.

Mr. Speaker, this facility is a tremendous example of a great partnership between the provincial government, Leduc city and county, and the private sector and was built on time and under budget by a tremendous Alberta construction success story, PCL. I commend everyone involved in bringing this great jewel of a recreation facility to completion for the benefit of the citizens in my constituency and the surrounding areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Minister's Advisory Committee on Health

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On January 20 the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health delivered its report to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. It was my honour to serve as co-chair of this distinguished group. Entitled A Foundation for Alberta's Health System, our report proposes a new legislative framework that puts patients and families first.

Mr. Speaker, throughout our deliberations Albertans told us they want three things: clarity about what Albertans can expect from their publicly funded health system, assurance that Alberta will continue to abide by the principles of the Canada Health Act and then go further to reflect made-in-Alberta principles, and most importantly the ongoing engagement of Albertans in meaningful dialogue about new legislation and policies that affect them. Recommendations include establishing a set of overarching principles created by Albertans and embodied in a new Alberta health act, a new mechanism to support evidence-based decision-making, and provision for a future patient charter to clarify what Albertans can and should expect from their health system.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the over 1,700 Albertans who contributed to our work through an online survey, the committee met with 39 key stakeholders and received 34 detailed submissions from all sectors, including health regulatory bodies, academic faculties, and advocacy and labour organizations from across the province. We were delighted with the minister's recent announcement that the government has accepted all four recommendations, beginning with the tabling of the Alberta health act this fall. In doing so, this government has confirmed that publicly funded health care is and always will be a treasured public good in Alberta, one that will continue to be supported and improved upon through a promise to involve Albertans in the decisions about the future of their system. Delivering on that promise begins very shortly when we begin a province-wide dialogue on the committee's recommendations.

On behalf of the House, Mr. Speaker, thank you to co-chair Deborah Prowse and the other members of the committee for this tremendous contribution.

Thank you.

Optimist Club

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I believe that healthy optimism for the future is one of the characteristics that defines Albertans, and I try to live my life as an unrepentant optimist in the great Alberta tradition. But optimism alone can't move a province forward to a better tomorrow. If I am an optimist, it's because I see the amazing work that Albertans are doing every day to help their neighbours lead better lives.

That certainly applies to the members of the Optimist Club, a wonderful organization that I was pleased to visit this past Saturday morning at the Blackfoot Inn in Calgary. I was honoured to bring greetings on behalf of this House to the club's quarterly conference.

For those unfamiliar with the Optimist Club, it is a volunteer-based, nonprofit service club that enhances youth activities in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the state of Montana. This venerable organization was founded way back in 1938. They've been doing good work for over 70 years. For example, the Optimists created Optimist park in southwest Calgary and a green space up here in Edmonton.

They have sponsored workshops for teens, giving pointers on important life skills for young people; they've conducted essay and speech contests for young people; they've held annual banquets recognizing contributions of teens who have made a difference in the community; and they also have provided bursaries for students continuing their education. The club also funds the Alberta juvenile curling regional playdowns and provincial championships. The club is also involved in activities promoting musical education and youth activities in many schools.

I was very impressed by the dedication and commitment of the fine folks of the Optimist Club. They're really living the Optimist creed, which includes the following line: "be too large for worry, too noble for anger, too strong for fear, and too happy to permit the presence of trouble." In word and in deed the members of the Optimist Club give youth and all Albertans cause for optimism. On behalf of the Official Opposition and, indeed, all members of this House I want to publicly congratulate them on their hard work and efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Raymond Student Achievements

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege to rise today and recognize a group of extraordinary students in my constituency. Inside and outside the classroom the students of Raymond junior and senior high schools demonstrate what creativity, dedication, and hard work can accomplish. On November 21, 2009, the Raymond Comets defeated the Bev Facey Falcons 19-2 to win their second consecutive tier 1 football championship; 2009 was also an incredible year for Raymond Comets basketball, with both the girls' and boys' teams winning the provincial 4A championships in Red Deer. In rugby coach Dan Bickman led the Comets to victory over the LCI Clippers to win the tier 1 high school girls rugby championships. In calf roping Clay Barnson was a provincial high school champion in 2008-2009.

These students also demonstrated that they are just as determined to win inside the classroom as they are on the field or basketball court. They exceeded the provincial average for those eligible to receive Rutherford academic scholarships and the participation rate of students writing four or more diploma exams. They can also be proud of their outstanding fine arts program, including show choir and band.

Mr. Speaker, these exceptional students and their teachers give me great faith in the future of our province. I would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating them for their accomplishments, and best wishes for future success.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Alberta Initiative for School Improvement

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to acknowledge and celebrate the 10th anniversary of the Alberta initiative for school improvement, or AISI. Formed in 1999 by the government and several education partners, the mandate of AISI was to encourage awareness and involvement in continuous improvement for teaching and learning. Alberta teachers have always looked for ways to improve student learning, but AISI formalized a process so students across the province could benefit from the successes that were happening locally. It's the grassroots focus that has really driven and built momentum in AISI. The projects Alberta schools are involved in are playing a pivotal role in developing new best practices that will be relevant to students today and into the future.

Over the years AISI has encouraged those serving in the education sector to ask thoughtful questions and explore new learning approaches and methods to ensure our students have the best possible learning opportunities. Mr. Speaker, it's an influential program that is strengthening the foundation of innovation, which is the heart of our province's education system. To date AISI has inspired over 1,700 projects, that have been filled with innovation, creativity, and a true desire to improve student learning and teaching.

Teachers, administrators, parents, community members, and students have gathered in Edmonton to celebrate AISI's 10th anniversary at the annual AISI conference. The conference is showcasing over 60 creative projects developed by school jurisdictions across the province. It's a wonderful forum for education stakeholders to share ideas, learn from one another, and be inspired to achieve even more for students in Alberta.

I'd like to personally thank all of those involved in the AISI projects for their passion and contributions to the students of our great province. Congratulations for a very successful 10 years of AISI. This is an important milestone, one which all Albertans should be extremely proud of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Clerk sets in motion the daily question period, let me just say that at the conclusion of the Routine today I will be making a statement with respect to question period rotation. Today's rotation will be that outlined in my memo to all members dated February 1, 2010.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Process

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta doesn't need a new committee to maintain its competitive advantage. It needs a new government, a government that has the ability to make things better, a government that has a stable budgeting process, which has a long-term vision for the province, a government that is not devastated when oil and gas prices decline. To the Premier: how is the Premier changing the budgeting process to prevent the need for further cuts in the future?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, over the summer our minister of health will be consulting with Albertans about health care because it is Albertans' number one priority. The minister of finance will be delivering a budget tomorrow, which will roll out the details of a funding commitment to the Alberta Health Services Board.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government may have pieced together a budget for this year, but what about next year? What about 10 years from now? What is the long-term plan to establish a stable economic future for our province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition will have to wait until tomorrow for all of the budget details, but I'm sure that once he hears the budget coming from the minister, he'll be pleased with the commitment. As I said before, it will give predictable funding for Alberta Health Services Board. I just ask that we wait for tomorrow's budget.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hollow bill put forward by the Premier is a weak move to give the appearance of action. Albertans need certainty, not vague gestures. When will the Premier take real action toward ensuring Alberta's long-term competitiveness?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, competitiveness is very important. Just watching the very large global economic shifts and countries competing for people, competing for investment, we have to make sure that we position this province to be competitive in all areas – that's not just oil and gas but agriculture and forestry and tourism – and make sure that we're in a position to attract continuing investment that drives, of course, the revenue that pays for all of the social programs that we enjoy.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Public Consultation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's response to problems shows they are disconnected from what Albertans say and need. Albertans say we need family doctors; government says we need to restructure. Albertans say we need more public long-term care; government says we need to strike a committee. Albertans say we need to improve emergency wait times; government says we need new legislation. To the Premier: when Albertans need action and solutions, what is the Premier's reason for waiting six months to hear back from another committee?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, consulting with Albertans about health care is important. It's important particularly now as we start to define exactly what Albertans want from the system. Part of that, as I said before, is long-term, predictable funding. There are other ideas that will come forward from the public that the minister will then put into an Alberta health care act that will be presented to this House later this fall, and we'll be able to deal with Albertans' number one priority, which is health.

Dr. Swann: Well, what is very clear, Mr. Speaker, is that this government has no idea where they're going on health care. What Albertans have told us they need is more public long-term care, not expensive, privately run designated assisted living. Will the Premier commit to creating more publicly funded, publicly delivered long-term care beds?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member will be very pleased later next week and the early part of the following week as more announcements will be made on further capital projects for continuing care in this province. We know that we have to build at least 775, 800 new continuing care beds, and we will meet that commitment. In fact, I feel very confident that we will exceed that commitment. That is one way, again, of dealing with the number one priority of Albertans, and that is good quality publicly funded health care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What Albertans need right now from their government is a plan and real action to ensure that every Albertan has a family doctor. How will looking at legislation for six months help Albertans to get a family doctor?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, long-term, predictable funding to Alberta Health Services goes a long way in providing predictability in the system. Once again, unfortunately, I can't give the details. The details will be in tomorrow's budget, as presented by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To get out of the recession, we need to get business going again. We need to get the oil and gas business going again, but oil and gas companies aren't going to start investing in long-term resources until there's some certainty over royalties. Albertans and the industry have been promised a competitiveness review that has been delayed and delayed and delayed and delayed again. To the Minister of Energy: what is the minister waiting for? Why don't you release the competitiveness review?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to see this opposition finally recognize that oil and gas is a significant driver of the economy in this province. Unlike the Liberal oil and gas policy that was released a couple of weeks ago, what we want to do is ensure that we have good interaction with industry that is continuing. Because this is more than just royalties – this is a competitiveness review – industry has said: take the time you need to do it, but do it right.

Mr. Taylor: Uh-huh; do it right. The former health minister now in charge of doing it right in Energy.

By delaying the release of this report, Mr. Speaker, does the minister see that he is doing Alberta's core industry no favours whatsoever?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no delay. What we've been doing is working with industry to ensure that all of the issues related to a changed environment in the world are addressed, and we will do that in due course.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm assuming here that the competitiveness review of the oil and gas industry is already sitting on the minister's desk. I can't imagine where it is if it's not. So why is it that Bill 1, which will lead to yet another committee to review competitiveness, is needed? I mean, how many times do you have to review the review the review the review?

Mr. Liepert: Well, just to correct the member, it is not sitting on my desk. The consultation, as I said, is continuing with industry, and that is happening as we speak. I'm sure we'll have plenty of opportunity to debate Bill 1 during second reading and committee. Bill 1 is much broader than just the oil and gas industry, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier just alluded, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is to ensure that across all sectors of the economy in this province we are competitive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Royalty Framework

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government's new royalty framework has been the most damaging attack economically on Alberta since Pierre Trudeau's national energy program. Although the world economic downturn has not helped, the evidence is irrefutable that thousands and thousands of Albertans have lost their jobs, hundreds their businesses, and our reputation as an attractive and stable place to do business has been severely compromised. To the Premier: will he apologize to the thousands of Albertans whose lives and prosperity have been harmed due to his government's disastrous energy policy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that all sectors of the economy are important to this province given the current economic downturn and especially the unpredictable drops in oil and natural gas prices. Especially as a result of the American market diminishing as quickly, it has created issues. That's why we introduced the drilling incentive program, to increase the drilling in the province of Alberta. We've also met with the oil and gas industry over the last number of months to ensure that we can find other ways of promoting more jobs in the industry across Alberta.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this Premier knows very well that industry, the hon. members for Calgary-Glenmore, Calgary-Fish Creek, myself, and many of his own backbench MLAs continually warned him of the harm this proposed royalty change would have on the economy before the new royalty framework was ever even introduced or implemented. To the Premier: why didn't he show true leadership by heeding the warnings of those who obviously understood the complexities of the energy sector far better than he did on this issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't have any backbenchers. They're government members. I actually find that term quite offensive.

Going on to the issue of the oil and gas industry, the framework was structured in such a way that it would, obviously, reward risk, but it would also share the responsibility of partnership, low prices and higher prices. Over the last number of months we've seen incredibly low prices in the natural gas industry, and that has been reflected in lower royalties paid at these prices. There is work to do at higher prices when and if we return to those, and that is part of the overall competitiveness review that's taking place at the moment.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, what's offensive is the thousands of jobs that have been lost to Albertans over the last year.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are confused as to why this government would meddle with the economic engine of Alberta and Canada without doing a thorough competitiveness review before developing the new royalty framework rather than doing it after the damage has already been done. To the Premier: would it not have made more sense to conduct a proper competitiveness review prior to overhauling the royalties? Why is he doing this backwards?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that the world-wide economic recession has taught all of us is that there is a huge global economic shift, number one, and, number two, that all countries are competing for investment and for people. It's a different world stage, and we must react to what has happened over the last 18 months. Our number one partner in trade was, of course, the United States, and we've seen that economy diminish somewhat, so we have to aggressively pursue new markets around the world. That means we have to diversify our markets to ensure that we keep growing the Alberta economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Provincial RCMP Services

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reducing crime is a high priority for Albertans, including those outside large cities. Crime in small communities does not seem to get the same attention as in large urban centres. Residents of these areas want to know what is being done to promote and enhance their safety. Most of these communities, including my constituency, are served very well, I might add, by the RCMP. My question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is the future role of the RCMP in Alberta after 2012?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is essentially asking me for a vision of policing in Alberta post-2012, so let me share that with him and with this House. We will provide policing through a spectrum of resources: community police officers, sheriffs, municipal police forces, First Nations police, and the RCMP functioning at the municipal and at the provincial level. Those forces will be sharing information, collaborating, and bringing unique strengths. We will be working together to make our highways and our communities safe and secure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. It has been suggested that it would be more cost-effective and a better use of taxpayer dollars to move towards Alberta having its own provincial police force. Are you looking at this option, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Oberle: The short answer is no. It may be true that it is less expensive to deploy a sheriff, but that ignores the fact that the sheriffs and RCMP officers have different responsibilities, different levels of training, different overhead costs. It also ignores the fact that we would have significant infrastructure and start-up costs, and it also ignores the fact that we get 30 per cent funding from the federal government for our RCMP forces in our province. No, we are not considering provincial police, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and, Mr. Minister, thank you for that answer. My final supplemental, then, is: if the province is committed to continuing the relationship with the RCMP, Albertans want to know what the RCMP is bringing to the table to support the province's efforts to combat gang crime.

Mr. Oberle: They will be bringing what they have already been bringing and more of it. They'll be bringing expertise, training, equipment, special teams, all of which will be deployed in concert with and co-operation with other police forces in our province. We're working together for safe communities, Mr. Speaker, and will continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since December of last year the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports has left disabled Albertans, families, and PDD service providers wondering what is the future of their supports. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: how is the minister protecting vulnerable Albertans when for the last three months everyone involved in PDD services doesn't have a clue of what's happening?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make it very clear. The people who receive supports from our persons with developmental disabilities programs are a priority for this government. The Premier has said it over and over again, and we will maintain that they are a priority. We have a budget of approximately $600 million that we are spending for 9,200 individuals. We're working through our boards and through our stakeholders to ensure that the supports and services that are vital and necessary to people in this program are provided.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. A minister communicating the decisions that they make is the honesty that Albertans expect, and they absolutely deserve it. Why did the minister not inform the public of these cuts through a press release showing how much was to be taken from PDD service providers?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, requiring the savings that we needed in the PDD program is an operational exercise. It's something that we're doing all the time. It's something that our PDD regional community boards perform. We do expect them to communicate with families and with the stakeholders. That's their job, and that's what, I understand, they have been doing.

Ms Pastoor: I'm not sure that that's exactly how they feel, but thank you for that. Will the minister commit right now to maintaining the funding for all individuals and agencies supported by PDD?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, once again I'll make it very clear. This is a very important program to this government and to the people of Alberta. The funding that we provide, around $600 million, is what we use to ensure that the services and supports that our PDD clients receive stay in place, and there will be no removal of any vital services to our PDD clients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has announced that the minimum wage will not increase this year even though average weekly earning appears to be increasing. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is this government re-examining a policy that has only been in place for two years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is this government's and my ministry's priority to keep Albertans employed. There are about 20,000 Albertans right now who are earning minimum or close to minimum wage, and these individuals are in a very fragile position. Where the economy slows down, they are the most vulnerable and most likely to be laid off. It is my ministry's position that we want to develop a policy on setting minimum wages that takes away that fear of losing a job and keeps our employers who employ these minimum wage earners at a stable position.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some provinces, like Newfoundland and Labrador, announced significant increases to their minimum wages this year to assist in economic recovery. Why are we doing the opposite?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can't comment on what my counterparts do in other provinces, but I can tell you that I will do what is best for Albertans. In Alberta in our current economy I will always take jobs before wage increases. At this point in time I want to make sure that the minimum wage is fair but also supportive of employment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: when can small businesses and those who earn the minimum wage expect a decision from government in order to plan ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very soon I will be asking a committee to review minimum wages in this province. [interjections] The opposition would like to think that one size fits all and that this minister should be making those decisions. Since they are so vocal, I would really like to engage them in some capacity as an all-party committee and decide what is the right minimum wage for low-income Albertans and how it should be set from year to year so they don't have to be sitting there every year and screaming about the same thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

2:10 Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week we had another tragic situation come to light, drawing further attention to the ongoing problems in the Alberta children's services system. The minister's response: call for the latest in a series of internal reviews, which have more to do with the protection of the ministry than with the protection of the child. Unfortunately, simply changing ministers is not going to change the underlying issues in the children's services system. To the minister. We and many Albertans have called for greater transparency for the Child and Youth Advocate. When will the minister require the advocate to report directly to the Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, we did have a very terrible situation last week that the member has referred to, and yes, I did call for a review. There is an initial review that's done by a CEO when an incident comes to their attention, and then there is a case review that's done months later after a police investigation.

This review is completely different. It's going to fill in that gap, and I hope to have answers to that here by the end of February.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The government's theme song, Mr. Speaker, is: we are reviewing the situation. By removing the hiring freeze and committing to sustainable funding, the minister could address the overwhelming workloads and insufficient supports that front-line staff face. When will the minister take this step?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have had a need for front-line staff. I can tell you very clearly that the children and family service authorities, when they do identify the front-line staff that are needed in the different authorities – we've approved 51 staff within the last few months. We will continue to do that as each of the needs arises. We know how critical those positions are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. With up to 700 vacancies in Children and Youth Services to be filled, there is a lot of hiring to go on. What assurances can the minister provide that the American-borrowed outcome-based service delivery system is designed to serve the best interests of our children and youth as opposed to saving dollars at their expense?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I think that you're going to hear more in the Assembly here in the future about outcome-based service reviews. I can tell you that what the children and family service authorities are doing right now in looking at that outcome-based service is that they'll be bringing that back through the ministry, and I will then bring that on forward to you, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have met with many constituents about budget adjustments made to the PDD program. My constituents are expressing great concern about the removal of vital services and supports that are provided to those with the greatest needs among us. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: can she assure me and all Albertans that the reductions to PDD won't impact the health and safety of the vulnerable people this program serves.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, let me make this perfectly clear: there has been no removal of vital services and supports to individuals supported by PDD, and no one has been put at risk. I have made it clear to the PDD community boards that if there is a health and safety concern, they are to discuss this with the agencies and the families and find a solution immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: is the ministry still looking to find money from the PDD program?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to inform the hon. member that we have completed what we set out to accomplish, and we have found the money that we needed through administrative efficiencies and savings. As you can appreciate, this was a very challenging task. It was very complex and very time consuming. I am pleased to say that by working with the boards and the stakeholders, we were able to find the funds with very little impact to our clients. This was a collaborative approach, and I do want to thank the people involved in working with our department to find those savings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Water Allocation Management System

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Water is a critical issue for Albertans. Alberta has limited water resources, antiquated allocation, and an unfair water market process, which the government is stubbornly sticking to. The cost of this is that municipalities are being denied water for their citizens to drink. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Is this the best the government can do with a water policy?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope not. I think I've made it pretty clear that the government is about to embark on a very broadly based review and update of the water allocation policy. I have spoken around the province talking about the need for us to update our water allocation policy, and we're committed to doing just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Environment. Now, recently the municipality of Crowsnest Pass was denied their appeal on a water licence, and Okotoks is reaching their designated allocation. Why does this government persist in upholding its first-in-time, first-in-right approach when people's water needs are coming second?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I guess I have to remind this member yet one more time that there's only so much water to go around. You can't just issue a licence when water doesn't exist. That's what this process is all about. This is a process about respecting the historical rights of long-standing licence holders and at the same time allowing for the inclusion of new population bases in an expanding and growing economy.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Minister, that's unacceptable. People's drinking water should come first.

This minister has said again and again that a new water policy is coming this spring, but I listened carefully, and there's absolutely no mention of it in the throne speech. How long do municipalities which are junior licence holders along with industry and any Albertans who want a clean glass of water to drink have to wait?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's the most ridiculous statement I have ever heard in this House. The fact of the matter is that Albertans are not waiting for a clean glass of water. There is not one municipality in this province that doesn't have an allocation of water that serves their needs. We're talking about the future. We're not talking about today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Fiscal Accountability

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've all seen this movie before: careless spending, a lack of clear priorities, reckless tax cuts for the most wealthy, followed by a drop in oil and gas prices, a burgeoning deficit, and then large cuts to the services needed by ordinary Alberta families. It was a bad horror movie then, and so is the sequel. How many times will this Premier and this PC government put Albertans through this painful cycle? How did you, Mr. Premier, let this happen again?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, a revisionist point of history there, but I'll perhaps allow the minister of finance to address the question.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I really think the leader of the third party should pursue a new career as a fortune teller because he seems to be able to preordain what the budget will be tomorrow. If he has those kind of powers, he should really be in another line of business.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You learn an awful lot by reading the minister's clips.

Albertans are still feeling the effects of cuts made in the '90s. Now we're on the brink of repeating the same mistakes. My question is to the Premier. Why didn't you take the necessary steps to ensure that Albertans never again had to endure massive cuts to the services they and their families depend on?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would hazard a guess that $17 billion worth of savings, $25 billion worth of expenditure on infrastructure, paying down all of the debt, putting us in the best financial situation of any jurisdiction in North America is probably doing that. But I think the hon. member might just want to wait and see what the budget has to bring.

Mr. Mason: So much fun we're going to do it again.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been a member of this government since the mid-1990s. Will he admit that he and his government have failed to learn from their mistakes and caused suffering on a massive scale as a result?

Mr. Horner: I will answer on behalf of my colleagues here that, really, when you look at what Alberta has today, we have the best financial situation of any jurisdiction in Canada, perhaps in North America. We have the best health system, I believe, of anywhere else in North America. We have the best postsecondary institutions in North America, possibly on the globe. We have the best K to 12 system in Canada, bar none, Mr. Speaker, and we have an economy that is the lifeblood – the lifeblood – of this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Northland School Division

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Paternalistic," "heavy-handed" are words I have heard used to describe the Minister of Education's actions in firing the corporate board of the Northland school division. Many of my constituents have children who attend schools run by the Northland school board, and they're worried and hurt and concerned about the future of their children's education and their fundamental right to elect local school board trustees. My question is to the Minister of Education. Since 95 per cent of students who attend Northland schools are First Nation and/or Métis peoples, did you even bother to consult with or speak to First Nation and Métis leaders before firing a democratically elected board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, I took the opportunity to speak with the grand chiefs of Treaty 8 and Treaty 6 as well as the president of the Métis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta. We also contacted the members of the partnership council, which we've set up with First Nations and Métis in the province. I can tell you that I've had a lot of very positive feedback from right across the north with respect to the steps that we've taken. It's not about firing the board. The board are people who were elected and who serve on their local councils and do good work. It's about what we need to do for the children.

Ms Calahasen: A majority of the Northland school division is in my constituency. My constituents understand that change was needed and that Northland did have challenges, so why did the minister use a hammer to address the problem rather than using a scalpel when it was required? When you do this, the people feel disenfranchised by your actions, and they feel oppressed and silenced. Now that you're running the Northland school board from downtown Edmonton, what's going to happen to the locally elected school committees?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it should be very clear that we're not running Northland from downtown Edmonton. In fact, the superintendent of schools is still in place, operating out of Peace River as per normal. The official trustee will be operating out of the headquarters in Peace River, and the inquiry team will be visiting each and every one of the 23 communities involved.

The locally elected boards are still there. No one was fired. We dissolved the corporate board and replaced it with an official trustee. Northland trustees are elected to their local school boards for each of the 23 schools, and they are there as elected representatives and remain there as elected representatives.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are also very concerned about another item, as all Albertans should be, that the dismissal of the Northland corporate board is an omen of further provincial incursions into the jurisdiction of locally elected authorities. Northland was just an easy first target and a convenient testing ground. Is this not a sign that you're going to be getting rid of locally elected school boards? Who's next, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to be perfectly clear. This question has come up since the start of the Inspiring Education process. We have absolutely no interest or intent or plan to do away with school boards. School boards are a necessary connection between the education system and communities. It's absolutely essential that communities and parents be involved in education, and their connection to the system is through their schools and through the school boards. So that's absolutely necessary.

We needed to move in this particular instance to protect the best interests of the children, to make sure that we could make the change that was necessary, not on a slow or incremental basis but immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2002 15 public schools in the Edmonton public school division have been closed, resulting in 6,900 student spaces disappearing from central Edmonton neighbourhoods. My first question is to the Premier. Given that Alberta Education and the government project that we are going to have 80,000 more students in the system in the next 15 years than we presently have, does the government not think that these school spaces that are closed and the proposed plans to close additional ones will be counter to the government's strategic plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are moving as fast as we can to build spaces for students where the students are. That obviously has implications for spaces where there are not student populations, and school boards have the obligation to rationalize their student spaces in the best interests of educational opportunities for their students. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Edmonton public school board has one of the best examples of this with the city centre school project where, indeed, they had to close some student spaces a number of years ago, but they created better opportunities for the students in that area, better educational opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that McCauley school in downtown Edmonton is proposed for closure, how will that community and the students that live in that community be better served if that public school is closed forever?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the last series of questions I was answering why it's so necessary to have local boards to deal with the issues of local communities, and now I'm being asked about doing the local board's job. It is the school boards' job to make sure that the facilities that they have in place and the teachers that they have in place and the opportunities they have in place make the best possible educational opportunities for the students that they serve.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education this time. Surely he knows that he calls the shots with the public boards. If he didn't, he would give them the right to increase their mill rate if they saw fit to make a flexible budget for themselves. Now, given that – and this is a direct quote from Alberta's 20-year strategic plan – the plan is “to maintain and improve existing schools to ensure they can deliver top quality education for Alberta students,” then why are you forcing Edmonton public to close another 5,000 student spaces in the central neighborhoods of this city? You're the political minister of this city, and you won't even defend it.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not forcing school boards, either Edmonton public or any other school boards, to close schools. We're not forcing them at all. They have the obligation and the duty to make sure that they have the best educational opportunity for students.

When the hon. member quotes the strategic capital plan, surely he must understand that when we're talking about renewing and improving physical space, obviously it's physical space that has value because there are students available to use that space. It makes no sense at all to read that to suggest that we fix and improve schools where there are no students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Climate Change

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to media reports back home the Alberta delegation received more than its fair share of negative attention during the global climate change conference in Copenhagen in December. To the Minister of Environment: other than pointing fingers on the issue of growing global emissions, what was actually accomplished in Copenhagen?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, while there is no doubt that there certainly were some in Copenhagen that had an intent other than arriving at an agreement that would help us to address this issue of climate change, we had a number of objectives there. One was to engage in as many bilateral discussions as we possibly could, and I'm pleased to advise the House that we had a very positive response from the groups that we talked to when we told them about what we're doing here. At the end of the day we got an agreement that all nations signed on that gives us the flexibility we were looking for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Alberta is investing significant resources to combat climate change, be it in carbon capture and storage, regulations to reduce emissions, consumer rebates, or other programs. These investments are occurring in the wake of climategate, where the science behind climate change was suggested to be fabricated. How can the minister assure my constituents and all Albertans that this government's investments and actions on climate change are necessary?

Mr. Renner: Well, there's no denying that there is some controversy around some of the science, but the fact remains that the overwhelming evidence clearly indicates that climate change is real, that human-induced climate change is something that we need to address. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, it's our responsibility as responsible resource suppliers to the world to ensure that we develop our resources in a responsible, low-carbon environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Despite the leadership that the minister suggests, the oil sands continue to be criticized for their environmental record both from within and outside of Canada. Just this past week the federal Minister of the Environment demanded further leadership from Alberta's oil sands industry. How does the minister respond to the latest tough talk about our resources, and how will he ensure Alberta's story is understood?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I share the concern that was raised by the federal minister. I, too, hear the same kinds of concerns raised. We have a target in northern Alberta. We have a responsibility to do two things. We have a responsibility to share information about the regulatory regime that's in place in Alberta – this is one of the most highly regulated industries anywhere in the world – but we also have a responsibility to continue to push the envelope to continue to hold industry responsible to ensure that they improve their record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Political Minister for Calgary

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's recent cabinet shuffle added a couple of new cabinet ministers and a new portfolio to the political lexicon, the political minister. I know I'm the Justice critic, and therefore I assume I'm the political minister critic; however, I'm not exactly sure exactly what a political minister does, so my question is simple. To the Minister of Justice, the Political Minister for Calgary: what exactly does your new job entail? It'll help me do my job.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if my hon. friend knows what his job is. Maybe he should talk to his boss about that. I'll say that I do know what my job is, and my job, in discussions with my boss, the Premier, is to ensure that we have an approach as part of a team leading this government to make sure that all communities and all people in this province are represented and have their voices heard around the government cabinet table. We will continue to make sure that happens.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you for that answer, but it didn't help me too much, Mr. Speaker, so I'm going to try. I've been searching the websites and searching elsewhere for more clarification on this, and I couldn't find an order in council or anything I get that made you this. How did you get this job? What are your qualifications? Did you apply for the job? What, really, is this all about?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure quite what this has to do with government policy, but I'm not surprised that my hon. friend didn't actually get the answer the first time. I would say that I know that my job in this government and this caucus is to be an effective voice for the city that I represent and the constituency that I represent, and I'll continue to do that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that by adding the term "political" to a minister's title, it inevitably brings into question partisan politics, that in our system of government is supposed to be the purview of our respective political parties, not government departments. Accordingly, my question for the political minister is whether she is accountable to this Legislature or to the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, or at least the Calgary wing?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member just answered his own question, which is: if that's his view of my job, why is he asking questions in this House along those lines?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Integrated Traffic Units

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a frequent driver on our highways I can't help but notice the incredible number of drivers who seem to think our speed limits are a guideline. I've also driven by more collisions than I care to, and some of them are quite serious. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Safety. Can the minister explain what is being done to get bad drivers off the road?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure this House and the province that speed limits are not guidelines, and I hope he wasn't referring to anybody within this House when he brought that up.

I'm pleased to announce today – I announced it at K Division just shortly – that the government of Alberta has chosen an integrated model with sheriffs and RCMP officers and will deploy 19 traffic safety enforcement divisions across the province. I'm confident that our integrated traffic units will help us reduce serious injuries and deaths on Alberta's roadways.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Isn't this just a reorganization of existing resources? How will integrated traffic units make our roads safer?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I suppose this could be cast as a redeployment, but it would be one to provide more efficient and more effective enforcement.

This comes about as the result of some traffic enforcement pilots that were conducted in the last year integrating RCMP and traffic sheriffs in four different models. We showed clearly that it improved traffic safety, improved the quality of traffic investigations and enforcement coverage, increased enforcement visibility on the highways, and made it easier to hand off Criminal Code investigations to the RCMP, including impaired driving investigations. It's also critical to note that this will provide at 19 different locations . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could you just explain how the 19 locations for these integrated traffic units were chosen?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it was necessary to concentrate resources in 19 locations in order to provide a critical amount to staff special operations such as checkpoints, vehicle safety checks, and those sorts of things. It was also necessary to disperse, to provide a presence across our province, and it's necessary to be visible. So this model is going to provide all of the above, and it was chosen by the officers themselves, not by the minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Late last week the Premier issued new mandate letters to a shuffled cabinet, but one thing that seemed to be missing from these mandate letters was true accountability. The government of British Columbia announced that if the provincial budget was not balanced, then 10 per cent of the ministerial salary goes back to the taxpayers. My question is to the minister of finance. If the government of Alberta continues to run deficits, will the Premier and his cabinet demonstrate real leadership and real accountability and hold themselves personally and financially accountable?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd remind the hon. member that we've already done that. She actually was a member of the party when that decision was made.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'm not even going to answer that.

Mr. Speaker, last year the government pushed through a 35 per cent pay increase. Then the government turns to front-line agencies that help people with developmental disabilities and pressures them to break their contracts. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. How could she accept a 35 per cent pay increase but try to force some very lean service providers to accept another broken contract in December?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we were looking for some savings, and we work with our PDD community boards because the funding that we have is distributed through the community boards to our agencies, to our families, and to our clients. By working with our community boards and our agencies and our families, we were looking for ways to be efficient and to have some savings. At the same time there were no vital services cut to any of our PDD clients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: That's not the case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans watch this government continue to break contracts and their word. It's hard to believe that this government could not find 1 per cent in their administrative budget to honour these signed PDD contracts. Will the minister show real leadership and find 1 per cent in her own administrative budget to protect PDD agencies?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, all PDD contracts were honoured. Only contracts that were agreed to were altered, and we have found the savings within administration and with the help of stakeholders, families, and service agencies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to charges of sexual abuse against a foster parent the new Minister of Children and Youth Services told the media that incidents of abuse in care are very unusual. The minister's own reports, however, show 79 confirmed instances of abuse against 150 children in care between January and June in 2009 alone. So my question to the minister: is it the minister's view that these numbers are business as usual, or do they confirm that the government's record in this area is unacceptable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that my comments were based around the situation that I learned of on Thursday morning, and I can tell you as well that that is very unusual, what I did learn in regard to this situation. I happen to agree with the staff that have brought that forward to me in the way that they explained the statistics. As I gather through this review further statistical data, I'll be able to look at it and ensure that we make changes if necessary following the review, based on this situation, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the children's advocate defended the government, saying that it's just one of those things and that the best screening the system knows how to do is already in place, yet in November the government's own review acknowledged that serious failures exist in screening potential foster parents. So why won't the minister move the children's advocate to her communications branch, where he'd be better suited and apparently believes he already lives, and replace him with an independent advocate who's able to represent children without fear of repercussion?

Mrs. Fritz: You know, Mr. Speaker, honestly, to answer a question like that – to say that the children's advocate, who works on behalf of the advocacy of children that are vulnerable and need protection and ensure safety, should be over in a communications branch: that's so disrespectful.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be or may not be disrespectful, but it is indeed what the advocate said to the media this weekend. I was as shocked then, when I heard it, as you appear to be now.

Now, given recent charges of sexual abuse, 79 confirmed cases of abuse in care in six months, and internal reports saying screening is not up to speed, one would expect an advocate to sound the alarm, not defend the system as he did this weekend. So why won't the minister show leadership in her new post and finally join the rest of the country and do the right thing and make the children's advocate an independent officer of the Legislature?

Mrs. Fritz: Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. I did not agree with you about what you said about the advocate being in the communications branch of this department at all. I've read all the advocate reports back over the last five-year period, and I can tell you this: he speaks very strongly for children and youth that need protection and need their safety ensured. As I said before, it's just a disrespectful question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Eighteen members were recognized today. Of the 18, eight came from the Official Opposition, four came from the independents, six came from the government, and that was 106 questions and responses.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Provincial Wheelchair Curling Championship

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend four teams gathered in Edmonton for the 2010 Alberta provincial wheelchair curling championships, two teams from Edmonton and two teams from Calgary. At the end of the round robin, Calgary's number one team and Edmonton's number one team played for the gold medal and the right to represent Alberta at the nationals in Kelowna, B.C.

Calgary's team B consisted of Glen Brunelle, coach; Dale Keith, skip; Bruce Matthews, third; Ron Pawlyk, second; Wanda Pizzinato, lead; and Curtis Junor, alternate.

Edmonton's team B was Wanda Crawford, coach; Don Donaldson, skip; Doug MacEachern, third; Don Munroe, second; Bonna Gerlitz, lead; and Marie Laframboise, alternate.

The silver medal winners were Edmonton team A: David Jerke, coach; Cliff Nuspl, skip; Warren Fleury, third; Mike McMullan, second; Shawna Walsh, lead; and Romeo Johnson, alternate.

The 2010 gold medal winners were Calgary team A: Tony Zummack, coach; Jack Smart, skip; Anne Hibberd, third; Martin Purvis, second; and Calgary-Hays constituent Bridget Wilson, lead.

Congratulations to all the athletes involved. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the victims services branch status report for 2008-2009. More than $7.4 million in grants was provided to 97 organizations, an increase of 36 per cent over the previous year's funding. These programs reported providing services to over 43,000 people. Sixty-two per cent of those cases involved assisting victims of violent crime. In 2008-2009 more than $11.6 million in financial benefits were provided to eligible victims of crime.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a report entitled A Foundation for Alberta's Health System, prepared by the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health and delivered to the minister in January 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of the House a letter dated November 12, 2009, from the Capital Region Board to the chair of the Alberta Utilities Commission and to the former Minister of Energy, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. This letter is in regard to the heartland transmission project proposed by EPCOR and AltaLink.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today a copy of the proposed schedule for the 2010 main estimates, as provided for in the standing orders. These have been circulated previously to Opposition House Leaders and representatives. I just want to say in tabling, if I may, that it's the same schedule as we had for last year, as I had indicated earlier to many people, with the exception that intergovernmental affairs now is scheduled for March 10 and Energy for February 16. There has been some concern about the scheduling of Energy for February 16, so I've indicated to parties that under the standing orders with agreement of the House we can move something from a policy field committee in the evenings as scheduled to an afternoon or to another time. I'm still open to that discussion, but I thought that in the best interests of having members understand the schedule, we should table this at the first opportunity.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am tabling today copies of a new brochure that will be produced by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta entitled Page Biographies, Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 27th Legislature, Third Session, Spring 2010. I'm sure copies will be circulated to all members as well.

Is that it for tablings?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I should have mentioned that on this schedule, just so that people notice, under 59.01 the estimates for Executive Council will be heard in Committee of Supply in the Assembly on March 9 and that pursuant to Standing Order 59.03 the votes on the estimates are scheduled for March 18. It's on the schedule, but I just wanted to bring it to members' attention.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta's annual accountability report 2008.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to the question period today I indicated that the rotation that we would use today would be that outlined in my memo to all members dated February 1, 2010. I indicated that at the conclusion of the Routine I would make a statement with respect to the position taken by the chair on the rotation and operation of question period for the Third Session of the 27th Legislature, and I'm pleased to do that now.

The chair provided members with notice of the rotation in a letter dated February 1, 2010, which is in a form sent at the start of every session every year by this Speaker. The one variation that I made is that a week ago, on February 1, I included in my letter, an operational letter that I send every year, a statement with respect to the rotation of question period. Normally statements on question period are made on the first day of the session, but as a courtesy to all members one week ago I included that in my letter, and the chair will now state for the record how the rotation has changed, why the changes were necessary, the rationale for these changes, and offer some comments about the development of question period. It will take a few minutes.

The need to revisit the rotation of questions during Oral Question Period arose because of changes in the composition of the various groupings since the Assembly last met. Very early this year two members of the government members' caucus joined the caucus of the Wildrose Alliance. As a result of this change in caucus composition, the standings in the Assembly at this time are as follows: Progressive Conservatives, 68; Liberals, 9; Wildrose Alliance, 3; New Democrats, 2; and one independent member, who is an independent by himself although the members of the Wildrose Alliance are also independents and the members of the New Democratic caucus are also independents.

The government caucus has been reduced in size by two members, and the Wildrose Alliance caucus increased by two members, making them the third-largest caucus in the Assembly. Accordingly, they are the third party in the Assembly. The Official Opposition has not changed in size, nor have the New Democrats, but they have lost their position as the third party albeit by one member.

In the interests of providing certainty to members, the chair distributed the rotation schedule in the February 1, 2010, letter. Until that letter went out, the chair had no knowledge of any House leaders' agreements or even meetings. It appears that the House leaders have been discussing the rotation in question period and other matters related to the apportionment of business associated with relative caucus size. The chair wants to encourage House leaders and all of the independents to keep working towards an agreement that could work to the satisfaction, presumably, of all 83 members of the Assembly. The chair will always be guided by advice provided by all members in a consensus/unanimous approach. At this time, however, as of the time we arrived in here this afternoon, at 1:30, there was no agreement from among the various parties, and the chair does not want to assume that what might be acceptable to one party or group or individual would be agreeable to others as well. The chair is more than willing to revisit this issue of rotation and related matters but is extremely reluctant to do so in the absence of any agreement.

For those who might be wondering why the answer is not found by looking in the standing orders, there is nothing in the standing orders about the rotation of questions. By convention, history, and practice the rotation of questions is not found in the standing orders, nor should it be. This absence is due in part to a recognition that it is the Speaker's responsibility to recognize members to participate in debate and the question period. The chair is fully aware that it is the members themselves who make the rules through the standing orders, and this chair has given effect to House leaders' agreements, but it is ultimately up to the chair to recognize members during question period.

Parliamentary Practice in British Columbia, the fourth edition, just one of hundreds of different scholarly treatises published around the world, by one of the longest serving clerks to follow the British parliamentary form of government in the world, Mr. George MacMinn, addresses this very point at page 140, when he states:

The order in which Members are recognized in Oral Question Period is at the Speaker's discretion . . . and this discretion remains intact at all times. From Parliament to Parliament (and indeed, from Session to Session) informal agreements are proposed relative to the recognition of Members and the number of supplementaries, but such agreements have never been considered as binding the Chair to a rigid course of action on a particular day. In order for the Chair's historical authority to remain intact, his or her discretion must remain unfettered.

The chair in recent days has been invited to apply the same rotation that existed following the provincial election in 1986. If one reviews Speaker Carter's ruling of June 13, 1986, found at page 7 of Alberta Hansard for that day, one will see that there are many differences between the operation of question period then and now. That ruling provided for the then Official Opposition New Democrats to have the first two main questions and up to three supplementary questions and that the then third-party Liberals, which had achieved recognized opposition party status, be entitled to the third main question and three supplementaries while the two-member Representative Party or delegate was entitled to the fourth question.

After those questions the chair recognized members from "all parties in the Legislative Assembly in a fair and representative manner." Each member asking a main question could ask three supplementaries, and one supplementary could be asked by one member in each of the other parties. One member would ask a question, three supplementaries, then every other grouping in the Assembly, which in this case would have been four more, could ask supplementaries to the same question. I was there. We had about five members recognized during the 50-minute question period. The chair was implored to apply the 1986 precedent by the NDs in 2005, and the chair rejected it for reasons that members can see at pages 90 and 91 of Alberta Hansard for March 8, 2005. Of course, in 1986 the third party had achieved recognized opposition party status, which is not the case with either the third or the fourth party today.

In 1989 the first two questions went to the Official Opposition New Democrats, the third main question to the third-party Liberals, which had eight seats, and the fourth to a member of the government caucus. Speaker Carter indicated in his June 2, 1989, ruling, found at page 9 of Alberta Hansard for that day, that "the remainder of question period will be conducted on a random basis." That meant that after the first number of questions were identified, members simply threw up their hands when they came into the Assembly, and the Speaker would sit here and look at 25 hands and make a list of the first 12 or 14. You can bet your bottom dollar that if 12 rose at the same time, he – it was a he at that time – had to make a decision, and those 11 members who weren't called were mad at the Speaker for being blind or not seeing them or a whole series of other things.

We made some changes. Some members – there are a few in this House – may recall that it was not until the House leaders' agreement of September 1993 that the practice of submitting lists was established. This measure gave greater certainty to members, and since then there has been no turning back to allowing the Speaker to randomly select members wishing to ask questions. Since that time, essentially, and the way it has operated since I have been the Speaker is that I receive from the various groupings in the House a listing of the members that they have decided should ask questions that day, and I apply that list. I have never changed the names unless there has been an error in communication, nothing ever deliberately to change the names.

In 1993 there were only two parties represented in the Assembly, so after the third main question, which was asked by the Official Opposition, the rotation was quite simple. It was not until 1997, with the return of the New Democrats, that a more complete rotation had to be developed to provide members with the certainty they desired as represented by the 1993 agreement. The chair – I was the Government House Leader at the time – was one of the signatories to that agreement, and I want to indicate that there was a strong desire at that time to avoid what some believed to be the arbitrary nature of selecting members to ask questions by submitting lists. In other words, it was not to be the caucus whip or anybody else who would say: you are a good boy or girl today, so you can be on our list. Hopefully, it would be a caucus workout to allow everybody, the greatest number of people within the various caucuses, to basically have an opportunity to ask a question in question period.

This simply serves as background and a way of saying that examples even from this Assembly prior to 1997 are not particularly helpful as the practices were different from what exists today. In other words, there's an evolution. The chair wants to assure members that he conducted extensive research on this subject and is more than happy to discuss this history with the members at a different time. But I can assure you that for 10 days in the month of January I scoured my memory and book after book after book, coming up with the conclusion that I reached on Monday of last week.

Based on the historical analysis and a sincere determination of what would be fair for all parties based on their size relative to the other groupings in the Assembly, the chair communicated the following rotation to members. The Leader of the Official Opposition or his delegate is entitled to the first three main questions, including two supplementaries, each day. As a note to that point, the Official Opposition has had the first three main questions since September 1993 despite the size of its caucus or that of the third party and the presence or absence of other groupings of members.

With respect to the rotation on days 1 and 3 the Wildrose grouping, the deputy leader or his delegate, would be entitled to the fourth main question and supplementaries. A member of the government caucus would be entitled to the fifth main question, the Official Opposition to the sixth, and it would then alternate between the Official Opposition and the government members until the 11th question, which would be asked by the fourth-party New Democrats. Members of the government caucus would be entitled to the 12th, 14th, and 16th questions while members of the Official Opposition would be entitled to the 13th and 15th questions. The third-party Wildrose Alliance would be entitled to the 17th question, the New Democrats to the 18th, and in recognition of their size members of the government caucus would ask any question past the 18th. That's what was outlined. That's what happened today, exactly the way it was outlined.

On day 2, which is tomorrow, the positions of the Wildrose Alliance and the New Democrats will be reversed. The leader of the New Democrats or his delegate will be entitled to the fourth main question, and as on days 1 and 3 a member of the government caucus will be entitled to the fifth, seventh, and ninth questions while the Official Opposition will ask the sixth, eighth, and 10th main questions. The Wildrose Alliance will be entitled to the 11th and 18th questions. The New Democrats can ask the 17th question. Members of the government caucus will be entitled to the 12th, 14th, and 16th questions, and the Official Opposition would, like on days 1 and 3, be entitled to the 13th and 15th questions. Members of the government caucus will be entitled to ask any questions past the 18th. So that covers days 1, 2, and 3.

Day 4 will be a bit different as the independent Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo would factor into the mix. On day 4, like on day 2, the New Democrats would be entitled to ask the fourth question. The independent member – although members of the Wildrose Alliance and members of the New Democrats are also independents – will be recognized for the fifth main question and supplementaries. The Official Opposition, like on every other day, would be entitled to the sixth, eighth, and 10th questions. Government members would be entitled to fewer questions on day 4 as they would not have their first opportunity to ask a question until the seventh main question, and the next opportunity would be the ninth question. The Wildrose Alliance would be entitled to the 11th and the 18th questions, and the New Democrats would be entitled to the 17th. Government members would be entitled to ask the 12th, 14th, and 16th questions and the Official Opposition the 13th and 15th questions, and once again members of the government caucus would be entitled to questions after the 18th.

Assuming that the Assembly reaches the level of 18 main questions – and this is not a wild assumption; we have accomplished it on many, many occasions, and I'll provide graphs and information to you a little later showing where this has become quite frequent – the Official Opposition would have 32 questions a week, the same as it had in the last session. No change. The New Democrats would have eight questions, which is also the same as the last session. The Wildrose Alliance would also have eight questions a week, which is a dramatic increase from the last session. The number of questions asked by members of the government caucus would drop, from 29 in the last session to 23 in this session. So the only party that actually has a reduction in questions is the government. The Official Opposition and the independent from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo would remain with the same. The New Democrats remain the same as well, and the Wildrose Alliance has that increase.

The chair does not believe it is unreasonable to expect that there will be 18 main questions a day. Members will recall that on April 6, 2008, the chair indicated to the Assembly that there would be a 35-second time limit on questions and answers. For the First Session there were 18 questions or more in many question periods, and in one day there were 21 main questions. The average was 17.5 main questions. That was in the year 2008. Roughly speaking, there were 18 or more questions on two-thirds of the sitting days. As I said, I'll be circulating a series of graphs to members to demonstrate the number of questions asked in the first and second sessions of this Legislature.

The chair admits that there was a slippage in the past session, that is 2009, where the average dropped to 16.5 main questions a day. The 18-question mark, however, was reached one-fifth of the time. In order to achieve at least 18 questions per day, which the chair assumes is the will of the Assembly, there will be a more vigilant watch of the clock to ensure that questions and answers do not run past 35 seconds. My experience today was that the very person who I'm counting on most to have 35-second responses was the one who went beyond 35 seconds on more than one occasion.

The chair wants to assure members of the commitment to fairness in the proceedings of the Assembly. The role of the Speaker is to balance the competing and strongly held beliefs of members. In preparing the rotation, the chair was mindful that neither the third nor the fourth party has the requisite number of members to constitute a recognized opposition party within the meaning of the Legislative Assembly Act. There is no direct correlation between the number of questions and that number, but there is little doubt that it enhances the position of the party reaching that milestone.

Some have and may further draw reference to the Canadian House of Commons. The chair wants to advise members that those caucuses that failed to reach the required number of seats have little role to play in the question period. Members interested in this point may wish to review page 499 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, where it states:

Members of a political party not officially recognized in the House and independent Members are permitted to ask questions, although not as frequently as those Members belonging to recognized parties.

During the Thirty-Fifth Parliament . . .

That is the parliament of 1994 to 1997.

. . . when their numbers climbed as high as 17 . . .

That is 17 independents.

. . . over the life of the Parliament, the Speaker attempted to recognize at least one of them every other Question Period . . .

So every two days one of the 17 independents would get a question.

. . . if not every day, generally towards the end of the proceedings.

The number of members required to be a recognized political party in the House of Commons is 12. However, as this chair indicated in his March 8, 2005, ruling:

While this chair has always welcomed advice on procedures in other jurisdictions, it is fair to say that after 99 years of being a province, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has developed its own practices and traditions, which we can draw upon. As the chair has noted, the practice across Canada with respect to question periods varies widely, with the length running from 15 minutes to one hour.

Now, some of these things have changed even since I made that 2005 ruling. As a result, the chair has had extensive research conducted on practices in other Canadian jurisdictions. Times have changed with respect to question periods, and they now vary across the country of Canada, from 25 minutes in the question period in Saskatchewan to 90 minutes in Nova Scotia one day a week on Wednesday. The other days of the week in Nova Scotia it's 60 minutes. In most Assemblies parties not having official status would not have as many questions as third or fourth parties here. However, the chair is mindful and respectful of the history and traditions of Alberta, which have seen several small caucuses over the years. As indicated above, the chair has attempted to strike a balance between the interests of the minority and those of the majority, and as always the chair would welcome the collective views of the House leaders on this issue.

Before closing, I want to make it very clear that it is a tradition in Alberta for all private members to be granted the ability to ask questions, and that includes members of the government caucus. The practice of this Assembly has been for private members on the government side to be recognized during Oral Question Period but not, certainly, in proportion to their numbers. The chair does not believe that he can or should depart from that tradition or the principle that all members elected to this Assembly and not serving on the Executive Council have the right to hold the government of the day to account by asking questions, and the chair is not willing to depart from this basic tenet of representative democracy in the province of Alberta.

Hon. members, since I put this statement out last week, in essence, I've received a number of pieces of correspondence from members. I'm not sure I have to table them in the House or even refer much to them, but I did say on Wednesday last, in a written statement to the members of the New Democrats and the members of the Wildrose, that I would be amenable to an agreement being reached by all the parties and provided to me by Monday morning of this week. That was the request. I waited and waited and waited. I have not received such an agreement. The position that I hold is the one I've outlined. If the members want to continue working together to find an alternate to this, I'm open to that. I'm amenable to that. But it has to be in a kind of unanimous situation.

In addition to having a question with respect to the question period, it took a negotiation that seemed to go on forever just to deal with the chairs. You may not notice this, hon. members, but as a result of the movement of two members to another part, what had to happen here is that we had to deal with eliminating one desk from the government side, from seven to six. Okay. No big deal except that all the egos get into play to move that one desk from there to back there to back there. Then it meant that we had to move the Liberal desks down one closer to the Speaker. Now, the Liberal Opposition likes that because they want the Leader of the Official Opposition to be directly across from the Premier. So that was not a problem. They were happy. They haven't said anything. They haven't said thank you, haven't acknowledged it, but that was okay. That was no problem.

Then because we've now got three members of the Wildrose Alliance and because we have a physical concern and a courtesy concern and a concern of considerable merit to an hon. member needing additional space, that meant that we couldn't have the two members of the New Democrats side by side. So we had to move one member of the New Democrats behind the first, which didn't help their ego one darn bit and their self-worth one darn bit, in order to allow us to move up the deputy leader of the third party. One, two, three. The third party. Then, of course, well, fine. How would I place those three? Would I place them on the basis of longevity of service in the Assembly? Would that mean the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek should sit in the front, or should it be the deputy leader? Well, that took a lot of, you know, debate and discussion to make sure. The scenario was that it would be the Member for Calgary-Glenmore because he is the deputy leader of the party. Then you put behind him the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and then we had the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere behind that hon. member. So it was symmetrical; it looked good. But then the request was made: well, can we move the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere up? Well, okay. That happened.

In the meantime the poor old Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – well, I don't mean it that way – is an independent of exact equality, because the principle was to have equality among all the independents, but he's tucked away way in a corner. By the way, he shouldn't feel lonely there because when I first came to this Assembly, that's where I sat. I considered that a seat of honour – a seat of honour. But from the perspective of all the members perhaps if all independents want to be treated equally, the longest serving members of the independents should be the ones sitting in the first row – the longest serving members would be the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – but that would have caused a whole series of more angst. So this is how we have arrived at this.

Solomon had it easy. He had one baby, and he had two mothers conflicting. Well, one was the real mother, and one wasn't. I have one basket with five parties. If you all want to agree on it, this is fine. You can't cut it up five ways. I want an amicable approach, and if all members recognize the manner in which it goes, we can conduct ourselves very, very well. In addition to that, if the members want to continue to evolve this question, I am very amenable to this, but right now here's where we're at.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On what would you be speaking?

Mr. MacDonald: Standing Order 13(2).

The Speaker: Okay. The explanation one.

Mr. MacDonald: A further explanation to your ruling, please. You spoke about a milestone of having four seats, which is recognized as an official party in the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Will this ruling or decision or proposal today change if either the New Democrats or the Wildrose Alliance achieve official party status as determined by the Legislative Assembly Act?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, it's a speculative question that, first of all, that would happen. It could just as well be the Liberal caucus. You know, five members there could go to another one. It could create another one, so let's not just pick on those. This matter will evolve on the basis of the change. If, as an example, five members were to say that they wanted to join the Progressive Conservative caucus, that would be five members less over there, so we'd have a different scenario to have to deal with.

But, absolutely, if a party assumes official party status with the four, they would be seated together in a grouping of four, and those less than four would move off the front rail. That would be a reality of the evolution of it all. No chair could deal with it in any other way on the basis of the historical and constitutional precedent.

Orders of the Day

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, given that the Order Paper discloses no business that's eligible for discussion this afternoon under private members' business, I would honourably request the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 8(1) in order to revert to Government Bills and Orders so as to allow for replies to the Speech from the Throne.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a great honour to rise today and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne given by the Lieutenant Governor, and it is an honour to do this on behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Ellerslie.

I would like to begin by thanking the Lieutenant Governor for both his eloquent words and the honour of his presence. I would also like to thank him for formally beginning this Third Session of the 27th Legislature. Mr. Speaker, His Honour's career should be looked upon as a model of the virtues of public service. While the Lieutenant Governor stated that he felt privileged to serve his province, I would argue that it is us who are truly privileged to serve with such a graceful leader.

I would also like to extend thanks and gratitude to our hon. Premier. Under his leadership Alberta has poised itself to weather the economic downturn better than any other jurisdiction in Canada and has also taken steps to enable us to emerge from these difficult times stronger than ever. Mr. Speaker, making choices that will benefit the province in the long term is not easy. It requires conviction, dedication, and a strong vision for the future. After all, the true test of a leader is not in how they govern when times are good but, rather, how they respond when problems arise. I for one can say that during these times of uncertainty our Premier has had the confidence to lead Alberta with pride and passion. Therefore, I would like to thank our Premier for his dedication, his conviction, and his leadership and consider myself truly honoured to work with him during these exciting times.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that Alberta along with the rest of the world is in one of the deepest recessions seen in half a century. It is true that Alberta has a resource-based economy that has proven to be extremely volatile. What is also true is that this government had taken aggressive steps well in advance of this downturn to help cushion the blow. As His Honour stated, this government improved its fiscal position by almost $50 billion, including paying off a $23 billion debt and saving or investing nearly $25 billion. Much of these savings went into the sustainability fund, a fund designed to protect the programs Albertans value most if provincial income were to suddenly drop. These are the actions of a government that recognizes that while resource income may fluctuate widely, the needs of its people do not.

These are the actions of a government that recognizes the need to continue to invest in public infrastructure now, even when the times are tough. Mr. Speaker, these are the actions of a government that recognizes that while other jurisdictions may cut back and grow their infrastructure debt, it is imperative that we plan now to support our future. The foresight exemplified by the reintroduction of Alberta capital bonds is an example of the planning that is required in times like these. After all, what better way to invest in needed infrastructure while at the same time allowing Albertans to invest in the future of their province, in infrastructure like seniors' accommodations and continuing care and supportive living facilities? Furthermore, as His Honour stated, Alberta has a triple-A credit rating, which enables us to offer Albertans one of the safest investments in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, while it is important to invest in the future during uncertain economic times, it is also important to step back and take a look at the government's overall fiscal position. Simply put, it is imperative that a government live within its means. As His Honour stated, Alberta must and will carefully manage spending while focusing on priorities such as health, education, and supports for vulnerable Albertans. After all, health is one of if not the most pressing concern for many Albertans. Although health spending per capita is amongst the highest in the country, the results are not. Simply put, Albertans demand and deserve better value for their taxpayer dollars.

In recognition of this fact this government has initiated a dramatic shift in how we approach health care in this province. Essentially, as the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health recommended, health care in Alberta must become more patient focused, and to meet this goal, there needs to be a legislative framework in place. In recognition of this need the government will introduce the Alberta health act later this fall, after it has been guided by Albertans themselves.

Mr. Speaker, beyond legislative controls a successful health care system needs two things: one, to have access to predictable funding, and two, to be accountable to Albertans. Therefore I'm pleased that His Honour stated that there would be a stable, five-year funding plan introduced in Budget 2010 as well as the idea that health care will be accountable because of a commitment to performance consultation with everyday Albertans.

I'm also pleased how the Speech from the Throne highlighted this government's commitment to safe, strong, and caring communities. Commitments like adding 100 new police officers and creating 14,000 new child care spaces are among these highlights.

Mr. Speaker, this government recognizes that it takes more than enforcement to ensure that our communities remain safe. Rather, it takes an understanding that a truly safe community only comes with a commitment to social programs and to those in need, commitments like those highlighted by the Lieutenant Governor. As he stated, this government will continue to work toward its pledge of providing 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012, and this government will ensure that social programs become better integrated so that they focus on the people they were intended to serve. After all, a program is only useful if it successfully targets the people in need. The improvements proposed by this government will ensure that Albertans have access to the information they need to effectively transition from program to program at each stage in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, while I applaud this government's commitment to both health care and safe communities, I'm also intrigued and excited about how this government proposes to keep Alberta in the forefront of global competitiveness. After all, Alberta's competitive edge has enabled us to be the best place in Canada to live, invest, and ultimately succeed, and it is essential that we retain this edge. For this reason I was pleased to hear His Honour's statement that Bill 1 of this legislative session would be the Alberta Competitiveness Act, which will ensure that Alberta remains the most competitive jurisdiction in North America by minimizing the cost of doing business in the province.

However, Mr. Speaker, competitiveness means more than just having a strong business climate, which we do. It also means a commitment to education and innovation. This is why this government will continue to develop the Alberta Innovates program, to better reflect the needs of entrepreneurs and researchers in order to help ensure that Alberta's technology plays an ever-increasing role in the world economy.

Beyond the economy, education and technological innovations will also help us address the needs of our environment. As His Honour stated, our history of technological breakthroughs and engineering has gone a long way towards shrinking our environmental footprint. The drive towards cleaner energy is a welcome fact, welcomed by both the Alberta government and Alberta's strong business community. Mr. Speaker, the commitment by both the government and our business community is exciting, and this commitment will enable us to develop a well-thought-out and equitable approach to controlling greenhouse gas emissions while ensuring that our energy industry remains strong.

Finally, I would like to conclude on the same idea as His Honour, Alberta's place within Canada. I'm truly proud to be a Canadian, just as I am proud to be an Albertan and to serve the people of this great province. As the Lieutenant Governor stated, Albertans are proud to contribute to the well-being of our nation. We only ask to be treated fairly by federal programs. After all, Mr. Speaker, a sick or unemployed person is still sick or unemployed regardless of where they live. For this reason I'm pleased that our government is committed to working with the federal government to promote regional equality. After all, I believe that a strong Canada needs a strong Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it has been an honour to rise today and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, just as it has been an honour to serve as the elected representative of the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie. In closing, I would again like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his inspiring words and dedicated public service and, again, our hon. Premier for his strong leadership and noble vision. I believe that under the guidance of these two men and with the dedication and spirit of the people of Alberta we can make a future which we can all be truly proud of.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank you and all of the hon. members for indulging me. Sahakarini is an NGO from Camrose that has been very active in India, Africa, and Central America. One of its project partners is the Kaqchikel Presbytery from Guatemala. We have guests here today from those two organizations. Above me in the members' gallery are Ronaldo Similox, who's a teacher and psychologist and also a Mayan spiritual guide, along with his wife, Noemí Cuellar, an oil painter. They represent the Kaqchikel Presbytery. They've been here on a speaking tour. This is their first exposure to snow and ice, so it's been a bit of a shock to the system, I think. Also with them is Alan Fielding, a noted Camrose volunteer and representative of the Sahakarini. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat as well.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two members from my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat in southern Alberta, from Bow Island specifically, Mr. Jim and Anne Geldreich. I'd like to have them rise – they're seated in the public gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The next two participants will be the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to second and then the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and a privilege to rise today in this House to second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne, eloquently delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. For five years the Hon. Norman Kwong has served Albertans with honour, humility, and dignity. His life accomplishments and dedication to public service are an inspiration to those who believe that Alberta truly is a place where you can achieve your dreams. In a remarkable life that took many unexpected turns, I know my colleagues and I are grateful for his continued service as Her Majesty's representative in Alberta.

As the proud representative of the constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner it was an honour to accept the Premier's invitation to second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne. Like Albertans across this diverse province, they have seen how quickly times can change. In a remarkably short period of time unprecedented economic growth gave way to the deepest recession the world has seen in half a century. Alberta, with its strong trading relationship with the United States, was not immune to the rapid decline in our economy. Throughout our history Albertans have faced similar challenges of economic uncertainty, and time and again we have united to face these challenges together to emerge stronger than before. Under the inspired and visionary leadership of our Premier I know we will do so again.

Forward-thinking leadership and prudent planning led Alberta to be the most prepared jurisdiction in North America for the economic recession. No other government in North America entered the recession debt free with substantial cash reserves. Of any jurisdiction in North America we are the best prepared to weather this recession and emerge stronger than ever. The $17 billion sustainability fund will ensure that Alberta remains debt free and continues to provide quality education and health care for Albertans. Moreover, our Premier has committed our government to live within its means and to be back in the black within three years.

Mr. Speaker, few could have predicted the extent of the economic recession we currently find ourselves in. There is no question that our policies will help Alberta emerge stronger than any province in Canada.

I was very pleased to hear the throne speech address what has always been central to the Alberta advantage, our competitiveness in a global economy. In an increasingly competitive global economy we must continue to ensure Alberta continues to succeed. This includes ensuring our children continue to have access to a world-class education system that will prepare them for future opportunity, challenge, and success. In a 21st century economy with rapid developments in technology and innovation, we must continue to ensure Albertans have the tools they need to succeed. To this end, I was pleased that the throne speech outlined the government's plans to launch a new, modern vision for education, with improvements that will ensure learning in Alberta is flexible and ready to meet the needs of the next generation. Albertans are by nature innovative and entrepreneurial, and with the right tools there is nothing we cannot accomplish.

Mr. Speaker, a competitive economy also means ensuring that businesses have the freedom to thrive and prosper. Unnecessary legislative barriers and regulations can stifle business and the economic potential of a province or nation. In a world that is increasingly competitive, we must continue to ensure Alberta remains the best place to conduct business. That is why I'm pleased that the Speech from the Throne outlined this government's intentions to aggressively pursue improvements to ensure we have effective regulations that are both clear and practical. Positioning our province for an even brighter future will be the objective of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. In a time when the world economy is positioning itself for a return to future growth and prosperity, I am happy with our Premier's resolve to ensure we are the most competitive jurisdiction in North America.

Our government's goal to become even more competitive includes a renewed dedication to what has always been a fundamental pillar of our economy for generations, agriculture. Indeed, the earliest settlers were farmers who came to Alberta and built the foundations of what is now one of the world's most productive agricultural economies. I am happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that both of my grandparents came to this province in the early 1900s, and our family has stayed here and been involved in agriculture ever since that time. I am now the third-generation rancher and farmer in our family, my son is the fourth, and I have a grandson getting ready to become the fifth.

After a century of hard work, sacrifice, and love for our province Alberta's farmers can be proud of a legacy of achievement. As the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and a farmer myself I was proud that His Honour recognized the valuable contribution of Alberta's agriculture and agri-food industries in the Speech from the Throne. The history of this constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner is rooted deeply in the legacy of farmers who arrived in the late 19th century whose bravery, entrepreneurial spirit, and can-do attitude continued to define us as Albertans.

Fleeing from religious persecution in Utah, 10 Mormon families settled nearby what is now the town of Cardston, named after their leader, Charles Ora Card. Using their agricultural expertise, they earned the respect of their neighbours and, due to the region's dry climate, developed the region's first irrigation system. Having seen that irrigation system as it was, I'm impressed with their engineering ability and what they were able to do with horses and what we would call today primitive equipment.

The innovative irrigation techniques pioneered by those first bold Mormon settlers continue to provide nourishment for the crops of southern Alberta. Today the greatest portion of irrigation in Alberta takes place in 13 irrigation districts in the South Saskatchewan River basin, providing half a million hectares of land with water. Seven of those districts, interestingly enough, lie in the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. These irrigated lands produce a wealth of crops, including 113,000 hectares of barley, 97,000 hectares of wheat, and 90,000 hectares of alfalfa.

Across Alberta more than 20 million hectares of land are used for crop and livestock production, and in 2008 total farm cash receipts reached a record of $10 billion, accounting for nearly 22 per cent of Canada's total agriculture production. Of this total, beef and cattle account for the largest category of farm income. In 2008, Mr. Speaker, cash receipts from beef and cattle accounted for nearly $3 billion, or 30 per cent of total receipts, the highest in Canada. Furthermore, a healthy beef and cattle industry supports thousands of jobs in value-added agricultural production. These world-class products are then sold to consumers here in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world. As a matter of fact, Alberta exported roughly $961 million worth of beef products and $558 million of live cattle to international markets in 2008.

Indeed, our export markets are essential to the continued sustainability of our agriculture and agri-food industries. This is why ensuring the health and competitiveness of our agriculture industry is more important now than ever. We must continue to build on our strength as a safe and reliable producer of high-quality products and break into new markets, as His Honour so rightly stated. Furthermore, we must work together to ensure that our products continue to compete favourably with other agriculture producers, including the United States.

Mr. Speaker, agriculture, like other industries, has not been immune to the global economic recession. However, thanks to the bold leadership of our Premier, I feel confident that we can face these challenges together and continue to build a sustainable agriculture industry for generations to come. Even before the recession began, this government launched the livestock and meat strategy, a blueprint for the future prosperity of our agricultural producers. It calls on government to work with industry to redirect resources to key priorities, revitalize livestock industry organizations, realize benefits from enhanced value chain relationships, and refocus efforts to achieve a competitive and sustainable industry. I am confident that these initiatives and our continued work will lead to a more competitive, prosperous agriculture industry and a stronger province.

Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we live in challenging times, but Albertans have never been a people to shy away from a challenge or to do what is necessary to succeed, and neither is this government. Together we will continue to build a province worthy of the hopes and dreams of those who came to this province and built it with sacrifice, hard work, and, above all, a compassion for our fellow citizens. Under the leadership of our Premier I know our brightest days are yet to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hon. members, the leader has up to 90 minutes to participate.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of the Opposition it's my duty and honour, indeed my privilege to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. When he delivered the Speech from the Throne on Thursday, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor was quite eloquent in remarking on how much he appreciated the opportunity to travel this province and meet with so many amazing Albertans. Just as His Honour is grateful for his experience as Lieutenant Governor, so too am I grateful to serve as Leader of the Official Opposition. As I'm sure His Honour would agree, it's not the title or the privileges that make the job mean so much; it's the opportunity to serve our province and its people and, in the course of our duties, to meet so many fine Albertans, to experience every corner of this beautiful province, and to work for a better tomorrow for all of us.

I'd like to thank His Honour for five years of outstanding service to Alberta and wish him and his lovely wife all the best. They did a remarkable job, and Albertans are justly proud of the Kwongs. You could say that the China Clipper's term was one last touchdown for a great Albertan. Your Honours, thank you.

Like His Honour I've been impressed and uplifted by the spirit and compassion of Albertans. Though times are hard, people are still looking out for each other and working hard for a better future for their families and for the magnificent province we call home.

This past weekend I went snowshoeing with my brother in the foothills west of Calgary. The beauty, the serenity of the landscape reminded me again of why I am in politics today. I love this place. The snow blanketing those beautiful foothills, the trees, the wildlife all reminded me that Alberta and Albertans will be here long after all of us are gone, and that's why good governance and visionary leadership is critical. We need to serve not only our own generation but all future generations to come.

Serving the public interest for the short term and the long term means a greater commitment to getting people involved in government initiatives. If the administration plans to massively overhaul health care or energy or education, then consultation with the most directly affected citizens and organizations is key, and I mean real consultation, not after-the-fact, focused consultation intended as a rubber stamp for decisions the government has already made. We must be beyond that now. We need to go beyond that.

If we want to preserve the beauty, the biological diversity of these foothills and the whole province that I enjoyed so much in these last few weeks, then we must also commit to using good science as our primary guide to public endeavours. Science – and I'm including all the sciences here – provides the essential data we need to make the right decisions on the environment, the economy, education, and social programs. We need the courage to use our best science and put our plans before the public for honest debate and improvements without pride or prejudice.

That's why I'm in politics, because this administration has not taken these fundamental principles to heart. This has created an undercurrent of grave concern among Albertans, if not distrust. People are hurting: thousands out of work, thousands more afraid that the public health care system and other crucial social services won't be there when they need them. Already vulnerable Albertans are facing diminished levels of service because of cutbacks.

Albertans don't ask for much from government, but they do demand a basic level of competence, a level of competence that the Premier's administration has failed to deliver. Politics in Alberta isn't about right versus left anymore. It's about right versus wrong, and this Conservative administration has become infamous for making the wrong decisions. Wrong decisions made by this Premier and his ministers have sown chaos in the health care system, have created instability and uncertainty in our oil and gas sector, the engine of Alberta's economy. They've damaged our international reputation and our environment, failed to enforce standards to address pollution and climate change, have allowed family farms to stagnate and wither, have failed to protect our forests and the forestry industry. Wrong spending decisions have frittered away the opportunity to save for the future and wasted millions of taxpayers' dollars on lavish perks for the elite, reducing support by 30 per cent over the last 20 years for Albertans most vulnerable to this economic recession.

I've always been from the good news first school of thought, so I'm happy to give the administration credit for a few good notions contained in this throne speech. Unfortunately, even the good news is tainted by the administration's long record of half measures and broken promises. As a believer in planning for the long term I applaud the Premier and the minister of health for providing Alberta Health Services with a five-year budget cycle, provided the allocation is actually sufficient to meet the system's needs. Considering all the damage done to our public health care system by this administration's catastrophic bungling, this is, at least, a small step towards restoring a smidgen of confidence to the health care professionals who have done their best while dealing with the consequences of this administration's mismanagement.

Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is a step forward for efficiency. I've long advocated for less red tape for Alberta's business community, and I'm glad that this administration finally sees this as a priority. But speaking of competitiveness, what happened to the competitiveness review? Why has it been delayed? For that matter, whatever happened to the red tape review led by the new finance minister himself? The fact that the minister seems to have dropped the ball here doesn't instill me or Albertans with great confidence. Did he lose it along with his briefcase a few weeks ago?

At a time when the oil and gas sector is desperate for stability, when they need confidence, this administration cannot provide it. Cleaning up some red tape is fine, but it's not nearly enough to erase years of mishandling in the energy portfolio. What we have here is, basically, a new panel with a vague mandate to speed up the process of establishing government initiatives and evaluating regulations. This Conservative administration has already set up a regulatory review commission with a similar mandate to the one being established in Bill 1. If they couldn't make it work with that commission, how can Albertans expect anything from this new initiative? This is the Premier's number one bill. Frankly, I'm underwhelmed. If this is the best you can come up with for your administration's top bill, Alberta is in even more trouble than we thought.

We're glad to see that the Premier's administration has heeded opposition and community calls for more police officers, but even the addition of a hundred officers will leave Alberta's two largest cities underpoliced. Per capita Calgary and Edmonton are two of the least protected cities in the country when it comes to crime. We simply need more boots on the ground to meet population growth. And what about Fort Macleod and the police college: whatever happened to that project? It's wrong to leave the people of Fort Macleod hanging, Mr. Speaker. They haven't forgotten this administration's promise.

Finally, I'm glad that the administration is at last starting to think about unfairness in the federal EI program. Alberta workers haven't been getting their fair share of rightfully earned benefits, and the opposition and labour groups have been raising this issue for months. I hope that the Premier can make some real progress and bring those benefits home to Alberta workers, working moms and dads who desperately need and deserve that assistance. I would suggest that the Premier should also do something about skyrocketing wait times for processing EI applications. Many Albertans live paycheque to paycheque. They can't afford to wait for months for EI benefits, nor can the Premier shift all responsibility to the federal government. Provincial income supports need to be examined to make sure that unemployed Albertans will have somewhere to turn when EI benefits are exhausted.

Well, Mr. Speaker, aside from these few bright spots, even by the rightfully diminished expectations of Albertans in this throne speech we see a new low standard for a government that is clearly out of ideas. The cupboard is bare: virtually no new ideas, no leadership, no vision, no inspiration, no imagination, and no plan. Given the Conservative track record many of these commitments will drag on for years and years without any real progress. The sheer emptiness of this administration's Speech from the Throne leads me to expect the worst from tomorrow's budget.

For years opposition parties, think tanks, journalists, and Albertans from all walks of life have implored successive Conservative administrations to change their approach when it comes to public spending. Instead, we have seen them stuck in a common pattern: spend lavishly during good times, indiscriminately slash vital public services when oil and gas prices fall. That's a hell of a way to run a car wash, Mr. Speaker, let alone a province. It's the complete opposite of how to sensibly manage public finances in a province with a cyclic economy.

After nearly four decades in power you'd think this administration would clue in at some point. Yes, the administration built up a sustainability fund, a Liberal idea I'll remind you, but it's a fraction of the size it could have been, and it's not nearly large enough to maintain public services during a long recession. This administration's financial planning is based on a wing and a prayer that oil and gas prices will bounce back in the near future. Well, we all hope that that will be the case, but that's not a plan. It seems pretty foolhardy to me and to a lot of other Albertans.

I expect that Tuesday's budget will bear more bitter fruit of Tory short-sightedness. Along with jobs and the economy, health care is the number one concern for Albertans. But aside from the five-year funding cycle promoted for Alberta Health Services in the throne speech, there's nothing that's remotely reassuring for Albertans. You say that input from Albertans is important. What will this be, then, the 17th or 18th consultation process in the last decade? Another report will be promptly filed away to collect dust. This administration has yet to show with detailed plans how they will protect public health care. This administration has yet to show that they have a plan to create more family doctors, to create more long-term care spaces, to improve emergency room access and wait times, and to address mismanagement and waste throughout the system.

Our vision for health care very simply calls for a return to regional delivery programs focusing on primary health care, a family doctor for every Albertan, home-care services to keep people well and in their homes as long as possible, and reinvestment in prevention programs and wellness programs to keep Albertans healthy and reduce costs. Let's get back to basics. We are spending more and getting less because of a lack of clear planning, practical patient-centred decision-making, and follow-through on those plans with ongoing monitoring and evaluation.

These are real problems that should be tackled now. Albertans have had their fill of studies and ad hoc decision-making. Pick the best ideas from the endless reports, and act on them. Even the five-year funding pledge means nothing if the funding isn't adequate to cover the system's needs. If this administration stays true to form, at best it might give health care professionals a head start on cutting back programs and services as budgets are being slashed.

The Official Opposition receives more mail, e-mail, and phone calls about health care than any other single issue. From professionals to patients to family members, the people of Alberta are demanding better management of this public health care system, not for reasons of ideology, not because they have a grudge against the government, but because bad decisions and misallocated resources are having real impacts: delays, complications, and increased costs. I'm going to read into the record just a few of the hundreds of horror stories that have been sent to us in the last few months. These letters, e-mails, and phone transcripts are edited only for length, to protect the jobs of health care professionals, or to omit the mention of names of members of this House.

I am a medical Resident who works in Calgary. I have seen firsthand the devastation the health reforms and mismanagement of the H1N1 vaccination program has caused. Last month, I was working in the [Peter Lougheed Centre] ICU. 14 out of 16 patients in ICU were [there] with severe H1N1. Most were under the age of 40. Most were previously healthy. None had the opportunity to be vaccinated prior to the outbreak. We were fortunate, on ICU, to be encouraged to leave for our vaccinations the [very] first day they were available – most other staff, patients, and other front line workers were not so fortunate. Only a fraction of people were able to get vaccinated before the vaccine was pulled. After the vaccination schedule was "reintroduced," I witnessed seven nurses, waiting to vaccinate anyone who came to the clinic. No one came . . . for hours. [These staff] were paid to sit there, and wait, while patients upstairs were told to wait until the following week and then come downstairs to the clinic to get their vaccine. The nurses said that the vaccine that wasn't used by the end of the day would be discarded.

Another crazy scenario: Again while on ICU, we had a patient who had been waiting for transfer to the ward for so long that he was actually ready for discharge from ICU. Only he needed 3 additional days of oral antibiotics. We tried to give him a [prescription] for the drugs, but being homeless, he could not afford . . . the prescription. The in-patient pharmacy is now restricted in terms of giving meds to patients at discharge (ie. they can [only] dispense one day's worth, but not more – because of budget cuts). So this gentleman, with no medical bed (only an ICU bed) was required to stay in ICU for 3 additional days, because the hospital would not give him $25 [worth] of antibiotics. (The Math: 3 x $2,000/day . . . = $6,000 cost, because we can't give him $25 of free antibiotics). Here's another story from a health care professional.

I am a Registered Nurse. I have 15 years of work experience, and this is after attending a 4.5 year degree program here in Canada. The government and their arms (including Dr. Duckett) are seeing that I will no longer be a trusted front line worker. I am now a business expense. I am the reason the budget doesn't balance. I only exist to fight over the remaining managerial positions, and only after I orientate an LPN to [take over] my job. I used to love being a nurse. I used to think that I was a required resource. I used to think that I was part of the budget – not the expendable piece of waste that is being cut . . .

I immunized thousands of Albertans every week during the H1N1 campaign. I have been verbally abused, and threatened in the early stages of this debacle called the "Pandemic Plan" while the government stands by and says we are all doing our best. Bah! If you want my best, then let's all go read the Pandemic Influenza Plan that is on our internal website and see just how the plan was supposed to go. Then let's admit that it was you (the government) and not me (the Registered Nurse) who decided to ignore most of the parts that dealt with triage. Let's just say that the Alberta Government has embarrassed me, infuriated me, and led me to believe that another province may be a better place for me and my family . . .

Now of course, I can't sign my name, or even my place of work because I have a code of ethics that does not protect me when I have something to say to the public. So, you have to take my word that I am an RN here in Alberta . . . Big Brother is watching and has a copy of that code of ethics in hand to swat me with if I step out of line.

Here are a few shorter but no less shocking comments.

"I have been with the Calgary Health Region for 25 years, and never have seen things as bad as they are now."

"I have never been so concerned with the future of health care as I have this year and [I] have been working in the system [now] for 35 years. I hope that something can be done before it is too late."

"My mother (68 years old) was on the waiting list for a routine colonoscopy for two years before she was called for an appointment. The terrible thing about the situation was that she was diagnosed with colon cancer before she was able to get the colonoscopy."

"Was it not just 3 years ago that the colleges and universities in Alberta expanded their programs to accept more nursing students? And the 2010 graduating class now has a 40% chance of finding a job in Alberta. This is not planning for our future."

Mr. Speaker, this is just a small sampling of the typical concerns we receive in our offices every day. I'm sure that even government members are hearing the same kind of stories. Yet it's absolutely clear to me that this administration will never get health care right. You had your chance, and I have a feeling that Albertans are ready to move on.

The Speech from the Throne also talks about a new vision for education, but the only thing Albertans know about this administration's vision for education is that you keep saying you have a vision for education. Why not provide Albertans with something concrete? Why haven't you reported back on the Inspiring Education dialogue?

Why did you pull the new School Act from the agenda for this spring sitting? Is it because you're starting to realize that your vision for education isn't the same as the vision shared by Albertans? I don't see a vision for education from this administration, just another collection of wrong decisions.

It was wrong to violate the contract with teachers and then fight and lose the case in court. The Minister of Education's response to the ongoing teachers' wage issue has been less than inspiring. He was obviously completely unprepared for a verdict that favoured the teachers. It was wrong to claw back $80 million from Alberta's public school boards. Can Alberta's students and parents expect even greater cuts to come? It's wrong to cut education funding, our primary investment in our future. By all means, look for efficiencies, but ensure stable, dependable funding for this vital public program, especially during recessionary times.

It's wrong to fire a school board without exhausting all avenues of understanding and board support. It's wrong that we have an administration whose only response to the social challenges faced by aboriginal communities is to fire their local school board. A short simple message repeated by many Calgarians has made its way to our offices. It reads: Alberta's continued prosperity will depend on the knowledge and skills of its future citizens; in these times more than ever it's important to continue to invest in our children's education, and as a concerned Albertan I urge you not to cut funding for our schools. End of quote. As ever, there is great wisdom in the direct, no-nonsense advice of Albertans. This administration should listen.

The throne speech contains a claim that the Premier's administration will build world-class universities. How can this be accomplished when the minister of advanced education has already admitted that the best-case scenario for postsecondary funding this year is a zero per cent increase. The University of Calgary is already laying off staff; the University of Alberta is considering the same. We should be investing in postsecondary education and research to move Alberta from a 20th century economy to a 21st century economy.

It's wrong, Mr. Speaker, to balance a budget on the backs of students. Students and their families are rightfully alarmed by the prospect of massive tuition increases. Now more than ever Alberta needs talented graduates to fill the jobs in the energy sector, the health sector, information technology, agriculture, et cetera. How can we ever address emergency room wait times and the need for greater capacity and long-term care without more professionals? How can we continue to keep the energy sector alive without new engineers and scientists? These short-sighted policies are driving away our best and our brightest.

The minister should say no to each and every request for tuition fee increases. It wasn't so very long ago that this Conservative administration promised the lowest tuition fees in Canada, an admirable goal that really would have increased Alberta's competitiveness and quality of life. Alberta's students and their parents know what those promises are worth.

Consider this letter from last month to the advanced education minister from Rithesh Ram and Natarie Liu, presidents, respectively, of the classes of 2012 and 2011 of the Calgary Medical Students' Association. In their letter they write:

We request that you consider the following when considering a change to post-secondary funding:

- Government deregulation of medical tuition in the 1990's led medical tuition to increase to triple that of other undergraduate programs.
- Tuition often exceeds maximum government student assistance intended for all education-related costs (housing, tuition, food).

- Deregulation has decreased the number of students from low income families from 35% to 13.5% [in medical schools].
- Medical school tuition is seen as a barrier to students from rural communities who are interested in pursuing a career in medicine.
- A survey of Canadian interns and residents from 2006 found that a first-year resident will have a $158,000 debt that will continue to climb during residency; this value is [actually] higher in Alberta.

Please, do not create a system in which my educational and career choices are prescribed by my ability to pay.

In difficult times a responsible government would focus on protecting public services that Albertans depend upon while finding efficiencies to bring down the deficit. This administration claims to protect public services, but ask anyone who depends on PDD funding how they feel about this government's spending priorities. These people are desperate, and they weren't getting the help they needed even during the boom. Betraying their security and well-being is wrong.

Ask any of Alberta's seniors how they feel about this administration's priorities. Seniors deserve all the gratitude we can offer. People want the dignity of compassionate care in their golden years. It's wrong to leave our seniors without enough public long-term care, crowding in our hospitals, and placing incredible financial burdens on the few families lucky enough to be able to afford long-term care at private facilities. Why does this administration rely on selling bonds to build long-term care spaces for seniors? That should be part of the government's annual spending. It's not enough that Albertans buy bonds, another debt, by the way. Are you going to blame them for the lack of affordable housing as well?

The environment is another top issue for Albertans. We all want to protect our air, water, and land. We all want to participate in the fight against climate change to protect the health of our children and grandchildren and to ensure that Alberta's economy will remain prosperous in an increasingly competitive, environmentally aware world. It's wrong to play politics with our primary economic driver. We need a long-term plan that includes other provinces, forging a common approach to carbon reduction. Even the federal Tories are admitting that Alberta needs to do better, but all this administration offers us is carbon capture and more money for slick ad campaigns. That won't cut it.

My Energy critic and I spent months talking to oil and gas companies. We know that their leaders want to do their part. It's time to work constructively with industry and start working together to make our oil and gas sector not only the most competitive in the world but also the cleanest. It's time to protect and renew Alberta's reputation by ensuring the highest standards of leadership and a clean energy agenda.

A responsible government would realize that the term of the current capital plan should be extended. It took years of neglect by this administration to create Alberta's massive infrastructure deficit, but the plan to address the deficit was created during the waning days of the boom. Yes, Alberta's communities need new infrastructure, but surely we could roll out new projects more slowly now, distributing the impact on Alberta's books over a longer time period with the evident reduced construction costs that we're now facing. After all, new infrastructure does no one any good if the government can't afford to cover operating costs, and massive deficits pose exactly that risk. We're already spending at stimulus levels double the national average.

The most precious and potentially vulnerable citizens of all, Alberta's at-risk children, have been completely overlooked in this throne speech. There is no commitment here to improve services to at-risk children and youth. Bosco Homes, Boys and Girls clubs have already suffered devastating cuts, and the Children and Youth Services portfolio has been rightfully criticized as the worst-run department in government right now. Children deserve all the love and support society can offer, and it's simply wrong not to make children and youth our very highest priority. The sustainability fund should be used to protect people and essential services, not the Conservative administration's reputation for balanced budgets.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we see no vision, no imagination, no leadership in this throne speech, just a knee-jerk swing to the right to appease disgruntled Tories within the Conservative caucus and a few token patch-up jobs to cover oversights that a responsible administration would have taken care of years ago. When I was a young man growing up in Calgary, my parents set an example for me. Their words and their actions made it clear that a moral life meant following two essential rules: first, tell the truth; secondly, take care of each other. Elected officials are entrusted by the people with the power to make far-reaching decisions affecting every citizen in this province and beyond. When governments fail to tell the truth, when they fail to protect our common interests, everyone loses.

I have seen incompetent, negligent leadership ruin our health care system, the same mismanagement lead to the abuse and neglect of seniors, people we should be venerating not with words but with deeds that actually give them the dignity and care they deserve. I've seen this administration squander the legacy of our children by spending over 90 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues, saving only a pittance for the future, a pittance that will soon be used up to weather this recession.

During my travels and work around the world I have seen what happens when governments become old and corrupt: dissenting voices become afraid to speak; waste gets worse each year; decisions are made without proper consultation or scientific analysis. Perhaps worst of all, the people in power come to feel a dangerous sense of entitlement. They come to feel that they are above public scrutiny. A responsible government would behave far differently than this current administration.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, everyone should have a family doctor thanks to long-term planning, incentives for health care professionals, and affordable tuition to create a new generation of professionals. We would have hospitals that work, with nurses and doctors that aren't stretched to and beyond their limit. We would have seniors enjoy quality, affordable long-term care and prevention and wellness initiatives, including mental health, to help everyone lead healthier lives and lower the costs on the health care system.

A responsible administration would actually act on the advice of the Auditor General. They would work with the energy industry to hammer out a final royalty deal that serves our most important sector and the people of Alberta while protecting the environment. It would create the conditions to foster a flourishing upgrading and value-added sector in Alberta. It would reform the electricity system with the best interests of the consumers in mind, and it would repeal or amend all legislation that limits access to information, freedom of speech, and public consultation. Albertans have solutions, and this administration is foolish not to listen.

A responsible administration would stop spending millions on PR campaigns and actually protect our environment. It would create incentives to move to more clean energy sources and jobs related to energy efficiency, housing, and public transit. In my travels I've discovered that as proud as Albertans are of their province, many of us share a sense that we could do better. With the resources at our command — our natural wealth, our well-educated, well-skilled population, our can-do culture — we should be able to build a truly world-class society, including hospitals, postsecondary institutions, and research centres. If we put our minds to it, we could build the world's first truly sustainable economy. We could be leaders in that race.

We must eliminate homelessness and dramatically reduce poverty in this province.

All this is possible with a government that committed itself to four simple principles: health, enterprise, foresight, integrity. This is a time for solutions. We need energetic, forward-looking leadership, a government that can adapt with changing times and new challenges. We need a government that makes decisions based on principles, not political expediency. We can do better.

As I snowshoed recently with my brother across Alberta's snow-covered foothills, I saw with perfect clarity what I and my caucus have been fighting for over many years of professional work and now five years, for me, in politics: a better way for our province, its economy, its environment, and most importantly for our people. My vision for tomorrow includes everyone who calls Alberta home, everyone who wants to return to the sensible centre, a return to common-sense government, government that listens honestly, works for the public interest, the common good, and a better future for everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there is a five-minute question-and-comment period should a member or members choose to participate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition if he was surprised that the government in the throne speech made no announcement of a plan to deal with the $1.2 billion accumulated deficit that has been rung up by Alberta Health Services in the short period of time that they have been administering our health care system. In fact, the budget is over $9 billion. My question, specifically, to the hon. member would be: were you surprised that the government made no reference to that or did not provide any details as to how they're going to solve that $1.2 billion deficit that was just rung up in a very short period of time?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I think all Albertans were surprised to hear the rumours of such a huge deficit in one year as a result of the restructuring, a third restructuring in 15 years. Previous deficits in the health system were less than one-tenth of that, and there are still many questions being asked about where that cost went.

Once again an example of a government that is not forthcoming with its expenditures, not clear about where our money is going, and again we have to ask the government: open the books; let's get a value-for-money audit on this government. This is another example of very poor implementation if there was a plan and clearly wasteful spending that has left all of us reeling in a health care system that is the envy of our world and still struggling to provide value for the extra funding that we provide for health care in this province. Indeed, a real need for indicators of where we're spending, what we're getting for that spending, and greater accountability for a government that seems to lurch from one decision to another in the health care system and wonder why people are concerned about chaos, frustration, and now brain drain to other provinces.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

Then I will call on the next speaker and also identify four additional speakers after that. The next speaker will be the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. So the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and respond to the throne speech delivered so eloquently by our Lieutenant Governor, His Honour Norman Kwong. Before I dive into the merits of this timely speech, I'd like to thank His Honour for again coming here and sharing his inspirational words.

The Speech from the Throne highlighted many of the priorities of this government, priorities that include health care, the economy, the environment, and ensuring that Alberta remains a leader in global competitiveness. These are priorities that Albertans hold dear, priorities that will build on our strengths and lead us into the future. And while I believe strongly in each of these priorities, I'd like to focus my comments today on two specific commitments: safe communities and agriculture development. After all, Mr. Speaker, these two commitments, I feel, are of critical importance not only for my constituents but for each and every Albertan.

Safe communities are the backbone of our society and are essential for the continuation of our strong economy, our effective public services, and our overall well-being. As His Honour stated, "Albertans believe that safe, strong, and caring communities are important to our quality of life," and I'd be inclined to agree. To this end, I know that this government has pledged several initiatives to promote and develop safe and caring communities that assist those in need while protecting us from those who would do us harm, initiatives like the Alberta gang reduction strategy. Mr. Speaker, this strategy is comprehensive. It includes initiatives to improve enforcement while at the same time actively going into the community and addressing youth before they take up a life of crime. Moreover, our commitment to enforcement can be measured by boots on the ground. As His Honour stated, the government "will bolster the front lines of Alberta's police forces with 100 new officers, the fulfillment of a three-year, 300-officer commitment."

In addition, I'm pleased to note that this government will combat gang activity from a legislative standpoint, introducing legislation designed to protect witnesses. After all, if we can convince a witness to step forward, we could have a greater chance of putting away those who threaten our communities.

Furthermore, this government recognizes that creating safe communities requires more than enforcement initiatives. Rather, it also requires a commitment to those in need. To this end, the Lieutenant Governor stated that this government will meet and exceed its commitment to creating 14,000 new child care spaces and will continue to work to deliver 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012. This is wonderful news. Mr. Speaker, these are commitments that will not only improve the welfare of those in need but that will also improve the safety and the welfare of our communities.

A second theme covered by His Honour that I'd like to address is the importance of ensuring that Alberta remains competitive on the world stage, and I believe that this is most important when we look at our agriculture sector. After all, agriculture is one of the key sectors of the Alberta economy and a sector that, I believe, stands to benefit greatly from improved access to both international and domestic markets.

To this end, one of the most promising ideas represented by the throne speech is the idea of creating a western economic partnership. Essentially, this partnership would include Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan and would create Canada's largest free trade and investment market. This market would then be able to work on joint trade missions overseas and market the goods produced in western Canada, goods like those produced by Alberta's agrifood industry.

After all, as His Honour stated, Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are a key and sustainable economic driver of our province. We are a responsible producer of safe, high-quality food products that are in demand all over the world. In fact, it is estimated that in 2008 the value of agrifood shipments was over $11 billion, and while this figure is good, if not staggering, I believe that we can make this figure even better.

What the agriculture sector in Alberta needs is a commitment to break into new markets and aggressively sell Alberta internationally. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud this government is making this commitment. For example, 86 per cent of our exports are with our largest trading partner, the United States. We struggle to adjust to the seemingly ever-changing restrictions placed on our trade with the United States, and I'm pleased today to note that the United States has announced that Canada is no longer on the restricted list of countries for the buy America program, which previously kept Canadian companies and products out of the U.S. markets.

We are an exporting jurisdiction, producing more than we can consume, and we must have markets. Therefore, the three partners united in the western economic partnership will also be working together to expand trade in the growing east Asian market. After all, the economies of nations like China and India are set to expand dramatically, and it would be incredibly beneficial to get Alberta's agriculture products there at the ground level.

In addition, I believe we must work to add value to our agricultural products. Again, this is a sentiment shared by the Honourable Lieutenant Governor in his speech, specifically when he said that Alberta "will continue efforts to increase our competitive edge, foster value-added opportunities, and increase access to important international markets." Moreover, Mr. Speaker, adding value to an agricultural product could range from age verification on livestock to full meat testing to processing plants. Not only will processes like these make Alberta's agricultural products more valuable; they will increase our overall market access as increasingly more international jurisdictions are demanding value-added products.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the government's previous actions on safe communities and agriculture development, and I'm excited that these issues remain a priority in the coming year. The Lieutenant Governor's words should remind us once again that together Albertans can accomplish anything. They should remind us of the value of hard work and forward thinking, and they should remind us of the power of Alberta's character. We have the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. Does any hon. member wish to take that five minutes?

Seeing none, I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In chapter 1 of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol, Dickens provides us great insight into his antagonistic protagonist, Ebenezer Scrooge, whom he describes as a tight-fisted hand at the grindstone . . . a squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching, covetous old sinner! Hard and sharp as flint, from which no steel had ever struck out generous fire; secret, and self-contained, and solitary as an oyster.

Dickens also points out that “external heat and cold had little influence on Scrooge.”

Flash forward over a century and a half to 2010 Alberta, and recall the adage that fact is frequently stranger than fiction. While it is purely coincidental that our Premier shares the same E.S. monogram as Dickens’ fictional character, it is very disconcerting to acknowledge that according to the latest polling numbers 86 per cent of Albertans see similar character flaws in the governance of this province.

Due to this government’s lack of transparency and accountability Albertans have no idea how many of the original $17 billion remain in the sustainability fund, which the government has frequently boasted puts Alberta in a much better position to weather the recessionary storm. Even if the government has squandered what remains of this fund, how can the Premier justify clawing back $12 million from Alberta’s most vulnerable persons with disabilities, their families, and supporters? How can either he or his minister of employment, who didn’t blink at awarding themselves a 35 per cent across-the-board wage increase, begrudge a 12-cents-an-hour increase to individuals making the minimum wage while working for wealthy transnational corporations like McDonald’s and Wal-Mart? Is facilitating 12-year-olds’ entry into the workplace their solution to the 78,000 plus Alberta children who according to last spring’s StatsCan figures are living below the poverty line?

When it comes to the descriptors “squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching,” one need look no further than the Minister of Education, who not only froze increases to special-needs children but cut $80 million out of last year’s budget. As if that wasn’t bad enough, at this moment the minister is pleading poverty when it comes to the arbitrator’s awarding of the additional 1 per cent weekly wage increase that the government acknowledged was the way that not only teachers but school support staff and custodians would be compensated during the five-year agreement. Do the words “bargained in good faith” have no meaning for this government?

When it comes to the weekly earnings average, which determines MLAs’ compensation, what’s good for the government goose appears to be too rich for the Albertan working gander. If that is the case, why should members of the United Nurses association, the Health Sciences Association, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, or the Canadian Union of Public Employees, whose contracts are coming up for negotiation, have any faith in the government’s word?

The terms “secret” and “self-contained” could easily apply to the ministry of advanced education, whose actions or lack thereof would suggest that the government views education as a liability, an expense rather than an investment. With the passing of Bill 40, the opportunity to debate tuition increases in this Legislature was lost. The closed-door decision of the minister is what students in postsecondary institutions have been both dreading and anticipating for the past number of months.

This government doesn’t seem to understand that education and economy are inextricably linked. For every dollar invested in education, there is a $3 return. The farce that is being played out to both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta of tuition increases in professional faculties of between 47 to 60 per cent might at first appear comical if its potential reality didn’t have such a devastating effect on students themselves and Alberta’s economy. Alberta already has the highest high school dropout rate in the nation and the lowest postsecondary enrolment. Twenty-five per cent of eligible students who have the required entrance grades and can afford the ever-increasing tuition costs, which are growing more disconnected from the quality of education they receive, are already turned away each year.

The way off the globally dictated nonrenewable resource funding roller coaster is through education and diversification. This reality should be even more obvious during a recession. Why would the government consider making access to a postsecondary education even more exclusionary than it already is? What happened to the increases based on inflation principle? Why does the government undermine its students and its institutions by not providing the necessary predictability and sustainability of operational grants? Why would the government break the backs of our most important natural resource, our students? When it comes to the importance of investing in advanced education, Europe is light years ahead of Alberta.

With regard to public education this government trots out the notion of choice, yet this government chooses to unfairly advantage private schools to the tune of almost $200 million annually. Private schools, which are permitted to discriminate on a number of factors, including religious preference and affordability, not only receive 70 per cent of their public school per-pupil funding and additional infrastructure grants, but they are permitted to charge tuition, which in some cases runs into thousands of dollars.

The fact that the average age of Alberta’s public schools is over 40 years old, with minimal government infrastructure maintenance over the last 20, combined with the fact that due to the government’s space utilization regulations school boards have been forced to close more schools than they have opened should be a major concern to all Albertans, whose futures will be decided upon by the calibre of the students being educated today.

With what little time remains, I would be remiss to not at least touch on the series of ongoing problems within the Ministry of Children and Youth Services. Currently, due to the hiring freeze, up to 700 positions remain vacant. How can this possibly be considered in the, and I quote, best interests of children when their caseworkers are so overloaded as to make advocacy almost impossible? The turnover of workers in contracted-out children’s services due to wages, which are half or less than those of government workers, adds to the inconsistency in care and advocacy. Reducing qualifications for workers in the hopes of stopping the exodus does an even greater disservice to children.

Over 150 years have passed since Dickens penned his novel of redemption. In Alberta, however, when it comes to valuing or delivering critical public service, time appears to have stood still.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comment or question.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a tremendous honour to rise today on behalf of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency to address this Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. My constituents have seen a lot of highs and lows in 2009 and have expressed many concerns in these trying times. I am dedicated to representing my constituents’ interests and to working hard to promote sustainable development in my community in 2010. I am confident that this government is committed to doing the same.

However, my constituents need to believe in this also. They need to be shown that we as a government will come through for them in uncertain times. As a government we need to reach out to Albertan communities and communicate the ways in which we will foster growth and take action. We need to keep our communities strong and sustainable and encourage co-operation among them.

My constituency is extremely diverse, Mr. Speaker, as is Alberta. Our communities are made up of many different people from many different backgrounds, professions, and places. While it will be difficult to work together on every issue due to the conflicting interests, we must persevere to ensure that opportunities are being created and that all Albertans' needs are being met.

This past weekend my constituency had the distinct privilege of hosting the 2010 Alberta Winter Games. The chair of the Winter Games, Phil Kushnir, told the Cold Lake Sun that the games were one of the first things he has seen that has incorporated the town of Bonnyville, the MD, the city of Cold Lake, 4 Wing so comprehensively and that it's incredible what we can do as a region. Mr. Speaker, I, too, believe this is incredible.

It is an event like this that makes you realize how easy things become when we all work together towards achieving a common goal. My constituency has been struggling with its inability to work cohesively this past year, as I'm sure many areas across Alberta have as well. In late 2009 Cold Lake applied for a dissolution study due to revenue and sustainability issues and is waiting for the recommendation from our government. While opinions differ on this issue, I am happy to be part of a government that is willing to provide support to my community when in need, wherever that support might be. While our communities work together towards strengthening their relationships, we will see industries, markets strengthen in response to this.

I would like to see responsible development in 2010 in the two industries that impact Bonnyville and Cold Lake the most, agriculture and energy. Agriculture is the major area of concern for my constituents, Mr. Speaker. Many hard-working farmers across Alberta and in my community have passed their land down from generation to generation. However, it's getting harder for the family farm to yield a considerable profit, as they once had. Like all Albertans, farmers are worried about the economic downturn and how it has affected their finances and how they will be able to restore their business. We have been doing a tremendous job as a province in support of this industry, but we need to continue to move forward into new markets by limiting barriers to growth.

Development in all industries needs to occur in order to keep up with global markets, especially in the energy industry. The five major oil and gas companies in my constituency are working on ways to improve methods of extraction to increase productivity and limit their environmental footprint. For example, Imperial Oil's Cold Lake heavy-oil operation facility reached its one-billionth barrel mark in October of 2009. The facility joins three other facilities in Canada who have also reached this milestone. It is the first in situ operation in the country to accomplish this, and it happened in my constituency. Another example is Osum Oil Sands Corp., an emerging in situ oil sands company. It has recently applied for the Taiga project and is seeking approval for a 35,000 barrel per day in situ project in the Cold Lake region. This project will not involve mines, tailings ponds, or fresh water and will have a relatively small surface footprint.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents rely heavily on this industry, but at the same time we do not want to compromise the natural beauty of our land. By encouraging new and responsible development in this industry, we can expect more environmental accountability from its key players. The recent development of our province's research and innovation system under Alberta Innovates will help to do just this. I am now a government liaison committee member of Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions. This new system will help to strengthen markets, encourage growth and technological development, and allow our province to emerge as a global player in innovation.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are also concerned about health care, its accessibility in rural communities, and the changes that have been implemented over the past year. Many families do not have family doctors in my constituency. Approximately 3,000 in Bonnyville alone do not have one. They are worried about the shortage of doctors in rural communities and the wait times that occur as a result of this shortage.

My constituents are also concerned about funding for priority services. A recent issue that my community struggled with was the funding for a nurse practitioner in Bonnyville. A nurse practitioner is vital to this area, and without one, patient care would suffer. We need to work hard as a government to ensure that health care remains patient focused and that the health and well-being of Albertans are considered first and foremost.

As a former teacher I believe that education needs to be a major priority of this government and that it's important to continue to act in the best interests of Alberta students. Our Education minister has proven that he will take action when student learning is affected. We need to continue to take steps to ensure that Alberta students receive the best possible education. Mr. Speaker, if we can commit to strengthening all of these areas of concern, I know that we can successfully support Albertans in need.

It has been a pleasure to be part of this government for the past two years. Even though times have been tough of late, we have the strength to band together to create positive developments for our communities. While Alberta is comprised of many different communities, we are all part of one very important one. This province binds us together through thick and thin, and I am confident in our ability to grow as many and as one.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for comments and questions. Hon. member, you wish to use five minutes?

Mr. Chase: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Something we share in common is our pride as teachers, having worked within the Alberta education system. Do you have concerns that the government's clawback of $80 million and the unknown figure that may be clawed back this year to balance the budget have a potentially detrimental effect on children in the classroom?

Mrs. Leskiw: As you know, I've taught for 36 years, and I've taught classes of 36, taught a class of 39. The size of the class doesn't matter, but the makeup does. I've had a class of 18 that was worse than my class of 36. I also know that within the school systems alone – and I can only talk about the school systems I worked under – they themselves need to look into how they spend money. The government gives the school board money, but the ultimate decision of how they spend it is in the hands of the school board. Schools, the teachers, the school boards all need to look at how they spend the money that is provided for them. I am confident that the education of our students will not suffer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a short question to my colleague. She mentioned in her presentation that there were 3,000 people in Bonnyville that didn't have a doctor. I wonder if she could enlighten us, firstly, as to the population of Bonnyville and, secondly, on the number of doctors in Bonnyville.

Mrs. Leskiw: The population of Bonnyville is over 6,000, but the doctors in the Bonnyville area also service the patients in the MD of Bonnyville, which is another 9,000. We have 12 doctors. They are right now recruiting three more. We did hire a nurse practitioner, and we're hoping that that will relieve some of the problems. But we are short of doctors.

Mr. Allred: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton – help me out here – Calder. Sorry.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's all in Calder, sir.

To the hon. member. I've had many opportunities to enjoy the recreational amenities of your constituency, in particular both Bonnyville Beach and Floatingstone Lake, as well as some of the other amenities that you have, not to forget the aptly named Cold Lake. My question is not, however, about the fine body of water itself but has more to do with the dissolution of the community of Cold Lake. My question is: what is the impact that that's having on the local industry in the community? Are you seeing any loss of economic opportunity or any increased levels of unemployment or, you know, any other negative impact indicators at this particular time?

Mrs. Leskiw: Actually, our area is doing quite well. The oil companies are expanding every day.

In regard to the dissolution study I think that what Cold Lake was trying to do by applying it was for the government to take a real close look at how municipalities are funded across the entire province, the difference between rural and urban municipalities. It's a problem. It's not a problem that just occurs in Bonnyville. It's a problem that has to be addressed in the entire province. But we're doing just fine.

By the way, all things don't happen in Calder. They all happen in Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In 2003 with the Learning Commission report the government only lived up to half of the wage increase, which stuck the school boards, who are solely funded by the government, for the rest. Sixty-three different locals, approximately 50,000 Albertans, are going to be forced by the minister's decision to live up to the arbitrator's ruling. Do you have concerns about that effect on the school boards' budgets and directions you might suggest to the minister about bargaining in good faith?

Mrs. Leskiw: Well, I lived through the time when we teachers had to take a 5 per cent cutback, and that still is in my memory quite well. I believe that if the school boards take a closer look at what they're doing, they're going to be able to accommodate the increase for teachers. I believe that teachers deserve the raise that they got, and I definitely am glad that it went in that direction.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, it's a 15-minute allocation for a response?

The Deputy Speaker: Right. Fifteen minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. There we go. Mr. Speaker, I always listen to the throne speech for a couple of reasons: primarily to see how the government's vision for the upcoming year is going to affect the good constituents of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and then, secondly, because I'm critic on a couple of portfolios. I'm looking specifically for what I can glean out of there around culture and around environment because those are the two portfolios I'm responsible for.

There were a number of things that came up for my constituents, and I've actually been seeking input from them for most of the previous month on Facebook and website and e-zine that I do and in just talking with people and responding to issues they brought up with me. You know, what are the concerns? What do you want me to bring forward on your behalf?

Here's what I'm hearing from people. The most dramatic one, I think, for a number of my constituents and their families was the cuts to PDD. The minister responsible will immediately respond that, "Well, these weren't cuts; these were administrative adjustments," and some other carefully crafted language that gets used. Frankly, my constituents were not led astray by any of the fancy footwork on the language there. These were cuts, and it has already been affecting them. I have heard a number of stories of people who were getting a specific number of hours of assistance that allowed them to live independently.

These are adults. These are persons with developmental disabilities. These are not children. Once individuals move out of the care of children's services, they usually move onto AISH or onto PDD. Where someone had enough hours of help to be able to exist in a roommate situation with another individual with PDD or special needs, their hours have been cut back enough that that was really in jeopardy. If they didn't have someone that could help get them up and get them dressed and get some food into their stomachs, they would not be able to exist in their home and they would have to move back in with their families. Frankly, their families just are not able to cope. In many cases their parents are of an age where they physically cannot assist their adult children and move them about. Even with some of the aids to daily living, which are available in a limited manner, Mr. Speaker, to assist them, that's still not enough to allow them to be able to look after their adult child.

There have already been cuts, and frankly I was offended when the minister was talking about the need to find administrative efficiencies. These not-for-profits already – they invented the meaning of administrative efficiency. They're already counting every single paper clip. Actually, they do without them because they're too expensive. They are already operating in a very efficient manner, and to say that they're not was really offensive.

The increases that have been experienced in PDD and some of the other social service sectors were to address the enormous wage gap that existed between individuals working for NGOs providing that service and contracted to government and government workers doing exactly the same job. We had a 25 to 40 per cent wage difference on that, and the government was slowly adjusting the grant programs to deal with that difference in wages. So to be saying, "Oh, they've already had an increase,” or “They’ve had an increase of X per cent or X million dollars in the last couple of years,” is not true. Yes, they did, and it was for a very specific purpose. Frankly, for most of them, by the time the allocation got doled out, it was a difference of literally pennies an hour in their wage.

They have already been dealing with cutbacks in that sector and in the social service sector overall. What we’re seeing now is the government making it harder to qualify for programs. They get less hours of support. There’s more pressure on the NGOs to do separate fundraising to subsidize the cost of a program that they’re contracted by the government to deliver. So we have agencies fundraising to subsidize government programs.

There is a huge issue here around the government’s ability to protect vulnerable people and to allow them to engage in the full life of the province, and that continues to be an issue. I did not hear it addressed in the throne speech, and where I did, I have an argument with it. I mean, when you say that social programs will become better integrated and more focused, what I’m hearing is doublespeak for tougher criteria and that fewer people are going to get into the program. We already know that’s what is happening. The outcomes-based activity that they are moving toward in the whole social service sector is going to be even more of that: less money, more expectation that the not-for-profit delivers more service for less money. The people that really end up being unprotected in all of this are the Albertans that should be getting the service.

I want to talk about university tuition. Again, I’ve been hearing from students about the increase in tuition and the enormous struggle that it is becoming for them, especially those in so-called professional programs which are subject to the market modifiers. We’re talking medicine, obviously, law, and some other faculties that that would apply to. Here we have the situation where everybody is saying, “We don’t have family doctors; we need more family doctors,” yet at the same time the government is making it so that the universities have to make choices about raising the tuition rates, particularly on these professional programs, so that fewer people can afford to be going. We’re not seeing incentive programs that would get people to go to university and then serve as a family doctor in a rural area, and they would get, you know, part of their tuition paid. No, we’re just seeing the tuition go up. Where is the sense in that? How is that moving us along the road that we all know we need to go on?

I have a number of seniors in my constituency, and they continue to express concerns to me. They still feel that they tightened their buckles the last time the government got into trouble, in the mid-90s, and they lost a number of programs. Those programs were never restored to them, and they continue to struggle with that. The details around the pharmaceutical plan for seniors are still unfleshed out. My office phones the department of health about every six weeks and tries to get clarification on how this is going to work. I’m now being told that this is going to be an opt-in program; before I was told it was an opt-out program. How much is it going to cost them? Seniors are really worried about how much extra this new scheme is going to cost them, and they don’t believe that it’s going to save them much money. We’re not seeing the support for seniors that we expected.

There’s been a lot of talk over the last six months about the effect of government policy on mental health. We have now heard that they’re going to stop trying to shut down Alberta Hospital, but really the point that started all of this was that Alberta Hospital needed renovations. It needed upgrading. It needed modernization. We’re hearing nothing about that, even if it’s a long-term plan, even if it’s this infrastructure amount will be, you know, rolled out over five years. Now we’re getting nothing. We’re told it’s going to be shut down, and then we’re told it’s not.

In fact, some of the seniors were moved from the Alberta Hospital to a new facility that was built by Caritas out by the Misericordia hospital. You know, Mr. Speaker, some of my seniors from the General hospital, which was also going to be renovated, were supposed to go to that Caritas facility. They can’t go there now because that space is now being taken up by geriatric mental health patients.

So a huge chaos has been created there, a great deal of uncertainty for people, and frankly two steps forward, three steps back is what we keep getting here. There has been no step up as to the provision of those programs in the community that would keep people with mental health issues stable with help with medications, with help with daily living, help with housing. All we know is we’re going to end up with more and more people with mental illness and addiction challenging our housing and homeless problems that are already pretty big.

I want to talk very briefly about minimum wage. I just find it so interesting that the rhetoric that came out of the government was all about helping small businesses. Mr. Speaker, small business doesn’t pay minimum wage. They can’t afford to. They pay better than minimum wage to people. They want to keep them in place there, and their employees are really key to them. They don’t want a high turnover. Who does pay minimum wage? Huge corporations, multinational corporations: Wal-Mart, McDonald’s, TacoTime, a lot of the fast food agencies, a lot of the megamall dwellers. That’s who pays minimum wage. I am truly curious as to how the government is going to explain to my constituents – a lot of them work in the service sector – why they are making it easier for multinational corporations like Wal-Mart and McDonald’s to get away with continuing to pay a lower rate to the people that work there.

You know, the other sector that pays minimum wage is the government itself. Here are the groups that are actually going to gain by what the government is putting out, not small businesspeople but the government itself and huge multinational corporations that actually do pay minimum wage. That’s not going to help my constituents.

I want to talk about the fact that, you know, as you drive through my constituency you see people lined up in the medicentres. Every single seat is taken. People are leaning against the wall waiting to get in, and that’s not a family doctor. I mean, maybe it’s a place where your file is still there the next time you come in, but it’s not offering primary care. Actually, the government stopped talking about primary care or primary care networks, and that is an important component that we need to continue to move forward on.

I’ve heard from people who are really concerned with, again, the doublespeak we’re getting from the government about debt creation, the sale of Alberta bonds, which is a creation of debt. Why is the government getting into that? Why can they not reorganize and find their own administrative efficiencies, stagger out the amount of infrastructure they’re spending over a longer period of time, for example, and cut some of the other expenditures that we’ve brought up time and time again? No, instead we’re going to have Alberta capital bonds being sold, which is debt creation, but it’s all being sold as though granny is going to get a roof over her head. Well, yes. But those same taxpayers, all of us, are going to be responsible for the interest rate that has to be paid on those capital bonds. So a few people will do well out of it, but every single one of us who are taxpayers in Alberta will end up paying that extra interest rate that goes out to pay on those capital bonds.

The government is moving ahead on revising the condo act, and it needs to be bigger, faster, and more wonderful on that one because we have more condos, not less. And we need revisions to that condo act to move along as quickly as possible.

I'm also looking to see how the government is doing on the creation of child care spaces, but I'm not hearing from them how they expect to deal with subsidizing the creation of child care spaces for the very large private providers of child care that we now have moving into Alberta and into our marketplace. I'm not sure why taxpayers have to subsidize private business for the creation of child care spaces.

On the cultural scene we need more venue spaces, and that, by the way, includes a request I've had from people in Jasper that they're looking for an acknowledgement from the government that they could use part of a large space vacated in the courthouse in Jasper for a Jasper arts centre. I'll talk more about that as the session goes on. I'm also hearing from the film industry here in Alberta, who are really struggling to remain competitive with the other provinces, and their request to the government to consider revising the streaming process that they have right now. I think that's an area where a little bit of investment would go an awfully long way, and we know that. We've learned this. We've learned this lesson, and still the government goes backwards on it. Frankly, that whole thing needs to be on a tax credit system, and I hope eventually that the government can manage to get there.

The other issues that I would like to raise are on the environment. Of course, our biggest worry is around water. It's around air quality. It's around cumulative effects. It's around reclamation and some pretty strong regulations around reclamation. You know, Mr. Speaker, we do believe that climate change is a reality, and it poses a significant challenge. We believe that we as a government, certainly the Alberta Liberals as a government, would act in good faith to reduce Alberta's carbon footprint.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'd like to ask my esteemed colleague a question and provide a little bit of a background for the question. The question is: are you suffering from late 1990s déjà vu? The reason I say that is that in the 1990s in Calgary we lost half our hospitals. What I've been noticing is that at that point, as part of the qualifier, we didn't have a $17 billion buffer in the sustainability fund. Are you seeing programs, health delivery, either complications or closures in Edmonton that approach the magnitude of losing half the hospitals? Is the government playing musical beds with the existing positions?

Ms Blakeman: It's not my area of expertise, but what I can tell you that we see in Edmonton are buildings being built but not being completed and not being operational. We have the Mazankowski heart centre being built and then huge problems with it being completed – again, is there the staff to actually operate it? – and secondly, the Stollery children's centre, where, again, we had kids being looked after in a tent outside for an extended period of time. After stop and start and stop and start, we seem to have now a commitment to move ahead on that. Then there's the Edmonton clinic, which is also in the wings, plus what needs to be done for the expansion of the Cross Cancer Institute. So there was a lot of infrastructure that got started, stopped, with huge indecision around that. Work orders change, the money mounts up, and still the question of whether or not we would actually have the staff to work in it.

So am I seeing a déjà vu in programs? Yes, and here's an example. I remember talking to the minister of what was then employment, I think, or Alberta Works, who was the former Member for Lethbridge-West. He had participated in a study around cultural workers and that whole concept that, you know, investing in the arts and creating cultural workers was a cheaper way to create jobs and very long-lasting jobs. That whole project and the report that came out of it went nowhere, yet there was so much potential in it.

What we saw is a stagnation in what's happening in the arts. We had a bit of an injection the last couple of years, and we're now hearing that the government is going to give it a haircut. Well, frankly, a 15 per cent haircut in the cultural area is going to take us back to where we were in spending at about the end of the 1980s. So, yes, it's very much feeling like a déjà vu. Here we have programs and grants that we could be applying for federally for cultural career choices and promoting careers in culture, labour market agreements around culture, and we can't get any uptake on it in Alberta because we have no government policy on cultural workers and how that fits into our whole scheme of things.

So it's very much feeling like a déjà vu to me.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: I'd like to say that I was listening with bated breath to that speech, but that would not be the truth, Mr. Speaker. But I did hear out of the corner of one ear that the member wanted us to spread out our construction. So I'd ask the member for a yes-or-no answer. Would she also have had that same position with the construction of the art gallery in her constituency? Yes or no?

Ms Blakeman: If the timing had been the same, yes. I mean, to look at the Art Gallery of Alberta now and start to construct it now, knowing where we are, yeah, I would be advising that they stagger it out a bit longer.

Mr. Liepert: We'll remember that next election.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you asked me to tell the truth, so why don't you remember that as well?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. An historical note: scalping is a Caucasian-introduced area. Would you suggest that the 10 to 15 per cent haircut is more like a scalping?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise in the House today to reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is interesting to note that the first Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, the Hon. George Hedley Bulyea, read the first Speech from the Throne on March 15, 1906, for the First Session of the First Legislature of the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Since then there have been over 100 throne speeches. I have heard His Honour deliver three in this Chamber in person, and I am saddened to say that not one of them mentioned me.

Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his moving and inspirational speech. The throne speech acknowledged that despite difficult times Albertans remain confident when looking to the future, and we have every reason to be. It is because in times like this Albertans roll up their sleeves and work together to ensure a bright future, a future where our economy continues to flourish, a future where our health care is the envy of the country, and a future where our children are able to grow up and thrive in strong and safe communities all over this province.

Mr. Speaker, fiscally this province has a solid foundation. This government's fiscal management and accountability have elevated Alberta to one of the best fiscal standings in North America. Alberta has some of the lowest taxes as well as some of the most established saving plans for the future. Due to this excellent fiscal planning and a commitment to saving for a rainy day, this government has put itself in a fortunate position. Saving is of utmost importance to this government. For over the past three decades Alberta has been saving. Savings like the sustainability fund can provide a soft landing in economic down times. With the sustainability fund we have the tools to face any economic storm head-on and persevere.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are deeply interested in our economy, and this deep interest is matched only by our passion for health care. Alberta's health care system will continue to be a leader as we spend near the top amount per capita in the country. The health of all Albertans is at stake. That is why it is imperative to assess and reassess health care in Alberta to make sure we are doing our absolute best. As His Honour has stated, "Your government will go beyond statistical measures . . . and seek input from Albertans themselves." The ability to plan ahead is integral to health care, and the Alberta government knows this. With the implementation of a five-year funding plan Alberta health care will remain stable and secure no matter what the economic environment entails.

His Honour also mentioned that our health care system will be accountable to Albertans, and accountability in health care is paramount to this government. Mr. Speaker, a key area on which Alberta Health Services will focus their efforts is in reducing wait times for procedures. As well, Alberta Health Services will do their utmost to ensure that health care is readily accessible to all those who need it. It is through public consultation that Alberta Health will provide added transparency, efficiency, and accountability. With a five-year plan implemented, Albertans will be able to say that we have one of the best health care systems in the country.

Along with providing better health care, we are committed to building safe and caring communities. Our quality of life depends on us having strong and safe neighbourhoods to call home. Reducing crime in a meaningful, long-term way is essential in creating great communities. The existence of criminal gangs threatens to upset the balance we have in our communities. Their criminal activities are a danger to our residents and our property. As His Honour noted, "the Alberta gang reduction strategy will provide a comprehensive, long-term approach to suppress gang crime in Alberta." Mr. Speaker, initiatives like this will make sure that the gang environment and lifestyle does not look like an attractive option for our youth. In addition, minimizing the number of gangs decreases the inherent dangers which gang activity can lead to. With fewer gangs and less crime Albertans can focus on the multitude of opportunities this beautiful province has to offer.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been blessed with abundant natural resources. However, our most valuable resource is Albertans themselves. It is the industrious, innovative, and driven people that make the most of our resources and of the opportunities our province provides. It is through them that our province remains in a fortunate position. The Speech from the Throne thoroughly confirmed that Albertans can genuinely look to the future with confidence, a confidence that ensures that our economy will continue to grow, confidence that our health care system will continue to be a leader, and confidence that our children will grow up in safe, healthy communities, free from the dangers of gangs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, who has represented Alberta exceptionally well in the last five years. His Speech from the Throne outlined and envisioned Alberta's continued and future greatness. A remarkable man once said: learn from the past, watch the present, and create a better future. I can proudly say that this is what our government is all about: creating a strong and stable future for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about the government's wisdom of saving for a rainy day. I would suggest that we have recessionary rain of Noah's ark epic proportions occurring in Alberta at this time. Unfortunately, the government has not saved very much over the last number of years, when we had billions of dollars of surplus. The heritage trust fund is worth less now than when Peter Lougheed left it.

I'm wondering two questions of the hon. member. Does he have any idea, even to the nearest billion, how much remains of the sustainability fund, that he has praised his government for setting aside? If there is a significant amount left in the sustainability fund, why is his government not using the sustainability fund to eliminate any cuts to public service provisions? I'll be glad to repeat them if necessary.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question by the hon. colleague. I'd like to repeat the principle: this government's fiscal management and accountability I believe elevated Alberta to one of the best fiscal standings in North America, and the Premier's intention of making this province one of the best places to live, work, and play is basically related to the fiscal management of this government.

I beg to disagree with my colleague in that he does not believe that this government is doing a good job on our savings system. The fact of the matter is that we were able to pay through this Conservative government the deficit that we had, $21 billion. In addition to that, we have savings in our sustainability fund of $17 billion. This is just like using the money that we have, the interest that is supposed to be received from that money, for the deficit that this government will be incurring for the next few years. So it's money, from the left, but it is our own money that we are using at the same time. I'd like to remind our colleague that Alberta has some of the lowest taxes as well as some of the most established savings plans for the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for your enthusiastic support of your government's ability to save. I hope the minister of finance will reveal the figures tomorrow. We keep hearing about $17 billion in our sustainability fund, but Albertans have no idea how much of that $17 billion remains and how that money will be used to preserve public service programs. I asked you if you had any knowledge, and apparently you firmly believe and have stated in this House that there's still $17 billion in the fund. What good is a large bank account if your house is falling apart, if your children require clothing and you can't afford food?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this is exactly the reason why we have the sustainability fund. In times of crisis this government is using that money to meet the expenses. I think what our colleague does not understand here is the fact that that money, that we are using in this time of need of our province, is really there. You know, knowing what the balance is, for me, is not really the important issue here. But knowing that the government is using that money to sustain our need, to pay the hospitals, to build the schools and the infrastructure of this province and meeting what other – you know, that this government thinks it's very relevant to forward us into the future, I think, is the issue that we should be discussing here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been very interested to hear the hon. member's response to the throne but also the comments that he was making as it related to the answers to the questions. I'd be interested to know how he feels this kind of throne speech will be received in his constituency.

The Deputy Speaker: We ran out of time, so I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to commend His Honour for his service to the province. For the past five years His Honour has shown his love for this province and its people. Thank you for your dedication.

I would also like to commend our hon. Lieutenant Governor for delivering the Speech from the Throne and providing us with a vision for this upcoming legislative session. The priorities are centred on rededicating our Legislature to ensure that Alberta remains a leader in Canada. These priorities focus on Alberta's fiscal advantage; improving health care; building safe, caring communities; remaining competitive in a global economy; ensuring a clean energy future; and, as stated, securing Alberta's place in Canada.

Since I arrived in Alberta in 1970, this province has undergone many changes. No matter these changes, the people of this province have demonstrated resolve and passion to further themselves and their communities. Although our province has changed over the course of time, our unique values such as fiscal responsibility, entrepreneurial spirit, and self-dependence still resonate among Albertans today. The people of my constituency, Calgary-Hays, believe in this province. This positive attitude is reflected throughout Alberta. Albertans have a determined attitude, and their positive work ethic contributes to making this province a pre-eminent leader in Canada and throughout the world. I am enthusiastic about the agenda that has been set forth for our Legislature, and I am encouraged to work with all of my colleagues to meet the needs and priorities of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by our government's commitment to improving Alberta's health with the creation of a new Alberta health act and engaging Albertans in a conversation on health. Health care is on the minds of many Albertans, and I believe that by making the health care system more patient focused, we will be able to better meet the needs of our constituents. Calgary-Hays will soon benefit from the service of the new South Calgary hospital, ensuring that all Calgarians have timely access to medical facilities. I look forward to the grand opening and to future investment in this hospital as it grows to serve the needs of Calgary and the surrounding regions.

Albertans are experiencing the impact of a continually changing economy. Our government has a great opportunity to continue forward momentum of needed infrastructure. This past year the government has made immense investments to meet the infrastructure needs of all constituencies in this province. I am optimistic that this investment to strengthen infrastructure will continue and that the construction of the southeast Calgary ring road will progress. The extension of the Calgary ring road is important to my constituents and serves multiple purposes such as reducing commute times, improving safety conditions, and decreasing the depreciation of our roads.

I would also like to comment on the objectives in the throne speech that focus on building a stronger Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this government has a goal to ensure that Alberta is the most competitive market in Canada as well as in North America. We are in an enviable position to have an opportunity to build on our successes by developing alternative energies and focusing on environmental sustainability. This includes continuing to develop a sustainable and competitive economy that is diversified in order to extend the longevity of Alberta's prosperity. We will continue to diversify our economy and energy sector and strive to reach our full potential. There is great opportunity in renewable energy sources such as bioenergy, wind, solar, and hydroelectric, all of which are examples of our alternatives that represent a stronger, more diverse energy sector.

Securing our place in Canada also includes seeking fair treatment for Alberta under universal federal programs. This province has contributed to the success of the nation, and it is only right that we receive fair treatment.

Mr. Speaker, providing safe and secure communities is a priority that I believe in strongly. As a 25-year veteran of the Calgary Police Service I have always believed that we need to make a concentrated effort towards crime prevention and reduction. We need to continue to protect our communities from illegal and unsafe activities, ensuring that our cities and towns are filled with an atmosphere of co-operation and safety. Reducing hostility and violence in our neighborhoods is an objective of utmost importance. We should strive to continue to provide sufficient support for our police services in their efforts to secure our communities. Therefore, I am pleased with the priorities that have been put forward.

This government's priorities include ensuring that our communities are safe and secure. In the past two years this government has enacted the safe communities strategy and is continuing to strengthen the strategy in the upcoming session. I am encouraged that the new initiatives will strengthen our police forces by adding 100 new front-line police officers. In addition, the Alberta gang reduction strategy will address the ever-growing problem that many cities are facing.

Mr. Speaker, the priorities outlined by the Lieutenant Governor reflect the desires of Albertans. I believe that our priorities represent the many special individuals throughout Alberta, and I applaud this government's continued support for them. Some of these individuals include those who have chosen to join the Canadian armed forces. These men and women are choosing to make the ultimate commitment as a citizen. I believe we have an obligation to support these dedicated Albertans, and I want to acknowledge their selfless sacrifice to assisting those in distress, despair, and fear.

Having served myself for 11 years with the Canadian armed forces, I personally understand the diligence and loyalty to our country that our military personnel demonstrate both as full-time and reservist soldiers. Currently I have four family members serving in the forces: a niece serving here in Edmonton, a nephew serving in the navy in Esquimalt, and another nephew and my brother in Kingston, Ontario. They along with all members recognize the need to volunteer their services for the betterment of our province and our country.

The dedicated men and women of our armed forces face dangerous challenges abroad. I commend their efforts and would also like to acknowledge the competent individuals in our police service who are engaged in the effort to address the safety and security concerns in our communities here in Alberta. Their jobs can often be thankless, stressful, and demanding, but they carry out their duties because they have made a commitment to the people of Alberta.

The hon. Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne highlighted priorities that reflect what Albertans feel are the most important to them. The speech provided a thoughtful, comprehensive account of our ambitions for this Legislature, and I am sure that this government will continually strive to fulfill these priorities. I am honoured with the opportunity to diligently work every day to ensure that Albertans can continue to realize the benefits and experiences that this province affords us all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much value and appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays' military and police background, his service not only to the city of Calgary but his service to the nation.

I have four questions. I know that the hon. member tried to bring forward a private member's bill with regard to distracted driving legislation, so I would like to hear his opinion on what the chances in the near future of that actually coming forward, possibly as a government bill, might be.

I'd also like to know how he feels about the delay in the Fort Macleod police college and his reflection on what has happened with part of that community and crime legislation, which saw the property of a mother seized because her son used her address as part of a fraudulent activity. Now, the court has since overturned that decision.

So distracted driving, delay for Fort Macleod police college, and how effective the community and crime legislation is if it's wrongfully seizing houses where an innocent person had nothing to do with it other than her address being used and abused.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, if you wish.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The distracted driving legislation is still in the process, so I have every confidence that it will pass eventually. It is back, I believe, in the agenda and priorities, and we're still working on it. I do agree with Minister Ouellette sometimes, and this time I do agree with him that at least we've got it right. I wasn't totally happy because when I started working on this, we would have been third in Canada with the legislation. We may end up being last, but I think we're going to get it right. We're taking a long, hard look at it. I have spoken to people on this, and they feel it's much, much better to get it right, pass it eventually, and it'll be excellent legislation, I feel.

The delay in the police college. I believe it was announced two and a half years ago. Since that time we've obviously had a recession, and that affects not only Albertans but Canadians and everyone in North America.

Mr. Liepert: They want to stretch it out anyway. They want to stretch capital out anyway.

Mr. Johnston: Yeah. I was going to say that it hasn't been cancelled, so I'm still optimistic. Until it's announced that it's being cancelled, I'm optimistic that it will come forth in the future.

Now the appeal process. I wasn't aware of this case that you mentioned where someone, a lady – I believe it was her address that was used. If her son used that in a criminal way and it was caught, then the appeal process worked because you have a judge that appealed that process, looked it over, and rescinded the decision. Therefore, the system worked. It's no different than when I was on the drivers' review board. You would have someone use someone else's driver's licence or use a name or whatever, and the appeal process worked. They'd come before us, and we'd make a decision in that person's favour. So, as I said, I'm encouraged that this appeal process works.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, I did a little math. I understand that you served 11 years in the Canadian armed forces in addition to 25 years in the Calgary city police for a total of 36 years of public service, not to mention the fact that you were elected to this Assembly in 2004, I believe, which, if we add that on, would give us some 42 years of direct public service. I'd like to say, hon. member, that I have always found you to be a glass-half-full, not a glass-half-empty type of individual, and you're very true to your cause. So whether today is a saving day or a spending day I'll leave to others to determine.

I would like to ask one simple question of you. In terms of the additional policing resources that are arriving in the city of Calgary, are you satisfied that the deployment of them is being done in a timely manner?

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. Time is up. You can answer the hon. member at conversational time.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join with my fellow members to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong. Before I begin, I would like to thank His Honour for his years serving Alberta as Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Speaker, every year I along with many Albertans am renewed and encouraged to hear of the successes of our government over the past year and our plans for the future. I was pleased to hear of several of the priorities planned for 2010, priorities like health care, where this government is committed to making our publicly funded health system more patient focused, or priorities like ensuring that Alberta remains competitive in the global market. As His Honour stated, Bill 1 of this session, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will signal our government's resolve to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in North America. While I look forward to the success of all of these priorities, I would like to focus today on this government's commitment to striking the right balance between responsible spending and effective service delivery to all Albertans.

Right now is the time to invest in public infrastructure. Currently, as a result of the global economic downturn, many construction projects cost far less than they did a little over a year ago, so jurisdictions with money in the bank would be able to take advantage of these reduced prices and essentially get more value for the taxpayer dollar. Alberta is one of those few jurisdictions in the world that has money set aside to spend when construction prices provide better taxpayer value. As His Honour stated, this government took aggressive steps to create a cushion for the downturn and improved the fiscal position of the province by almost $50 billion while maintaining low taxes. A $23 billion debt was paid off, and nearly $24 billion has been saved and invested.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, $17 billion of these savings went into the sustainability fund, a fund designed to be used if the province ever experienced a sudden drop in income. This cushioning fund enables this government to continue to protect core programs from the cuts seen in other jurisdictions. In addition, this fund allows us to continue to spend on infrastructure. As the Lieutenant Governor stated, the sustainability fund enables Alberta to keep investing in the public infrastructure that we know we will need for tomorrow at a time when we can take advantage of lower costs. Essentially, this government's good planning has left us in a situation where we're able to take advantage of low prices and get the best deal for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this good planning can also be seen by the proposal to introduce Alberta capital bonds. Alberta capital bonds will be available only in Alberta and only to Albertans. Moreover, capital bonds give Albertans the opportunity to invest in their province and support its future growth. In addition, because of Alberta's triple-A credit rating Alberta capital bonds are also an incredibly safe investment. This is particularly attractive considering the current economic climate.

Mr. Speaker, these capital bonds will function in a similar way to our sustainability fund; that is, the money obtained from the sale of these bonds will be used to finance needed infrastructure projects. As His Honour stated, "proceeds raised through this sale of bonds will go toward building accommodations for Alberta seniors, including continuing care and supportive living facilities." Essentially, capital bonds will ensure that those most in need will have the infrastructure in place to support them both now and in the future. In this way infrastructure spending is actually complementing this government's commitment to both social programs and to supporting those in need, commitments like the goal of creating 14,000 new child care spaces or continuing to develop 11,000 new affordable housing spaces by 2012 or, as the Lieutenant Governor stated, commitments like integrating and focusing our social programs so they effectively target those who need them most.

I'm also looking forward to another goal described by our Lieutenant Governor, improving our global competitiveness through education. One step towards this goal is creating a western economic partnership, as mentioned by His Honour. Another important step is ensuring that we have the skilled and qualified workers that the world demands. As His Honour stated, "our province must be a magnet for the talented individuals and businesses its economy needs." After all, Mr. Speaker, a skilled workforce is a result of a government dedicated to education, and I'm proud to say that because of our sound fiscal planning we're in a position to do just that. Instead of having to cut back or reduce like other jurisdictions, Alberta can continue to invest in its future by supporting our invaluable postsecondary institutions. Institutions like Red Deer College in my constituency of Red Deer-South will be instrumental in training the workers of tomorrow not only in central Alberta but, increasingly, in the world as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, because of our sound planning we are set to position Alberta and its workers in the global economic spotlight, we are set to expand the infrastructure Albertans need most, and we are set to effectively support those who need it most. These are the actions of a government that takes a long-term view of our province. These are actions that recognize that sound planning is critical not only now but for our future and the future of our children.

In closing, I would like to once again thank His Honour for his encouraging words and once again applaud this government for its sound planning and long-term vision. I believe that the strength of this province has always resulted in the character of its people and that with a long-term plan for the future Alberta and Albertans can accomplish anything.

Thank you.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn debate on the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:40 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated. Hon. members, before we proceed to the first order of business of the Routine, I would just like to advise hon. members that at 11:38 this morning I received a memo from our esteemed colleagues in the grouping of six, and tomorrow when you come in, there will be a revision to the manner in which the chairs are currently configured. That will be done for tomorrow, amicably, in harmony, together.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very enthusiastic class from St. Vincent elementary school. This class made their way from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora to the Legislature today to take in a tour of the building and to witness the excitement of question period. I had a chance to chat with them and talk to them a little bit about the budget that is being presented today. I would like to thank the class for coming today, and I would ask the students as well as their teacher, Angela Whelan, and the class teaching assistants, Michelle Harper and Deb Morley, to all rise so they can receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly eight of Canada's finest. They are guests here today from Edmonton Garrison, which sits in my constituency. There are seven franco-phone soldiers and their teacher. They spend their time at the base learning English right now. They are Corporal Pierre Gregoire, Private Sylvain Morgan, Private Jonathan Michel, Private Anne Maltais, Private Mathieu Richard, Private Dominic Raymond, Private Caroline Garnier-Baril, and their teacher, Deborah Stasiuk. I'd ask them to please rise – I believe they're in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 20 students from the Yellowhead Tribal College in the constituency of Edmonton-Calder and their teacher, Ms Linda Anderson. These young folks are here. They've completed all of their necessary course work at the Yellowhead Tribal College and are just in their final few days prior to graduation. I would ask them all now to stand and please receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: We have a very long list today, hon. members.
The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through to members of this Assembly two friends of mine who are sitting in the members' gallery, first being Mr. Joey Oberhoffner. Joey was born here in Edmonton, has lived in Calgary most of his life. He actually works for parks and protected areas with the government of Alberta and owns and operates a music school in Calgary. He also owns and operates a blog, enlightened savage.blogspot.com.

Mr. Speaker, the second individual is Janice Harrington. She is visiting for the budget today. She's the vice-president of communications and government relations for CGA Alberta. She is a resident of Airdrie, where she is the president of the Airdrie-Chestermere PC Association.

Mr. Speaker, I also noticed Jim Stevenson, alderman for ward 3, walk in.

I would ask that all members of this Assembly please rise and give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you two wonderful people from my constituency: Earl Marshall, the reeve for the county of Stettler, who has done amazing work in our area of looking after the folks out there – I'll always remember him for his efforts in getting safe water to the people throughout the area – and Tim Fox, the administrative officer for the county of Stettler, who we stole from Saskatchewan a number of years ago. He's a leader in sustainable communities and environmental design in public buildings. He's an amazing asset to our province. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the greetings of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce two constituents, the CEO of Nexen, Mr. Marvin Romanow, and the director of government relations, Mr. Brian Humphreys, who are here today to listen to the budget speech by our esteemed colleague. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests who are visiting the Legislature today, namely Matthew Bissett and Brendon Legault. Matthew and Brendon are from Sherwood Park, which is divided between my Strathcona constituency and the Sherwood Park constituency of the Hon. Iris Evans.

The Speaker: Uh-uh.

Mr. Quest: Yeah.

Matthew and Brendon are third-year political science students at Grant MacEwan University and have joined us previously in the House. They are here with especially keen interest as they anticipate today's budget speech, these two individuals and their academic skills and their passion for politics within our province. They are seated, I believe, in the members' gallery. I can't see them from here. If they are here, I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people that I consider to be very good friends, my best friends and confidants. First is Curtis McLauchlin. Curtis and I have been best friends probably since about the third grade. We used to live across the alley from each other in northeast Calgary. Curtis is currently a surface land manager at Imperial Oil on the Kearl project.

The other gentleman is Peter Davis. Peter and I have known each other for a while. He was the former executive assistant to former Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General Harvey Cenaiko and is now the assistant vice-president of government relations at Credit Union Central Alberta. These two individuals have had, whether it's envious or not so envious, the position of being my constituency presidents for the Calgary-North Hill PC Association for the last probably three years. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Tim Banman, a reporter for the Bonnyville Nouvelle. Tim arrived in Bonnyville five weeks ago from Brandon, Manitoba. I would ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Welcome to Alberta, Tim.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have an introduction. I am very pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Cheryl Smith. Cheryl is from Camrose, and she is a member of the Battle River regional school division. She is the Camrose representative and also the board chair. It's her first time at question period, and I know she's very interested. She's in the members' gallery. She's also here for the budget speech, and I'm very happy to have her here. I'd ask that you and members of the Assembly give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour today to introduce to you and through you my executive assistant, Mr. Bryce Dudley. Mr. Bryce Dudley is a graduate of the University of Calgary political science department. He has brought a sense of clarity and vision to my office that I can only thank him for. It is really, indeed, welcome to have him every day when I walk into my office and see his bright and shining face and organization. The effort he puts into making my office work right is truly commendable. I would ask Mr. Dudley to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this august House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Len Skowronski, the leader of the Alberta Social Credit Party. A functional democracy values a variety of views and voices; therefore, Len, would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you two friends that are seated in the members' gallery, Al and Kathy Kemmere. Al is the reeve of the county of Mountain View. They're up here today meeting with me and the Minister of Transportation, dealing with some local issues. Accompanying them earlier were Doug Plamping, the CEO for the county, and also Lana Yakimchuk, counsellor for division 2. Unfortunately, they had to go back to do some real work. Al and Kathy, fortunately, were able to stay here and join us for not only question period but the budget. I'd ask them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

Lakeland 2010 Alberta Winter Games

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was an honour for my constituency to host the Lakeland 2010 Alberta Winter Games this past weekend. I first would like to thank the hon. the Premier and Mrs. Stelmach as well as the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation for attending the opening celebration and helping to kick off a wonderful weekend for many Albertans. The Winter Games is always such an exciting event in our province and a tremendous opportunity for athletes ages 11 to 17 to compete in events to achieve their personal bests. This event was particularly special for me this year because it gave all the participants an opportunity to experience Bonnyville-Cold Lake and see the many attractions that my community has to offer.

Approximately 2,400 athletes, coaches, and officials took part in over 20 competitive sports over the weekend. Some of the most memorable awards presented were the Alberta Cup, which was awarded to zone 3, Calgary, for achieving the most medal points over the weekend. The Alberta spirit and sports award, which is presented to the zone that demonstrates the spirit of fair play, sportsmanship, team spirit, and co-operation both on and off the field, was awarded to Edmonton, zone 6. Finally, the Minister's Cup was awarded to zone 7, my home, the Lakeland area, for the most improved from the last Alberta Winter Games.

I would like to thank everyone involved for helping to make this event such a tremendous success. It's incredible to see what can happen when communities come together. A big thanks to the over 2,800 volunteers from the town of Bonnyville, the municipal district of Bonnyville, and the city of Cold Lake plus 4 Wing as well as Lakeland catholic and Northern Lights school divisions for lending their facilities out to create the athletes' village for all those athletes. Without all of your help and support Lakeland 2010 Alberta Winter Games would not have been possible.

Thank you, everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Safer Internet Day

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured and pleased to rise today to recognize Safer Internet Day. This internationally recognized day designated to promote safe and responsible use of online technology especially among children and youth is, in fact, today.

The Internet is a powerful tool, capable of connecting us to vast amounts of information and people around the globe. Unfortunately, this technology is also increasingly being used online by predators as a tool to lure and exploit children and youth. Children and youth today spend more time than ever before online, whether they are doing homework, playing games, updating their profiles on social networking sites, or chatting with friends. Despite their high level of knowledge about this technology many youth still engage in risky online behaviour such as posting photos and personal information, including their school and e-mail addresses, or accepting friend requests on Facebook from strangers. That is why it is so important for families, communities, and government to work together to ensure that our province's children and youth have the support they need to stay safe online.

Mr. Speaker, our government provides many resources to help educate about online dangers. Different online tools are available to parents, children, and teens through the Children and Youth Services website home page. I rise today not only to recognize this particular day and the importance of protecting children and youth online but also to encourage all Albertans to learn more about Safer Internet Day and reflect on what each of us can do to help children and youth remain safe as members of the world's online community.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a great sense of loss that I note the recent passing of Darrell Cook, a very dedicated and vocal Calgary-based advocate for the rights of individuals with disabilities.

Mr. Cook's dedication is indicative of the thousands of people in this province who care deeply for those with developmental disabilities, but many of those caregivers are contacting my office and the offices of the Official Opposition with grave concerns about this administration's approach to funding and care of people with developmental disabilities. With the amount of money wasted by the administration on grants to golf courses, foreign offices, travel, salary increases for MLAs and cabinet ministers, and bonuses for top Tory appointees and bureaucrats, it's very disconcerting for those involved that this government would actually ask the agencies that care for people to give back millions of dollars in the middle of a fiscal year.

To claw back money after it's been delivered is unfair, wrong, and shameful. We cannot balance the books off the backs of those least able to defend themselves. There are those who require help in our society, and what does it say about us when we marginalize them even further? Yes, we are in a recession, but we are still the wealthiest province in this country, and our future is better than most in the global community.

The Official Opposition has suggested a list of cuts that could help balance the books but not at the expense of vital programs and services. A dismissal of these suggestions out of hand is political, not governance. This government has not looked nearly hard enough for savings if they really believe PDD funding is the appropriate place to cut.

Governments and society are judged by how they treat their most vulnerable citizens. We need to do better, far better, to do the right thing and hope that one day we will have a favourable judgment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Samaritan Club of Calgary

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to recognize an exceptional Calgary organization that has worked tirelessly for a century to provide assistance to our less fortunate citizens.

I attended a van dedication to Calgary Meals on Wheels last month and had the opportunity to learn about the quiet evolution of a women's-only charity in Calgary called the Samaritan Club of Calgary, an organization created in 1910 by an extraordinary woman named Leonora Christine Woods. Initially named the Young Women's Benevolent Society, this organization's aim was to assist the hundreds of immigrants coming to live in Calgary, some of whom were very, very poor. While their name changed in 1916, their objectives did not, and they remained focused on helping families in need.

Today, with almost 200 members, this distinct Calgary-based Samaritan organization raises funds to address a wide range of needs in the community, including providing food vouchers, medications, dental procedures, and wheelchairs. In addition, the Samaritan Club of Calgary also donates to schools, hospitals, the Glenbow Museum, and the YWCA just to name a few.

The year 2010 marks this organization's 100th year of service to Calgary's less fortunate, and they have chosen to honour members both past and present through the donation of a delivery van to Calgary Meals on Wheels.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the amazing contributions that the Samaritan Club of Calgary has made to our great province. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today this government is going to tell Albertans their services will be cut and they'll be saddled with multibillion-dollar debt. The consequences of being short-sighted with Alberta's finances are obvious to everyone except the members sitting across the aisle. While this government prays oil and gas prices will improve, the rest of us are still hoping to see a longer term plan. To the Premier: what longer term plan does the Premier have in place to pay back the billions of dollars in debt that this government has taken on over the last several years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the government has not incurred any debt. We set aside a sustainability fund during the good years. We set aside some cash in reserve just for economic downturns like we're facing today. That's in the amount of $17 billion. We also have another savings fund which was for our grandkids and their grandkids, which is the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and that is there for well, well into the future, when we run out of oil and gas in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: what action has the Premier taken to lessen the impact of the boom-bust cycles that continue to wreak havoc on this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we set aside $17 billion in a cash surplus fund to cushion the blow of the economic downturn. The economic downturn has created a huge global economic shift that most of the world is trying to work through. But I can tell you that with good fiscal planning on behalf of this government, we're going to be back in the black in three years, the first jurisdiction in Canada to do it.

Dr. Swann: Prayers again for oil and gas prices, Mr. Speaker.

How can the Premier justify the lack of action and the lack of leadership that has led Alberta again down this path that we said we would not take again?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the only jurisdiction in Canada and perhaps even in North America that has set aside a cash surplus fund to help cope with the rapid drop in revenue stream is this province. We will come out without any operational debt, meaning that for the surgeries that are done, for the children that we educate: all of that will be done with cash that we set aside in a reserve fund especially for situations like this.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At 13 health care forums across Alberta Albertans told us they need more publicly funded, publicly delivered long-term care. Instead, this government is focused on providing for-profit designated assisted living. Alberta's fixed-income seniors don't deserve to be charged for needing an extra bath or extra housekeeping. They pay, and corporations skim off the profit. To the Premier. The Premier is quick to say that he supports a publicly funded health care system. Does the Premier support public tax dollars going to for-profit health care providers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think that today, once the budget is delivered, we will hear the minister deliver, I believe, the only long-term funding increase to health care in the country of Canada. That's a five-year commitment. That is part of good fiscal planning.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'll try it again, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier support public dollars going to private, for-profit health care providers? Yes or no?

Some Hon. Members: Like doctors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think you picked up that some of the people are saying that, well, doctors are private operators, but let's set that aside.

First of all, we have a goal in mind as the government, and that is to ensure that we provide accommodation – suitable accommodation, continuing care accommodation – for our seniors no matter where they live in the province of Alberta. Our goal here is to ensure that seniors can retire in the very same community that they helped build.

Dr. Swann: Well, yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Premier indicated that 800 continuing care beds would be available to seniors in the province. How many of these will be publicly funded and publicly delivered long-term care, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to at least 800. I believe the plan that the minister will roll out will get us beyond that number. This is one area where we have to move very quickly. We have approximately 300 or so seniors in Edmonton and Calgary that are occupying acute-care beds. Hospitals are really not homes. We want to provide the appropriate care in an appropriate facility, and we will do that. Just wait for the budget this afternoon, and the minister will give all the details.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Competitiveness Review

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, while it's disappointing that this government is taking so long to catch up with the needs of the oil and gas industry, it is at least encouraging that the Minister of Energy has started reading our policy as he admitted in the House yesterday. Having read our policy, which was based on extensive consultation, the minister should know by now that the oil and gas industry needs certainty, quicker approval turnaround times, and well-thought-out royalties. To the Minister of Energy: when the minister finally gets around to releasing his competitiveness review, will he actually make the changes at that time, or is this just going to be yet another report?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we should be clear. The reason that I was familiar with the policy is because it had a striking resemblance to the policy of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. In fact, I think they xeroxed the Petroleum Producers' presentation. We will, as I said yesterday, be releasing the competitiveness review in due course, and we'd be happy to discuss it in this Assembly.

Mr. Taylor: Just not now, apparently.

Mr. Speaker, by the time this minister does anything, it will be the fifth or sixth royalty tweak in the last two and a half years. Investors no longer trust that the rules this month in Alberta are going to be the rules next month, so how long can the industry expect this latest system to last?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not talking about royalty tweaks. What we're talking about is a competitiveness review. It's a review that's going to take into account all of the elements that business and the oil and gas industry have to consider when investing in this province. This particular review is going to be about one thing only, and that's going to be about jobs for Albertans. We're going to ensure that this is the most competitive environment so that Albertans are working in the oil patch.

Mr. Taylor: And 78,000 unemployed Albertans wait and wait and wait.

One of the policies we know right now should be implemented is a simplified one-window approach to speed up applications. When will the minister bring in a one-window approach?

Mr. Liepert: Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Because of this government's policies Albertans pay more than other Canadians for child care, health care, education, and home utilities. According to Statistics Canada Alberta households pay out of pocket the second highest amount for utilities, the third highest for child care, the second highest for education, and the highest amount for health care. My question is to the Premier. While corporations and the wealthiest Albertans have done extremely well by this government, ordinary families are paying more. What, if anything, is this Premier going to do to help ordinary families in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have the lowest overall taxes in the country of Canada. We also have the highest exemption compared to other provinces for families. That means that the first, I believe, roughly $34,000 of taxable income is exempted in Alberta compared to other provinces. With respect to the one province that the hon. member is referring to, and that is the province of Quebec, I would say that it's a contribution from Albertans, the $21.1 billion that we sent to Ottawa last year to subsidize them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, he dodges, but he can't hide.

Alberta has the most deregulated and privatized utility sector in Canada. [some applause] It should be no surprise, then, that Alberta families spend on average over $3,000 a year on utilities. This is 33 per cent higher than the national average, and the members opposite are applauding it. To the Premier: will he admit that his deregulation policies have led to higher costs for Alberta families, and if not, will he explain why they are so high?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if you look at the last couple of months – I don't know how far back we have to go – we've had some of the lowest wholesale electricity rates in the country of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. He just deals with part of the problem and doesn't answer the questions.

The average Alberta family spends more on school fees, supplies, and postsecondary tuition than in any other province except Ontario. Postsecondary education was supposed to be affordable, and primary and secondary was supposed to be free, yet education costs are now a major burden on Alberta families. Will the Premier tell the Assembly what steps he's going to take to reduce the costs of education in the household budgets of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. One, going back to the first question, I think the hon. member has to also look at all of the other fees that are attached by others that are providing electricity, water, and other services to the houses. Most of those are franchise fees that are set by municipalities, have nothing to do with the province of Alberta.

The other issue is that here we have the best postsecondary system in all of the country of Canada. Seventy per cent of the cost of public postsecondary education is covered by the provincial global taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Legislation

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are very aware of the recommendations that our government recently accepted from the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. One of the main recommendations is for Alberta to have our very own Alberta health care act. This is probably a good idea, but I have a few questions for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are you bringing in a provincial health act when we already have a Canada Health Act? Isn't that a duplication of effort, especially when our report supports the Canada Health Act?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it's a duplication of effort at all. Albertans have told us rather resoundingly that they want their own health care act that specifies issues and principles based around Alberta themes, and they're going to get that. They've also said that they want an Alberta health care act that enshrines the Canada Health Act principles of accountability, comprehensiveness, universality, portability, and public administration, and that's what we're going to deliver.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. How will an Alberta health act improve our health service delivery system? Is this sort of an exercise in public relations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, some people might refer to it as an exercise in public relations when you're consulting with key stakeholders and when you're communicating with Albertans, when you're engaging them in the discussion. I refer to it as my job, and I'm very proud to have this job to help out. I know that when we look at what the principles will be that underline our own Alberta health care act, they will enshrine the Canada Health Act principles that I already mentioned. It will identify key responsibilities that we all have as Albertans, and it will also look at consolidating different acts so that people can have a one-stop shopping centre to go to to read and understand what's going on in health care in a much clearer way than today.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, if this is so important, why is it taking so long to get one?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the short answer would be that I don't recall a report, at least a formal report, wherein anyone ever advocated for our having our own Alberta health care act. But they have now through a committee co-chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and they have said: we want our own act; we want it to reflect what the Alberta principles are, what the Alberta experiences are. In many ways we're so far ahead of so many other jurisdictions. They want us to reflect that from Alberta's perspective, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Air Quality Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton recently had two heavy smog days, but you'd have to look long and hard to get specific information or, in fact, any information. The national air monitoring system would have allowed Albertans to immediately check air quality by turning on their televisions. To the Minister of Environment: why cut Alberta out of the benefit of being onboard with the full national program?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we've been studying very intently the national program, and we have determined that it does not serve the needs of Alberta. It does not measure some of the key air contaminants that we believe are important to Albertans, and for that reason Alberta maintains its own separate air monitoring system. I should point out, though, that I think it is a shortcoming that we don't have the same accessibility, and I can assure the member that that's one of the priorities that we will be addressing in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: well, how can a monitoring system like Alberta's, that doesn't report cumulative effects, give Albertans an honest picture of what's going on?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what cumulative effects the member is referring to, but what I will accept is that the monitoring system that we have in place here doesn't talk about particulates. So I think that's a real shortcoming. We are reporting that we have good air quality, and the average Albertan can either look outside or step outside and smell smoke from the forest fires or experience the results of an inversion. That is a shortcoming, and that's something that we are committed to addressing, and we will address it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The minister is exactly right. But a number of people can't step outside. In fact, they can't step outside, and they need to be able to look at something to know whether it's even healthy for them to step outside. So why would we have a monitoring system that people don't know about? How cost-effective is that?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's not quite that extreme. We do have accessibility to our monitoring system. What I'm saying is that we need to do a better job when we're talking about having a web-based system that the public can access and, frankly, that the media would be able to access as well and provide for that additional source of information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Fish Consumption Advisory Guidelines

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a fish consumer. My people are fish consumers. At the recent Waterkeeper Alliance fundraiser in Banff and in subsequent media reports comments were made that Alberta's fish are not edible, and that has caused many of my people to be worried, creating uncertainty about fish as a food source. Therefore, my question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What are you doing to ensure that Alberta's fish are safe to eat for me, my people, and anybody who wants to enjoy Alberta's fish?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, Alberta Health and Wellness base their advisories with respect to fish consumption on guidelines from Health Canada, and SRD, my ministry, communicates these advisories on an annual basis and even during the year through our fishing guidebook. Fishing is a big business in Alberta. It's over a $400 million business in the sport-fishing industry and about 3 and a half million dollars in commercial fishing. By the way, about 2 million kilograms of whitefish, on average, have been netted from the province of Alberta and sold internationally. They meet all of the guidelines required.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, if that's in fact true – I'd like my first supplemental question to go to the Minister of Health and Wellness – can he then tell us how many of Alberta's water bodies have fish consumption advisories? This kind of information is really important to those fishermen as well as to the people who eat it.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, we have between 2,000 and 3,000 water bodies in the province of Alberta, and for those 2,600 or so water bodies we have about eight advisories that have been issued by the chief medical officer. We're concerned about those eight, obviously, but we have to keep in mind that most of the mercury accumulation that occurs in those water bodies tends to happen from natural sources such as rotting trees or wildfires and the like. Nonetheless, it's a serious issue, and we are looking deeper into it.

Ms Calahasen: Well, eight is really great.

Words are one thing, Mr. Speaker, but actions are what count to my people. So what is the Department of Sustainable Resource Development doing to support fish testing activities, and if they are not doing what they should be doing, will the minister make a commitment to joining me and my constituents in fishing the waters in question and then eating the fish that we do, smoked fish?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, water bodies in the province of Alberta are tested for mercury in fish at any point in time when there's a perceived risk. It can be a natural risk that could take place by occurrences, something like wildfire. We also conduct periodic studies and get information from local and regional programs and industry players. So my department does help to collect fish samples, and we are testing fish whenever asked. Also, the department has a multistakeholder group, a regional aquatics monitoring program, and we work with them to make sure that Alberta fish are safe for consumers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Teachers' Salary Arbitration

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday a provincial arbitrator finally resolved an ongoing dispute over the correct wage increase teachers should be given this year. However, the fact that we are still dealing with this issue almost a year later is symbolic of this government's inept management of our public education system. To the Minister of Education: why did the minister choose to leave school boards in the lurch yet again by not setting aside a contingency fund in this year's budget in the event that the province lost an arbitration?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the preamble leaves things that need to be answered. Inept management? All around the world people are looking at Alberta as having an education system that is among the best in the world. Even at a conference this week in Edmonton I understand that education was held out as one of the areas that government is succeeding in. So I don't know where this hon. member comes from with statements like that about inept management.

The long and short of it is that if he understands labour relations processes, he understands that when you have a disagreement with respect to the interpretation of a clause of a contract, you put it into an arbitration process or some other governance process to deal with it, which is what we did and got it resolved relatively quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A result, I would add, that this government has ignored.

Statistics Canada reported that it would change the formula used for wage increases in December 2008, but when the change occurred in March of the next year, the ministry was caught flat-footed. Considering the tens of million of dollars involved, why wasn't the minister monitoring the situation?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there were discussions, apparently, about what StatsCan might be doing with its formula, but up until the end of February of last year the published number was 4.82, which is the number we very prudently used in planning our budget. The fact is that they came out at the end of March with a larger number without any notice to us other than prior to the middle of March, when the first inkling came out that there was going to be a new calculation, a new number. That is not something that a person would guess at and speculate on, so we did the prudent thing, and we budgeted on what was known.

Mr. Chase: Well, I would suggest that there's a tremendous lack of foresight in that statement as well as in your general dealings.

If the province had initiated arbitration immediately, a decision may have been reached in time for this year's budget. Why did the minister dither until August of 2009 before announcing that he would not honour the wage increase figure supported by the teachers? It's your arbitrator.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we've never ever said that we would not honour the contract at all. In fact, it's a contract between school boards and local ATAs. We have never said that we would not honour the contract. We said that there was a difference of interpretation with respect to a clause in the contract in terms of how to calculate the adjustment. That's not an abnormal circumstance. Contracts provide for how to deal with those issues. This contract provided for how to deal with that issue. We used the terms of the contract to deal with the issue in exactly the way that it was intended, and it's been done, as I say, in accordance with labour relations processes in a very timely manner. In fact, it's probably the fastest arbitration decision in the history of labour relations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Bioenergy Initiatives

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pine beetle has created some real challenges in this province, especially in my constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and in many other forest communities around the province. But at the same time it has also created some opportunities. My questions are all to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Your previous portfolio in Energy and now your existing portfolio in Sustainable Resources give you a great opportunity to promote bioenergy fuels. How come you're not knocking on my doors, and how come you're not knocking on industry's doors to tell us about the great nine-point plan that the Alberta government has?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, perhaps, that the member opposite has a short memory because we've knocked on all the doors. Nevertheless, what's happening in the department now, in SRD: we are working with all of the producers in the province, particularly the major producers with large FMAs that are experiencing difficulty relative to the mountain pine beetle.

Mr. Speaker, there are tremendous opportunities in the province of Alberta in bioenergy and even in petrochemicals and fuels relative to the fibre business. We'll continue to work with industry. They're in the game with us. We're working with them. We believe there are some wins on all sides here.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's a good answer, Mr. Minister.

Again back to you. It seems like there's a lot of red tape to get through the granting programs and through the nine-point bioenergy plan that we have. What are you doing to streamline this process so that we can get to work and take advantage of this fibre source that we have here today?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, you know, when we put out these types of initiatives and when we're using public money – let's remember that my colleague has about $239 million that we have earmarked to invest in these particular types of programs, not just with fibre but a number of other initiatives as well. We need to be prudent that where we apply public dollars, there is the best possible chance of a positive outcome.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, since you mentioned your colleague, I'll supplement this to the Minister of Energy. Will you commit, Mr. Minister, to working with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the communities that are so dependent on the forest industry to get this bioenergy plan going now?

Mr. Liepert: Well, one of the difficulties we're having right now – and this is what we're attempting to work through in the near weeks – is that it's not so much to get the program going; it's a question of an uneconomic situation over the last couple of years. We need to look at the potential of extending the particular program because there are a number of projects out there. Many of them are tied to federal dollars. Again, as my colleague said, it has to make economic sense, and that's what we're trying to work out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Alberta Health Services Board

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after he was appointed, the Minister of Health and Wellness stated that his ministerial style was, and I quote, that he's always been hands on. That was what he said. Then within days of becoming minister, he completely changed a number of major decisions made by Alberta Health Services. Just when it didn't seem possible, there's even more confusion than ever within Alberta Health Services. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: as a hands-on minister is he running Alberta Health Services or is Ken Hughes and their board and staff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, let's understand the body. This body has two arms. The body is called Alberta Health and Wellness, and the ministry is called the Alberta Health and Wellness ministry. One arm is the delivery arm, and that is Alberta Health Services. It is very competently run by a gentleman named Mr. Ken Hughes, and he is doing an outstanding job. That arm reports to this body. The other arm is the Alberta Health and Wellness department. That arm also is connected to and reports to this body.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. I appreciate the minister's anatomically correct explanation. Let's see if this body has a head, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister clarify whether it was his decision, the Premier's, Ken Hughes's, or Stephen Duckett's to keep the 290 acute-care beds open in Calgary and Edmonton? Whose decision?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it was a joint decision, not quite involving all the parties that he mentioned but most certainly involving direction from the Premier overall to improve the health care system. For the Health Services folks to have found some efficiencies that allowed us to make some of those improvements so quickly, I'm grateful, but I did connect with them prior to making any comments on it. I hope you will agree that it's important to keep those 300 acute-care beds open in Edmonton and Calgary. That's what we're trying so hard to do, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the same minister: will the minister tell the Assembly whether the CEO and board of Alberta Health Services clear all their major policy decisions with himself before those decisions are enacted?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. They're not required to, but I think there would be occasions when they may wish to at least speak with me about what policy decisions they're taking.

The reason that we appointed one province-wide board is so that we could take a look at the width and breadth of health care and health care costs and health care services so that we could make the improvements necessary. I hope that when the member sees the budget and the business plan coming out, the five-year guaranteed funding plan, a first of its kind, to my knowledge, anywhere in the country, will in fact do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By its actions this government has hurt the Alberta energy workers and industry and injured our reputation as a reliable place to invest. This government doesn't understand that consumers and taxpayers are tired of paying for their failed policies. The Environment minister has openly talked about tripling the price of the carbon levy, from $15 a tonne to $45 a tonne. My question is for the minister. What would a $45 tax levy add to the price of Albertans' average home heating bill?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the member fails to recognize are two things. First of all, the price of energy, oil and gas, is established on the world market. This industry are price takers, not price makers. So the short answer is that it wouldn't impact. The longer answer is that of course it would, but it would impact Alberta homeowners in the same way it would impact homeowners anywhere else in the world. We've also said, which the member failed to point out, that we're not prepared to take an action until the rest of the world steps along with us.

Mr. Hinman: He's talking about it, and they'll end up doing it, but what he fails on, as I asked, is what it would add to the bill. Albertans understand what the cost of the commodity is.

Mr. Speaker, this government's approach on the big issue is to delay, not actually solve the problem. If we look at carbon sequestration, their approach is to bury billions of dollars of taxpayers' money in the ground, cross their fingers, and hope that it gets them out of trouble. Well, it won't work. Does the Environment minister agree with his blue-ribbon panel that the government would need to spend $24 billion on this dead-end carbon capture and storage plan?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think what this member is saying, only he doesn't have the courage to state it, is that he doesn't believe that we need to be dealing with climate change. The fact of the matter is that the world is struggling right now to deal with this issue called climate change. There will be costs associated. No one has ever said that there would not be costs associated. Alberta and Canada need to be part of the decision-making process that determines how we as a collective society around the world deal with this very, very critical issue of climate change.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, he didn't even answer the question about his own blue-ribbon panel and be honest with Albertans on what that would cost and wait for the member's statement before he makes such a judgment. If the Environment minister does or doesn't agree with his panel and the cost, why won't he come through and tell the cost to Albertans? The question is: will the minister do the right thing and put on a world-class forum that only accepts scientific, peer-reviewed reports to find the facts for Albertans?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the cost of carbon capture and storage is enormous because it doesn't apply just in Alberta; it applies in Canada, in the United States, and throughout the world. That is the very issue that we are struggling with right now, and when I say we, I mean collective mankind. This is transformational technology. It's like any new technology. Everyone expects that over time the price will come down. But make no mistake; there are costs associated with it. This government is prepared to lead by example and demonstrate how we can apply technology to address this critical issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Hail Insurance

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency office has received a number of calls recently about a recent decision by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation board that will change the way our producers purchase hail insurance. As a result, farmers can purchase the hail insurance product online or, in the case of my constituency, travel on average about a hundred kilometres to a district office. Two problems: district offices are not located in many rural communities in Alberta, and secondly, the online portals are not readily available to all parts of the province. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Minister, I'd like to know just how much consultation there was involving our agricultural agents of hail insurance that took place before the decision was made.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have definitely been changes made to the way producers can purchase their hail insurance. We have expanded the service and the options available to those producers, and we did it after receiving information from a steering group of Alberta farmers. In addition to the hail insurance available through their local agent, they now will have 24-hours-a-day, seven-days-a-week availability online. This year that information will be filed with their other crop insurance information through the online option.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks. The first supplemental that I have, then, to the same minister: will this decision be reviewed so that, actually, the best service and choice and practices that are available to the farmers are considered a priority before you implement the change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The input has already been reviewed. People have come back and made comment on our direction. Our producers are always, of course, of the highest interest to us as we expand services across the province. In addition to the online and their local agent, they also have the availability of those 52 AFSC offices across the province that can take care of their insurance needs.

Mr. McFarland: My final supplemental to the same minister: how will AFSC's decision improve rural community viability for businesses if the businesses aren't there to offer their service?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, the service will be available through those agents at the local level, as it always has been. My expectation, though, is that with the online options available to producers, there will be a number of them that will take advantage of that. It's going to be the market that decides what the viable option is with respect to insurance. All options will still be available to those producers, and hopefully this works very well for them.

Peace and Police Officer Training Centre

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, in 2004 this government announced it would be building the Alberta police college in Fort Macleod. At that time the government indicated that it was necessary to build this complex in order to ensure that a well-trained police force was present in Alberta. To date the project has not been built. I assume there must be a reason for this. My question is to the Solicitor General. Does the government still believe that the building of an Alberta police college is necessary to improve the delivery of law enforcement services in this province, or can we get by with the status quo?

Mr. Oberle: Thank you for the question. As the member correctly points out, we have not built the college in Fort Macleod. We're reviewing the financial situation at the moment. As members opposite have pointed out, we are in fiscal difficulties right now. I'm reviewing the situation and will report back to this House when I'm ready.

Mr. Hehr: Well, it sounds like we still sort of need a site; we're just not sure when. That's, I guess, fair. Is Fort Macleod, then, still the preferred site for this training centre?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member just made a bunch of assumptions that I never gave him in the first question, so I can't really address it. I didn't say that we absolutely needed it, nor did I say that we're looking at Fort Macleod or any other centre. I said that I would report back to this House when I'm ready to do so.

Mr. Hehr: Well, let me back up the bus. In 2004 I thought we were clear: you guys announced you were building a training centre. Is that on or off the table? Can you confirm to this community whether you are going to be building it and quit jerking around, then?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, might I refer the hon. member to answer 1(a).

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Canadian Access to U.S. Procurement Market

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our federal government has recently come to an agreement with the American federal government to address protectionist measures in the U.S. Recovery Act that previously discriminated against Canadian business. My question to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: what impact does this agreement have on Alberta businesses?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is a very good first step. Let's back up a bit and recognize, especially during the recession, that businesses on both sides of the border needed to have some degree of confidence that the senior levels of governments were going to work in harmony and be able to work together to resolve issues. The Canadian government, acting through negotiations with America, tapped in on the resources in each one of the provinces because we're responsible for implementation of agreements and understood that participation of the provinces was essential in defining what we would have as a strategy. So $6 billion was available . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question, then, to the same minister. Access to $6 billion worth of procurement contracts isn't that much considering that Alberta exported an estimated $96.6 billion to the U.S. in 2008. Can the minister please explain what use this agreement is to us if they only allow us to access $6 billion worth of contracts?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it sets the stage in the right direction so that companies in Canada, companies in Alberta will have a chance at the U.S. major procurement opportunities. It's a good first step, and we believe at this stage it's a positive sign, moving in the right direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question to the same minister. Our federal government has indicated there are provincial and territorial commitments in the new agreement that may affect our procurement system. Can the minister explain how this will affect Alberta's procurement system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have already advanced in our procurement system well beyond what this agreement implies. We have a very open and transparent procurement system with the TILMA agreement and the kinds of work we've been doing to take down the barriers to open ourselves and our borders for this kind of responsible trade. We are already in Alberta well positioned. Many other jurisdictions may not be as well positioned, but Alberta is in good shape.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Deerfoot Trail

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are already hearing about cuts to the municipal sustainability initiative, and now we hear about the province wanting to return the Deerfoot back to the city of Calgary. This is another example of this government downloading costs at a time when resources are being cut. To the Minister of Transportation. My constituents want to know: is the minister planning to return the Deerfoot back to the city of Calgary?

2:30

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think there was a big misunderstanding here by someone when this first came up and was talked about. As everyone knows, the policy of this government is that any time we build a ring road around a city or a bypass to any town or city in Alberta, when that road is completely done and we have a new highway and then we have a highway that's not needed anymore, we sit down and negotiate with that municipality on returning it to them in the very highest possible form that we can, and we take it from there. We haven't got that new highway around the city of Calgary yet, so it's a long way off before we're actually in the process of trying to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking the minister just to clarify things.

To the minister again: given that returning the highway to Calgary wasn't part of the original agreement, is the minister doing this to download the cost to Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just said that it's a policy of this government that we always sit down and negotiate. We don't force anything onto anybody. We sit down and negotiate when — when — we have the proper highway that all Albertans need to get around the city.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Deerfoot Trail is still the highway. It will remain the highway.

To the minister again. Maintenance of the Deerfoot costs around $8 million a year. Will the minister commit to funding the ongoing maintenance costs of the Deerfoot if it's handed over to the city?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I already committed to him that we look after our provincial highways, and as long as that's a provincial highway, we will do a very good job of maintaining it to keep Calgarians and Albertans safe on our highways in Alberta.

High-speed Rail Link

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary to Edmonton corridor is incredibly busy. According to an Alberta Transportation study in 2006 nearly 10 million trips were taken in this corridor, and since the study numbers have continued to rise. High-speed rail has been raised as an option to reduce traffic on the Queen Elizabeth II highway, reducing congestion, shortening the travel time, and reducing emissions. All of my questions are for the Minister of Transportation. In view of the market demand assessment released last July, can the minister advise whether the government will support a high-speed rail link between Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the market demand assessment was a very, very good step towards high-speed rail in Alberta. That said, that report makes no recommendations regarding future government involvement in such a project. We know that planning for the future and having an innovative transportation system is important, and we will continue to look at all options to support Albertans and the province's economic future. However, the report does say that high-speed rail . . .

The Speaker: Maybe we'll come to it.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, given the fast growth and the increased intensity of land use in the Calgary-Edmonton corridor, it would seem to make sense to acquire the land for a future right-of-way. Will the minister advise whether or not he's prepared to move in the direction of acquiring the land for such a right-of-way?

Mr. Ouellette: Real quick, to finish my last answer, the report also does say that with the amount of people moving into Alberta, even if we had that, we will need to put that extra lane on the QE II.

Mr. Speaker, if all of my colleagues decide to say, "Let's proceed with the corridor study," we would have to do that to determine that alignment. The study would take about two years to complete . . .

The Speaker: And we may come back again.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be prepared to consider a public-private partnership agreement to move that high-speed rail project forward?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we will look at all options to do the very best deal we can for Albertans and Alberta taxpayers. The Calgary-Edmonton corridor has been described as an economic tiger to this province. We know that it's an important component for all of our transportation network in the province. The government supports the use of P3s. We always support whatever is the best deal for our taxpayers in this province, and P3s have proven to be part of that, but we will look at various numbers of options. If the deal isn't good enough for private enterprise, it probably isn't good enough for Alberta taxpayers either.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Minimum Wage

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's move to freeze the minimum wage will by its own admission impact 20,000 of Alberta's most vulnerable, grabbing an expected $240 per year out of their pockets and giving it back to their employer. Only this government would be so out of touch to think that the best way to create jobs is on the backs of the very poorest people in this province. Will the minister admit that not only is it wrong but that this callous decision denies minimum wage earners money that they desperately need?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, only this government would make sure that Albertans who are in a position where they are earning minimum wage, who are the most vulnerable to being laid off because of their circumstances of either a lack of transferable skills or being employed in a very volatile section of our economy, would now, at a time when our Alberta economy is most fragile, increase the minimum wage and put them on social assistance, put that welfare wall in front of them and have them dependent on social assistance. I will focus on keeping them employed, and that's what we will do.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, copious studies show that the notion of fair minimum wage levels leading to job loss is pure fiction. The sad truth is that minimum wage earners don't earn enough to do anything other than pour their money back into their local economy. Their dollars are the best at creating jobs. Why won't the minister stop being such a miser and give minimum wage workers the 12-cent raise they were promised?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. In Alberta there are roughly 20,000 Albertans who are working at minimum wage. Of that 20,000, more than 50 per cent are individuals who are working in an industry where there are tips and gratuities included. We can't account for how much they're making in addition to that. The fact of the matter is that I have spoken with restaurant owners. They would end up laying off low-income earners if that cost was added onto their bottom line. My preference is to keep them working, to find a more effective formula and have them staying employed.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, two-thirds of minimum wage earners are women, many of whom are single parents, and we know that there is a huge linkage between low minimum wage and child poverty. In this context this government has just grabbed 20 bucks a month out of their pockets. Twenty bucks a month won't bankrupt a business, but it will mean less food on their tables. Why is the minister doing petty favours for industry by picking pennies out of the pockets of low-income Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let's be honest here. This government has not grabbed any money out of anybody's pockets. What this government has done is made sure that they stayed employed. Let's be frank. If those individuals who are employed right now were laid off, they would be receiving low-income benefits, which are significantly lower than what they are earning right now. The fact of the matter is that since this member is so very passionate, I will be asking an all-party committee to take a look at the whole structure of minimum wage, find out what is fair once and for all for Albertans, and then I will more than welcome gathering that kind of input. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Government Spending

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government likes to talk about working for all Albertans and taking care of their priorities. When the Premier announced his new cabinet, he also added a Political Minister for Calgary and a Political Minister for Edmonton. My question is to the Deputy Premier. If the work of these political ministers is so valuable and so needed, why didn't he name a political minister for rural Alberta or the larger cities, like Fort McMurray or Red Deer, that exist across this province?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously Edmonton and Calgary, the two larger centres in the province, contain roughly two-thirds of the province's population. There are a number of issues that are being worked on in both of those cities, and it's a prudent move to have one place for those cities, those municipalities to have a contact. I also point out that we have a chair of Calgary caucus, we have a chair of Edmonton caucus, we have a chair of the rural caucus, and we have representations to all of those committees. This is simply a political move on the other party's part to try to take away representation from those two cities.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, we have 83 MLAs elected that are supposed to be representing their constituents.

The government also likes to stand up and say that it is fighting for Albertans and working on their priorities. In 2004-2005 the Executive Council office cost taxpayers about $2.1 million. In 2008-2009 the same office cost taxpayers about $4 million. That is an 84 per cent increase in the size of the Executive Council office budget. Mr. Speaker, my question again is to the Deputy Premier.

The Speaker: Okay. Deputy Premier, go ahead.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously we're going to have a fair bit of time here in the next little while to debate the budget. We're going to be debating the estimates. In fact, today, obviously, the Minister of Finance and Enterprise is going to be presenting the budget, which is going to show that this government has listened to Albertans. This government is going to do what Albertans want us to do based on their priorities, not their priorities.

Mrs. Forsyth: That's nice to hear, Mr. Speaker. I'll look forward to a decrease in Executive Council's budget.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Premier didn't need as many advisers. Perhaps if the government had a vision that Albertans knew about, then they wouldn't be so troubled right now. My question is to the Deputy Premier. If extra staff and salary are so essential to do the job, where is the accountability, and why aren't Albertans getting better results?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard the question, but I guess I'm struggling with the idea of extra staff because we haven't actually had the budget yet. I'm sure the hon. member will have plenty of time to discuss the budget in the estimates, which is her right as a private member in this House. I look forward to her participating in the debate in the many hours that we'll be going through that debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today 18 individual members were recognized. The Official Opposition had eight questions, the two independent parties had two each, and the government caucus had six. There were 108 questions and answers.

We'll continue with Members' Statements.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well over 500 caregivers, professionals, family members, and service providers are attending the sixth annual Alberta Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder Conference in Calgary this week. They are learning more about how to prevent, treat, and support people living with FASD, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. It's an issue that I take very seriously as I saw the deep and wide-ranging effects first-hand during my time as AADAC chair a few years ago.

It may come as a shock for many to learn that over 23,000 Albertans have FASD, and the social and economic impacts of the disorder touch every single one of us. That's why our Alberta government is continuing to fund community-based supports, research, and education and awareness programs throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that a cross-ministry team of no fewer than nine ministries has brought its best people together to give those with FASD all-encompassing supports. With the guidance of a 10-year strategic plan we're seeing great results, such as the 12 FASD service networks, which help people living with FASD to reach their full potential in their communities. We're also seeing the number of FASD assessment and diagnostic clinics rise. Alberta now has 20 clinics, twice as many as we had in 2008. We're also focusing on providing caregivers and professionals the training needed to further support people with FASD and utilizing mentors who are helping expectant at-risk mothers to live healthy lifestyles during pregnancy.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that there are many incredibly inspirational people who are dedicated to helping the most vulnerable children and their families. I encourage every Albertan to learn more about the role they can play in assisting all in our communities who are affected by this preventable disability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Government Spending

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in December Albertans watched as activists and politicians flew in their private jets to Copenhagen. We were even able to witness their fleets of luxury cars driving people to cocktail receptions, invite-only meetings, and celebrity events.

While in Copenhagen Alberta's Environment minister made some comments that were very concerning to Albertans. When asked about the price of carbon credits, the Environment minister told reporters that he did not believe that $15 per tonne was enough and that the cost should be double or even higher.

Over the past year it has become clear that much more research must be done on whether or not and to what extent man-made carbon dioxide is affecting our planet. Mr. Speaker, you'll be pleased to know that I support this research taking place because we need answers that strip away the hype and give us the facts. Without facts we cannot make informed decisions. Without facts we cannot figure out what the best solutions are for any other issues as well. But at this point to invest billions of taxpayers' dollars without the full picture is just wrong.

Mr. Speaker, this government has undermined investors' confidence as a result of its blatant disregard for contracts and its disastrous royalties scheme. It talks out of both sides of its mouth on many issues. If we take the Environment minister at his word, he wants to pile even more costs on Alberta industries, all industries that operate here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this government is addicted to spending. We need an intervention on behalf of hard-working Alberta taxpayers and businesses so that they can be protected from this government's ever-increasing shakedown to support their spending habit. The first step to recovery is to acknowledge that one has a problem. The second step is to apologize to those that you have hurt. The third step is to do all you can to make it right. This government has failed on the first two steps. We need a government that can actually get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent of mine, Dustin McNichol. He writes to express his concern with "the University of Alberta's recent decision to levy a new non-instructional, mandatory fee of $570 in order to make up for budgetary shortfalls."

The second, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a document from the Parkland Institute, which uses Statistics Canada data to show that Albertans pay more out of pocket for child care, health care, education, and utilities than Canadians in other provinces.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm tabling today the appropriate copies of letters, one dated January 27, 2010, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs advising me of his resignation from three different standing committees; a letter dated February 1, 2010, from the Member for Calgary-Egmont advising me of his resignation from three different committees; and a letter dated February 8, 2010, from the hon. Member for Peace River advising me of his resignation from two standing committees of the House.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, Budget 2009 third-quarter fiscal update 2009-2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, Advanced Education and Technology public postsecondary institutions audited financial statements, universities and the Banff Centre, for the year ended March 31, 2009.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as it is budget day there is a requirement for us to do a few little modifications in the Assembly prior to us coming back, so I'm now going to declare a recess of the House. We will reconvene at 3:15 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:48 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I read his message, I would like you to pass on to him what a tremendous honour and privilege it has been for everyone in this Assembly to work with the Hon. Norman Kwong over the past few years. [applause]

Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Rise in the galleries.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

As well, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Government Motions

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 4, I wish to table the 2010-11 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2010-11 government estimates. Also being tabled for the information of the Legislative Assembly are business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the Government Accountability Act. In addition, the Government Accountability Act requires that the government at the same time table the government's business plan and the consolidated fiscal and capital plans. The hon. Premier will table the government's strategic business plan, and the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise will table the consolidated fiscal and capital plans.

4. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2010-11 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply and that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2010-11 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply following consideration by the policy field committees.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the government of Alberta strategic business plan as required under section 7 of the Government Accountability Act. The strategic business plan sets out the government's vision. It sets out the long-term strategic plan. It also includes the government's three-year business plan, which outlines the government's goals, strategies, and measures necessary to track results over the next three years.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two documents at this time. First, I wish to table the government's consolidated fiscal and capital plans for Budget 2010. The consolidated fiscal plan is required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act, and the consolidated capital plan is required under section 7.1 of the same act.

Second, I wish to table the government's heritage savings trust fund business plan. The business plan is required under section 7 of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.

Budget Address

5. Dr. Morton moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to present the government of Alberta's proposed budget for the fiscal year 2010-11. I do so with confidence but also with caution, caution because our province and, indeed, our country and the world are all still feeling the impact of the worst economic recession since the 1930s – these are difficult times, and difficult times call for difficult choices – but also with confidence because these choices are made easier and the path to a brighter future made more certain by knowing that this Assembly and this government can draw upon the many strengths that are Alberta's heritage.

Alberta's heritage is one of strong families and strong communities, of independence and self-reliance but also a spirit of caring for our neighbours. We value our past and provide for the future. We respect and support those generations that built Alberta, and we are proud to act as stewards of our natural and economic resources, responsible for passing on to the next generation an Alberta that is as good as or better than the one we received. Budget 2010 is faithful to Alberta's heritage. It protects services for the young and the elderly, the sick and the disabled, and it protects our air, land, water, and wildlife. It keeps us on the path to prosperity, both present and future.

Another part of Alberta's heritage is the effect of the ups and downs of commodity markets on our resource-based economy. Too often governments have responded by spending too much in the good times and cutting too much in the bad times, but thanks to past fiscal prudence and accumulated savings, today we do not have to make deep cuts to essential services. Over the past 16 years Alberta has paid down $23 billion in debt. We have saved nearly $25 billion, primarily in the heritage and sustainability funds. Mr. Speaker, Budget 2010 puts a stop to the wild ups and downs of this fiscal pendulum.

I'm pleased to report early signs of economic recovery: higher oil prices, growth in the housing market, and 12,500 new jobs in Alberta since October. In the past three months five new oil sands projects have been announced, adding over $5 billion in investments. Just last month a $4 billion bitumen upgrader was announced for Alberta's Industrial Heartland. That kind of investment is expected to spur Alberta's economy to grow by 2.6 per cent in 2010 and by an average of 3 per cent over the next three years.

That's the good news, that we and the rest of the world are transitioning out of this recession. But how long and how steep this transition will be and whether there will still be some dips ahead no one knows for sure. As an exporting economy what happens in the rest of the world affects Alberta, and there will be many risks still out there and beyond our control. The high Canadian dollar and fluctuating financial markets and energy prices create volatility in government revenues. Natural gas prices remain low. Canadian and U.S. stimulus funding will end this year with unknown impact. Our largest trading partner is $12 trillion in debt. The outlook for commercial real estate is very uncertain. So while we have cause for optimism, the strength and the pace of Alberta's economic recovery cannot be taken for granted. Fiscal prudence is still required.

It is within this context that I present Budget 2010. It is a budget that enhances Alberta's competitiveness in the global market. A competitive Alberta creates jobs and opportunity, it reduces demand on social programs, and it generates the revenue to support the public services and social supports that Albertans value. The Fraser Institute recently ranked Alberta as the number one province in Canada in which to invest. Budget 2010 keeps it that way by implementing our Premier's pledge that there will be no new taxes.

As I deliver this budget, I do so knowing that it will not satisfy everyone. Some will say we spend too much. Others will say we spend too little. Mr. Speaker, it's not about spending too much or spending too little; it's about spending the right amounts in the right places. This is what Budget 2010 does. It strikes the right balance. It protects priority programs without draining our savings, without going into debt for ongoing operations, and without raising taxes, and it puts us back into the black by Budget 2012. We will not meet today's needs on the backs of tomorrow's citizens. We will not saddle future generations with high taxes and debt.

Budget 2010 includes a total operating expense of $33.2 billion. Excluding a one-time payment to Alberta Health Services, that is a 4.3 per cent increase over the 2009-2010 forecast. That 4.3 per cent is somewhat higher than the expected population growth and inflation of 3.5 per cent for this year. However, total increases over the full three years of this budget will actually be less than population growth and inflation over that same period. Based on projected revenues of $34 billion and a total expense of $38.7 billion, we are forecasting a deficit of $4.7 billion. A smaller deficit of $1.1 billion is forecast for 2011-12, and we get back into the black in year 3, with a projected surplus of $505 million in 2012-13. Savings from the sustainability fund will offset the two years of deficit.

A year ago government announced plans to make $2 billion in adjustments in Budget 2010 unless our financial situation improved. A great deal of work was done to achieve this, and I commend the decision-makers across government ministries who helped us to achieve $1.3 billion in savings through program changes and efficiencies. In light of a brighter than expected fiscal and economic picture, we have chosen to reinvest these savings into priority areas and still be back in the black in three years. This does not mean our job is done. As we did last year, we will continue to identify and make in-year savings, with a target this year of finding an additional $240 million.

There has been much speculation, and some of it, frankly, fearmongering, about potential budget reductions. Budget 2010 does reduce funding in a number of areas. These reductions start in government areas that do not directly affect services to the public: a reduction for Executive Council of 8.6 per cent, for Service Alberta of 15.6 per cent, and for International and Intergovernmental Relations of 7.7 per cent. About 700 government positions are being eliminated, but we have worked hard to minimize job losses, with an effort to reassign many affected employees to vacant positions. We will continue to work with our public-sector unions to live within our budgets while minimizing job losses.

Some reductions are made to programs that deliver front-line public services. As more Albertans go back to work, the demand for income supports is expected to diminish, resulting in a reduction to income supports of $41 million. Greater emphasis on early intervention and more permanent and enhanced foster placements will reduce child intervention services by $27 million. We will save $19 million by focusing our community grants to those groups that provide services and supports to the most vulnerable. We will reduce the costs for the rent supplement program by $13 million by targeting rental assistance to those with the greatest needs.

Reductions, however, are not being made across the board. Budget 2010 protects programs that help the most vulnerable. Benefits are protected at current levels for recipients of AISH and Alberta seniors' benefits, and funding levels are maintained for the persons with developmental disabilities program. Benefits are also maintained for seniors' supports for dental, optical, and school property tax assistance. More than $40 million is added to some of these programs to accommodate growth in caseloads. Funding levels are also maintained for programs such as Alberta aids to daily living, affordable housing programs, and homelessness initiatives. Mr. Speaker, this budget and this government will help those who need help.

Budget 2010 highlights Alberta's continuing commitment to publicly funded health care. It eliminates the Alberta Health Services debt with a one-time injection of $759 million on top of a $343 million payment made in 2009-10, and it increases Alberta Health Services' annual budget by $1.3 billion, adjusting the base by more than $800 million and adding 6 per cent more to address cost pressures associated with an aging population, expensive drugs, and technologies. The 6 per cent increase is part of a five-year plan of predictable increases to support long-term planning in health care delivery, and the subsequent four years will see increases of 6 per cent in each of the next two years and 4.5 per cent in each of the following two years. Our commitment to public health care now totals more than $15 billion, and with this five-year plan for health care funding health officials commit to identifying new efficiencies in service delivery to ensure that the health care system operates within its means.

Our government is also committed to ensuring that Albertans are treated the same as all other Canadians. Today the province of Alberta receives from Ottawa at least $200 less per person than other provinces under the Canada Health transfer. This amounts to a shortfall of more than $700 million a year. This is not right. This is not fair. We will vigorously pursue fair funding on behalf of all Albertans.

Alberta's most important renewable resource is our children, and the biggest investors in Alberta's future are their parents. So to protect our children, our homes, and our communities, Budget 2010 provides $148 million to continue our safe communities program. This $148 million will enhance addiction prevention programs and services for families of at-risk children, it will complete the Alberta gang strategy and the long-term crime reduction strategy, and it will hire another 100 front-line police officers. Mr. Speaker, we're going to make sure that 2010 is not a good year for gangs, drug dealers, and thieves.

These social programs are not cheap. To pay for them, Budget 2010 contains initiatives that generate jobs, opportunities, and revenues. Value-added initiatives such as the bitumen royalty in kind will help us get the most out of Alberta's conventional energy and oil sands. Budget 2010 allocates $237 million to innovation, research, and technology commercialization that will bring that research to market. This includes $188 million for programs under Alberta Innovates to develop Alberta-grown technology and environmental, medical, and manufacturing solutions into marketable products and services.

A strong reputation as a good environmental steward is increasingly important to protect access to our export markets. Budget 2010 continues Alberta's commitment to carbon capture and storage with the potential for the technology to increase oil recovery from existing wells. But our environmental stewardship goes well beyond greenhouse gases. Budget 2010 supports renewable energy, environmental management and compliance, and the renewed water for life strategy. For environmentally friendly municipal transit $470 million over three years is committed to the Green TRIP, and work will continue on developing regional plans under Alberta's land-use framework.

Other natural resources such as forestry and agriculture contribute to Alberta's economic strength, and Budget 2010 allocates $10 million to address workforce retention and retraining and to enhance forest health initiatives. In agriculture Budget 2010 provides over $9 million to AgriFlex, a new cost-shared program with the federal government to improve agriculture's competitiveness. Plus, $40 million is added to the cost-shared Growing Forward initiative to support agricultural innovation and risk management.

The future of Alberta is sitting in classrooms and lecture halls across the province right now, and Budget 2010 recognizes that a solid education is both a personal advantage for students and a competitive advantage for Alberta. School boards will receive an increase of $250 million, or 4.8 per cent, for announced grant rate increases, enrolment growth, and specialized services. Support for adult learning is increased by $31 million, with a focus on training for work programs. Overall, base operating grants for postsecondary institutions are maintained at 2009 levels, which is over $2 billion.

This budget fulfills our commitment to invest in the future through expanded, improved infrastructure. The capital plan supports $7.2 billion in infrastructure in 2010-11 and more than $20 billion over the next three years. This infrastructure spending will create thousands of new jobs in construction at a time when unemployment is high and costs are low. Lower building costs mean we get more bang for our buck, and the new jobs will support financial stability for many hardworking Alberta families.

Budget 2010 recognizes that Alberta's economic future is increasingly in the north. Accordingly, we will build new resource roads in northern Alberta and continue the twinning of portions of highway 63. In Fort McMurray we will complete two highway interchanges and a new five-lane bridge over the Athabasca River.

Across the province work will start on 41 schools that were already approved under the capital plan. Funding is also allocated for water and waste water, affordable housing, and supportive living. The proceeds from Alberta capital bonds will provide $100 million to build seniors' accommodations, including long-term care facilities. This year work continues on the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads and on improving highways across the province.

Fully one-quarter of our three-year capital plan is invested directly in municipalities. Municipalities receive infrastructure grants and support totalling $1.78 billion in 2010-11 and $5.25 billion over three years. This includes the municipal sustainability initiative, which receives a $476 million increase, providing municipalities with a total of $876 million to address their infrastructure needs.

In summary, Budget 2010 strikes the right balance, and we achieved this balance because we stayed true to the Premier's four-point recovery plan. We have reduced spending in most departments, with over $1.3 billion in cuts from forecast targets. Second, we have used our savings, the sustainability fund, to protect priority programs: education for the young, health care for the sick, and strengthened supports for the elderly and the disabled. Third, we continue to build infrastructure, creating more jobs today and a foundation for future economic growth. Finally, we've kept Alberta competitive with no new taxes and a balanced budget by 2012. This budget will restore economic growth in Alberta. And let's be perfectly clear about this: in today's economy what's good for Alberta is good for all of Canada.

Some critics will point out that this budget has a large deficit. It does, and neither I nor anybody else on this side of the House is happy about that, but running a deficit in 2010 doesn't make us any different than most other provinces or the federal government. What does make us different is that we are not creating new debt for the day-to-day operations. Our projected debt supports capital spending, infrastructure that will be there for future generations. What does make us different is that our budget shortfalls this year and next can and will be covered by our rainy-day savings account. What other government in Canada can say that?

We will not allow annual deficits to aggregate into a large debt to burden future generations. Albertans want to pay for services, not to service interest on debt. We made that mistake in the 1980s, and we will not make that mistake again.

Mr. Speaker, this budget supports the Premier's vision of a fiscally strong Alberta with a competitive and innovative economy and the best publicly funded health care in Canada and the most advanced infrastructure.

Will budget cutbacks present challenges for some Albertans? Of course. But it is a fair budget. No one group is singled out. Every sector, every Albertan will be asked to give up a little. That's the key to our recovery: the recognition that we're all in this together. So working together, we can weather the economic storm until sunnier times return, which they will, and we will keep Alberta a beautiful and healthy Alberta, the best place to live, work, and raise a family.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: I have the introduction of the Lakeland Ridge public school, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes. You've been recognized.

Ms Evans: Thrilled – thank you – especially since our Premier was the one who first envisioned that this school could be an ideal partnership between Catholic, public, and the two government departments that exist in the school. Well, today we have the privilege of hosting two classes, and I haven't seen them here yet, so I trust that they may be behind us. Oh, there they are. We've got 55 visitors from Lakeland Ridge public school accompanied by Lindy Mair, Jay Robertson, Savi Kajan, Sasha Robinson, Heather Wilton, Lorie Fisher, Leeann Fries, Debbie Borody, and Jenny Stober. These students are very buoyant, and we had a wonderful discussion while we took their picture. I'd ask them to please stand, and we will give them the recognition they richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of guests that are constituents from Little Bow. Mr. Kim Craig is the mayor from the town of Coaldale, and Mr. Leo Ludwig is the town manager. Mr. Ludwig actually attended the same high school as our colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview maybe a year or two ago. I would like them to rise – I see they're up – and receive the traditional warm welcome. They're here to receive some meetings with the AUMA, and they met this morning with our Minister of Environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Trevor Theman, registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, and Ms Marian Stuffco, the government relations adviser at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Dr. Theman assumed the position of registrar in 2005 and continues to be very interested in the role that health care professionals can play in creating a culture of safety, while Ms Stuffco, as you may know, has an extensive background in sports at the local, national, and international levels. I see they've risen. I would just ask all of our colleagues in the Assembly to greet them with a warm, thunderous round of applause.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three staff from the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. They are Alberta wildfire operations team members, instrumental in forest firefighting efforts here and in British Columbia last year. Rick Moore, wildfire operations officer in Rocky Mountain House, with 27 years of service, led efforts to fight the 3,000 hectare Brookmere fire near Merritt, B.C. Doug Smith, the wildfire operations officer in Whitecourt, with 25 years of service, was an incident commander in British Columbia involved in multiple fires near Bella Coola. Mr. John Brewer, director of wildlife operations at the provincial forest fires centre in Edmonton, 33 years of service, co-ordinated help in British Columbia to ensure that Alberta remained well protected from wildfires in the province last year. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly and would thank them for joining us today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a visitor from Ludhiana, India, Mr. Gajjan Singh Thind. Mr. Thind is a director of M.G.M. public school Ludhiana. I hope he is enjoying his visit to the capital city of Edmonton in the wonderful province of Alberta. Mr. Thind is joined here today by Gurbhalinder Singh Sandhu, chief editor of the Des Pardes Times, Vattandeep Singh Grewal, and Roop Brar. At this time I would ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to introduce two guests from my constituency: the mayor of Strathmore, Mr. George Lattery, and the CEO of the town of Strathmore, Dr. Dwight Stanford. They attended meetings with ministers this morning and are in Edmonton to attend AUMA meetings later today and tomorrow. Welcome, and I would ask all of my colleagues to extend the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly several individuals in the public gallery that are here today to show their concern for the mismanagement of our health care system. Please rise as I say your name and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly: Jayne Hamilton, Elaine and Neil Fleming, Tom and Bev Sawyer. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly six bright young students. They are from the University of Alberta Conservative Association. They have interests in political science, sociology, teaching, business. I would like them to stand up in order of their names: Mr. Kevin Tam, who is the president; Mr. Adam Risling, executive vice-president; Miss Heather Mickalyk, vice-president of events; Mr. Christian Lowden; Mr. Matthew Sztym; Mr. Patrick Ross. This is a bright young future. They are here to keep an eye on us, learn from us, and maybe teach us and guide us in the near future. I look forward to seeing them maybe one day sitting in our chairs. I would like all my friends to give them a warm welcome to the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise again today and introduce to you and through you students from Meyonohk elementary school, from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, sitting in the members' gallery. I would ask the students to please rise along with their teacher, Mrs. Sylvester, to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Tribute to Forest Firefighters

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about wildfires and the heroic work done by a select group of Albertans who protect the lives and properties of their friends and neighbours from forest fires. It may seem strange to speak of wildfires in February, when sub-zero temperatures are common and snow covers the ground across much of our province. However, the conditions that support wildfires will arrive very soon in Alberta – the season typically begins April 1, less than two months from now – and we will once again have cause to be thankful for the efforts of the firefighters who protect public safety in our province.

These brave men and women put their lives at stake every day of the wildfire season in Alberta to ensure that Alberta communities are protected when danger threatens, and it's not just Albertans that they protect. Last August 290 of our brave firefighters were sent from Alberta to British Columbia to help with the terrible situation facing our neighbours to the west. B.C. was experiencing extreme fire hazards and catastrophic fires burning across that province. Fires encroached on many communities, placing lives at risk and threatening to destroy homes and businesses. Alberta's firefighters stepped up to the challenge and helped British Columbia overcome the dangerous situation.

What is also notable about the effort is that Alberta was able to provide help without compromising safety in this province. Last summer also saw extreme fire hazards in Alberta. Last year we recorded 1,000 wildfires by mid-June, the earliest date we've ever reached that number. Luckily for us and British Columbia, our wildfire hazard lessened as the summer progressed, allowing us to assist British Columbia when they most needed our help.

This scenario illustrates the value of the firefighting agreements Alberta has in place with other agencies across North America, allowing for sharing of resources when one jurisdiction or another faces extreme conditions. Alberta has benefited from this agreement in the past, most recently last June, when 200 firefighters from across Canada and Mexico arrived to assist Alberta with a rash of wildfires.

Wildland firefighters are a rare breed indeed. They are quick to stand in the front lines to fight fires at home and to travel to other jurisdictions to help neighbours in need. I want to express my sincere gratitude to all of the wildland firefighters who protect people and property in this province, whether they are part of Alberta's firefighting corps or personnel from other . . . [Mr. Johnston's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Haiti Relief Effort

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to many organizations that have come together in support of the people of Haiti. It's estimated that 230,000 people have been identified as deceased and that approximately 300,000 have been injured. However, through this darkness we have brought out characteristics of humanity that really encompass the best of us: charity, compassion, and the spirit to persevere.

To this end, I would like to bring to the attention of the House some of the hard work done by organizations with whom I've dealt over the last few weeks. Two of my constituents, Kamila and Bong, recently hosted a Haiti ARISE concert that brought together many churches in east Calgary, including Christ is Coming Church, Calgary Mosaic Church, Eastside City Church, U-Turn project ministries, Centre Street Church, Peace Chapel Church, Rockpointe Church, and the Way Christian Mission.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Sikh community and the Dashmesh Culture Center as well as Radio SurSangam and radio Sabrang have raised approximately $25,000 for the Red Cross. My friends here in Edmonton, the Sikh youth of Edmonton, recently held a fundraiser for an organization called United Sikhs that has medical professionals on the ground in Haiti. I believe they raised approximately $10,000.

This earthquake shook not only the lives of those in Haiti but also the lives of many here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all members to join with me and show their appreciation for the fundraising efforts of these organizations as well as ones in their own communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Good Neighbour Award

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I love living in Edmonton, and most of that is because of the spirit of Edmontonians. We participate. We volunteer officially and sometimes unofficially by just helping out a neighbour, a friend, even a stranger.

One of the projects currently being sponsored by the city of Edmonton is the good neighbour award, now in its third year. This award is to recognize some of the thousands of people who take positive actions to make Edmonton safer, better, more fun. This award is special for me this year because it is particularly encouraging people who live in multifamily buildings, like apartments and condos, as well as business owners and the not-for-profit agencies to consider nominating someone. Of course, the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre is home to a lot of people who live in apartments and condominiums.

The short stories and nominations received for the award in 2008 and 2009 were all inspiring and have confirmed a belief that it is the little everyday things neighbours do, those small gestures to assist each other, that make our city safe and livable. The city put the stories together in a lovely booklet called Looking Out for Each Other.

This whole venture is supported by the Realtors Association of Edmonton in conjunction with the city of Edmonton. Thank you to the Realtors Association of Edmonton for being very good neighbours and for supporting good neighbours. Nomination forms are available at all libraries or online at www.edmonton.ca/safeedmonton. And hurry, because the deadline is the 1st of March. I encourage all of our Edmonton MLAs and all of those living in our fair city to consider nominating their own good neighbour.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Terry Fox Run Commemorative Quilt

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise today and recognize the town of Taber's inspirational ongoing commitment to the Terry Fox Run. Every year the citizens of this compassionate community make an extraordinary effort to raise money in the fight against cancer. In 2008 this community of roughly 7,500 people broke records by raising nearly $51,000 over the course of the Terry Fox Run with help thanks to extra events, including head shave promotions and a stop by the Taber Tour of Hope.

Last November the one-of-a-kind Terry Fox legacy quilt was unveiled in the Taber public library. This incredible quilt is made from T-shirts from every single Terry Fox Run in Canada, including the province of New Brunswick. To collect these shirts, every Terry Fox Run co-ordinator in Canada was contacted about donating a shirt. Once collected, the quilt was assembled by the Taber Cotton Pickers Quilt Club, while Kaye's Kwilting then completed the outside of the quilt. Now Taber's focus turns to its 2010 run, which hopes to be as successful as in past years.

Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the citizens of Taber for their extraordinary efforts in the fight against cancer. I know that this beautiful and unique quilt will serve as an inspiration to current and future participants in the Terry Fox Run.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Darrell Cook

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise in the House today and recognize the passing of a great Albertan, Mr. Darrell Cook. Darrell's passing was brought to the attention of this House yesterday, and while we're all saddened by this, I was most disappointed by the nature in which his passing was mentioned.

Darrell was a great Albertan in many ways, upholding the intrinsic values of what it means to be Albertan. He was hard working, entrepreneurial, compassionate, and giving. Darrell was president and chief executive officer of Gibraltar Mortgage. He was committed to business, earning his CGA designation in 1977, and was director of Mainstreet Equity and Canex Energy. But this is not what Darrell will be remembered for. Darrell's life was focused on serving his community and, more specifically, those that are most vulnerable in our community. He was steadfast and deliberate in ensuring that those with disabilities enjoyed the highest quality of life. He had an active leadership role in developing the Road Ahead Society, which was established in December 2000 in response to the needs of families with disabled children and adults.

He was also involved with Calgary's Family Managed Resource Centre as well as being involved in Family Voices Calgary and their Calgary Family Summit, which enables parents and family members to connect with each other. He was a contributor to many charities, a major donor to the Alberta Association for Community Living.

Darrell was instrumental in lobbying the Alberta government to implement the registered disability savings plan in a manner that maximally benefited people with disabilities and their families. Darrell and his wife, Sheilagh, were awarded the Colonel Eric Cormack and Dr. Barbara Cormack memorial award for their long-term voluntary commitment to families and their leadership in the development of new and innovative community initiatives. In addition to this, he was a board member and current president of the Calgary-Varsity PC Association and an active member of the Calgary Winter Club and the Country Hills Golf Club.

On behalf of the members of this Assembly I wish to express our condolences to the Cook family for their loss, a loss that will be felt throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, Alberta once set the standard for sound fiscal management and responsibility both nationally and internationally. Sadly, those days are long gone. Over the past several years almost no provincial or state government has raised their spending as much or as fast as this one. They have scrapped our no-deficit laws and plunged us back into debt, showing great disrespect to all the Albertans who sacrificed so much, even their own jobs in some cases, to achieve a debt-free Alberta for ourselves and for our children, and things are only getting worse.

In Budget 2010 this government claims an expected deficit shortfall of roughly $4.7 billion. This number is brutal on its own, but it actually underestimates the true cash deficit this government is running. You see, the $4.7 billion deficit number does not include an additional $2.8 billion in infrastructure spending that is offset on the government's books as an asset, as stated on page 18 of their 2010 fiscal plan document. This is still cash going out. It's just, essentially, hidden from public view. Taken together, the total cash deficit for this government is a staggering $7.5 billion. Added together with Budget 2009's cash deficit, that brings the total to – and I'm glad to see you're sitting down, Mr. Speaker – $15 billion of red ink in just two years of work.

So how is this government paying for this? Partly by draining our shrinking sustainability fund, down from $17 billion just two years ago to $8 billion this year, and partly through debt financing, which is estimated to climb to $6 billion by 2012. Mr. Speaker, this PC government has failed Albertans. They have totally mismanaged this province's finances, and they are now heaping billions in debt and unsustainable spending on the backs of young Albertans. This government must be held accountable for this train wreck.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another budget full of spending without any sense of the value we're getting for our money. While cuts weren't drastic, how do we know the dollars we're spending are getting the job done? To the Premier. Spending more money doesn't mean spending more wisely. How will Albertans know they're getting value from the increased spending money this government is throwing at our problems?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all of the spending is scrutinized by the Auditor General. He looks at all of the departments and many of the agencies that deliver services like Alberta Health Services and other publicly funded agencies. That is the role of the Auditor General, and he has done a good job.

Dr. Swann: This government is making a bet on commodity prices, that are risky to forecast. How can the Premier take a gamble with Alberta's future by spending money that isn't actually out of the ground yet?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe in Alberta. I believe in the entrepreneurial spirit of this great province. There are signs of economic recovery, but I can tell you that that does not mean that we put our heads in the sand and hope this all goes by without any major repercussions. There are huge global shifts. We've got to get into the marketplace. There's huge competition for people, huge competition for investment. We just can't sit around and wait for a brighter day. We've got to take action, and we have through this plan. We will have a balanced budget by 2012-13.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe in responsible fiscal management. Just weeks ago this government claimed that the buffet was closed. We're not so sure. What specific changes are you putting in place that address, Mr. Premier, value for money rather than simply the amount of money?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that in infrastructure we're getting tremendous value. We're seeing tenders drop by 20, 30, and in some cases as much as 40 per cent. Over a third of that money on infrastructure will be spent by municipalities, so we'll be able to redo all of the old waterlines, sewer lines, build new roads, build schools, build hospitals for future generations. That is money well spent, and that's just one part of the overall budget.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago every Albertan knew that we were not receiving value for money in our health care system. Alberta Health Services' and this government's management of the health care system is a mess. Albertans also know that the only way to get better value for money is to use the money more effectively. To the Premier: what have you changed in the last two days that will mean Albertans will get better value for the extra $1.7 billion in the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it was clear that by amalgamating all of the boards down to one, the Alberta Health Services Board, we saved about $600 million in administration. There was still $800 million that was a deficit within the health system. That gave us a better appreciation of the true cost of delivering health care in this province. There is no jurisdiction – no jurisdiction – in Canada that has given any health service authority five-year funding, increased funding over those years. Our population will be increasing; it'll be aging. We know that there will be more requirement of health services delivered. Now the board can plan successfully and deliver those services that Albertans require.

Dr. Swann: We're talking about value for money, Mr. Speaker. It may be a political fix to throw another $1.7 billion at health care, but a practical fix means Albertans have access to a family doctor. To the Premier: specifically, how many more family doctors will Albertans have access to with this increase?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are maintaining our plan in advanced education to keep increasing the number of seats. We will be graduating more homegrown physicians in the province of Alberta. We will meet our target, and that also goes to complement all of the other health care providers – nurses, physiotherapists, the whole broad range of health care providers – that we will need in the future.

Dr. Swann: Under this government's incompetent management the deficits of the health authorities have increased year by year: $68 million, $297 million, then $343 million, and now a projected $759 million deficit. Is this not clear evidence that Alberta health care's main problem is mismanagement?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we know now the true cost of delivering health care. We wrote off the deficit because that deficit is really part of the overall balance sheet of the province of Alberta. We're starting fresh; we're starting clean. We're starting with a good plan. The minister will be consulting further this year with Albertans in terms of having our own Alberta health care act, that will enshrine the five principles of the Canada Health Act, and also listening to Albertans in terms of what else they would like to see. I believe that we are blazing the trail here in a good health system, improving it, and most importantly it will remain publicly funded.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is determined to drain our precious savings account down to zero before the next provincial election. Yesterday's budget turned the multibillion-dollar sustainability fund into this government's personal re-election fund. [interjections] Oh yeah, laugh. To the Premier. If the commodity prices go down, not up, the fund won't last until the next election. What will you do then?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, through good, solid, prudent financial planning we're going to be in the best economic position of any province in Canada. In fact, we're going to lead this nation out of the recession. I have, as I said earlier, great faith in the economy of this province and in recovery, and we will show by 2012-13 a balanced budget, money being put back in the sustainability fund to make sure that we're prepared for the next economic downturn, whenever that may come.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: before the hon. Premier drains the sustainability fund, why not reduce the size of your bloated cabinet and save millions and millions of dollars that can be used for children in need and those that are unemployed who need help?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if I remember, using your calculation, I think the whole Legislative Assembly, this whole operation – all the members here, all of the benefits paid to members, the cost of running offices – is about .1 per cent of the total operating budget. There are savings. We cut about 8.6 per cent out of Executive Council. There will be more savings coming out of the operations of this government.

Let's not fool ourselves. This is the worst economic recession since, well, the 1930s. Many economists are saying that. We have seen oil go from $75 to $147 down to $35. There is no jurisdiction in Canada that has a $17 billion surplus cash fund, especially for this kind of opportunity to cushion the blow on revenue and keep our services going.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that was quite an interesting response.

I have a press release dated December 15, 2006, when the hon. Premier reduced the size of his first cabinet from 24 to 18. This is what the Premier stated: "The people of this province told me they wanted more effective government, not more of it." What changed since then other than the fact that we now have a $4.7 billion deficit as a result of you and your government's mismanagement?

Mr. Stelmach: Since 2006 considerably fewer Liberals on the other side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the President of the Treasury Board suggested that I lacked math skills because of my outrageous claim that the actual budget deficits in 2009 and likely in 2010 would understate the true cash deficit by about $3 billion. Now, this is puzzling to me because on the bottom of page 18 of their document, Budget 2010, in very small print it clearly states that capital investment is not reported as an expense. To the Treasury Board President: is the roughly $3 billion in capital investment included in the government's final $4.7 billion deficit number or isn't it?

2:00

Mr. Snelgrove: Sometimes people prove themselves correct.

Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of capital investment. There are capital grants that we give to municipalities, to health authorities, to schools. Those aren't our assets; they're theirs. That's listed in line 3 on page 67 of the book very clearly. Further down it shows capital investment in government-owned properties, $2.8 billion, roughly. That is accounted through amortization, which is clearly spelled out on page 78 and again on the bottom of page 79, and it is the most basic of accounting standards to follow.

Mr. Anderson: Wow. That is good spin. Your own Treasury Board accountants explained this to me personally. Are their math skills in question as well?

Mr. Speaker, it is clear despite the verbal jiu-jitsu from the President of the Treasury Board that the real cash deficit for Budget 2010 is $7.5 billion. This number is staggering. To the Premier: will he admit to Albertans that the true deficit is $7.5 billion so that we can have an open and honest discussion in this House on how to get our spending under control?

The Speaker: Who is answering this?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have just said goodbye to one of the most respected officers of this legislative building today, Mr. Fred Dunn. Mr. Dunn and his staff go through these books on a year-to-year basis with a fine-tooth comb. They have given us unqualified support for every financial statement we've produced. The true cash cost of our government amortization this year is $519 million, as stated very clearly in our book, and has followed the same accounting principles for years and years and years. There is no attempt to hide any spending.

Mr. Anderson: Oh. The last thing I need is a math lesson from a minister who has given us a $15 billion red ink in the last two years.

The government appears to be financing their $7.5 billion cash shortfall by debt financing. In fact, it is projected that by Budget 2012 Alberta will have incurred $6 billion in debt, up from exactly zero when this Premier took over. In my view, this is disrespectful to the thousands of Albertans who sacrificed so much to rid our province of this debt. To the Premier: at what level are we going to stop the debt?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the member should have been taking a better look at the books. Every chartered accountant agency in Alberta, also the federal group that oversees accountants in the country of Canada, keeps telling us and all Albertans that we have the most open and transparent books in the nation. We are not going to change that policy, and we'll continue to ensure that we're fully transparent with all of the spending that this Legislature approves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the budget the minister of finance announced that there would be a new five-year commitment to health care funding, including $759 million to cover the accumulated deficit for the new superboard. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the rationale behind paying off the health care deficit at this time? Why now?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that a bill has been incurred as a result of providing the kind of health services Albertans need. That bill has manifested itself into a deficit, and it has to be paid. The important thing to remember is, of course, that those monies have already been spent. Now we're just covering them. Paying it off now also provides the new provincial board with a clean slate, as the Premier just indicated in the previous answer. The provincial board is working very hard still to find efficiencies now that we have all of this consistent information flowing in in consistent ways.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the new five-year commitment to funding and annual increases set out in the budget, what can we expect to see as improvements to our health care system as it pertains to accessibility and wait times, and how will the minister achieve these targets?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're working very closely, obviously, with the delivery arm, which is Alberta Health Services, to ensure improvements, and those improvements will see themselves coming to be as a result of a predictable and stable funding plan. I should say that it's a five-year funding plan, a first for this province and, I believe, a first for all of Canada. We're going to reduce wait times for patients that are looking for help in the ER. We're going to also speed up the access time to specialists, and we're going to also speed up admission rates. So a lot is happening of a positive nature.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents want to know where we are going with health care in this province with the commitment of the five-year funding. Will the minister share a revised health care road map like Vision 2020 with Albertans, and if so, when?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a lot of that has already been shared with Albertans through the committee co-chaired by the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford wherein the government accepted all four recommendations of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. That is one very clear indication that we're serious about addressing the issues that are on Albertans' minds. A blueprint for action will be ready through a consultative process that culminates in September, and an Alberta health act will soon follow thereafter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday in the House the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports stated that she had found the funds needed for the PDD budgets through administrative and efficiency savings. Could I ask the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: would she table in the House the exact amount of funds that were clawed back from each PDD community board?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to thank the member opposite for giving me the opportunity to tell the good news about my budget from our recent budget announcement. I'm one of the very few ministries that received an increase, a 2.2 per cent increase, almost $2 billion, and $43 million to spend within my budget. The audits and the bookkeeping are all made available to the public on the Internet and through my ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I looked at the budget, it had gone from $604 million to $597 million. That was kind of, I think, a decrease.

Can the minister guarantee that PDD will not face another mid-year cut this coming year that would be identical to what's happened in the last few months?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that the PDD budget has remained the same, that we will be able to find efficiencies within our administration and be able to distribute those efficiencies back to the front-line services for our PDD people, and that the core supports that they're eligible for will remain the same.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I have great respect for people who have the conviction to stand out in the cold on the Legislature steps because, apparently, they weren't allowed in. We had PDD-supported individuals, front-line staff, and families here today concerned over the future of their supports.

Has the minister actually talked to the front-line staff and those receiving support to ensure that the money taken back has not affected the quality of the supports that they depend on or that, in fact, they are still on a waiting list?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that I've had meetings in the last two weeks, one with a group of people from Edmonton who are families and stakeholders, service providers. On Monday I sat and I had a three-hour meeting with the Alberta community association for disability supports, ACDS. We were able to talk about their concerns and actually identify some solutions.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, you made an allegation about people being denied access to this building. Would you kindly convey to me in writing which people, when, what day? What are the circumstances?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Calgary Transportation Infrastructure Funding

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, as a fast-growing urban area Calgary needs municipal funding support from the province in order to keep pace with the demands of Calgarians to move to and from work. According to a 2006 study transportation and logistic infrastructure was also the number one selection criterion for companies when making a decision about where to put new businesses. My questions are all for the Minister of Transportation. Can the minister assure Calgarians that his department will continue to invest in critically needed transportation infrastructure in our city?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell the hon. member that I believe yesterday's budget was a very good-news budget, a budget that's right for this time. We're moving ahead on all the projects that we had planned. Just a few months ago we opened a large portion of the ring road in Calgary worth $1 billion. The entire ring road in Calgary is now 45 per cent complete, and we're going to continue on till we get it done. We've also completed $200 million worth of work on the Deerfoot, and just a couple of weeks . . .

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, that's all very well and good, but we do know that the local governments set their own priorities. What is the minister doing to ensure that the city of Calgary's priorities are accomplished in good time?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Transportation is providing substantial funding to the city of Calgary to be used towards their projects or their priorities. In fact, in the 2010-11 budget there's over $160 million for Calgary through municipal infrastructure programs that includes the city transportation fund, basic capital grant fund, streets and improvements programs, and this is over and above the work that we are doing on our own provincial highways.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion over exactly what is provincial jurisdiction and what is municipal jurisdiction when it comes to transportation. Can the minister clarify who is responsible for what when it comes to transportation in our urban areas?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I always am pleased to bring clarity to this House. My department is responsible for maintaining the provincial highway network, and that includes the ring roads, Deerfoot Trail, and all commuter highways into the city.

Projects coming forward this year include 21 kilometres of the southeast ring road, three interchanges on Stoney Trail, continued upgrades to the Deerfoot, and there are also numerous waste-water and other area projects coming forward. No one can say that my department isn't providing adequate transportation infrastructure funding to all municipalities in Alberta, including Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget was another reminder that this government does not understand the connection between investing in education and diversifying Alberta's economy. My questions are to the minister of advanced education. Given that yesterday's budget expanded access to loans but slashed funding for nonrepayable grants and bursaries, should Alberta students be grateful for the minister's facilitation of an even greater debt load?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta today we lead the nation with our scholarships even after this budget is tabled and even after we did reduce some of the scholarship funds and two of the grant funds. If I give out $1 in grants, I can give out $3 in loans for that same dollar. We want to help more students with the funds that we have.

Mr. Chase: You want to help more students go further into debt. Thank you for that clarification.

Mr. Speaker, education equals economy. By freezing operating grants to colleges and universities, is the minister signalling that he is going to allow institutions to replace the missing government funds through massive increases to tuition in professional faculties, which will effectively prohibit students from pursuing a professional career in Alberta?

Mr. Horner: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Students will look forward to that.

At least one university is also considering slapping students with a $500 tax for nothing to fill its budget shortfall. Will the minister show leadership by placing limitations on these outrageous noninstructional fees?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the fees that the hon. member is referring to are fees that all institutions in the province can levy that are outside the CPI cap. What we look at there is the overall affordability framework for students. We've lowered loans to prime. We have increased the amount of grants that we put out for graduate students and for undergraduate students over the last six years. We have increased the base operating grants to postsecondary institutions in the last six years by more than 42 per cent. That is second to none to anyone in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week students at the University of Calgary joined together to protest the proposal to raise tuition in several professional programs, potentially making them out of reach for many young Albertans. This is a huge concern for my constituents, for students who are making decisions on their university studies, and for parents who are fearful they will not be able to provide the help they had hoped for their children. My question today is to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Why is the minister considering . . .

The Speaker: The minister, please. We've had the time.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can expand on the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity when I simply said no. What I want to be clear on is that this government and this Premier remain committed to the tuition cap, the CPI cap. Some of the postsecondary institutions felt that when we froze tuitions in 2004, there may have been some areas where we made an error because we didn't go to them first and say: is the tuition level for these programs correct? We may have made some errors.

Mr. Cao: To the same minister: did you or your department make any mistakes in 2004 when you froze tuitions?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I believe that in 2004 the decision to freeze tuitions at the levels that they were at was the right decision. There were some specific programs that, potentially, we may have capped without consultation with either the students or the postsecondaries because it's about maintaining affordability, and it's about being able to maintain the program. Taxpayers in this province pay for 70 to 80 per cent of the cost of every program. The students pay the balance of that. We want to ensure that we're getting good value for the dollars and that we have set the right price.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when can students and parents expect your decision so they can make their own financial decisions on postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question because it is fair to say that the institutions and the parents of the students all want to have a timely decision so that this fall they can make the right decisions as to the programs that they may want to enter. It is certainly a top priority for this ministry and for me over the coming weeks to ensure that we get the proposals – I still have not seen the total proposals yet – and we'll make a decision as the time goes on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Condominium Property Act Consultation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's approach to problems is to strike a committee and leisurely review the situation while real people suffer. One area where Albertans deserve real action is on changes to the Condominium Property Act. Service Alberta says that it won't be ready until 2012. To the Minister of Service Alberta. The condo act is actually out of date and hasn't been substantially updated in 10 years. Does the ministry really think that making Alberta's condo owners wait another two years is acceptable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the review of the Condominium Property Act right now we are working with a Condominium Property Act committee which consists of condominium owners, lawyers, property managers, and insurance providers. Part of that team is looking at moving forward and looking at some of the issues that need to be brought forward when we begin the consultation on the Condominium Property Act in the spring of 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: how many condo owners have to get lost in the system while your committee studies or looks at the problem or pays tens of thousands of dollars in legal fees before the minister decides to take action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As said previously, the complexity of the Condominium Property Act was reviewed in 2000. Moving forward, we want to make sure that the review we do is comprehensive and effective, and the fact is that with the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, with the building codes there are issues there as well. When you look at some of the correspondence that's coming to my office with respect to condominium reserve funds, all of the issues that are out there, there are a lot of tough issues out there. So I'm very happy that a lot of Albertans are writing to me on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again. The major problem with the condo act is that Albertans have to go to court to enforce it. Why is the minister not willing to move quickly to put some teeth into the condo act so Albertans don't have to go to court to enforce it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ultimately, with the Condominium Property Act, the way it's set up now, there are courses of action that individuals can take if they want to go to legal action.

Again, the review of the Condominium Property Act: there are so many new issues this year that were not there in 2000, so part of the problem is making sure that all of those issues are dealt with so that it's comprehensive and what we end up with is real and effective.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Renter Assistance

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year government locked the doors on rent support for new applicants in August, saying that they couldn't help the growing numbers of Albertans who couldn't make their rents because they were, effectively, out of money. Now, as a result of the government's policy to cut those who need help most, new applicants won't be considered even earlier in the year, if at all, and current recipients may be pushed out early. To the minister of housing: why is this government knowingly setting up a situation that will force Albertans out of their homes and onto the streets?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nothing could be further from the truth. The member is correct. In fact, there is a $13 million reduction coming from this program, but that's as a result of people being transitioned out of the system, people whom we've helped who no longer require our assistance. This ministry will continue to provide assistance to those people who need it the most. Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, there were actually copious people looking for that assistance after August last year, and they couldn't get it.

Now, yesterday the minister of housing said that it's not an entitlement program. I would disagree, and I'm supported in that opinion by the United Nations' declaration of human rights. Having a roof over your head is an entitlement, and if this minister doesn't believe that, he's in the wrong portfolio. Given his comments, will the minister tell this House exactly who he believes deserves housing and who he believes should end up on the streets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite has raised an issue about our housing program and about whether or not there is an entitlement. In this government we believe in targeting the money to those who need it the most. Our policy is that we have a means test that is far more stringent than other provinces. Why? Because we want to help the people who are most in need. In British Columbia, for example: up to $100,000 of assets and you can still receive funding under affordable housing. I think this is wrong. We should be giving money to those who need it the most.

Ms Notley: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, last August you stopped giving money to those who needed it most.

Now, as of yesterday we have seen an overall depletion of funds for housing supports in this government for low-income people by one-third, so it's absolutely ludicrous for this government to pretend they're doing anything to address homelessness. Will the minister admit to all members that he has no intention of trying to end homelessness and that these misplaced priorities will actually make the problem worse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I believe in being compassionate not only to those in need but compassionate to the taxpayer. We will still be on track with our 10-year plan to end homelessness. We are on track to create 11,000 new affordable units by 2012. Perhaps the member should read our business plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is supposedly working on that 10-year plan to end homelessness, but with the $13 million cut to programs it's hard to take that commitment seriously. Rent support reduction runs contrary to the homelessness plan's main goal of getting people off the streets. To the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs: won't cutting rent supports only aggravate a problem your department is saying that it's trying to fix?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Housing and Urban Affairs is a hot topic today. I'm happy to hear that.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore is quite correct. Year over year we have reduced spending by about 19 per cent in our department; $100 million of this comes from the discontinuation of a three-year funding plan to the municipalities. As I mentioned earlier, the measure of our success isn't so much how many housing units we build or how much money we put into the program but, rather, how many people we can transition out so that they no longer need assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have one supplemental question. Before this budget about 80,000 Albertans a month, a good portion of them in Edmonton, were assisted through rent-support programs provided by the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs. To the same minister: can he provide this House with an estimate of how many fewer Albertans will be helped out and what, if anything, he plans to do with them now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. In this department we help people on a needs basis. Currently we're helping 80,000 people, on average, every month to pay their rent; 800 of these through transitioning are brought through the system every month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Bow Valley Wildlife Corridor

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fight for the completion of the Bow Valley wildlife corridor connecting Kananaskis to Banff has been going on for nearly two decades. Instead of simply completing the corridor, this government has stalled any action on the part of local municipalities and approved further recreational development in the area. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: when will this ministry stop turning a blind eye to the building scientific evidence and complete the last three kilometres of this essential corridor?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member would know, there is continuous work that goes on between a number of departments in this government, particularly SRD but others as well. The ministry that I came from, Energy, and I believe Environment also and Municipal Affairs all have some hand in working towards solutions to these problems. We'll continue to do that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I like to hear that all the ministries are working together, but it's been two decades, so they're working together rather slowly. Anyway, if they could complete some of this corridor with the minimum 450 metres and include this action in the South Saskatchewan regional plan – will those be included in the corridor when it's complete?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I would not be able to estimate at what point in time the whole corridor will be complete. I think we've had discussions over a period of time, that I could probably recall as likely 25 years, on the Y to Y corridor. This may or may not be part of that broader discussion. We'll continue to work with the parties involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like you indicated, it has been 25 years, and this corridor is crucial to the survival of many species, including – get this – grizzly bears. The BearSmart program is not sufficient action on the part of this government. Will this minister take the necessary steps and complete the Bow Valley corridor now?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the issue around species at risk is a very serious concern not only for Albertans but all Canadians. Many of the species at risk have been identified in the province of Alberta. We work very, very hard with all of the people that use the landscape for recreation, for activities in industry relative to agriculture, the forestry business, and others. From the point of view of just, "Let's build a corridor someplace, and then everything is going to be fine," I think the issue is much broader than that. We're looking at it in the land-use framework and will develop the proper amount of space for Alberta's wildlife.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Long-term Care Facility for Didsbury

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents from Didsbury and area have been waiting for years now for a new long-term care facility that's needed to replace a very old and substandard one. In fact, seven different ministers of health have been appointed to this portfolio during this wait time and still no new facility in sight. My question is to the current Minister of Health and Wellness. What can I tell the people of Didsbury and district this time? Are we getting this desperately needed new facility or not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think you can safely tell them to remain cautiously optimistic. That would include their knowing that I'm aware of the need and that we have an assessment going on right now. I'll ask immediately for that assessment to be sped up so we can get that answer factually back to this hon. member ASAP.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for that answer. The throne speech stated that monies raised by Alberta capital bonds would be used to replace continuing care and supportive living facilities. Why doesn't the minister just commit to using some of those funds to build this facility now and just get on with it while construction costs remain low?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, part of the answer, of course, is going to be unveiled here very soon, when we come forward with the capital plan for health facilities. That is being worked on as we speak. I will have the details, hopefully, ready just at the time the calendar switches over into the new fiscal year, and I'm hoping that the funds that will come in from the capital bonds issue will help complement our existing capital plan. We'll ensure that this project is given fair consideration.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister. Our population in this area has grown significantly, and we have been waiting for so long for this replacement facility that we now may actually need up to a hundred beds, not just 60. Would the minister ensure that the growth and aging factors will be included as part of your capital plan process for the Didsbury facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I drove through the area in question, Didsbury and the surrounding area, not long ago. I'm well aware of the needs there. I'm very familiar with the need for other health care facilities across the province, not just in Didsbury but elsewhere, and I will ensure that the factors that he's mentioned are included in that assessment along with all the other factors that health care providers and community caring people such as the hon. member have provided to us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds Regulation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's tailings ponds give us an international black eye. They are an underfunded liability to Albertans and industry. They kill wildlife, and there's a strong suspicion that they leak. We can't blame industry for their choices or lack of action if the government doesn't give clear, enforceable targets. Last year the ERCB put forward tailings performance criteria, and in October it was reported that seven of the nine projects will not meet the criteria by 2011 and some not for another 40 years. To the minister: is the minister concerned that these companies aren't meeting the ERCB's criteria?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that you have to deal with when you're a regulator is balancing retrofits as opposed to new construction, and therein lies the issue. How do we incorporate new technology into existing facilities? When the member talks about adherence to a new policy, I can assure her that the new developments will be required to adhere to the new policy. How we bring older developments up to those new standards will take some time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These tailings ponds can be seen from outer space.

Back to the same minister: what are the penalties if companies fail to meet the targets?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, seeing something from space hardly qualifies it as an environmental hazard. I'd suggest that there are a lot of other things that can be seen from space as well.

The fact of the matter is that we have standards in this province. We hold companies accountable to meet those standards, and we continually strive to move those standards forward. The way we deal with tailings ponds in the long term is by changing the technology. That reduces the need for the tailings ponds in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I take it there are no penalties if they fail to meet the target, so the next question to the minister: when will this government require that best practice for cleanup technology be implemented by all companies across the board?

Mr. Renner: It's really fun to be in the opposition, Mr. Speaker, because you can pretty much say anything you want and never be held accountable.

Like I said, Mr. Speaker, there are two very important factors when we discuss best practices. One is on new developments, and clearly there is an opportunity and a need for us to have best practices. The other is: how do you retrofit existing facilities? I can assure this member that we are pushing the envelope very hard on industry to come up on both sides of the equation, retrofitting the existing and bringing the new ones online with the best technology available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Propane Pricing

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past little while there have been significant decreases in the cost of electricity, oil, and natural gas, and it has made life more affordable for many Albertans. At the same time the cost of propane has increased dramatically, and consumers like my constituent John Isley have felt the pinch. To the Minister of Energy: can you explain to me and to everyone here why the cost of propane has increased so much while other forms of energy have so dramatically decreased over the last couple years?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member makes some statements and assumptions in his preamble and talks about significant decreases in the cost of electricity, oil, and natural gas over the past two years. Clearly, those prices have gone up and down, and that's the commodity market we're in. I think it's a little bit of a stretch to say that the price of propane has gone up dramatically. While we don't necessarily regulate the price of propane or any of the other fuels, we do monitor fuel prices, and propane for the most part has remained steady over the past year.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that answer, maybe you can explain to me and to this Assembly how the price of propane is linked to the price of natural gas. I always understood that there was some type of a link between the two.

Mr. Liepert: Well, the linkage is that propane is a by-product of both natural gas and oil through the refining process, but the price itself is not necessarily linked. As I said in my first answer, they are all commodities. They trade on the international commodity market. Prices go up and down. A lot of the price is set, in the situation of propane, on a local supply-and-demand basis, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that answer, again, I'll go back to the Alberta gas protection act, when prices were $5.50 for natural gas, 50 cents for propane. Propane, 73 cents: I think it's time that we enact a protection plan for those consumers. What are you going to do about it, Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what we're going to do about it is that we're going to ensure that we don't pick particular segments of the economy or of industry to subsidize and not subsidize. I think we made it very clear when the natural gas rebate program expired about close to year ago now that we wanted to ensure that we promoted energy efficiency and conservation. Any time you start subsidizing, that doesn't happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Executive Council Budget

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that the best way to lead is by example. Albertans are doing this by balancing their budgets. The problem is that the Premier and the Executive Council are not. In recent years the Public Affairs Bureau has almost doubled to $14.3 billion, a modest 8 per cent cut. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Why does this government not lead by example and cut the Public Affairs Bureau in half, to $7 billion?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Executive Council has cut their spending this year by 8.6 per cent. The Public Affairs Bureau in Alberta has a very important job to do. When you are a marketer of products that go around the world, the story that we have here needs to be sold around the world. It also in many cases needs to be sold right here in Alberta so that Albertans that want to understand the facts about the oil sands or the facts about government spending or the facts about accounting principles get the true story.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe they should break it down so that Albertans can really see if there's any value for it. I think they only promote their own propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want the Alberta advantage back, not billion-dollar deficits. Will the President of the Treasury Board please explain to Albertans why there's a $7 million program to rebrand the Alberta initiative?

Mr. Snelgrove: So things like this don't happen, Mr. Speaker: U.S. firms won't use the tar sands because there are people, some in this House, that have the opportunity to go around and talk about the tar sands as if they're evil and bad and that many, many Albertans don't enjoy a good standard of living from them. Many don't understand how much of Canada depends on the economic engine of Alberta. Do we feel we have a little bit of responsibility to go around the world and around this continent and sell Alberta's story in a correct and factual manner? We certainly think we do.

Mr. Hinman: This is the problem, Mr. Speaker. They're spending $7 million for this freedom to create when they just destroy what people are creating here. Reckless spending is never acceptable, and in these tough times it's even less desirable. The question is: why aren't front-line services like health care, education, seniors, and providing for people with developmental disabilities accessible? Will the President of the Treasury Board do the right thing and transfer $20 million from the Executive Council budget to these important services?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what I would do is challenge the people at home that are watching this Assembly to get a pad and paper out and put it by their desk and to start to keep track of just how the questions come. Are they spending today? Are they saving today? Are they for business? Are they against business? I started last year myself. I had to create a whole new column: is it relevant to anything that people are concerned about? That column was overtaking the spending or saving. People really need to watch, keep track for themselves, and they can judge. Are the questions here relevant, prudent, towards government policy, or are they simply about them pushing their own agenda?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Tuition Fees for Postsecondary Education

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government claims to understand that the way out of this recession rests on the ability of Albertans to be part of a more educated workforce. Now, last summer they inexplicably gave $180 million back to the liquor industry, yet today they're asking students to take on $50 million more debt in order to get an education. Will the Minister of Advanced Education admit that this example of misplaced priorities is going to make education even less accessible for the Albertans who need it at the same time that liquor is more so?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I really don't see the connection there. What I will say is that we have not eliminated the loan relief completion program, which actually remits and forgives student loans for students who have completed their programs and who are in need. I'll reiterate what I said earlier today. That is that we want to help as many students as we possibly can to achieve their dreams in our postsecondary institutions, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're achieving their dreams while they take on more and more debt.

Now, the U of A is talking about hitting students with a fee increase of roughly $500 a year, more or less 10 per cent of what tuition fees would be. This is in part because the government is failing to invest in the growing university sector by freezing their operating dollars. How can you possibly claim to be using advanced education as a means to grow our economy when your funding policy clearly is designed to shift more costs to the very students you're hoping to attract to higher education?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, our funding policy is not designed to shift costs to students. Our funding policy is designed to ensure that we have the best system in North America and, in fact, parts of the globe. It's designed to ensure that we have accessible and affordable postsecondary education for every student who wants and desires it. It's designed to ensure that there's an investment by the students. The hon. member, you know, doesn't seem to realize that the students' investment in their future is important not only to them but to society as a whole. I think what we've developed as a postsecondary funding formula, that we're rolling out this budget, is second to none.

Ms. Notley: Mr. Speaker, the minister suggested in the past that allowing astronomical increases to tuition in certain programs isn't really an increase; rather, it's just a reassessment of the original tuition level that was in place when they put in place their cap. But, really, it doesn't matter how tortured a communications spin you put on the increase. The students paying tens of thousands more dollars each year for certain programs will still pay it, or they'll choose not to enrol. My question simply is: will you resist all requests to increase tuition in any program beyond the inflationary limits that you claim to have in place right now?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the freeze that we put on tuitions in 2004 was done very quickly, and perhaps in some areas of the over 3,500 different tuition levels across the province we may have made an error in one or two of those tuition levels. All we've said to the postsecondaries is that we're willing to look at a proposal from them – this is not from government; from them – that would illustrate whether or not there was an error made. If there was an error made, in order to protect the CPI cap, I think it behooves us to fix that error. We've had that discussion with the students. They understand what I'm trying to accomplish with the postsecondaries. I don't understand why the hon. member doesn't.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today: 12 opposition members, six government members. There were 106 questions and answers.

In a few seconds from now we will return to the Routine.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition of 84 signatures petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the preservation of the current charitable gaming model. It says: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to maintain the current policy for distribution of charitable gaming proceeds."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Bill 2

Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill, if passed, would paraphrase the Health Professions Act by requiring professional regulatory organizations to consult with the ministers responsible and consider their comments prior to removing or approving a program of study for registration requirements. This omnibus bill would ensure this provision is included in the Architects Act; the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act; the Land Surveyors Act; the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act; the Regulated Accounting Profession Act; and the Veterinary Profession Act. If passed, Bill 2 would also update the language in both the Agrology Profession Act and the Regulated Forestry Profession Act, both of which have similar provisions already in place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 2 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010.

This legislation will amend section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act, which awards a set amount of damages for bereavement to a surviving spouse; adult interdependent partner, or AIP; parent; or child of a deceased person. The current act limits the class of claimants eligible for damages. The limits are: no damages to parents if their deceased child was married or had an AIP and no damages to a child of a deceased person if the child was married or had an AIP.

The proposed amendment will remove references to marital status currently found in section 8 of the act. This reflects a decision made by the Alberta Court of Appeal and the current state of law in Alberta.

The amendments will also remove the reference to illegitimacy as the current act defines child to include an illegitimate child. Consistent with current demographics and family law legislation all children are treated as children of their parents regardless of the parents' relationship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

Mr. Hancock: I would like to move that Bill 3 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is an e-mail correspondence from Erin Kinloch-Galesloot regarding cutbacks to persons with disabilities. She is an individual with a disability, and having been supported by PDD, she's been able to live independently with a roommate and work at a paying job like everyone else. She's very concerned that with the current cutbacks in PDD she's going to lose that.

The second e-mail is from Geoffrey Ryan, who's also a constituent. He is also writing with concerns over PDD funding cuts, expressing his utter disdain over the proposed cuts and worried specifically about how the funding cuts would affect the chances of finding a group home for his brother who has Goldenhar syndrome. He's very worried about the burden that will be placed on the family.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, errata for pages 15 and 342 of the 2010-11 government estimates, tabled on February 9, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Energy, a report dated December 23, 2009, entitled Assessment and Analysis of the State-of-the-Art Electric Transmission Systems with Specific Focus on High-Voltage Direct Current, Underground or Other New or Developing Technologies, prepared by Stantec.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

- Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: This motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

3. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

The Speaker: This motion also is nondebatable.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Standing Orders Amendments

6. Mr. Hancock moved:
- A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended by adding the following after Standing Order 52.01:
27th Legislature
52.011 For the balance of the 27th Legislature the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and each of the policy field committees shall consist of 12 Members.
 - B. Be it further resolved that
 - (1) The amendments in this motion come into force on passage;
 - (2) The amendments in this motion shall have effect until the conclusion of the 27th Legislature.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion is with respect to the makeup of committees and changes that need to be made in that area.

The Speaker: This motion is debatable. Anybody want to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand the need for this motion, and in principle I support it in that the Government House Leader has chosen to expand the number of positions on these committees in order to incorporate the inclusion of members who are representing a fourth party in the Assembly now. I certainly do support that participation.

My concern is a small one, more under the heading of a quibble. Nonetheless, I think it's worth putting it on the record, and that is that the Government House Leader has chosen to make Government Motion 6 be in effect until the conclusion of the 27th Legislature. Given the flux that we are experiencing at this moment, I'm less comfortable with having this put in place for effectively two years. We're still expecting that we wouldn't see the next election until approximately two years from now, in the spring of 2012, which leaves us this spring sitting, fall sitting in 2010, spring in 2011, fall in 2011, and possibly a spring sitting in 2012 until we would revert back to the previous standing orders.

I would have preferred to see it in place just for 2010, given that there's still some expectation there could be changes in membership of various caucuses. [interjection] Well, not that I'm planning on doing, but I keep hearing that this is going to happen. The Government House Leader might be in a better position to be talking about who is shifting from which side to another. Nobody is moving here, so I'm fine. But that was my concern overall, that we are putting this in place for, really, an extended period of time. It's half of the sitting time for the 27th Legislature, and I just found that was being a bit more enthusiastic than I think we needed with this particular motion. As I say, I do support the principle of including and recognizing the need to have participation on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, on Members' Services, and on the policy field committees, of which there are five, to have the participation of individuals from different caucuses.

Thanks for the opportunity to put that on the record. I appreciate it. In principle I support what the government is doing here. It's the timing I'm not so happy about.

The Speaker: It's a debatable motion if others want to participate.

Shall I call on the Government House Leader to close the debate or just call the question?

Mr. Hancock: Call the question.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

 - (f) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Mr. Campbell replace Mr. Fawcett, that Mr. Campbell replace hon. Mr. Oberle as deputy chair, that Mr. Anderson be appointed to fill a vacancy;
 - (g) the Standing Committee on Community Services be approved: that Mr. Bhullar replace Mr. Bhardwaj, that Mr. Anderson replace hon. Mr. Lukaszuk;

- (k) the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment be approved: that Mr. Dallas replace hon. Mr. Denis, that Mr. Mitzel replace Mr. Drysdale, that Mr. VanderBurg replace hon. Mr. Oberle, that Mr. Anderson be appointed to fill a vacancy;
- (l) the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee be approved: that Mr. Quest replace hon. Mr. Lukaszuk.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the last motion we now have the opportunity both to add members to the committees in respect of the fact that there are a number more members sitting as independents in the House under the WRA Party banner and to make changes to the standing committees based on the fact that there have been changes in Executive Council and other changes on our caucus side. I have requested changes from both the Liberal caucus and the ND caucus. There were a couple provided, and they've been incorporated. This should accomplish everything we need to accomplish, at least pending further developments as speculated by the House leader from the opposition side. I don't know who she was talking about from her caucus that might be moving, but this should accomplish it for us.

The Speaker: It's a debatable motion.

Shall I call on the hon. Government House Leader to close the debate or call the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on, the chair wants to raise a point with respect to the last two motions, 6 and 7. I'm pleased that there's agreement in the House. There's nothing in either of these motions about where the funds are to come and pay for these extra stipends and salaries. This is not the first time that this has happened in this Assembly, and it becomes incumbent upon, then, the Speaker to try and find the funds. So I'm going to listen very attentively to hon. members in this Assembly in their questions and their responses about spending without making decisions as to where the spending is to come from when I have to deal with this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

3:00 Provincial Fiscal Policies

- 5. Dr. Morton moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate February 9: Ms Blakeman]

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of the Official Opposition it's a duty and privilege to rise today and respond to yesterday's budget. I'm frankly astounded by the haphazard nature of this budget: massive spending increases in certain areas offset by drastic cuts in others. Far from striking a balance, this budget throws Alberta wildly off balance with no plan for sustainable spending and our province's future prosperity in jeopardy. This is a balancing act all right, but it's like a high-wire performance, a big show for the audience with potentially catastrophic consequences. Only it's like the minister of finance is sitting safely on the sidelines, poking Albertans out onto the high wire without a net.

Over and over again during my time as Leader of the Opposition I've stated my belief that Alberta is in dire need of government that understands the importance of planning for the long term. Albertans have told me that they share this view, but clearly this Tory administration has no concept of what a long-term plan entails. Why else would they lurch from budget to budget, shifting priorities on the fly, commissioning studies only to abandon them, ignoring the advice of our Auditor General, and passing a law to make deficit spending illegal only to repeal that law as soon as oil and gas prices collapse? Is it a spending problem, or is it really a competence problem, Mr. Speaker? We believe this budget confirms that this government has a competence problem.

Both as a physician and a medical officer of health I took a careful, comprehensive approach to assessing problems, coming up with solutions in consultation with patients, and following up to be sure that my solutions were working then amending as necessary. For example, if a patient came into the office with a headache, I couldn't just give him a pill and send him away. I needed to know his medical history, what other medications he might be taking, what other medical conditions he had, problems at home and work, and so on. Once deciding together on a course of action, we would monitor the patient's progress together and make changes to treatment as necessary.

The same common-sense approach must be applied and should be applied to policy problems. The state of public health care, the condition of our economy, social issues such as homelessness and child care: all of these require a responsible leadership to consider the big picture without the baggage of ideology or personal prejudice. Comprehensive analysis, full assessment, action, monitoring, and amendments as needed: that's the approach a responsible government would take to the big issues of the day. Instead, we have ad hoc policy designed to address partisan political problems while many equally important issues get swept under the rug.

The cut to children's services, for example, is a scandal. The decision to slash nearly $40 million from a crucial program is beneath contempt, especially when the amount being cut is the same as the amount being devoted to subsidizing the dying horse-racing industry. Mr. Speaker, Albertans care about children a helluva lot more than they care about horse racing. I'm profoundly disappointed by the lack of empathy and short-sightedness displayed by this administration's decision, especially given the news stories of troubled foster families this past week.

Yesterday I talked about the impact of this administration's cuts on Alberta's students – the next generation of engineers, tradesmen, scientists, doctors, artists, the leaders and builders of tomorrow – over $200 million cut from Advanced Education and Technology, creating even higher student debt and imperilling access to postsecondary education. If there's one investment that could lead to creating a sustainable economy for Alberta, surely it's education. But this administration, with typical short-sightedness, just made it harder for countless Albertans to achieve their full potential. The consequences of this decision will affect Alberta's prosperity for a long, long time to come.

It certainly makes it no easier to address our critical shortages of health care professionals. That $2 billion added to the health care budget won't help much without new doctors and professionals to make the system work. Clearly, the heartfelt but logical appeal of University of Calgary medical students Rithesh Ram and Natarie Liu, whose letters I read yesterday in the House, fell on deaf ears. Student debt, already crippling, is going to rise even higher, and I don't see how the minister of advanced education is going to deny any of the proposed tuition increases given these cuts. High youth unemployment, declined registered education savings plan values, frozen minimum wage: all these factors, combined with this administration's cuts to advanced education, make this a terrible time to be a postsecondary student in Alberta.

Slashing income supports in an economic recession shows not only a lack of compassion for Albertans struggling to cope but again reinforces this administration's reputation for short-sightedness. You predict that the unemployment picture is not going to improve in the near term, so why cut benefits? They're going to be needed, especially since employment lags behind general economic growth. It takes time to recover lost jobs. In the meantime Alberta families will struggle to cope.

The choices made by this administration reveal a, quote, flavour-of-the-month mentality. It recognized correctly that Albertans are concerned about health care, but rather than addressing the complex problems of management and resource allocation, it has decided to take the easy road and, in relation to health care in particular, throw money at the problem.

I can't imagine how the minister of finance wrapped his head around this administration's incredible $2 billion increase in health care spending. In fact, there was a comment on Twitter yesterday that I thought was both funny and revealing. I'm paraphrasing: Mr. Premier, when your finance minister is in tears while reading the budget, that's not a good sign.

You know, if I'd called upon this government to increase the health budget by $2 billion, the heckling from that side of the Assembly might very well have brought the House down around our heads. Yet here we have an ideologically conservative administration, or at least, certainly, an ideologically conservative minister, or so he tries to appear, telling Albertans that their prescription for saving health care is throwing dump truckloads full of money at the system. As a medical doctor I can tell you that, yes, the system needs money, but what it needs most is competent management. Given this administration's disastrous record with public health care, why should anyone believe that this huge increase in the system's budget will actually lead to better results?

This administration's own throne speech, delivered just days ago, admitted that Alberta receives far less value per dollar spent on health care than other provinces. Now we'll receive even less value per dollar, because I don't trust this administration to use those extra resources any more efficiently. In fact, by cutting child intervention services and income supports, this will foster situations that cause bad health outcomes for hundreds, perhaps thousands of Albertans, and they'll wind up in the health care system, costing that system much more in the long run.

I find it incredibly ironic that two years ago this very administration was trying to tell Albertans that health care spending was out of control. Oscar Wilde might not have been a big fan of consistency, but I think most Albertans do not want a government that's constantly sending out mixed messages.

A few months ago this administration claimed that it could find $2 billion in savings through greater efficiency. You seem to have come up about $700 million short and certainly haven't found any appreciable efficiencies in health care, not when, as I explained yesterday, there are cases of keeping patients in intensive care units for days at a cost of thousands of dollars rather than shelling out less than a hundred dollars for antibiotics. Or cases like a former friend forced to wait too long for what would have been an easy, inexpensive gall bladder operation, but delays resulted in a potentially life-threatening infection, costing the system thousands of dollars and, more importantly, resulting in a vastly less desirable health outcome for my friend.

Yesterday in my response to the throne speech I shared some stories from the many Albertans who have contacted us with stories of how they're trying to cope with this administration's mistakes. I shared those stories because I think it's important that we all remember that the decisions we make as elected representatives have real impacts on real people every day: our neighbours, our fellow citizens, the people that we have been entrusted to serve. When we fail them, we fail in our primary reason for being in the Assembly. I hope that at least a few government members will take these stories to heart because we all share some responsibility for them.

Here is one I did not bring up yesterday.

After 10 years of billions of dollars in surplus we now find ourselves with $4 billion in deficit. Where did the money go? I live on a disability pension; I don't have lot of money to throw around. I have multiple sclerosis, and on occasion I need a chiropractor and some adjustments. But Mr. Liepert saw fit to delist these treatments, and now I cannot afford to go to a chiropractor. I have no balance. I fall frequently and require adjustments often. Also, I cannot afford my prescriptions because the minister of health raised the price of the plus for Blue Cross from $44.00 to $82.00 per month. Doctor appointments are over a month's wait. The more you can do, please do, and more power to you. We need help.

Here's another.

I asked for hospital beds, not a $250 million a year ambulance transition. In April this year Alberta Health Services took over emergency medical services throughout Alberta at a cost of $250 million a year, forever, after refusing to release publicly the findings of the EMS discovery project in the former Peace and Palliser health regions. What is our health minister trying to hide? I wrote my local government MLA and received this response from her in writing. She stated: "I am unable to share these findings with you," and later, "The findings of the EMS discovery projects cannot be released publicly." Disgusting. Very George Bush style of governance. This was a great selling feature to taxpayers. For example, in Calgary, where EMS operations were close to $30 million a year, this was not supposed to be passed down to us. Then why is it I am now facing a 4.8 per cent property tax increase? The system is clearly not working.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, believe me, these stories represent just the tip of the iceberg. To paraphrase Shakespeare: this surely is the winter of Alberta discontent. This budget uses a boatload of cash to wallpaper over problems while failing to address fundamental issues of poor governance, mismanagement, and the failure to consider the long-term implications of habitual, moment-to-moment decision-making. I believe that as a society we must do our best to live within our means so that future generations will not be compromised. As our First Nations citizens might say: we do not inherit the earth from our ancestors; we borrow it from our children.

This budget borrows heavily indeed from the next generation of Albertans. I only wish I could believe that this administration had the skills to put this loan to best use. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing no longer with merely a financial problem but with a competence problem. There is a better way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, you were aware you had up to 90 minutes if you so chose? Okay. Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful to rise on behalf of the Wildrose Alliance opposition caucus and also on behalf of the hundreds of thousands of very disappointed fiscally responsible Albertans across this great province of ours to respond to this government's latest red ink smeared budget.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2010 is a stunning illustration of the profound mismanagement of our province's finances by this PC government. According to Budget 2010 the government of Alberta is expecting to spend roughly $38.7 billion this year against revenues of approximately $34 billion. This implies a budgetary deficit of $4.7 billion. An additional $2.8 billion in so-called capital investment is not accounted for in the government's current deficit projection. Again, I would point to page 18 of the government's 2010 fiscal plan. This brings the government's real cash deficit to a staggering $7.55 billion, which it plans on financing using debt, which is now reaching about $4.4 billion from the past two years, and draining the province's sustainability fund from roughly $15 billion last year to $8.2 this year, and optimistically down to $2.8 billion by 2012. This vast swath of red ink is similar to that of Budget 2009 and is evidence that this government has yet again failed to bring spending under control despite repeated warnings to do so or face the prospect of higher taxes, a return to massive debts, and further erosion of the Alberta advantage.

A Wildrose Alliance government would not permit this to happen, Mr. Speaker. Although Albertans expect their elected representatives to protect front-line social programs like health, education, and PDD while providing critical public infrastructure, they also expect their government to responsibly protect the Alberta advantage, live within their means, and prioritize needs before wants.

Although erasing the $7.55 billion cash deficit in one year is not practically possible without heavy cuts, the Wildrose Alliance opposition caucus believes the government can cut this cash deficit by approximately $4.67 billion down to roughly $2.88 billion, which is a 62 per cent reduction from the government's projected cash deficit of $7.55 billion.

We can do this as a House by implementing the following spending adjustments. First off, we should spread the $20.1 billion capital budget over 4.5 years rather than three years. This yields a budgetary savings of nearly $2.79 billion in 2010 alone. This would still leave Alberta's per-person capital expenditures slightly above that of British Columbia and behind only Newfoundland and Quebec.

Second, we should indeed increase health and educational operational spending, but we should do so in line with inflation plus population growth, which the government says is 3.5 per cent, rather than the astounding Budget 2010 increases of 13.7 per cent in health and 4.6 per cent in education. This would yield a savings in 2010 of $1.33 billion.

Next, we would suggest delaying, until the economy recovers, the Green TRIP mass transit initiative for a savings of $70 million.

We would cancel the wasteful and unproven $2 billion carbon capture and storage experiment, saving Albertans $100 million this year.

We would eliminate Alberta's venture capital fund. Governments should not be allocating funds to private business ventures. This would return $100 million to the balance sheet in 2010.

We would also cut corporate subsidies for product commercialization. The government, as Premier Klein said over and over again, has no business being in business. This would save Albertans an additional $110 million in Budget 2010.

With all due respect to the former minister of agriculture, who is a good friend and was a very competent minister, we would suggest terminating the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency. Marketing beef is a role for private farmers, agricultural marketing organizations, and private business, not the government of Alberta. This correction will save roughly $50 million in 2010.

We would reduce the size of cabinet from 23 to 16 by combining, among others, Infrastructure with Transportation, Treasury Board with Finance and Enterprise, Municipal Affairs with Housing and Urban Affairs, just to name a few examples. This will save Albertans approximately $44 million.

We would end the direct subsidization of horse racing to the tune of $25 million per year.

Through retirement and natural attrition we would increase the government's worker-to-manager ratio from its current 4 to 1 ratio to 12 to 1, understanding that the ratio in the private sector can be as high as 25 to 1. Surely we can come halfway. This will save Albertans approximately $35 million this year alone.

We would cut the government's communications/Public Affairs budget in half, saving taxpayers $7 million.

We would end Executive Council's wasteful and misguided rebranding initiative and save $7 million this year alone.

Again, these proposals will reduce this government's real cash deficit of $7.55 billion by $4.67 billion to a much lower and more manageable deficit number of $2.88 billion. It is also important to note that these proposed adjustments would not cut the government services Albertans deem most important, such as health care, education, PDD, seniors, or public security. They would simply limit their departmental increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth.

More importantly, these adjustments make it possible to eliminate the province's real cash deficit by next year without the need to deeply cut core social programs. The PC government, even if all their rose-coloured projections pan out, will keep Alberta in a cash deficit position well past 2012, contrary to their claims of being back in the black by that time. It should also be clearly understood that these proposed adjustments do not take into account the billions more in potential savings that would be achieved through much-needed systemic reforms to our public health care system and other high-cost government social programs as well as by negotiating a much fairer equalization arrangement with Ottawa, both of which this PC government has utterly failed to accomplish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the issue of this government's hidden deficit in more detail. This was talked about in question period today. The government of Alberta is claiming a $4.7 billion deficit in 2010, but that is not the whole story. There is at least one large set of expenses that is not included in the budget deficit number. Total capital spending is projected to be $7.2 billion, yet only $4.4 billion in infrastructure spending is accounted for by the final deficit number. An additional $2.8 billion of capital investment in government-owned assets is not included in the government's quoted deficit number. It says so right on page 18 of their own budget document. Therefore, the government of Alberta's true cash deficit is a shocking $7.55 billion.

Perhaps I could show more proof. Besides the notation on page 18 I would also turn members' attention to page 67, where it specifically notes that the sustainability fund projected total from this year to next will decrease from $15 billion to $8 billion. That's a difference of $7 billion that is going out the door. In addition, another $1.5 billion in debt on top of that is also allocated in this budget. So that is $8.5 billion going out that we are not bringing in. That does not equal the $4.7 billion that the government is suggesting the cash deficit really is. There is a huge discrepancy there.

Now, I'm not saying that it's intentional or anything else, but I would hope this government eventually would admit that this year we are spending $8.5 billion more than we are taking in, and we are financing it through the sustainability fund to the tune of $7 billion and $1.5 billion in debt. This is totally unacceptable to Albertans. There is no excuse for this.

While our budget proposals that I've talked about would reduce this cash deficit substantially to roughly $2.88 billion, this PC government has been so fiscally irresponsible that it would be impossible to balance the books in cash terms without more aggressive cuts to public spending, which would not be prudent in today's market conditions and is something we would not recommend. I guess the question, Mr. Speaker, is: how did we get into this mess? Alberta has not been in a deficit position since Don Getty was Premier. Indeed, the market conditions in the world today are difficult, and many governments are struggling. We fully admit this and understand this. However, that is not a good enough excuse for the degree that we have fallen fiscally in this province.

It is clear that since the late Klein years and throughout the entire current administration this PC government has allowed spending to run completely out of control. I saw this consistent inability to restrain spending first-hand for two years. Every member of the government caucus knows full well that I along with others in the caucus that are still there today spoke out on this issue, me personally during my nomination race, the 2008 election, and for two years in the PC caucus. Finally, admittedly, I gave up on this caucus's ability to ever act in a fiscally responsible way. It was for that reason as well as the total lack of caucus democracy, which I spoke of in the media last month, that I left the PC caucus last month.

It was a frustrating experience. I could never seem to get the Premier's inner circle, including the Treasury Board president or the Deputy Premier, to understand the necessity of consistent, legislated fiscal restraint. Beginning in the 2003-04 budget year, if the government had merely restrained spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth, overall spending would have been approximately $8.3 billion less today than currently projected. Furthermore, following this path of restrained spending would have resulted in much larger surpluses, which could have been used to build savings in the heritage trust fund. In fact, had both Mr. Klein during his last four years and the Premier today exercised fiscal prudence and held total government spending growth to the rate needed to keep up with inflation plus population growth, Alberta would today be looking at a budget surplus of $3.9 billion – a surplus of $3.9 billion – rather than a record deficit.

Mr. Speaker, despite this government's failing record there is still time to turn this ship around. There are still fiscal conservatives in that government caucus. I know that first-hand. I'd ask them to speak up as we go through these budget deliberations.

We can and must restore Alberta to strong fiscal health, and the Wildrose Alliance caucus has a plan for doing just that. First, we must get our current cash deficit under control and retired by next year. Piling up billions in debt on the backs of future generations to dull the pain of a self-inflicted spending hangover is the height of irresponsibility. So, too, is expanding the size of government entitlement programs to the point where the only way to adequately fund such is to raise taxes or increase debt on future generations.

The budget deficit can be dealt with in the short term by implementing some of the fiscally responsible strategy that we've noted. For example, as discussed, spread the capital budget from three years to over four and a half years, and then keep that budget line for infrastructure consistent with the rate of inflation plus population growth. We currently spend about two times – two times – more than the next closest province in Canada on infrastructure. We don't need everything right now. We can wait another 18 months and be responsible to future generations. Bringing our level of capital spending down to slightly more than B.C., behind only Quebec and Newfoundland, would save future Albertans a great deal of inflation and unnecessary debt.

We also need to restrain health and education operational spending to a healthy and sustainable rate of increase, again being the rate of inflation plus population growth, at least until the time when spending in these areas falls more in line with other Canadian provinces. We're way, way out in front on that, and we're not getting the results that we need.

Over the long term the government of Alberta must begin to practise good old-fashioned fiscal restraint. Clearly, nonrenewable resource revenues are very volatile. In Alberta we have developed a reliance on these revenues to feed our spending habits. We need to reform our spending practices by, first, legislating a cap on year-over-year increases in government spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth. Instituting this measure, which has proven extremely effective in other jurisdictions, will ensure that spending is controlled through good times and bad while providing the funds necessary for successful core social programs and required infrastructure. It will also have the effect of curtailing the size and scope of government bureaucracy as departments look for innovative ways to provide more efficient and better services by reallocating existing resources rather than simply asking for more money in funding while perpetuating outdated and wasteful programs. In fact, if our federal and provincial governments of the day had controlled spending in this way starting in 2000, both would be running large surpluses this year despite being in the midst of a global recession.

I would hope that the hon. finance minister will do what he has repeatedly, over and over again, said needs to be done and what the Premier has even alluded to, and that is, in the case of the finance minister, to pass a legislated cap on spending. There is no legitimate excuse in this environment not to do that. [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for offering a five-minute question-and-comment period. Oh, my Lordy; three members. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and then the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was an interesting conversation that you just had, and I was listening. You talked about the Horse Racing Alberta piece. Many people don't understand that unless the horse-racing industry earns money, we don't get that money, and we don't get to keep our share of that money. It's based on an agreement where Horse Racing Alberta earns money, government keeps some, sends some back. I'd say to this member: are you going to say that the agreement that Horse Racing Alberta has with the government of Alberta should be broken, and then, in turn, we don't build the track in your riding and do that big investment in Airdrie? Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Anderson: What I'm saying is that being with the Solicitor General, who did a fantastic job in that department, one of the things I became aware of or looked into was this very issue. That $25 million is actually not from receipts or anything like that. It's strictly VLT money that goes directly to Horse Racing Alberta. If we're going to start doing that, let's start funding every society and community organization doing that. That's a one-off deal that was made by the previous Premier. I don't think it's something that we should brag about.

The Speaker: I think I'd better recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East first.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you are speaking about that debt, have you included the $100 million bond issue that will be coming out next week plus the interest that we aren't sure of what the percentage will be? Was that included in your comments?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, it was. That was part of the increased debt load that this government has been responsible for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I was wondering if the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had some other comments on nonrenewable resources and the impact that it would have on our long-term finances. Maybe he could expound a little bit more on that area.

The Speaker: Recognizing that other members want to participate as well, go ahead hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: I would love to do that. Thank you very much for that offer. I would say that the second component of a long-term fiscal plan surrounds the need to reduce our reliance on volatile nonrenewable resource revenues. I think that we can do this through the implementation of an aggressive heritage fund savings strategy. If we cap spending to inflation plus population growth, revenues would begin to outstrip the newly restricted spending levels, giving us the ability to invest a substantial portion of the resultant budget surpluses into Alberta's heritage fund. As annual interest earnings from the fund increase, they will not only replace a reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues; they will also allow us to gradually begin lowering personal and corporate income taxes, thereby attracting new businesses, entrepreneurs, and skilled labourers to our province.

This kind of sustainable long-term fiscal planning will accomplish the goal of diversifying our economy and will leave our children with less dependency on nonrenewable resource revenues along with even greater opportunities than we enjoy today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I just wonder if in your debt calculations you took into account the $250 million that was borrowed, I believe, from the Royal Bank. I may have the wrong financial institution, but I'd like to know if that was included in your debt calculations.

Mr. Anderson: It was. As we know, the government has gone from zero in this sort of debt financing when this Premier took over office to roughly $6 billion is what the projection is in 2012, and that would be a part of that number. It's a staggering number. There is no excuse to have plunged our books back into debt. To saddle future generations with this debt load is just beyond irresponsible, in my view.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of questions. Canadian and U.S. governments, governments all over the world have been borrowing heavily to stimulate their economies and help with the economic recovery. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere proposes to do the opposite here. I'm just wondering if he would have any data to show what kind of devastation removing $4.3 billion or $7 billion or whatever he's decided the deficit is would have on the Alberta economy.

Mr. Anderson: That's a very interesting way of putting it. As you know, the province of British Columbia has a huge stimulus program going right now for the Vancouver Olympics. Our proposal actually just takes our infrastructure level down, actually still above that massive British Columbia stimulus program. We're not talking about massive cuts, hon. member, we're talking about being reasonable, not thrashing a massive amount of debt onto the backs of future generations.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We're now going to move on.

I'd now like to recognize the leader of the ND opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to respond to Budget 2010. This is a fire brigade budget because the Premier is scrambling to put out the very flames he fanned with his attack on public health care. Health care is an area where Albertans have little patience for meddlesome politicking. Our party has known this for years, as we've been telling the government so for just about as long. In fact, any good that may come from the health care system in Budget 2010 is due in no small part to the efforts of the NDP to mobilize Albertans against yet another attempt by yet another Progressive Conservative government to cut and privatize our health care system. After the shine of these funding announcements fades – and judging by this governments' track record, it will – Albertans will see that this government is committed to only one thing: hanging onto their tarnished reputation at all costs.

Budget 2010 sets a dangerous precedent of spending that, while temporarily beneficial to some industries, is unsustainable in the long-term. Rather than prudent fiscal planning, it represents a spending scramble aimed at placating Albertans who have been outraged by this government's irresponsible initiatives to disrupt our health care system. Once again, this Conservative government has presented Albertans with a fiscal plan that offers disproportionate benefits to wealthy individuals and corporations. It does nothing to address what many Albertans see as a revenue problem in the form of extremely low royalties and ongoing handouts to the oil and gas industry. The government has created a permanent financial squeeze by giving away tax revenues to profitable corporations and the wealthiest Albertans.

In 2006 the revenue from the income tax structure was approximately $4.7 billion, $5.5 billion lower than it would have been if the previous tax system had been in place. Alberta's deficit is currently projected to be $4.7 billion, again something we could eliminate if we simply restored a progressive income tax in this province. Because this government has refused repeated recommendations to invest in the diversification of Alberta's economy, we have once again been presented with a budget that hinges on the predictability of the patently unpredictable revenue streams of oil and gas. Alberta has become overly dependent on volatile oil and gas revenues, particularly gas royalties. The failure to diversify our economy makes budgeting in Alberta even harder than it needs to be. As it is,

Budget 2010 contains questionable speculations on the strength of the Canadian dollar and banks on a rebound in natural gas prices despite economic forecasts that predict otherwise and a marked increase in natural gas reserves south of the border.

As with past budgets in this province Budget 2010 shows that the Conservative government has no plan to diversify Alberta's economy so that we may begin to rely once more on stable revenue streams. It is this kind of short-sighted gambit, that continues to force this government into positions it cannot possibly maintain, which has led to a perpetual string of broken promises for long-term funding initiatives. Budget 2010's plan to boost health care spending is just the latest in that string. The NDP has no faith that the long-term funding promises made in Budget 2010 will be kept, and I suspect many Albertans don't either. Mr. Speaker, the government's promises are simply unbelievable.

I can say this with confidence because the NDP is the only party to have travelled the province offering Albertans a chance to freely express their opinions and suggestions about health care reform. We're the only party to have put together a public document recording these sentiments, which we've called What Albertans Want. We were very successful in that campaign, Mr. Speaker, so successful, in fact, that the minister of finance has now begun to use the title of our report in his efforts to sell Budget 2010 to Albertans. Unfortunately for the government, there is one major problem with their attempt to adopt the title of our health report as their own: the Premier and his caucus don't actually know what it is Albertans want. Rather, they know that their efforts to privatize public health care in Alberta have failed yet again and that a backpedalling strategy may help stop the drubbing the Premier and his Tory party are taking in public opinion polls.

When it comes to understanding what Albertans really want, this government is making it up as they go, creating policy based on poll results rather than what is right for Alberta families. Take, for instance, the fact that neither the Premier, his finance minister, nor his health minister ever consulted openly with Albertans about health care reforms prior to implementing their ill-conceived plans. The NDP did hold such consultations and continues to do so. What we are hearing from Albertans, what the government fails to comprehend, is that in addition to protecting public health care, Albertans want a government that they can trust. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans cannot and do not trust this Conservative government to protect public health care. The Progressive Conservatives in this province have broken too many promises too many times for people to believe that they will honour the commitments for long-term funding made in Budget 2010.

Granted, some good may come from this budget and from the government's decision to stop poking a pointy stick into the health care beehive at least for the time being, but it will have been financed on the backs of Alberta's most vulnerable and poor citizens. Budget 2010 is disingenuous in that it proposes paying for a questionable commitment to health care by cutting services to the homeless, to the unemployed, to vulnerable children, and to students. I don't think that's what Albertans want, Mr. Speaker.

Consider the $36 million budget cut to the Children and Youth Services ministry. This includes a 7 per cent reduction in funding for programs aimed at child intervention. These programs are designed to identify children at risk of suffering dangerous and traumatic circumstances and to remove children from environments where they are being neglected or worse: physically, emotionally, or sexually abused. Mr. Speaker, this cut is perhaps the most cynical contained in Budget 2010, especially given the repeated tragic and, frankly, embarrassing failures of this ministry to protect vulnerable children in care.

It was the NDP, Mr. Speaker, that identified this ministry's inability to ensure proper and timely reporting of the state of children in care. It was the NDP who made public the documented evidence of children in care being forced into face-down restraints and being placed in foster care environments where caregivers knew that children may have been sexually abused by other children. It was the NDP who made this House aware of the tragic circumstances that led to the death and hospitalization of children in the care of this ministry. Given all of this sadness and the obvious need for more oversight and better care, it is unacceptable that Budget 2010 should shave a single penny from child intervention programs. Bankrolling lofty promises for health care funding by stripping away the protection of children in care is shameful, and I don't think that's what Albertans are looking for.

Consider the $112 million budget cut in the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs. Nothing could signal more clearly that this government has abandoned its 10-year plan to end homelessness. In fact, Budget 2010 represents a total commitment of less than one-third of the funding promised to achieve this objective. Programs designed to help the homeless make rent have been slashed from $144 million last year to $88 million this year and are falling to $75 million next year. Coupled with the minimum wage freeze and a $47 million cut to the Alberta Works social assistance program, cuts to the housing ministry will force more people out of their homes and onto the street. Mr. Speaker, we know that once people are forced onto the street, their next stop is often the health care system. This is yet another short-sighted cut that harms vulnerable people, and I don't think that's what Albertans are looking for.

Mr. Speaker, this government's hollow promises to fund health care also come at the expense of Alberta's workforce. Budget 2010 has taken $87 million from the Ministry of Employment and Immigration, the effects of which may be far reaching. In addition to the hundreds of Albertans who will lose their jobs, thousands more will suffer from this reduction in income supports, health benefits, and job training programs. At a time when Alberta's economy is desperately struggling to stay afloat and following a year in which nearly 80,000 jobs were lost in this province, such cuts will cause unnecessary suffering for working families.

Working Albertans want help during a recession in order to go back to school, to upgrade their training, and to get back to work. Immigrants coming to this province to join our workforce rely on government supports to ensure that educational training is affordable. All of these programs are aimed at bolstering our economy by ensuring that out-of-work Albertans get back on the job and new immigrants can contribute to our workforce while still feeding their families. Cutting the very services that are designed to cushion our economy in tough times makes no sense, and I don't think it's what Albertans are looking for.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the NDP is at best skeptical about this government's promise for a long-term funding commitment to health care. There have been too many previous broken promises, and I think Albertans are skeptical for good reason. Their long-term promise to end homelessness has been a sham. This government's long-term commitment to fund the Green TRIP program has been a sham. This government's long-term promise to cap tuition increases to the rate of inflation is a sham. And their repeated promises to give Albertans the health care system they want have all been a sham.

Rather than show that the Progressive Conservatives truly understand what Albertans want, Budget 2010 makes clear the fact that this government remains prepared to say anything in order to retain its grip on power. The Progressive Conservatives have a deplorable track record of broken promises. This gives Albertans little, if any, confidence in their latest promise for long-term, stable funding for health care.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans wanted a budget this year that showed a commitment to correct the mistakes of the past. They wanted to see an increase in health care funding, yes, but they certainly did not want it paid for by Alberta's homeless, our unemployed, our immigrant populations, and our vulnerable children. Moreover, they are justifiably skeptical that looking back five years in time from now, they will find that this government has kept its promise for predictable health care funding.

Mr. Speaker, this government has created an unsustainable situation primarily because it has walked away from billions of dollars in revenue that was paid when we had a fair and progressive income tax system in this province. But in order to benefit the wealthiest Albertans, they instituted a flat tax, that may cost this province's treasury $5.5 billion a year or more. Moreover, this government has cut corporate income tax by over a third in the last eight years, and let's not forget that corporations pay income tax not when they're losing money but only on their profits.

Finally, as we've said many times in this House, this government charges the lowest royalties in the world. What's happened is that we have become overly dependent on natural gas revenues, which are, in my view, in permanent decline because of the dramatic increase in the reserves south of the border. So we're not going to see the high, high prices for natural gas that we have seen. The dependence on natural gas revenues or royalties is in fact going to create a permanent financial situation for this province that is going to hurt the ability of this government to deliver the services that Albertans want. Mr. Speaker, we should not have to lay off nurses every time the price of natural gas goes down, yet that's what's happening in this province because the government has failed to be responsible in looking after its revenues in the long run.

That underlines, I think, the kind of problem that they have when they create a fire brigade budget, running from one fire to another. This year it's health care. Next year it might be education. The year after that it might be the environment or children's services. We can't continue in this way. We have to do better. We can do better. If the NDP proposals were accepted in this province, if we had an NDP government that put proper fiscal measures in place, we could protect the very services that Albertans treasure. That's something this government has failed to do, and I think they will pay a price for it, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to ask the member a question. He talked about how his proposals would result in an increase in oil and gas royalties, an increase in income tax. What other taxes would he raise to go through all of these grandiose entitlement programs that he talked about?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it very interesting that this hon. member talks about health care and public education as entitlement programs. I think it's very indicative of the mentality on the other side.

These are the birthrights of Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and for this minister, newly minted though he may be, to stand up and say that these are just entitlements and the NDP wants to increase taxes in order to pay for them is disingenuous at best. We are talking about taxes that existed in this province under a Progressive Conservative government. A previous iteration under Premiers Lougheed and Getty was a little more balanced in its approach and believed that the very wealthiest in society should pay their share. This government has cut taxes but for the wealthiest people of this province, and those are the corporate tax and the flat tax.

Mr. Speaker, we did a little experiment at the time. We ran some numbers. We took a bus driver – and I picked a bus driver because I used to be one, an actual, live bus driver in Calgary, I might say – and Ron Southern, and we estimated the tax savings of those individuals under the flat tax when it was first brought in. Now, Mr. Southern's savings were substantial. He received a tax savings of $60,000 according to the best estimates that we could make. The bus driver got about 50 bucks in tax savings on an annual basis. That illustrates very clearly the unfairness and the unbalanced nature of this government's tax cutting. They're cutting taxes on the wealthiest Albertans and on large corporations, and it is the poorest Albertans that have to pay for those cuts through cuts to their services.

So if you're unemployed and you want to take upgrading, they cut that program. You know, if you're unemployed and you want to get off welfare, they cut that program. They cut in half in this budget the number of new housing units that were going to be built, Mr. Speaker. So you can see how this Progressive Conservative government, in order to reward the wealthiest Albertans and the corporate sector in this province, will attack the poorest and most vulnerable, and they do it over and over and over again.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. minister for his question.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Yeah. Just one question for the hon. member. Taxes are being held or reduced world-wide in an effort to stimulate the world's economy and again get everybody back on the road to recovery. Of course, the recovery has already started, so this has been quite successful. I'm just wondering if the hon. member can think of a country, a government, a society that's taxed its way out of a recession and has taxed its way to prosperity.

Mr. Mason: You know, Mr. Speaker, that's an interesting question. I'm going to use the example of my friend the former Republican Governor of Alaska, Sarah Palin, whom I met with a couple of years ago. She increased the royalties paid by oil companies operating in Alaska by a substantial amount. At a hundred dollars a barrel Alaska collects 66 per cent more per barrel than Alberta does, and that's before this so-called competitiveness review that we're going to see, where we're going to try and cut royalties back to the bone. So if a gun-toting, Bible-thumping Republican can do it, what's wrong with this crew?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm curious. I wonder what the rest of the story is on that member's comments about Alaska and Sarah Palin. As I understand it, yeah, they may have collected more on royalties, but they also didn't have property tax or personal income tax. So one kind of offsets the other.

My question to that member: can you explain for the benefit of my constituents your philosophy, then, on why government should be spending taxpayer dollars to build housing for people that are supposedly low income or in need when a lot of my young constituents that are busting their butts with jobs have to try to build their own houses without any subsidy?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 8: Mr. Dallas]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to present the Wildrose Alliance's response to the government's Speech from the Throne. Before I go on, on behalf of the Wildrose Alliance caucus and our leader, Danielle Smith, I want to thank the Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong for his service to the people of Alberta. I had the opportunity to be with him at many events, as have so many people. I have truly enjoyed the pleasure of his company. I even had the opportunity to travel with him and his gracious wife, Mary, a couple of times. He is an outstanding ambassador for the province as the Queen's representative. He has been a tireless promoter of Alberta's values and its people. Albertans admire his courage, his sense of humour, and his warm heart.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize that a Speech from the Throne is intended to set a vision for what the government wants to do for a period of time. We just wish that this government had articulated a vision that actually did something to eliminate the deficit and get the province's finances back in the black. We also recognize that the mechanics of the government's plan will come before this House in the form of legislation, committee work, and ongoing announcements. We'll be a constructive, respectful opposition caucus. We'll support the government when it does the right thing. We'll support the government when it honours its commitments and promises that are in keeping with what Albertans want, and we'll hold them accountable as our constituents expect us to do.

In that spirit, Mr. Speaker, let me share with you and the members of this House a vision for this province that is based on meetings that we have been holding for months and months, miles and miles, in community after community. It is a vision based on pride in this great province, a firm belief that we are all better off when we are truly free. Albertans have shown a real desire for change. They want and need accountability from their elected officials. Our vision is for a province where government is proud of business and the free-enterprise system because it helps us all enjoy a higher quality of life and the freedom that we cherish.

Our vision is for a province where government actually listens to the concerns, the hopes, and the dreams of Albertans. Let's not forget, Mr. Speaker, that listening is far different from hearing, and that is something that many elected MLAs often forget. Our vision is for a government that actually represents the interests and values of Albertans instead of its friends and those connected through backroom operatives.

Our vision is for a government that puts agricultural policies in place to help those who have chosen to farm, those who have chosen to raise our food and those who have chosen to grow the products that we rely on. We want a government that gives the agricultural community the freedom to market and sell their own products as they see fit, to be able to have the freedom to do what is in the best interests of their family and business.

Our vision is for a government that understands that we serve at the pleasure of our constituents, the people who invest their hard-earned dollars in key services based on promises and commitments that we make here in this Assembly. Preston Manning used to say that the seats we represent belong to the people who have given us the honour to serve them here in this great Assembly. These seats do not belong to us as individual members.

In keeping with that spirit, Mr. Speaker, our vision is for a Legislature where every single member in this House is able to vote freely. If the people of my constituency don't support a particular policy or piece of legislation, I am elected by them and should be able to represent their interests first. Likewise, if I constantly do things that go against the wishes of my constituents, they should be able to gather signatures and have me recalled. Accountability to the people we represent should be every day, not just on election day, as this PC government likes it to be.

As we have tried to explain to you and to other members in this House, we also believe that a truly free House means that each member here must have the proper funding to do their job, to research important pieces of legislation, and to represent their own unique points of view. This should be a place where thoughtful and vigorous debate can take place even when we don't agree with our own party members or one another. That funding and the opportunity to participate should be afforded to every member even if your party has only one elected member.

Our vision is for a government that drives true health care reform instead of promising and passing the problem on with further delay and study. Access to a waiting list is not access to health care. There is so much we can do within the Canada Health Act to create efficiencies and savings that can be reinvested in front-line services, technologies that save lives, and medical research that helps make the diseases of today a thing of the past.

Our vision is for a province where municipalities receive long-term, sustainable sources of funding instead of having to go cap in hand to a government that will decide what the local priorities are. Those decisions should be left to locally elected officials.

Our vision is for a province where environmental stewardship goes hand in hand with economic development and where we can harness the potential of both. Albertans share a unique connection to the environment, the land and the water. We want to do everything we can to make sure that we teach our children and grandchildren the benefits of being good environmental stewards so they can have those special places that we enjoy today, that they are there for them, their children, and their grandchildren.

Our vision is for a province where people are not afraid to speak out over fear of losing a grant for their municipality or a government contract or even their position within the government. True freedom only exists when people can speak out. True freedom only exists when government listens and when members of the House are able to speak freely. To do this, all members must have access to proper resources. They need to have the ability to do their work for the people and the views they represent. True freedom for Albertans can only be realized when the power is back in the hands of the voter through recall and other democratic reforms such as citizens' initiative referendums.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in a very competitive world. We cannot afford to drop the ball as the world struggles to recover from this credit debt fallout. It is true that we went into this recession better off than others, but that does not mean that we can continue with this reckless spending. We need a plan, and we need to prioritize our spending. We need to make the infrastructure plan public. Both the people and the municipalities need to know. Industry can plan, and the people can expect the projects to come online in a timely and orderly sequence. The yo-yo spending in infrastructure with unreasonable timelines has cost the taxpayers dearly. The on-again, off-again projects like the police academy in Fort Macleod are wrong. They've announced it. They need to follow through with their commitments.

What this government doesn't understand is that long-term, stable funding is essential. We made the cuts in the '90s and had this good fortune and discipline to control the spending, but the spendaholics have gotten their hands on the chequebooks and do not realize or acknowledge the fact that what we spend we must pay.

This is only a portion of what the Wildrose Alliance vision is for Alberta. I'll bring my comments to a close, but please be assured that the Wildrose Alliance will be here to support the government when it makes sense but will hold the government accountable when it goes off track. We hope that we are supporting them more often than not because that means they are in step with the real values of Albertans, not the imaginary values and priorities that are whispered into their ears by friends of this government. Mr. Speaker, we are here to represent the people we serve. It is time for this government to get it right. Albertans deserve nothing less.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll call on the next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I get into discussing the merits of the throne speech, I would first like to thank the Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong, and his wife, Mary, for five remarkable years of service to the Alberta people. On a number of occasions I have had the pleasure of having dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Kwong and got to know and appreciate first-hand their commitment to this great province.

Interestingly, my first brush with the greatness of the so-called China Clipper came in 1977 as a seven-year-old playing hockey for the Varsity White Warriors. On a chilly October evening we were playing a game of hockey on the outdoor community rink on Varsity Drive, right beside the Varsity Community Centre and next to the Varsity Acres school. Mr. Kwong's son played on the rival team from the Triwood Community Association. His son's name was Randy, and man, could that kid skate. Following our first game against Triwood on the open ice, I asked my dad who the really fast skater on the Triwood team was. My dad told me his name, which, as indicated, was Randy, and interestingly Randy went on to play for my junior hockey alma mater, the Calgary Canucks, and received a hockey scholarship to Harvard.

After we talked about what a great skater Randy was, my dad then asked me whether I saw the rather small, spectacled man standing watching the ice time in the corner of the rink. I said yes, and from there my dad told me the story of the China Clipper, the story of how a small of stature, slight of build man who once played for the Edmonton Eskimos dominated the Canadian Football League with his passion and simple love of the game. Mr. Kwong was more than a football player. He ran a successful dry cleaning company, a successful real estate company, held many positions, including being president of the Calgary Stampeders organization and was a large part of the Calgary volunteer community.

More impressive than all of this, though, is the fact that over the seven or eight years of playing against his son, I can't remember a game where he wasn't present quietly in the corner of the rink overlooking the proceedings. To my memory he never missed a game.

Truly, the Lieutenant Governor is a great man, and again I would like to thank the hon. Mr. and Mrs. Kwong for their service to the Alberta people. They will be missed.

Moving on, let's discuss the throne speech. As you are aware in this House, this has been my third opportunity to listen to a Speech from the Throne delivered by this government. In fact, I think it's the 39th consecutive throne speech given by the Progressive Conservative government. Again, much like the last two throne speeches I have listened to, they have contained glowing reviews of the programs, policies, and enactments of this government. And why not? If they're not going to toot their own horn, who is? The truth is nobody because right now the people of Alberta are questioning whether or not this Progressive Conservative government of Alberta, or as my friend calls it, the socially regressive, fiscally irresponsible government of Alberta, is making decisions in the best interests of Albertans for the long run. Sadly, I believe the answer is no.

At the end of the day everything we do in this Legislature should be about building a healthy and vibrant life for ourselves and our children. As I see it, Alberta needs a few things to ensure that we live the best lives that we can and that our children live even better lives, and it is the government's job to help deliver those things. The government's throne speech failed to show any vision or direction but simply pretended that all was well.

The current government has been in power for over 40 years, and they pretend they've done great things. What is their true legacy? As the throne speech reminded us, yes, they paid off a debt, a debt that was incurred by them. Yes, the tax rate is relatively low. But what else is there, really? The answer is, unfortunately, not much.

This year Alberta will run another huge deficit. At this rate we'll eat through the entire sustainability fund. As much as they may claim that Alberta will continue to be debt free, these Alberta bonds that the throne speech lauded are nothing but debt. Make no bones about it; the government has returned Albertans to a position of debt and is well on its way to eating through our modest reserves.

A healthy and vibrant society cannot exist without a healthy and vibrant economy. In Alberta for the present term our economic welfare will be directly linked to the energy sector. It is essential that Alberta's energy companies are competitive and have the opportunity to make an honest buck. The throne speech spoke at length about Alberta's competitiveness. It spoke about innovation. It spoke about education and advanced technology. It repeated the same promises that Albertans have heard for years. It promised changes. But this government refuses to release its competitiveness review and tell us what those changes will be. I'll believe that the government is actually going to change things for the better when I see it, but I hope I see it soon.

Alberta's economy is hurting, and the government's constant tinkering with the royalty structure has done nothing but aggravate the effects of the recession. Having said that, the energy industry has a responsibility to ensure that all Albertans share fairly in its prosperity. Yes, they must produce wealth, but they cannot shirk or avoid their environmental obligations.

The throne speech promised that Alberta's health care system would become "more patient focused." This begs the question of what it was focusing on if it was not the patient beforehand. The bottom line is that Albertans must have access to the best health care available. There will always be a push and a pull as to what the precise level of care should be. What I do know is this: it is a person's need and not their bank book that should determine their access to the system.

In looking closely at our system of health, the problem is not money. It is poor management. The government has and continues to throw Alberta's health care system into disarray, the latest with the creation of a superboard that no one asked for, a move with no publicly available study showing its necessity. Clearly, the superboard has been a colossal failure and a colossal waste of money.

The vitality of the energy sector, health care, and the education system are major Alberta issues. The government has a significant role to play in these areas. Let me make it clear that I do not believe that the best government is a government which governs least. It is not a question of big government or small government; it's a question of good government. I am committed to good government. It is clearly past the time for political and economic reckoning in this province.

I was born in 1969 at the Holy Cross hospital. For almost 40 years I've been fortunate to call Alberta my home. My life has been good, and I say that sincerely. I have very few complaints. I certainly hope my two nephews, Marshall and Jackson, will have the same opportunities I did. Government must understand that they have an obligation not only to the present but also to the future. Opportunities squandered are opportunities lost. I believe we still have time if we wish to take control of our future and ensure that my nephews and your children and grandchildren can continue to live in a province that is not only the envy of the rest of Canada but the world. We can do that.

I sat through the throne speech thinking to myself that it all seemed too good to be true. Some of you might remember that last year I stood here and pointed out that the government's throne speech reminded me of the fictional paradise Shangri-La. This year is not much different. I couldn't help but think the government was just pretending that all was well. The government was pretending that there were few problems, pretending that those problems didn't exist and that the problems that did were just not this government's fault.

In fact, when I was thinking about giving this address to this august House, quite coincidentally a song came on the radio that I had not heard in quite some time. It was called The Great Pretender, that was originally done by The Platters and later on covered by Freddie Mercury. The song goes like this: oh, yes, I'm the great pretender, ooh ooh, pretending that I'm doing well, ooh ooh; my need is such, I pretend too much; I'm lonely, but no one can tell. It continues: oh yes, I'm the great pretender, ooh ooh, adrift in a world of my own, ooh ooh; I play the game, but to my real shame you've left me to dream all alone, ooh ooh.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to offer a response to the government's great fiction.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to stand in the House today and reply to the Speech from the Throne. We all know that we have been faced with the most challenging economic circumstances since the Great Depression. For Alberta to be in the position it is today, ahead of all other jurisdictions in Canada, is truly a result of the hard work of all Albertans. It is important to remain optimistic in these times and keep thinking of the opportunities that lie ahead of us as we emerge from this economic turbulence.

I want to touch on a few issues that highlight our province's bright future, our competitive economic position, our clean energy future, and a health care system that is designed to meet the challenges of an aging population. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is well known for its competitive advantage for those who live and conduct business in our province. Alberta is truly in an enviable position when it comes to economic competitiveness. For example, we have the lowest tax regime in Canada. This is something our government values and is very proud of. We understand that taxpayers' dollars are best left in the hands of taxpayers. While other governments are raising taxes, it is our Premier that has made a pledge to all Albertans that under his watch there will be no tax increases. What this means is that Albertans will continue to benefit from paying no provincial sales tax, a low flat-rate income tax, and will continue to have the highest personal income tax exemption in Canada.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, Albertans also benefit from the foresight of our government, particularly in that our province does not have any net debt. In fact, as many Albertans are aware and proud of, we have billions in cash reserves, savings, and other assets due to the hard work of all Albertans. It is this competitive economic environment which has provided a solid foundation which will lead Alberta to make a strong recovery from the global economic recession. It is this competitive edge that has brought so many opportunities to our province. In my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar alone I was pleased to host our Premier and our agriculture minister for the opening of the Alberta Rhodiola Rosea Growers Organization processing plant in October. We also had the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development at the Bio-Mile opening in Drayton Valley.

These are, of course, only a few examples. Folks are excited about the opportunities that await them in Alberta. It is also important to note that we are competitive in the resource sector. Alberta is richly blessed with important resources such as agriculture, forestry, and energy. This government is committed to ensuring that our resource sector continues to thrive, which will be reflected in Alberta's competitiveness review. This commitment is reflected in Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This legislation will ensure that Alberta remains as the most competitive jurisdiction in North America.

In addition to the prosperity of the resource sectors we will also work towards value adding these resources right here in our province of Alberta. I'm happy to say that found within my constituency is an innovative opportunity for the value-added sector. As I mentioned, the Drayton Valley Bio-Mile has received both federal and provincial government support because we believe in diversifying our economy. We know that it is an important step in the right direction for our province. The economic boost to the region surrounding Drayton Valley is incredible, and I look forward to seeing the benefits not only for the economy but for our environment and the forest sector as well.

Our government remains committed to supporting a world-class integrated petrochemical hub that will upgrade the raw materials from the oil sands before it is delivered to markets. It is our resource sector that will continue to attract investment and help meet the energy demands of North America throughout the 21st century. However, clean energy is also crucial to this province's future. Albertans are proud stewards of our land, our air, our water, and this government will support their efforts. Energy conservation is one area where all Albertans can play a role. As parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy I look forward to working with the minister and several industry players to be involved in these important initiatives.

We also need to continue supporting efforts like advanced technology such as carbon capture and storage. Technology will play a major role in ensuring we meet our environmental objectives. It is technology like carbon capture that we can use here at home to reduce our GHGs while at the same time enhancing resource extraction, adding many years to fields like the Pembina field in my constituency, which equates to jobs and a return on the investment many times over. This serves a dual benefit of ensuring environmental responsibility and an economic advantage.

Mr. Speaker, right here in Alberta we have an innovative research and development sector that can advance technology of this nature. This is complemented by the fact that we will be able to export this technology to the rest of the world. Alberta has always led the way in environmental stewardship. Through clean energy incentives, stringent carbon reduction targets, and innovations like carbon capture and storage it is Alberta that is acting on climate change and not just talking about it.

Mr. Speaker, another issue that is of great importance to my constituents and, indeed, to all Albertans is health care. However, as the Speech from the Throne indicated, we need to achieve better results for the money we spend for all Albertans. For the monetary value we invest in our health care system, I believe all Albertans expect to get the care they need where they need it regardless of where they live. Over the past year we have made some significant changes to our health care system which will provide a solid foundation to build upon. I know that this government will continue to support and improve our health care system through its commitment to a stable five-year funding arrangement for health care.

This is important because with an aging population we will continue to see additional pressures placed upon our health care system. We need to ensure that our system is properly established to provide high quality of care for all Albertans and especially our seniors because they deserve to have the options to age in place together and not be separated, as my parents had to be after 50 years of marriage. That's why I'm proud to say we are committed to enhance the quality of seniors' care in Alberta.

This government has made considerable improvements in pharmaceuticals by lowering the price of generic drugs. We have also expanded the role of pharmacists in client care as a part of this government's strategy on pharmaceuticals. With the funds generated through the Alberta capital bonds, we will be able to improve and build even more seniors' residences to ensure that those who helped build this province receive the high-quality care they deserve and that they may stay together.

Mr. Speaker, I am so proud that our Premier has committed to ensuring a high quality of life for all Albertans. While the global economic realities that we face today challenge our resolve, the spirit of Albertans will continue to shine through. Through our competitive economic foundation, our clean energy future, and our world-class public health care system we can be assured that under the leadership of our Premier and this government we will continue to have a province that is the greatest place on earth to live, work, and raise our families.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to acknowledge and thank the hon. Lieutenant Governor, who has served this province with integrity and passion and also a very good sense of humour. His service and Mrs. Kwong's will be forever remembered and greatly missed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege to stand before the Assembly today and reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for Alberta. Before I begin expressing my thoughts about the Speech from the Throne, I would like to recognize the hon. Lieutenant Governor for his tireless, dedicated commitment to public service and personal passion for our great province. Over the past five years as Her Majesty's representative in Alberta the hon. Lieutenant Governor's exemplary and distinguished service has been greatly appreciated, valued, and will be wholeheartedly missed by many. His example remains, and he has set a standard for all of us in two crucial ways, by meeting challenges and capitalizing on opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, those are the two things that we need to do in building the next Alberta in the coming years. To say that Albertans and their government are facing a time of considerable challenge is to seriously understate the case. This is unquestionably a time of substantial volatility, complexity, and uncertainty in so many aspects of our lives. In terms of the economy together we have been working hard to help Albertans weather the first great financial storm of the 21st century, and it has hit hard. The winds may have diminished, but we honestly don't know for sure that the storm has passed.

Our neighbour to the south and our biggest trading partner is at this time considering a proposal for a budget deficit of one and a half trillion dollars, a figure that almost defies understanding and one that has made many people justifiably nervous. There is not the slightest doubt that if our friends to the south can't effectively work their way through the daunting economic and financial problems, our challenges are going to become more complicated.

Much of this economic volatility comes from the fact that Alberta is deeply embedded in an increasingly globalized and competitive economy. When international natural gas prices recently fell dramatically because of new technologies for recovery combined with an economic downturn, Alberta could not avoid being affected. Mr. Speaker, that is simply not going to change in the years to come. By all accounts these international forces are going to continue to shrink our world, and Albertans will either be buffeted by these forces or will emerge to find ways to benefit from them. That is the critical point. We need to have a deep understanding of the changing landscapes around us, and we have to find the opportunities that are embedded in these challenges. Make no mistake: there are opportunities in abundance.

Right now efforts of creating global strategies are more apparent than ever. As we are setting directions and discussing and weighing options, in the booming economies of India and China entrepreneurs and supportive governments are looking for and finding ways to profit from changing situations in the midst of all this volatility and uncertainty. Around the planet countries such as Brazil, Russia, and new European member states also have emerging economies, and together over the long term they could be the future drivers of global demand. Mr. Speaker, with the assets and advantages of this province there is simply no reason why the people of Alberta should not be leading the way in taking advantage of those opportunities, developing effective competitive strategies, and improving the quality of lives in the process.

We are the only major political jurisdiction on this side of the world that has the ability to see our way through the worst economic circumstance since the Great Depression of the 1930s yet not saddle our children and youth, including future generations, with a debt they played no part in making. We may experience some short-term inconveniences, Mr. Speaker, in regards to our standard of living. However, all our resources and our people have allowed us to become not only a debt-free political jurisdiction in the western hemisphere but one of the few that has cash reserves in a sustainability fund to draw upon.

Also, there is no doubt that people will no longer accept a trade-off between economic advancement and the integrity and well-being of our environment, and we need to seize the opportunity to lead the way in that regard. We need to ask ourselves a key question. Why should Alberta not be leading the way in finding the methods of meeting energy needs in the ways that are consistent with the long-term health of our communities and planet? Why should we not be the ones who benefit from the inevitable profits that will flow to the jurisdictions which develop these approaches, that we know will be coming because the world is increasingly demanding them? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans are in a perfect position to lead the way. Albertans have the expertise, the experience, the powerful, resilient, and adaptable entrepreneurial and enterprising spirit which leads us time and time again toward greater economic growth and stronger prosperity.

This is the lifeblood, Mr. Speaker, of our local economies that we value and are so proud of, which was built over the years and continues to lay a strong foundation for years to come. We have a government that knows how to respond, add value, and be supportive and knows when to stay out of the way and let the hard-working hands of the people of our province do what they are capable of achieving. These key principles will continue to serve us well as challenges are presented during these tough and turbulent times. Also, through the strong leadership of our Premier we will continue to build on the many strengths of this remarkable province.

Mr. Speaker, our province's strengths and assets are enormous, but it is essential to recognize that they are grounded in the diversity of the gifts and talents of our people. In a time of unrelenting globalization the fact that Alberta's people come from every corner of the globe is increasingly a major part of our unique advantage. The people who have come to this province are by definition risk takers, or they would have stayed where they were born. It is precisely this risk taking that is going to be essential in building the next Alberta.

It has become part of conventional wisdom to say that ingenuity, innovation, and entrepreneurialism will be the key to our success now and into the future, and in this case conventional wisdom has it right. Those things will require above all else a first-rate system of lifelong learning founded in a strong public education system that takes seriously the central task of developing that potential of every one of our children, youth, and adult learners. It is the foundation for a prosperous, inclusive, and democratic society, and we should be unrelenting in our commitment and investment in this regard.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is building on a strong foundation, but we need to do more if we are to ensure that the unique gifts and talents of every child and youth are fully developed. We are fully committed to doing so, given that education remains a top government priority.

In addition to a well-educated population, we want and need healthy people. Mr. Speaker, the opportunities in these areas of health and learning are among the most promising strategies for the years ahead. If we identify wise approaches to health promotion and prevention of disease and illness, we can save enormous amounts in our health care system and at the same time have far healthier individuals, families, and communities. Improvements in health directly support increases in education attainment, labour productivity, and economic growth. Healthy workers live longer, are more productive, and are less likely to be absent from work due to illness. Mr. Speaker, we need a comprehensive approach to health and learning, and I believe we are firmly headed in that direction.

Also, we need to be thoughtfully engaged in building the next Alberta for the foundation is strong to build upon. The future is unwritten, and I am proud to say that the people in our province together with this government are going to meet the challenges as presented and with confidence will capitalize on all the opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, as the people's representative for Edmonton-Decore I have never been more hopeful about our province and its future. It is truly an honour and a privilege to join hands with Albertans to create the next chapters of our great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne that was presented in this House last week. I would like to commend the hon. Lieutenant Governor for delivering this speech and providing us with a vision for this upcoming legislative session. I would like to thank His Honour for his valuable service to this province. I am pleased and honoured to represent the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks and would like to take this opportunity to thank my constituents for their continued support and their faith in allowing me to represent their interests in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I concur with much of what my colleagues have said in terms of the priorities and expectations voiced on behalf of their constituencies. These are shared by many in Strathmore-Brooks as well. Of course, I would like to add some comments of my own. Again, I would like to thank His Honour for presenting a speech that I believe resonates with many of my constituents in Strathmore-Brooks in that he has enumerated the challenges we face with optimism and direction for the future, determined to emerge from these difficult times even stronger than before.

In my constituency, Mr. Speaker, as in every region in this province, access to health care services is a priority. My constituency is served by three local hospitals in Brooks, Strathmore, and Bassano. I'm encouraged by this government's commitment to improve the delivery of health care services all across this province. Secure and stable funding and a vigorous focus on better performance in key areas such as wait times and access are important to my constituents. There is an urgent need to restore obstetric services to the Brooks hospital. Not only are families facing the cost in convenience and rise of risk of extra travel, but services in outlying areas are also strained by higher than anticipated patient numbers. This is a situation where Albertans deserve and expect better and one that I am confident will be resolved in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the important contribution of our health care professionals to our communities. Certainly, without their dedicated service to our system and to Albertans our health care system would not be what it is today. We appreciate their dedicated service.

The completion of the new Sagewood garden in Strathmore later this year will include 60 new assisted living spaces for seniors and 40 seniors' affordable housing units providing care options close to home for many seniors in the Strathmore area. This initiative is one that is very important to my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour has focused our attention on the importance of improved competitiveness in a global economy. Improved competitiveness is important to attract and sustain investment in both the energy and agricultural sectors in this province. These two sectors, energy and agriculture, are the two most significant drivers of the economy in my constituency, and both have suffered losses in these tough economic times. The results of the competitiveness review are important to my constituents involved in the energy service sector, who count on Alberta's stability as a good place to invest.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1, the competitiveness review, sends a signal that is important to industry and entrepreneurs in this province. Every day Albertans are impacted by the cost and inconvenience of excessive regulation: energy, agriculture, health care, education, transportation, environment, food service. Every jurisdiction in this province can benefit from the improved performance a more appropriate regulatory regime will deliver. I say that with confidence from discussion with my colleagues, who have experience in a broad range of these areas as well. That is not to say that we abandon our high regulatory standards, but I'm encouraged that this government can and will deliver improved efficiency by reducing excessive and ineffective regulation, and I'm motivated by the resolve my colleagues share to ensure that we deliver in this area, where the rubber hits the road, so to speak. My constituents are looking for common-sense solutions to complex problems, and I believe that smart regulation delivers on that concept.

The principle of competitiveness is important to Alberta taking its rightful place in Canada and the world. As government does its part to build the framework for greater efficiency, Albertans will succeed in domestic and international markets. This matter of competitiveness is also very important to agricultural producers in my constituency. Beef producers, in particular, have been burdened with increased costs of excessive regulation. Canada has an international reputation as having one of the very best animal health and food safety production systems in the world, and it is important to Alberta producers that we maintain that. However, I believe that regulatory scrutiny could also deliver some cost efficiencies to livestock producers as well. I'm pleased to see this government addressing this important initiative of improved competitiveness, and I look forward to working as part of a team, led by our Premier, to ensure that we deliver in this area.

To quote His Honour, Mr. Speaker: "Our world may have changed, but our people have not. They remain hard working and innovative, entrepreneurial and compassionate, and, most of all, confident about our province and its future." That reflects the attitude and spirit of my constituents as well. I'm thinking of small business owners who have stretched their resources to keep as many people working as possible through these difficult times and of the rig and oilfield service workers who are working less hours at reduced pay to make ends meet, employers and employees working together to weather difficult economic times. I'm thinking of health care professionals who have brought forward proactive and innovative suggestions to deliver seniors' care and restore obstetrics care to our communities through Alberta Health Services' Action Your Ideas initiative, people working together to solve problems.

Mr. Speaker, the strong fiscal position this province enjoys is also reason for optimism. Alberta's low tax rate is good for individuals and companies. The opportunity to draw on the $17 billion sustainability fund at a time when most jurisdictions are increasing their debt puts Alberta at a distinct advantage into the future. Timely investment in important infrastructure projects keeps many Albertans working, meets the needs of a growing population, and helps ensure ongoing efficiency. Projects like water systems and fire halls, that support municipalities, can facilitate future growth. Community halls and sports facilities can enhance the quality of life in the communities of Strathmore-Brooks. I think the new Brooks centennial arena, which will celebrate a grand opening next Saturday, February 20, a project that has been ongoing for a number of years, is a delight to see completed.

Mr. Rodney: Are you going to sing O Canada?

Mr. Doerksen: I could do that, my colleague.

Mr. Speaker, as I reflect on His Honour's speech and the positive contribution our Lieutenant Governor has made to this province, I am optimistic about our future, optimistic about the opportunity we have, building on past successes, to establish the framework that will ensure continued success in the future. This House is about people, people who want to create opportunities for success, people who want quality and efficient health care services and safe, secure communities for their children.

I look forward to this legislative session and look forward to working with all of you toward the future success of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the member opposite actually a couple of questions if I might. I wonder if you could explain and perhaps use examples of how we can cut down red tape. One of the areas that is particularly of concern to me is people who are doing self-managed care for persons with developmental disabilities. What has happened is that the paperwork has increased and increased and increased, and to me that's red tape. So perhaps you could explain if that's going to be looked at.

Then the other thing was on the results that we get from our livestock. Do you or do you not sort of support the COOL, which would open up some very strong niche markets for Alberta beef?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for those questions. I think you raise some good points, particularly with regard to the regulatory burden and the reduction of red tape. I think that's a matter where every member of this House could probably tell some stories as the member across the way has. We all have individual experiences where we'd like to see red tape reduced. I think that that's a very practical application as a part of what I see us addressing through this review of regulations in a broad range of areas. Certainly, with regard to the health care example that you've raised, I think there's opportunity to address those types of things in a whole range of areas.

With regard to the livestock question you raised and the matter of COOL legislation down in the United States, I think there are opportunities for niche market development. Certainly, the livestock industry has addressed that by trying to take advantage of niche opportunities in the U.S. and domestically as well, but there's no question in my mind that border restrictions in North America are inappropriate. Where they increase costs of production, they're unnecessary because we have very similar standards with regard to animal health and food safety. We need to do whatever we can to ensure that borders are open in North America, and access to other markets is based on sound science, not political initiatives, which we know is the case very often. This particular piece of legislation is difficult for Alberta producers.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. If I might just carry that conversation forward. One of the areas that I look at when I think of COOL and some of the things they are doing is in terms of food safety, and I look at labels. I've become a label reader. When I look at labels, I have absolutely no idea where that beef has come from. In fact, we know that beef is labelled coming from the States into Ontario, but in fact it's Alberta beef. So it sort of goes this way, but they have no idea. I'm sure that if their choice was to eat corn-fed American or barley-fed Canadian, I think their choice would probably be barley-fed Canadian, but how are they going to know if it isn't labelled?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that in most countries around the world origin labels are the standard in beef production. With regard to the movement of beef in North America the fact that beef comes up into eastern Canada at times is partly a matter of the market. My goal would be to have Alberta beef and Canadian beef producers – and they do – sell to the highest bidder at every opportunity, and that implies that we have open access to markets.

The matter of origins of beef. There's a whole set of initiatives to differentiate product, and country of origin labelling is not the only one. More successfully, often, are brand products that come with a guaranteed standard. I think that's a more effective way of marketing product, whether that goes into the U.S. or into eastern Canada.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. Seeing no one, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to rise today and join my colleagues in supporting the Speech from the Throne as I'm excited to share with you the concerns and hopes of my constituents in West Yellowhead. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's words filled me with renewed confidence for the future and clearly painted a picture about where we are today and where we should be going.

Before I dive into the merits of the speech itself, I would first like to take this time to thank His Honour for both his words and his years of dedicated service. In my mind the Speech from the Throne centred on the need to maintain a balance between economic development and care for those most in need. After all, this is the same balance that has guided Alberta for years, and it is one that has resulted in Alberta being one of the most enviable jurisdictions in the world.

Mr. Speaker, to this end, I would like to talk about two industries that are important not only to the economy of my constituency of West Yellowhead but to the province as a whole. I speak, of course, of forestry and coal mining.

Now, it is true that the forestry sector has been negatively impacted in recent years. We all know the effects of issues like softwood lumber and the mountain pine beetle. To this end, I am pleased that the Lieutenant Governor confirmed our commitment to combatting the pine beetle not only for the impact it has on the forestry sector but for the damages it causes to our world-class parks system.

In addition, I am also excited about Bill 1 and the development of the Alberta Competitiveness Act, which I believe will help address the pressures facing this important industry. After all, if we can ensure that Alberta remains competitive on the international stage, we can ensure that Alberta's forestry sector remains internationally viable.

We can also ensure that Alberta's forest industry has access to markets it needs to sell its world-class products. This is why I am pleased to hear His Honour's mention of creating a western economic partnership. Mr. Speaker, this partnership proposes to include the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan and would create the largest free trade and investment market in Canada. In addition, these three provinces would work together on a joint trade mission to the eastern Asian markets. The potential benefits this mission has to Alberta's forestry sector are staggering. These are large and developing economies, and as they expand, they will need wood products and building materials. If we can get in on the ground floor in these economies, the economic benefit to the forestry sector could be impressive.

The second key industry I would like to talk about is one that I have considerable experience with, and that's coal. The issues confronting the coal industry are not market related but, rather, deal with the environment. That is why I'm pleased to hear the Lieutenant Governor mention Alberta's amazing technological advances in environmental management, most notably in carbon capture and storage, or CCS. Mr. Speaker, CCS has many potential benefits to Alberta's coal industry. With this technology in place not only would Albertans have access to an affordable source of energy but a source of energy that is mindful of its carbon emissions. Compounding this, with CCS in place the emissions from coal production could be used to make conventional oil and gas recovery more effective. CCS is truly an accomplishment Albertans should be proud of, and I'm glad that His Honour mentioned it.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to highlighting his commitment to maintaining and expanding our key industries, I'm also excited that the throne speech addressed our commitment to maintaining care for those in need. Specifically, I applaud our government's commitment to seniors. Not only this, but I'm happy that we've created a system where every Albertan can invest in the welfare of its aging population while earning a financial return. I'm speaking, of course, of the introduction of Alberta capital bonds.

As His Honour stated, capital bonds will only be available in Alberta and only to Albertans, and all the proceeds raised through the sale of these bonds will be used to build accommodations for Alberta's seniors. This could include continuing care and supportive living facilities. Mr. Speaker, this is a great idea. We are creating a system that recognizes that Alberta's population is aging; we are creating a system that realizes that as Albertans age, they require different levels of care and different facilities; and we are creating a system that supports our past while at the same time allowing us to save for the future. This is an example of the kind of leadership that recognizes that even though the economic situation may change, the needs of people do not.

Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank His Honour for his encouraging words. I would like to thank him for the recognition he has given to two key industries not only in my constituency but in Alberta as a whole, forestry and coal. I would like to thank him for highlighting this government's commitment to those in need, specifically our seniors.

In my mind, the strength of Alberta has always been measured in how it addresses the needs of a world-class economy while at the same time providing care to its vulnerable citizens. Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne highlighted this strength and, in my mind, painted a clear picture of the path Alberta will take to maintain its prosperity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. VanderBurg: I appreciate the member's comments. In your riding, like in mine but especially in your riding, there is an abundance of coal and opportunities for coal in the future energy business and others. How do you see the coal business developing in your riding and my riding?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that, you know, there are a number of projects going on. As we know, we do have an abundance of coal. Under the current mining methods a lot of it's not economically feasible. But, of course, the Swan Hills project, for example, where we're drilling down a thousand metres and bringing syn-fuels out of the ground and actually having a very small footprint is, I think, a great future for the industry. Of course, I look in my riding along the eastern slopes of the Rockies, where we've mined at Cardinal River and Gregg River. There are still coal reserves there. They're down deep, but we know that there's lots of methane gas in that area. I think that through some of the new technologies that are taking place, it's going to make those areas viable again to go back and mine but, again, with a very small footprint and also create jobs and bring money into the government coffers.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that answer. I think it's interesting for people back home to understand that they have an MLA that understands the coal industry but also an MLA that understands the forest industry.

I wanted to know a little bit about your views on some of the industries in your communities and mine that are so affected by the pine beetle. What do you see over the next year? Especially coming out of the throne speech, there was a little mention about pine beetle. What are you projecting as opportunities because of an abundance of fibre that may hit our ridings?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne said, our ridings depend on forestry. We have some of the largest FMAs between the two of us in all of Alberta. With the mountain pine beetle, we have areas where up until last summer we had no pine beetle, and they're now being affected, and it causes great concern in the industry. But with the wood I think we have three options. One, we just leave it alone. The second one is that you burn it. The third one, I think, is that you cut it and you make use of it. In talking to a number of the forest industries in both our ridings, I think there are great opportunities for biofuels. I know that in talking to a number of the forest industries, they're looking at that. It's a way to use the wood that's there now but also give them the chance to diversify their industry.

I think that, you know, we have to look at the tree as a whole tree, not just a two-by-four. For example, I'll talk of Foothills Forest Products in Grande Cache, which I'm very familiar with. One of their biggest products right now is wood pellets. You know, they're doing their conventional two-by-fours and their panelling, but their waste they're turning into wood pellets. Right now the only thing that's keeping that mill going is their wood pellet operation, where they're selling not only in Canada and the U.S. but also into Europe and using wood pellets for not only wood-burning stoves but also, which I found interesting, for horses. In a lot of the European market they're actually using the wood pellets instead of hay to keep their barns clean.

I think that there are tremendous opportunities in the wood industry, and I think that the industry understands that. I think that with the work that we're doing at the provincial level and also the work that the federal government is doing in assisting the forest industry, there is a bright future there for them. We just have to make sure that we work with the industry and reduce some of the regulatory red tape that they're facing right now and make sure that we streamline the plan so they can get the business done.

Mr. VanderBurg: Another project that you didn't have an opportunity to talk about was the resource road program. Again, it was very lightly touched upon in the throne speech. I know that important to your community of Grande Cache and to my community of Whitecourt is to try to provide another transportation link. You know, it's a great project that our constituencies are working on together to have that link complete between the ANC haul road, maybe, and Grande Cache but also a great opportunity for tourism and a great link that we can get our communities working closer together on snowmobile issues, on trail rides. Just wondering how you see that program, the resource road program, may help to link our communities, finally.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like I say, it was touched on very lightly, but I think the natural resource road program is going to be very beneficial to all of northern Alberta. I mean, myself and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne are at the southern tip of the NADC zone that I look after as chair. I think that the opportunities that this is going to offer to the north – I mean, one of the biggest problems we have in the north is getting product to market. We've had a number of issues with CN Rail, had a number of discussions with them. Also, I think that the work that the oil industry and the forest industries are doing together, where, again, they're looking at using one road and reducing the footprint, goes a long ways in making sure that the industries stay viable and look after the environment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered so graciously by our Lieutenant Governor, His Honour Norman Kwong. I would also like to add my thanks to His Honour for his dedication in preserving and enhancing the traditions, heritage, and character of our province as Lieutenant Governor over the past five years.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne highlighted many of this government's priorities, and at the conclusion of this inspirational speech I felt strongly that the priorities of our government echo those of myself, my constituents in Strathcona, and all Albertans. Alberta's fiscal advantage, the economy, health care, safe communities, and the environment are topics that all Albertans deem important, and these are issues that our government will continue to address.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's fiscal position has drastically improved since the early 1990s. In 1993 our provincial debt was approaching $23 billion. Since 1993 our province's fiscal position has improved by almost $50 billion.

Mr. Rodney: How much?

Mr. Quest: Fifty billion dollars improvement.

I commend our government for its dedication to improving our fiscal position. However, I'm most proud of how this was achieved. We have accumulated substantial cash reserves while our tax rates are the most competitive in Canada, even in the absence of a provincial sales tax. With our strong fiscal situation and tax advantage Alberta is poised to emerge from these difficult economic times stronger than ever before.

Two things come to mind when I think about Alberta's current situation: our government's planning and foresight and the hard-working, innovative citizens of this province. Boom periods do not last forever, especially here in Alberta, where we have one of the most volatile revenue streams in North America. The price of natural gas, oil, and the exchange rate can fluctuate, causing major swings in our revenue stream. The government has recognized this and saved money during the boom years, the bulk of which was put into our sustainability fund.

This type of forward thinking is not foreign to me. In a past life I owned a small General Motors dealership, before I was MLA for Strathcona. Traditionally in our business January and February were very slow months. We always planned for these fluctuations in our sales by keeping enough cash on hand to keep our staff working through the late winter months until sales picked up in the spring, so we didn't have to lay off our skilled staff, we didn't have to jeopardize their families, and we were always in a great position in the spring to continue to grow our business, and grow it did.

Over the past year our government's revenue has declined, but we were prepared for this. The $17 billion saved in the sustainability fund serves as a cushion for declining revenues. Furthermore, because of our fiscal responsibility our government can continue to uphold ambitious capital plans and continue to invest in our province. These capital plans are constructing public infrastructure projects that will benefit Alberta in the future while stimulating our economy by sustaining tens of thousands of jobs around our province.

One initiative that will fund these infrastructure projects is the sale of Alberta capital bonds. Mr. Speaker, the purchase of these bonds allows Albertans the opportunity to invest in their province. Our triple-A credit rating is a testament to years of fiscal prudence, and Alberta capital bonds will be backed by our strong credit rating, thus one of the safest investments that Albertans can make. I commend the Premier for allowing Albertans the opportunity to make such a secure investment in their province. Investing in Alberta capital bonds will be a show of support and pride for our citizens, especially given the infrastructure projects that they'll support.

Mr. Speaker, our demographics are changing. In 2011 there will be over 400,000 seniors living in Alberta. By 2021 there will be over 600,000. Our government has made it a priority to protect vulnerable Albertans, and that's exactly what Alberta capital bonds will achieve. The sale of capital bonds will be used exclusively for building accommodations for our senior citizens. Our senior citizens have been instrumental in building this province. They've instilled the qualities of hard work and entrepreneurial spirit and respect for our province in our generation. They are the foundation of Alberta, and our government recognizes that these outstanding Albertans deserve to live comfortably in the communities that they helped build.

Mr. Speaker, our low taxes and provincial savings have also allowed our government to continue to support health care in Alberta. Our government's goal is to have a health care system that is among the best not only in Canada but in the world. I firmly believe that we can achieve this as our government has taken a focused approach to moving towards this goal.

One measure that our Lieutenant Governor spoke of during the throne speech is the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. Through public input the advisory committee created a number of principles that our provincial health system should follow. They include putting people and their families at the centre of their health care, being committed to quality and safety, ensuring equitable access to timely and appropriate care, and focusing on wellness and public health, to name a few. These recommendations will help formulate a new Alberta health act. I'm particularly excited about this development because my constituency, Strathcona, and all Albertans will be consulted in the development of their health care system. I commend the government in their efforts to involve Albertans, to allow citizens to take an active role in the development and improvement of our health care system, a system that's accountable to all Albertans.

Another area of the throne speech that piqued my interest, along with, I'm sure, the interest of many of my constituents, dealt with building caring, safe communities around Alberta. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is comprised of thousands of communities, and to use an old adage, we're only as strong as our weakest link. To this end, I was enthused to hear that our government will surpass their goal of creating 14,000 new child care spaces. I was also enthused to hear that government will be creating 11,000 new affordable housing units over the next few years as we move towards our goal of eliminating homelessness in Alberta in 10 years. Given the dedication of leadership of our Premier I know this goal will be attained. These initiatives display the emphasis that the government places on enhancing Alberta communities, and I know that my constituency, Strathcona, and all Albertans are looking forward to continued efforts to ensure vibrant communities throughout the province.

While strong, caring communities are important to Albertans, recent changes in the global economy have also been weighing on the minds of my constituents. Our government has stressed that we need to continue to focus our efforts on becoming increasingly competitive in the global economy and providing Albertans with opportunities for training and education. These initiatives will be vital to the future prosperity of our province as Albertans' knowledge and skill sets will be in sync with those needed to thrive in the evolving global economy.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of the government's foresight in preparing for turbulent economic times, and I'm enthused to see the government's foresight in preparing for a changing global economy. Alberta's recent increase in population is a testament to the opportunities that are available in our province. In this changing economic climate it's imperative to provide opportunities to Albertans so they may learn the skills needed to keep Alberta competitive for years to come. While Albertans continue to enhance their skill sets, it's the job of our government to ensure that we are continuing to create value-added opportunities and foster greater contact with new and existing trading partners.

Examples of industries that will benefit from these commitments are the agriculture and agrifood industries. Our agricultural industry is vital to the economic health of our province. We need to separate Alberta from other provinces and countries by making these products competitive in new, previously untapped markets, and this is exactly what our government is planning to do. I know that my constituents in Strathcona who work in the agriculture and agrifood industry are excited to embrace these new markets and opportunities that will surely benefit their business and the province.

In addition to the agriculture industry many of our constituents work in the energy sector. Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor said during the throne speech that the best days in Alberta's energy story are yet to come. Under the leadership of our Premier I wholeheartedly agree. Alberta continues to be a leader in both renewable and nonrenewable energy and is poised to continue to embrace this leadership role for years to come. Our government is committed to attracting investment in the energy sector while also creating new technologies and protecting the environment.

Surely there are challenges that face our government along with the energy sector in extracting our natural resources in an environmentally sensitive manner. Through a joint effort we have limited the environmental impact of oil sands extraction thus far, but we know that new challenges await us with respect to this process. Through continued investment in research and technology we will be prepared to face these challenges, reduce emissions, and return the land to its natural state. Our Premier is fully committed to environmental stewardship, and I'd like to thank him for his efforts and his leadership in this vital area.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne served as yet another reminder of why I'm proud to be an Albertan and why our citizens have reason to be optimistic for the future. We were prepared for the current economic downturn and will emerge as a global leader and a stronger, more united Alberta. The economy has peaks and valleys, but Albertans' values along with our government remain constant: a dedicated work ethic, perseverance, and a sincere, devoted commitment to fostering continued growth in our economy and a sense of belonging in our communities.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. The member has spoken about the agriculture in his area, and I'm certainly aware of some of the excellent agricultural land that they have in that area. Are there any conversations around the fact that some of this agricultural land should be protected only for agriculture?

Then the other thing, I think, that is in his riding as well is the new niche farming. It's the new face of farming, where people have just small acreages but, in fact, are creating niche markets for, say, Cornish game hens, raising turkeys, or different products that they actually take and can sell locally so that people do that buying within a hundred miles, that new way of buying our food. Is this a growing industry in his riding, and is there any discussion about protecting our agricultural land?

Mr. Quest: Well, obviously it's very important that we protect our agricultural lands, our highly productive lands, all over the province. Certainly, this fits in with the province's land-use framework.

With respect to smaller operations, I'm not familiar with any reference to Cornish game hens and that type of thing, but certainly because of the value of the property, of course, in my constituency it is evolving into that situation: a lot of greenhouses, market gardens, that type of thing. So it is certainly becoming a lot more intense than it was based on the property values and the rich, productive land that we have in some areas of Strathcona.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask to ask the hon. Member for Strathcona how he feels the Speech from the Throne will be perceived in his constituency of Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Well, Strathcona has always been a very enthusiastic, optimistic part of the world, so the constituents that I've talked to since the Speech from the Throne have all been generally very optimistic about it. I think the same optimism is prevalent throughout the province. We live in an incredible province. Albertans are positive and optimistic, energetic just by their nature. So I'm not sure that my constituency would be all that different from any other constituencies, but yeah, the response has been very, very positive.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Before commenting on the throne speech, I would like to recognize the outstanding job that the hon. Lieutenant Governor has done and thank him for his service to this great province of ours. His is no small job, and he has gracefully proven his capabilities and brought his own style and finesse to this honoured position. Throughout these past five years, the Lieutenant Governor has shown a remarkable love for this province. He will be missed, and I wish him the best.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly address the Assembly today on behalf of my constituents in Calgary-Fort. During my time representing Calgary-Fort, I have had the opportunity to work and meet with so many of my constituents. I am proud to say that we have been working very well together, and together we have made life in Calgary-Fort better. My constituency is made up of hard-working citizens who are proud of being Albertans and being Canadians. Like many Albertans, they are most concerned with the current state of the economy. I know that they fear for their job stability, for the well-being of their families, and for the future as well. Calgary-Fort consists of communities that will benefit from the investments that the province is continuing to make in Albertans now and in the future. Making life better in our beautiful Alberta is our government's goal, and the Speech from the Throne provides a blueprint for us to achieve this goal.

There are several aspects of the Speech from the Throne that I would like to address as they are of particular interest to my constituents and to myself. I'm pleased to note that our government programs are very mindful of supporting those senior Albertans who have helped and contributed to our society. As an example, the proceeds earned from the sale of Alberta capital bonds will go directly towards supporting our senior citizens. I'm very pleased that this government is working to expand continuing care and supportive living capabilities. With this our seniors can trust that they will have the care they need when they need it.

Our far-sighted Alberta sustainability fund, set up years ago, like our household savings account, will protect the social programs for the most vulnerable in this province. I'm pleased that these programs will be protected and, in particular, the support for persons with disabilities and our vulnerable Albertans are not being forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased that our government, in addition to protecting our vulnerable citizens, has made a commitment to education. That is a very, very interesting point for my constituency as well. Education, I strongly believe, is an investment in our future. This government's drive to seek a new vision for Alberta's education system will benefit Alberta's children for years to come. With the availability of the resources that they need, there is no limit to what they can achieve and how they can contribute to our province's overall well-being.

Not only is our government focusing on our children but on postsecondary education as well. Our government has made a commitment to continue to build world-class universities. Mr. Speaker, this will help ensure that Alberta remains competitive with the rest of Canada and the world. Postsecondary students contribute to the prosperity of this province, and they help to contribute to ensure a bright future for all Albertans.

Another concern for my constituents is the safety of their living and the security of their communities. I'm also pleased to see that our government has dedicated itself to providing us with safer and more secure communities. As I see it, this priority is linked to enhancing Albertans' quality of life. Alberta citizens should not have to be fearful of walking about in their communities. As the Alberta government works to provide an enhanced sense of security, Albertans' quality of life will also be enhanced as they will also be free to sleep in the comfort of knowing that they and their families are safe. That feeling is invaluable.

I applaud the government for addressing gang crime, an issue that I know is on the minds of many of my constituents. With the new gang reduction strategy and the addition of front-line police officers we will all feel safer. This new strategy builds on the successful safe communities strategy, that is now two years old.

Mr. Speaker, as I stated earlier, my constituency of Calgary-Fort is made up of hard-working citizens, and they are striving to be successful and prosperous. I believe the plan our government has put forward, as stated in the throne speech, will give my constituents a renewed confidence in our province and in our future. In particular, the investment in infrastructure in all corners of the province is ensuring that we keep people working. On this particular point I'm very grateful that the Minister of Transportation is embarking on the southeast leg of the Calgary ring road, which runs through my riding.

By creating a competitive and innovative economy, jobs will not only be protected but created.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has faced hardships in the past, and we have always persevered and come out stronger than before. I have confidence that we will once again rise above today's challenges and triumph in creating the kind of Alberta that we can all be proud of. Our Alberta government has a comprehensive plan that will lead us through these challenging times and will continue to make our province the best place to live, work, and dream. It is important that we continue to invest in our province. This investment will provide increased stability and renewed prosperity for all Albertans.

My last point regarding the Speech from the Throne is that I am very pleased and my constituents are very pleased to hear of the five-year stable funding for our public health care system.

I would like to thank the constituents of Calgary-Fort for allowing me to have the honour of representing them for these years in the House. I pledge that I will continue bringing constituents' concerns and ideas into government processes to make improvements in the quality of life for all Albertans. I look forward to the implementation of the government's plan, ensuring Alberta's continued success, and to this productive spring session.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by thanking the Lieutenant Governor for presenting the Speech from the Throne.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I wonder if the hon. member might make a comment on the fact that the ring road is certainly needed in Lethbridge. I drive the Deerfoot all the time and realize that – sorry; Calgary.

Mr. Denis: That's a big difference.

Ms Pastoor: Yeah. Well, you know what? We're going to need a ring road soon, too.

Anyway, if he could comment on the ring road. In fact, the ring road is basically all driven toward car traffic. Where is the public transportation corridor that would go along with that ring road?

Mr. Cao: Well, I want to say that the ring road is mainly for commercial transportation. There is a need for it because that's part of the Canada-American-Mexico corridor. That ring road is part of it, particularly in the service sector of Calgary, where we have a very big industrial park.

When we talk about public transportation, I can only imagine that public transportation on the ring road will be buses like Greyhound and others. The city transit buses probably will be going inside the city, and that's done through funding through Municipal Affairs and other grants to municipalities. The city of Calgary has a big program, funded by our province, for light rail transit. As you know, they've put extra lengths on it. So I think that goes hand in hand with the ring road.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else wish to participate in 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne from His Honour Norman Kwong. I have to say as well that I want to echo many of the comments from members on both sides of the House earlier today thanking His Honour and Her Honour for their great service to this province over the last several years. I have to say that my favourite memory of His Honour is his continual sense of humour no matter how long a day he must have had, and we've all had some long days here.

Mr. Speaker, this year marks my 10th anniversary as an Alberta resident, and I'm very proud to be Albertan, as is the Premier, as is the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace. I have to say that when I look at the throne speech, I often look back at my 10 years here and how good it has been for me and what a great province this is in which we live.

Dealing with the throne speech itself, I was reflecting on this over the last couple of days. Moving forward to Bill 1, talking about competitiveness, competitiveness to me, Mr. Speaker, means more than just the competitiveness review that, obviously, is happening here and will be released shortly by the Minister of Energy. Competitiveness to me means competitiveness for small business, for individuals, a competitive economy, and, specifically, a competitive tax regime. One thing that the Premier has been clear on in the speech and throughout is that there will be no new taxes here. That means no new payroll taxes, no new income taxes. Of course, no new sales taxes; we're the only province that doesn't have one. That's important for our competitiveness as well.

I must reflect, Mr. Speaker, on my new ministry, meaning Housing and Urban Affairs. I have to say it was the highest honour of my life to be named to the cabinet here as minister for this area, and I wanted to look forward, to the issue of homelessness in our society. Anybody who takes a stroll in downtown Calgary or downtown Edmonton realizes that this is, in fact, an issue. It's an issue outside of Calgary and Edmonton as well, but it's most acute in these areas.

We're in the second year of this – and I'm happy that this was mentioned in the throne speech – the 10-year provincial homelessness plan that was developed by the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. It is a serious issue affecting Albertans, and it continues to grow and not just in boom times, when there are spikes in rental rates and in property values. This is a systemic problem that affects us year in/year out and day in/day out.

The 10-year plan to end homelessness incorporates a major shift in traditional ways of thinking about this issue. It's based on a Housing First approach, and it aims to provide permanent housing and necessary supports to the homeless in order to break the cycle of homelessness, which can be very difficult. This is a similar approach, Mr. Speaker, that's being used in jurisdictions in North America such as Portland and New York City. I would submit to you that Alberta's 10-year plan is better for the homeless and reduces the pressure on acute-care services, hospitals, police, and corrections, and even emergency doctors. Implementation of the Housing First model is estimated to reduce overall service costs by up to 50 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's 10-year plan aligns directly with and supports local plans created by Alberta municipalities, and the secretariat and the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs will work directly with municipalities and local communities to implement these plans. If not addressed, the number of homeless Albertans could increase dramatically over the next several years. As part of this commitment to supporting safe and strong communities, this government has adopted the secretariat's plans and strategies. I ask you to be mindful that we're only in year 2 of 10 of this whole project. Ending homelessness as we know it today will make our communities safer, but it's a long-term issue that we have to address and that we have begun to address. Action is already under way to implement this new approach to homelessness by putting people and putting the need for housing first.

As a result of the Housing First model, Mr. Speaker, health and social supports will help homeless people become independent and productive citizens. I have to say that I think it's good that we have a plan to build 11,000 new units by 2012, but at the same time we can't just measure the success of this program solely on the amount of units that we build or the amount of people that we are able to assist but, rather, the amount of people that we're able to bring off of assistance, that can become self-sustaining themselves. That is a true measure of success.

Dealing with the issue as well, I'm very happy with what we've done to date, but there's much more to do, and that's what was mentioned in the throne speech in and of itself. Homelessness in itself is something that is not just addressed, of course, by government. There are many nongovernmental organizations such as the Calgary homeless association, which I've met with recently, that provide quality service to individuals, and it's important for us to partner with them as well.

I mentioned earlier today, Mr. Speaker, that some of the programs such as rent supplements that we provide are not entitlement-based programs but, rather, needs-based programs. When I looked at the means test that is applied under the act, it was rather interesting because when I came to Alberta 10 years ago, I would have qualified for assistance under that program. However, not everybody has the fortune that I did of having a couple of university degrees. We have to help people move forward who maybe don't have the advantages that I had when I moved here.

I also wanted to address that the Speech from the Throne talked about crime. This is something that's very important in the constituency of Calgary-Egmont, that I'm privileged to represent. Of course, January 1, 2009, we had three murders on 94th Avenue. I won't deal with that directly because the matter is before the courts. At the same time, this said to me that the issue of crime and the issue of gang violence, specifically, is not one localized just to the downtowns of bigger cities like Calgary or Edmonton; rather, it has become a suburban issue. I had almost a record number of phone calls about that issue in the next few weeks that ensued. I'm very happy that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is getting really serious, for lack of a better term, about this issue in our two major cities.

Of course the goal, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta remains a safe place to live, work, and raise families, and that is my goal for my constituency and for all of Alberta as well. We obviously need a justice system that holds people accountable for their crimes and reflects the changing nature of society. It's a simple reality that we live in a much different world than we did 20, 30 years ago, when a gang fight was something you would hear of perhaps only on a television episode. It's here in Alberta today, and we have to deal with this. If we don't, it's simply at our own peril. Albertans expect the actions of their government to reflect their values, and that is something that we're working on here as well.

Mr. Speaker, I want to touch briefly on the issue of Alberta's pharmaceutical strategy as well. That was something that was also mentioned briefly in the throne speech. It was something that I had the pleasure of being involved with last year. The benefits of this, of course, are that pharmacists will be able to spend more time advising patients about their medications, Albertans will pay less for their prescription drugs, and both generic drug prices and brand name drug costs will be reduced, saving money for Albertans and, of course, the system. I think that this is a real step forward for health care, but as I often say to my staff, there's always room for improvement no matter how far you go.

Those are my submissions today with respect to the throne speech. I look forward to any questions or comments under 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. A singular honour to stand today and speak to the Speech from the Throne on behalf of the constituents I represent and to recognize, first, the valuable contribution His Honour Norman L. Kwong has provided not only as an outstanding sportsman and leader and philanthropist in his community but in these last five years as our Lieutenant Governor. Along with his wife, Mary, he has provided stellar stewardship in a most distinguished position in representing our province.

The Speech from the Throne and the promises contained therein and reinforced with yesterday's budget speech contemplate that in Alberta we still are in an advantaged position over many other people not only in Canada and in North America but in the world. Sometimes it's important to count those advantages and to contemplate what we're promising in this fiscal advantage that we discuss, in improving our health care, in building our safe and secure communities, and in being increasingly competitive in a global economy. When we contemplate the Speech from the Throne, that we have written and presented to Albertans, it is light years ahead of so many other parts of the planet.

We are a conglomeration of people, a relatively new society, who have come from many places, where dreams of our ancestors may well have been fulfilled and exceeded by the things that we're contemplating and the actions we're taking. When I reflect on the innovation of the community and the innovators that are there, who serve not only in our government but who serve in many outstanding ways in corporate boardrooms and in corporate structures that build this province and its great advantages, I think of the beauty of representing people who are healthy, who are living the good life, and who are in many respects very mindful of their advantages and sharing those advantages with people far beyond our borders.

A recent example is that emergency services from the province help the people of Haiti, who have undergone yet another cruel blow not only to their health and their social structure but to their future economic prosperity. Here once again, not only within the government, we had people that came forward and provided leadership in Haiti. We had a number of people who said: we can adopt children. We can display ourselves in a way that shows the hearts that we have and extend to people who are less fortunate than us a helping hand in a time of need.

The leader of the emergency preparedness found his history in Strathcona county as a fire chief and in New Orleans in Katrina and then more recently organizing to a large extent on behalf of a request from the government of Canada emergency services personnel to go and help in Haiti. That kind of resilience, that kind of extending a helping hand is what the community I represent and the community the Member for Strathcona represents gives us, a great privilege. These folks have learned how to compare and compete but also to extend that helping hand. So members in this House have been privileged to know many who have assisted in that outpouring of compassion to other parts of the world.

We have many other ways that we are represented in the communities that gather with their representatives in this House, not the least of which are those innovators that are taking advantage of the oil and gas opportunities in our province and who are in this time of recession celebrating their environmental contributions as well as their contributions in enterprise and technology to improve the vast opportunities we have to compete in a global economy. Some of these folks have been cited in the most recent celebrations of Alberta Oil: The Business of Energy, that is a part of a periodical produced, again, in Alberta that talks about the trailblazers, the outposts of progress that create an environment where we build a greater tomorrow by acting today. When you read these kinds of things that are produced right here in our province – Alberta Oil, Alberta Venture magazines – you celebrate the capacity of what we're doing in Alberta through the entrepreneurs that are acting well beyond the scope of the government.

Productivityalberta.ca, which is referenced in this throne speech through the discussion of how we are going to work on our value-added, talks about the kinds of things that Alberta businesses can better do. In the throne speech are references to agriculture and agrifood industries as key and sustainable economic drivers of our province, the kinds of businesses that benefit by the leadership of Productivity Alberta. Through this leadership we are working on making sure that we have high-quality food products that continue to be in demand all over the world, in places like the United States and Australia but increasingly in places like Japan and in China. I think it behooves us to continue to provide our leadership and support, providing the right tools for the job, doing the lean assessments that are done to make sure that our manufacturing is better and to work to refine and hone in on the products and the markets that we can improve upon in the years ahead.

My new responsibilities in this ministry will see us look very closely at our western economic partners, with both British Columbia and Saskatchewan, to see how we can work together in a way that reduces our expenditure for the infrastructure that we build and provide in other parts of the world but, in fact, still maintain the advocacy of the people that represent our province so that we work as partners in this partnership, collaborators in a partnership with other provinces and yet not, in fact, contemplate in any way being conspirators against the best advantages that each province can bring in marketing their own systems. To that extent, the TILMA agreement and more recently the partnership created by our Premier's innovation in extending a hand to Saskatchewan is a hallmark of the kinds of things that we can do to better the capacity to deliver in what has been described by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development as almost the global jewel of some of the highest and best undeveloped resource-based economies in the world.

Clearly, we have as well a Charter that over the last 10 years and more contemplates how we deal with the capacity of the Northwest Territories to emerge as a global winner through their linkage, not only through health and social structures but their governmental linkage with the province of Alberta to improve upon the kinds of opportunities for value-added and access to international markets. We have developed here in western Canada a unit of competitiveness and increasingly a unit of advocacy that can benefit all.

One of the interesting things about the ministry I'm representing is that there are nine foreign offices, and the ministry, the Alberta House, if you will, in Washington, has an advocacy role which increasingly International and Intergovernmental Relations wants to move towards. It will help us market for the world the capacity we bring in the energy industry to do things in an environmentally sustainable way, so we will be marketing.

Not only are we doing that marketing in Washington, but the upcoming mission that is being contemplated by those that are involved in the CCS, carbon capture and storage, in Oslo, Norway, in Germany in Düsseldorf, and in the United Kingdom in London will contemplate how we work in a way of selling Alberta's innovation and capacity so that people understand that we intend to be clean, green, and sustainable in the future.

So advocacy, productivity, and increasing competitiveness will help us assure that "the best days in Alberta's energy story are yet to come," and those are the words straight from the Speech from the Throne.

I was interested in one of the more recent editions of The Economist, for January. There is actually a new edition out for February. On the editorial page under Leaders it talks about the size and the power of state. Then it talks about the growth of government, but it also speaks to something that I think is fundamental in this throne speech, to the way that the Alberta government has been developing not only its throne speech but the budget speech. It reads in the document on page 11: "How much a state spends often matters less than how it spends. Systems in which the state pays and the private sector provides often work well." It goes on to talk about how we work in a co-operative and collaborative way as a governance body with a private sector that delivers systems.

Many times we've talked in this House about how doctors and physicians providing primary health care do so as private people employed through the fees they charge that government pays and in many respects have provided very effective and efficient private partnerships that deliver public health care. We see this in many of the P3 models that have in this House been accused of adding debt, but they have been debts that have been enabling us to provide a better infrastructure to lead to the development of highway 63. Future infrastructure needs in this province are taken care of when, in fact, we have Albertans who participate through the opportunities provided in policy to develop the kinds of things that we should: the businessman that's the farmer, the businessman that's the manufacturer, the businessman that's the small businessman, which is the core of the business leadership involved in Alberta albeit that it's sometimes overshadowed by the larger multinationals that develop our oil and gas industries.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this speech is about Albertans. It's about their entrepreneurial spirit. It's about continuing to take their place not only in Canada but in the world as global leaders. It's about living the values and lifestyle that our entrepreneurial grandparents and ancestors contemplated. Above all, perhaps it's about keeping our taxes low, our fees lower but maintaining support for health and education as the keys to the successful lifestyle that we hope will be our legacy to our children and our grandchildren in the future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I take my leave. Thank you for the opportunity to present some comments on the Speech from the Throne.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister in her comments mentioned carbon capture and storage in an international context. There has been some negativity in this House with respect to carbon capture and storage. I wonder if she could comment on how this proposal is viewed internationally.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much for that opportunity. I think I'm going to take this opportunity to state my enormous pride in the Minister of Environment and the kinds of advocacy he has provided not only in Copenhagen but prior to that and in the post-Copenhagen strategy, where without fear of criticism he stands tall and makes it clear that Alberta has a role in developing a sustainable resource economy.

We have contemplated, he and I together and the newly appointed Minister of Energy, a way of increasing the advocacy on things that could be done in the future not only in the Euro-environment but across Canada to make sure that people in other parts of the country who may have slagged Alberta in Copenhagen are fully familiar with the advantages that they get from having an Alberta economy that's robust: huge tax advantages, huge advantages in the workplace environment. What we have to do is acknowledge that where we are spending some $2 billion in carbon capture and storage with the hope of improving technological knowledge transfer not only within our province but elsewhere, we are only $1 billion short of the entire budget of the United States on carbon capture and storage. We should celebrate that, sell that. That's a co-ordination role in my ministry with the players that our Premier has selected to more than adequately serve as advocates not only in the energy sector but for the due diligence in the work that's been done by our esteemed colleague the Minister of Environment.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to stand up and speak today in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Like others so well said, it's an honour to have witnessed the Lieutenant Governor and his family here. It was pretty interesting. The family sat in front of me here during the throne speech, and it was very moving to watch them watch their father and husband during that time. I think that all of us had a lot of pride in the actions of our Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Speaker, a lot was said during the speech. First, about the Alberta fiscal advantage, you know, we have over the last number of years had the opportunity to pay off in full $23 billion in debt and managed to save about $25 billion in cash, at the same time having one of the lowest income tax rates as well. And one thing that Albertans all enjoy is not paying a provincial sales tax. Let's remember that one of the promises our Premier made in the campaign for the leadership and afterwards in the election was not to consider a provincial sales tax. So many times we hear from people that say, "Well, over in Ontario or in B.C." I say, "Well, you know, do you want what they have?" They say, "Well, what do you mean?" I say, "Well, would you like to have that sales tax added onto everything we purchase?" Of course, the answer is no, and Albertans pride themselves in standing out in Canada in having that advantage.

As well, the Alberta capital bonds were talked about, and I spoke about this in the Legislature last fall. Many of my constituents had taken the time over the past number of months to talk about the opportunity with capital bonds. I think that we're going to see a great opportunity for Albertans to purchase those. They'll purchase them with pride like my parents had in Canada savings bonds. It wasn't just the bond. It was a piece of paper investing in Canada, and now people will have that opportunity to say: yes, I have that piece of paper, and I've invested in Alberta infrastructure and especially in the opportunity to invest in our seniors' housing projects. I think, you know, that it's something to be very, very proud of, and I'll be very proud to promote the sale of those bonds.

Government must live within its means, and we heard many speeches here much earlier about the deficit that we'll have from last year and this year and next year. Let's remember, no different than I would teach our sons as they have a household and new families that they've started, that sometimes you have to spend a little more, that sometimes you have to save a little more. You have to make those decisions as a family and as a government on when those times are.

I think this is a perfect time, Mr. Speaker, to spend a little more and invest in the future. But not too much. We don't want to leave debt for our grandchildren. I'm a new grandfather and very proud of that. I don't want to leave a debt for my little Alyssa, but I want to make sure that she has some good infrastructure to take part in in five years when she goes to elementary school, that there's a new modern school for her to attend, that there are good roads for her to go to school on and good infrastructure. I think that was talked about by our Lieutenant Governor in the speech, that he envisioned an opportunity for us now to invest in the future, to not leave debt in the future but to invest in the future. I think that all of us are so very, very proud to take part in that.

The second issue that the Lieutenant Governor talked about was improving our health care system. I can say that in my constituency one of the opportunities I had early on in 2001, when I first got elected – and I spoke about that in my first speech in the Assembly – was that we needed to address the issue of housing for our seniors. When I was elected, we had somewhat of a good system in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. We had two housing authorities but two housing authorities that were very taxed. There were long waiting lists and not a lot of opportunities for our seniors when they needed a lodge or they needed some assistance for further health care to take part in.

Well, since 2001 we've made a large expansion in Whitecourt to the Spruce View Lodge, and we've modernized the facility. We have a facility that I was proud of when my mom moved into it. She said that it was time for her to move out of her home and into a lodge, and I was proud of that facility and would recommend that to anybody in our community.

As well, since 2001 we built a new lodge in Onoway. The community did some fundraising, and I think you'll all remember when we had the Ralph bucks. You know, every Albertan received $400, and we had a campaign of: donate your Ralph bucks to the Onoway seniors' facility. Any of the opposition people or anybody in Alberta – and I put the challenge out here – that didn't want those monies could sure donate them to the Onoway chateau and build a home for the seniors. That's what I did with my money, and that's what a lot of people in our constituency did. Then in turn we found some matching grants and built a great facility in Onoway, and a lot of seniors in that area call the Onoway chateau home now. [interjections] If you want the floor, you can have it, but I have the floor right now, and you better respect that.

Mr. Speaker, as well, we've had the opportunity in Evansburg in my constituency through the Legion to create a Legion lodge, and what a great home that we've helped create through some provincial granting and through mainly the community getting together and working on behalf of their residents. I can say, again, that the people in Evansburg sure appreciate that new facility.

Mr. Speaker, we had the opportunity in the fall of this year to have the sod-turning of a new Mayerthorpe lodge. The lodge that was built in the early '60s was great, but it doesn't meet the standards of 2009-2010. We've had the opportunity to access some housing grants. Again, we're carrying on with the tradition in our constituency of not talking about these facilities but actually building them. We've done the sod-turning, and construction is on now. I can say that I'm very, very proud of what we've done in our constituency as far as seniors' housing.

You know, the Lieutenant Governor talked about building safe and caring communities, and we've had some issues with some gangs. I have to thank our past Solicitor General. There were concerns that came forward in the town of Whitecourt. The Solicitor General addressed those issues. Did we solve the gang issues completely? No, but we sure raised some hell and said that the community would not tolerate gangs settling in Whitecourt-St. Anne. I'd like to thank him for that help.

We talked in the throne speech about the increased competitive issues in the global economy. Forest issues in Whitecourt-St. Anne are huge, and it's tough when you're supplying mainly one market, the United States. Our big mills employ thousands of people in Whitecourt-St. Anne and have supplied millions and millions of board feet of dimension lumber to the housing markets in the United States. So we felt the issue of the downturn in the economy in the United States, and it's affected our industry, but we've managed to keep competitive by keeping those mills modern and by keeping that workforce very well trained and diverse. I'm feeling pretty good about the forest industry, about how they'll come out of this. I'm hearing that the prices in the lumber market are slowly coming up, so as long as we don't see the Canadian dollar fluctuate too much, we'll see some outlook of being very, very positive in the forest sector.

Mr. Speaker, I see also in the throne speech that about 50 per cent of our provincial gross domestic product is tied to energy in some way. Well, we see that in Whitecourt-St. Anne and especially in the service sector. The service sector plays a very important role in employment in Whitecourt-St. Anne. We have many, many companies and their head offices located in our communities, and they employ and they spend big, big dollars in the area. So it's noticed that the oil patch has slowed down over the last little while. Again, I'm talking with folks in that sector that have had to let people go last spring but are hiring them back, so it's great to hear that the companies are starting to come back and do some work again in the area.

Earlier there was some talk by members in the government caucus about the clean energy future, and it talks in the throne speech about Alberta's oil sands. You know, there's a great amount of attention addressed to the oil sands and a lot of unfair attention, I can say, about the oil sands. But what a lot of people don't understand when you talk about oil sands is that it's not always surface mining projects. It's a lot of in situ work, you know, work that's done underground, and the footprint on the land is very minimal. I had the opportunity with a number of caucus members to go and tour the Devon facilities in the Fort McMurray area, and I'd encourage the new Minister of Energy to take part in a tour and see how well they've worked with the local community and to see how innovative that group has been. I think they're producing oil at a pretty competitive price, and I think we'll only see that opportunity grow.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I could talk here for hours about the opportunities in Whitecourt-St. Anne and how the Speech from the Throne related to that, but I see that the clock is ticking, and at this time I'd like to adjourn debate.

Thank you, sir.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly now do stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of 48 very intelligent and exuberant young people from St. Albert, the Bertha Kennedy Catholic community school. I had a chance to speak with the kids in the rotunda. If this is an example of what the province's future is going to be, we are indeed in good hands. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Scott Raypold and Mrs. Brianne Tworek. They have parent helpers Mrs. Feraco, Mr. Neuls, Mrs. Saive, and Mrs. Benko. I believe they are in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 36 visitors from Prairie River junior high school in High Prairie. They are here on a tour of the province, starting out with the most wonderful place of all, this Legislature. They are accompanied by teachers – and I'd ask that they rise as I say their names – Ms Rachel Mount and Mrs. Michelle Keshen and parent helpers Mr. Ed Fudali, Mr. Ed Leonard, and Mr. Dave Paddon. I'd ask that all the students and the teachers as well rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly our two sessional researchers for the NDP opposition caucus. Gwyneth Dunsford and Meagan Johnston are seated in the public gallery. Meagan hails from St. Albert and recently graduated from McGill University's Faculty of Law. She's a lifelong feminist and activist in the antipoverty, environmental, and queer liberation movements. Gwyneth, who is originally from Rocky Mountain House, studied in Norway and in Washington, DC, while pursuing her BA from the U of A. Her primary interests are women's issues, aboriginal rights, and arts and culture. Both of our sessional researchers have already shown themselves to be very talented individuals and a pleasure to work with. Mr. Speaker, I ask that both Gwyneth and Meagan now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four remarkable individuals from the Networks Activity Centre located in my constituency of Edmonton-Calder. The Networks Activity Centre is a leisure and recreation program for the survivors of brain injury. The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and I had the privilege of touring the facility in January and were both very impressed at the amazing work that is being done in this community. I would ask these individuals to rise as I introduce them to receive the traditional greetings of the Assembly: Mrs. Christine Hrasko, the president; my good friend Mr. George Kapetanakis, the executive director; Mr. Richard Hanes, a participant in the program; and Ms Andrea Vermeulen, also a participant in the program. Please give them the traditional greeting. Thank you.

Networks Activity Centre

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak a little bit more about the incredible group of people that I introduced a moment ago called the Networks Activity Centre, or NAC. NAC has been supporting brain injury survivors and their families since 1998. By creating a community-based system for social contact among adults with brain injury, Networks creates opportunities for these individuals to participate in social networks outside of the home.

This is a place where they can partake in recreational and educational activities that contribute immensely to their personal growth. These activities include playing games, computers, sewing, quilting, painting, ceramics, exercise, swimming, theatre, leather work, and some actually quite good karaoke. Anything that will allow them to develop new skills and brush up on old ones contributes to the confidence that we build in these individuals.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential to the rehabilitation of the brain injured that they reintegrate themselves into the community and develop new interests and new relationships. I would very much like to thank these individuals involved for increasing the quality of life for brain injury survivors and especially for those who have joined us here today. Networks is a tremendous addition to my constituency and to all of Alberta. They're able to recognize the need for support and to provide it to those who need it within this community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to represent the thriving, fast-growing communities of northeast Calgary, but the rapid growth of these communities also presents challenges, particularly when it comes to transportation. If nothing is done, expansion of the Calgary International Airport will soon strand thousands of commuters in Calgary-McCall and vastly increase congestion on Deerfoot Trail, with huge impacts on the economy, environment, traffic safety, and the quality of life of Calgarians. Many businesses will be harmed, many lives made more difficult. Building the proposed airport tunnel is the only way to avoid this potential headache, and building it now is the only way to avoid an even greater expense in the future.

Yesterday afternoon I met with the Minister of Transportation to plead the case of the tens of thousands of Calgarians who will be tremendously affected if the tunnel is not built. The city of Calgary and the Airport Authority have already committed $90 million to help build the tunnel. Now the federal and provincial governments must come to the table before March 1 to make this project happen.

The new runway at Calgary International will open up Alberta to a far greater range of international flights. This is a positive development for every citizen in this province. For business, for travel, for cultural interchange and family ties this is a great development, not just for Calgary but for all of Alberta. That is why I believe that it is a provincial imperative to support the construction of the airport tunnel, and the people of Calgary cannot be asked to bear the burden alone.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2010 Olympic Winter Games

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow night the Olympic torch will be lit at the opening ceremonies of the 2010 Vancouver-Whistler Winter Games. International attention will be focused on our neighbours next door, but this is also a unique opportunity to show the rest of the planet that Alberta is a world-class destination for tourism, business, culture, winter sports, and so much more.

Alberta enjoys a great history in this respect, and Albertans have every right to be proud of the legacy of the 1988 Calgary Olympic Winter Games. Since 2004 our Alberta government has invested more than $100 million to renew our Olympic heritage venues, and this has been invaluable in solidifying Alberta's position as Canada's national centre of winter sports excellence. This leadership role is irrefutable: more than half of the 2010 Canadian Olympic team were born in Alberta or live and train in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our province will shine in other ways during the games. With the Alberta train, Alberta House, and Alberta Plaza we will share our story with the rest of the world. Alberta artists will offer medal-worthy performances in the Cultural Olympiad and in free nightly concerts at Alberta Plaza. In addition, an Alberta executive chef will showcase our food industry with gourmet cuisine from our own backyard.

Meanwhile, Albertans can be part of the Olympic experience in the comfort of their own homes from nightly live streaming videos of artists performing at the Plaza to the latest Twitter update about Albertans owning the podium. Our constituents can enjoy up-to-date news and results online at alberta.ca/vancouver2010. By the end of February the story of Alberta's athletes, artists, food, and opportunities will be well known.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the 2010 Olympic Winter Games is an invaluable venue for us to tell the rest of the country and the rest of the world about our amazing Alberta spirit and celebrate our successes together. Go, Canada, go, and go, Alberta, go.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Black History Month

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February is Black History Month. It's a time to reflect on and celebrate the achievements and contributions of black Canadians and black people throughout the world. I feel particularly honoured to be presenting this statement today, February 11, the day 20 years ago that Nelson Mandela walked out of prison and into the history books. His belief in the equality of all people led him to change the world forever.

And so it has been in our province, Mr. Speaker. For the past 100 years black people have been coming to Alberta seeking freedom and equality, whether from the Jim Crow laws and discrimination of the turn-of-the-century United States or the instability and violence of other countries or, as my parents and many of their friends did in the 1960s, seeking a better future for their children.

On this day I think of Corporal Ainsworth Dyer, a black soldier based out of Edmonton who lost his life in Afghanistan in 2002. I think of Violet King, who in 1954 was the first black woman to graduate from the U of A law school and Alberta's first black female lawyer. Of course, we can't talk about Alberta history without acknowledging one of our greatest cowboys, John Ware.

Mr. Speaker, many great black Canadians have blazed a trail both in our province and throughout this great country, and there are many great examples of today's contributors, people like Dr. Tony Fields, the cancer specialist; William Eddins, conductor of the ESO; Dr. Fil Fraser, the noted writer, broadcaster, and filmmaker; and the poet laureate of Edmonton, Rollie Pemberton, known by his stage name of Cadence Weapon, who is the grandson of the late Eskimo great, Rollie Miles.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to serve in this Legislature as the first black member along with my colleague the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, the second such serving member. I'm very proud to live in this province at a time when colour is neither a barrier nor a requirement to serve in this prestigious office.

I would like to commend all the organizers and volunteers of the many events throughout Black History Month and encourage my colleagues and all Albertans to participate in the celebrations. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Lunar New Year

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February 14, 2010, is New Year's Day for over 1.5 billion people in the world. It is celebrated as a 4,000-year tradition of people in China, Vietnam, Korea, Japan, and many other parts around the globe. On behalf of all members of the Assembly, I wish them all [remarks in Mandarin Chinese, Vietnamese, Korean, and Japanese]. It all means: Happy New Year.

Based on the lunar cycle, there are 60 names for the years based on 12 animal zodiacs and five elements. From the first use of the lunar calendar this coming year, 4078, is the Year of the Metal Tiger. Being a feline species like a cat, it doesn't matter how it is tossed around; the tiger always lands on its four feet solidly. Attached to the metal element, it is strong like steel and valuable like gold. This year it is special to have New Year's fall on Valentine's Day and during the Olympics. We celebrate love, relationships, achieving our potential. This will be a great year for Alberta and Canada.

New Year's Day is celebrated as a family affair, a time of renewing and thanksgiving. Remembrance of ancestors is the most vital part of the New Year's ritual, linking the living members with those who have passed away. Nothing should be lent or borrowed on this day as anyone who does so will lend and borrow all year round. The New Year's Day activities set a precedent.

Mr. Speaker, there are some Lunar New Year traditions that may apply to us in the Assembly. Everyone should refrain from using bad language and unlucky words. References to the past year are also avoided as everything should be turned toward the new year and a new beginning. It is believed that the appearance and attitude during the New Year's celebration sets the tone for the rest of the year.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish all my colleagues here a healthy, happy, productive year of the roaring golden tiger.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Provincial Budget

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In making its lofty promises about funding for health care and education, this government has abandoned the people who need our help most. There is no place in this budget for Albertans struggling to keep a roof over their families' heads, for Albertans who are working minimum wage jobs, for Albertans who are homeless or who are at-risk youth in the foster care system. So much for the compassionate Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, this government cut $112 million from the Ministry for Housing and Urban Affairs. This government cut the affordable housing program in half.

This government cut $2 million from its already overburdened rent supplement program despite the fact that this program was full for 2009 by August and was thus unable to help thousands of people who needed it. Mr. Speaker, this government has also cut $28 million from services to its most at-risk youth. The government broke its promise to index the minimum wage, taking $240 out of the pockets of 20,000 low-income Albertans.

This government would like us to believe that these cuts are necessary to boost the health care system, but really they will just increase costs. By cutting funding for social services, this government may look like it is saving money, but it's only shifting the cost. If you don't make the commitment to put roofs over people's heads, if you don't make the commitment to care for kids who need child intervention, you'll be finding a lot more people in the health care system because of the consequences of life on the streets. One way for our economy to recover is to increase access to postsecondary education. Again, instead we see cuts to student grants that will limit opportunities to students living in low-income families.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans see that this budget isn't neglecting people who fall through the cracks; rather, it's almost pushing them down through those cracks. We need to do better, and with the inherent wealth that we have in this province there is absolutely no reason that we cannot. [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order in the gallery!

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a report that was released in the fall by Water Matters. It's called Share the Water: Building a Secure Water Future for Alberta. It's produced by Water Matters and Ecojustice. I will table the appropriate number of copies of that.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from constituent Jack Barrows, who is writing with concerns around the tailings ponds, which he likens to the Chernobyl disaster, and who is very concerned about the chemicals that may be leaching into the groundwater supply. I will table the appropriate number of copies of that document.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of the House and Albertans a document entitled Seniors Care in Crisis: Alberta Seniors Deserve Better; It's Time to Take Action. It's produced by Public Interest Alberta.

Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to the standing orders I may ask a question of the Government House Leader in which he would share with the Assembly the projected government House business for the week commencing the 16th of February.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Of course, Monday, February 15, being Family Day, we will not be sitting.

On Tuesday, February 16, 2010, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders the potential for further consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne and potentially second reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act; Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; and Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010.

We will also anticipate receiving letters from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor with respect to supplementary supply, which would be tabled, which would then afford us the opportunity on Wednesday, February 17, under Government Bills and Orders for Committee of Supply for supplementary estimates and, time permitting, consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne.

On Thursday, February 18, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders day 6 of consideration of His Honour's speech as well as the potential for further second reading time on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act; Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010; and discussion of Bill 2 at whatever stage, second reading or Committee of the Whole.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council of Alberta recently released a report which highlighted that under the management of this government and Alberta Health Services emergency room wait times in Alberta have actually increased between 2007 and 2009. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: when will the minister provide details showing how the $1.7 billion increase to Alberta Health Services will improve emergency access for Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, very soon. In fact, I anticipate making an announcement next week with respect to a specific strategy that has been developed with, by, and for the Alberta Health Services folks to benefit all Albertans, and that will include looking at how we can reduce the wait times and how we can improve access time to family doctors and to specialists.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. How many additional acute care beds will this new funding mean for Calgary hospitals, now stretched beyond their limits?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I just rushed in from Calgary. In fact, I was at the Peter Lougheed hospital just hours ago, and I met with people in the emergency department. I'm sure the member asking the question would be happy to know that I informed them that our capital plan is being worked on right now government-wide. It's about a $7 billion plan this year. The Health and Wellness component of that for health facilities is going to be $2.5 billion, and we'll have the details very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you. Then probably the minister will be able to answer the question about the 140 beds that lie empty in the Peter Lougheed hospital and why we're going to wait three years for a new hospital when we have 140 empty beds in the Peter Lougheed that could be opened. When will they be opened?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the wonderful things I learned today is that the new wing of the Peter Lougheed hospital is providing outstanding care, and those are 120 or thereabouts brand new beds. Unfortunately, in order to get those open, they had to close those that were in the existing facility. What I've said to them is that all we've done is sort of shift the number of beds from one centre to another. Those that are there and vacant in the existing Peter Lougheed wing I've asked Alberta Health Services if they would look at, now that they have their five-year funding plan in place and now that we're moving forward, to see what can be done to utilize those beds as well.

Dr. Swann: Good news. Good news, Mr. Speaker. We'll hold you to that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hip and Knee Surgeries

Dr. Swann: Since May of last year Edmontonians have been waiting in pain because this government cannot manage the health system. Last May the Royal Alexandra hospital was told that they're working too efficiently, performing too many hips and knees, so their funding for elective surgery was cut by 15 per cent. To the same minister: given the budget increase will the Royal Alex now be directed to work to their full capacity and finally start reducing the number of Albertans waiting in pain for hip and knee surgery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was at the Royal Alex just last week, and I was there the week before. I was touring and learned a lot about how that hospital functions as part of my learning curve. Now that we have a fixed budget and now that we know a little bit more about the predictable and stable funding, I'm sure we'll be able to address exactly those kinds of issues. I'm grateful for the honourable doctors and the hon. Leader of the Opposition's question in that regard because it will help us focus on what's important, our patients, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A plan is what is needed, and this minister has yet to show that he has a plan other than to pile on more money. Are there enough staff to actually increase the number of hip and knee operations at the Alex? Staffing.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, staffing is an issue, and that's why on Dr. Duckett's blog today you will see a comment on how we're going to retain the maximum number of people possible, how we might possibly be hiring even more people to keep up with the demands for the services that Albertans expect out of the Alberta health care system. We are focused on a plan, exactly that, that will deliver the best performing publicly funded health system in Canada right here in Alberta, and we're going to get that done.

Dr. Swann: Well, what an interesting flip-flop in messaging from Dr. Duckett between this month and last.

If the minister has a plan, he should have specific details and outcomes. Can the minister tell Albertans how many more hip and knee surgeries the budget increase in Alberta Health Services will get for Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that will depend partly on how quickly we can get on with activity-based funding, which addresses exactly that. We'll know more by April 1, quite clearly. We'll be having a meeting next week, which will bring together the nurses, the doctors, Alberta Health Services, myself, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. We're going to sit down and thrash through some of this stuff, including performance measures, which I suspect is partly where the hon. leader is going. We'll get there.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you can see why the energy industry has lost so much confidence in this government. I mean, two of the most senior ministers apparently can't agree on whether royalty changes are going to happen or not. Yesterday the Minister of Energy apparently told reporters that royalty changes were not going to take place a mere two hours after the finance minister told the same reporters the exact opposite. To the Minister of Energy. Here's your chance to clear things up. Will this government be fixing the royalty system in this province or not?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to clear things up because certain media have taken out of context what I believe was said yesterday. I can't comment on what the finance minister said in a private meeting, but let me be very clear about what is happening. We are in the process of going through a competitiveness review. Part of that competitiveness review is to ensure that our royalty structures within the royalty framework are appropriate. There is no new royalty framework because that is much greater than just royalties, and that's what will be coming as part of the competitiveness review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I'm still wondering – I mean, I know media does sometimes take remarks out of context; it's happened to me – how workers in the oil and gas industry, how investors in the oil and gas industry let alone other sectors of our economy are meant to trust a government that's working, or being reported to work, at cross-purposes with itself?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, one thing that is certain: there's a lot more trust in this government than in the Liberal opposition. In the last election the former leader was campaigning for higher royalties, and just a couple of weeks ago we had this particular leader, this particular opposition, come out with a report, which is the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers' report, verbatim now as their new Liberal policy. So I have some difficulty understanding where they're coming from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. CAPP called. They're wondering why you haven't.

To the Minister of Energy: why aren't you more aggressively pursuing a pipeline to the west coast? It's not only royalties where this government needs to take urgent action. Our reliance on one single market south of the border places our energy exports at risk of boycott, so why aren't you more aggressively pursuing a pipeline to the west coast?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'll be very happy to send a copy of our energy strategy over to the member because clearly outlined in our energy strategy are the initiatives that we are taking. We recognize that we do not want to be so reliant on one particular customer. There's a lot of work going on there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Funding for Children in Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the very day the Premier is travelling to Vancouver to take part in Alberta's $8.3 million advertisement at the Olympics, back home our government has a practice of keeping children in its care in downtown offices with 24-hour supervision because no other safe place is there for them to go. To the minister of children's services: how can the minister possibly justify reducing support for child protection when it is abundantly clear that her ministry is already operating over capacity and children are suffering as a result?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, our recent budget announcement is $1.1 billion for this ministry. I want to assure you that children and youth remain our number one priority. They always have been; they always will be. I want you to know that. Also, I want you to be certain of the safety and well-being of our children and youth, that they're not put at risk. I can tell you that in the budget what this member is referring to is under child intervention. Many people think that we go and we take that child into care under child intervention. That's simply not the case.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, once you take into account inflationary and population pressures, the real cut in this area is at least 10 per cent. Now, last year in the first six months 150 children in care suffered abuse. That's simply not the kind of record that justifies any kind of reduction in support. Why doesn't the minister call a spade a spade and admit that children in Alberta will suffer as a result of these cuts to her budget?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this budget, as I said, is $1.1 billion. It's a 3.1 per cent increase. Child intervention is multidimensional. That means early intervention, and we have excellent organizations out in the community that are doing early intervention. I was over at the parent link centre for west Edmonton this morning, at the Jasper Place Child and Family Resource Centre, and you would be amazed at the good work that they're doing for early intervention so that they help families with their children to remain successful and not go into care.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's interesting because, in fact, in terms of early intervention the prevention of family violence and bullying budget was also cut by roughly 10 per cent. These are the kinds of services that the minister knows help keep families together, and if they're cut, it's likely that more kids will end up in government care as a result. Why won't the minister admit that, in short, the system is losing safe places for children and that these cuts will make it worse?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you once again that early intervention through our community programs is enhanced. It was legislated here with the family enhancement act. We have been working, changing our programs to be really responsible. The very earliest we can do is out in the community, and it is working. This budget is a good, solid budget for Children and Youth Services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Communication is the key, the government says. Everyone will communicate better. It's a new team. Albertans will have to take a haircut, and the buffet is closed. Well, the photo which I will table at the appropriate time says: not even a trim. My question to the minister of finance is this: does he not like haircuts, or is he planning on becoming a long-haired hippie, moving away from his core political values?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've carefully burned all the pictures of me prior to 1975, so I know that the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has not seen those pictures. In fact, my haircut has been getting shorter and shorter, and I'm more than happy.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, he didn't answer the question, but I'll ask it again. Communication is the key, the government says. The budget reflects increased revenue projection in oil sands bitumen royalties, which I believe is very important. It creates jobs for my community, Albertans, and all of Canada. However, I will table the Globe and Mail. The Minister of Energy says: I want to slow down the oil sands. Your numbers say that you want to speed up the oil sands. This is a total contradiction. Which is it? Do you want to speed up the oil sands, Mr. Minister of Finance?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we'll have to find the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo a job in the media; he's doing such a great job of taking things out of context. In fact, I seem to have recollections of the hon. member voicing concerns many times about things going too fast up in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Are oil sands revenues increasing from last budget to this? Absolutely. Will they continue to increase? Absolutely. I've said that Alberta's future is in the north, and we all support that.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, to the minister of finance. All Albertans are watching. The question is that you are saying full speed ahead with the oil sands in order to back up your budget numbers, quite contrary to what the Minister of Energy has said in the Globe and Mail. Is this full speed ahead with the oil sands in terms of development, in creating jobs for Albertans? Yes or no.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, did anybody hear the words “full speed ahead” on Tuesday afternoon? I didn’t. In fact, I’ll send a copy of the speech over, and of course they’re not there.

We will continue with the orderly development there. We’ve created a positive environment for investment. Based on that, we’ve seen five announcements of new projects in the oil sands, so obviously there will be new jobs and new wealth created in the north.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government talks about competitiveness but will not back the Calgary airport tunnel, a project that will keep businesses going, keep people employed, and increase tourism. This government talks about being green, but they won’t support a project that will keep cars, trucks, and airplanes from idling. To the Minister of Transportation: has the minister studied the economic and social impact of not building the tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member is trying to do the right thing, but I do not understand why he doesn’t understand that he’s trying to drag me into something that has nothing to do with my job. My job is to look after provincial highways in Alberta, and the airport tunnel is a municipal project. If you look back at the amount of money that we transferred to Calgary last year, there was double enough money there to build the tunnel if they would have made it their first priority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don’t think the airport tunnel is a Calgary issue; it is an Alberta issue. The minister should be taking a look at the bigger picture.

To the minister again. The airport is already over capacity. Without an airport tunnel we can expect even more traffic problems. Why doesn’t the minister think that Calgary needs this airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely have not at any time said that Calgary didn’t need it or did need it. I just said that it wasn’t our responsibility. I’ll tell you that this member will be one of the first people that will be out there if we change and if I sway from policy and do something that I’m not supposed to be looking after and look after it. They’ll be the first ones jumping down my throat on not following our policies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the contrary, I think I’ll be the first one applauding the minister to do the right thing, to come through with the funding for the airport tunnel.

To the minister again. The tunnel is a necessity for the LRT to go to the airport. Will the minister reconsider and put his support behind the airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as you know, there’s new money going to Calgary in the new budget that just came out. They have to decide what their priorities are and what infrastructure they spend their money on. I’ll tell you, we have members on our side of the House, the Member for Calgary-Montrose and the Member for Calgary-Cross, that have been working very hard with my department also, trying to figure out how they could get support for the people in Calgary. We’re building a ring road around the city of Calgary to help get rid of the congestion that he’s talking about on the Deerfoot. Therefore, I want to stick to the job I’m doing and try to do the very best for Albertans that I can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

WCB Appeals Commission

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Public Agencies Governance Act is intended to bring greater transparency to quasi-judicial agency governance and generally has been well received. However, in a recent conversation with an employers’ safety organization they indicated to me that some challenges existed with respect to the provisions of the timelines for service on public bodies. My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This legislation may have a negative impact on the pool of WCB appeals commissioners. How will you mitigate the loss of qualified appeals commissioners and ensure that we don’t run out of the good folks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When appointing commissioners to the Appeals Commission, first of all, it should be stressed that the Appeals Commission has to be balanced. The balance is composed of representatives of the labour world and the employers’ world. So when appointing commissioners to the Appeals Commission, that is the first prism through which I look to appoint new commissioners. But there’s another balance, of continuity, of experience so that we get quality decisions, accurate decisions. Also, there has to be a succession plan built into it so new commissioners who get appointed can learn from the experience of the more savvy ones.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Will you endeavour to use section 14(4) of the Public Agencies Governance Act to provide a grace period for commissioner appointments?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that is a section that can always be used, but there is no necessity to even contemplate it because the Appeals Commission has a chair, and the chair appoints and recommends members to the commission. The chair is in charge of making sure that this balance that I referenced prior exists – hence, it is labour and employers, experience versus nonexperience – so that we don’t continuously renew the same commissioners. If we did, there would be a time when most of them would retire, and there would be no new ones with the experience to take over.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Climate Change

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Climate change is a reality and poses a significant challenge for this province. Alberta Liberals believe government needs to act in good faith to reduce Alberta's carbon footprint. To the Minister of Environment. The minister's federal counterpart just came out with a target of 17 per cent reduction by 2020. How is Alberta going to participate in Canada meeting those targets?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is going to participate in Canada meeting those targets by continuing to do what we're already doing: by continuing to lead the way; by using the legislation that we already have in place in this province, that no other province has, quite frankly, that has mandatory reductions for large industrial emitters; like the announcement that we had at noon today, when we formed a partnership with our municipalities, put $2 million into a centre of excellence program so that municipalities can work to achieve reductions of their carbon footprint. Alberta will do its part.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. Given that the feds have moved to hard caps, at some point the minister will have to stop dithering around with intensity emissions and put in real caps to meet the federal targets. When is this going to happen?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of hard caps versus intensity caps is something that is often the subject of much debate. But I remind the member that whether it's intensity or whether it's hard caps, the fact of the matter is that the legislation that we have in Alberta requires real reductions of CO₂ on the part of industry. In the hard cap world, the European world, in case the member hasn't noticed, there are actually allowances built into that system for growth. So whether you call it intensity or whether you call it hard cap, the fact of the matter is that you have to allow for growth. That's what our system does.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. As a result of the government not having their act together on tailings ponds, on reclamation, on wetlands, on emissions, on the health of our northern aboriginal population, our international reputation is getting hammered, and our economy is being affected. When is the government going to ramp up Alberta's environmental performance?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that is the job that I have on a day-to-day basis. There is not a day that goes by that we are not pushing the envelope, that we are not improving the technology, improving the performance. That being said, let's not overlook the tremendous amount of work that's already in place. This is the most highly regulated industry in all of the world. That can improve and will improve, and it will do it under the stewardship of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta Initiative for School Improvement

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately $572 million have been put into the Alberta initiative for school improvement since 2002. What I've heard from a lot of teachers and students and parents is that this money takes teachers out of the classroom and puts them into administrative or management-type roles. I'm curious as to what value taxpayers and students are receiving through this program. To the Minister of Education: are there any quantitative measurements in place to measure the outcomes of the AISI program?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say that we're celebrating the 10th anniversary of the AISI program. It has been an outstanding success for the Alberta education system. All AISI projects must meet criteria and requirements set out by the Education Partners Steering Committee, which is comprised of government, teachers, school authorities, parents, and educational institutions. I can tell you that there are very, very few circumstances where the process of AISI would take teachers out of the classroom and put money into administration. It's about teachers in the classroom doing applied research, and they're doing it very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that happens all the time.

To the same minister: what measurable improvements in student outcomes can be attributed to the AISI program?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of examples of AISI projects which have improved results in literacy, in numeracy, in First Nations, Métis, and Inuit education practices, in distance learning, in student engagement, just to name a few. All results from the 10-year history are available publicly on the Education website. We have compiled reports and done studies on the various sectors of the AISI research to show, first of all, its impact, and secondly, to be able to share it so that the results of those projects can be used by other people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple weeks ago the minister spoke to the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils and indicated that it was important for government to maximize its finite resources. Again to the Minister of Education: has any cost-benefit analysis been done to determine if AISI is indeed the best value per dollar as compared to something as, let's say, reducing class sizes or simply just increasing the base instructional grants to school boards?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's always necessary to learn how to do things better. You can learn how to do things better by doing research on the job; applied research is a very effective tool. It's more than just about money to schools. It empowers educators to be involved in the evolution of teaching and learning and learning how to do things better and then sharing that learning. They have to be able to take risks. Not all AISI projects succeed. If all of them succeeded, we wouldn't be pushing the envelope hard enough and far enough. So it's important. We've done a 10-year review, and what came back from that 10-year review, I'll just say one thing: world-class, world-leading example of a system-wide educational strategy that inspires teachers and administrators. That's the succinct statement that I can give you from the review that says that AISI is working for Albertans.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Child intervention services suffered a debilitating $27 million cut in this week's budget. Essential services like child protection, family supports, and assistance for families providing permanent homes to children and youth are the programs that will suffer. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: given that Alberta already has one of the highest per capita populations of children in custody in Canada, why has the minister further reduced in-home support for children and their families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned to you earlier in the Assembly, it really is about early intervention, and the intervention area of the budget is multidimensional. We have some very good organizations in the province. Most recently in Calgary we had the FASD Conference, 600 participants, and every one of those people in that room worked with agencies in some way, whether it was policing, psychologists, health care with nurses, psychiatrists, just a number of people working together for that early intervention, to go in and assist that family so that the child does not need to be taken into care. That's cost-effective.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like the hon. minister to go back in time to her former career and recall the times when she physically patched up broken families. I would like to see that type of compassion demonstrated with families within Children and Youth Services.

This government is full of mixed priorities and mixed messages. Can the minister clarify how these proposed cuts reflect the government's commitment to protect the most vulnerable Albertans?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't want you to be misled into thinking that there are cuts throughout this whole budget because that's just not the case. There have been some cost-effective measures with the budget, which we've been asked for; all ministries were over the past year. I can tell you very clearly that the early intervention side of the budget, where the reduction is going to occur, is because it is cost-effective with what we've seen with the good programs over the past year that are showing really strong results. Tomorrow you will see the announcement of the triple-P program, which is the positive parenting program through parent link centres. They're making a real difference out there in the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would just like the minister to note that it is considerably less expensive to maintain the children and support them within their homes rather than to institutionalize them. There are a number of loving foster care parents out there – and I thank the families that provide that support – but it's less expensive to look after them within their families.

This ministry has been in crisis for years. Why should Albertans trust that these cuts won't bring about further decreases in the quality of already constrained services?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to see that the member agrees with me about the early intervention piece where you actually assist families with positive parenting skills, which the community is coming together to do. We just had the 100th anniversary yesterday of the Bissell Centre, and that's very much a part of their work. That's where you have the success of the family, and you don't take the children or youth into care. Foster parents: I agree that, you know, that's a very important program in this ministry, and that area is being increased by over $900,000.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

2:20 Airdrie-Chestermere Constituency Issues

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Dylan Nielson is a constituent of mine who suffered from a brain cyst that caused life-threatening seizures and made him so light sensitive that he couldn't even leave his house. His condition was initially misdiagnosed, and despite subsequent referrals from his family doc, specialists repeatedly refused him a second opinion, citing the initial misdiagnosis. Dylan was able to go the U.S. for treatment, and the seizures and light sensitivity have stopped. Unfortunately, the Nielsons have a huge medical bill that they can't afford. To the health minister: would you be willing to sit down with the Nielson family to see if there's anything this government can do to help them out?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, and I'd be pleased to have the hon. member join me in that meeting.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Minister. That's very good of you.

On another topic, the city of Airdrie has been forced into divesting itself of its prized integrated fire and ambulance service due to what looks like bungling by some agenda-driven bureaucrats at Alberta Health Services. This would be very disappointing for Airdrie-area residents. To the minister again: would you be willing to meet with the mayor and CEO of Airdrie to see if we can work out a solution that is acceptable to all parties involved?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is an integrated ambulance plan for ground ambulances, and Alberta Health Services has set some new, improved standards to protect safety and quality of delivery of services. In some other municipalities, perhaps the one being referenced, they are fortunate enough to have a separate fire department, and in some cases staff serve in both the ambulance sector and the fire sector. What we're trying to do is ensure that the standards aren't compromised by having staff vacate one position to service the other. So we're working that out, but yes, I'd be happy to meet with them as well.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Mr. Minister. I appreciate that. No further questions. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Oil Sands Global Image

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've now read in a few papers some troubling news that two American companies are boycotting Alberta's oil as part of their new policies designed to reduce their carbon footprints. The southbound flow of Alberta oil, which represents a fifth of all U.S. oil imports, is obviously crucial for our province and their economy as well. My question is to the Minister of Energy: what is the government doing to respond to the actions of these corporations and set the record straight about energy from the oil sands?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, for starters, that story appeared a couple of days ago in the great central Canadian bastion of Liberal propaganda, the Toronto Star. What has happened, actually, is typical. Two days later one of the companies issued a statement – that happened to be today – where they said: characterizations that we have rejected any particular fuels are not accurate because we're not in a position to do so. I think that this is just another one of those particular examples of where, quite frankly, business might make some decisions, and then consumers will express their views on those decisions, and it'll all work out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important that we get the factual information out, though, and based on studies by T.J. McCann, Cambridge Energy Research, and the Alberta Energy Research Institute, the wheel-to-well emissions from our bitumen are equal to or less than oil from other jurisdictions, including California's heavy oil and oil from Nigeria and Venezuela, to name a few. To the Minister of Environment: what is our government doing to make sure that the full life cycle of emissions is calculated and recognized when comparing energy from Alberta to other producing jurisdictions?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. Our oil sands oil does compare very favourably with a number of other alternate sources, including Venezuelan and California thermal, even taking into account that 80 per cent of emissions that are derived from the combustion of fossil fuel come out of the tailpipe and are not attributable to the source. That being said, as I've said many times in this House, this government is committed to ensuring that we not only talk about our existing record but that we have continuous improvement to ensure that we reduce that footprint.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another interesting piece of information that some people, including the opposition, tend to overlook is that industries in Alberta's oil sands are investing in cogeneration, producing power without incremental emissions, effectively generating low-emission or no-emission power from the oil sands. Constituents say that these should be used as part of the calculation of our oil sands carbon footprint. To the same minister: how will you ensure that these efforts will be fairly cited and recognized to further the development of our oil sands?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a complex issue that we're spending a great deal of time on right now. We're trying to come up with an accurate way of determining what are the CO₂ savings as a result of cogeneration, but most importantly intuitively we know that cogeneration is the right thing to do. We need to ensure that whatever kind of regulatory regime we put in place gives the right signals, gives the proper incentives to encourage industry to make these very valuable investments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The plans that the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports has for the persons with developmental disabilities program are not clear, making the future of this program quite uncertain. To the minister: what was the minister's reasoning for creating a new PDD eligibility criterion, and what evidence was used in its creation?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it's very important to me that every Albertan with a developmental disability is treated fairly and equally across the province. The eligibility requirement that the member refers to has not been changed. What we have changed is that instead of having it just in policy, it's now in regulation. The regulation provides more clarity and consistency throughout the province, and that was my purpose for putting it into place.

Ms Pastoor: Why is the minister making all PDD-funded individuals undergo reassessment with the new eligibility criterion?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the eligibility criterion is not new. Any person that is PDD funded and is eligible for our supports will not have to go through any new assessments or program. What we have that is new is something that's called the supports intensity scale. This is a new assessment tool that we are using to ensure once again that all persons with disabilities in the province of Alberta are treated the same from north to south, east to west.

Ms Pastoor: Will the minister guarantee that all people currently on PDD will not be denied PDD supports after the reassessments have been finished?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, any person in Alberta with developmental disabilities who is eligible for our funding supports and services will receive the supports and services that they are eligible for, and if they are receiving the correct supports, nothing will change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Northtown Seniors' Housing

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after my election almost two years ago I was contacted by a number of people from Wetaskiwin about a complex called the Northtown condominiums. These condominiums were inherited by Alberta Health Services from its predecessor the David Thompson health region. Many of those units had been empty, and they now have been empty for several years, and I'm wondering why. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can he advise as to what's being done to ensure that these units are made available to people in Wetaskiwin who want to live there?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, let me first say thank you to the residents of Wetaskiwin for their patience. The sale has not yet been finalized. There are some details that we still have to go through, and that includes looking at some bylaw amendments that are necessary. However, once those details are finalized, hon. member, you could see residents moving into that facility within four to six weeks after the details are sorted out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. I have one supplemental. I've been told that there are as many as 19 units sitting empty, many of them for a long time. I've been asked often about the costs of maintaining these units while they sit empty. I'm wondering if the minister can share any information that he might have in terms of the cost of maintaining these units.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are some nominal fees associated with keeping those units, and those nominal fees include things like condo fees, for example. The situation is not ideal, but it is solvable. I asked for this process to be looked at when I first heard about it a couple of weeks ago, hon. member, but I thank you for raising it here now, which will help accelerate the acceleration, and we'll get there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Severance Payments

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Treasury Board budget estimates forecast $30 million in separation payments this fiscal year. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. What is the $30 million in separation payments for?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, generally when we put aside money for separation payments, it's to pay people that are leaving government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That certainly confirms that there are plans by this government to lay civil servants off.

Again to the President of the Treasury Board: how are you going to calculate these separation payments fairly given that Paddy Meade, when she left Alberta Health Services after 10 months' employment, was paid $1.3 million in severance?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have a very consistent approach to the employees that work on behalf of the Alberta government. It is certainly not our pleasure or what we like to do to have to narrow down our number of employees that work for the Alberta government, but there are times that change, there are processes that we do better, there are IT improvements that we're able to do better, and occasionally people on our staff, both management and union, are let go. We very fairly deal with these people on a basis that's predetermined by their agreement with us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how is the government going to calculate these separation payments fairly after providing Jack Davis, the CEO of the Calgary health region, with a $1.6 million severance package and a $22,490-a-month pension for life?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that severance was given by the Calgary regional health authority, which is one darn good reason why we needed to bring all of these regions under one management. I'm sure that people were dealt with separately. There's no one in this House, I would presume, and probably very few Albertans that believe that some of the people that were let go earned or deserved those severances, but unfortunately when deals are made and contracts are signed, then you have to live up to them, and you go forward, not backwards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 55 runs through the northern part of my constituency. It is the lifeline of my constituents who work in the Cold Lake oil sands. The section of highway that my constituents are most concerned about is an eight-mile stretch that doesn't have any shoulders. My first question to the Minister of Transportation: why was this eight-mile stretch missed when the rest of the highway from Lac La Biche to Cold Lake has shoulders?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we recognize the importance of widening highway 55 and all other highways in Alberta. I do have to say, though, that this MLA, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, has done a great job championing this project. We realize that there is large-truck traffic on that highway and that widening is important. My department is currently completing the engineering and design work. In fact, we've purchased about half of the required rights-of-way, and I've asked them to try to look at this project to see if we can move it along.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question is to the same minister. This eight-mile stretch is a huge safety issue for my constituents. It is the number one concern for commercial truckers in my area. It has a school on it, which means school buses pick up and drop off students, it has logging trucks because of the logging business, it has tankers, and of course it has farmers that live on both sides of highway 55. What would it cost the government to widen this eight-mile stretch?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, on this particular stretch of highway it's difficult to determine that exact cost as we're still trying to work through the design and the detailing. But I have to tell you that when we used to always produce what we thought it was going to cost to build something, that seemed to be what the prices came in at. When we started not telling people what we thought it would cost, we started getting better bids, so we have no intentions of telling people what these bids should be.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question is to the same minister. I've been campaigning for the completion of this project for the past two years. My predecessor had been campaigning for it for several years before that. How long do my constituents have to wait for this dangerous eight-mile stretch to be widened?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear here. These highways are very, very important to us. When she says that it's a danger, safety is very, very important on the highways in Alberta. We plan on doing what we can, but we have to work within a budget. We have criteria out there that we adjust all our roads against, and at one point in time hers will be on the list. We're doing what we can to move it forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Environmental Monitoring of Oil Sands

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rate of bitumen extraction needs to almost double over the next three years, or this government will never balance a budget again. Now, added to this house of cards is the government's so-called plan to increase monitoring in the Fort McMurray area by not adding one single cent to compliance and monitoring and, instead, cutting it in every other area in the province. To the Minister of Environment: how can the minister stand by as development almost doubles without increasing environmental monitoring and compliance and protection at the same rate?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there are really two components to monitoring. One is the monitoring that is done by Alberta Environment, and basically that's to make sure we keep everyone honest. We have opportunity to do ambient air quality and water quality that is downstream from industrial operations. We also have as a requirement of an operating approval the monitoring by the developer, whoever that developer happens to be. So if there is an increase in the amount of development in the area, it will by extension result in an increase in monitoring.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, monitoring and enforcement measures have never been adequate in this province, so it's no wonder that international operations are discussing the possibility of boycotting the oil sands. It's interesting because the reality is that the environmental integrity of oil sands development will always be questioned as long as this minister continues to allow industry to police itself instead of investing in comprehensive, effective, independent oversight. To the same minister: why are you fighting for balance on a scale that is weighted so heavily in favour of oil and gas profits at the cost of our environment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of monitoring is one that I think gets misconstrued. As I've said and as I just said in the answer to the previous question, there are requirements within the operating approvals that industry must monitor and must report the results of that monitoring. In addition to that, there are spot checks that are done on a periodic and on an informal basis. These are not preannounced. These are like an unannounced visit to ensure that the monitoring is being done in an appropriate way. Over and above all of that, we do some of our own monitoring, that confirms or denies that the results we're getting from industry are accurate.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you're going to be left with fewer unannounced visits if you don't change the budget, and meanwhile you're leaving the fox guarding the chicken coop. It's not going to work.

The budget was called Striking the Right Balance, but an honest title would be: Hoping the Oil Sands Will Cover the Bills; We'll Deal with the Consequences Later, If Ever. How can you stand by and support a budget that cuts the environment as a whole when the need to protect it has never been greater?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'll let the minister of finance address the issue of what the budget does or does not presume in the future, but I can answer on behalf of my ministry how we are going to continue to ensure that we protect the environment despite the fact that, like a number of other ministries, we have had to find some efficiencies within our system. Those efficiencies do not involve the direct service to environmental protection. There are a number of ways that we have found to reduce within our department, and I can assure this member that none of them will compromise our ability to do our job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Alberta Health Services Board

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The former health minister disbanded the regional health boards without any transition plan in place. A year later he cobbled together a superboard from a temporary board and paid out approximately $18 million in gold-plated severance packages to 30 health care officials. Would the president of the treasury please advise this Assembly and all Albertans how many of these officials received a new job with Alberta Health Services or any other government position?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't know that answer. Certainly, any employment that has been offered through my department has been absolutely zero, but I would let the minister of health answer that question.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Could I just augment that and say that the new provincial board has effectively saved us between $600 million and $700 million so far.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, they'll do some research to find out whether it's happened or not.

The Minister's Advisory Committee on Health was assembled because of obvious flaws with the current health superboard and poor management decisions that were having a negative impact on patient care. In the interests of all Albertans will the new health minister replace the centralized superboard bureaucracy with local hospital administrators and give them the power and the authority needed to run the hospital in the best interests of their own communities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we had a good system for the time when we had the 17 health authorities and the nine, but, you know, having one provincial board for the health system has already proven beneficial. Let me give you three quick examples. Common procurement is one of them. Stopping the issue of doctor poaching, as it was sometimes referred to, is another. We stopped the bidding war, in other words. Having a centralized payroll system is saving the system between $600 million and $700 million annually. Between $600 million and $700 million annually. We think it's the right direction, but we also have local health advisory committees that are feeding into the system, so local input is still there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that of each of those problems he talked about – procurement would be very easy to do without a superboard. Encroachment: easy to eliminate that problem with proper management. It's not acceptable. The hundreds of millions that they're saving – we used to have volunteer hospital boards that looked after the local hospitals. Why doesn't the minister trust local hospital administrators to act in the best interests of the people in their own communities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what we've done is we've standardized a lot of things by centralizing them. We now have consistent stat gathering and consistent statistical data reporting, which helps us speed things up, such as the Alberta wait-list registry, so you can go back into the computer and punch up wherever you might want to go for a particular type of surgery. That system has been down for a while because of one central problem, and that was that everybody was doing their own thing locally and doing it very well, as the member has said. Unfortunately, they were reporting things and collecting data in their own ways. We now have standardized and centralized that, and we'll have a lot more of that consistency of purpose coming along as a result of centralizing it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to thank you for your co-operation again today. We were able to recognize 18 different members. There were 102 questions and answers: 12 came from opposition members and six from private government members.

Before I call Orders of the Day, it's quite amazing, in listening to all the members' statements today, all the enthusiasm that one could get for this particular weekend in 2010: the opening of the Olympics, which will put Canada's face before the whole world; Black History Month celebrations this weekend; for all your sweeties, Valentine's Day on the 14th; Family Day on the 15th; Chinese New Year; Vietnamese Tet. I'll tell you; I can get quite excited listening.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 10: Mr. VanderBurg]

The Speaker: Who am I recognizing to participate in the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much. It is indeed an honour to rise and speak to the Speech from the Throne. Building roads and schools and hospitals and public infrastructure to meet the needs of our growing economy and population is a priority for this government. Alberta is known for having the most advanced public infrastructure in North America, and yes, Mr. Speaker, we will fix those lights, and we will try to do it very soon so that you are not in the dark. While building modern infrastructure to meet Alberta's needs, it is vital to look beyond the bricks and mortar. It is what happens inside our buildings that is critical.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans and the services that we deliver to them are our first priority, and we are always striving for the best way to deliver Albertans' needs. The world has been in the deepest recession we have seen in half a century. Through good planning Alberta has a better outlook than most. This is due to our carefully planned fiscal advantages, including low taxes and nearly $25 billion we have saved and invested during good times. Our province is in an excellent position for a strong recovery. Our Premier's strategy for economic recovery includes continuing to strengthen our infrastructure in all regions of the province. This infrastructure is what will increase our competitiveness in a global economy.

Mr. Speaker, our universities, our hospitals, our schools attract people and business to this province. On my first day on the job I had the honour of attending the openings of three schools in the Grande Prairie area: Hythe regional school, Alexander Forbes school, St. Theresa Catholic school. I spoke to teachers, to students, and to parents about their new and newly renovated schools. I asked them what it was like to work and to learn in these new facilities. They were happy about their new schools, and the feedback came in in regard to their high-performance classrooms, which they described as incredible. They love the Smart boards, they love the acoustics, and they love the new space, that has both comfort and versatility. In these modern environments our students thrive. By providing places that students want to go to every day, we inspire and support learning and creativity. This is why it is important to continue building schools in this province and to continue building them well.

Looking ahead, Mr. Speaker, our made-in-Alberta schools alternative procurement project is a prime example of government's innovative solutions for delivering much-needed schools. These schools will provide first-class learning environments for students and staff. Classrooms are wired to accommodate the latest learning technologies. They are energy efficient and high quality and have lots of natural light. This innovative building project has already received national and provincial recognition, including six prestigious awards. The positive feedback and the success of the first project has led to the second one.

Altogether, Albertans will gain 32 new advanced schools in six Alberta communities two years faster than if we had used traditional methods. Mr. Speaker, let me repeat: two years faster than if we had used traditional methods. While these schools are leading edge and comfortable, they are also more economical. They save taxpayer dollars on design and on construction, and schools get built faster.

The Speech from the Throne also highlighted the government of Alberta's commitment to caring for our most vulnerable. Alberta's population is growing and aging. Albertans are also living longer. The increasing number of Albertan seniors will impact how new seniors' facilities are planned. Access to quality seniors' care is the foundation of our government's continuing care strategy. When I talk to seniors in my constituency, many tell me they want to live independently. They want to remain in their communities even as their needs change. They want to live with their partners. Basically, what they want are choices that help preserve their independence, quality of life, and personal dignity.

We know that supporting and enabling seniors and those with disabilities to age in place improves their quality of life and life expectancy. However, we want to go one step further so that Albertans can age in the right place. This is not about buildings; this is about what happens inside buildings. It is about creating a facility that enables the best continuing care. It is about creating support. It is about creating a place our seniors are proud to call home. Ensuring that our seniors are well cared for demonstrates the importance of what we're trying to achieve and why we are trying to do it.

The Alberta capital bonds will be introduced for sale later this month. They will only be available in Alberta, for Albertans. Proceeds raised through the sale of the bonds will go towards building accommodations for our seniors, accommodations that provide Albertans with choice and flexibility to meet the Premier's vision of supporting our seniors as they age in the right place. Providing high-quality space for our seniors delivers on our Premier's commitments of building tomorrow. Albertans are innovators. Albertans are proud of our province, and Albertans want to invest in their future.

When we build, we build for people who will use those facilities. Albertans as taxpayers must also be respected. Government has introduced a number of strategies to build and maintain public infrastructure for the best return on their tax dollars. We take advantage of opportunities to ensure good value for taxpayers and deliver infrastructure in a timely, cost-effective, and efficient manner. While many jurisdictions are cutting back and growing their infrastructure deficits, we're continuing to innovate and build. We know we have a responsibility to build wisely to get the most out of our investments, and we are. Through careful financial and capital planning we are getting the most out of each infrastructure dollar spent and supporting tens of thousands of jobs across the province. We are doing this because a strong provincial infrastructure is the foundation for long-term economic growth and for Albertans.

Investing in our infrastructure is a direct investment in improving Albertans' daily quality of life. In building new schools we are helping to educate. In building new hospitals we are keeping Albertans healthy. In building new seniors' accommodations we are letting seniors age in dignity. My top priority is to ensure that Albertans have the public buildings they need today and into the future. This is a priority of our Premier, for my ministry, and for the government of Alberta. We have the responsibility to plan now for the infrastructure needs of tomorrow, and building tomorrow begins today.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Would anybody like to ask a question of the minister or make a comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if the minister in his comments on infrastructure can tell us – and I don't have the information in front of me – if the government's inventory of the condition of provincial roads is showing an improvement or a deterioration over the next few years, the number of roads that are in good shape or poor shape, and I forget the middle category.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite knows that roads fall under Transportation, but if I can take the liberty to comment, to say that this government is investing $7.2 billion in infrastructure this year, and that includes schools, hospitals. It includes roads. It includes the infrastructure that this province is very much being a leader in, ensuring not only that we have the infrastructure but that it helps provide the jobs and that it helps provide a stable economic future for this province.

The Speaker: Others?

We'll go to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to start by thanking and congratulating the hon. Lieutenant Governor Kwong and his amazing wife, Mary, for serving and representing our great province in a dignified and honourable fashion.

Mr. Speaker, from when I was first elected, much has changed. We're in the midst of a world economic crisis. We've had H1N1. Hopes and dreams across the world have been shattered, and many in this world suffer from despair. Our province has been hit particularly hard economically due to our natural resource revenue declining at a time when we were in the midst of catching up to our recent economic boom. The truest test of the character of a people is not how you fare during the good times; it's what you do during the tough times.

Now, the Speech from the Throne applies to Albertans and to my constituents in Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd like to touch on a few points. One is Alberta's fiscal advantage. The major advantage that we have going through these tough times is that, one, we have no debt. No province in this nation can say that. Secondly, we have money in the bank in our RRSP account. No province in this nation can say that. Thirdly, we have money in a savings account, our sustainability fund, to help with the priorities that matter to people during the difficult times, priorities such as looking after educating our children, caring for our seniors, looking after our vulnerable, and providing services on the human-sector side. We do have challenges, Mr. Speaker, but these are challenges everybody in this nation and everybody in this world faces.

At the same time, on the economic side we have an economic climate with the lowest possible taxes to encourage the spirit of entrepreneurship in this province, to encourage small business, and to create what matters most to people, jobs, j-o-b-s. We have the lowest unemployment rate in the nation. During the tough time we still had a hundred thousand people flock here in search of jobs and hope so that they could care for their families.

The second issue is building safe communities. Safety is one of the main issues for the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark. We have to fight crime. We have to get tough on crime, on the bad guys. There are many people in Alberta, many people who are going through difficult times, and they make mistakes in life. Many of them have interactions with the health system and the criminal system. It might be because of homelessness. The root causes of homelessness are addiction and mental health issues and sometimes poverty. Are these hardened criminals? I'd say that these are Albertans who are having a tough time, and we've got to look after them. That's that commitment of building affordable housing units, getting our mental patients the help that they require and the wraparound services that they require, marrying mental health and addictions so that we can provide better, more effective care because many times patients have comorbidities. Not only do they have a mental health problem, but they have an addiction problem, and they also have a medical problem. In breaking down silos and barriers, we can address these issues.

The third issue is an increasingly competitive global marketplace. We need to continue to foster the Alberta dream, the dream of entrepreneurship, that if you want to work hard and work smart, you can achieve anything you want. Sometimes it requires a little bit of luck, but the two main characters are hard work and smart work and then to be in an atmosphere where those dreams can be encouraged, and that's what this province does. I can say this: part of that is addressed with a good education.

Let's talk about regulations. We can overregulate or underregulate. Really, what we need to talk about are good regulations to enable dreams to happen versus disabling dreams from happening. We're a major supplier, a safe supplier of energy and minerals and resources to the global marketplace. Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will address and make sure that we are the most competitive in this nation with respect to the energy sector and our resource sector.

The fourth issue is environmental stewardship. We do have to be careful with our environment in this world. I believe that in Alberta we took that leadership with, first, the intensity targets. I think there is more that needs to be done. We have solar power, wind power. Carbon capture and storage is one solution, and there's individual responsibility. I think we all as individual Albertans can play a major role in improving the environment of the great province that we live in. We can be a beacon of hope to other, developing nations in helping them with their environmental challenges such as India and China and other nations that are up and coming who want to have the life that we have here.

Mr. Speaker, the most important thing I'd like to talk about. You know, I had mentioned a quote by Martin Luther King Jr.: life begins to end the day we become silent about things that matter. In this House today I'd like to break my silence about the number one issue that affects not only our great province but also this great nation and many of the G-8 nations, and that issue is health care. Dealing with health care is actually beyond health care. Health care is the symptom, not the problem. The wealth of our nation depends on the health of our nation, the fact that we're competing in a global marketplace. The health of our workforce determines the economic productivity of our business sector.

I just have to give you, I think, evidence and examples of the best way to deal with this. A good friend of mine – I won't mention his name – went to the United States, fell off a bus, and broke his ankle and needed a cast. He was in Florida. He was hospitalized for two days, got a cast, and got an X-ray. No operation, no intravenous, no CAT scans. Guess what his bill was? Take a guess. Thirty-seven thousand dollars U.S. – $37,000 U.S. – at a private hospital. Our insurance plan had to get the lawyers involved, and we whittled that down to $9,000 plus the legal fees. You know what his bill would have been had he come to our hospital, the Royal Alex? Six hundred bucks. We never would have put him in the hospital because he probably didn't need to stay in the hospital. Six hundred bucks. I think we can deliver health care more efficiently here.

In the U.S.A. our good cousins south of the border spend an average of $7,500 U.S. per person on health care. Here's the outcome: 60 per cent obesity rates, and their life expectancy is less than ours. That's after 50 million hard-working Americans, hard workers, have no insurance. They just get medicaid when they end up sick in the emergency department. Then they get very expensive care.

This has affected the economic productivity of every major corporation who is competing against the Indians and the Chinas of this world. They have healthy, productive employees who don't get paid too much. Here we have unhealthy, unproductive employees because of their health. There's a reason that there is an economic catastrophe south of the border: health care. Health care is their major issue, and part of health care is the drug costs and the legal costs.

My health insurance, my legal liability insurance to work at an inner-city trauma centre here, is about 245 bucks a month. In the U.S. I'm sure that figure would be at least 10 to 15 times more.

In Canada we spend $4,200 to $4,400 per person per year on average in this nation. Our outcome is that we have 30 per cent obesity rates. Life expectancy is 78.2 years for men and 82.7 years for women according to the 2008 census figures. But the challenge that we have in this nation is – actually, times to get access to care have been improving.

Now, here's a critique of our health system in this nation. We in this nation have talked about the Canada Health Act. We have this Canada Health Act. The five principles are public administration, comprehensiveness, universality, portability, and accessibility, but access to care has gotten worse. In this nation, in Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Ontario, many of these provinces, in their budgets health care is 50 per cent.

My comments are based on the fact that I've worked for 17 years, talked to many experts in this province, this country, and this world on what we need to do. This is what we're doing. Mr. Speaker, number one is that we need a vision. That vision was articulated in A Foundation for Alberta's Health System. It's a comprehensive document developed by experts in health care, experts in safety, experts from this province, and this report has been accepted.

The number two issue is to actually fund health care. We in this province have made a decision to fund health care.

The number three issue is really how we're going to deliver health care. I believe we can deliver it efficiently. That's why we went to one region. Health care is so superspecialized that you simply cannot provide every service in every hospital in every town, let alone every province. There are fantastic ideas that happened in nine different regions. We're taking the best of the regions to apply those standards province-wide.

We go to one electronic health record. Fantastic work was done in Calgary in bone marrow transplants. Great work in Capital health in cardiac transplants. We were the model in health care in the nation with the electronic record, and that record is being standardized. We did Bill 52 last year. We're going to hook up all the family doctors' offices, get the records so we don't have to keep repeating tests all the time, but we must do it while protecting the public's privacy. It was a collaborative decision made by an all-party committee. I believe we came to reasonable compromises in helping protect privacy while we work on the record.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is really about creating the best performing publicly funded health care system not just in this country, I would say in this world. We have an opportunity to have the best publicly funded health care system on this planet. For that, I would first start by thanking the Member for Calgary-West for creating the opportunity, having the political will and the courage to withstand the criticism to allow us to do this by going to one region.

Secondly, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and Ms Prowse for leading this conversation and bringing out this report.

Lastly, I'd like to thank the Premier and the hon. minister from Edmonton-Mill Creek for taking this baton forward and working on the funding part.

Mr. Speaker, when I was a representative of the emergency docs – and I still work every Sunday – when I used to lecture across the country, my friends across the country used to say: we in the other parts of the country have wonderful ideas, but you people in Alberta actually have the courage to do something about it, the political courage to actually do something about it.

Mr. Speaker, the nation is watching. I lay a challenge to every health minister in this nation. I lay a challenge to the Prime Minister of this nation to adopt this, to revise the Canada Health Act and stop rationing health care. Let's deliver it efficiently. Let's deliver it effectively. Let's have evidence-based health care. Let's concentrate on outcomes: what do we do with the money we spend, and what outcome do we get? Let's do it together with the people that actually work on the front lines. Let's start by asking Albertans and Canadians what they expect from their health care system, what they want, how we're going to get there. We've got to get there with them coming at our side.

I lay a challenge to our good friends south of the border to pass that bill. Those 50 million people who are not insured are workers. That's got to make the economic productivity of the labour workforce even worse. Mr. Speaker, this issue is way beyond health care, way beyond the proportion of your budget. This issue will affect us economically. It has affected us economically because now the borders have opened up.

We have not enough young people coming up. We have a lot of seniors. It's not the seniors alone. It's their kids and their grandkids when they went from active lifestyles to inactive lifestyles. Our childhood obesity rates in this nation have gone the wrong way.

The one thing that's gotten better is smoking rates. We're down to 19 per cent from, I believe, 50 or 40 per cent from when Mr. Marlboro used to smoke, and guess how he died. Lung cancer. All his buddies had heart disease 15 or 20 years before their mother and father would have had it.

You know what? Their kids', their grandkids' obesity rates have gone from 20 to 29 per cent. These kids are having diabetes at the age of 10, type 2 diabetes. Mental health rates have gone through the roof. One hundred per cent of our kids eat too much salt. They don't move enough. They move less than ever. They eat more than ever and eat the wrong stuff more than ever.

Yes, we need more doctors and nurses. Yes, we need to run the system more efficiently. But you know what? We need fewer patients.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, but there's an opportunity now for 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Yes. I'd like to ask the hon. member – you said something that sparked my attention. You said that health is going to be the number one issue in the world and here as well. Now, I would think that the economy would be the number one issue in the world because if we don't have a healthy economy, how are you going to pay for health and education? Could you answer that for me?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question. In fact, these issues are all intertwined. You're absolutely correct. Jobs are very important, and health is very – they are all intertwined. Health, education, and economic participation: these are the pillars of every society. When we have jobs, we've got to make sure that employees are healthy. But you know what? You could have healthy employees, but they have no jobs. Then they get unhealthy, and they get depressed. So we need it all.

I'd like to thank the hon. member. I'm a doctor, so I'm a little biased. I have to sort of put the health thing a little forward, but you're absolutely correct. Economy is also one of the number one issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. member for his speech. I enjoyed his presentation, and I listened with interest.

First off, I would like to request a copy of the document that he was referring to in his speech. I could see the title from here. I'm surprised. It was A Foundation for Alberta's Health System. It's a document I'm not familiar with, and I sure would appreciate one. I believe I'm going to get one, and I would like to say in advance thank you.

I would also like to ask the hon. member how he feels the activity-based funding formula that was referred to in question period earlier today will ensure that we do not see any more of the billion-dollar deficits that were recently racked up by Alberta Health Services. How will that exactly work?

Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you for another opportunity to answer a good question. Really, the activity-based formula in simplified terms – there are two ways of funding. One is global budget, which is: here's a lot of money with no performance and accountability measures. Activity-based is – I don't want to use the words "fee for service" because as a doctor I get paid a salary for one day; whether I see zero patients or a hundred patients, I get the same salary. Or another situation: I get paid only if I see patients; if I don't see anyone, I get nothing. Activity-based is really saying: "You know what? If you do X amount of operations, you get X amount of funding. The more you do, the more you get." It's really about performance and efficiency and outcomes, but it's not just simple activity-based based on how much you do. We have to look at quality as well, make sure you have high quality and high performance.

That's my understanding of activity-based funding. The person we really need to ask, the real expert in this, to be honest, is Dr. Duckett, who is the CEO of Alberta Health Services Board.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: In the time remaining, quickly, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member: will an activity-based system create competition between hospitals within Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for another good question. As I mentioned, health care is so superspecialized. We simply cannot provide every service in every hospital or every city or every province even. It's really not about competition. It's about: how can we get every hospital to perform the best that they possibly can?

I see a collaboration between the hospitals. I work at the Royal Alexandra hospital and the U of A hospital. There's no competition. If I have a patient that's suffering and they need specialized care at the U of A, my good friends at the U of A help us out. This is really about delivering good, efficient health care and less about competition. The only competition is how I performed yesterday in my own department. Can I perform better tomorrow in the same department?

But if you have two identical hospitals with two identical services, there is that opportunity for them to – I don't want to use the word "compete." I'd rather use the word "collaborate." But, yes, you can actually assess how one does against the other. Then with the one that doesn't do so well, the other hospital can actually coach them and teach them. We apply these standards and say: look, this is what we're doing better. "Collaboration" is a better word.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll begin, as so many members have, with acknowledging the fine work and the wonderful presence and sense of humour and, somehow, a magical combination of humility and pride that the Lieutenant Governor has had. He could always tell a joke and deliver it like nobody else could. I want to acknowledge the work he and his wife did over the last several years.

I'm going to focus in my response to the throne speech on health care since that's a theme this afternoon. The minister is here, and I appreciated the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'll try to take a little bit different approach here.

I do want to just spend a moment on how we got to where we are, from where I see it, with our health care system. I genuinely believe that up until 1993, for the period probably from about '85 to '92 or

'93, Alberta had perhaps the best health care system in the world, and we'd like to restore that. Amazingly, if you actually go back and crunch the numbers, costs were quite flat during that time. We got into a period of terrific upheaval from 1993 onward.

I notice there's a new deputy minister of health in the last couple of weeks. It's worth pointing out that he is – I have the list here – the 12th or 13th deputy minister since 1993. I have the list of all the names. That's just one symptom of how unstable that health care system has been. We've had regional health authorities come and go there, consolidation of boards and then further consolidations. Some were disbanded, and now we're down to one.

We've had really erratic funding. We went from among the highest in the country to the very lowest. We sat at way below the Canadian average from about 1995 to early into the last decade, 2000 and 2001 – I've been studying these numbers recently – and then it's just been a roller coaster ride since. That unstable funding keeps the whole system off of balance. It affects not just buildings – and we are desperately squeezed on the health care infrastructure front – but it also affects, more importantly, staffing. That instability continues to play out.

Many of us were at an AUMA breakfast this morning, and the mayor of Cold Lake, who I'd never met before, stood up and said, you know, as I recall the mayor this morning: "What's going on here? Two or three months ago Dr. Duckett was in our hospital essentially telling staff to leave or to get ready to leave." You know, 18 months ago we were on an aggressive recruiting campaign. Then we went into a hiring freeze. Now we're back into some kind of – well, we're not sure what we're back to, and that was the mayor's question this morning. He quite rightly pointed out that that instability is devastating to morale.

There are a lot of reasons that we are where we are with health care, and I think it's because, frankly, of 17 years of poor management and poor leadership. I can't put it any more bluntly than that. I hope that's come to an end.

I will say this to the minister and to all members, that with the increase of funding proposed in this budget, assuming that goes through, there will be no excuses for anything less than a health system that delivers and delivers on time and at high quality, that runs like a well-oiled Swiss watch. We do not need big increases after what we've seen in this budget; that's for sure.

I think we need to spend a minute on asking ourselves: why are costs soaring? I think one of the reasons, obviously, is the instability. That kind of up and down and up and down is simply inefficient. I also think that there are concerns around an overcentralization in Alberta Health Services. For all the purported savings that we hear the minister talk about, there are also indications that there are much larger problems. I think we want to consider returning to a model where the delivery itself is more decentralized.

Clearly, there's a role for a strong centre, but having the situation that we've gone through in the last year, where virtually all external recruitment has to be signed off by the CEO, doesn't make sense. This is an organization that has 90,000 employees. It's larger than the entire Canadian armed services. When you have one guy at the top insisting on signing off recruiting individual RNs from outside the system, this is not a way to run the system effectively. I have concerns with the overcentralization of service delivery.

That doesn't mean that consolidating IT, maybe payroll, and setting provincial standards isn't a good idea. I think it is. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? What I really want to dwell on is that I think there's more to what's happening to our health care system and what's driving health costs than just how we administer the system.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark alluded to some of these. He said – I liked his term – it's not that we need more health care; we need fewer patients. We need to ask ourselves: why are we getting those patients? And we do need to pay attention to the economics because one of the downsides well demonstrated in the health economics literature of fee for service and other incentives is that medicine is one of those things where doctors can create their own customers. They can actually start bringing people back, you know, "Well, come back in two weeks, and I'd better check you" or that sort of thing. So economic incentives in health care do not work like they work elsewhere, and we need to understand that.

But it goes way beyond that. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark hinted at some of it. In fact, he spoke directly to some of it: lifestyle issues; diet issues, which he mentioned; inactivity; even, frankly, an issue that I wish we spent more time on in this Legislature, which is highway safety. Do we actually – we used to do this; I don't know if we still do – look at what drives, sometimes literally, or what brings people into emergency rooms? It certainly used to be the case that highway safety and road safety accidents created a terribly heavy burden on our emergency systems. Alcohol abuse, drug abuse: all of those kinds of things. But we need to go beyond that even more. We need to look at issues around the environment.

I want to spend a couple of minutes on this. What I would have liked to have seen in the throne speech would have been some acknowledgement of the social conditions that create health problems. They are widespread. I would urge the minister of housing, for example, and the minister of health and other MLAs to think more broadly about health care. I was looking at Statistics Canada figures on Alberta's spending on issues like health and housing and justice, social services, things like that, and I saw that as Alberta's spending on health care was inching up and inching up and sometimes spiking up and dropping down but overall inching up, our spending on housing actually almost literally disappears off the graph. When you divide it through by population and so on, it almost disappears. I realized when I did the numbers – I think the minister of housing might want to take this to next year's budget debate – that a 2 per cent increase in health care would be a 50 per cent increase in spending on housing.

I ask myself: when we're spending so far below where we were 20 years ago on housing, is that really wise? How many people who are hard to house, who would benefit from a stronger social housing program actually end up in emergency rooms? Well, a lot of them do. They're on the street. They end up in crisis. The police are called in or an ambulance, and they're taken to the hospital. I think it would be worth a very serious look by the minister of housing to look at the connection between homelessness and health care use. Maybe we should look at a tiny shift in increments to the health budget going to housing and having a huge impact on housing and improving social conditions that way.

I also think we need to take a harder look at poverty. Again, looking at Statistics Canada figures over the last 20 years, Alberta went from above the Canadian average on spending on social services – it was hard to believe; I went over the numbers again and again, but in a single year, 1994, we fell to the bottom of the country when you compile all social service spending, and we've sat there ever since.

We need to understand that this is a factor in what's happening to our health system because good investment in social programs, Mr. Speaker, is going to help address some of the issues that cause health problems. If we don't catch them early by addressing poverty, by addressing family violence, by addressing mental health issues that occur often in the home, by addressing addictions issues and other things, those people end up in our health care system. So I think we need to have a broader look at health care than just what happens in our health department.

We need to be looking at social services. An example that I raised repeatedly in this Legislature and finally gave up talking to the government members about was feeding hungry kids, kids who go to school every day. Today in Alberta several thousand children went to school hungry in this province through no fault of their own. You know what, folks? That becomes a health issue, if not in the short term then in the long term. It would be a lot smarter for us to understand that a little bit of investment in our kids and their diet isn't just about social justice, it isn't just about humanity, but it's about smart long-term health policy.

As we address those kinds of issues – housing, poverty, social services – we also address something that's actually turning up more and more in the progressive research into what's driving health costs. Amazingly, inequality itself begins to show up as a factor, a significant factor, in health problems. Over and over you can look at the distribution of wealth in various societies, and those that have the most unequal distribution of wealth typically have worse health outcomes than those that have fairly tight distribution of wealth.

You can take a country like Greece or Portugal. They are much poorer countries than the United States, but once you filter out all the other variables, what comes out over and over is that they have better health indicators than the United States because – and it's a bit hard to get your head around – inequality is actually less in countries like Greece and Portugal.

Inequality creates a stress on mental health and endorses almost a sense of blame on poverty. It reflects a society that stops trying to raise people out of poverty and begins heaping blame on them and telling them: it's your fault. That turns up over and over in the scientific literature as a contributor to health problems.

I'm going to run out of time here in a minute or so, Mr. Speaker, but I want to urge this Assembly to think more broadly about health. If we're going to get that health budget under control, then let's really, really search the issue that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark raised, which is: why are we having so many patients? If we really, really search that and really get serious about it, we will address issues around diet and exercise and lifestyles.

But we'll go beyond that. We'll get back to where we were from the 1950s to the early 1990s, which is having genuinely good housing programs for people who are hard to house. We'll get back to what would've been a simple issue of humanity 20 years ago, which is feeding hungry kids. We'll look at environmental issues. We'll understand that it is a legitimate role of government to try to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor, not just because of the humanity, as I say, but because it's good for people's health and it will help us contain health issues.

If I had more time, Mr. Speaker, I'd speak briefly about the proud history that this province and this country have on those kinds of issues and how I'd like to see that history revisited.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview had started to talk about the history. Would you mind expanding on that?

Dr. Taft: I would be happy to expand on that.

An Hon. Member: Recognizing that there are other questions.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I will recognize your other questions.

Ever so briefly, Mr. Speaker. Back, actually way, way, way back before this government was in power, Social Credit, to their great credit, started a program called preventative social services, PSS, as it was known, in the later '60s. In I think the first term of this current party holding government, in the first half of the 1970s, that program was rolled into FCSS, which is still in place. For those who don't know – I'm sure everybody does – it's family and community support services. Now, that program has been hemmed in a bit. Both of those programs were in their origins quite visionary. They understood that health is about a lot more than just what goes on in a hospital. It's actually about strong communities. It's about supporting families. It's about giving kids a place to play and just helping them have fun.

I will ever so briefly mention a few other things. Canada in the '70s was truly a global pioneer on issues around a broader perspective on health. There was a very important book brought out in the mid-70s called a New Perspective on the Health of Canadians, which understood – we're still debating these issues – that health was about a lot more. Our housing programs, starting from the '50s through until about 20 years ago or so, were fantastic, and there are still thousands of people in Alberta living in affordable housing that was built 40 and 50 years ago. I could go on about that.

I'm just saying that all of this was possible. We used to be able to do it. Let's do it again, and that'll help us contain our health spending.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to address one particular issue that the hon. member made with respect to what I believe he called the overcentralization of health services in Alberta, or words to that effect. My point to the hon. member is this. I'm wondering whether or not he agrees with comments made by the Auditor General of Alberta that prior to establishing one provincial Health Services Board, we basically had nine rather different health systems in Alberta. In fact, the Auditor General, as I recall, went on to say that there was a lot of differentiation among these nine regions. I just wonder if the hon. member would agree with the Auditor General's observations.

Dr. Taft: I do, actually, but I think the solution was somewhat different. What I would have liked to have seen would be actually a bulking up of the muscle in the Department of Health and Wellness. That department was basically cut in half by the predecessor in 1993-94. That department used to be able to set standards on everything from infection control to long-term care, and they used to have consultants that would go around to all the different facilities and enforce them. Now, that was not a perfect system, but what I felt happened when this centre was chopped in half: all that expertise was gone, and it was pushed out into these regions, which became empires.

What I'd like to see would actually be a stronger central department setting standards and enforcing them and decentralized delivery.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of things that I picked up while the member was speaking. One thing, just a reference to poor management in our health care system. I'm not sure that comment is entirely fair to our health care administrators in this province. I think he would agree that health costs are soaring because of increasing skill levels and training, equipment, technology, drugs, all the things we can do today that we weren't able to do that we still fund through a public system.

A couple of other things. He touched on feeding hungry kids and some huge societal issues, which certainly need to be tackled a piece at a time in Alberta, but they exist pretty much all over the world. Quickly, though, he talked about unequal distribution of wealth, and I'm just wondering what his vision would be to redistribute wealth here in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: I have to recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity to address this Chamber and express my support for the plan for Alberta set forth by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in his Speech from the Throne on February 4. Let me just say what a wonderful privilege it's been the last two years to serve with our Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, and his wife, Mary. They've been truly an inspiration to us all, and it's been an absolute pleasure for me to get to know Mr. and Mrs. Kwong.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that true character shows itself during times of adversity and that the measure of a person's character is how we react to the most difficult situations in life. This past year more than any in recent memory has challenged not only Alberta but the entire world. The province's resource-based economy has been dealt a staggering blow by the global economic downturn. Many Albertans have felt this blow and seen a decline in their quality of life. I believe the plan outlined by the Speech from the Throne shows the government's character and proves that the principles and priorities identified by the Premier over the past two years are guiding Alberta into a bright future.

This plan will meet the needs of Albertans by balancing strategic investment in infrastructure with sound fiscal management. Investment in infrastructure will continue to create jobs and provide necessary improvements for Albertans, while careful spending and saving will ensure that this province continues to enjoy the lowest taxes in Canada and remains one of the world's most attractive business environments.

Careful spending requires careful prioritization, and I believe the government has achieved that. A perfect example has been the commitment to reforming our health care system to deliver the best services while managing costs that threaten to spiral out of control in the coming years. While many of these reforms will come from within the health care system itself, Mr. Speaker, I'm also encouraged by this government's commitment to consulting with Albertans on the future of health care. My constituency office conducted a series of focus groups with Lethbridge seniors last year. This focus group showed that health care was their number one concern. I know they will also be glad to know they've had the opportunity to have a say in this matter.

In Lethbridge we have already seen a number of success stories in health care. The Chinook regional hospital, for example, has the lowest emergency room wait times in the province, according to a recent survey. Wait times were also drastically reduced for colonoscopies thanks to a partnership between the CHR and the Coaldale health centre.

Despite what many critics would have Albertans believe, our health care system is working and will only get better as we move forward with changes to increase efficiencies and reduce unnecessary costs. The five-year funding plan will go a long way to achieving that goal, especially in addressing much-needed capital projects and allowing for long-term planning. I urge my constituents and all Albertans to take an active role in understanding and contributing to the changes that will create a world-class, economically sustainable health care system for themselves and generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, I was also encouraged to see this government's approach to maintaining safe and caring communities. The creation of 100 new positions for police officers will not only bolster public safety throughout the province but will also create a hundred jobs. I'm sure many of those jobs will go to graduates of the Lethbridge College criminal justice program and that those people will make outstanding police officers.

The Premier's 10-year plan to end homelessness has also been embraced in my hometown. Lethbridge's Social Housing in Action committee has been working tirelessly to address homelessness in the city. In addition to many other projects, the committee also created Project Homeless Connect, an event that saw hundreds of people receive food, clothing, toiletries, and even haircuts. The event also connected people to various agencies around the city that are dedicated to helping the homeless such as JobLinks, Wood's Homes, and the Lethbridge Legal Guidance Society. Mr. Speaker, I believe a balanced society is a successful society and that spending on social programs must be balanced with support for the entrepreneurial spirit that built Alberta's economy into one of the strongest in the world.

As a businessman for over 30 years I was excited to see the government's commitment to maintaining this province's reputation as a smart place to do business. By reducing red tape and removing hurdles, we will attract new companies to Alberta and encourage existing companies to grow. Last night I had the privilege of attending Venture's fast-50, which are the fastest growing 50 companies in Alberta. Let me tell you: what an exciting and charged room to be in, with entrepreneurs from across this province that are working and working hard to keep our economy going. Yes, many success stories, Mr. Speaker.

Lethbridge is known far and wide as the agricultural hub of southern Alberta, and food production and processing are an integral part of our city's economy. At the same time, there's a huge potential to grow the city's industrial base. Economic Development has been working hard to position our city as a prime spot for new business, particularly light industry and other major employers. In fact, the team was honoured by the Economic Developers' Association of Canada with an award recognizing its collaborative business promotion. Let me just say that I was at an announcement last week where the federal government as well as the private sector committed significant dollars, and we now have a brand new business incubator in Lethbridge that will provide opportunities to bring to market many of the wonderful technologies being created in Alberta at our universities and colleges.

Mr. Speaker, this dovetails nicely with a recent move by the city and the county of Lethbridge that landed former WestJet executive John Hamilton as the new director of the airport enhancement and marketing initiative at Lethbridge County Airport. Mr. Hamilton's job will be to attract new air carriers to help create more competitive local markets for airfares.

Mr. Speaker, education goes hand in hand with growing the economy, particularly in these changing times. As the new parliamentary assistant to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology I look forward to helping implement the government's new vision for education. Alberta will need a variety of people in the coming years to help us grow and develop to our fullest potential. This will include highly skilled workers, innovative researchers, and forward-thinking entrepreneurs. Lethbridge will be a key source of these future leaders thanks to our two world-class postsecondary institutions. The University of Lethbridge has grown from the little school on the prairie to one of Canada's top undergraduate institutions and is also recognized as one of the best, if not the best, neuroscience research schools in the world. Thanks to the $20 million Polaris grant from the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research the U of L added Dr. Bruce McNaughton to this already impressive lineup of neuroscience researchers last year.

Lethbridge College is also a world leader in a field that dovetails perfectly with this government's focus on ensuring positive environmental outcomes. The college's wind turbine technician program, one of only a handful in the world, won the 2009 program excellence award from the association of community colleges. The program attracts students from all over the world and produces graduates with unique skills that are in global demand.

On the subject of the environment, Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with this government's continued commitment to reducing the environmental impact of Alberta's energy sector, particularly in the oil sands. I had the opportunity a few months ago to see the oil sands projects in person, and I was very impressed by some of the new technologies like SAGD that will help transform this method of oil extraction in the years to come. I am confident that the collaborative approach to reducing Alberta's carbon footprint outlined in His Honour's speech will allow our energy sector to continue to thrive and Alberta along with it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne shows that this government is already moving forward with the business of serving Albertans. By finding the right balance between social and fiscal responsibility, we have laid out a map for the future that is not only affordable and sustainable but caring as well. Albertans deserve a government that meets their needs without picking their pockets, a government that understands the importance of both a thriving economy and a network of social programs that ensures that no Albertan gets left behind. I'm proud to be a member of that government. I will continue to represent Lethbridge-West and help this government achieve its goals in the coming session of the Legislature. Now more than ever I believe that when all Albertans work together towards a common goal, there is nothing we can't accomplish.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to thank the Member for Lethbridge-West for his rather impassioned speech. The member commented on some of the housing and homelessness initiatives that this province is undergoing. I'm wondering if he knows offhand how many people every month we helped out through rent support programs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although I'm not an expert at this, I've heard numbers in the area of 80,000 people that we've been able to help through this program in Alberta. I think it's wonderful that we can help Albertans that need it. I know that every day in Lethbridge we hear where this has been successful. It's helped needy families and single parents, so it's a great program.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member want to join the five minutes?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the throne speech debate this afternoon, and it was certainly interesting to listen to the comments from hon. members from across the province. I, too, would like to express my gratitude to His Honour Norman Kwong for his service to this Assembly and, certainly, to the province. He and his wife have done a very, very good job of representing Her Majesty in this province, and we can only thank him now and wish him and his family all the best and good luck in the future.

Certainly, I remember with fondness and admiration some of the efforts that His Honour has made in our constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, in particular. He was gracious and very welcoming to each and every constituent who in 2005 received a centennial medal. He and his wife went out of their way at a reception we hosted to make everyone – everyone – who was awarded a medal feel like the moment was memorable and to be cherished. I really appreciated that, and I appreciated his time. He agreed to come to our constituency, and I and our constituents will never forget it.

He also agreed at one point to attend a banquet for young football players. They will never forget that evening with His Honour. He went around to each one of those individual players and made them feel very, very special. After he had left, I asked them if they had any comments, and as high school students would say: he was very small, but he must have been very quick. He was absolutely quick on the athletic field, and he was quick in this Assembly with his humour. With that, again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish His Honour and his family good health and good luck in the future and thank them for their outstanding service to our province.

Now, when we look at the throne speech that His Honour delivered last week and we listen to the comments from various speakers, it's almost like we're living in two different worlds. When we look at what has happened in this province and across the world since the last throne speech to now, it is an incredible story, and it's unfolding as we speak. Economic conditions have changed. Prices have changed for our resource-based economy. That, of course, has had quite an impact on the budget of this province.

Before I get to the budget and where we're spending our money, I would like to get on the record and thank the hon. minister of health for his report that was initiated by the advisory committee on health. We had seen that, but the Internet version, I believe, starts on page 8, and that front page bold title is one that I had not seen before. Yes, we have had a look at this, and we've had a look on this side of the House at other health care reports. It's not this report, I believe, that's guiding the government in their health care changes. I think it's that Vision 2020 document or the old third-way document with the green Granny Smith apple. I guess all Granny Smith apples are green. It is that document that is guiding this government's latest policy initiative with Alberta Health Services. We know, getting back to the budget, Mr. Speaker, how that has worked out.

We are looking at an organization that's been created and, certainly, controlled by this government, Alberta Health Services. It's a large organization, and it's also governed by a large board that meets in public routinely for 35 or 40 minutes monthly. That's it. The information that's provided publicly by them regarding their deliberations is limited; it's restricted. Who knows what they discuss, because so little is discussed in public, but the public is expected to foot the bill.

Now, I had a look at some of the limited information that was available on December 3, 2009, and there is a breakdown here of the accumulated deficit of the health board, the operating deficit, the accumulated deficit. Taxpayers would certainly be interested to know that for the year to date the accumulated deficit for Alberta Health Services was $682 million, the operating deficit was $301 million, and it was anticipated that the accumulated deficit for the year ended March 31 would be $1.2 billion. We see this week that the government in the third-quarter update paid off the $342 million deficit for the year ended March 31, 2009, and a substantial payment on the accumulated deficit for this year.

It is amazing. This is an organization that was set up without any internal or external cost-benefit analysis to see if it would control costs, improve service. Nothing was done. It was just this sweeping change: fire the nine regional health authorities that existed, create this one superboard, and we were going to see an improved system. Well, we know exactly what has happened with the system, and we know exactly what has happened to the deficits that have been racked up.

The Auditor General was mentioned by the minister of health, and certainly that was an interesting exchange between the minister of health and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but we also have to remember, I would like to point out, that the Auditor General last fall gave this Assembly and the government clear directions and guidelines on what needed to be done in order to make Alberta Health Services accountable. But I'm not so sure that those measures have been introduced, and I'm not so sure that the government is willing to enforce them. Certainly, they should be introduced and enforced before these large amounts of money are provided to Alberta Health Services above and beyond what they have received in the past. There have clearly been mistakes made, and this government is responsible for those mistakes.

Now, before session started, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to attend a number of public meetings where taxpayers were very, very concerned about the direction this government was going with public health care. I attended a meeting down in the south part of the city. I attended a couple of meetings in the central part of the city. One issue that certainly caught the attention of taxpayers of this province was how this government was treating those who, unfortunately, have a mental illness and how Alberta Hospital was no longer needed or necessary to provide assistance and care for individuals who have or were suffering from a mental illness. Suddenly, community care was the answer.

There didn't seem to be any direction from the government other than: "Alberta Hospital. We don't need it. We're going to close it down. We're going to move people here, and we're going to move them there." Citizens – and they were right – questioned the government on this. They were not convinced that this was the right direction to go in. I must say that I admire the response from a lot of members of this Assembly, including government members, who said: hold on; maybe we're not doing the right thing. That decision was reversed.

When we look at what this government is now going to do, I would urge all members of this Assembly to over the long weekend have a look at the report of the Auditor General of Alberta, October 2008. The Auditor has some very, very good suggestions for each and every one of us regarding Alberta's mental health service delivery systems. The Auditor, who as you all know is retiring, Mr. Dunn, had some very, very good suggestions for us here and some specific directions which I think we should read and consider before we make any more policy changes to not only Alberta Hospital but to the whole mental health care system. I'm sure each and every member of this Assembly wishes Mr. Dunn and his family the very best in all their future endeavours, but I would urge all members to again have a look at his recommendations. They're only a year and a half old, and they've been lost somehow in the public debate about how we should deliver mental health services in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot in this throne speech, but one of the points that I would like to make in the time that I have is that the fiscal advantage that this government is talking about, the stability fund, was a fine idea from the Alberta Liberals. I don't know where this government would have been, what kind of lifeline they would have thrown if they hadn't adopted this idea from our policy platform, but fortunately they did, and fortunately we have set aside money.

Dr. Taft: Thank goodness for the Alberta Liberals.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank goodness for the Alberta Liberal Party and its good policies.

We have to be careful with the introduction of these Alberta capital bonds. It seems very good. Why not borrow money to build seniors' housing? But I would remind, particularly, the minister of – he's no longer Infrastructure. That's just stuck in my mind. You were a good Infrastructure minister, I guess.

Now, the capital bonds. This is a public relations exercise by this government to convince taxpayers of this province that debt is good. When we look at the fiscal plan, we can see on page 83 that we have already borrowed significant amounts of money for capital purposes, billions of dollars. And two pages away is another little pool of cash: it's over $4 billion for the 3P projects. We forget that we're making this yearly payment on the schools and on the roads that are being constructed in the 3P manner, but over the long period of time we owe – it's called an obligation, and an obligation is a debt. We have already racked up close to $7 billion in debt. That's something that we cannot forget.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was just gripped by the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. As he was talking about the bonds, I just happened to be reading the Alberta heritage savings trust fund business plan for 2010-13. I noticed in appendix B, page 8, the glossary defines "bond." This is the heritage fund document. "A bond is a financial instrument representing a debt." It goes on from there. I was wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is concerned that the debt of the Alberta government is actually growing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I am concerned that the debt is growing. These are the numbers. It's $7 billion. When we look at how rapidly the sustainability fund is being depleted and we look at the projections that they have made in the budget for energy prices, I am very concerned, hon. member, that this level of spending is not sustainable. There have been many people, including people in this caucus and in other caucuses, who have suggested that perhaps we should stretch out our capital spending over a longer period of time. The Premier used the same statistics in the House the other day as he did in his Christmas speech, that was paid for, again, by the taxpayers, not his party, and that bill was $66,000 to be precise, Mr. Speaker – $66,000 for that speech.

However, when you consider that there are considerable savings because contractors have had to sharpen their pencils, I think it's a very good idea to stretch out the expenditure, the $7 billion expenditure that is pegged for capital projects, over a longer period of time. I think we can save a lot of money and get a lot of projects done with the same amount of money.

In conclusion, I would remind all hon. members to have a look at the deferred projects from the fiscal year 2008-09 that the government has rolled over in their capital plan. This is last year's money that has been deferred. So if we could defer it in a previous fiscal year, there's no reason in the world why we couldn't do it now and make sure we get maximum use of the tax dollars that are allocated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have just under two minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member exactly what his understanding of the Alberta sustainability fund is – what its purpose is, how it's used – so that we can get a better understanding and a balanced feel and information for the constituents that he represents as to what this fund is all about and how it serves Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. For the hon. member, a history lesson. It was first discussed by the hon. Ken Nicol, who was the former Member for Lethbridge-East, a very distinguished member of our caucus and an economist. He promoted this idea. The government adopted it. It's a very, very good idea to stabilize government revenues whenever the price of oil and gas spikes. However, this government, I'm very disappointed to realize, is using it as nothing more than an election slush fund. It has turned into a re-election slush fund for the Progressive Conservative Party, and they're bound and determined to spend it all before the next election.

The Deputy Speaker: Other hon. members?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me to stand to respond to the Speech from the Throne. Before I get into details of the speech, I want to take this opportunity to recognize the amazing contribution of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong, and the contribution that he has made to the province not just recently in his role as Lieutenant Governor but as an example to all Albertans about hard work, drive, humour, his caring attitude towards the people of Alberta, and the amazing contributions he and his wife have made. I think it's a lasting legacy that we will be able to look back on and see what actually can be achieved and what amazing, wonderful people a province like Alberta produces and can foster the growth of.

The Lieutenant Governor, of course, in the Speech from the Throne mentioned that much has changed in Alberta. He also said that much has changed in our world, and I believe that the Speech from the Throne represents much of the response that was necessary to that change that we've seen.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak first of all about Alberta's fiscal advantage. I'd like to speak about the amazing steps that have been taken forward with the $50 billion improvement to Alberta's financial situation that has taken place. I think it's important to note the $23 billion of debt that was taken care of by good fiscal management. I think the huge investment in Alberta's infrastructure that makes it the envy of the rest of our nation is important to mention.

I think most importantly of the foresight – and I wish that I could take credit for it, but I wasn't here when the decision was made – of the Members of this Legislative Assembly in establishing the $17 billion sustainability fund. At a time when many other jurisdictions, provinces and territories, in our nation were accumulating debt and not making the tough decisions that this province did, we set aside money in Alberta for a situation that no one could have predicted. Of course, that's the economic correction, I'm going to call it, that's taken place in the world. That economic correction has made us all very aware that not only is it important to plan – and that $17 billion shows the importance to plan – but it's also important to get value for the money that we spend on behalf of Alberta taxpayers.

The history of our province is rich, indeed. As we look at the Speech from the Throne this year, we see some of the advantages that we are able to bring Albertans because of that good planning. I don't think that it would be correct to say that without talking about the very hard work, dedication, and sacrifices that Albertans have made for us to be in the situation that we're in today.

I'd like to speak about a few of the specifics addressed in the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, if you'll forgive me, I'm going to make reference a bit to my family's history in this province and how I feel that it connects to what's taking place.

I want to talk a little bit about health care. This year my family will celebrate the centennial for our farm, 100 years. It's with a huge sense of pride that I look back on that hundred years and what's taken place that's allowed me to be standing here before you today. I think about my grandfather, and I wanted to talk about the health care. I have three grandchildren now, the sixth generation in Alberta. My family's history goes back, Mr. Speaker, to the days of the homesteader, obviously. I think about my grandfather, and I think about a health care system that was in place when I was a teenager, which isn't, of course, that long ago. I was a teenager when I lost my grandfather, but I think about the changes that have taken place, and I think about health care in particular because my grandfather was a very important person in my life.

I went and visited him in the seniors' care that was available at that time. I'm talking back in '63, which if I say I was a teenager, it will give you an idea of just what's happened since then. When I went and visited my grandfather, what had happened was that he retired from a very hard life on the farm and came into the city to enjoy his retirement. He had a fall on a slippery sidewalk – there were no sidewalks where he was from, so it was a new situation – and he broke his hip. When he broke his hip, my grandfather literally laid in the extended care that was available to us at that time because there were no hip replacements, and he passed away because of the immobility.

When I fast-forward to today and I see people that get hip replacements, knee replacements, I see the amazing things that are available to them, and I realize that we are so blessed because we have members of our families that are with us well into their 80s or 90s that not that long ago wouldn't have been there for us at all. I think about the health care plan and the improvements that we're talking about in this province, Mr. Speaker, and it's important to point out that no one in our entire nation spends more per capita on health care than we do in Alberta. Albertans are truly blessed because of that.

So where do we find the efficiencies? First of all, in the Speech from the Throne, talking about the improvements that we've made, our commitment now to a five-year funding plan and improvements that can happen is something that I'm extremely proud of because when we look back, we think: how could we possibly improve on something that's gone this well? But we always seem to come up with improvements, and we have a lot of dedicated people out there that are doing it.

I think about some statements of one of my colleagues that spoke earlier, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I think about one of the things that that hon. member said in a speech to a group of people that I'd asked him to come and talk to. His comment really struck home with me when he said: one of our problems is that we have too many healthy people in our hospitals. That's absolutely true. As we move forward and create the spaces that have been referred to, these healthy people in our hospitals are going to be in more appropriate care. People questioned our commitment on the bond issue that, Mr. Speaker, I must point out, is going to triple the number of seniors' residences, seniors' care opportunities from what we would have otherwise been able to do, which makes us a leader in the entire nation once more.

I'm very proud of what we're doing, and I'm very supportive of our way forward. Our building safe and caring communities: people, of course, of this province are blessed in the wonderful communities that they're in, but that doesn't mean that we can't improve it. The direction that we're taking as a government and moving forward with will definitely make the lives of Albertans safer. They'll have a richer experience where they live. They'll be able to enjoy their friends and families far more than they would've before.

I want to also just mention, of course, where we're going with our competitive position in a global economy. As Albertans we are in a new world along with everyone else. We are going to need to be more competitive than we've ever been before. If there's a downside to what we produce in Alberta, it's that the quality of what we produce is so much higher than it is in other places; we have to be a little more selective in the markets that we look for.

I think about this economic downturn that's taken place and the correction that's taking place. We find ourselves as Albertans producing T-bone steaks in a hamburger market, Mr. Speaker. But there are still a lot of people out there in the world that want the T-bone steak. We see the growing economies of China and India. I see the actions that we're taking in agriculture, as an example, to grow those markets and to move into them and to find that customer that suits the things we produce. Nowhere in the world is anyone better positioned for this global recovery than we are in Alberta.

There are two things that the world needs as we move forward. The first one is that energy is going to be required to fuel that recovery. We are best positioned in the entire world to provide that energy that's going to be required and to do it in a responsible and predictable and safe manner for those people that are going to need that. The next is that as that recovery takes place, the agriculture sector, which is our number two industry in this province but our largest renewable resource industry, is there to feed them and give them the things that they need.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that as the recovery takes place, we are going to recover more quickly than others. People are already investing in our province and always have invested in our province because they can come here and enjoy the lowest tax rate in the entire nation, which produces the highest income. I might point out that Albertans' average income is the highest in the entire nation. There are amazing opportunities. I see that so many people, all three of them, appreciated that comment.

Mr. Speaker, in this global economy that we're going into, we are in the best position that there is available. I'm so pleased to be a part of that. I'm so pleased that the Speech from the Throne is going to take us forward in that new direction. People from the world will continue to invest. We continue to see our province growing at approximately the size of Red Deer. Those people that are coming here every year are not coming here to suffer with the rest of us. They are coming here to enjoy the benefits that this province has for them, the opportunities for growth, and the amazing bright future that we have.

Just for a moment I would like to speak about the clean energy future of our province and talk about a couple of initiatives. One of the hon. members mentioned infrastructure and some of the things that are happening in the province. How does that relate to clean energy? We are a world leader. In this province our provincial buildings, the ones that we support and the ones that we have directly, number approximately 1,500 buildings. Ninety per cent of the power in those building is produced by green energy, Mr. Speaker, wind energy and biomass. We are absolutely a leader. We have the most pristine environment that you can imagine and could find anywhere. While we're criticized in certain areas, Alberta is known around the world for its pristine environment, its beautiful vistas, its amazing recreational opportunities, and its healthy, clean, and safe food. These are things that we can be very proud of.

We have a responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to the rest of our nation to carry on forward as we have. As indicated in the Speech from the Throne, we are the engine of the Canadian economy. Fifty per cent of the activity on Bay Street in Toronto, in the banking industry, is funded out of the industries of Alberta. Our entire nation depends on us. This Speech from the Throne sets our way forward, and we will be able to not only benefit Albertans by these actions, but we'll be able to benefit all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the direction that's been taken. I'm very confident that what has been taken forward in the Speech from the Throne, the direction that this government is going, is going to pay huge benefits to the Albertans that live here. I'm so proud that the sixth generation of my family is here, and I hope that many generations beyond enjoy the benefits that will be incurred because of the good planning that has taken place in the past and that is taking place now as directed through this Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday, February 16, to be precise.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:20 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Hon. members, today Mrs. Judith Garcia will lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Mrs. Garcia is a talented artist in voice, piano, ballet, and flamenco dance and resides in Westlock. Mrs. Garcia won 26 awards, a world record, at the 2008 World Championships of Performing Arts held in Hollywood, California. I would ask all present to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, madam. [applause]
Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mrs. Linda Kroetsch. In March 2009 Linda volunteered to have her head shaved and donated her hair to Locks of Love, which is a nonprofit organization that provides hairpieces to financially disadvantaged children under age 21 suffering from long-term medical hair loss from any diagnosis. The community responded, and Linda raised over $7,000 for the Stollery foundation and the Make-A-Wish Foundation. Linda was crowned Jarvie queen in August 2009 for her dedication to the community and her efforts toward this worthy cause. She is accompanied this afternoon by her husband, Mel Kroetsch; her daughter Gloria Byer; her brother and sister-in-law Carl and Audrey Byer; and her friend Cathy Hemmings. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. Today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some people from my ministry, Housing and Urban Affairs, people who all have been instrumental in forwarding our province's agenda to increase affordable housing and end homelessness within 10 years, which, I may add, is the only province in Canada to push this goal. Today we have with us the deputy minister of my ministry, Ms

Marcia Nelson. I'd ask that you please stand as I read your name. Ms Nelson is joined in the members' gallery by her executive team: Mr. Robin Wigston, the assistant deputy minister, homeless support and land development; Mr. Mike Leathwood, assistant deputy minister, housing development and operations; Ms Barb Korol, director of communications; Mr. Arthur Arruda, executive director, strategic corporate services; Ms Line Porfon, executive director, policy and urban affairs; and Ms Sandra Kraatz, director of human resource services. Mr. Speaker, all of these people give me perspective as I carry out my duties in this ministry. I would ask all members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of my family, coming all the way from Cardston, Alberta. Today we have visiting with us my daughter Jolene; her husband, Jeff Strang; and three of their children: Ashlyn, Dylan, and Camden. They're accompanied also by my lovely wife, Linda. I'm pleased to have them here today. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm response of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two people: my very good friend and constituent, the executive director of Homeward Trust, Ms Susan McGee, and Mr. Ed Lavallee, who is an elder for the Bissell Centre. Ed, I'd like to add, has also recently won a ROOPH award for outstanding contribution to members of the aboriginal community. Now that they're both standing, I'd ask you all to please give them the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a good friend, Mr. Preetam Sharma, president of the Council of India Societies of Edmonton. I will be doing a member's statement this afternoon to recognize his contribution to the Republic Day of India, which was celebrated this past Sunday at the Jubilee Auditorium. At this time I would ask Mr. Preetam Sharma to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Red Cross representatives, Nancy Beasley Hosker and Jackie Specken. Nancy is the provincial manager, communications and strategic relations, for the Red Cross, and Jackie is the central and northern Alberta regional council president. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. We thank them for joining us today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly approximately 50 very bright young students from Donnan elementary school in my constituency. Besides the great visit they're having today, they also had the pleasure of meeting the great-grandchild-in-law of Mr. John Donnan, after whom the school is named. I would ask them along with their group leaders, Fiona White, Larry Goodwin, and Bernice Abraham, to please rise and receive the wonderful applause of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's always a thrill to introduce students who come to visit the Legislature. Today it's my pleasure to introduce 26 students. They're in grade 6, and they're at Malmo elementary school in Edmonton-Riverview. They're participating for a week in the School at the Legislature program, and I hope that some day some of them might even become MLAs and sit on the floor of the Assembly. Today they're accompanied by their teacher, Samia Sassi, and parent helpers. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and ask all MLAs to give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Jim Gurnett, who is the new chief of staff for the NDP caucus. Jim is no stranger to the provincial Legislature. He was elected in the 1985 by-election to represent the people of Spirit River-Fairview. He was named as one of Alberta's 50 most influential people by Alberta Venture magazine in 2007 and has a long history of community activism. He recently completed a lengthy term as executive director of the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers. Jim's work has been recognized by numerous organizations including the University of Alberta with a distinguished alumni award, by MacEwan University with an honorary diploma in community studies, and by the Edmonton Social Planning Council with its social justice advocacy award. We are very pleased to have Jim as part of our team. Jim is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

ROOPH Awards

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 2 I attended the fifth annual recognizing outstanding organizations and people in housing awards, also known as the ROOPH awards, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. The keynote speaker, Mr. Iain De Jong, said, and I quote:

As a nation, if we are going to make the shift from managing homelessness to ending homelessness, we need to look to Alberta for leadership and proof about what works. Yes, there are pockets of innovation and commitment elsewhere in this great country of ours, but no other province is showing the kind of aligned leadership between the province and the cities. Indeed, as the late Peter Drucker told us, there is a difference between management and leadership. Management is doing things right; leadership is doing the right things.

The awards celebration, which was hosted by Edmonton Home-ward Trust, highlighted the success stories within the housing and relative support services sectors and demonstrated what can be achieved when the community works together. The 2010 ROOPH award recipients were Mr. Jim Gurnett for the Larry Shaben award for outstanding service in the housing sector; the city of Edmonton Youth Council homelessness subcommittee for partnerships for success; HIP Architects received the excellence in building design for Immigration Hall; Direct Energy, the Edmonton office, received the exceptional volunteerism in housing award; and the gentleman I introduced earlier, my honoured friend Mr. Ed Lavallee, received the outstanding service for the aboriginal community award.

I would like to congratulate all of the 2010 recipients. They have truly demonstrated their commitment to helping Edmonton's most vulnerable. I am confident that this government will continue to work with these community-based organizations to put an end to homelessness and to ensure that affordable housing is available to all in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

India Republic Day

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, February 14, I was honoured to join several of my MLA colleagues and thousands of Indo-Canadians at the Jubilee Auditorium in celebration of the Republic Day of India. The Republic Day of India, which is recognized internationally on January 26, is a day that we pay homage to the historic events that led to the Constitution of India officially becoming India's governing document 60 years ago. Sunday's event was hosted by the Council of India Societies of Edmonton, whose organizers I introduced earlier. I'm very happy to say that the event was extremely well attended by the Indo-Canadian community of Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, the Council of India Societies of Edmonton is an umbrella organization that is comprised of membership from every single state in India. The organization exists to provide services to the community in many ways. A few examples include settlement of immigrants, safeguarding the welfare of senior citizens, counselling for vulnerable groups such as abused women, assistance to Indian students in Edmonton, and much more. I would like to take this time to thank the Council of India Societies of Edmonton and its president, Mr. Preetam Sharma, for providing a valuable service to both the city of Edmonton and the Indo-Canadian community of Alberta.

I would like to thank all of my colleagues in the Legislature for joining me in congratulating 90,000 Albertans of Indo-Canadian origin and over 1.3 billion people of Indian descent world-wide on the 60th Republic Day of India.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Edmonton public school board voted to start the debate on the closure process for at least five public schools in central Edmonton. No community should lose its public school so another community somewhere else can have a school built. Next year the government plans to open 18 public schools across the province at a cost of over $1 billion over 30 years. Nine of these schools will be located in communities recently developed here in Edmonton. Because of the provincial school utilization rate these new schools force the Edmonton public school board to close older schools in mature neighbourhoods. This provincial government formula discriminates against older schools in mature, established neighbourhoods.

Since 2002 the Edmonton public school board has closed 15 schools in central Edmonton. These closures have resulted in the elimination of over 6,500 student spaces. The Edmonton public school board plans to close at least another 5,000 student spaces if they get their way. According to the Edmonton public schools student enrolment is going down, way down. Meanwhile, this government's 20-year strategic capital plan projects that in four years there will be more students in the system than we've ever had before. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they're projecting 80,000 additional students.

Which projection are parents and taxpayers to believe? Until we find out the truth, we should stop the closure process in Edmonton and any other community that's affected by it. If the city of Edmonton increases population density in the central neighbourhoods as planned, we will need the student spaces now being considered for closure.

I urge the province, the city of Edmonton, and the Edmonton public school board to sit down, to work together, and to plan once and for all for the future. No neighbourhood should lose its school so that another one can have one.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Municipal Climate Change Action Centre

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Using less energy means spending less money, no matter if you're running a city, a company, or a household. Energy efficiency is also a win for the environment as much as it is for the pocketbook, which is why it is an important plank in our government's climate change strategy.

During extensive consultations with Albertans leading up to the strategy, we heard from many stakeholders. One of these groups was municipalities. Local leaders told us that they wanted to assist with addressing the issue of climate change by being more energy efficient but that they needed our help. Mr. Speaker, this is why over the past two years Alberta Environment has worked with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties to create a Municipal Climate Change Action Centre for their members.

Last Thursday the Minister of Environment announced funding of $2 million over three years from the government of Alberta to support this initiative. This centre will help the cities, towns, villages, and municipalities of Alberta reach further out towards a cleaner energy future, and it will build on the tremendous climate change leadership being shown at a local level across the province. What this means is that if municipalities need advice on what climate change policies can have the most impact, they'll get it; if municipalities need to know what could happen to their community in a changing climate, they'll find out; and if municipalities want to improve their operations and save money by being more energy efficient, they'll be helped.

I want to thank the two municipal organizations for their vision and willingness to work with the province to make it happen. I look forward to seeing the results of this partnership that delivers on one of Alberta's climate change commitments.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sustainability Fund

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta spends more than it makes in stable and reliable revenue. What we're using to fix that gap is the rapidly shrinking sustainability fund. At some point this government will have to increase its revenue or lower its spending. Every new finance minister seems to see the problem clearly, but none actually do anything about it. To the Premier. I'll ask again: what is this Premier doing to fix our problem of spending more than we collect through stable revenue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are not spending money we don't have. We have a large sustainability fund that we are using to cushion the blow to our revenue stream. It's in the amount of about $17 billion. We also have an additional savings fund, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, which is a separate fund, and that fund is there for our grandkids and our grandkids' grandkids. So, again, two funds. We've put the savings in place just to deal with dropping revenues like we've seen lately.

Dr. Swann: Last August the finance minister said that this government would not allow the sustainability fund to be drained, yet that's exactly what's happening now. Where will the government find the money to balance the books when the sustainability fund is gone?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are using the sustainability fund to cushion the blow to our revenues. We want to be back in the black by 2012-13, and we will be. We will be replenishing the sustainability fund for, again, sometime in the future that we see another drop in revenues or another economic downturn.

Dr. Swann: Surely the Premier doesn't manage his farm that way.

The volatility of oil and gas prices will not go away. Something needs to change here. Why does the Premier continue to ignore the fact that using our savings account to cover shortfalls again this year is simply a Band-aid? It does nothing to address our unstable funding.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, I think the hon. leader perhaps isn't fully aware of what we've done as a government. We're the only jurisdiction in Canada to set aside a separate fund, a cash surplus fund, to help cushion the revenues. We are not adding to our debt. We're the only jurisdiction that, even though we're running a deficit, is not adding to our debt. That is substantial. We will be the first to come out of this, leading Canada out of the recession.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Private Health Care Services

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today this government announced it was holding the Royal Alex orthopaedic centre to an increase of a mere 16 extra knee and hip procedures. In comparison, it's giving a for-profit corporation subsidies for an extra 180, more than 10 times as much money for corporate medicine as for a public hospital. To the Premier: why is this government letting the state-of-the-art public orthopaedic facility at the Royal Alex sit underutilized while it pours huge subsidies into corporate medicine?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're the only jurisdiction to commit to a five-year increased funding to a publicly funded health care system, and we remain committed to that goal. We also remain committed to the best-performing publicly funded health care system in Canada.

Dr. Taft: Well, I hope everybody in Alberta is noticing he's not saying publicly delivered because it's going to be delivered through private, for-profit corporations. In fact, this government is providing 750 extra cataract surgeries at for-profit private providers and only 175 at the public Royal Alex centre. To the Premier: why is this government pouring more money into private, for-profit cataract surgery instead of into public services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day it's access and it's quality, and that is our goal here, to increase access and the quality of care in this province. Once again, we're going to show leadership with a five-year funding commitment to a publicly funded health care system.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Premier should know that every single assessment I've seen of Calgary versus Edmonton on cataract surgeries shows that Edmonton delivers better value, higher quality, and lower cost. My question is to the Premier. How is this government going to responsibly hold to account the funding it's providing to for-profit, corporate health care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this is just an example of very selective reading on the part of the hon. member asking the question because what he forgot to tell people is that there are 175 cataracts scheduled for the Royal Alex, there are 60 colonoscopies scheduled for the Royal Alex, and there are a number of hip replacements and knee replacements and robotic urologies all scheduled at the Royal Alex. This numbers well over 200. Regardless of where the services are provided, be they in a public setting or a private setting, they are publicly funded by this government.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Cabinet Travel to the Olympics

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The all-you-can-eat Tory buffet is now airborne. Taxpayer travelling-through tickets to the government of Alberta's version of gravy trains, planes, and automobiles have been doled out to the Premier and half his cabinet. Competing in the frequent-flyers-of-Olympic-excess event are our Premier and intergovernmental affairs minister. In the who-can-luxuriate-the-longest competition we have the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit facing off with the Minister of Tourism, Perks and Vacations. To the Premier: are you not concerned about the Olympian optics of your high-flying excesses during a time of recessionary lows?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, you know, there is some negativity on the other side of the House, but I can tell you that on this side of the House there is a huge amount of optimism. I'm looking forward to Canada's Vancouver Olympics. I mean, all roads to Vancouver lead through Alberta. What better way to promote this great province than at Alberta House, Alberta Plaza, right in the city of Vancouver, during the world Olympics? By the way, 3.5 billion people are watching the Olympics – 3.5 billion. What better market than right here in Alberta?

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier: did you and your cabinet not receive the memo that going for the gold refers to the athletic competition and not your personal withdrawal from the public purse?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we're very, very proud of the role that we are playing in the Vancouver Olympics. We've supported the Olympics over the last three years by making improvements to the Calgary Olympic Park. We've also sent hundreds of volunteers that have supported the Vancouver Olympics over the last number of years in preparation for this huge event.

You know, it's difficult for our Alberta athletes to be enthused and want to do their best when this side of the House constantly wants to drag them down – drag them down – and not have them do better.

Mr. Chase: While showcasing Alberta athletic and artistic talent has value, political pandering does not. Given the budgetary restraints you have placed on PDD, children, seniors, and postsecondary students, how do you justify your partisan expenses?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of positive messages that can be delivered by elected officials or volunteers, all Albertans. I invite this House, all political stripes, no matter where they sit in this House, to take part in these events. If they want to participate at Alberta Plaza and Alberta House, so be it. We'd gladly support any political party in terms of selling and promoting the province of Alberta because, again, we are very, very proud of our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Surgery Wait Time Reduction Strategy

Mr. Hinman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The funding of Alberta's health care system is a significant investment made by Alberta taxpayers. Recent court decisions have told governments across the country that access to a waiting list is not access to health care. It appears this government has finally realized this also. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will you please tell us how much overtime medical staff will be expected to put in in order to deliver on this government's six-week wait time reduction push, and have the health care workers agreed that they are able to take on this added workload?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. In fact, as a result of a lot of cost savings which Alberta Health Services have realized, not the least of which is us covering their deficit, which yields a bunch of money saved because they don't have to pay the interest on that deficit, we will immediately earmark $8 million, starting today, so that a number of additional surgeries can be performed. We are also going to talk with, and already have, the persons who are providing part-time work and see if they will increase their time to help out. They said they would, so we feel confident about the plan.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I hope that confidence works out.

Mr. Speaker, the money invested in health care is not the government's; it belongs to hard-working Albertans. For that investment they expect results and accountability. If these new procedures only cost $8 million, it's hard to understand why they didn't find this money within their existing $15 billion budget. Can the minister of health please tell us who was negligent for not implementing this plan sooner: the previous minister of health, the government, or Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one was negligent about anything. The fact is that circumstances have changed. We have half a million more people in this province than 10 years ago, and we have new services, new techniques, new procedures, new equipment, new pharmaceuticals, and the like, all of which are good things, but they're driving up the cost. So what we've said is that we want some results immediately. Alberta Health Services has come up with that plan, and we're going to deliver the health services that people require, starting right now, in a more improved way.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, this should have been done years ago and not waiting now to all of a sudden say: oh, we can do something.

There are many changes that we can make in how Albertans receive health care while staying completely within the Canada Health Act. In today's announcements the government is telling Albertans these treatments and procedures will be completed by the end of March, but experts are questioning that capability. My question again is to the health minister. Do you have an agreed-upon and executable plan that will be completed in the next six weeks, or is this another case where the government fails to plan and ultimately fails Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, of course there's a plan. You don't announce something if you don't have a plan. We have the people, we have the money, and we have the results earmarked based on input from the Health Quality Council, based on input from the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health, and based on the dashboard indicator project undertaken by Alberta Health Services. The bottom line is that Albertans want, deserve, and expect better services, and they're going to get them.

Mr. Vandermeer: Along the same lines, Mr. Speaker, the constituents in my area have expressed many concerns and frustrations with respect to wait times for certain health services. Being on a waiting list for months for an important surgery is simply unacceptable. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: if we are paying more money per capita than any other province, why aren't we getting the results that Albertans expect and deserve?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question, and I share the frustration that the member has just expressed. I'll bet you everybody here and I'll bet you every Albertan shares it as well. The point is that I want to tell you what we are doing about that. Starting today, through Alberta Health Services we are adding 2,230 new spots for surgeries to be performed as part of the first six weeks of a longer term plan. That will help to address the issues that the member has alluded to, and this is just the beginning of the longer term plan toward helping Albertans achieve the access they're after.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister. My constituents are equally frustrated with having to wait too long for an MRI. What's causing the delay, and how are you going to fix that problem?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know others who share that frustration as well, including this hon. member. However, that's another reason why today I announced that we are adding 3,500 new spots for MRI and CAT scans to be performed immediately, within the next six weeks, again as part of the longer term plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Albertans have heard these stories before. Can the minister tell us what is going to be different this time and why we should believe this new plan will actually work?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what is largely different this time is that we have a five-year funding plan that provides predictability and stability to accomplish the objectives that we have just enunciated. Those figures are based on some increases that include inflation, that include an aging population, that include a growing population and all of the stuff that I mentioned a little bit earlier in terms of new innovations in the system. We will get there because we're on the right track.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Government Liabilities

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Progressive Conservative government's balance sheet indicates that the government liabilities will increase by over $10 billion in the next three years. My first question is to the Premier. Why are liabilities increasing by $10 billion in such a short period of time?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. President of the Treasury Board can probably provide a better response.

Mr. Snelgrove: He might as well get to his next question. It'll be the same one.

Mr. MacDonald: Ten billion dollars on the hook, and he's got no answer. That doesn't surprise me. That doesn't surprise taxpayers either. Again to the Premier: what is the government's plan to address this $10 billion liability?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to a balance sheet, expenditures and assets. We're building in Alberta some of the most forward-thinking, some of the most economic-enabling assets this country has ever seen. We believe that by growing the economic pie, there will be more money for Albertans to do the good work that they want us to do. So when we build a road, when we build an overpass, when we build a government building, when we build a hospital, it shows on our balance sheet as an asset. If you only look at expenditures, you won't get a true picture of the assets in Alberta, and our assets per Albertan compared to the rest of Canada are multi, multithousands of dollars more.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's interesting to note that the President of the Treasury of Board only reads one part of the balance sheet.

Now, again, to whoever can answer over there: where will the money come from to pay for the $10 billion increase in liabilities? Are you going to pick the pockets of the poor again?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we've explained as slowly as we can explain, and we've put it in documents that are hundreds of pages thick about how we intend to use the sustainability fund, which is our savings account which we put there as a rainy-day fund to carry Alberta's economy through to the next expansion situation, that we'll be in far ahead of the rest of the country. In here it very clearly explains that we will use our sustainability fund. Our economic growth is based on very sound projections of energy and the Canadian dollar, interest rates, and it shows clearly how we'll be back in the black in 2012-13. It's simply explained in the budget. Read it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Federal Housing Finance Regulations

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today federal Finance Minister Jim Flaherty announced new mortgage regulations for Canadian homebuyers intended to prevent the type of housing collapse we saw in the United States. My questions are to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. What do these new regulations mean for Albertans making the ultimate transition to home ownership?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member raises an important perspective. Home ownership is very important in this province. We want to make it as affordable as possible. Now, of course, the federal regulations announced today are aimed at protecting homeowners from future interest rate spikes and also limiting purchaser debt to a reasonable level.

I recognize that housing affordability continues to be a challenge in Alberta. We are one of the most expensive jurisdictions in which to own a home in Canada. That is why our government provides rent supports and community housing and affordable housing, having over 6,000 affordable housing units and providing support to 80,000 people monthly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the new rules the one that should most concern the minister is the increased down payment regulation: 20 per cent down for investment and non owner-occupied properties. The government plans on having 11,000 new affordable housing units in place by 2012, but it would seem this new rule will seriously discourage investors from building these types of properties. To the same minister: how much of a hit does he think the government's 11,000-unit plan will take because of this new rule? What does he plan to do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I want to thank the hon. member for that question. Our government has anticipated that this may happen, and that's why the financing that we looked at for these 11,000 units is completely different from the financing that would apply from the announcement today. So the short answer is that we're still going to be on track for the 11,000-unit plan by 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question to the same minister. Before these regulations were announced, prices were increasing and housing starts were reaching record levels.

What will be the impact of these new regulations on Albertan house renters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. This member has raised another interesting point. The increasing supply of rental properties is a challenge. We'll be providing 11,000 units, again, by 2012. I would also like to mention that through our rent supports 800 new people are assisted every month as we move people through the system, helping those most in need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Signage on Highway Rights-of-way

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in Peace River don't want a nuclear plant in their backyard, but they aren't allowed to express themselves. They have put up signs protesting the proposed nuclear plant, but Transportation officials have taken these signs down. To the Minister of Transportation: why are Department of Transportation officials targeting antinuclear signs?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the policy within this government, as everybody knows, is that you have to have permits to put signs up within the highway rights-of-way, strictly for the safety of motorists. Therefore, our policy is that if there are people that put signs up within our rights-of way, we take them down or they get a letter to take them down. If they're not removed, we remove them. I understand that that policy was followed.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that policy was not followed. Transportation officials are out there to make the highways safer for Albertans. To the minister again: is targeting antinuclear science an indication that this government only respects free speech when it is convenient?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We respect free speech all the time, but we cannot allow people to put things in the right-of-way. Our maintenance contractor's job is that if they see things in the right-of-way, they have to go remove them. That policy is there for the safety of Albertans.

Mr. Kang: Well, Mr. Speaker, by going over and taking those signs down, I think those officials were trespassing on private property. To the same minister again. We are spending millions of dollars selling Alberta's image at the Olympics, yet back at home this government can't uphold basic rights of free speech. What is the minister doing to ensure that this doesn't happen again?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there was one sign. I agree with the hon. member that there was one sign that was on private property. I'm just going by hearsay, trying to get to the bottom of everything that happened there, but apparently someone was asked by the maintenance contractor if they wanted that sign to go also, and they had said yes, so they removed it. When I found out about it and when our department found out about it, immediately they made a new sign and took it back to that private property, the one that was on private property.

Design Process for New Schools

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, government is using different ways to fund its new school buildings, including P3s. I've heard concerns that they are taking a cookie-cutter approach to the design of schools. I'm especially concerned that the government's plan, which includes four new high schools for Calgary, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and Spruce Grove, will not meet the diverse learning needs of students. My question is for the Minister of Education. Did school boards have any input in the design of the four high schools to ensure that they meet students' needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It should be clear that partway through the process we separated out the high schools from the elementary-junior highs. The high schools actually have proceeded on a design-build project. The school boards have been involved with Infrastructure and Education through the design process and have had ample opportunity to ensure that those school designs meet the educational programming and educational needs of the students in their areas.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister: in regard to the ASAP schools how involved are parents and community groups in the design process for the high schools? Does the government have a genuine interest in hearing their input?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, with respect to the high schools the school boards would have had meetings in their communities with respect to those schools to discuss with the communities what was going into the schools, and they would have had an opportunity through the school boards to get input in that way. This isn't the traditional build process, which would have started through community meetings, et cetera, but there is certainly ample opportunity for communities to be involved.

With respect to the ASAP school projects we do have a standardized school design, which was developed with the input of a number of different groups, but even in that circumstance school boards have had the ability to meet with their communities and to adapt the designs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. My final question is this: is the design process based on any research or studies that identify how other groups, key stakeholders, can be involved in the design process of schools? Was it an arbitrary process?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, over the last number of years Infrastructure and Education have worked with organizations such as the College of Alberta School Superintendents, the Alberta School Boards Association, the School Business Officials of Alberta, the Council of Educational Facility Planners, school plant officials, and others to develop what we call standard designs for the K to 3, K to 6, and K to 9 schools. Those standard designs are used as a starting point with the school jurisdictions, and the school jurisdictions have had the opportunity to work with those designs so that they enable them to develop the educational opportunities that they want for the students in their area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

PDD Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm still receiving many, many inquiries about the PDD. Last Thursday the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports stated that people on PDD will not be reassessed for eligibility for PDD but that funding and the support that they receive will be reassessed using the supports intensity scale. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Will the minister tell the Assembly how many different ways were being used to determine how much funding support disabled Albertans were entitled to before the introduction of the supports intensity scale?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PDD program is very important to me and to this government and to the 9,200 people that it serves. We have implemented a supports intensity scale, but I'd like to make something very clear: it's totally and completely different from the eligibility requirement. Once somebody passes the eligibility requirement, which are two criteria, they are in the PDD program. Once they are in the program, we need to determine what kinds of supports and services they need. We need to be clear about that, and we need to be consistent throughout the province.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that. And, yes, I do understand the distinction, but there still are many questions.

Can the minister tell the Assembly what the supports intensity scale actually measures and how this would be different from how staff and funding are currently allocated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The important thing about the supports intensity scale is that it looks at many things. One of the things that it builds on is the natural supports that a person might have, so it won't necessarily change the way services and supports are given to a PDD individual at this time. What it will do is that it will ensure that the supports that we do provide for PDD clients are consistent throughout the province for the same sorts of disabilities.

Ms Pastoor: Last Thursday the minister stated that if a disabled Albertan is currently receiving the correct level of supports, that will not change, but the obvious question is: could someone's supports be decreased after the reassessment using the supports intensity scale?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it's really important that when we have a program that's a provincial program, we treat everyone equitably and fairly across the province. It is possible that there may be somebody in a corner of the province that is receiving perhaps more supports than somebody with that certain kind of disability really needs, and that's not doing a person a favour when we give them more than they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Surgery Wait Time Reduction Strategy

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today's health announcement by the Minister of Health and Wellness about funding for elective surgeries is one of the most short sighted I've ever seen from this government. Spending $8 million on a six-week surgery party at Alberta hospitals will do nothing to eliminate surgery wait times in the long run. Albertans need to know that the extreme wait times for elective surgeries and even cancer treatments in this province will become a thing of the past forever, not just for the next six weeks. Will the minister stand and tell the House how long he expects people to wait for important surgery in this province? What's the plan, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we don't expect Albertans to wait any longer than they have to, obviously, and that's why the announcement today is so important toward reducing wait times and to reducing wait lists. There is a fundamental difference there.

The bottom line is, Mr. Speaker, that this is just the beginning, and it says that right in the release. I've said it earlier today in the House. I'm surprised the hon. member doesn't catch that because I also said that this is part of a longer term plan. We will get that plan moving very quickly. As soon as these six weeks are over, the rest of the plan kicks in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, will the minister please tell us what the rest of the plan is? It's fine to fund something for six weeks, but that's a minuscule amount of time, and it won't solve the basic problem. If such a plan for the long-term health of Albertans actually exists, Mr. Minister, when will you make it public?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a few plans that are being finalized right now. They will come out early in April. For example, the long-term capital plan for health facilities will be ready on or about March 31 when the clock strikes 12. We'll also have more details on the five-year funding plan, and there will be additional plans on a per-area basis available at that time.

Right now we've just done the first part of a much longer term plan because people need those services right now. They've been identified as a high priority.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the minister has more plans than he has news conferences, but none of them are public yet.

I'd like this minister to stand up and tell Albertans when we're going to see a comprehensive long-term plan for the health care system in this province and what he's actually going to do to consult Albertans about these plans.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I could have sworn I just said that the long-term plan in various areas, including the one he's asking about, will be ready early in April. In the meantime we have an extremely good consultation process going on right now because that's what the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health said and that's what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has pledged to deliver. It will include a blueprint for action on the Alberta health act, on the patient charter, and on a number of other things prior to September 30.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

School Closures

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have heard many of my constituents tell me that if you close down a school, you damage the community. Well, there have been lots of rumours about school closures, not just in the teachers' lounges but right here in the Legislature. My question is to the Minister of Education. What are you doing to keep schools open and keep Alberta's communities from further damage?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously it's important to have schools in communities where kids are. It's important to have schools in communities because schools are oftentimes the core of the community, but it's not possible to keep schools open if there are no kids for them. We asked the school boards. The school boards have to make the most appropriate judgment, in their judgment, as to what is the best educational opportunity for the children within their jurisdiction. They have that authority, they have that ability, and they do it well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's population has been growing over the past few years, especially in areas like my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie in southeast Edmonton and other outlying areas. To the same minister: what is the government doing to deal with this population growth?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in fact, that is the problem that we face because under the ASAP program we are building 18 schools in Edmonton and Calgary, one of them in the member's constituency. That is good for those communities because we don't have to bus those children to other schools. I would say that that does not mean that all the schools in the inner city or other neighborhoods have to be closed. In fact, the Edmonton public school board has provided one of the best models in the country with respect to the city centre school project, where they provide better educational opportunities with fewer schools but better schools for those students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: are there any plans to examine the regulations surrounding the school closures?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are, obviously, with our Inspiring Education project looking at everything right from the very top with respect to how education is delivered in a 21st century model, how we make sure that we have the right kind of educational opportunities for students, and part and parcel of that will be a re-examination of what kind of physical platform we need to deliver education in communities. So we will be looking at that, and in the meantime we are looking at our school closure regulations, and we're working with municipalities to make sure that school properties can survive a closure and live to be of community purpose until they're needed again as a school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Renter Assistance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs has stated that the $13 million cut to rent supplements reflects the fact that fewer people require assistance. The direct-to-tenant rent supplement program has a one-year expiry date, and seeing that the program started last April, support is running out. To the minister of housing: while the rent subsidy is only one year long, the wait-list to get into affordable housing is almost three years long. How are people supposed to pay their rent without support while they wait another two years for affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for that question, but what he doesn't recognize is that we're supporting those most in need. There are always people who may be in need, but at the same time we have to set a guideline because we want to be compassionate most to the taxpayers but, as well, to those in need. We will continue to support those most in need of rent assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess, you know, we're talking in a sense about rationing. One way to reduce wait-lists is to reduce the number of people who qualify for support. It sounds like that's what he's done. Will the minister explain the changes which have been recently made to tighten up the qualifying criteria for rent supplements and affordable housing?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it really saddens me, the approach that this member has taken to such an important program. The means test that we have had over the last several years remains the same. It is more stringent than other provinces', but that enables us to target hard-working taxpayers' money to those most in need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see no reason for the minister to get sad. All the minister needs to do is answer the questions. With fewer people qualifying for assistance and more people running out of rent supports, has the minister given up on the Housing First policy and now back to the old approach of merely managing homelessness?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, there's one government in the country that has a 10-year plan to end homelessness, and that is the government of Alberta. That's the plan that we will continue on forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents have expressed their enthusiasm for this government's renewed commitment to infrastructure and transportation in the 2010 budget. My first question is for the Minister of Transportation. Can he update this House on the ongoing work to complete the Anthony Henday ring road?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this budget positions Alberta well for the future. We know that investing in infrastructure supports jobs today and lays the foundation for economic growth and competitiveness in the future. This year's capital plan is nearly $1.9 billion, and we'll continue to build and take advantage of our lower construction prices. Construction on the world-class Edmonton ring road continues, and the 21-kilometre northwest Henday is going very well and is set to open in the fall of 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many of my constituents the intersection at the traffic lights on Anthony Henday leads to frustrating delays and unsafe driving conditions. My first supplemental to the same minister: can he tell my constituents when they are going to complete the Cameron Heights overpass?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that, yes, the planning and development of the Cameron Heights interchange is most definitely progressing. We've completed the functional plan work, and we're set to complete the detailed design work later this spring, with construction already under way on the three other interchanges in his area. The province recognizes the importance of having all of Anthony Henday free flow, and our actions support that.

Mr. Xiao: My final supplemental to the same minister: can he assure all Edmontonians that he will eliminate all the intersections and the traffic lights on the Anthony Henday and when?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure this hon. member knows that our province has set the goal of 2015 to have the complete ring road done, which means that would be free flow, and it would remove all traffic signals on the Anthony Henday. I think the hon. member should drive by there every day and maybe go out and have a coffee with some of those guys and watch that work being done, and then he'll believe us all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Land-use Framework

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The land-use framework progress report was released last week, and despite the report being labelled a progress report, I can see very little progress that has actually happened. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. It's been well over a year since the land-use framework was created, and only two regional plans are in the process of being established. When can we finally expect to see anything concrete come out of the land-use framework?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the land-use framework initiative, of course, is extremely important for all areas of Alberta. But let's be reasonable about how we're going to approach this thing because I don't think that it would be in anybody's interest, particularly not in the interests of Albertans, to go out there with a shotgun approach and try to develop a land-use framework for all seven regions at the same time. We've done some very, very good work in the lower Athabasca, and that plan is moving ahead now very nicely. The regional advisory commission have most of their work together, and we are expecting a report from them at the end of March.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: has there been some meaningful consultation done with the Métis communities in those areas?

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in fact, they have. There are aboriginal people involved in the regional advisory committee, so they have representation on the committees and are responsible for taking that information back to their own communities. We know that this is one of the areas that in order for this to be successful, we will continue and we have to continue to have meaningful consultation with aboriginal groups.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Developments in Sylvan Lake are currently happening that will have a major impact on the Red Deer regional plan that is being created. How will these developments, that are going forward as we speak, be dealt with by your department without the actual implementation of the land-use framework having gone through yet?

2:30

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is one issue of many. Of course, as the member opposite would very well understand and realize, you cannot stop the development of the province of Alberta while you develop a land-use framework and then start again. The natural gas industry in Alberta is again, you know, going to come to the fore. The development of forestry continues. The development of communities across the province continues. The land-use framework will have to take into account all of those developments as it moves forward and as we get the plans in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Utilities Consumer Advocate

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some constituents in Edmonton-Decore have expressed their deep concern about the effects that Bill 50 will have on their electricity bill. Specifically, they have been asking me what role the Utilities Consumer Advocate has in protecting and educating consumers of the electricity market. My first question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. What power does the Utilities Consumer Advocate have to protect Alberta consumers from unwarranted charges on their energy bill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office is to answer consumers' questions, to provide information, and also to intervene for consumers at rights hearings. This past year we had approximately 50,000 phone calls in the UCA, intervened in 90 hearings. So the work UCA is doing when consumers call the line is excellent.

Mrs. Sarich: Well, Mr. Speaker, I obviously agree that there is a great need for the Utilities Consumer Advocate; however, my concern is that the UCA directly falls under the control of the government of Alberta, the same government that controls energy policy, specifically the creation of Bill 50. So my next question is to the same minister. Has Service Alberta ever considered reinventing the Utilities Consumer Advocate as an arm's-length organization outside government control?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the 50,000 people who did contact the UCA, that concern was not raised at all. The bottom line with the UCA is the input we get from Albertans and the good work it does. We know it's providing good service to Albertans as well as maximizing the services and benefits that are available in Service Alberta so we can work together and they can get the answers quicker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. How do you measure the effectiveness of the current model?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the best ways is about the people who contact the UCA information line. Over 80 per cent of the people who contact our line are happy with the services provided, and they will recommend it to a friend for them to contact as well. That's really important to me as minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Government Borrowing

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2010 projects this PC government will add roughly $6 billion in debt by 2012, up from zero when this Premier took over. In order to sell this bad-news story to Albertans, part of this debt has been packaged up and sold to the public as Alberta capital bonds to be used for seniors' housing. The fact is that it's just plain, old-fashioned won't live within our means, so we'll get our kids to pay for it debt. To the President of the Treasury Board: why is this government heaping billions of debt and related servicing costs on our kids' backs when we still have money in the sustainability fund?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, you don't have to take my word for it; you can go to the Auditor General, who says that in his opinion "these consolidated financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Province of Alberta." It goes on. He's done that for eight years. We have accounted for the capital expenditures in this government on a consistent basis for at least 20 years or more. Every single penny that we spent is accounted for in these books, and the Auditor General is an officer of the Assembly. TD financial group says exactly the same thing: the accounting of the provincial government's capital plan rightly split outlays of capital investment and expenses for capital purposes.

Mr. Anderson: That had nothing to do with the question I just asked, Mr. Speaker.

It's bad enough that this government is using the plight of seniors being unable to find housing as a way to sell a return to debt financing; it is also a fiscally foolish thing to do. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation noted last week that the government would save $17.6 million in interest by simply taking out a regular loan rather than offering a comparatively higher rate of interest for capital bonds. To the same minister: if he is going to borrow money, why would he not borrow at the lowest interest rate possible?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I do hope that they develop a strategic kind of alliance between that party and the Taxpayers Federation and then publish some of the discussion that they'll have. It'll be worth the comic relief that comes out of it.

Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do is give Albertans an opportunity to invest in things that they feel very strongly about, and that's caring for seniors. While it is debt, it's very effective debt. Most of the money that we're raising through bonds will be leveraged at least once or maybe twice to build hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of seniors' facilities for our parents and grandparents.

They, quite honestly, need to be honest about it. They really don't care about anybody except themselves.

Mr. Anderson: This caucus does have a relationship with the taxpayers of Alberta; the caucus over there does not.

One commentator noted that the government borrowing in this way is like having a million dollars under your mattress and then going to the bank and asking for a high-interest loan to buy a new car. It just doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this government put off issuing additional capital bonds until he can justify to Albertans why he isn't borrowing at the lowest rate possible for Alberta taxpayers? It's a simple question.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, by and large the greatest amount of money that we're borrowing for capital projects in Alberta is at the lowest rate in the country. As a matter of fact, Alberta's triple-A plus credit rating has allowed us to borrow money for these projects far cheaper than any other province in Canada. That's not from bad management; that's from good management. Giving Albertans an opportunity to invest in their province is what we're doing: 3.3 per cent is not a gift; it recognizes that many seniors would like to have a long-term, stable income come into their homes. So let's be clear: they care about themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Oil Sands Emissions

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Energy minister recently announced a plan to indoctrinate school kids about oil sands and carbon capture plans. It appears the minister is worried about media stories that are saturated with embarrassing scrutiny of his government's failure to protect the environment, and his plan is to turn a blind eye to the black one they have created in the oil sands. Now, instead of using propaganda in schools, why doesn't the Energy minister educate oil sands companies about protecting our environment by forcing them to reduce actual emissions instead of paying them to bury the problem underground?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to chuckle because we have been successful at one thing: we have convinced those two members over there to call it the oil sands. So our education program is already working. Schoolchildren in this province are not going to take as long to learn as those two members over there.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess this just goes to show why propaganda is something that ought to be carefully controlled.

Instead of introducing said oil sands propaganda into the classroom – we know it will not stop the growing criticisms of this government's failure to responsibly manage our environment. So instead of playing Big Brother, why doesn't the Energy minister teach kids a lesson in responsible governance and force oil sands companies to clean up their act and reduce emissions?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that is very important is to ensure that – and this might be a better question, actually, to be placed to the Minister of Education. As our Education curriculum continues to unfold to changing circumstances, it is important that we ensure that students in our classrooms are apprised. Unlike what the member would like to lead this Assembly to believe, there's no propaganda involved here. This is a situation where, you know, when curriculums were developed a number of years ago, the oil sands was not in existence.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I doubt the Energy minister's plan to infiltrate classrooms will include a frank discussion about the pitfalls of carbon capture, I doubt it will teach children about global warming and the effects the oil sands are having on our environment, and I doubt that it will teach kids about lobbyists and how oil sands companies can increase political influence. Why won't the Minister of Energy admit that this Orwellian plan isn't about educating but, rather, about hiding his government's failure to protect our environment today and for the very kids he's going to propagandize to?

Mr. Liepert: Well, what it will talk about, Mr. Speaker, is the tremendous activity that's gone on in the oil sands area relative to reclamation. It will talk about and put in real terms the emissions from the oil sands relative to not only the rest of the country and to the world, but it will also probably talk about things like how many jobs in Quebec come directly from the oil sands. I'm glad to see that the Premier of Quebec has realized this and is now planning a mission to Alberta to encourage Alberta oil sands companies to buy products from Quebec. These are the kinds of things that we want to ensure, that Alberta students have the real facts.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were 18 members who were recognized today, 108 questions and responses, 12 members recognized from the opposition parties and six from private government members.

In a few seconds from now we will continue with the Routine and continue with Members' Statements, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just noticed that several people I know have joined us in the gallery today. All, I believe, are from Calgary: Jeff Gaulin, if you could please stand, as well as De-Anne Carson and Rob Schaefer. Would you please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Oil Sands Image

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands capital of the world has been my home for the past 30 years. Our city slogan is: We Have the Energy. It captures the spirit of who we are, what we do, and how we do it. This past week I took issue with the leader of the government of Quebec, Premier Jean Charest, for his comments about my home and the oil sands of Fort McMurray. The headlines read: Quebec hypocrites when it comes to the oil sands. In actual fact, we think that of the Albertans and the many workers who have come from provinces across Canada to find work and who have built the oil sands over the past 30 years, the real hypocrite is Jean Charest, not his workers. He knows better, having served in the federal Parliament and at the time having served as Minister of Environment, that Alberta is always open for business.

The Charest government promised to subsidize expenses for businesses who are going to be attending an important mission on the oil sands opportunities of $200 billion in March. We celebrate that. But at the same time he speaks about criticizing the oil sands in Copenhagen.

We are entrepreneurial as Albertans. We welcome those who share that same spirit of competition. But as Albertans we do not like or take too kindly to a Premier who talks out of both sides of his mouth.

So do the right thing, Jean Charest, the same as Shane Koyczan said in his poem at the Olympic opening ceremonies in Vancouver in defining Canada, entitled We Are More. We are certainly more than what Premier Charest has said about our oil sands. The poem goes on: you might say “the home of the Rocket and the Great One who inspired little number nines and little number ninety-nines . . . and some say what defines us is something as simple as please and thank you” and you’re welcome, too.

So, Premier Charest, do the right thing and tone it down. Come visit my home. Come visit the oil sands and my two and a half year old son, who breathes that air every day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Alberta Red Cross

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a Canadian Red Cross luncheon in January the secretary-general spoke about the work being done in Haiti following the January 12 earthquake. He commended the generosity of Albertans and of the Alberta government, among others, in helping after the devastating disaster. He also talked about the strong connection between the work of the Red Cross in Haiti and right here in Alberta, and it is the Alberta Red Cross presence that I wish to speak about today.

The Canadian Red Cross has become an important part of the Canadian fabric since 1885, providing education in injury prevention, water safety, violence and abuse prevention, as well as medical equipment loans. The Alberta Red Cross is a network of 2,000 paid and unpaid personnel across the province standing prepared when disaster strikes, a quiet professionalism and service that doesn’t always make the news.

Mr. Speaker, because of the tireless efforts of these volunteers, any citizen of Alberta facing a disaster, whether it’s a house fire or a flood, can get help. Alberta disaster response volunteers provided more than 4,000 hours of direct service to Albertans plus an additional 22,000 hours on call last year. Over the last three years the Canadian Red Cross has responded to 521 disasters across our province and has helped 2,500 people.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to have such a strong partner as the Canadian Red Cross in service of vulnerable people here in Alberta during times of disaster. I want to commend our government’s own Alberta Emergency Management Agency for the strong ties it has and continues to build with this outstanding provincial, national, and international organization, and I want to thank the volunteers and staff of the Canadian Red Cross for ensuring that Albertans receive the help and hope they need during times of vulnerability. This is the power of humanity in action, and I’d like to thank the representatives from the Red Cross for their patience today.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the first of a series of pages of petitions coming from residents of Carstairs, Crossfield, and Didsbury. They are petitioning the Legislature as follows: we the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to consider providing increased funding to Midway school to ensure that various programs continue to be available to its students, teachers, trustees, and parents.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Mr. Joel Crichton. He writes to express his concern that Alberta schoolchildren will not receive balanced and accurate information about the oil sands from this government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table correspondence from Dean Goodine, who is a property master for the film and television sector. He’s writing that he started working in the Alberta film industry in 1986 after attending SAIT and has worked on a number of films made in Alberta. The twist is that he no longer lives in Alberta because it is not a competitive place for film. He is currently working on Human Target, being filmed in Vancouver, with another ex-Edmontonian producer, Grace Gilroy, and he hopes that we can become more competitive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I have three sets of tablings. The first is the program from An Evening to Celebrate Catholic Education: 125 Years of Calgary Catholic. Mr. Speaker, as a former teacher you would have been terrifically impressed by the talent shown by the Catholic youngsters of Calgary.

My second tabling is the fall 2009 edition of the Independent Living Resource Centre of Calgary’s newsletter.

My third is the most recent Momentum: Developing Productive Futures annual report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2010, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a second or subsequent set of estimates is to be tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that an amended fiscal plan be tabled. On February 9 the Minister of Finance and Enterprise tabled the 2009-10 quarterly budget report for the third quarter, which serves as the amended fiscal plan. The quarterly report tabled by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise provides the framework for the additional spending authority for nine departments of the government.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2009-10 supplementary supply estimates. These will provide the additional spending authority to nine departments of the government. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $920.5 million in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases and $4.7 million in voted capital investment. These estimates will also authorize an approximate increase of $32.9 million in voted nonbudgetary disbursements.

Government Motions

8. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2009-10 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question on the motion put forward by the hon. President of the Treasury Board?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

9. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2009-10 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand before the Assembly today and move second reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

In the wake of profound economic changes the face of business is changing. Bill 1 acknowledges this and resolves to see Alberta adapt to the shifts in our global economy with diligence and innovation. Mr. Speaker, over the past several years this government has made changes to our services, programs, legislation, and regulations to support our province and its prosperity. Initiatives such as Productivity Alberta, the western economic partnership, and Alberta Innovates are examples of major resources made available to Albertans and those wishing to invest in our province. However, they are all branches of one tree, competitiveness. Bill 1 will bring us back to our roots by engaging industry and business in a collaborative process with government to analyze our circumstances and to enhance our strong economic foundation.

Mr. Speaker, we are truly fortunate here in Alberta. We are blessed with a very hard-working population, which is a driving strength in our economy. Bill 1 draws on this resource and gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council the ability to strike a body for the purpose of improving Alberta's competitiveness. This body will discuss and work to develop the best methods to increase our province's competitive edge. For example, our province's forestry and agriculture sectors have a deep-seated history as well as an incredible potential for a prosperous future. The committee will be able to advise on the best ways for our province to move forward by fostering value-added opportunities and increasing access to emerging international markets. These goals are best achieved by continued focused collaboration with industry stakeholders as well as with other government ministries such as Advanced Education and Technology.

This body will also be apprised of the province's competitive review. This review investigated components of conventional operations such as regulatory efficiency, taxation, and the availability of labour. In order to continue attracting investment, it is important for us to remain aware of how our province's regulations and royalty regime affect our businesses. A thorough understanding of these concepts requires communication and collaboration among industry stakeholders and government. The body that would be established under Bill 1 would be aware of the necessity of this relationship and will work closely with industry stakeholders to better understand these issues. They will be able to determine the regulatory impact and what can be changed to attract investment while maintaining safety; in essence, finding the balance.

Mr. Speaker, in many ways this work is already being done. This government is aware of the importance of regulatory reform, which is why we have the Regulatory Review Secretariat, chaired by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, who, by the way, is doing an outstanding job. This body reviews regulations, usually when their expiry date comes up. At this time the cost of the regulations to both government and industry are assessed, and changes are made to ensure that we continue to attract investment and promote efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, not all regulations have expiry dates; in fact, 30 per cent do not. This can result in their becoming outdated before they are reviewed. We are changing this to ensure timely review of our province's regulations. Furthermore, regulations often expire approximately 10 years after their inception. However, we have noted that in rapidly changing industries they may need to be reviewed sooner. Therefore, we will be making efforts to see these regulations expire sooner, for example after five years rather than 10, thereby ensuring that they are reviewed in a more timely manner.

In addition, Alberta is employing a one-window application system known as BizPaL, which will contribute to our province remaining competitive. This means that when industry is required to adhere to regulations while working on projects that involve several levels of government, they are only required to submit one application to one level of government for their project to be approved. The approval of the other levels of government will happen behind the scenes through a collaborative process between governments. In essence, we are streamlining the application process and making it easier for industry to come to Alberta with their investments.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will embrace these developments in our regulatory review process, and the body that the bill will establish will have the best understanding of our regulations as well as our royalty structure and how these compare to our competitors in such places as Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Texas. By this mechanism they will be able to advise government on the future of our oil and gas sector. This advice will include considerations for infrastructure and transportation improvements within the province and specifically within the north.

Further, as part of their work the body will integrate the First Nations consultation policy and guidelines on land management and resource development. Mr. Speaker, it is important to Albertans that we continue to work with all land stewards while respecting the heritage of our province. Bill 1 embraces our legacy and will ensure that, going forward, the initiatives regarding land management reflect the respect that Albertans have for our history.

Mr. Speaker, the body will of course put efforts into our province's world-class integrated petrochemical hub. This is currently an area where increased collaboration among industries and government can have a substantial impact on our province's economic diversity. By promoting co-operation between the oil sands and our province's refineries, significant cost-reduction mechanisms could be identified and employed to a point where Alberta's petrochemical products are even more competitive than they currently are.

Another industry that can have a significant impact on Alberta's prosperity is research and development. Recently Alberta Advanced Education and Technology reinvented our province's research and technology system. The system, now known as Alberta Innovates, is designed to ensure a more co-ordinated approach to research in the province, ultimately providing new opportunities to Alberta researchers and entrepreneurs. The system includes an international advisory board and five provincial agencies, including Bio Solutions, Energy and Environment Solutions, Health Solutions, and technology commercialization. This new approach will help to ensure that Alberta remains on the cutting edge of research and technology advancement.

Furthermore, under Bill 1 Alberta Innovates will be given the unique opportunity to collaborate with other industries in the province such as our forestry, agriculture, and oil and gas. Together these industries will have the ability to foresee and anticipate unique areas of opportunity in the province and ensure Alberta's competitive edge.

Mr. Speaker, another important initiative of government going forward is Productivity Alberta. The web portal, which was launched earlier this month, is an online resource for Alberta businesses to use in order to improve their productivity and global competitiveness. The site includes best practices and strategies along with assessment tools for companies to measure their progress. This site can be used by businesses and industries such as forestry, ag, and oil and gas, and Bill 1 will help to integrate this initiative with all the other work that is going on within the province.

Overall, the act will promote co-operation amongst all these industries, businesses, and government in looking at the competitiveness of our province on a global scale. The body will develop an overall strategic approach to competitiveness, recommendations of priority actions within the province as well as establish benchmarks to measure our accomplishments. Further, they will be responsible for reporting to the Premier on the status of Alberta's competitiveness, making clear recommendations and thereafter preparing annual reports on progress.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe this province has a tremendous capacity for competitiveness. We have the greatest resources in the world, from the wheat fields in the south to the oil sands in the north and, most importantly, the people who drive our economy, and all of this is built upon a solid foundation of low taxes.

There is no doubt that in coming out of this global economic recession, the world of business is changing, and it is impossible for one single person to thoroughly understand the face of this change. Rather, it requires several knowledgeable individuals in both the public and private sectors coming together in the same room for us to assess the directions of our global economy. This is what Bill 1 will permit. Ultimately, the Alberta Competitiveness Act is about adapting to these changes.

Mr. Speaker, the 32nd President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, said, "Wise and prudent men" – and I'm sure he meant women – "have long known that in a changing world worthy institutions can be conserved only by adjusting them to the changing time."

An Hon. Member: You can't assume that.

Mrs. McQueen: Absolutely I can assume that.

This government has the ability to recognize the truth in this saying. We must adapt to the changing markets and directions of our provincial, national, and international business partners. Bill 1 will legislate the best possible way to do this by bringing together those who can most accurately paint the picture of our future. Through Bill 1 and the strong leadership of this government and the incredible work ethic of Albertans I have no doubt this province will become one of the most competitive jurisdictions in the world. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand before the Assembly in support of Bill 1.

I would now like to adjourn debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 2

Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

Before us today we have proposed legislative revisions to six acts along with updated wording to another two acts. These revisions, if approved, would require professional regulatory organizations to consult with the minister responsible for the act itself and the minister responsible for parts 1 to 3 of the Post-secondary Learning Act. Currently the ministries responsible are Employment and Immigration and Advanced Education and Technology.

I suppose you could say that there are two main reasons for this amendment act. First, this government wants to ensure that the qualifications asked for – for example, either courses, diplomas, or degrees required for an individual to practise in a certain profession – are reflective of the true requirements to do the job. While we encourage continuing learning for all Albertans, sometimes these increased standards may be unnecessary for the individual to perform the work. Likewise, we would ask to be consulted if there's a proposal to reduce educational requirements.

Second, this government wants to ensure that we are consistent with the Health Professions Act, which has had a similar provision in place since 2001. These proposals would mirror the piece of legislation and add a clause to the Architects Act, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act, the Land Surveyors Act, the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act, the Regulated Accounting Profession Act, and the Veterinary Profession Act. If passed, the amendment act will update a similar clause that's been part of the Agrology Profession Act since 2007 and the Regulated Forestry Profession Act since 2002.

In essence, the clause will read that for the professional regulatory organization or institute or college, depending on the specific language of each act, the government body must consult with the ministers responsible for the acts and must consider the comments received from those ministers. Mr. Speaker, I understand each professional regulatory organization has been advised of Bill 2 and are understanding of the reasons behind these proposals.

In closing, this legislation ensures that government has a chair at the table and is kept in the loop. It is helpful for government to know what's being discussed and to be involved at the earliest stage possible, especially when we're talking about any potential changes to postsecondary curriculum. Most importantly and in addition to providing greater consistency among similar legislation, Bill 2 enhances a strong, proactive relationship with Alberta's professional regulatory organizations. I'm proud to carry the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, and I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate at this time. Thank you.

Bill 3

Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and begin debate on Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010. This bill proposes two amendments to the current act. The first amendment relates to section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act. In 1979 the Alberta Legislature enacted section 8 to allow certain surviving family members – a spouse, an adult interdependent partner, a child, and parents – to recover damages for the emotional suffering and grief caused by the wrongful death of a close family member. This law ensures that family members do not have to litigate in order to receive damages for their grief. In other words, bereavement damages are automatic, and the amounts are set by statute. There is no need for family members to testify in court about the grief they suffered as a result of the death of a spouse, a child, or a parent.

Presently the act limits the class of family members eligible to receive bereavement damages. These damages may not be awarded to parents if their deceased child was married or had an adult interdependent partner, and damages may not be awarded to a child for their deceased parent if the child was married or had an adult interdependent partner. Mr. Speaker, the passage of Bill 3 will broaden the eligibility for bereavement damages by opening up eligibility to a child that is married or has an adult interdependent partner. This change will mean that parents may be awarded damages regardless of the marital status of their deceased child, and a child may be awarded damages for the death of a parent regardless of the child's marital status. This amendment is consistent with the rule of law and court decisions that there should be no restriction on bereavement damages based on a child's marital status.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment removes the reference to a child as including an illegitimate child. An illegitimate child refers to a child whose parents are not married. Distinguishing between legitimate and illegitimate children is no longer appropriate in legislation. It is also out of step with modern-day family structures and dynamics. All children should be considered equal regardless of the marital status of the children's parents. This amendment is consistent with Alberta's Family Law Act, which focuses on the relationship between the child and the parent rather than the relationship between the children's parents. This is also another step towards removing the final vestiges of illegitimacy remaining in Alberta's legislation.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments reflect the rule of law and current demographics in Alberta. I encourage all members to support Bill 3.

I would like to adjourn debate at this time. Thank you.

3:10 Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 11: Mr. Hayden]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise in the House today to reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his poignant and stirring speech. The throne speech acknowledged that despite tough times Albertans remain optimistic when looking into the future, and we have every reason to be. Over the years we have all seen many ups and downs in the Alberta economy, but Alberta always bounces back better than ever.

Our economy is the powerhouse that will lead Canada out of this recession, and our health care will be the future envy of the country. Mr. Speaker, fiscally this province has a solid foundation. We have high employment, we have low income tax and corporate tax rates, and we are the only province in Canada that has no sales tax. Alberta has the lowest fuel tax in Canada and the lowest general corporate tax rate. In addition, Alberta businesses and financial institutions do not pay capital taxes. Moreover, they also benefit from the absence of a payroll tax, which is levied in Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland and Labrador. If Alberta had the same tax system as other provinces, Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay between $10 billion and $18 billion more in taxes every single year. That works out to about $3,000 to $5,000 per person.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, Albertans pay low personal income taxes, and we are enriched by the largest personal basic tax exemption in Canada. This exemption allows individuals to earn more than $16,000 before having to pay one cent of provincial income tax. These facts allow everyday Albertans, like those in my constituency, to keep more of their money in their pockets. This in itself can help spur the economy and keep it strong. Alberta is the envy of the whole country when it comes to taxes.

On top of this, Mr. Speaker, we have savings. In fact, we are the only province in the country with not one savings account but two, savings like the sustainability fund, which can provide soft landings in economic down times. With the sustainability fund we have the tools necessary to face any economic trials and tribulations head-on and persevere through this global recession.

The heritage savings trust fund is not just a rainy-day fund but an investment in our future, an investment put aside for future generations that may not have the security we have in our nonrenewable resource revenues. Mr. Speaker, Albertans themselves are the engine that keeps our economy moving forward, and this is why the Alberta health care system aims to keep Albertans healthy and thriving. With the implementation of a five-year funding plan Alberta health care will remain stable and secure no matter what the economic environment entails.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's health care system will continue to be a leader in this country. The health of all Albertans is at stake. That is why it is imperative to assess and reassess health care in Alberta, to make sure we are doing our absolute best. Accountability in health care is paramount to this government as we need to ensure that the budgetary increase directed towards health care pays off in measurable outcomes. As His Honour stated, "Your government will go beyond statistical measures . . . and seek input from Albertans themselves." It is through this public consultation that Alberta health care will provide added transparency, efficiency, and accountability.

The ability to plan ahead is integral to health care, and the Alberta government knows this. With the implementation of the five-year plan Albertans will be able to say that we have one of the best health care systems in this whole country.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans have a right to equitable and consistent services, especially people with developmental disabilities. This government will do the utmost to make sure all Albertans receive the care and support they need and deserve.

Mr. Speaker, social programs for Albertans will become better integrated and more focused on the people they were created to serve. These improvements will make it easier for Albertans in need to access information and assistance. Furthermore, every effort will be made to make sure the transition between programs as they move from childhood to adulthood to their senior years will go as smoothly as possible. Our health care system along with our social programs are in reliable hands.

This enables Albertans to focus on the multitude of opportunities and attractions this beautiful province has to offer. In my own constituency of St. Albert thousands of children and parents gather from all over northern Alberta every spring for the International Children's Festival. This year it will be held June 1 to the 5th. It is a sample of what is best about Alberta: people working together for a common goal.

When I think about Alberta's bright future, I cannot help but reflect on its glorious past. Mr. Speaker, St. Albert is the oldest nonfortified continuously inhabited settlement in Alberta. Next year, in 2011, we will celebrate the sesquicentennial, or 150-year anniversary. What a long way we have come in 150 years.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong, who has represented Alberta exceptionally well in the last five years. His Speech from the Throne outlined and envisioned Alberta's continued and future greatness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments if there are any.

Hon. members, I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall today, and something will happen in the Assembly that very infrequently happens. In our Assembly two languages, the official languages of Canada, are recognized as the spoken languages of this Assembly, but in the time that you've honoured me with the opportunity to be your Speaker, I've also recognized a multitude of other languages. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall today wishes to give his remarks to the Speech from the Throne in Punjabi, and I'm accepting that. You should have on your desks a copy of the speaking notes, the complete speech, with respect to this.

To the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, I'm very pleased as part of the reflection of the diversity of Alberta to permit that, probably the only Parliament in Canada that would permit such. I hope it's understood, the uniqueness of this opportunity.

Secondly, sir, I trust, I pray, I hope that the speech given in Punjabi will mirror word for word the English translation that is on the desk of all individuals. The member should know that if it is not, I will hear, and then, unfortunately, we will have a discussion and consequences.

Proceed, please. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm greatly honoured to rise today to offer my thoughts on the Speech from the Throne. I'm proud to be a Calgarian, an Albertan, and a Sikh. I'm also proud to offer these remarks in Punjabi to reflect the diversity of this Assembly, the diversity of my constituency, Calgary-McCall, and the diversity of this wonderful province we all call home.

When I came here 40 years ago, few could have imagined that this Assembly would feature so many different kinds of people from such a wide range of diverse ethnicities and cultural backgrounds. It is a wonderful thing to see.

[Remarks in Punjabi] My response begins with a note of gratitude to His Honour Norman Kwong, our Lieutenant Governor, for five years of dedicated service to the people of Alberta. His Honour did a magnificent job, and he makes us all proud to be Albertan. The people of Calgary-McCall are a hard-working bunch, Mr. Speaker, full of optimism and hope for the future. They believe in Alberta. But many of the citizens who visit, call, or e-mail my office are concerned with the direction of this administration. Thousands of people are out of work. Thousands more are deeply concerned about this administration's mismanagement of our public health care system and cuts to vitally important social programs. Albertans don't ask for much from government, but they do demand a basic level of competence, a level of competence that the Premier's administration has failed to deliver. [As submitted]

[Remarks in Punjabi] Wrong decisions made by this Premier and his ministers have sown chaos in the health care system; have created instability and uncertainty in our oil and gas sector, the engine of Alberta's economy; have damaged our international reputation and our environment; have failed to enforce standards to address pollution and climate change; have allowed family farms to stagnate and wither away; have failed to protect our forests and the forestry industry from the pine beetle; have left Alberta's most vulnerable citizens more vulnerable than ever; have created transportation bottlenecks and headaches. [As submitted]

Wrong spending decisions have frittered away the opportunity to save for the future, have wasted millions of taxpayer dollars on lavish perks for the elite, have reduced support by 30 per cent for Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, now more vulnerable than ever.

The throne speech features a few positive developments, but even the good news is tainted by the administration's long record of half measures and broken promises.

[Remarks in Punjabi] Providing Alberta Health Services with a five-year budget cycle is a good idea. Considering all the damage done to our public health care system by this administration's catastrophic bungling, this is at least a small step forward to restoring a smidgen of confidence to the health care professionals who have done their best while dealing with the consequences of the Premier's mismanagement. [As submitted]

We're also glad to see that the Premier's administration has heeded opposition and community calls for more police officers, but even the addition of 100 officers will leave Alberta's two largest cities underpoliced. Per capita Calgary and Edmonton are two of the least protected cities in the country when it comes to crime. We simply need more boots on the street to meet population growth.

[Remarks in Punjabi] Finally, I'm glad that the administration is at last starting to think about unfairness in the federal EI program. Alberta workers haven't been getting their fair share of rightfully earned benefits, and the opposition and labour groups have been raising this issue for months. [As submitted]

I hope that the Premier can make some real progress here and bring these benefits home to Alberta workers, working moms and dads who desperately need and deserve the assistance. I would suggest that the Premier should also do something about the skyrocketing wait times for processing EI applications. Many Albertans live paycheque to paycheque, and they can't afford to wait for months for their EI benefits.

[Remarks in Punjabi] Aside from those few bright spots, even by the rightfully diminished expectations of most Albertans this throne speech sets a new low for a government that is clearly out of ideas. The cupboard is bare: virtually no ideas, no leadership, no vision, no inspiration, no imagination, no plan. And given the Conservative track record many of these commitments will drag on for years and years without any real progress. [As submitted]

The speech talks about a new vision for education, but the only thing Albertans know about this administration's vision for education is that you keep saying you have a vision for education. Why not provide Albertans with something more concrete? Why haven't you reported back on the Inspiring Education dialogue? Why did you pull the new School Act from the agenda for this spring sitting? Is it because you're starting to realize that your vision for education isn't the same as the vision shared by most Albertans?

[Remarks in Punjabi] I don't see a vision for education from this administration, just another collection of wrong decisions. It was wrong to violate the contract with teachers and then fight and lose the case in court. The Minister of Education's response to the ongoing teachers' wage issue has been less than inspiring. He was obviously completely unprepared for a verdict that favoured the teachers. [As submitted]

It was wrong to claw back $80 million from Alberta's public school boards. Can Alberta's students and parents expect even greater cuts? It is wrong to cut education funding, our primary investment in our future. By all means look for efficiencies, but ensure stable, dependable funding for this vital public program. It is wrong to fire the school board without exhausting all avenues of understanding and board support. It is wrong that we have an administration whose only response to social challenges faced by aboriginal communities is to fire their local school board.

A short, simple message repeated by many Calgarians has made its way to our offices. "Alberta's continued prosperity will depend on the knowledge and skills of its future citizens. In these times more than ever it is important to continue to invest in our children's education."

[Remarks in Punjabi] "As a concerned Albertan, I urge you not to cut funding for our schools." As ever, there is great wisdom in the direct, no-nonsense advice of Albertans. This administration should listen. The throne speech contains a claim that the Premier's administration will build world-class universities. How can this be accomplished when the minister of advanced education has already admitted that the best-case scenario for postsecondary funding this year is a zero per cent increase? The University of Calgary is already laying off staff, and the University of Alberta is considering the same. We should be investing in postsecondary education and research and development to move Alberta from a 20th century economy to a 21st century economy. [As submitted]

It is wrong to balance the budget on the backs of students. Students and their families are rightfully alarmed by the prospects of massive tuition increases. Now more than ever Alberta needs talented graduates to fill jobs in the energy sector, the health sector. How can we ever address ER wait times and the need for greater capacity in long-term care without more doctors and nurses? How can we continue to keep our energy sector alive without new engineers and scientists? These short-sighted policies are driving away our best and brightest.

[Remarks in Punjabi] In difficult times a responsible government would focus on protecting public services that Albertans depend upon while finding efficiencies to bring down the deficit. This administration claims to protect public services, but ask anyone who depends on PDD funding how they feel about the government's spending priorities. These people are desperate, and they weren't getting the help they needed even during the boom. Betraying their security and well-being is wrong. No vision, no imagination, no leadership: that's what this throne speech offered Albertans. [As submitted]

As proud as Albertans are of their province, many of us here sense that we can do better. With the resources at our command – our natural wealth, our well-educated, well-skilled population, our can-do culture – we should be able to build a truly world-class society, including hospitals, postsecondary institutions, and research centres. If we put our minds to it, we could build the world's first truly sustainable economy. We could in fact be leaders in that race.

[Remarks in Punjabi and English] We could eliminate homelessness. We could dramatically reduce poverty. All these things are possible if we had a government that committed itself to four simple principles: health, enterprise, foresight, integrity. This is a time for solutions. We need energetic, forward-looking leadership, a government that can adapt to changing times, new challenges. We need a government that makes decisions based on principles, not political expediency. We can do better.

3:30

In conclusion, I would like to thank Mr. Manjit Singh Piasa for helping me translate my response to the throne speech from English to Punjabi.

[Remarks in Punjabi and English] Pure: the true believer belongs to the Lord, and the victory also belongs to the Lord.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. [Remarks in Punjabi] I have just said in Punjabi, of course, "Thank you for your speech, hon. member, but I don't agree with everything you've said, and I would like to ask you one question." Do you agree with the significant investment that we are making in health care as announced in the Speech from the Throne, as backed up by the business plan and the budget that was introduced last week so that we can seek and find the kinds of improvements to health service delivery that we have promised Albertans and that they rightfully deserve and requested?

Mr. Kang: [Remarks in Punjabi]

Secondly, you know, we are glad to see more funding for the health care. I agree with you there fully. But it remains to be seen if it will be publicly delivered, publicly funded. So far we are not seeing that happening. I think it still can go towards a private system. Those are our concerns. It remains to be seen how successful we will be even with throwing all that money at health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Punjabi and English] Dear Uncle, I'm very happy and pleased to hear about very important issues in our mother tongue. I'm acknowledging in your speech how we're going to address the emergency wait times and long-term care and the doctors and nurses issues. We're training more doctors and nurses than we've ever trained before. The emergency wait time is the number one performance measure for Alberta Health Services and Dr. Duckett. Dear Uncle, how can you say that we're not addressing this? We have first offered a vision in the Alberta health act. We've spent and invested so much in providing care. We have one board to implement that job. If you could please answer that question, I would appreciate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you. [Remarks in Punjabi] I think that before we had 24 health boards, and we reduced them to 17. Then we brought them to nine. Then we brought them back to one. [Remarks in Punjabi] So it remains to be seen. [Remarks in Punjabi] You know, we were training more nurses; we were training more doctors. Then all of a sudden there was such a big uncertainty, and those nurses and doctors were not even sure, you know, that they would have jobs here in Alberta.

With the new funding some certainty has come into the health care system. Increasing the long-term care beds will help the hospitals to reduce those wait times. You know, everything is in progress, but it remains to be seen if all the money the government has put into the health care is going to grow the situation in six weeks, in three months.

Mostly, it has been mismanagement, but it's not on the delivery part. The health care we read about in the papers, you know: we've got the best service providers in the hospitals. I commend all those hospital front-line staff, who provide the best service. But somehow there is something up in the management part with the delivery of the system. So it remains to be seen how we're going to improve this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely proud . . .

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member, but I'm sorry; the time has expired.

For those members who participated in Punjabi, if you get a request from the Hansard people in the next couple of minutes about a translation or the proper text, do not hesitate to respond very immediately because it's a very, very tight schedule that we produce this Hansard with. So if you get the request, bang back right away, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I did grow up in northeast Calgary just outside of the hon. member's constituency and just outside of mine, I definitely will not be participating in this debate in Punjabi, so we don't have to worry about that.

I do want to say that it's a pleasure to rise and speak to the Speech from the Throne that was delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor just a few weeks ago. Again, it's always an honour to be in his presence. He's such a great Albertan. It never ceases to amaze me the dignity and sense of humour that he delivers such speeches with.

What I would like to do, Mr. Speaker, is just go through some of the major points in the Speech from the Throne and try to equate that to what it means for my constituents and what they have to be excited about. First of all, I think what was clearly outlined in the Speech from the Throne was the unique fiscal position that our province is in right now compared to any other jurisdiction not just in Canada but right across North America.

I had the pleasure earlier in this year of travelling to both the state capitals in Washington and Idaho on behalf of the Pacific Northwest economic delegation, and it became very apparent to me that we're very fortunate to live in the place that we do. These people are having to grapple with some of the most difficult decisions of cutting substantial amounts out of their budgets. But here in Alberta we don't have to do that because we do have this thing called the sustainability fund.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should maybe change the name. It should be called the stability fund because that's exactly what it provides Albertans, stability in times when there is some uncertainty around revenues and some uncertainty around the potential for economic growth. We do know that we are going to come back to a time of great economic growth and prosperity, and it's probably not too far around the corner. But we do have this $17 billion that was put into the sustainability fund that will get us through these times. I believe that this government does not have to be bashful about putting this in place and using it appropriately in this past year and in the next few years to come as we find ourselves back in the black in the fiscal position.

You know, I guess, the speech did talk about Alberta's relative position as having the highest incomes and the lowest taxes and the most advanced public infrastructure in Canada. That's something to be very proud of, Mr. Speaker, and I just want to speak briefly to this idea of having the lowest taxes. While I'm very proud of being in the province that does have the lowest taxes, we need to be very cognizant that we need to continue to push the envelope. I was elected to this Assembly because I really believe that we as politicians and members of this Assembly have the obligation to deliver the services that people require as well as to make sure that we're doing it in a way that's the best value to taxpayers and in a way that allows us to put more of the hard-earned money of the average citizen back into their pockets so that they can spend it on the things that they believe are important in their lives.

I want to make sure that we are continually looking at making sure we do have the lowest taxes because it does create a better opportunity for investment and economic growth – that’s no secret – but from a moral standpoint it does put more money into the pockets of the average hard-working citizen so they can make the choices themselves instead of having government make choices as to where that money should be spent. I really believe that as we move forward in using the sustainability fund and move forward into, you know, 2012, when we are back in the black and are in a surplus position, we should continue to look at ways to invest our surpluses so that we can continue to lower taxes in our jurisdiction in a way that’s sustainable for not just this current generation but future generations. I really believe that we do have the opportunity to allow that we do have the lowest taxes in Canada and right across North America not just now but for future generations of Albertans. I think that’s very, very important.

The second thing that was very prominent in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, was health care, and we can see that just last week, with the delivery of the budget by the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise, health care is a significant concern of our government. We’ve seen the follow-through of what was in the throne speech, a five-year committed spending plan on health care. I think this is very important because, again, I believe this provides stability to the health care system, which is what Albertans are wanting, and I think that this is an appropriate time to provide that stability. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because I think we’re at a very, very important crossroad with our health care system. I was very excited about the report that was released by the committee that was chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the opportunity that Albertans are going to have to have input on the future direction of health care at a very, very broad level.

Mr. Speaker, it was only about early October, I believe it was, when I convened a round-table discussion of about a dozen members in my community. I might get some jeers from the opposition here across the aisle, but this was a very broad spectrum of people in my constituency. There is no doubt about that. There were probably at least half of those people in that room that did not vote for me – hard to believe – in the last election. This was a very broad cross-section of the diversity that’s in my constituency both from a business standpoint, an age standpoint. We had students, seniors, business people, social activists, immigrants, those types of things.

We had about a three-hour discussion about health care, about the government’s plans for health care and what these people would like to see moving forward, and I really got the sense that there is a huge appetite for Albertans to enter into dialogue about the future of health care in our province. I don’t mean, sort of, the ins and outs about how many nurses or how many doctors but a very, very high level about what we cherish about our public health care system.

I think all Albertans realize the tremendous pressures and strains our current health care system is under. We know that when it comes to pharmaceuticals, when it comes to the aging demographics of our population, when it comes to the technological advances we’ve seen in our health care system over, let’s say, you know, the last two decades, people are living longer. Children that would normally not have lived past a certain age are living longer and with a greater quality of life, and the supports are there to provide them that. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that these are very, very expensive.

A number a decades ago, when public health care was brought in by Tommy Douglas, I’m not sure he really imagined the types of escalations in cost to the public purse that health care would have. We’re now sitting at very close to 40 per cent of the actual provincial budget on health care. I know that it’s over 50 per cent in Ontario. That’s certainly concerning.

Albertans from right across the political spectrum want to have the discussion about what that means for them moving forward. Does that mean that we might have to change some of our thinking around our public health care system?

You know, Mr. Speaker, it was baffling, just mind boggling, particularly over the last two days, that we had members of the Official Opposition make comments about this government’s wanting to give health care money to for-profit enterprises or companies or people. What I don’t understand is that I haven’t met a nurse, I haven’t met a doctor, I haven’t met anybody involved in the health care professions that would do that job for free. What I don’t get is that we sometimes like to think of our health care system as something that’s free, that’s just always there, but the money comes from somewhere. I know that our doctors and our nurses and all of our health professionals want to be fairly compensated for the work that they do. Those are the types of things that we need to have conversations about, as to how to best deliver them. We need to get past this debate about for-profit or not-for-profit and what that means to public health care.

When I brought this group of constituents together in my constituency, the one amazing thing was that I was a little worried that we’d evolve into this very partisan, heightened political rhetoric about, you know: you’re going to privatize health care or, no, you’re not going to privatize or we need more privatized health care or we don’t. That’s not what happened, Mr. Speaker. When we really sat down as a group, a community group, knowing that we were all in this together, we had very, very articulate, very thoughtful debates about what is the role of the private sector in health care and what is the role of government in health care. All people want are the proper assurances that those roles will be there when they need them.

Mr. Speaker, I really believe this whole idea right from the throne speech that Albertans themselves will be engaged in the evolution of the health care system from its first steps is key. I think that’s what Albertans want. I know that that’s what people in my constituency want. They told me that when we had that round-table meeting.

Mr. Speaker, the final thing that I want to address in the throne speech is this whole notion of increasing Alberta’s competitiveness, not just in Canada but right across the world. There are many different facets to this, obviously, but the one that I find most interesting is this whole idea around regulations and red tape. You know, I have to admit that since I’ve been elected, the feedback that I’ve received from a number of my constituents, not just businesses but constituents that are involved in the social sectors and that sort of thing, is that there are too many hurdles to go over and hoops to jump through just to do what they’re passionate doing. Whether it’s helping out someone that is a PDD client or whether it’s delivering a service as part of their small business, they believe that government has put obstacles in their way. As I say, it actually goes against our slogan of the freedom to create because, really, these people feel that they don’t have the freedom.

I’m very much looking forward to how this rolls out over the next year because I believe there are a lot of things that we can be doing. I’ll provide one example. Just the other week, Mr. Speaker, I read an e-mail from a constituent, and he had some concern about a gentleman in Ontario that, for whatever reason, thought it would be okay to keep a tiger as a pet. I find that very peculiar myself, but the conclusion of the story was that this individual that decided to keep the tiger as a pet ended up being attacked by his pet and dying. My constituent thought it was very, very important for us to create a law to keep people from keeping tigers and other dangerous animals as pets.

Well, I don't know, really, whether we as a body, as an Assembly need to protect our constituents from just common-sense type things. I think at times governments, not just this one but governments right across the world, try to protect their citizens from stuff that is just common sense. I'm not going to sit here and say that this individual that had the pet, you know, deserved that fate or whatever. I guess what I'm saying is that we need as governments to be very focused, to let people use their creativity and imagination to be not just the best businesspeople, the best workers, but the best citizens and the best neighbours possible. I'm, again, really excited about this idea of the government seriously looking at what kind of burden it's putting not just on businesses but on average citizens, my constituents, through its requirements of regulation and red tape and all of the hoops and the hurdles that they have to go through.

Mr. Speaker, just one last thing. I have to say that, you know, I'm coming up to the sort of two-year mark of being elected to this Assembly, and it's been such a great honour to serve with all of the colleagues in here on both sides. It's been an honour to serve my constituency. I think we have a great opportunity right now here in Alberta to come through what was – you know, a lot of people were saying that they could foresee what happened with the economy, but I'm not sure that a lot of people were able to envision how it unfolded. We have an opportunity right here to emerge as the best place to live, to work, to play, to invest, and to raise a family. That's what I'm going to be dedicated to doing for my constituents in Calgary-North Hill over the next year.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to make a quick comment. I appreciate the hon. member's speech. In fact, I too share his passion for Alberta somehow getting on a more sustainable track in the future.

I heard your talk at the beginning, more on us being prepared in the future to be able to keep taxes low and for people to keep investment going here in Alberta, and I agree with that. I think that primarily the best way to do that is through what the Mintz report suggests, where we're almost saving 30 per cent of our royalty resources through good or through bad times or whatever the deal be and for us to get off this roller coaster.

I know it's easier for me as an opposition member to say that, but I noticed that earlier, in the Lougheed era, I guess, you would see 30 per cent as a general rule just come off, from '71 until about '79 or maybe even sometime after. I'm just asking what your proposal is to sort of ensure – I see the way for us to be able to get to that perpetually low tax base is for us to save over the short term in order to build up that revenue because we're not going to have the petroleum resources, which I see as giving us our competitive advantage, at that time.

I'll let you take the floor. That's sort of the basis of my question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo because I think that's a very important one. I know that the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise has talked over the last couple of weeks about developing a savings strategy or some sort of legislated savings strategy. I'm pretty sure that he is sort of in the primary stages of looking at what that might look like. I do know that our Premier did provide that direction to the former Minister of Finance and Enterprise, and she had the challenge of trying to address that in a time where the fiscal, I guess, capacity of this province fell out of the bucket.

You know, we're going to get there. I truly believe that. I have the honour of being appointed chair of the Cabinet Policy Committee on the Economy, which the Minister of Finance and Enterprise falls under, and I know that we've had some preliminary discussions about how we can maybe bring forward some of the ideas, to have discussions amongst our caucus members, to eventually bring something to this Assembly. I think that's very important. It's something that I know this government is looking at. I would suggest probably staying tuned. It's probably not too far down the road.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I wish I could remember who came up with the quote that the only certainties in life are death and taxes. That seems to be part of today's conversation. With regard to Alberta having the lowest tax regime in Canada, I would suggest that the flat tax puts an unfair burden on our middle-class taxpayers. If you compare the tax rates that people in the upper echelon of our middle class pay versus other provinces, I think you'll find that other provinces using a progressive tax rate have breaks for their middle-class individuals.

With regard to health care and the delivery and costs the member used the 40 per cent figure. The reality is that as a portion of our GDP health care spending, whether it's in a recession or in a boom time, has never exceeded 7 per cent of our gross domestic product, so be careful when you use that 40 per cent figure. Also, be careful when you talk about Tommy Douglas and universal health care. Universal health care has three pillars. Publicly funded is just one of them. Publicly administered and publicly delivered are the other two pillars that are extremely important.

In terms of taxes, in Alberta we pay a terrific amount of hidden tax, and one of those hidden taxes would be the amount of interest we pay for P3 projects, which this government refuses to transparently and accountably put forward. We just had a meeting this past week with the Ministry of Transportation, and they refused to provide the interest rates that we're going to be paying for the next 30 years on road projects. We've been unable to get answers for how much they're spending on school projects.

So when it comes to rah-rah Alberta, there are a lot of things to cheer about, but get your costs and your taxes straight.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: EI, Employment and Immigration. It's not the beginning of a song. It's not ee-eye, ee-eye oh; it's just EI.

The Acting Speaker: This is the throne speech.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Honoured to be over here. It's definitely hard to compete with some of the speeches, nor will I do a reply in Punjabi, but I really appreciate the fact that in this Assembly members can express themselves in their native language. I think it reflects the nature of this province and how open and welcoming we are to newcomers in this province and how proud we are of our heritage. So congratulations to the member for delivering his comments in Punjabi.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to express my appreciation to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and his lovely spouse for being such vital contributors to our province and for representing the Crown not only within the province but also outside of Alberta in such a dignified way as they have. I can only imagine how onerous the task of being a Lieutenant Governor is, yet this Lieutenant Governor has always fulfilled all of his obligations and has done it in a top-notch manner. I really take off my hat to him.

The Speech from the Throne really gave Albertans an outline of what this government's values are, and I firmly believe that these values very closely reflect those of Albertans. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it also builds on the fact that the government of Alberta has worked very hard with Albertans – actually, probably most of the heavy lifting was done by Albertans – to put us in the position that we're in right now to make us able to respond to any adversity that may fly our way without advance warning.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the recent economic downturn was a phenomenon that was felt world-wide. No economy on this planet has not felt the repercussions of the economic downturn. We saw it down south in the United States, an economic superpower relative to other economies. We saw it in Japan. We saw all of the European Union and their economies literally shrivel overnight. Yet in the province of Alberta, a province that perhaps not enough people know about outside of Canada, outside of North America, we have managed to cultivate an economy and a fiscal regime that managed to a large degree to shelter us from this economic downturn. No, we can't say that we escaped it unscathed. This budget that has been tabled shows the fact that we had to adapt and that we had to bring in measures that are reflective of what a responsible government would do. However, you will see over the next few months, as other provinces from coast to coast will be delivering their budgets over probably the next three to four months, how tempered our measures were compared to what you will see in other budgets. That is because (a) Albertans expected us to be fiscally responsible, and (b) we have managed to, for lack of a better term, sock away money for a situation exactly like this one. Although we cannot say that we expected this to happen, we were always ready for when it happened. Much like an insurance policy: you don't buy your house fire insurance policy because you expect a fire to occur, but you have one just in case, and when it does occur, you're happy you had it. This is exactly the situation.

Mr. Speaker, compared to other provinces and states and countries throughout the world, as opposed to borrowing money from outside banking institutions or financial houses at a certain rate of interest, we were able to actually borrow money from ourselves, our own money, and balance our budget to a larger degree than what you will see in other jurisdictions. That's something that I think not only this government but predominantly Albertans should be proud of because it was they who expected it to happen, and it was they who allowed us to do it as government. Frankly, they wouldn't be supporting this government if they didn't want us to do exactly what they told us to do.

Our financial advantage, Mr. Speaker, as the budget clearly indicates, is not only benefiting us right now but will also benefit us in the future because some analysts will tell you that we are already in the recovery phase of this recession, but Alberta will be the first one to be able to go out and say to the world: "We're open for business. We have rebuilt our economy. We have in the meantime built up our infrastructure, which is now ready to receive an influx of investment, and we have a young, skilled, educated workforce ready to perform in a new, robust economy."

That will be something that not many provinces will be able to say because as their economies are shrivelling up and they are cancelling construction projects and cancelling infrastructure projects, which will be needed in a recovering economy, this province is actually doing the opposite. We are investing in our infrastructure, and we are investing in construction so that we will be ready to accept a new, robust economy. I would like to again thank Albertans for giving us this initiative and for supporting us in doing so.

Mr. Speaker, another very important aspect of the speech – and it appears at the very front of the speech – is our health care. As you know, we have a minister who, as I just said a couple of days ago in a radio interview, probably hasn't slept for the last month or so but, like this government and like Albertans, is committed to making sure that we get the best possible health care system for the money that our taxpayers pay. Let's face it. Again, there is always lots to be desired. Albertans should be commended on the fact that they have high expectations. They should have high expectations because they pay for the system, and they should expect to get the best outcomes possible from our health care system.

I had some personal experiences with the health care system through my family, and I have to tell you that when called upon, the system responds very well. Our nurses and staff in our hospitals are working very hard, and we have some very good professionals delivering the best that they can. However, we should always strive for more. I know that our goal is simply reflective of that of Albertans. We want the system to be as good as possible, just like Albertans do, not because we want this for political reasons. We want this because these are our family members, these are our constituents, these are our friends who end up in these hospitals, who end up at these doctors' clinics. We want them to get the best possible treatment that is available and that could be made available through our expenditures and our management of the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the name of Tommy Douglas has often been tossed around. A bit of a personal connection, actually: a member of my family went to college with Tommy Douglas. Every time we have a family gathering, I get a lengthy lesson on Tommy Douglas, what he stood for and what his ideas were. If you read any of his writings and any of his speeches – and I think the members who tend to toss his name around the most probably have read the least; at least, it would appear so.

Mr. Tommy Douglas's idea of publicly funded and publicly delivered health care had nothing to do with the system we have in place right now. Mr. Speaker, his idea was to provide emergency care for those who need it most. It has grown since, and even though the ideas are still in place, this is not what we would want to go back to. Propagating the ideas of Tommy Douglas and asking us to follow them right now would take us back decades. I think Mr. Douglas would be quite surprised that we took his idea from there to what we have right now.

Mr. Speaker, another aspect of the Speech from the Throne talks about building safe and caring communities. That is something that I hear about very often in my constituency. Our constituents expect to be safe, and they expect the law to be on their side. They expect that the victims, not the perpetrators, will receive the benefit of the law and that the government of Alberta will do anything it can within its realm of influence to create as safe communities as possible. Needless to say – and that's not passing the buck – a great deal of the jurisdiction that deals with the criminal element lies within the Criminal Code of Canada, being the federal government. But I can tell you that as a member of government I see no effort spared among my colleagues who are involved with the delivery of justice and with apprehending some of these individuals.

If you look at the track record of this government over the last two years, Alberta is not exactly a welcoming province for the criminal element. If one were to be a criminal – and I'm not encouraging them to look for more competitive markets – Alberta is not the place to start business. We are tough on our criminal element. We seize any proceeds of crime that they have. We apprehend children who are witnesses to or in the realm of drug dealers, and we support our police force and our judiciary in doing the work that they do.

Observing, Mr. Speaker, as a government member the work of my colleagues, I see a great deal of collaboration also with our federal colleagues. I know that this is one of the common areas where we feel that no effort should be spared in making Albertans safer in their communities. Again, why do we do it? Not for political reasons. We do it because we live in these communities. Our friends, our colleagues, our neighbours live in these communities, and we want Alberta to be safe for everyone.

That sort of takes us, Mr. Speaker, to being competitive. We live right now in a very competitive world. Investors will invest anywhere as long as they get a good return on their investment. Skilled workers and scientists and developers also will move and live anywhere there are possibilities for starting up a business or investing. So part of our competitive advantage is not only to have a competitive economy, going back to my initial comments, but also in creating a welcoming province in which people want to live, do business, raise their children, raise their families. Safe communities is part of that.

Also part of that, Mr. Speaker, is creating quality of life. Through our Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit Alberta has invested a great amount of money into diversifying our culture, into enhancing our culture, our arts. Those are very important components in a competitive economy because if we want to attract the bright minds and the hard workers to this province and if we want to encourage our homegrown talent to stay in this province, they expect a quality of life. That's where our parks, museums, art galleries, and concert halls come into play.

I know that there are individuals on the opposite side that think this is not a wise way of spending money. They calculate everything in dollars and cents. What gives you the best return? What is cheaper? They like to quantify everything mathematically. But there are aspects of life, Mr. Speaker, that government is involved with that simply can't be quantified by dollars and cents. Those are the qualitative aspects of governance and of our life that are reflected only by the individuals that we bring into this province enjoying a good quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, last but not least, it is important to highlight the fact that the Speech from the Throne also reflects Alberta's position in Canada. One would probably have to live only for one day in this great country of ours to realize that Alberta has become a tiger – my reference to a tiger; it seems like "tiger" is the word of the day – within Alberta's economy. What is good for Alberta is good for the rest of Canada. I'm very encouraged that maybe the Premier of Quebec has read Alberta's Speech from the Throne now that he is coming to Alberta and is soliciting investment from Alberta in Quebec following some disparaging remarks made not very long ago about Alberta's economy.

Let's face it, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some 3 million people, but the economic spinoff from this population and from this province reaches from coast to coast to coast. The steel that we use over here to produce our rigs and to extract our oil comes from Ontario. A lot of the labour force comes from the Maritimes and Quebec. The research comes from virtually all provinces. Most importantly, the consumption of our product is done by all provinces. So all of us benefit from it equally.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to say that the Speech from the Throne shows that this government is on the right course. This government is on a course of balancing our budget by 2012. This government is on a course of making sure that Alberta will be and continues to be the most competitive economy when the recession ends. This government is on course to ensure that we will get not a tiger's but a lion's share of investment from throughout the world into this province and, also, to provide Albertans with the best quality of life.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the member if he could comment a little more – both he and I represent urban constituencies – on how the safe communities initiative is impacting his constituency.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. Actually, there is a great partnership right now among the residents of my constituency – and I know that the same thing is happening in Calgary and other urban settings – where our constituents, our citizens, are saying: "Enough is enough. We want to collaborate with government, and we want to own our communities. We're taking our communities back."

I will use this opportunity to highlight one particular program, which is supported by the government of Alberta but also by the Edmonton Police Service, called the NET, neighbourhood empowerment team, where through both provincial and municipal funding a team of police officers and social workers will enter a community where crime stats are above average and will do great proactive work. What they will do is identify hot spots, inform residents of crime occurring in their neighbourhood, and make the neighbourhood as unwelcoming as possible to the criminal element. Combating crime is a team effort. The government of Alberta and other agencies can provide the expertise and the resources, but it is also important that the citizens of Alberta engage in this process, report crime as often as possible, and take measures to prevent crime from happening.

In Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, to answer this member's question, there is a great amount of collaboration that I'm seeing. I'm very proud, in particular, of the constituents in my riding who are taking their personal time to take their neighbourhoods back and push out the criminal element. It works.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I do appreciate hearing the thoughts of the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, but I take exception to his use of the term "tempered." He talked about tempered measures that the government had taken. I equate "tempered" with "balanced," and the cuts to PDD, children's services, public education, postsecondary, parks, environment, SRD, and seniors do not show temperance, do not show balance. I believe in a balance where energy and environment are bookends of balance; if you go forward in energy, you also have to go forward in environmental protection. You can't have one without the other.

Likewise, infrastructure and operational funding. What good is an empty building if you don't have the staff and the operational budget to keep that building functioning? Likewise, education equals economy. Other sets of bookends: you have to have a strong public education system, a strong postsecondary education system if you're going to develop your economy.

We are not in a balanced situation in this province. When the sustainability fund runs out, we're back to riding our nonrenewable resource roller coaster. I would like to see the type of temperance and balance that the hon. member put forward, but as yet it hasn't happened. If the hon. member would like to provide other examples of what he believes is a balanced approach, I'll leave him the remainder of the time to do so.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I sit over here and look across the aisle first thing before question period, I try to figure out: will it be a spending day or a savings day? They tend to be altering from day to day. Right now the Member for Calgary-Varsity has listed a whole bunch of ministries where he would not cut out any money, yet in the same sentence he's arguing that our sustainability fund will run out and that we will be again relying on natural resources. Well, give me another list. Give me a list where you would cut out the budget so we don't have to rely on the sustainability fund and perhaps one day on natural resources. That list never appears.

What we hear are one-offs: "You're spending too much money on this" or "You're not spending enough on that." Bring it into balance, and tell us: what would you cut out? Don't tell me about Horse Racing Alberta because you've spent that money 55 times over already on everything else that you pointed out, which we don't spend anyhow. But every time you say that we should spend more money in something, give me the other thing that you would limit or diminish spending in. That I have never heard yet.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing none, the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to respond to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne and the government's plans for the upcoming session. I'd like to extend a personal thanks to His Honour, Norman Kwong, and to Mrs. Kwong for their years of dedication and service to this province.

First, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a quick look back at how far we've come since this government's last throne speech, and a quick look it will be because, frankly, it looks like this government has been standing still. The words in last week's Speech from the Throne do not match the urgency required to protect working families in this economy. Albertans were counting on this government to take bold, strategic steps. At this time last year the government begged for Albertans to have confidence in their actions. What they said then we can say again today: this Progressive Conservative government has done nothing but inspire scant hope. This session's throne speech offers no clear direction for our province's future. In my years in politics I've never seen a throne speech as vague as the one that was delivered last Thursday.

Three major issues have Albertans struggling to sleep at night, but this government keeps ignoring them. They are health care, the environment, and jobs and the economy. It will take more than platitudes and glossy reports for Albertans to regain faith in this failed government. The NDP believes in a strengthened, publicly delivered health care system for all. We believe in fighting for Alberta workers, their families, their jobs, and their communities. We believe in a just government and one that encourages prosperity for all its people.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to lay out the priorities that we see for this province in the next several years. First, let's invest significantly and sustainably in our health care system. Albertans want to hear that their health care will be publicly delivered, not just publicly paid, and that it will be there when they need it instead of hearing promises of five years of underfunding. Albertans will not tolerate five years of bed closures, hiring freezes, nursing layoffs, and increased user fees. Frankly, hearing the new health minister muse about user fees in emergency rooms is unacceptable. Albertans already pay more out of pocket for health care services than those in other provinces. This is wrong, and we all deserve better from this government.

My colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona and I toured the province last fall, and we met with Albertans in seven different communities to hear their concerns with our public health system as well as their suggestions for how we can strengthen the current system and move it forward to meet our needs. The stories we heard focused on four principles of health care, which I urge the government to adopt.

First of all, people want high-quality care focusing on best practices and education and training.

Secondly, they want accessible health care, and that means ensuring that beds and basic services are available throughout the province in urban and rural areas, not concentrated just in Edmonton and Calgary.

Thirdly, they want affordability. People know that they pay for their health care. They know that it's not free. They know that they have paid taxes to sustain it, and they don't want to be charged again when they go to an emergency room or when they go to a doctor or when they have some surgery.

Most importantly, I think, Mr. Speaker, they need timely care. We were told loud and clear that 14-, 18-, 20-hour waiting times in emergency rooms are unacceptable. Six months' waiting time for cancer surgery is unacceptable. Yet in today's system under this Progressive Conservative government these things are commonplace.

Public opinion polls show time after time that Albertans value their public health care system and that it should be maintained and strengthened, not dismantled and privatized. Albertans know the value of health care and need to know that it will be there when it's needed. We heard from Albertans across the province who feel that this government is working towards dismantling the public health care system. The first recommendation in our health care report What People Want is that the government release all planning documents relative to health care reform. We heard the minister today in question period indicate that he has a number of plans in the works. Well, I call on the minister to publicly release all of the planning documents that are currently in the department's control so Albertans can see what's being considered.

Any potential changes should be discussed openly and honestly with Albertans. Public input should be valued instead of squelched. We see in this throne speech a move towards attempting to solicit the input of Albertans, and we'll hold the government accountable to ensure that this happens. We need to hold them accountable so that decisions like the recent decision to close hundreds of beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton are made openly and with the interests of those who will be most affected taken into account.

Albertans found out what this government means when they refer to community-based care. What that phrase really means is less public services, leaving individuals and families with fewer options and supports. Albertans rallied with groups like the Friends of Medicare, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and Alberta's NDP opposition. The government has temporarily backed down on the closures. They are still closing 108 beds and moving these patients to a long-term care facility. Again, let me be clear. What this really means is that the government has taken away another 150 long-term care beds, that are desperately needed for our aging population. In light of this, the throne speech should have looked at alternatives to the closure of Alberta Hospital Edmonton such as the redevelopment of the facility so that it could serve the community more effectively in the future.

While more than 1,700 Albertans have been assessed as needing long-term care, this government's solution is to take beds away and break its election promise to build 600 new beds. This demonstrates this Progressive Conservative government's complete lack of respect for the promises they make to their constituents.

Our caucus uncovered this government's real plan for seniors' care in the fall, and the truth is that they were planning on having three times more designated assisted living beds than long-term care beds. The same leaked government document talked about increasing fees for seniors to entice more private investment. This is certainly no way to treat those who helped build this province and who paid their taxes their entire lives. Now, when they turn to their government for promised care and support, they often end up in emergency and acute-care hospital beds when they and their families can no longer cope. This leads to a backlog in our hospitals and, in particular, our emergency rooms.

The updated wait times were released last month, and the numbers aren't good for Albertans, Mr. Speaker. The typical wait in Edmonton and Calgary was more than 14 hours this past year. It is unacceptable that we make those who are sick wait that long before they are admitted. The waits would be reduced if there were open acute-care beds, but there aren't. Fortunately, the announcement to close 300 acute-care beds has been reversed, but it's absolutely absurd for a government to address long waiting times by closing beds.

This throne speech should have offered clear, positive moves regarding public health care. It should have made specific recommendations that will benefit all Albertans. Instead, this government is creating an Alberta health act which threatens to undermine the very fabric of the Canada Health Act, which is the foundation of our public health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the second priority that I'd like to talk about is providing meaningful and proactive solutions for an ongoing and vital concern for all Albertans, their environment. Alberta innovation can make us leaders in renewable energy and create green-collar jobs, and we need to begin investing in these technologies not now but yesterday. One of the prevailing barriers to easing the stresses of Albertans regarding our environmental future is the issue of a government that still refuses to support an economic transition to renewable energy. We still rely on fossil fuels.

Now, I'm happy to hear that the government has finally heard that there is a real risk to our province's prosperity; that is, a potential boycott of oil sands oil due to the environmentally irresponsible policies of this government, something we've been warning this government about for several years now. The government has finally taken the first step, admitting that tailings ponds are a negligent means of disposing of toxic waste.

Alberta's NDP opposition has been warning for several years that unless the government got serious about cleaning up the oil sands, Alberta ran a real risk of being unable to sell its oil in the world market. Now the government says that it will eventually eliminate tailings ponds. Well, Albertans and consumers of oil sands oil do not want to hear terms like "eventually." This black eye needs to be resolved, and it needs to be resolved quickly. New projects should use dry tailings technology, and trafficable tailings need to be a priority for existing ponds. Eventually isn't good enough, Mr. Speaker. Abandoning compliance for projects at the approval stage and moving towards compliance after the fact for companies accessing land for oil and gas development certainly isn't good enough and is definitely unacceptable. The result will be more environmental degradation and more damage to Alberta's environmental reputation internationally.

The answers we get to questions regarding environmental mismanagement. Well, we get carbon capture and storage. Despite concern and criticism world-wide and here in Alberta regarding carbon capture and storage, an unproven and expensive technology, this government is pushing forward with its plans by handing $2 billion in taxpayers' money to the energy giants for implementation. Most Albertans agree that industry should be paying the cost for the environmental degradation that they are causing, not the taxpayers. Albertans should take no solace in these veiled attempts to position us as energy leaders and environmental conservationists. Alberta's NDP has long since argued for a shift to renewable energy sources, with wind energy and solar power to be on the list, to name a few. These are technologies that have minimal impact environmentally and maximum benefit overall.

The third priority, Mr. Speaker, but not the least one is to commit to making strategic investments in ensuring economic prosperity for all Albertans. The boom and bust goes over and over again. As a result, this time 78,000 full-time jobs have disappeared. Thousands of families have been left to access food bank services and rely on the charity of their friends and neighbours. Last year I warned of the job losses that were impending, and I urged the government to consider stimulus spending initiatives to keep families with jobs and roofs over their heads. Instead, the government decided to implement a hiring freeze and asked agencies to return money that was already committed to those most in need.

On Friday we heard that they decided the minimum wage would not be increased as promised. Approximately half of those earning minimum wage in Alberta are over 24, and two-thirds are women. These cuts across the board are impacting families negatively, and this government doesn't seem to care. This government failed to plan for the bust, and families are paying the price. Alberta's NDP caucus has long been advocating for a living wage policy, one that would ensure that families could keep a roof over their heads and food on the table.

We've also seen yet another broken promise that this government has made; that is, eliminating the sale of unrefined bitumen from this province. Processing of our bitumen here in Alberta would create thousands of jobs in construction and would result in long-term jobs in the operation of those facilities. Again, this is an issue that Alberta's NDP opposition has been arguing for for some time, yet despite the addition of the new bitumen processing plant in Alberta's Industrial Heartland we are still witnessing the mass export of this raw resource, and tens of thousands of jobs are popping up south of the border instead of here at home.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to touch briefly on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This legislation will establish another committee, yet another empty gesture. The bill is a public relations exercise. This committee will do nothing to help Albertans who are struggling in this recession. Bill 1 should have been used to strengthen universal public health care, it should have focused on public delivery and access to health services throughout the province, and it should have ensured that communities have a say in regional health delivery by electing representatives to their community health councils.

Bill 1 is further evidence that this government's priorities are misguided. Alberta's NDP opposition will continue to fight for this truth. The government's plans keep surfacing in brown envelopes, and we will continue to expose Tory secrecy and patronage. We will continue to demand openness and will forge on to protect public health care, jobs, the environment, and public services. Mr. Speaker, this is a government that has lost its way, and this throne speech is simply more proof of that. We will not waiver in our fight for Alberta families. They deserve better from this government, and for that reason Alberta's NDP opposition will not be supporting this throne speech.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Alberta Competitiveness Act (continued)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, this afternoon. I was listening with interest to the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Certainly, I was sitting listening to His Honour deliver the throne speech. I waited with interest for this bill to be tabled, and I was surprised that this was it. In the time that I have had the privilege of sitting in this Legislative Assembly, I have seen significant legislative initiatives come forward as a result of legislation from the Premier or from the Premier's office, but this bill certainly wouldn't be included in that group or that assessment.

If this legislation was a fuel indicator in a car, not only would it be near empty, but the warning light would be on that you only have five litres left. This bill is totally unnecessary at the time.

An Hon. Member: They're running on fumes.

Mr. MacDonald: They're running on fumes and, as the rock band would say, running on empty. I cannot remember the name of the band.

Mr. Hehr: The Eagles.

Mr. Campbell: Jackson Browne.

Mr. MacDonald: Jackson Browne. Ah, yes. Absolutely. The people in Hinton certainly have rock 'n' roll stations there, and they listen to them more keenly than the people in urban Calgary from the sounds of that. But it was Jackson Browne, Running on Empty. Absolutely this bill reflects that this government is running on empty.

When we look at this bill and we look at past initiatives of this government, there is simply no need for this legislation other than that perhaps at some time, Mr. Speaker, we're going to create another board or another committee that we can put our loyalists on through order in council and ensure that they receive a per diem or they get an honorarium or they are looked after in some way.

I was listening to speeches previously, and there was mention of a hiring freeze. I look at the supplementary supply, and I see a transfer of money, $30 million, to provide separation payments for some individuals in the civil service who may be retiring early. I don't know what exactly is going to happen, but I look at those sums. Of course, we're told there is a hiring freeze, but one only has to look at the Alberta Gazette to see that as the orders in council come through, there seems to be appointment after appointment after appointment. A constituent came into our office last Friday and asked to see one of the Alberta Gazettes. I showed this individual online the Alberta Gazette, and that individual was surprised at the number of appointments this government is continuing to make, and he wanted to know who they were.

I thought: well, if this government was really open and transparent, their number one bill would be an open and transparent process for all those appointees. Also included in that, of course, would be a book or a log where individuals such as the gentleman who came to our office last Friday could look and see which appointments are coming up for renewal, which ones are vacant, which ones he may be interested in applying for himself, how much he gets paid if his appointment was to go through. There could be any number of information points put forward so that taxpayers, if they were interested, could apply. But, of course, none of this happens in public. It's all done behind closed doors. There are whispers and quiet phone calls made, and, bingo, you're selected.

That would be an alternative that I would think that we could have to the Alberta Competitiveness Act. That certainly would be a start toward instilling some confidence in the taxpayers in this government, because it is not open, this government, nor is it transparent. That's one of the suggestions that I would make. Certainly, the government, if they wish, could use that idea because I think its time has come in this province.

It's interesting that this document is not even a year old. It's last May, May 2009. It was a document gathered by PricewaterhouseCoopers for the Alberta Finance and Enterprise department, and it's titled Alberta Industry Sector Performance and Prospects. We're dealing already in this government with ideas as to how we can become more competitive.

There are ideas in here on everything, everything from oil and gas extraction to industry energy services to primary agriculture, agrifood industries, forest products – and we all know, unfortunately, how difficult times are in that industry – industrial manufacturing, plastic product industries, construction and engineering, transportation and logistics, financial services, tourism. By tourism we don't mean going to North Vancouver, hiring a train that a former leadership candidate is on the board of directors of the company that owns the train – yes, the Minister of Education is looking at me puzzled, but it's Mr. Dinning. My research indicates that he's on the board of the company that owns that gold leaf service. That's not my idea of promoting tourism, nor is it the taxpayers' of this province.

Mr. Speaker, there are any number of industry sector analyses already completed, including education services, culture, biotechnology and medical devices, and health care services. Already been done. There is an executive summary – it's on the Alberta Finance and Enterprise website – and there are some very, very good ideas in here. It surprises me that the government is not working on these suggestions already and why they would come forward with this bill. There's no need. It's redundant. The work has already been done. Unless this government was so desperate for ideas at a time when they were essentially fighting among themselves that they decided, "Ooh, we're out of time; the throne speech is coming along, and we need to come up with a bill for the Premier and for the Premier's office," and this was the idea, the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

Now, we can certainly make ourselves competitive by having a good, solid fiscal regime. We had one here, but the last couple of years it's been everyone else's fault but our own spending habits. This government was quick to take credit when oil was at $147 a barrel, very quick to take credit for that, Mr. Speaker, but now that we're in a difficult financial situation, well, of course, it's someone else's fault. That is just so far from the truth.

With Bill 1, of course, we heard earlier that we're going to have an intent to increase collaboration between government, business, and industry to improve Alberta's competitiveness. As far as I know, that's already going on. There are some people that have issue with that but certainly not this member. How it's conducted is another issue. The fact that people talk and they try to work things out is no problem, but those talks always should be in public because we have no idea if the taxpayers' interests are being met.

Now, certainly Bill 1, as we heard, also allows for the establishment of a board or committee – and I talked about that earlier – with a general mandate to identify actionable areas for increased competitiveness to quicken the implementation of government competitiveness initiatives and to establish benchmarks to measure Alberta's competitiveness.

Well, one benchmark that I would like to mention is one that we used to always have a look at in the Energy estimates. It was the amount of oil royalties that we were to collect as a percentage after all the deductions had been calculated. The target was 20 to 25 per cent, and it would range, depending upon the year, anywhere from 15 per cent to close to 20 per cent. But this year in the budget I had a look at that performance measure, and it had been removed or eliminated, and another one had taken its place because the government knows that that performance measure is not working.

Another example of this government's performance measures and their ability to press the delete button, Mr. Speaker, is in electricity prices. Years ago we would have in the Assembly, of course, a chart indicating the cost of electricity in Alberta, whether you're an industrial user, a commercial user, or a residential user. It would be in the business plans. You could have a look at it, and you could see for yourself how we ranged with electricity prices in comparison to our neighbours.

We had before deregulation some of the lowest cost electricity in North America. We all know that's no longer the case. We have some of the highest costs for our electricity. I know the other side is very keen to blame the high cost of natural gas for electricity prices going up. Natural gas prices, as we know, have moderated substantially, but the price of electricity hasn't gone down on a consumer's bill. Certainly, the wholesale price has gone down significantly, but bills keep going up and up and up.

All that information used to be provided. I think the President of the Treasury Board was so guilty about the failures of deregulation that he suggested that that performance measure be removed from any of the government documents supporting their budget estimates. I'm sure it would have to be the President of the Treasury Board, but I'm not certain. I am certain that it did happen; it was removed.

That's an example of a benchmark that measures Alberta's competitiveness that this government doesn't want to deal with because they know that after health care their electricity deregulation plan has been a spectacular failure. We know all the promises. We know the promises weren't kept. We know the frustration Alberta consumers have every month when they open their power bill. Some people tell me they don't want to even open it because they don't even know if they can afford to pay it. But it is another point to make on how this government has to date established benchmarks to measure Alberta's competitiveness and how they conveniently change them when it suits their propaganda campaigns.

Now, when we look at the bill and we follow from the day the throne speech was delivered, a week ago last Thursday, the underlying principle behind the bill is to increase collaboration between the government, business, and industry, but again there are no specifics, and it's difficult to determine what, if any, impact there will be. The government news release on this bill states that throughout the next year benchmarks and goals will be established. I'm sure others will be deleted because the embarrassment bar will be very high, and this is a government that doesn't want to be embarrassed. There's no reference to completion or when action on these benchmarks and goals will take place, nor is there any reference to specific action that will be taken now. The only reference that I can see to anything specific, both in the bill and the news release, is the government's oil and competitiveness review and the western economic partnership between B.C., Alberta, and Saskatchewan.

The oil and gas competitiveness review: I have no idea. That's going on, as far as I know, behind closed doors. I know nothing about who's involved, what's going to come out of it, but I do know that our research indicates the review is being delayed. I heard in question period last week that it was on the minister's desk, and I know the minister's desk has got a lot of paperwork on it. There will be paperwork on there from when the hon. gentleman was in the health department, and included in that paperwork would be a huge pile of bills from the debt that this folly Alberta Health Services created, $1.3 billion worth, to be precise.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want anyone to be suggesting that I'm getting off the topic of Bill 1, so I will continue. Establishing benchmarks, reporting explicitly through annual reports, collaboration between ministries and with key players in industry are all important and positive steps towards improving Alberta's competitiveness, but this bill does not take any real action towards making any of these things happen. There are no details. There's no time frame. Everything is stretched out. It's politically convenient. No end goal other than the elusive phrase "increase competitiveness." All this bill does is legislate an idea. The government's own news release states that benchmarks and goals to increase competitiveness will be released in a year, with no indication of how long after that year action will take place.

The government, it is worth noting, already has a Regulatory Review Secretariat with the following mandate:

The goal of regulatory reform is to identify opportunities to reduce and simplify the regulatory burden of government on the people and businesses of Alberta. Supporting the development of good regulation creates the conditions for business to thrive and [to] enhance productivity towards sustainable prosperity. Alberta's regulatory reform places stakeholders at the center of its regulatory activity to uphold the regulatory environment to a standard of excellence. Regulatory reform has been a long standing policy of the Government of Alberta, and endeavors to reduce regulatory burden where possible while ensuring that personal safety, public health and our environment remain protected.

The Regulatory Review Secretariat seems to be concentrated on the red tape burden of compliance requirements and regulation whereas the guiding principle behind Bill 1 is more about collaboration, yet both have very similar mandates and, ultimately, have the same end goal of allowing for productivity, competitiveness, and sustainable prosperity.

Now, I'm curious about who's on this Regulatory Review Secretariat. It's chaired by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, and he is assisted by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead and the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. They're the latest group to be charged with this review. It'll be interesting to hear in the course of debate how they feel about this bill, whether this bill is going to make their efforts redundant, if there's going to be overlap, or what's going to happen. I'll be listening keenly, and if I'm not available, I will certainly read Hansard.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to please adjourn debate on Bill 1. Thank you.

Bill 3

[Adjourned debate February 16: Mr. Weadick]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010. This is a bill that I will be supporting. The Fatal Accidents Act awards a set amount of damages for bereavement to a surviving spouse, adult interdependent partner, parent, or child of a deceased person. The proposed amendments would make eligibility for bereavement damages less restrictive by removing reference to marital status and would remove the reference to a child as including illegitimate child.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, this bill is just updating the language. It's making damage awards easier for individuals to obtain and not have cumbersome impediments that really should have no bearing in law or, in fact, get in the way of someone being able to collect the damage award. With this bill, as mentioned by the hon. member earlier today, it'll just be easier for people to collect an award under our system. In fact, there are no restrictions now to collecting an award if someone is married or there's none of that unfortunate language of legitimate or illegitimate child. That has gone by the wayside in our measures of what we as a society deem important, and I think that's a good thing.

As a little bit of a background to this act, it was interesting or maybe not so interesting that in the past development of the law when a person was killed at an accident site, their spouses, their children could not receive any benefits. The only thing that was available after the death of a person, what that caused, was solely emotional and pure economic loss to the relatives. It was declared in a court that you couldn't do that, and the only way that a person could actually collect on this was if a person survived.

What this did was that it set up sort of a strange dichotomy in the law where if a person was killed at work, they couldn't get any damages for their families, but if they were injured, well, their family could collect damages. So that part of the law was rectified and sort of caught on foot here and advanced more in the development of the rights. It seems that this is just a continued advancement along a reasonably progressive path, a path that sort of allows both families and individuals to get recompensed at a reasonable rate, where they don't have to claim that damage in lawsuits and they can merely go ahead with their lives. Obviously, this bill will benefit vulnerable members of our communities, and we as a party are supporters of benefits to those families who are facing bereavement circumstances like many of those that exist in fatality incidents.

Without saying more, I appreciate the government advancing the language of this bill, making it compatible with other jurisdictions and in the eyes of the law, and moving forward in a reasonable fashion in this regard.

At this point in time I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 3, and we'll go from there.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1
Alberta Competitiveness Act

[Adjourned debate February 16: Mr. MacDonald]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today and speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, and its impact on businesses and communities throughout Alberta. As His Honour the Lieutenant Government outlined in his Speech from the Throne, one of this government's top priorities is achieving Alberta's goal of becoming the most attractive business environment in the world. For decades this government has recognized the importance of being business friendly because when business is successful, Albertans reap the reward. That simple strategy has resulted in historically low unemployment rates and one of the highest standards of living in Canada.

But times are changing, Mr. Speaker. The global economy has evolved, and potential new markets are opening up around the world. Geography is no longer the limitation it used to be, and companies are taking a global perspective when it comes to finding the best possible location to do business. To adapt to this new reality, this government recognizes that we are now competing with the entire world for both new and existing revenue streams. To be competitive, we must look at every angle of the situation to ensure that we have the ability to meet the needs of companies that create jobs for Albertans and contribute to the economy that sustains us.

Mr. Speaker, the essential purpose of Bill 1 is to discover and eliminate any unnecessary hurdles that might keep new businesses from choosing Alberta or that might keep existing businesses from expanding here. In the Speech from the Throne His Honour used as an example the conventional oil and gas sectors, that have traditionally driven Alberta's economy. While I recognize the immense contributions these industries make to the economic well-being of the province, I would like to focus today on how Bill 1 might have an effect on a different level across Alberta.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, competition isn't just a global phenomenon between nations. It also exists between provinces and even between municipalities within a province. I am encouraged by the western Canadian partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to create a boundary-free trade and investment market. But I would also like to see this government clear hurdles for smaller cities and towns within Alberta that don't have the advantage of being associated with the energy sectors.

My home town in Lethbridge is a perfect example. As an agriculturally driven city that is also a hub of postsecondary education and light industry, it has its own unique advantages and challenges in attracting business. Communities such as mine must compete with similar communities across Canada and around the world to attract business and new jobs. That's keeping with the Alberta government's priorities and ideals, and it's a good thing. But the playing field isn't always level. Communities often struggle with finding accurate, up-to-date information on where they stand in relation to their competition. For example, if two communities are competing for a new processing plant, neither knows what kind of tax situation their competitor may offer. Instead of being an open and merit-based competition, this kind of situation has the potential to degenerate into a gamble where neither player can see the other's cards. To use a sports analogy, it's like facing off in a hockey game against a team whose roster, stats, and records are all sealed.

Comparable competitive data is essential to creating an environment where every community can compete based on its own merits. Such data would allow communities to have greater confidence in their own competitiveness and allow them to market themselves accurately and strategically on the provincial, national, and global stages.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 would establish a governing body to help implement the competitive strategy set forth in the Speech from the Throne. It is my hope that this body will also collect and distribute the data that communities such as mine need in order to increase their own competitiveness. I also hope this body can create a cohesive, strategic marketing message that all communities can use. We know that Alberta has the lowest taxes in Canada and is one of the world's most business-friendly places. But while we can all talk about the obvious advantages of doing business here, communities also need specific information on what resources we have to encourage productivity.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I believe our communities would benefit from one cohesive story for all Alberta. Such a story would outline the specific advantages of this province as a whole. It would also provide the information our communities need to strategically position themselves and showcase their unique strengths. This would help communities or regions define themselves within the overall Alberta community and allow them to compete openly and fairly based on what they have to offer. By creating a level playing field where each team is allowed to compete on their own merits while drawing on the strength of the province as a whole, we can help foster competitive environments throughout Alberta that follow the same principles set forth by this government.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the members of this House will keep my comments in mind as we move forward with Bill 1 and strive to improve Alberta's competitive edge at home and throughout the world. Let's make our communities, our businesses, and our province the most competitive place on earth.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment or question.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just to sort of continue on from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West's stance, Alberta, to its credit, has done some good things. One of those good things in terms of improving our competitiveness was the agreement reached with the B.C. government prior to TILMA, and that was the investment in the container port in Prince Rupert. That was a very worthwhile long-term investment because if we're going to be successful as a province, we have to go beyond the United States as our chief market source. Our relationships, of course, with the United States need to continue to be strong. We'll have to make sure that our regulations and theirs work together, or we'll be cross-purposing and working against each others' economies. We have to have other alternatives. With the container port at Prince Rupert what we should be considering are India and China as our future markets so that we don't put all of our apples in that one U.S. basket.

Now, the government has been proposing and paying for and supporting pipelines down to Illinois and down to Texas for bitumen upgrading, but where I would like to see the pipelines growing and flowing is to the coast, to Prince Rupert. Obviously, we're going to have to have environmental regulations in terms of both the structure of the pipeline and making sure that the loadings and so on are of a safe nature. Once the ships are out to sea, we don't have that same control; it becomes a federal matter. But doing the best we can to get not only our raw materials but preferably our upgraded bitumen, our refined bitumen, to the potential of markets in China and India is extremely important.

In terms of the southern portion of the province, which the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West represents along with our hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and in terms of improving our economic competitiveness, we need to be spending the same type of investments in the twinning of highway 3 so that we have an east to west highway of equivalent value to our north-south highway 2. The government is slowly getting its act together when it comes to the twinning of highway 63, but until that twinning is accomplished, economic opportunities will continue to elude us based on the narrowness of that highway and the frequent bottlenecks.

There is always a balance between cutting red tape and governance. Now, I'm very supportive of facilitating economic development both in this province and in our partnerships not only with other western provinces and with the U.S. but, as I mentioned earlier, with India and China, who are the two most rapidly growing markets. We also have to have a balance, which, unfortunately, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated, hasn't been achieved in terms of the detailing of the whys and wherefores of Bill 1. Bill 1 says that we'll start playing the game, and then at some point in the future, a year or so down the road, we'll give you the rules of the game.

Now, we've seen that kind of lack of rules in the numerous attempts at the royalty review. Business depends on consistency. Business requires not only consultation; business requires collaboration. Without the rules to go forward, it's an uncharted course. It's a game that is very difficult to play, to negotiate. So for Bill 1 to be successful, we're going to have to decide what the reduced regulations are, what the reduced red tape will be.

We've had examples leading up to this global meltdown, this recession, that is the worst since the 1930s, where there wasn't sufficient red tape or there wasn't sufficient regulation and process. This government and a number of institutions within Alberta were suckered because of a lack of regulation by the Alberta Securities Commission, a lack of red tape when it came to investment in asset-backed commercial paper. ATB took a tremendous hit. AIMCo took a hit. The University of Calgary took a hit. So when we're cutting through the red tape, let's make sure we're not cutting through the regulations and the governance and the oversight.

Another example, fortunately, because of stronger red tape regulation such as Bill 1 is purporting to propose is the subprime mortgages. In Canada we escaped some of that fallout although it overlapped into Alberta and Canada with, as I say, the asset-backed commercial paper. But because we had strong regulations, which Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, has yet to define, Canadians were saved some of the hardship that our American counterparts are going through.

The balance between governance, regulation, red tape is extremely important. We've seen examples in Alberta, for example, when there wasn't sufficient regulation. I don't say that regulation and red tape are synonymous, but red tape has to do with regulation. For example, when we had the mad cow crisis here in Alberta, we only had one inspector, and that inspector was so caught up with chronic wasting disease that it took three months to actually confirm that we had a case of mad cow disease here in Alberta. We all know the fallout from that, especially in terms of our beef entry into the States, again our major trading partner.

The government realized the mistake, and instead of one regulator they hired more so that the processing could occur. While our economy suffered some tremendous damage, some good things came out of the regulation, and that was recognizing the age of an animal, the marking of an animal so that you could trace its origin. I know that because of the lack of regulation on the importing of cattle – I've mentioned the example of a cousin having his whole Angus herd that his dad had built up over years and years butchered, culled. That's an example where we have to balance our need for regulation and red tape with the moving forward.

Now, this government has frequently undermined outfits like the Canadian Wheat Board, and they have supported the nonregulated crossing of the Montana border by individuals wishing to sell their grain at whatever price they could get. They cheered when the individuals who sort of did their cross-border shopping were freed from jail for the illegal importation of grain. We have to in Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, match the need for governance with the need for regulation.

For example, in housing the city of Calgary has improved its processing of building permits, particularly when it comes to affordable housing, because they recognize this as a need. Now, if Bill 1, when we finally establish whatever the rules are for Bill 1, prioritizes affordable housing and getting approvals through in a more timely manner, then that's wonderful because we'll be able to take advantage of this basic 40 per cent discount that we currently have.

Again, with regulation and red tape and governance you've got to achieve the right balance. We want sustainable infrastructure projects, for example, to go ahead. Those long-term care projects that the government has issued bonds for: we want to see those be successful, particularly for the nonprofits and the publicly administered long-term care. We would want to see that go forward.

We also have to regulate the degree of profit-taking, for example, that long-term care or assisted living can charge because without some kind of governance then we'll see what happened with the market sort of being let loose on sky-high rents and the increase in property values only, in the case of property values, to start to, well, in the States take a nosedive; in our case be reduced. So, hopefully, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will create that necessary balance.

The other concern I have is that the government has said – Ralph's mantra was: we're no longer in the business of being in business. But that doesn't mean that we simply wave the checkered flag without any kinds of expectations on the quality of a product.

Another Alberta historical circumstance due to lack of regulation was the pine shingles fiasco, where B.C. was dumping its rejected shingles into Alberta's market. We were rubber stamping, approving a whole variety of fly-by-night pine shingle outfits, and we have very expensive roof repairs as a result.

The other part of the regulation/red-tape balance is getting it right. This government has actually moved more toward regulation and away from legislation. Is Bill 1 signalling a different direction? For example, in postsecondary, Bill 40 changed from a debate on increases in tuition for postsecondary to a regulated circumstance where the minister of advanced education has the sole authority to permit tuition increases. Again, the balance is absolutely essential for us to get it right. We need, we want to say to Canada and to the world: we're a great place to not only visit, but we're a great place to do business. In order for that to happen, we have to provide an elimination of risk for investment in Alberta.

Now, because of the changing royalties, for example, we've lost a lot of our competitiveness to our neighbours, B.C. and Saskatchewan, so striking that right balance is absolutely essential. Part of achieving that balance is our land-use framework. Where will we allow development to go forward? Where will we set aside parks and protected areas? Where will the no-go zones be? This is part of what Bill 1 has to achieve, and unfortunately what we've seen in terms of the regulatory process is that we've seen a whole bunch of bills – Bill 50, I think it was Bill 46, Bill 39, and I believe it was Bill 19 – that all had to do with land usage, but we still don't have the sustainable land-use policy.

Bill 1 is, again, kind of putting the cart before the horse because it hasn't, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated, set out the regulations. It's a great concept, but without the concrete rules and regulations to make the concept work . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East under 29(2)(a).

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity if he could perhaps expand on his vision of the pipeline to Prince Rupert, on who would own that pipeline and how it could get constructed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I am rather big on provincial ownership. Having said that, we could certainly strike an agreement with CAPP or one of the subsidiary companies within CAPP to determine not only the most environmentally sound route but the degree of ownership. I am not suggesting – please, I would never want to be thought of as promoting a P3 project, but we can work with industry to create the most favourable circumstance.

We are already doing a lot of container trucking to the port of Prince Rupert. It only makes sense that we would have an environmentally sound pipeline route which would respect both people's property rights and the environment but would create an opportunity to send our refined petroleum, bitumen upgraded, in its finished state to China and India. We'd do the refining. We'd get the added value for propane, butane, methane, all of the things that we're losing to Illinois or down in the Texas area, where they're going to upgrade our bitumen and then get the added benefit from it.

I hope, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, that I gave you a better sense of the routing, the approval process, and why it's so important.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is still available.

The next member to speak, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. The purpose of Bill 1 is to create a focus on competitiveness that brings together government and industry to co-ordinate current government initiatives and develop a strategy to improve Alberta's competitiveness. This collaboration will be led by partnerships under the direction of the Premier. Furthermore, it will be comprised of the relevant ministers and key stakeholders, who will assess all areas where Alberta can strengthen its competitive edge.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out that the government of Alberta has already taken action in a number of areas. In advanced education we have introduced Alberta Innovates, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, and the trade, investment, and labour mobility act, just to name a few. All of these programs give Alberta an edge. We also have the most competitive tax regime in Canada.

Bill 1 will develop an overall strategic approach to competitiveness in Alberta. This will include an operational plan to enhance Alberta's competitiveness in the global marketplace. The Alberta advantage may no longer be our official provincial slogan; however, this should always be our goal. This landmark legislation will do just that. It will focus our efforts to ensure Alberta increases its competitive advantage in the face of a highly competitive global economy.

Mr. Speaker, our newest slogan says it best. In order for us to remain competitive in the world, Albertans require the freedom to create mixed with their spirit to achieve. Bill 1 ensures that Albertans have the freedom to create by providing a competitive economic environment. This will provide long-term benefits for Alberta families and for the entire province. The freedom that comes with the lowest taxes in Canada will create the conditions that will attract new businesses, innovators, and the next generation of entrepreneurs to our great province.

Thanks to the steps taken earlier through the Alberta immigrant nominee program and the trade, investment, and labour mobility act, Alberta has and will continue to attract the best people from across Canada and around the world to come and enjoy all Alberta has to offer. This in turn will help Alberta achieve a more prosperous province, which will benefit all Albertans and Canadians alike. A more competitive economy grows faster, adapts quicker, leads to lower prices, better wages, more jobs, and improved living standards for all Albertans. Bill 1 shows our commitment to make our province one of the most economically competitive places in the global market.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will always ensure that Alberta has the freedom to create with our spirit to achieve. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. A quick question to this member. He's an active component of the mushroom industry. I wonder if he could talk about the competitiveness of the mushroom industry and how that bill relates to that.

The Acting Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond?

Mr. Benito: Well, I'm not sure if that's a question or something that I should be mentioning with regard to the goodness of this bill that we are proposing. I firmly believe that the Alberta Competitiveness Act will create an environment so that the business environment will be much better than what we have right now, so that the economy of this province will become the leading edge and a good example in North America. The bottom line of this, Mr. Speaker, is making this province the best place to live, work, and play in the whole of North America. I believe the Premier has the best intentions to make the Alberta government one of the best-managed administrations in the whole of North America.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Frequently as members of the opposition we somehow didn't receive the memo, or we didn't get the second part to a bill. I'd just ask the member: have you received anything spelling out the rules of this philosophical concept? Have you been given the plans or the operating manual for accomplishing what Bill 1 proposes to accomplish?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Benito: Thank you. Hon. member, what I know is the reality of this Alberta Competitiveness Act, which we are trying to name Bill 1. For example, in education we have introduced, you know, the Alberta Innovates program, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation. One of the best programs, that we have already introduced and from my own personal experience, is the Alberta nominee program, the AINP program. Out of that program we were able to bring the best skilled workers to this province and in turn meet all the labour needs to make our economic development. Without the introduction of this program I don't think that during the high season of being competitive in North America we can meet the labour needs of this province. I firmly believe that this is one of the reasons why we should strengthen more this kind of program that we are trying to do for Bill 1, which is the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's wonderful to be able to be in total agreement with the value of the nominee program. What the nominee program does is that it fast-tracks immigration, which I'm sure the Minister of Employment and Immigration will agree with. It also provides workers with rights because they are fast-tracked to citizenship. Hopefully, this will be reflected as one of the rules and accomplishments that have yet to be outlined in Bill 1. If this is the direction Bill 1 is heading, then the direction is a good one. We just need the substantive rules, regulations to know where it's headed.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to address a few things regarding Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. One of the things that I've been hearing is the business of reducing red tape, and certainly the Liberals have for many, many years been speaking of the necessity to reduce red tape, particularly for our small-business owners and entrepreneurs in this province. We can speak about competitiveness within our country and certainly within our international community, where clearly the global market has moved, but I'd like to talk about the competitiveness just within our province.

One of the things that I can see coming is that some of the smaller business owners – and I'm going to use the example of perhaps pharmaceutical salesmen who are working for large pharmaceutical companies. Because of the way that we will be buying pharmaceuticals in this province – we'll be buying by volume – many of these pharmaceutical salesmen won't be required in exactly the same way. Some of our smaller pharmacies also will be affected by large-volume buying, which in itself is good, but there always is a consequence to an action, and this is part of the consequence that may well happen to the smaller businesses that will be affected because of volume buying, not just in pharmaceuticals.

I attended an agricultural day in which they were speaking about value-added. One of the valued-added was the ability of larger companies to buy bulk tomatoes from California to be able to make a pasta sauce, which totally bypasses some of our smaller farmers who are creating greenhouses to produce specific vegetables and using, actually, solar power to heat them.

There are amazing things that are going on in this province. We have a lot of advanced thinkers, particularly on the value-added side, in terms of our food that we're going to eat and the fact that we are moving into specialized farms that are smaller and are supplying specialty restaurants with, for instance, perhaps Cornish game hens or some of the vegetables which probably in the old days we would have considered exotic but now – I'm thinking of a bok choy – we consider just a regular part of our diet. There is a lot of red tape around this, and I think that one of the most important things that we can look at in this Competitiveness Act is that we get rid of the red tape that holds the hands of our entrepreneurs while they're trying to get ahead and create new and interesting things in our province.

One of the things that I can certainly speak about from my area – and I know that my colleague from Lethbridge-West has been working on this as well – is that we have the chance to produce poppies in southern Alberta. We have a great environment. The geography is good, and also the weather is good to be able to create these poppies. They are non narcotic-producing poppies. They create something called thebaine, and it will be produced and marketed mainly towards the pharmaceuticals. But this has been in the offing for almost three years.

One of the things that this bill is talking about – I believe I heard it from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar – is to try to get the levels of government together so that many of the red-tape forms and regulations can be streamlined because there is a tremendous amount of redundancy when you move from one level of government to the other. One of the things that is holding up our poppy production is the fact that the feds, of course, have to okay the use of this. Now, I know that we have gone through huge risk managements that have been done by retired RCMP members and that it actually has passed this business, that it isn't a risk. It will be a very viable product that we can produce and grow in southern Alberta. But the feds are still sitting on it, and it's because of regulations that this is not moving forward nearly as fast as it possibly could have. So I think that this is a very important bill, as I've said, mainly from the red-tape side of it.

One of the things, though, that I've noticed is that the benchmarks and goals are going to be released in a year, and there is no indication after that year how long the action will take, which to me is a perfect example of what we're talking about, red tape. This has to move much, much quicker with very clear, defined lines on how this is going to work. I don't think that our small businesspeople who are looking forward to this want to sit around for another year.

British Columbia is a much-cited example of successful efforts to reduce its red tape. It met its goal as of January 2010, and they've eliminated 152,000 regulations since it first started in 2001. It's a red-tape reduction of 42 per cent. I realize that this is over a nine-year period, but I think that with this Competitiveness Act we should be able to move forward much, much more quickly.

Chad Ford of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who is their policy person, has said that this bill doesn't mention small business and that it seems to be written only for gas and oil. I think that he has a point.

One of things that I would like to talk about is PDD. One of the ways that people are getting help for persons that require PDD funding is through self-managed care. What's happened is that it is a fairly successful program where people actually can get the money from the government, and they hire their own workers. But what has happened in that is the huge red tape that is tied up with the people that have to fill out the paperwork. It's a terrible burden on some of these family members that have to do all the forms that they're filling out, which I call red tape.

I realize that a lot of the information that is being gathered is used for a data analysis, which is fine because we need to know where our dollars are going and how they're being spent. But I maintain that the information is in the government ministries in their computers, and they should be pulling that information that they need out from the government computers and not forcing some of the people – mainly, a lot of them are computer illiterate and are filling out all of these forms by hand.

To me that's an example of one of the ways that a competitiveness bill can look at not just the red tape for small business, where I think it should start – oil and gas, yes; oil and gas have many, many employees that are lawyers and accountants that can easily fill the bill about giving their input into this competitiveness bill – but I think we have to look at how what I call red tape affects every person in this province and that we can move much quicker. I'm hoping that some of this bill and the conversations around it will address the smaller issues and our smaller businesses in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. On one of our numerous outreach trips to Lethbridge I recall visiting a small business that was a trailer outfitter. This organization did the folding beds. It did a lot of the furniture that you find in RVs and so on. One of the problems our local manufacturer pointed out was the difference in terms of import-export regulations. He pointed out that American trailers could come in built to considerably lower safety standards, but our export requirements were considerably higher. You've mentioned the need to co-ordinate with the federal government. I think you're familiar with this trailer outfitting company, that is doing very well despite the American competition.

I'm also wondering in terms of co-ordination with government if there have been any examples of problems with genetically modified seed in the Lethbridge area because I know that that's been a major problem with some of our exports to European countries. I don't know whether there are problems like that that have arisen in Lethbridge, but I'd be interested in hearing your take on that regulation or lack thereof.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that I can really address the modified seed part of it. I'm not sure. I do know that some of our modified seeds are not accepted in Europe, so it then presents a problem for the farmers that are actually producing them.

I can talk about the RV industry in Canada. At one point – and I certainly was a part of the heyday of recreational vehicles being produced in this country. We are now down to one. Basically, the recreational vehicle manufacturing in this country is dead, and part of it is because we didn't insist that American-made RV vehicles coming into this country had to meet the same standards. There are a huge number of people over the years clearly that have lost jobs, and the whole industry has gone down.

As I've mentioned – and I wish I could remember; there's one, I believe, in Manitoba and one in B.C. – this was a huge, huge employer that brought in millions and millions and millions of dollars to our economy and employed many. It's just one example of, as my colleague from Calgary-Varsity has mentioned, bad communication between the provinces and the federal government. Some of it was a province responsibility in terms of looking at what comes across the border, and the other part of it was the feds. They should have sat down and addressed this as it happened.

I think that this in a way is a small example of – I'm going to go off on a tangent here – how we do not have inspectors at the federal level inspecting the food that comes into our country. I read a label, and it doesn't say where it comes from. It says that it's a product of, but it doesn't say where it is. If it has been packaged in Canada, they can call it a product of, but I actually have no idea. I believe that we need more inspectors to look at the food that's coming into this country and, in fact, some of the items that are coming into this country. I think we just noticed that there was a huge recall on kids' toys because they were loaded with lead.

These are the kinds of things that we should be looking at coming across our border. I believe that had we had stronger regulations that were actually enforced, we still would have viable recreational vehicle manufacturing in this country.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Mr. Kang: My question is to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on how this act is going to help in, as you said, growing poppies. What kind of income is it going to bring? How many drug addicts are we going to have if we start growing poppies here? We've already got a problem. You know, they come in from Arizona. Are we trying to compete with Afghanistan by bringing in this bill to grow poppies? What are your thoughts on that?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:43 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, after the prayer I would ask you all to remain standing as I pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Mr. Frederick Haliday Peacock November 23, 1916, to February 15, 2010

The Speaker: Mr. Frederick Haliday Peacock, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, passed away on Monday, February 15, 2010, at the age of 93 years. Mr. Peacock was first elected in the election held August 30, 1971, and served two terms, until February 14, 1979. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Calgary-Currie for the Progressive Conservative Party.

During his term of office Fred Peacock served as Minister of Industry and Tourism and Minister of Industry and Commerce. He also served on the standing committees on Public Accounts; Public Affairs; Law and Regulations; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education; Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act; and on the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly Reviewing Intra Provincial Trucking Regulations.

Mr. Peacock served as Agent General Asia Pacific for the Alberta government from 1982 to 1985.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family, who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. Member Frederick Haliday Peacock as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is such a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members here about 50 visitors from the lovely school in my area called Mill Creek elementary. They are here with their teacher and group leaders Mrs. Rushmi de Rincón and Ms Mara Rodríguez. I would ask them to all please rise now and receive the warm applause of the Assembly.

Thank you very much for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group that is seated in the members' gallery. They are from CAMTA, the Canadian Association of Medical Teams Abroad, including, I'm pleased to say, a constituent of mine, Christina Prins, who happens to be the niece of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Christina is here with six other people from the group. They are John Lilley, Eileen Guilfoyle, Pablo Valenzuela, Donnie McIntosh, Trina LeBlanc, and Nicole Beaudoin. They are going to Quito, Ecuador, on a medical mission this month with CAMTA. On the trip CAMTA plans to perform over 40 hip replacements on adults and over 40 operations on club feet or the hips of children. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm wishes and the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you five guests from the Canadian Somali community seated in the public gallery. Earlier this week we spoke, and our discussion focused on their desire to integrate into our society and truly be Canadian. I would like to welcome five Canadians: Jama Nur, Farah Bubyare, Nasteha Ahmed, Saida Hussain, Kahiye Dubow. I believe it's more than five, but I do not have all the names. I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I have a number of special groups in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, but certainly the most glamorous, definitely the best tiaras is the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. I will be doing a member's statement about this organization later, but right now I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the individuals who currently comprise the 34th house of the imperial court in Edmonton. If you would please rise as I call your name. First we have Imperial Crown Princess XXXIII Kelsey-Breeze, Imperial Grand Duke JeffyLube XXXPress, Imperial Grand Duchess Kitty LeBehr, Imperial Crown Princess GoDiva, Imperial Crown Princess Empress XXXIII Marni Gras, and Her Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty Empress XXXIV Ivanna Diamonds. Please welcome them to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The wild rose has never looked better.

I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three members of the University of Alberta New Democratic Party campus club, seated in the public gallery. The U of A Campus NDP provides a forum for students who are passionate about such issues as social justice, accessible postsecondary education, and a sustainable environment. The club has hosted a number of events this year, allowing students to have a chance to have dialogue with elected officials from both the provincial and federal levels of the NDP. With us today are Joel French, president of the U of A campus club; Kayla McCarthy, the vice-president internal; and member at large Aditya Rao. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that my guests now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Family Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Monday, February 15, was a public holiday in Alberta to celebrate Family Day. This holiday has been celebrated since 1989, when former Premier Don Getty introduced the Family Day Act. He wanted to recognize the importance of the family as it was families who built this province and continue to make Alberta a great place. This holiday is also celebrated in Saskatchewan and Ontario, and a provincial holiday is also held on the third Monday in February in Manitoba as Louis Riel Day and in Prince Edward Island as Islander Day.

There were celebrations around our province, including festivities right here at the Legislature. In my constituency of Edmonton-Manning I attended the Kilkenny Family Fun Day. There were many fun activities, and a great day was had by all.

Our government also marked the ninth annual Family Day free fishing weekend from February 13 to 15, where Albertans are allowed to fish in any public body of water that has an open fishing season without a fishing licence.

I would like to thank the different communities and groups that organized activities throughout the province to make this a special day. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced Edmonton's 34th House of the Edmonton Court of the Wild Rose, and I'm going to take this opportunity now to celebrate this organization and the work that they do. The Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose is operated by the New Royalist Social Society of Northern Alberta. It is part of the International Court System, which began in 1965 in San Francisco. The society's goal is to raise funds through activities for charities and other organizations which either provide direct services to the gay community of Edmonton or which work to promote an accepting attitude to gays and lesbians in the community as a whole. It is a volunteer organization dedicated to the betterment of the community.

The court includes an empress and emperor, who are elected by members of the community, and they act as figureheads of the organization, goodwill ambassadors in the community, spearheading charitable fundraising efforts and at their own expense representing the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta throughout North America.

I have attended the end-of-the-year ball many times and admire the incredible amount of work that goes into serving in the royal house of that year. Most of the money raised is raised from members of the GLBT community themselves. The Edmonton court has raised hundreds of thousands of dollars since its inception. All of this money stays in Edmonton, funding AIDS/HIV research and support services, domestic abuse, breast cancer, the Children's hospital, homelessness, and the John M. Kerr memorial scholarship award to further the education of gay and lesbian students in the province of Alberta.

Among many others, the 34th house under Empress Ivanna Diamonds will be supporting the following charities: prostate and breast cancer, HIV research, and Camp fYrefly, a camp for gay, lesbian, and transgendered youth.

My thanks to this organization for its contribution to my city. Your work is most impressive and generally goes unsung.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Making Space for Children Innovation Fund

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday I had perhaps one of the greatest days in my constituency, when I had the opportunity to visit first the Boys and Girls Club of Penbrooke and, secondly, the Honey Bear Day Care. It's there that I met little Paige. She's two years old. She saw me come into the room, and she ran up to me, which doesn't always happen with young kids. I picked her up, and she gave me the biggest hug of my life. I visited the rest of the daycare, and every time the staff would try to take Paige away and say, "Paige, he's got to move on," she would cry. I was about to cry, too, so I kept little Paige with me the entire time. It was an absolutely beautiful moment that a politician gets to connect with his constituents in a manner that I think is most profound.

Now, I owe this moment to the ministry of children's services for their making space for children space creation innovation fund. It's through that program, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents get to have more child care spaces in our constituency. The Elf Inn daycare received enough funding for 55 new spaces, the Boys and Girls Club of Penbrooke received funding for 15 new spaces, and the Honey Bear Day Care received funding for eight new spaces. Since April 2008 I am pleased to say that 12,575 new spaces have been created across Alberta. This is no small accomplishment.

To the hard-working families of Calgary-Montrose, to the hard-working young families across Alberta this investment means that their children get a better start to ensure Alberta is in the best hands possible in our future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Vancouver 2010 Olympics

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Canadians are joining together to celebrate the 2010 Olympics, as we did in 1988, when the world came to Calgary. Many of us in the Assembly remember what it was like to host the Olympics, to watch Canadian athletes like Karen Percy or Elizabeth Manley take the podium. We remember that the focus of the Olympics is the athletes and the love of sports.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, some groups are trying to hijack the Vancouver Olympics for their own purposes. These same protesters will use any event – a meeting of the world leaders, the death of someone in the public spotlight, a tragedy, or the Olympics – to try and get media coverage. In a democracy people have the right to speak freely and to gather in a peaceful manner. But what we see happening in Vancouver is not lawful, and it's not peaceful.

Mr. Speaker, the Olympic motto is Swifter, Higher, Stronger. It is a motto that pushes athletes to excel. The Olympics are supposed to be an opportunity where athletes showcase their amazing talents. Running a police barricade is not a sport; it is serious business. It takes away from the years of training that Canadian athletes have put into their sport as they represent our country.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a proud Canadian, I love amateur sports, and I love the Olympics. I am cheering on not only our Alberta athletes but all of the Canadian competitors, who are working so hard to bring home the gold or to simply achieve a personal best.

As the Vancouver Olympics continue, let's hope that these protesters look for proper ways to express their point of view instead of trying to overshadow the athletes, who have worked so hard to get there and to do their country proud.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, go, Canada, go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Area Schools

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise and congratulate students, staff, and parents at three Grande Prairie and area schools. On January 18 I attended with the Minister of Education and the Minister of Infrastructure the official school openings of the Hythe regional school and the Alexander Forbes school, which have been newly renovated, and the newly built Mother Teresa Catholic school.

Grande Prairie is one of Canada's fastest growing cities, and these three schools will help meet the needs of our growing population. We want to provide students with a place that they look forward to going to every day and a place that inspires and supports learning.

The two renovated facilities were not only refurbished but wired and equipped with the latest learning technologies. They have more natural light, improved acoustics, and enhanced connectivity. These classrooms look like permanent classrooms, but they give school boards the flexibility to respond quickly and easily to changing enrolment and community needs.

I noticed with pride that these new and newly refurbished schools demonstrate our government's commitment to providing safe and secure learning environments for our children. They are great examples of how government and communities work together. Since these schools have opened, they have already become hubs of their communities, providing after-hours recreational opportunities and places to play and pursue active living. They are all top-quality schools that meet the growing, changing community needs in Grande Prairie and area. Projects such as these help advance our Premier's vision for strong, safe, and vibrant communities. They are a good investment in the future of our children and this province.

Once again, I would like to extend my congratulations to the students, staff, and parents at Hythe regional school, Alexander Forbes school, and Mother Teresa Catholic school.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Reading Milestone at C.J. Schurter School

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It took 15 years, a whole lot of staff members, the librarian, thousands of students, parents, and community volunteers from C.J. Schurter school in Slave Lake to reach their goal, and their goal was to read and share 1,500,000 stories. There is something very special about being able to pinpoint the exact moment when we reach a goal. At exactly 9:40 a.m. on Monday, March 16, 2009, C.J. Schurter school did exactly that, recorded their reading milestone.

This all began when librarian Marge Rennick and her committee organized a student reading incentive to celebrate the then 1994 Arctic Winter Games in Slave Lake. Students were encouraged to read for Rocky, the Arctic Winter Games mascot. However, in September 1994 special ed teacher Helen Ord and her team of educational assistants took this initial concept and developed it into a powerful reading link between home and school that enhanced early literacy skills.

In September 1996 the Reading Cottage was introduced. Students were encouraged to bring their completed reading sheets down to the cottage, where staff would then write the child's name on a square located on the specific story character they were reading at the time.

Now, Snow White, Peter Pan, Cinderella, Wizard of Oz, Winnie the Pooh and friends, Franklin and friends, and Muppets, just to name a few, lined the hallways at C.J. Schurter, containing the names of all the special students that have participated in this program.

However, in September 2004 the program moved from the special ed area to each individual classroom. Teachers and students recorded the stories read in the classroom and reported the number of experiences at each assembly.

It is common wisdom that literature expands our perspective of the world. In the words of Dr. Seuss: "The more that you read, the more things you will know. The more you learn, the more places you'll go."

Congratulations to the visionaries and the whole community for nurturing reading as a great experience. Keep up the great work.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Surgery Wait Time Reduction Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My heart goes out to all Albertans whose surgery has been delayed because of this government's mismanagement of the health care system. We support reducing wait times and wait-lists. Our concern is the way this government is handling and accomplishing this task. Of the hip and knee surgeries announced yesterday, 83 per cent are going to be performed at a premium at for-profit corporate health centres. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister tell Albertans how much of the $8 million boost is going to for-profit hip and knee surgery providers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the point here is that people who are enduring long waiting lists don't have to wait as long anymore because we're speeding things up. I have asked for a cost-benefit analysis to be done. That's being done because I want to make sure that for the services we're providing to Albertans, we're getting fair dollar value. At the same time I want to assure Albertans that regardless of where they get that surgery performed, it's fully covered by this government.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the same minister: why are we giving so much less to public institutions versus for-profit private providers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you took an analysis of the $9 billion – that's with a B for Bob, $9 billion – that we're putting into Alberta Health Services' budget, with the increase that we've given them, guaranteed 6 per cent over the next three years after we've adjusted their base, you would find that by far the largest amount of that money is going into public institutions and publicly funded services.

Dr. Swann: The minister seems to be able to provide exact numbers of procedures for the funding to each institution, but he will not give us the exact dollar amount. Will you present the House with a dollar amount that's going to the private versus the public system in this $8 million?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as soon as those surgeries are performed and accomplished, that's public information. Everyone has access to it. This is an open and transparent process. What we've done is work with those providers, those professionals, those surgeons, those surgical teams, and the list goes on, all across the province. They're the ones who deserve the credit for stepping up to the plate and saying: yes, we will work some weekends to accomplish this; yes, those of us who are working part-time will work more full-time hours. Those who are already working full-time will work some overtime to help accomplish this for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. People are asking me why the vast majority of surgeries announced yesterday by the Minister of Health and Wellness are going to for-profit health corporations in Calgary. According to Alberta Health Services Calgary gets 200 extra hip and knee surgeries in the next six weeks while Edmonton and presumably all of northern Alberta get a total of 16. To the minister: why the 10 to 1 discrepancy in favour of Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is an offensive question, and the member knows it. The fact is that waiting lists are managed by doctors, not by this minister and not by the Health Services people. Waiting times are what we're trying to impact, and if we get that right, and I think we are, it will affect the waiting lists. The fact is that these lists are done up at the local level by the surgeons, and when they compile all of their information, they tell us where it is that the lists are needed to be dealt with as expeditiously as possible. It turns out that in this case, for this one example, the member may be right. But we could look at other examples, too, of different surgeries.

Dr. Taft: Well, to this same minister: is this government paying a premium to the for-profit orthopaedic centres for hip and knee surgeries? In other words, will the for-profit providers be paid exactly the same as public hospitals for the same kind of cases, or will they be paid more?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. The fact is that you can't compare one system that finitely with the other because in the public system there are a lot of costs that are absorbed by the public institution, which don't stand out and jump off the page, but when you contract out, you get an exact amount. You can't do and you can't compare the math that simply and that easily. To answer the member's question just a little bit further, a cost-benefit analysis is being done with respect to some of these surgeries right now. I'll ask for more to be done, and I'll be happy to share it with the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Calgary's system of for-profit cataract surgery has been plagued with problems for years, including conflicts of interest, long waiting lists, and quality concerns. In Edmonton's public system these are simply nonissues. Why is the Minister of Health and Wellness rewarding the problems in Calgary's for-profit system and penalizing the successes of public care in Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's an RFP process going on across the province right now. It's a request for proposals. It will be brought forward. There's a cost analysis coming forward. I can tell the hon. member and all Albertans, for that matter, that when you look at the costs for cataract surgeries, regardless where they're done but in this case Calgary specifically, the cost on average is less when they're contracted out than when they're done in the public institution, and we're going to prove that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, when the Official Opposition asked the Premier about our public debt, he stated, "We are not adding to our debt." Page 24 of the fiscal plan, the government's budget, states explicitly that this government plans to directly borrow $3.3 billion over the next three years. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. If direct borrowing is not considered a debt, what exactly did the Premier mean yesterday in the House?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, borrowing $3.3 billion is a debt, and when it's spent on capital projects for the government, it becomes an asset. In our consolidated financial statement we will offset borrowed money with a capital project, which at the end of the day balances even, gets us good value to continue to build while prices are right.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: why are debt-servicing costs doubling over the next four years to over $400 million?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we also have tools that have been used very effectively by this government, some P3 partnership groups that are building ring roads around these cities, that need to be paid for. All of the capital debt that we're assuming is accounted for I think on page 70, where it spells out that this interest will be paid to support our capital investment in our infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I would remind the President of the Treasury Board that the 3P debt, all 5 billion plus dollars of it, is in another section of the fiscal plan. We're not talking about 3P debt here.

Now, again, if you borrow money, you have to pay it back. That's a debt. What is this government's plan to pay back the $3.3 billion in debt that it is taking on as a direct result of your years of fiscal mismanagement?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, you know what? We do believe in Alberta, and we believe in Albertans. We believe that if we invest in the infrastructure that enables business to thrive and come to Alberta and grow its economy, we will take our fair share as the Alberta government, we'll reinvest it in the programs that they all want us to, in health and education, and we'll build a bigger pie rather than shrink the pie and all suffer and be happy together like them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Centralization of Cytology Lab Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's plan to centralize cytology lab services in Edmonton and Calgary will cost more money, and it will jeopardize patient safety. That's what two-thirds of the province's top pathologists have told this government in letters that we're tabling in this House today, and that's why this government cannot be trusted with public health care. Centralizing labs will delay test results and raise the risk of patients being misdiagnosed and mistreated. Will the minister of health immediately reverse his move towards centralization and privatization of lab services in this province, and if not, why not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've received a few letters on this subject, and I thank the member for bringing it to our attention. The fact is that I've already agreed to a meeting with the pathologists and staff from the Red Deer hospital, and I'll be meeting with them next week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we already heard the minister say that privatizing and contracting out is cheaper than doing it in the public system. He's already made up his mind on that point. But the doctors who've written these letters don't mince words. They see hospitals losing experts that they need to diagnose diseases, and there's no financial benefit, but it puts patients at unnecessary risk. I want to ask the minister why he won't admit that this move to privatize this area of the health care system will jeopardize patient care and reverse his plan to centralize and privatize lab services in Alberta.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, just for the record I was speaking about cataract surgery specifically. We know that on average they don't cost any more in this setting than in that setting. I said that I'm looking at other costs to do with hip replacements, knee replacements, shoulders, and so on because I want to convince myself more so that that is exactly the fact, that it is cheaper or, at least, not more expensive, depending on where it gets done.

Specific to the cytology example I am sensitive to what you're saying, hon. member. I'm going to have a meeting next week, find out more about it, and I'll be happy to chat with you after that.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A government that would close labs in hospitals is not a government that we can trust to protect health care. For example, a patient who needs urgent treatment for colon cancer could be left waiting much longer for test results that should have been looked at in conjunction with one another, not two different labs in two different cities. Why won't the minister admit that this plan will cause harm to patients and reverse the decision to centralize these labs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the intimate details of that plan. It has just come to my attention. I've already indicated the proactive step I've taken to meet and learn the information. That's part of my hands-on issues approach. I can assure the hon. member that I will look at that very thoroughly and very carefully. I just want, at the same time, to assure Albertans that they will not be compromised for quality or safety regardless of what the decision is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Activity-based Funding Model for Hospital Care

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've talked to many members of my constituency who are concerned about health care service and equally so about health care costs. Constituents in my area are quite familiar with different funding models such as population-based funding, needs-based funding, and global, or general, funding. However, not everyone knows exactly what activity-based funding means. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Firstly, if Alberta Health Services is moving to activity-based funding, can the minister explain what that is and why they're going in that direction?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, hon. member. That, too, is a good question. There are different funding models, and I think the one that we're able to bring onto the scene now that we have a five-year predictable, stable funding plan includes activity-based funding, which in a nutshell can be described as funding that follows the patient. What we've had in Alberta for quite some time now you might call the last item, which I think you referred to as general funding or something to that effect. What we're saying now is let's work with the people delivering the services and the people designing them, bring that together, and provide as much as we can as quickly as we can on that new formula.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for that answer. My second question again is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Please explain if there are any specific advantages or disadvantages to this system of funding as opposed to the previous systems that were used in Alberta.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think some of the advantages that we're going to see once this is fully implemented – and it'll take a year or two to see some of those results as plainly as we'd like – is some cost-effectiveness. That would be one thing. I think you'd see some streamlining but, in general, much better planning and a much better handle on exactly what we're doing, how long it takes to do it. That ties in with the dashboard indicators, which Alberta Health Services provided about January 21 or 22, somewhere in there, that talked about specific measurements and benchmarks. This is all part of that plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That sounds very impressive. Mr. Minister, what assurances can you give Albertans that activity-based funding will result in a better value for taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, that will be part of the cost-benefit analysis that I referred to earlier. As part of that we're very cautious and very careful about how taxpayer dollars get spent, but we don't want that to interrupt the good flow of improved services to Albertans such as with the announcement yesterday, such as with this announcement of activity-based funding, which we think and hope and are quite confident will deliver the results we're looking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Environmental Protection

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is not helping our oil and gas industry by failing to take the lead on environmental protection. Instead, the government is jeopardizing this sector, its reputation, Alberta's competitiveness, and the ability to maintain a strong industry into the future. We can have both a strong energy policy and a strong environmental policy. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. The energy sector is getting ramped up. Why isn't environmental protection?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree with the member more when she says that our ability to conduct business in the world of resource development is dependent upon our ability to demonstrate clearly that we have the necessary regulatory environment in place to ensure that we protect the environment and develop those resources appropriately. I couldn't disagree with the member more when she says that Alberta Environment is not ramping up and preparing for it. That's exactly why we're developing the cumulative effects environmental management.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister: given that the land-use framework banks on growing production in the oil sands and thus intensity targets will not be effective in even maintaining the current levels of carbon output, when will the minister implement hard targets?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of hard targets is very much part of the discussion that's ongoing now nationally and internationally. To directly answer the member's question, Alberta will adopt hard targets when the rest of North America adopts those same hard targets.

Dr. Taft: Well, that's leadership.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Dawdling at the back.

Okay. To the same minister: given that the ministry has had significant cuts for the upcoming year, how does the minister expect to do more monitoring and compliance enforcement for more industrial activity with less money?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that question is just about impossible to answer in the 30 seconds that you will allow me. So I would suggest that this member come to the estimates for the Department of Environment, and I will be more than happy to go through it in great detail for her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

AltaLink Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. AltaLink, which is an electric transmission facility operator, has been holding information meetings throughout central Alberta these past few days and weeks regarding several possible routes for the new 500-kilovolt HVDC line. This line directly impacts my constituents, so my question to the Minister of Energy is: what is the process to determine the final preferred route?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that meetings are taking place right now with the proponents, in this case

AltaLink, with the constituents of his constituency. This is part of the process where the proponents are required to gather input from Albertans. Once that consultation is completed, there will be an application filed with the regulator – this is the normal course – and then the regulator will decide the final route.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A big concern to my constituents is compensation to landowners. Again to the Minister of Energy: what is the process to establish a fair and equitable compensation package for landowners?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think that is something that needs clarification, Mr. Speaker, because really the compensation comes down to an agreement between the proponents and the landowners. In this case AltaLink will be negotiating with landowners to secure easements. The company has stated publicly that it's their intention to pay fair market value. Those agreements would then take place but not until after the commission hearings and the route is determined.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Energy. What is the role of the Alberta Utilities Commission, or the AUC, in relation to the issue of compensation, including the role of the AUC in limiting the amounts of compensation?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the AUC does not deal with the compensation as such between the landowners and the transmission facility owners. That is something, as I mentioned in my previous supplementary answer, Mr. Speaker, that is negotiated. What is important is that the Utilities Commission through the hearings process determines what part of those costs will be passed on to consumers. It is important to note that only an amount that is considered prudent can be recovered and passed on to consumers. So that's the only part of the agreement that consumers will bear the cost of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Support for the Horse-racing Industry

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration mused about the government's $26 million handout to Horse Racing Alberta. A recent report submitted by George Cuff & Associates to the Solicitor General shows that horse racing is a dying industry kept on life support by revenue from slot machines and off-track betting. Accordingly, how can the Solicitor General claim that spending $26 million on horse racing and a breed renewal program represents sound fiscal policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member would know or should know by now that the government does not transfer taxpayers' dollars to Horse Racing Alberta. It's a contract that Horse Racing Alberta has with the provincial government that allows it to keep a portion of the revenues generated from gaming facilities at racing tracks.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've read the report, and the report indicates something different than what the hon. member just answered, so I guess before I ask my final supplemental: have you read the Cuff report?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the member is in error. It's quite clear that the government of Alberta has a contract with Horse Racing Alberta which allows them a portion of the revenues that are generated from slot machines at racing entertainment centres.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This report that maybe the hon. member has or hasn't read indicates that instead of merely regulating horse racing, the government has chosen to actively promote the industry. To the same minister: why is a government that is allegedly not in the business of being in business actively promoting and propping up an industry most Albertans don't care about to the tune of $26 million?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'll point out again that those monies are generated from slot machines that are run at racing entertainment centres, and while a portion of the money that is generated there goes to Horse Racing Alberta, another portion of it goes to fund charitable organizations across our province, maybe some of them in that member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Crime and Safe Communities

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Time and time again the police in Alberta announce successful drug busts and apprehension of drug dealers. While it makes positive headlines for a few days, these drug dealers are more often than not ultimately let go. I believe and my constituents believe that shutting down drug houses and locking up drug dealers is a critical component of keeping our communities safe, so my questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. What is your department doing to stop the revolving door of justice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you very much. It's been a very interesting couple of weeks in both Calgary and Edmonton with respect to law enforcement. The police have done a tremendous job in making our communities safe in the past two weeks. Unfortunately, what we do find from that, Mr. Speaker, is that as a result we have people who are in jail looking for bail. Bail is something that is part of the federal Criminal Code tests. We are continuing to lobby the federal government to try to ensure that they can amend the test so that we don't see this revolving door. We share this concern with the mayor of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: the safe communities initiative has been very popular in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, but there are concerns with cross-ministry budget cutbacks that SafeCom will suffer. Can the minister tell this House what the new budget and potential cut mean to the safe communities initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that we are going through some difficult times, but I am so pleased that this Premier and this government have maintained their financial commitment to the safe communities budget. In fact, in reviewing the budget documents, there has been no reduction to our safe communities commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: can Albertans expect anything new on the legislative front that will make Alberta communities safer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased yet again to have a fairly busy legislative session with respect to legislation. We have already created a very strong web of legislation to assist police with our mandatory gunshot legislation, our civil forfeiture legislation. This spring we'll also be introducing legislation that deals with the restriction of armoured wear, bulletproof vests, and also witness protection legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Livestock Industry

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian beef producers as of January 1, 2010, cattle inventories are at their lowest in 15 years and hog inventories at their lowest in 12 years. Last year the Alberta livestock and meat strategy and agency received over $100 million in government funding, with a similar amount estimated for the next year. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: how can the minister deem this an effective use of these dollars while the industry continues to deteriorate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, ALMA, that was just referred to, is an agency that has just started up, and we're already seeing good results from that agency. A lot of their work is the promotion and working toward new markets globally, which are going to be very necessary. The industries that the hon. member opposite spoke about: about 50 per cent of our market needs to be global, outside of our boundaries, and about 50 per cent domestic. But we did experience an economic correction globally that has been very difficult on all industries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. You've partly answered my next question, but I would like a little bit more. This government keeps throwing money at the industry, but the real problems are structural. Besides writing cheques, what plans does the minister have to meet the ongoing challenges that are facing the Alberta livestock industries?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't disagree more. I would not characterize the support to the agriculture industry, that is our largest renewable resource industry and our second largest industry in the province, as throwing money at an industry. I would say that that's investing in Alberta's future.

Ms Pastoor: Clever semantics.

When the government made check-offs voluntary, they were acting in the interest of the big beef producers at the expense of small family ranchers. How is this ministry helping our regular Alberta beef and hog producers as they attempt to compete in an industry that appears to have turned into a near monopoly?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, all parts of the value chain are important. As I've stated to a number of the groups that I've spoken with and where I've spoken publicly since being appointed minister for this ministry, the primary producers are of utmost importance. Without the primary producers the rest of the value chain collapses. All portions of that value chain need to be profitable and healthy, and we're working towards that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Government Spending

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 1990s the people of Alberta made great sacrifices to help the government get its spending under control, as did many members of this government. Last week the finance minister said that he wanted a bill that would legislate savings. The government was quick to toss aside balanced budget legislation when times got tough, and now they want to bring forward a bill that legislates savings. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Why would Albertans expect the government to treat the proposed savings legislation any differently than the balanced budget legislation when times get tough again?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, Mr. Speaker, this finance minister and the previous finance minister both understand finances well enough to know that in the middle of the recession the most important thing we can do is get Albertans working and make sure that our financial house is in order. When things turn around – and they will – we will have a broad discussion with Albertans about how they want to see their future dollars, their savings, their investments in the future, their returns to Albertans being allocated. That's exactly what the finance minister is committed to doing.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have every right to question this government's commitment to truly fiscally conservative principles. At times their words are good, but their actions leave a lot of Albertans with heartaches. If this government had kept its spending under control in the really good years, this government wouldn't have needed to get rid of the Deficit Elimination Act or drain the sustainability fund. My question is to the same minister: how soon can Albertans expect that the sustainability fund will be restored to the same level it was at before this government decided to use it to re-create fiscal restraint?

Mr. Snelgrove: Some days it's spending, some days it's saving, some days it's, "Let's go back to the '90s," and some days it's, "Let's go back to the '50s." The reason people are coming to Alberta is because we got it right. We didn't get it perfect, but we got it right. We're creating an environment where people are allowed to create wealth, to raise their families, to build small business into big business, to make responsible use of our resources and our people. We have a province that the rest of the world is trying to come to. All of the preview of what they're going to offer Alberta is not what they want.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, what we're offering is what Albertans want.

Mr. Speaker, it is important for Alberta to remain a successful, attractive place to do business. Albertans are hard-working, honest entrepreneurs. The government is planning on burning through more than 80 per cent of our province's rainy-day fund by 2012. Can the minister assure Albertans that a fixed percentage of nonrenewable resource revenues are saved each year for our children and our grandchildren?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, let's be perfectly clear. We have two funds. We have a heritage savings trust fund that is there, untouched, for future generations and will continue to grow, and we have a savings account that we prudently put aside on the eventuality that this might happen, that we might enter into a recession. Wisely led by this Premier, we said: we'd better set some money over here for a rainy day. Well, I've got bad news for the member over there. For a lot of Albertans it's been raining pretty hard lately, and they want to see us get through it. They haven't bothered to say: "What school are we going to close? What hospital are we going to close?" We're going to bridge this economy to the next go-forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Funding for School Boards

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our rural school board in my constituency is facing an $850,000 shortfall in the 2010-11 school year despite the announcements by the Minister of Education that school boards will receive a zero per cent increase. I don't know if zero per cent is an entirely correct figure as I have heard that school boards will in fact receive an overall budget decrease of over 4.17 per cent, 1.17 per cent in 2009-10 and approximately 3 per cent in 2010-11, due to the lack of funding for this government's negotiated settlement with the ATA. My question to the Minister of Education: when will the government provide the funding for the agreement that they negotiated?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, in this budget this year – and we'll go into it more during estimates – we have provided the same amount for school boards as last year, no increase in budgets overall, although there will be some adjustments between school boards based on the number of students they have, based on increased enrolment, based on changes in transportation, and based on changes in the class size funding.

With respect to salaries the member is absolutely correct. There are agreements in place with the ATA locals which provide for an adjustment based on average weekly earnings, and we've had an arbitrated process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Education. Because of the budget shortfall boards will have to make significant cuts to staffing in the upcoming year and will face public outcry as the current information does not indicate the deficit created by the government's lack of commitment to the agreement with the ATA. Question: why did the government fail to budget for teachers' salary increases at the more prudent figure of 5.9 per cent?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the average weekly earnings index at the end of 2008 was 4.82 per cent. At the end of March Stats Canada changed the way they calculated the index, and that change resulted in the 5.99 figure. That was not something we could budget for because the budget was already prepared. However, there was also a dispute with respect to interpretation as to whether the index should be what they had previously calculated or what they changed it to. We went through an arbitrated process. We didn't win that, unfortunately, so now we have an index that's certain, but we haven't budgeted the money for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. In addition to the shortfall due to the government's salary settlement with the ATA, boards will also face increased costs for support staff, benefits, grid movement, and increases due to inflation. Without additional funding in the current budget school boards will be forced to either make significant program and staff cuts or submit deficit budgets. Question to the minister: does the minister envision school boards submitting deficit budgets to maintain the current educational programs being offered to students in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the good news, Mr. Speaker, is that school boards across this province are in great financial shape. There are close to $360 million in operating reserves. Yes, those monies have been saved for specific purposes, but they're in good shape to manage through this year. I've asked school boards to bear with us. We now have the arbitration in place, so we know the index that we're dealing with. I will have to work with the ATA and the Alberta School Boards Association school boards with respect to the salary issue over a longer term process so that we can make them whole over a longer term if we can't in the short term. In the meantime they have the resources in their operating reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Signage on Highway Rights-of-way

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister said that only one antinuclear sign in Peace River was inappropriately taken down, but according to other accounts many signs were on private property and were specifically targeted while real estate signs were left alone. To the Minister of Transportation: would the minister explain this, please?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, all I can explain is that I think we have a good policy to keep people safe in Alberta. I know that our policy states that if signs are improperly placed in road allowances, our maintenance contractors are forced to take them down. As far as actually knowing exactly what that maintenance contractor did, I'm trying to find all that information out. I can tell you that there was one sign that definitely was taken down that was on private property, and we built that private property owner a new sign.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think those signs were emitting any radiation so that they were not safe for the public. To the minister again: will the minister clear up the confusion and table the instructions Alberta Transportation gave to the contractor about removing antinuclear signs?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm under the impression here that everything that I've questioned on this – what was given as a direction from our department was to make sure that people are compliant and follow the rules. The rules are there to keep all of our travelling public safe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why are those rules only for antinuclear signs? To the minister again. If taking down private signs is a matter of safety, then signs across the province should be taken down. Could the minister please tell us how many signs on private property are pulled down annually throughout the province?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, on private property probably or hopefully very, very few. There should be none. We do send out letters to everybody that's within our 300-metre zone, even though it's private, and say: "You're not compliant with the law. Please remove the signs." We don't go in and remove them ourselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Sour Gas Well Emission Monitoring

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The quality of the air we breathe is an issue of concern to my constituents and to all Albertans and, as you might expect, to residents of the oil sands area in particular. My question is for the Minister of Environment. The level of hydrogen sulphide, or sour gas, in the Fort McMurray area is concerning. Hydrogen sulphide standards were exceeded more than 1,500 times in 2009. Residents deserve an answer. What are you going to do to protect the health of the residents in the oil sands area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me assure this member and all of the residents of the Fort McMurray area that these exceedances do not pose a health risk. Nevertheless, they certainly are a legitimate concern because of the odour associated with them. On that count we are taking this issue very, very seriously, and we expect the operators in that area to take it as seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. While the majority of exceedances may have been on plant sites, the fact is that the standard was exceeded more than 1,500 times last year. That's completely unacceptable. Residents need more than hot air. If industry is working to eliminate these releases, then why do they continue?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right: the vast majority of these exceedances are measured on the plant site itself. As I said, there is every expectation that this problem will be addressed in a very serious way, but it's not as simple as simply turning off the valve. In this particular case, as far as we've been able to determine, the majority of these exceedances are caused by unexpected releases from Suncor's tailings ponds. There is an order in place, and Suncor is expected to deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second supplemental to the same minister. You say that you're committed to addressing the issue of exceedances in the oil sands region. I question how that's possible if, as some have stated, there's been reduced monitoring because of budget cuts in your department. How does the minister reconcile the difference between what he's saying and what these numbers are saying?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is in place as we speak an environmental protection order that requires the operator, the approval holder, to take appropriate action and the necessary action to resolve the problem. The next step could well be legal action.

As to the issue of monitoring, I can assure the member that there is no reduction, none whatsoever, in monitoring at developed areas and industrial sites. If there are to be changes in monitoring, they will be in very remote areas where we have had a long-standing record of little or no change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Research and Technology Commercialization Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the government succeeds in creating a functional competitiveness board, the first priority the board should review is the government's own postsecondary education policy, which is rapidly making Alberta less competitive. My questions are to the minister of advanced education. How can the minister trumpet Alberta innovation while cutting funding for research and technology commercialization by $35 million?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do look forward to the discussion around our estimates because the hon. member may have missed a couple of things. When we consolidated a number of entities in Alberta Innovates, we did have some changes to our budget, but I can assure the hon. member that the Premier's vision of the next generation economy is clearly on track based on what we've done with Alberta Innovates and Campus Alberta. And I would correct the hon. member: the international community is looking at Campus Alberta as the system to look at and perhaps follow in the future.

Mr. Chase: They're going to have to look really hard to find it.

By freezing base operating grants, the minister has put faculty layoffs and unpaid furlough days on the table as universities struggle to balance their budgets. Is this what, in quotes, world-class universities look like to this government?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously aware that Campus Alberta is all of the postsecondary institutions across the province, and if he hasn't figured that out yet, as my critic I would encourage him to go to the website and read what we've done over the last two years. I'm sure he would find that very enlightening.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, other jurisdictions in North America that one would consider world class, like Harvard or MIT or Berkeley, have had 20 to 30 per cent cuts to their base operating grants. Indeed, we'll get into the budget debate, but the base operating grants of every institution in this province were protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Rather than finding it enlightening, I'm finding that a number of university students are finding their wallets considerably lighter based on your policies.

Given that we already have the lowest postsecondary enrolment in the country, how is Alberta supposed to compete with our provincial counterparts for talent when this minister is considering tuition increases as large as 70 per cent?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go with the nabobs of negativity and the purveyors of pessimism. Obviously, the hon. member has been reading a lot of newspapers. He's been reading a lot of blogs. He's been reading a lot of other things. Unfortunately, he hasn't been reading the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are livestock producers, and I continue to hear how they're affected by the U.S. mandatory country of origin labelling and the negative impact it has had on the beef and pork producers on this side of the border. I've also heard that we have talk of a Canadian trade challenge on this rule. My question is for the minister of agriculture. Can he update this House on that challenge and just what the status is?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We, of course, as a government share the concerns with the producers on the country of origin labelling. There is a challenge in place by our national government with the World Trade Organization, and a panel is being put together now. Of course, we support our federal counterpart's efforts towards resolving this issue.

Mr. Berger: Again to the same minister: while I would expect and I hope that that challenge would conclude that the MCOOL ruling is indeed a violation of trade agreements, what if the ruling does not go in our favour? What action can we take, and can we have a made-in-Alberta solution to this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, after the first round, if we're not successful with the ruling in the first round, there is an appeal mechanism that's available to us. But I think it's worth noting that the same challenge is being made by Mexico, so we have a challenge by both of the partners in the North American free trade agreement on this particular violation. We're hopeful that that will settle the question.

Mr. Berger: A final question to the same minister: what else can we do? What other initiatives do we have in the pipe so that we may be able to help our producers on this side of the border succeed in this trade climate?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I think that the actions that the United States is taking with this country of origin labelling may have brought about some patriotism and buying changes in the market. If we're not successful through this, I suggest that we need to look at it, too, because I know that Canadians would like to know where their food is coming from and know that there's an opportunity for them to buy Canadian beef. Some already do that. It's voluntary at this point, but that may be the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Support for Family Farms

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has decided that small agriculture producers should get out of the business. They gave the lion's share of BSE support to packers and feedlots, ALMA is dominated by big business, and last year they limited the participation of small producers in their own associations in favour of massive agricultural corps. Now, this government has been successful at pushing farmers off the land because as of January 1, 2010, this year, we've lost nearly 5,000 family farms in the last nine years alone. Will the minister tell . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has been recognized.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would really be a lot easier to work with the members opposite if they actually asked the question instead of just making a statement that I don't know is necessarily very accurate.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, StatsCan tells us that 5,000 family farms have been lost, so why aren't you doing something to actually fix the problem instead of announcing a $25,000 cheque to the whole darn industry? The whole industry. Why can't you do something real to help family farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I expect that the hon. member opposite is making reference to the announcement that went out today on the inspection costs for agricultural producers, livestock producers in the province that through the drought and through other conditions move their livestock to Saskatchewan or British Columbia during the summer months to pasture them. We have now taken the inspection costs and taken that upon ourselves as a province. That is a small part of the over a billion dollars that we invest in the industry.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that $25,000 to a whole industry that's lost 5,000 farms is worth a press release.

Producers are struggling to keep their farms and ranches out of hock. The former agriculture minister told this House that if small farmers can't make a go of it, they should just get out of the business. Does this minister share the attitude that family farms have no place in the current market?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, this year my family farm celebrates its 100th birthday. I firmly believe that family farms have a place in this market. Last year I presented 22 Century farm plaques in my constituency, about the same again this year. I very much support that. This government is very much behind that industry. I learned a long time ago from a constituent of mine that when you talk about money in the thousands of dollars and people make the statement, "That doesn't count," they say, "Send me that cheque."

The Speaker: With all this love in the air, will the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development kindly invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to your 100th family farm celebration this year?

Health Care Funding

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week the minister of health claimed that Alberta's new superboard has saved us between $600 million and $700 million. This statement appears entirely out of step with reality. Budget 2010 increases operational health spending by a stunning 13.7 per cent, or $1.7 billion, with continued massive increases planned going forward. I would really like to see my parents as well as my four boys inherit a health system that they can actually pay for and is there when they need it. To the minister: given the massive increase, how can he claim that the superboard is lowering health care costs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's a fact that Alberta Health Services has found some efficiencies, and there are three primary areas, which I've explained before, but let me explain them quickly again because everybody has an appetite for this information, I know. Number one, they're moving toward this centralized payroll system; number two, they've already moved toward a common procurement system; and number three, they've stopped what's called doctor poaching or doctor bidding between one area of the province and another. There are other efficiencies such as that, hon. member, which they have found within their budget. That's their figure, between $600 million and $700 million. That money is being channelled . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: A $1.7 billion increase does not sound like we are moving toward sustainability, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans, especially health care professionals who have heard the health minister's promise to tackle surgery wait times by simply paying nurses and docs to do more, are scratching their heads. We have long been told that there is an acute shortage of doctors and nurses and that most are working incredibly long hours. To the minister: is there so much excess capacity in the system that by simply spending $70 million per year extra we could solve this problem forever, and if so, why didn't we do this sooner?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that question before, but just in case it didn't communicate well, let me say it again. We have a budget right now that we're working on for the five-year plan, that starts April 1, and there will be additional surgeries added at that time. In the meanwhile we have some flexibility in the current budget because we have paid off or are covering the entire $1.3 billion deficit that the current provincial board inherited from the previous regional boards.* So that's a salient factor. Number two, we're adjusting their base because we now have a better picture of what it costs to deliver health services province-wide. Number three, we're adding 6 per cent on top of that, and it's the 6 per cent increase we should be focusing on.

Mr. Anderson: I appreciate that. If you do the math, though, Mr. Speaker, it works out to be about $1.3 million per week in additional spending. If it was that simple to solve the problem – that's roughly $70 million a year – I still don't understand why we wouldn't have done this last year or the year before.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, there is a person sitting on his left that could help answer that question because she helped us at that time, and it was the right move at that time to move to regional health authorities. It's the right thing to do now to move to the provincial board. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this new provincial board has inherited this accumulated deficit over the last few years, and now we have to cover it because we know what the actual costs are more accurately than ever before. We have consistent data gathering, we have consistent statistical information gathering, and we're sharing that with Albertans as fast as we can.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we were able to recognize 18 members today: 12 opposition members, six private government members. There were a total of 108 questions and answers, which is the highest number you'll find in any parliament anywhere in Canada.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having sought the proper approval of Parliamentary Counsel, I am retabling this petition, which states:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider providing increased funding to Midway School to ensure that various programs continue to be available to its students, teachers, trustees and parents.

It comes from parents of Didsbury, Carstairs, and Crossfield.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bill 201 Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to beg leave to introduce a bill being the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, being Bill 201.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 seeks to include primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer in the presumptive list of cancers that firefighters make claim for under workers' compensation. Bill 201 would help Alberta keep in line with other provinces who have recently added these cancers to their list of presumptive cancers for firefighters.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 202 Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act.

The goal of Bill 202 is to mandate the reporting of child pornography. It does not intend to mandate seeking out child pornography. Rather, it would require that if an individual believed the particular material is or may be child pornography, it's mandatory to report the incident to the police or any other reporting entity. This bill will also protect the informant and ensure that no repercussions for reporting are experienced. Further, Bill 202 will establish the actions that a reporting entity must take following a report.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, on February 16 I tabled the 2009-2010 supplementary supply estimates. I am now tabling a replacement for page 12. This page shows the reason for the Department of Advanced Education and Technology's request for a supplementary amount. Unfortunately, due to a word processing error the header of the second section was presented as Capital Investment rather than Nonbudgetary Disbursements. This tabling does not affect the supplementary appropriations being considered by the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of three letters to the minister of health concerning the centralization of gynecological cytology lab services. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referred to these letters in his questions earlier today. Each letter is signed by a group of pathologists, and each letter asks the minister to reverse the decision made last year to close various labs across the province because the move would not save money and would not improve patient care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two individuals that are here today. Actually, I was expecting three, but I only see two. They are Brad Hoekstra, secretary of the Alberta Firefighters Association, and Greg is not here, but we have Paul McGonigal. Paul is the first vice-president of the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union. They're here today to witness the introduction of Bill 201. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order and recognize the President of the Treasury Board.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2009-10 General Revenue Fund

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move the 2009-10 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. The estimates will provide additional spending authority to nine government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of about $920.5 million in voted expense and in equipment/inventory purchases, $4.7 million in voted capital investment, and $32.9 million in voted nonbudgetary disbursements. These estimates are consistent with the third-quarter fiscal updates, which updated the 2009-10 fiscal plan for all government entities.

The estimates will authorize increases for the departments of Advanced Education and Technology; Employment and Immigration; Health and Wellness; Housing and Urban Affairs; Municipal Affairs; Sustainable Resource Development; Tourism, Parks and Recreation; Transportation; and Culture and Community Spirit. The ministers that are responsible for these departments will be happy to answer any questions from any members of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Before we begin, as we start with the questions, do we want to combine the times, and we'll move back and forth with the questions and answers?

2:50

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, we are at the pleasure of the opposition members as to how they would like to deal with the questions.

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. If it's of the interest of the President of the Treasury Board, certainly we could do that. We could have specific questions, and then, hopefully, we can get an answer.

Now, my first question would be that earlier, in question period, we heard the minister of health suggest or imply that there would be a cost-benefit analysis now done on some of the expenditures that are hopefully going to reduce waiting times in operating rooms and waiting times in our hospitals. I'm quite surprised that there was never a cost-benefit analysis done. There was a clear admission of this in Public Accounts by the former deputy minister of health, that before the nine regional health authorities were fired and the one superboard was created, there was no cost-benefit analysis done at that time. I'm glad to hear we are starting to do some now.

We all know the results of the disaster which is Alberta Health Services. We can't say that it was an inherited debt that they had from the RHAs. Some RHAs, it's true, did have debts but not anywhere even close to the $1.3 billion that was racked up in record time by Alberta Health Services.

My question would be to the President of the Treasury Board. Before this money was allocated – and I believe the sum is $243 million – was there a cost-benefit analysis done before this expenditure was ratified by the Treasury Board?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. I think you have to bear in mind that costings are always done just on a routine basis with regard to any expenditures made in the government of Alberta, but cost-benefit analyses are slightly different. In fact, I would argue that they are vastly different because they are much more detailed. You are not just looking at the costs in terms of the numbers, but you are looking specifically at what benefits come from those costs.

For example, if you wanted to talk about some of the issues that came up today in question period with respect to, let's say, cataract surgeries, I've asked for not only a costing but for a cost-benefit analysis because I'm of the opinion that it costs on average the same or less to do a cataract surgery in a public institution compared with doing the same surgery in a private institution, albeit that we cover it fully as a government no matter what as long as it falls into the category of being medically necessary and it's medically covered and so on and so on. That's one distinction that I would like to make.

In the end, Mr. Chairman, I'm not only asking today through the Treasury Board motion that we approve $243.2 million in supplementary estimates that will go toward the two priorities identified, which are accumulated deficit of the former health authorities, many of whom were running deficits and many of whom were not running deficits – they were doing the best job they could under the circumstances – and, secondly, to cover H1N1 response costs.

I want to add to that that we are going to talk about not only that particular supplementary funding, but we are also going to look, hon. member, at other savings that have been attracted in our ministry, such as lower demands in areas such as prescription drug benefits and physician services and some savings brought about by reprofiling and reduced cash flow requirements for certain capital projects. So what we're going to have altogether is some savings on the one hand coupled with the supplementary estimates on the other hand to deal with the pandemic costs alluded to and also the accumulated deficit costs and so on.

I should just close by saying, Mr. Chairman, that the H1N1 costs were declared by the Lieutenant Governor through an order in council as extraordinary expenses this year because, in fact, they did meet the criteria of being deemed a public emergency. I would hope to have the hon. member's support in that respect.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again along that line of questioning. I appreciate the answer from the minister of health, but at the same time I would like to point out to the hon. minister the report of the Auditor General of Alberta from last fall, October 2009. The Auditor points out that the 2008-09 RHAs' budgeted operating deficit was $392 million. Business plans of those RHAs – and we've got to remember that everything was organized through East Central health authority – were not approved by the Alberta Health Services Board or the minister at the time.

Again, in regard to your previous statement, how can taxpayers have confidence that this money is going to be wisely spent? It's not simply walking up to a bank machine and withdrawing the cash and ensuring that it is spent prudently. What exactly is in place that's different than what was pointed out in the Auditor General's report that will give taxpayers confidence that this money is going to be spent wisely?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. We're perhaps not quite finished spending them yet in a couple of small areas, but the monies were spent, as I said, with respect to the H1N1 response costs. That total, hon. member, was $148.9 million. Albertans should take comfort in knowing that $22.1 million of that amount was for doctors' services, $116.4 million was for Alberta Health Services, and $10.4 million was to purchase the actual vaccine. Now, the H1N1 costs include such items as drugs, supplies, staffing, emergency medical services flu response units, immunization clinics, assessment centres, emergency room visits, and so on. So that is one part of it.

The second part is the accumulated deficit, which is, in total, $343 million for the period that we're talking about here. That deficit was accumulated partly because we had a system in place that was regionalized. We had regional health boards, in this particular case nine regional health boards. Some of them operated differently than did others. Some of them were facing different circumstances than others. In any case, they were all doing their own thing and, I should say, for the most part doing it very, very well. I was quite proud of what regional health authorities were doing, and I think they deserve some kudos for having managed through some difficult issues and some difficult times as well.

In the end, moving to one provincial health board has streamlined a lot of those organizations, and it simply would be unfair to move to a new provincial board and saddle them with a $1.3 billion deficit at the get-go. They're just coming up to their first-year anniversary with their new CEO in April. They deserve a fresh start, and I think Albertans appreciate that.

I hope that clarifies some of the member's concerns for the time being.

Mr. Snelgrove: I appreciate the question: how do we know we're getting better? I think one of the things that the minister has talked about earlier today – and we've made a great effort – is doing it better. In fact, by finding within Alberta Health Services between $600 million and $700 million worth of a better way to spend your money in health care, the government's approach hasn't been to try to withdraw money from the system. It's to make sure that we're getting better use of it. So they have in the last year, to your point and to the Auditor's point, looked within their responsibilities and through procurement, payroll, the other things the minister talked about have been able to identify over $600 million of spending that is getting better results for them. I appreciate your question. It doesn't show out as a saving from health care because we believe they should be able to find it and reinvest it into health care.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Zwodzesky: I'm sorry. I forgot one important point that you asked about. That was the Auditor General. My apologies. I want to tell you, hon. member, that I did meet with the Auditor General, and just apropos to both points – and I'll get to the second one in a moment – he indicated to me that when he was auditing and reviewing the difference between having one provincial board for health as opposed to nine provincial boards, basically, we saw so much differentiation among the nine regions that it was sometimes difficult to track the information and to record it in the kind of order that you would need to make the best decisions at the provincial level.

To put that in some more graphic terms, if we take the Alberta wait-list registry as an example – and I'll be as brief as I can, Mr. Chair – we had all of these regional boards collecting information and inputting it to the provincial level, but everybody was collecting it slightly differently, and they were using slightly different terminology. We started to straighten that all out, and now we're hoping to get that Alberta registry back up and running because we've got what I've referred to before as more consistent data gathering, more consistent information reporting, and a better system overall of applying that information now. So when the Alberta wait-list registry gets back up and running, people will be able to go to their computer, punch up hip replacement or knee replacement, and they'll know what the wait time or the wait-list is in Camrose or Ponoka or Wetaskiwin or Pincher Creek or Edmonton or Calgary or wherever that particular surgery is being offered.

That's one of our main goals over the next year, to get all of that information put in place. Now that we have the guaranteed funding plan, now that we have the five-year funding plan, we're able to provide more stability and more predictability for everyone concerned.

The other point, very quickly, that the Auditor General mentioned to me was this. These are his words, and I asked him if I could quote him on this, hon. member, and he said yes. I wrote it down exactly the way he said it. Even the Auditor General said, quote, that the provincial board inherited certain deficits; they did not create them. That's not to say that the regional health authorities weren't doing a good job. The fact is that some of them were running deficits; some were not.

Now that we have a more consistent approach, hon. member, I say to you that the days of deficits are gone. This supplementary estimate today will help us pick up the costs that we're able to in the current year, that extends to March 31, and then we'll deal with the balance of the deficit for health regions in the 2010-11 year.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a matter of order and just to understand what's happening this afternoon, we had had discussions with the opposition indicating a process. Advanced Education was going to be started with first, followed by Employment and Immigration, then Health and Wellness, as per the estimates, with the only exception that Culture was going to be at the bottom. Now, I have no problem if the opposition wants to deal with Health and Wellness first on the understanding that the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology might not be here if they want to get to him down at the bottom of the list. You know, the House can handle it however they wish, and the opposition can raise questions in whatever order, but I'm going to assume and I think ministers are going to assume that if you've jumped over their department in the order, they are then free to go.

Mr. MacDonald: No. Certainly, I was unaware of that. Mr. Chairman, we were starting with the largest budget, which is the request for Health and Wellness, which is, as we indicated earlier, $243 million. We were starting at the largest budget, and we were planning to work our way down.

We come in here, hon. member, all the time and wait patiently for our bills to come up for debate. In fact, we waited in here yesterday quite patiently for over an hour. I know we're all busy, but certainly this is a significant amount of money, close to $1 billion, so hopefully through the course of debate all our questions can be answered.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I have no problem with the hon. member wanting to start with the largest numbers, just that we had communicated with his House leader, and probably he should, too.

Mr. Chase: Just as part of clarification, we also have members involved in the budgetary debates tonight, and it is because of that involvement in the debates that we have reordered the debate this afternoon in order to accommodate members who will also be on duty tonight.

Advanced Education and Technology

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps if I could put some comments on the record as it relates to my budget, and we could get going on Advanced Education and Technology. There are really only two key areas where we are seeking supplementary estimate approval, and I do this for the information of all members of the House. The first is to meet the increasing demand for student financial assistance. The second is, of course, to address changes in our capital budget.

I'm going to start first by addressing the demand for student financial assistance. When it comes to student financial assistance, one of the top priorities is to ensure that we are able to provide adequate financial assistance to all eligible students. In Alberta's current economic climate that has become a greater challenge. More Albertans are choosing to pursue postsecondary education in this environment, and as a result we have seen a 20 per cent increase in the number of student loan applications. To ensure that we're assisting every eligible student, we are increasing our 2009 spending on student loans by $30 million. As a result, no eligible student was turned away or declined financial assistance for their studies. We do expect demand to remain high, and we have made changes to our student assistance programs as outlined in Budget 2010 so we can continue to meet the needs of those students, Mr. Chairman.

Moving on to our capital budget. The supplementary estimate in this area is $178.7 million, a large sum. A significant portion of this is a result of a capital funding injection of $97.7 million from our friends in the federal government. This federal funding, targeted for projects at various institutions under the knowledge infrastructure program, or KIP, as it came to be known, came after our 2009 budget was approved. We're simply seeking legislative authority to transfer the funds into the budget and spend them as needed. The majority of Alberta's approved KIP projects will upgrade building systems such as mechanical, electrical, roofing, and windows that will extend the useful life of the buildings, something that all of our postsecondaries were asking for.

The remaining changes within our capital budget are related cost escalation for the Centennial Centre for Interdisciplinary Science at the University of Alberta, on which I know the hon. members are very keen in terms of their interdisciplinary studies that they have there. The original approved funding was based on 2004 cost estimates and did not take into account the significant increases in construction costs that occurred between 2004 and 2008. To meet increased costs we have worked with the university to find as many cost savings within the project as possible, and we've also directed the university to shift cost savings from other projects to the Centennial Centre for Interdisciplinary Science, significantly reducing the need for additional funding.

This is a critical project for the university that will accommodate an additional 1,500 undergraduate students and 500 graduate students in the science programs. It will be one of the only few of its kind in the world to house interdisciplinary science research teams in one faculty and attract and retain outstanding students as well as world-class teaching and research talent. In short, it meets the objectives of our Alberta access planning framework to ensure that it provides access to meet demand for science and engineering training. The total cost expected for this project is to be in the range of $465 million, and it should be completed by 2011.

Mr. Chairman, those are the very brief comments that I wanted to make on the Advanced Education and Technology supplementary estimates. They really are two fairly simple points, and I would ask the House for approval.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate the minister not only being here but staying here for the debate on Advanced Education and Technology. As the minister has noted, almost half of the $217,176,000 comes from the federal government. He and I have been at numerous presentations at the University of Calgary. I very much thank the minister for contributing to infrastructure for postsecondary institutions. We were together at the sort of checking off of the cogen plant at the University of Calgary. We were there together at the ISEEE, the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy, when that part of the cheque was presented. These cheques are very much appreciated. However, what we are doing with the federal funding and the provincial funding: we are creating shells, but we're not then providing the operational funding to keep those shells operating.

ISEEE did receive some operational funding, and I am not complaining about seeing the Taylor digital library go up at the U of C and the Centennial Centre for Interdisciplinary Science at the University of Alberta. These are all positive aspects. But if you're going to keep the programs running, the postsecondary institutions have to have predictable, sustainable operational funding. That has been missing both from the provincial government's and the federal government's.

The ministers, federally and provincially, are there for the cheque blow-up opportunities for new buildings, but when it comes to the financing of the operations, there have been not only freezes but effectively cuts to all postsecondary institutions in Alberta. That is affecting the delivery of academic programs to students. It's also affecting the quality of the teaching experience as well as that of the learning experience of students. This is important to note.

Also, again, it's important to note that half of the announcement that the minister made is thanks to federal transfers. While appreciated, the money that is missing – for example, we've heard about $30 million of debt load that has been granted to students but at the expense of reduced grants and bursaries. Now, the minister – and I'm sure he'll explain it to me again, that he can get more bang for the buck through loans than he can through grants and bursaries. But from a student expense point of view, with a grant and a bursary there is no debt to be repaid, and also it allows the student to get involved into the economy to a much greater extent.

In question period I talked about the possibility of a 70 per cent increase. It's up to the minister as to the extent of the approval of whatever percentage of increase is provided. But we have got desperate institutions, like the University of Alberta with a $58 million deficit, trying to get it back, and they can't get it through operational funding. They can't get it through infrastructure grants. So the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary are looking at their only other source of funding, and that's basically tuition.

The University of Calgary has proposed an up to 47 per cent increase in tuition costs for professional faculties. At a meeting that I was at with the provost a couple of weeks ago in Calgary, the education faculty has now joined the medical, the law, the business, and the engineering as the highest debt load potential faculties.

In addition to those potential increases in tuition, of course, at the U of A, because they are in a larger hole than the U of C, they're talking about – I think the highest one was a 67 per cent increase in one of their professional faculties, medicine, I believe. But the point is that – I've said it so many times in this House – education equals economy. Without that support for education students are going to go into greater debt.

Now, when the minister said that no applications – I don't want to put words in his mouth, but I think he said something along the lines that no qualified applications were rejected. But I've had a number of individuals contact my Calgary-Varsity constituency office and say that while they were able to get a loan for their first year of university, when it came to the second year, there was no loan available. For the students who are in Bow Valley College, for example, or SAIT, the Alberta Works program funding has completely dried up, so students looking for funding to help them pursue trades are out of luck.

Now, specific questions that I would like to ask the minister are as follows. How will the ministry distribute the additional funds for capital expansion across the province? This comes from line 4.0.1 of page 13. Will these funds be concentrated in certain institutions? I gather that a large chunk, obviously, due to inflationary costs is going to the University of Alberta, but I'd appreciate clarification on what the other institutions can expect in terms of continuing infrastructure projects.

In terms of the additional funds for capital maintenance and renewal why was the additional $56 million not anticipated in the 2009-2010 budget? Is there an opportunity with the reduced costs of materials and labour to potentially recoup some of this money with our reduced construction costs?

Are postsecondary institutions experiencing higher deferred maintenance costs than expected? I mean, the University of Alberta is sort of approaching 100 years of operation. The University of Calgary is heading towards 45, so obviously deferred maintenance is going to make the bill even larger if the repairs aren't addressed.

How many learners will be assisted with the additional $30 million in student loan disbursements noted in line 3.0.6? I know that it's a projected answer, but I'd appreciate any attempt at giving the possibilities or possible scenarios. Even with this extra $30 million will eligible students be denied student loans? Now, according to the minister, this isn't likely to happen, but as I say, the practical experience of students calling my office indicates that they could not get loans for their second year's studies pursuit. If so, what size of appropriation would be sufficient to address this demand?

I've tried to keep it short. I look forward to the minister, and I thank him for being here to respond.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A lot of stuff in there. I want to start with the last part there. There were no students that I'm aware of this year that were turned away because of the budget that we're talking about here today. In fact, we're not even talking about the budget here today. We're talking about supplementary estimates. The $30 million, obviously, is to accommodate the increased load of student applications so that we didn't turn away any eligible students.

Certainly, when we talk about the grants and the bursaries in the budget, which I understand is coming next week, we'll be talking about our estimates, and we'll also be talking about student finances and the investment that students make in their education. We're trying to look at a system where we can keep the student investment in their education at about the 20 to 30 per cent level of the cost of what it is to do their program. I think that's something that Albertans have come to recognize as a representative investment in their future because the taxpayer is paying the other 70 per cent. We do not serve the institutions.

You know, the hon. member is correct. We've been to a number of openings of capital dollars across this province. In fact, I think we've probably got well in excess of $1.3 billion worth of capital under way in this province in postsecondary today. I doubt that there is a province in Canada that can make that boast, quite frankly, hon. member, and it's good to do that.

When you talk about operating dollars, which, again, are not related to what we're talking about here today, but the hon. member brought it up, certainly in the budget that we have for '09-10, we had a 6 per cent base operating grant increase to all postsecondaries. We had a fairly substantial increase in our EPE funding to all of the postsecondaries. We had, in fact, a doubling of the maintenance funding to all postsecondaries. It went from $35 million a year as the line item in my budget, I believe, to something around $70 million a year. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that our postsecondaries have fared probably better than any jurisdiction in North America, dare I say perhaps even around the globe on the basis of a population of 3 and a half million.

It tails quite nicely, Mr. Chairman, into what we've been able to accomplish this year, really, and we launched it on January 4 of this year in Alberta Innovates. What we've done is brought forward all of the different research organizations from across the province, whether that be, you know, the UTIs or the TEC Edmontons or the Alberta Research Councils. In fact, the Alberta Research Council actually raises a lot of money every year on its own by way of a fee for service. We'd like to expand some of that because we have some great infrastructure that we've invested in in this province that companies or postsecondaries or individuals who have a great idea should and could use because that's a taxpayer investment that we want to get a return out of.

We brought all of the Alberta Innovates with all of these research entities together into one group. Call it branding it Alberta Innovates, similarly to how we branded Campus Alberta. We wanted to brand Campus Alberta because when we go internationally, we talk about the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge. We talk about Lethbridge College, Lakeland College, the 26 different institutions that are the width and breadth of this province. We want to be able to sell the quality of Campus Alberta. We want to be able to sell the fact that you can enter the system anywhere and transfer around in that system. That's APAS, which is another thing I'd love to talk about, Mr. Chairman, the one-window approach.

But back to Alberta Innovates. We brought everything together so that if you have an idea and you were starting at a certain point within that value chain of that idea, what we want to be able to do is bring you forward to the culmination of the value chain of that idea. So if you're starting in your garage and you created the next best mousetrap, and you want to put that into the marketplace, what do you need?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mice.

Mr. Horner: Well, you need mice, yes, but you also need to have a business plan. You need to figure out how you're going to raise funds. You need to figure out how you're going to build that prototype. You need to figure out how you're going to get that prototype into the marketplace. Alberta Innovates creates a cluster and a process and, really, a concierge service for you that will help you do that. That's tied to the postsecondary system, Mr. Chairman, because postsecondary does a lot of our basic research, but it also does a ton of our applied research. Lakeland College is doing a number of projects on biofuels, on biodiesel.

Mr. Snelgrove: Funny you should bring that up.

Mr. Horner: I just thought it was timely, as is Grande Prairie College, as is a number of our – SAIT and NAIT are well known in the aeronautical system in the hon. member's own riding. We have a number of things going on down around Medicine Hat and the Lethbridge area in terms of research and development in unmanned vehicles which are really progressing quite nicely. Again, Alberta Innovates is going to be a huge contributor to turning those things into marketable products.

When we talk about Alberta Innovates in terms of the budget side of it, which we'll get into, I'm sure, in much more detail next week, when we start talking about how the dollars will flow now versus how the dollars flowed before, it also helps our postsecondaries on the operating side, as the hon. member brought up, operating for new infrastructure because we're able to attract corporations to help us with our infrastructure and to help us with our operating dollars because of Alberta Innovates, because of Campus Alberta, and because of where these companies want to perform their research and create new products and new wealth, Mr. Chairman.

It is really about creating wealth. We want to create a bigger pie. We want to create a bigger pie so that we have the resources to have the world-class operational dollars for our postsecondaries and our researchers. We want to be able to attract new researchers into the system. We want to be able to attract the kinds of companies that are going to build on the strengths that we have in our system. There is a lot of work to a new mousetrap, actually.

Mr. Chairman, the other thing as it relates to grants and bursaries and the investment of the loans. Alberta has probably the best loan remission program in the country. When we're talking about loans and we're talking about adding student debt, a lot of times people kind of ignore the fact that Alberta has a very substantial loan remission program upon completion of graduation for entitled students where the entire Alberta portion of their loan on a four-year program can actually be waived. They need not pay it back to the taxpayers of Alberta. That's a pretty significant investment in the students in this province.

The other thing that's a significant investment in the students in this province is really the student finance program that we have. It is heavily subsidized. It is also one where we bring very low interest rates. We have increased the living allowances every year that I've been the minister. We've increased this in this budget, and we've got some very good news as it relates to the student finance regulations and where we are going with those.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the other ways that we are helping students save some dollars, as I mentioned earlier on in my discussion, is APAS, the Alberta access portal for enrolment in postsecondaries in Alberta. Today a student in Lac La Biche can get onto the enrolment system and apply at any institution in the province and only upload his transcripts once. He only has to enter all of his personal data and all of his application data once, and that is transmitted to all of the institutions that he wishes to apply to. That system, as it grows and as we add more things to it that we want to use to manage the system, is going to provide tremendous management information. It's going to provide some tremendous opportunity for us to do better planning in the future because it really is about how we can respond to the student needs and the student demands.

Mr. Chairman, I think I've answered probably every question that could possibly come now.

Mr. Snelgrove: And ones they haven't even thought of yet.

Mr. Horner: And probably some they weren't even thinking about. So with that, I'll take my seat, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I hope that I'm not repeating some of the questions that were asked. I was a bit distracted at the beginning, so you can nod right away if that's the case.

As a starting point, obviously, with respect to the issue around seeking more money to address the increased demand or the increased cost of student loans, just as sort of a preliminary comment, as you probably know, we have some concerns about the idea of shifting the funding structure where we're asking students to take out more loans and take on greater debt in order to finance their education, notwithstanding, of course, that, you know, we provide a very good education here in Alberta. The question is how much debt we're asking our students to anticipate taking on before they go in through the hallowed doors of that excellent postsecondary education and the degree to which it may result in a certain portion of the population, particularly lower income Albertans, choosing not to seek out the kind of education that would give them that true equality of opportunity that we presumably all seek to provide. I will say that I did find it a teeny bit ironic that, on one hand, this government is opening the doors for students to take on more debt load; on the other hand, we just have the federal government being very concerned about the growing debt load of Canadians and stepping in quite aggressively to address that issue.

Nonetheless, that aside, my concern at this point anyway, obviously, with respect to having more loans in the future, of course, relates to the many loopholes that exist around our tuitions and the fact that they may grow dramatically. But that's not what we're talking about now, so I won't get too much more into it and simply ask – and again, if these questions were asked, I apologize – is the extra money for more loans, or is it for higher loans, or both? Can I get numbers with respect to that in terms of how many more loans or whether there was an increase in the average size of loans that generated the need for this extra request?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Good to have a question on topic. The actual number of applications went up because, as the hon. member very well knows, the maximum loan amounts this year were not raised, but we are looking at, if my budget is passed, maximum loan amounts being raised next year. That's a reflection – and I know that the hon. member was lobbied by the students' associations, just as I was and just as all hon. members were, to raise the student loan limits because the cost of living has risen. Remember that for the students this is an investment just as it is for us, and they, in fact, view it that way as well. Also, just as a point of clarification, even though we are looking at a higher level of loans, if students are applying at a lot of postsecondaries and if we actually increase the percentage of participation rates in our postsecondaries, I will probably be back. This is one of those things where, if the students apply for a loan and they are eligible, we want to be able to help them.

3:30

You know, the hon. member talks about low-income Albertans wanting to go to school. That's exactly the kind of situation that these student finance programs are geared towards. If they weren't, they'd go to the bank. They don't need to come to us if they're already wealthy. They'd just go to the bank, or they'd pay it on their own. These types of student financial assistance are for exactly those students who are in need, who want to pursue their dreams, and I view that as an absolute positive.

The other thing I would say is that Alberta, even in the new system that we're talking about, will still be number one in scholarships in the country.

Mr. Chase: You talked about the consolidation of Alberta Innovates, Mr. Minister. If consolidation ended up with greater efficiency, then the superboard would not be $1.3 billion in the hole. I'm not convinced that this consolidation has made up for the fact that there's $35 million less in the fund, so it remains a concern.

Another concern related to Alberta Innovates is patenting, ownership. For example, out of the University of Calgary a terrific, innovative surgical invention, the robotic arm, occurred due to on-campus research funded both by the province and the federal government. But it disturbs me that the patent for that robotic arm is being sold. If you could please explain why that intellectual property is not valued at a higher level, that it's being sold as opposed to retaining the rights and further developments of that arm and the technology associated with it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, Alberta Innovates is not the topic of the discussion this afternoon. We're talking about supplementary estimates. It did key into the comments that I was making because they're kind of all related there, but I'm sure we're going to have a lot of time to discuss Alberta Innovates next week as I do my estimates.

As it relates to intellectual property – again, Mr. Chairman, it's hardly something we'd talk about during supplementary estimates – I would point out that the hon. member might want to talk to the University of Calgary because their intellectual property agreements with the professors are part of their agreements. We are looking at ways that we might be able to change that. I think that's one of the things that we need to actually open up, to make easier access to intellectual property because, again, it's about creating wealth.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll try to be brief in my asking of questions. I have three.

Just to clarify my previous request, you did mention that the number of applications had gone up, and I'm wondering if we could be provided with the actual number, what that increase was.

Then the second question was that while I appreciate that the loan max increases for the year forward, I assume that for the year behind the average amount of loan given is not always the max. So you have an average that's below the max; thus, it's possible for the average to have increased within the max. I was asking whether or not this $30 million is actually also about an increase in the amount loaned on average last year beyond what was expected.

My third question – and then I won't have to get up again – is just with respect to the construction of the centennial centre. Given that we were looking at lower costs of labour and materials last year – perhaps I missed it, and if I did, you can just refer me to Hansard – what is the explanation for the cost being so much higher than what was budgeted at the beginning of last year?

Mr. Horner: Not a problem, hon. member. Certainly, on the number of loan applications we'll have that data once the year is complete because, frankly, we're still processing some applications as we speak. So we'll be able to garner that data. I know that the hon. member has actually quoted data to me from student finance in the past year. Certainly, those numbers are going to be available. Frankly, we're not seeing a huge increase in the average amounts. What we're seeing is a larger number of applicants coming to student finance as opposed to wherever they were going before.

Remember, hon. member, that we probably had the highest percentage of working students, by choice in some cases, than pretty much everywhere else. I think everybody in this House knows that a number of employment positions that are in that kind of part-time category did not materialize over the last couple of years, and students were one of the ones that that hurt, which is one of the reasons, you know, that when we talk about a minimum wage, we wanted to keep the number of jobs the same. That was part and parcel of where we went with that. In terms of the average amount, again, I'm pretty sure that that's part of the statistics that we develop at the end of the year when we're done.

As it relates to CCIS, you're right; a number of projects over at the University of Alberta were coming in lower than what we budgeted. In fact, the dollars that are included in the supplementary estimates are a balance between what we need to make it whole and savings that the university has been able to bring about from other projects that they've been working on. This project was costed out in 2004. So recognizing what happened in '05-06 in terms of cost escalation, when we complete the project, we'll be completing it based on an overall capital plan with the University of Alberta.

I would take this opportunity, actually, Mr. Chairman, to commend the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, all of the postsecondaries, frankly, on their ability to manage their capital assets and their capital plans. They've done an outstanding job over the past year and a half, two years that we've been working on some of these issues. There's not one capital project on a postsecondary campus in this province that is not proceeding.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Right. I just wanted to clarify the process that the hon. Government House Leader brought up. Here are his exact words, actually, coming from his assistant, George Samoil: here's the revised order for today; the only ministers who are not here today for sups are tourism and culture as they are hosting Alberta Day at the Olympics. Mr. Samoil went on to list in alphabetical order the various portfolios that would be debated for supplementary supply today, but there was no House leaders' agreement on the order in which the topics would be discussed.

I wanted to put that on the record. Thank you, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to do so.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.
We'll move on, then.

Employment and Immigration

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other questions with regard to any of the other estimates? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Well, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity to rise and take part in the debate on supplementary supply estimates. Perhaps we could subtitle it "What's a billion?"

since we're talking about almost a billion dollars, $958,125,000, in requested supplementary supply.

I was wondering about some of these numbers in the 2009-2010 supplementary supply estimates for Employment and Immigration. We're looking at a total supplementary amount close to $177 million. Some of that, about $4.6 million, is for employment program planning and delivery to support employment and training programs that will help individuals improve their skills in order to obtain and maintain employment; another $28 million and change is for employment and training programs specifically, programs that'll help individuals improve their skills in order to obtain and maintain employment; $25.9 million is for health benefits due to higher caseloads and cost per case; $129.7 million is for income supports due to higher caseloads and cost per case.

I guess what I'm concerned about here – and I certainly wouldn't lay the total amount of blame for this request squarely at the feet of any one minister – is that what this shows is an underestimation of the impact that the recession was going to have on employment in the province of Alberta when the budget for 2009-2010 was prepared.

I'm not going to lay the blame squarely at the feet of either today's Minister of Employment and Immigration or his predecessor, who was in place a year ago, when the budget was brought down, because this has been a wicked recession, the worst economic downturn since the Dirty Thirties. A lot of people got a lot of things wrong in projecting this. Nevertheless, we're looking at $177 million that was spent that now we are being requested in this House to approve because income supports, health benefits related to that, and employment and training programs ended up costing a lot more than we thought they were going to.

Interestingly, Mr. Chairman, the numbers for all four of those categories for fiscal 2010-2011 – and I was at a different budget hearing last night, different estimates for a different department, but I would expect and understand that this got fairly full discussion at estimates for the Ministry of Employment and Immigration last night – have been reduced again this year from what was actually spent in 2009-2010, and that's what I'm wondering about. You know, concerns were raised in the estimates debate for the '09-10 budget about the size of the increases to training and income supports programs, concerns that were raised because, well, frankly, we thought maybe they were underestimating a little bit what it would cost.

I guess I'm looking for the minister to admit that the government did not correctly anticipate the demands the recession would place on these programs, not so that we could just say "gotcha" but because that goes to, I think, what's being budgeted this year. I really hope that we're not back here 11, 12 months from now with another sup supply increase for employment training and income supports programs because we underestimated it again. I'm looking for some justification of the numbers going forward, I guess, and some comment on the numbers as they actually turned out to be in '09-10.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, trust it to the hon. member. I agree; it's not an exact science. But I can tell you that we are using data from StatsCan and other economic indicators that show us that we're looking for an unemployment rate around 6 per cent next year and dropping down to 5.3 per cent the year after that. They're hopeful, but I think they're doable given the indicators we see. We're also intending to save money because of a reduction or, certainly, a pause in some of the international recruitment that we bring. They're all kind of connected.

I can tell you – and I don't want to put words in his mouth – that I think that when we budget, we need to be flexible. It doesn't serve us well to put all the money in and hope things get better because we've found over time that departments will spend it. You know, if you have the flexibility to move from one department if you see the trending going – if unemployment is climbing, if the demand for advanced ed spaces or other adult training is dropping, you know that you're going to get it somewhere. It's going to come in supports of one kind, either back into some kind of literacy programs, but it's going to get you. There's that segment of the population that follows the economy. I really think this shows the flexibility within government to say: okay; maybe we don't have the particular supports for some kind of upgrading or moving to a higher level, but we do have a lot of people who need supports at this level.

You know, we just have the stream of people that will always follow the economy, and you'll pay through one department or another. I personally think the flexibility to move those supports and come back to the House and say: well, we didn't get it right in our guess last spring, but a lot of things happen in a year, and it was important to address the very specific needs of that group. So I think it works.

Mr. Taylor: If I could just pick up on that and this notion of the group of people who kind of follow the economy. You know, how often do you actually ever get real consensus from a room full of economists? That said, I think there is a degree of consensus among economists that that group of people tends to follow by perhaps as much as two years. In other words, the unemployment rate is going to continue to go up or remain high before it starts to come down for up to two years after the early signs of recovery start to make themselves obvious. I think the President of the Treasury Board would most likely agree that we are seeing some fairly substantial early signs that the worst is over and that we're starting to recover. The question, then, really is: if that group of people according to the economists' quasi-consensus, put in quotation marks, is going to follow the economy with up to a two-year time lag, have you done enough here in terms of anticipating that?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, if we take the total Canadian unemployment picture, it will lag further behind it. But I think the hon. member and certainly anyone who's watched some of the oil patch workers go back to the Maritimes would agree that you can just about guarantee that some of them aren't coming back to work. Even in Alberta many people will work in the oil patch until either a downturn, old age, a bad back, or something puts them out of it, and they'll go on to where they really intended their life to be. A lot of the people that were making pretty good money in the oil industry have gone back to their provinces. We don't see directly those people on our doorsteps with their hand out for unemployment. They're getting it, but they're getting it through the federal government in the Maritimes, and that might put us in a slightly different position than most economic models around where the workforce would be. So we're probably slightly better off, but somebody is paying for it.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you to the Provincial Treasurer for that. I can certainly understand and accept that we are a unique case in that sort of situation.

In terms of the supplementary requests to employment and training programs, are these increases essentially passed on to clients in the form of training payments?

Mr. Snelgrove: Some are shared costs, and there are many. Some of them are shared programs with the federal government, so the cost of the program wouldn't necessarily reflect all or nothing here. It's the blend of whatever particular training issues: some cost shared with the recipient, some cost shared with the federal government, and some with employers.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. A couple of more questions along the same line. Were any of these increases used to build capacity in these programs in the form of hiring additional staff, et cetera? If that's the case, how will the ministry shrink these programs when demand really does recede? How much of this is kind of like one-off requests, I guess? The point here is that, you know, economic recovery is going to create jobs, but it's not going to replace the same jobs that we've lost over the last two years. The net result of that is that you will have – and we see it already – job vacancies where we don't have people with the appropriate skill sets to fill those vacancies, and we have unemployed workers who have skill sets that aren't in demand any longer. You don't always get that turned around by one six-week or semester-long course in this or that particular program, right?

Some of those workers are going to need multiple years of training to requalify in a postrecession economy. Should the ministry be considering some multiyear increases to upgrading programs and learner funding to address the situation? Lest the minister feel like he should stand up now and accuse me of making this a spending day, we're talking about an investment day.

Mr. Snelgrove: The hon. member is very correct for us to be aware that when we go into initiatives, not just in this department but in any department, where we increase our capacity to deal with the different issue that we're at, and all of a sudden that issue isn't there, it seems far tougher to take the dollars back out or to reallocate to another department. On that heads-up I can commit to the hon. member that we will be watching that for sure, not only in this one but generally across government.

We've also put together ministerial working groups, where we are able to identify trends and changes – the health workforce development, that's a joint initiative between, obviously, Employment and Immigration, Advanced Education, and Health and Wellness – to make sure that we are identifying the workforce of the future in many ways, whether it's the personal care person or other upgrading within the system. I get his point; it's a good point. We will make sure that if, in fact, the capacity is greater than what a normal population requirement is, we'll be able to either redirect that to be more effective, or we'll take it back from that department and put it where it works.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I didn't quite get the answer, not from the minister not trying but from Advanced Education and Technology. I see under Employment and Immigration this basically $28 million figure for employment and training programs. Now, I appreciate the hon. President of the Treasury Board talking about cross ministry and putting the money where it's going to do the most good. Will any of this $28 million go to make up for the Alberta Works program basically being shut down? Will any of this money be transferred to that program?

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't have the answer for the hon. member. I'll take it.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm just wondering if any of the money that's indicated here will go towards increasing the number of individuals qualifying for the provincial nominee program. I would think that would fit under immigration. We've increased it each year, and if you have any numbers, that would be helpful.

Mr. Snelgrove: Okay.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? We can move on?

Mr. Taylor: Are you specific, Mr. Chairman, to this department?

The Deputy Chair: No. We've got eight different ministries here. You can move on if you wish.

Mr. Taylor: Kind of a free-for-all.

The Deputy Chair: Well, not quite.

Mr. Taylor: Just testing, Mr. Chair. Just testing.

Housing and Urban Affairs

Mr. Taylor: I'd like to speak to Housing and Urban Affairs. We're looking at a supplementary amount of $73,632,000, which is a net of $3.4 million from lower than budgeted spending in other programs.

By the way, I'm noticing that in a number of these departmental supplementary supply requests we're running into the situation where you have come to us asking for money but not as much money as you need to cover the additional cost of whatever it is that you're looking to cover, because you have achieved some savings through budgeted monies that were not spent in other areas. I just wanted to note that for the record.

Now, in terms of Housing and Urban Affairs the supplementary amount breaks down into a couple of different areas. One is $19 million and change provided to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation for on-site costs and temporary access associated with the development of phase 1 of Parsons Creek in Fort McMurray.

You know, I probably know what the answer is here, but I need to ask and get the answer from the minister. The other is $58,090,000 to support the development of affordable housing and the retrofit and regeneration of the existing social housing portfolio. This funding, it says here, "is offset by a transfer from the federal government." I think the question that I want to ask the minister is: when will the province receive the $58 million transfer from the federal government? If I'm interpreting this correctly, it sounds as though what the minister is really doing here is asking the Legislature for a $58 million cash advance, knowing that the federal government or assuming that the federal government is good for the $58 million. But maybe I'm interpreting this wrong. I don't know.

Does the Housing and Urban Affairs ministry have the $58 million from Ottawa already? Does that trigger a situation where you're required to match those dollars with $58 million of your own, which is why you're here asking for the money? What would not have happened that has happened or what won't happen that will happen if we approve this expenditure? Give me some numbers in terms of units of affordable housing or units of social housing that are getting a little down-at-the-heels that get a retrofit and a renovation, that sort of thing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I want to thank the hon. member for that question. When my predecessor the Member for Calgary-Cross was in this portfolio, of course, we were in a significant economic downturn at that time. We weren't exactly sure what was going to happen with the federal government. That money, as he mentioned, that $58.09 million to support the development of affordable housing, was in order for Alberta to get its share of what the federal stimulus package would be. At the time of the budgetary estimates this time last year or around there this was in the hopper, but it was not confirmed. That's why it shows throughout the budgetary cycle as opposed to in the estimates last year. I'm not sure exactly of the date of the disbursement of the funds from the feds, but I can undertake to get that to the member subsequently.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister, for that. To be clear, though, you have the money from Ottawa?

Mr. Denis: Yes. That's correct.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. And you've spent it already, or you're well on your way to spending – sorry – to investing it, Minister?

Mr. Denis: Well, you know, interestingly enough, Mr. Chair, I see a lot of spending days, a lot of savings days from this member. Now I have an investment day, so I'm very happy with this.

My understanding, Mr. Chair, is that the money is not completely spent. It will be pushed through very shortly. The bulk of it has been spent. Again, I can get you some specific details if you'd like.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Minister. I would appreciate some specific details in terms of what we got for the money, in terms of units of new housing, units of existing social housing that have been brought up to code, brought up to a higher standard, whatever you can provide in those areas.

I guess the only other thing that I would like to know as a point of interest is: if all this was in the hopper at budget time last year – and I seem to recall that it was – where was the lag? Was it on our part, or was it on the feds' part?

Mr. Denis: I will write this member, again, as I've promised.

The budgetary process itself. When I said that it was in the hopper, I meant that we knew that it likely was going to be coming, but it wasn't fully finalized exactly what the feds were going to be doing. I hope that answers this member's question.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I'm kind of interested in whether any of this supplementary supply is going to affect what used to be referred to as the rental assistance program or the homeless and eviction prevention fund. We know that it started off at about $10 million and climbed to about $110 million. We've had people on waiting lists for rent assistance for up to three years. Does any of this money have anything to do with helping out those people who are on the edge of eviction or those trying to keep people in their homes through rental assistance?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I want to thank the member for that question as well. As the member probably knows, our funding through our programs helps almost three times the amount of people through assistance as it did only a few years ago. My understanding is that this money that has come from the feds involved the construction of new premises, which, of course, contributes to our department's goal of 11,000 new units by 2012.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'd like to just for the record point out that we received the supplementary supply estimates document yesterday, and I want to give credit to our researchers, who have worked extremely diligently over the last 24 hours in putting together and assisting us with creating questions. It's most appreciated, as is this opportunity to discuss the supplementary supply estimates.

4:00

The Deputy Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, I have a couple of questions with respect to this. We're looking at a request for approval by this House of an additional $73.6 million, and it appears to me that we're looking for $19 million provided to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation for on-site costs and temporary access associated with phase 1 of Parsons Creek in Fort McMurray. Now, my research, which again was very rushed – sorry, not my research; it was again the research of our frantically working very small staff – suggests that this $19 million was for this parsonscreekvillage.com. They actually advertise their rates, and they identify that a one-bedroom apartment, if you signed a one-year lease, would be $2,100 per month. If you were not prepared to sign a one-year lease, you'd be paying $2,200 per month. Yet the average rent, according to the CMHC, in Fort McMurray is $1,700 a month. I'm wondering why we're looking at spending an extra $19 million for a project that in my mind is a long ways away from meeting any objective definition of affordable housing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. This member is quite correct. It does take a long time to actually go and construct housing. You can't just go and construct these facilities overnight. It does take a while. But there is a plan that we're working towards, and this is exactly the type of initiative that we need. We expect that by 2012 the current inventory of developed land in that area will be somewhat depleted. And, again, we need to not just plan for what it is today in Fort McMurray. We realize it can be a very volatile situation. We need to plan also for when the next boom actually happens itself. That's what this whole project in Parsons Creek is moving on towards.

Ms Notley: Well, I appreciate that information, but I guess I'm still concerned about how it is that the government is defining affordable housing and how it is that our money is going to a project which charges rents which are well in excess of what anybody could possibly define as affordable housing. If all this time we've been talking about an inventory where the average rent being charged is $2,100 per month, then I think we have a little bit of explaining to do to the taxpayers of Alberta about why it is that we are spending so much money for something that's not affordable.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, sometimes it's got to be taken in context. If you're in Wood Buffalo, in Fort McMurray, and you're trying to rent anything, $2,100 to someone who is making $135,000 driving a big truck is pretty affordable. Yet we recognize that the only long-term solution to moving down that rent, especially for our employees of the government that work up there, is to get a stable market where the checks and balances of a regular market will work. The development at Parsons Creek along with the other ones that we're working on with the hon. minister up there are going to be bringing on several thousand lots a year so that we will have the development of many different kinds of housing initiatives up there. But, you know, to single out one in Fort McMurray and say that $2,100 is not affordable – it's expensive, but it is far better than living in your half-ton or renting a bay in a car wash or six to a garage, where some are. Affordable has to be taken in the context of Fort McMurray.

Ms Notley: I appreciate the context issue. That's, of course, why I quoted what the CMHC says is the average rent in Fort McMurray for a one-bedroom, which is $1,700 per month. My understanding is that when we're kicking all this money out the door, primarily to the private sector, to develop affordable housing, all this time there has been a consistently applied definition of what affordable is.

I've always taken some issue with how the government defines affordable because I believe they define it too high as it is because I always want to go with the 30 per cent of income deal. I'd always thought that, at the very least, you were looking at a certain percentage below market. I believe 15 per cent below market or something like that was the standard definition of affordable housing. If that's the case – I mean, market would be defined by the CMHC, I would expect; that would be an objective measure – and you've got $1,750 as market, obviously $2,100 or $2,200 a month is not 15 per cent below market. So I guess, flowing from that, I'm a little concerned about this. I'm wondering if I can be informed about how many other projects within the affordable housing line item are actually – well, I guess this would be roughly 25 per cent to 30 per cent above market. Are there others that are also in that price range?

Mr. Snelgrove: The hon. minister may want to talk about other ones, but I think the biggest problem in Fort McMurray is the fact that we don't even know how many people are living in the different apartments. Many of the areas that are zoned single family have huge problems with four trucks parked out in the street, yet if you're asked by anyone, you don't have renters because it's not allowed; you don't have a basement suite with four people in it. So just the uniqueness of Fort McMurray makes it very difficult to understand how hard it is to get ahead of that curve.

I don't disagree with any of your numbers about affordability, but I will say that until you spend some time in Fort McMurray and try and see how two people in that house could need nine vehicles, you know, it becomes a little bit of: what's affordable, and who really knows how much people are paying there? So that's different.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Further to the response to the member from the President of the Treasury Board, we recognize that Fort McMurray itself is a very unique situation in this province. Calgary and Edmonton are obviously major urban areas, but at the same point in time that's why we've gone into this situation in Parsons Creek. The ultimate goal is that through the development of Parsons Creek we'll have 1,000 new affordable units by its completion date in 2012. I would also submit to this member that it's in the best interests of the individuals being assisted here but also the taxpayers to be constructing this facility now as opposed to some subsequent date when, again, the economy is hot and construction prices are significantly higher.

Ms Notley: Well, again, I appreciate those comments about trying to get ahead of the curve, but I have some really significant concerns about taking money out of a line item when I think there has been a common consensus within this House that that line item is designed to fund affordable housing as per criteria that we all had a common understanding of, and the people of Alberta were told what that criteria was.

Now, if it's the case that you've decided that life is so crazy in Fort McMurray that we have to completely rewrite how we define affordable, if we're going to give to the private-sector companies that we're giving this money to the right or the ability to go 25 to 30 per cent above market, if we're going to ask Albertans to put hundreds of millions of dollars into affordable housing projects, then I think we should be telling them that we have made a very, very profound change in how we define affordable, particularly in the area of Fort McMurray. Of course, we know that this has a tremendous benefit to the employers in that area. I'm a little concerned that we're talking about this, and we haven't heard that the definition of affordable has apparently been quite profoundly changed without our knowing about it.

Mr. Snelgrove: When we went into Parsons Creek, we needed a vehicle to manage the money for the development, so the $19 million we're talking about is going to the affordable housing corporation of Fort McMurray. It's facilitating the water and sewer and road building into Parsons Creek. This $19 million you're seeing here is not going directly to affordable housing. It's going to develop part of that entire area of Parsons Creek. It's not to say that the Alberta Social Housing Corporation in Wood Buffalo doesn't have a lot of rental houses. They work on that. That's an ongoing process. They were there. To save us time and money, we partnered with them to develop all this new land. The money that we asked for from Treasury Board and from Transportation to flow through them to do the site servicing is the $19 million that we're talking about here.

Mr. Chase: Right. Theoretically, this $19 million can be leveraged to approximately $30 million, given the reduction in terms of labour costs and materials, which hopefully applies to Fort McMurray. Now, last year in the recession for the very first time there were actually houses for sale at considerably reduced prices in Fort McMurray, so I'm hoping things are starting to stabilize.

My question, though, is in terms of the money going to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation. Do we have stronger guarantees that this money will go towards, in quotations, affordable housing so that we don't get burnt like we did with the Red Deer experience, where the money was put forward not only for affordable but accessible housing for individuals with a variety of physical disabilities, and then those people were evicted from their so-called accessible, subsidized housing? What new measures are in place to make sure that this money is accounted for and goes to affordable housing as opposed to somebody snapping up eight of the houses and then putting it at whatever rent they chose to put it at?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, and I want to thank the member for that question. It is a good question dealing with accessibility of housing. We recognize that there are a significant amount of people who require social housing or rent support that actually do have these types of disabilities, but at the same time what I would put to this member is that it's not a one-size-fits-all approach. Some people do better with rent support, some people do better with the agreements that we have with the federal government with respect to the subsidies that we give to landlords in lieu of rent, and some people actually do better in social housing. No one approach is best. We do have these types of important controls in place. The Auditor General has reviewed our books the last couple of years. What I can do is get the member some specific information at a subsequent time as to where exactly the units have been located as we partner with the federal government with the stimulus funds.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The assurance I'm looking for is that this doesn't become a speculative market subsidized by the Alberta government, where someone with deep pockets buys a whole series of these houses at affordable housing prices and then basically turns it into a for-profit as opposed to an affordable housing section.

Mr. Denis: I'm not sure what assurance the member is looking for, but at the same time I put back to this member respectfully that, again, it's not a one-size-fits-all approach. We have some situations where we have partnered with private business. We have some situations where the government does own the facilities. Again, we have a goal of 11,000 units by 2012. That being said, I do agree that that is an issue. We always want to keep tabs on specifically where the money is going and specific controls on a go-forward basis as to who is specifically being helped and how many people are being assisted and that we're doing this in the most efficient manner possible.

Mr. Snelgrove: If I could just supplement, Mr. Chair. You are right. Too many times we've released land up in Wood Buffalo where it was picked up by a scant few, and the prices went through the roof. That's why we've taken control of the development there in this particular area that we owned as a government and said: we are going to invest in it. As we lay out the master plan for this community – and it's a big one – we're going to ensure that within it are areas that are strictly for building affordable or low-cost housing.

There will be areas of Parsons Creek that are sold, tendered out to developers who wish to do a 100- or 200-lot subdivision where the market forces will work. That's really part of creating the number of houses. In the total plan there are areas in Parsons Creek, there are areas of development up in Saline Creek, and we're looking at the development around the airport as a far more orderly development where, if there is to be a benefit from the land, it should come to the people who own it.

It's been a long process and sometimes a little frustrating, working with all the departments that had land, bringing it together, sitting down with the Wood Buffalo council, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, and talking about what they wanted to see as a community in that area, then working through the engineering, how we service it with both roads and water and sewer, long term. Within that plan there are very definite areas that are going to be developed by the Social Housing Corporation where it will remain affordable or low-cost housing, but built in around it will be areas that are sold off. I don't want you to have to stand up next year and say: you said it's all low-cost housing; there are 1,200 lots going for sale. That's all part of the plan that has been worked on jointly with the municipality of Wood Buffalo, our Municipal Affairs planning, and the other interests in Wood Buffalo.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just so that I understand this. Cities like Calgary and Edmonton, for example, are moving ahead and suggesting that any new developments should have a potential, say, 10 per cent guaranteed for affordable housing. Is the Fort McMurray situation almost the reverse, where a significantly large percentage of these houses will be of the affordable nature, and are you able to put a percentage to it? I know there will be other types of developments, and you want mixed development, but if you can provide a percentage of what is defined as affordable, that would be helpful to know.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I'm not specifically sure as to what has happened with Calgary city council. I'll leave that in their purview. But what I can tell this member is that when we refer to Parsons Creek, the parcel of land is intended to accommodate about 8,000 housing units. About 1,000 of those are stipulated to be as affordable housing, and we expect the completion in 2012.

Ms. Notley: Well, you started to answer the question that I was going to ask there. In the last set of supplementary estimates last year I believe we were asked to consider requests for about $8 million. That was the piece about transportation at that time. What I'm getting here is that right now this project is already renting stuff out, and of course they're clearly not renting stuff out at a rate that would meet any common understanding of what constitutes affordable housing. What I now hear is that we're helping to develop it and that a portion of it will ultimately be affordable housing, but none of it is yet.

I'm finding this all very hard to follow, so what I'm wondering is if we can ask the minister, because I know you've said you're happy to provide information after the fact: exactly from this affordable housing budget – and for the moment let's just limit it to Fort McMurray – can we get an accounting of how much money has gone through that affordable housing line item to these projects up there? How many units have we created since then that meet either the 30 per cent of income definition of affordable housing or the 15 per cent below market definition of affordable housing? If there has been a change such that there is now a third definition of affordable housing, can we be provided with that?

I'm really quite concerned that we have this big line item, and every time I ask questions over there, I hear all these grand proclamations about how we're providing affordable housing units for low-income Albertans, but now what I'm hearing is that what we're doing is subsidizing developments, small portions of which may in the future be affordable housing units for low-income Albertans. In the meantime developers are having a field day, having the government cofund their opportunity to sell and/or rent at well above market. I'm asking the minister if we can get information on the basis of what I just outlined before I made that last statement.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I do believe, with respect, that this member is speaking well outside the purview of supplementary estimates. However, I will get her some of the information that she requests. I also would respectfully dispute any notion that the developers are having a field day under our programs. There are many good success stories happening here. At the same point in time we have to realize that it's the taxpayers money that's funding this operation. It's a balance, actually, that we need to make between being compassionate to the taxpayers and compassionate to those in need. We will get you that information.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I don't want to belabour the point, but, you know, whether it's a mansion or whether it's a shack, you've got to have a road to it, and you've got to have a sewer. A significant amount of this $19 million is going to just laying out the development is my understanding.

I do appreciate the fact that you mentioned that basically 1 out of every 8 houses, or 1,000 out of 8,000, are affordable. That reduces the affordability grant, in my mind, down to about $2 million going specifically to houses that are affordable in this district, keeping in mind that you've got to lay out the land and put in the sewers and roads and so on. Correct me if that 1 to 8 ratio isn't also reflected in how much money is actually going to affordability in Fort McMurray in this development.

Mr. Denis: The member has raised a couple of issues here. Of course, you require good infrastructure – roads, sewers, what have you – and the funding being requested will obviously support the cost of clearing, storm and water management, roads, underground services, anything required to reasonably move forward with the development.

To answer the member's other question, my understanding is that as this is constructed, this will be flipped back, actually perhaps even at a net profit to the taxpayer. What will end up happening is that of the 8,000 units, again, 7,000 are private individuals. Then you'll have roughly a thousand units scattered throughout there, so about 12 and a half per cent, not dissimilar to the figure, that I trust this member is correct about, about future developments in the city of Calgary.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much. I'd just like to ask the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development a few questions. Good afternoon. We're just turning to some estimates for SRD. I have a few questions. The supplementary amount you're asking for is approximately $150 million and some change. It looks like $130 million of this is for emergency spending for firefighting costs as a result of high wildfire hazard levels and high fire activity in some parts of Alberta, and $25 million is for emergency spending for continued ground survey and control operations to fight the mountain pine beetle.

It appears that year over year the SRD department relies on emergency funding for fires and the pine beetle although these have almost become regular to us. You know, we understand that there are going to be many forest fires, and we understand, I think, that we're going to be battling the pine beetle for some time. Nevertheless, we tend to budget low on this. For instance, last year I think we asked for $117 million to battle the forest fires and then another $15 million for the pine beetle. Can the minister explain why the budget doesn't include a more accurate reflection of these costs when you're starting out the process?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I certainly can. The situation, of course, that we're faced with in both of these issues – but I'll separate them and, I think, deal, first of all, with wildfire. We have a budget line that deals with preparation for wildfire. Depending on the year and on our financial circumstance, of course, it runs somewhere from $90 million to $100 million or $110 million a year. That is a budget line, and that is spent on wildfire preparedness. What happens with that is that we'll take that money, and we'll go out, and we train firefighters on a regular basis, an annual basis. We'll set up the camps in different locations, set up the fire bases, get contracts with aerial firefighters, water bombers, the bird dog people, and all of that sort of thing, and put that thing together in preparation for the fire season. Those dollars we can get fairly close to what we're going to spend. As a matter of fact, we budget it, so obviously we stay inside the budget relative to those numbers.

However, we have tried in the past a number of different approaches to dealing with this wildfire situation. We've done things like try to insure part of the risk. That didn't turn out necessarily good for us, but we have tried those kinds of things. The issue really is that there is no way for us to actually budget a number. We've been all the way from – well, I can't remember a low, but, you know, anywhere up to $300 million plus to fight wildfires. We actually don't want to put that kind of money, firm numbers, into the budget and then end up not using them because depending on the weather, really, and other perhaps industry-related activities and so on, you just really don't know. So we do the best we can to be prepared for wildfire and then go into emergency funding for the amount of money that is an uncertainty. I think that it's a responsible way to do it. As I say, we've tried other methods and found that this was the best way to do it.

Another thing, I think, that we need to understand about the situation there is that when you get into the middle of this thing, we don't actually know how many outside sources we need to call on at any given point in time during the fire season. So we'll have a requirement to hire Cat contractors, transportation people, you know, all kinds of different sorts of resources that we need to draw on. Then we have reciprocal agreements, also, with other provinces and internationally relative to the movement of firefighters in and out of Alberta if that's necessary, and of course there's always some cost allocated to that. So it's a very difficult thing to actually put a number in the budget.

Mountain pine beetle, by the way, is a very similar circumstance because you will very well recall what happened to us last summer. We had a circumstance where we really felt, from two or three years' previous worth of pretty good work, some solid money put on the ground to combat the spread of mountain pine beetle. We had a circumstance that we were enjoying, we thought, relatively good success, so some of the dollars that we'd sort of looked at putting into the mountain pine beetle we thought maybe not necessary.

All of a sudden – I believe it was in July last summer – there was a huge inflight from B.C. again. A really hot summer period and a high wind came up, and there was literally just a hundreds and hundreds of thousands influx again. It hit certain areas there, particularly north of Grande Prairie and so on. We can't accommodate that in the budget. What we have to do is now we're going out. We've had a very active season now combatting mountain pine beetle, but that money isn't in the budget, so we have to go back to supplementary and ask for that out of emergency funds.

Very difficult to try to budget. You don't know, one, the weather and that circumstance and, two, how successful you're going to be in the winter season when you try to eradicate and then what's going to happen the following summer. That's the reason for the numbers. We have a base number for both of those things, but we need to go for supplementaries because it's difficult to control the costs.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. I hear the minister, and I appreciate that you do have those two models where you prepare for the base funding, and you do that, you say, with $93 million to $100 million, whatever that might be, that you know you have a controlled cost on, and then you wait for a certain time.

I think for the three years, at least, that I've done this estimate, you guys have always asked for at least $100 million maybe. You guys have now balanced this out and explained it to me so that what you're doing seems reasonable, I guess, but there might be a need to maybe say: "All right. We're for sure going to have $50 million in those expenses. We've averaged that at least for the last four years." But I understand what you're doing now, and hopefully now – this is the third time you've explained it to me – maybe by next year I won't have to ask again why the heck that line item is here because I at least now know that there are two separate processes as to what's going on. I thought I knew that last year when I asked the question, though, and needed it repeated to me again. Thank you for being so patient with me and doing that again here today.

Anyway, on the pine beetle expenditure, were there some different techniques? Are they the standard techniques you're using, or is there more of a breakdown? I know some people have advocated for eradicating the pine beetle in different ways. What was, basically, this $25 million for? Could you break that down?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, we use a number of different techniques, and of course like all kinds of technology, innovation there are always things that come forward. One of the things that had been tried earlier, I think, and some of the suggestions, of course, that people have, particularly when you're dealing with this in areas where it's more urbanized and you have pine beetles spreading into what we would call, I guess, towns, cities, villages, and that sort of thing, where pine trees have either been planted or are there naturally and we get beetle attacks – people would say: well, you know, there's got to be a way; just spray these things.

But the problem is that if you try to do any kind of eradication with spraying, number one, it's very difficult to do it. You can't really catch them, necessarily, externally in order for anything like that to work. The second part of that, of course, is that you get all the good stuff with the bad stuff when you use these types of eradication methods. So we don't do that. That has been tried, you know, in spot areas, mainly in localized kind of communities and that kind of thing, but I don't believe that's used at all anymore. I believe it had been tried.

We use some capture techniques where you'll get a tree that's infected, and you actually – now, I might have to be corrected on the pronunciation, pheromones. We bait them, the trees. Trees that are already under attack: you put this bait around those trees, and it draws the beetle to a certain group of trees. You'll get a whole influx of beetles into a group of trees, and then the thing there is kind of a slash and burn, right? They'll go into that area, cut those trees, buck them up, and burn them. That's really one of the most effective ways to get small groups of beetles contained.

The other thing that has been quite successful for us is to plan a forestry harvest program. You know, we've had harvest programs that take place. They come forward with these programs, bring them to the department. You take a look at the harvest programs, and they're – I don't know – two or three years in advance, maybe more than that. I believe that there's some period of time in advance that the harvest programs are delivered to the department. With the situation with beetles we ask them to in some circumstances take their harvest programs and consider that they would move harvesting into areas that have been highly infested by beetles. So you actually harvest that wood at a period of time when the beetles are dormant, move it out, and try to suppress them that way.

Another way, of course – and this has been successful in some cases, but it's a technique that you're a bit skeptical about doing on a large scale – is just to go into areas and kind of cut into where the infestation is and actually just take the trees down and burn them so that you have a swath around these areas. There are a number of different ways like that that we do it.

Recently there have been a couple of operators – and I don't know how widespread it is – that have kind of devised some specialized equipment to go in and do single-tree harvesting, where they can get into an area and then take out trees that are infested and dispose of those trees, not on such a broad-based kind of an effort but on a more targeted effort with specialized equipment. Those are probably the primary sources of expenditure for those dollars.

Mr. Hehr: This is just more of interest. I think the word was pheromones. How much are you using those pheromone techniques? The reason why I ask is because I think one of my friends about 10 years into graduate study was actually doing some research on pheromones. You're now just using the pheromone spray, and it attracts the bugs. Is that proving successful? Are you guys doing that quite widespread?

Mr. Knight: It's been in place, I understand, for some period of time, two or three decades probably. I have to say that the experience that we've had with it relative to containing these kind of large in-flights of beetles: it works in certain circumstances, but it's not really something that is a magic bullet.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I fully understand that you have to set money aside for fighting fires. We have a tremendous amount of forestry in this province, and protecting it in a variety of ways is absolutely essential. I have no problem with setting aside the money and paying the bill after the fact, that kind of thing.

It pleases me to hear you explain the preferred methods of dealing with the pine beetle. I'm pleased to hear of sort of a return to the old style of logging the one tree at a time kind of thing because the damage that happens when forests are clear-cut only to be replaced by a monoculture reforestation – we don't gain anything from taking out all the trees and then replanting the same species. Lodgepole pine was my prime experience in Cataract Creek.

I am wondering if any of the money that has been set aside for the pine beetle program – for example, you talked about the ability to preplan. Have you targeted based on infestations specific areas in this province for selective logging, which takes place in the winter, and then it's usually transported out in the early spring when the roads are more passable, that kind of thing? At least that was my experience in Cataract. They'd cut in the winter, transport in the spring once the gravel roads hardened and so on. If it seems that I'm incorrect, could you please correct how the method works?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure that I quite heard all of the question, but I'll do the best I can with it. If you're asking about when we take these dollars and go out and take a look at the planning and the process that we're going to use to try to make sure that the dollars are put to their best use relative to suppressing mountain pine beetle, there are a few things that we do. One of them is active right now. We've been doing this on an ongoing basis for a number of years; that is, we go out and we monitor all of the areas where there has been a previous beetle attack and into areas where the signs are, you know, relatively easy to spot. You can see where the in-flights have landed. In a short period of time you can actually gauge where they're moving to, so we go out and monitor.

The forest companies and SRD will use their resources, and in some circumstances we hire individuals that are specialized in doing that kind of thing. We go out and monitor the infestation and the infestation levels. We do that across the province and then lay out a plan, and we're in the throes of doing that now. About the end of March, that sort of thing, we'll have the monitoring done – and that's part and parcel of these dollars that we've got in the front end of this thing – and then put in place a program to go out and mitigate the beetle problem.

Now, there are a couple of different organizations that have kind of formed around this. There's one in the Grande Prairie region. That includes the county and the operators in the area, people from SRD, and others. The municipalities, actually, have been instrumental in helping us with this control effort. Municipalities in certain circumstances are granted some of these dollars out of the program, and they, you know, help us manage in municipal areas, not necessarily in the green areas but in municipal areas to help us manage the beetle problem there.

There are two or three different ways that we do this, but there is a step where we monitor and then sit down and organize a plan of attack if I'm getting at the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the explanation. National Parks Canada has been very successful, for example, with controlled burns in the Banff area. They've managed under most cases to keep control of the so-called controlled burns. I know that fighting the pine beetle in different areas involves different strategies, but are you able to put an overall provincial sort of percentage to what percentage of pine beetle is fought primarily through pheromones? What percentage is fought through selective logging versus clear-cutting? Are you able to sort of look at that large provincial picture?

If I'm putting you on the spot, that's not the intention. I'd love to receive that information as to our selective approaches to the pine beetles. If the information isn't here today – I realize you're a new minister in this area – I'm looking forward to receiving it later.

Mr. Knight: I can certainly find out for you, but to my knowledge we wouldn't necessarily break down the percentage of trees that have been infected and look at the different methods in a percentage of, you know, mitigation of the problem. I would have to suggest to you that things like removal and incineration: probably the largest majority of control is done either in that method or in the method as I described about harvesting. Those two things probably take up a great majority of the mitigation. If you need percentages, I could try to find them, but I don't think that we actually keep track of any percentages that I'm aware of.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What would be helpful, you know, if you can't put a dollar figure to it, is if you could put a geographic, almost like a battle zone – in this area we've primarily used this method; in this area because of proximity to municipal districts we've tended to go – that would be helpful to get a sense of the overall picture.

This may not fit into this particular supplemental supply estimates, but can you comment on the ability to retain sustainable resource staff – fisheries, forestry – whether you're finding yourself having to go more towards seasonal or if you're able to keep year-round, especially, you know, in terms of identifying pine beetles and things like this? Is your staff fairly secure and intact?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Chairman, you know, relative to the situation with SRD's budget, I mean, we will have a good opportunity to fully discuss those situations when we discuss the upcoming budget numbers. I could make a comment to the member opposite that under the circumstances that we find ourselves in today, all departments to some degree are very prudent with our resources, and of course we think that we'll gain quite a bit of efficiency in some of the things that we're doing with officers on the ground and generally speaking with the department's personnel. So we'll be able to continue to maintain, you know, the issues that we all face here, whether it's in SRD or Environment or the other departments that have people on the ground, and that is the safety of Albertans and the idea that we will continue to develop any of these resources in a sustainable manner and in an environmentally conscious manner. We believe that in the budget numbers that we have put forward, we'll be able to continue to do that.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for that assurance. In the three summers I spent in southeast Kananaskis I received tremendous support from SRD, from conservation officers. I just wanted to say that keeping those people in place, allowing the experienced ones to have a career in SRD and allowing the young upcoming through seasonal employment, at least, is a terrific investment in Alberta protection.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions?
We'll move on, then.

Municipal Affairs

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak to the supplementary supply estimates for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. We are looking here at a supplementary appropriation of just a little over $15 million, broken down thusly: $500,000 for assisting with the response to the H1N1 pandemic and $19,550,000 for disaster recovery and municipal wildfire assistance programs. Interestingly enough, this supplementary amount of $15,341,000 is net of $4,709,000 from lower than budgeted spending in other programs.

I'd like to start off by asking the Minister of Municipal Affairs why there was nearly $5 million in unspent funds and, in particular, whether he knows which local government services received less funds than were budgeted for or ended up not needing the funds or whatever the case may be. In fact, I think that's an interesting question right there: was it that the funds weren't needed, or was it that the funds weren't spent by his ministry? If it was the latter, why weren't they spent?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First, I want to indicate and re-emphasize that the funding that we're requesting will be used to help offset the costs that were incurred by a number of unexpected events that unfolded this year. As the member indicated, the majority of the request is for disaster recovery and municipal wildfire assistance programs. Under the municipal wildfire assistance program there is a total of $8.85 million. That was for two incidents in Lamont county, and Sturgeon county, Strathcona county, and the county of Thorhild had wildfires.

Then the other ones were basically disaster recovery programs for a total of $6.6 million. There was an incident in south-central Alberta, and that was a flooding, $1.8 million. In Edmonton here and the surrounding area: a windstorm; we covered some of the costs, up to 4 and a half million dollars. Then in central Alberta: another windstorm, $300,000.

Those costs, then, amounted to, as the member indicated, $19.6 million. There were five municipal wildfire assistance programs and three disaster recovery programs and, as the member indicated, another half million dollars for the costs incurred responding to the H1N1 pandemic.

Now, we were able to identify about $4.7 million in savings from our value review. We went through and did a value review within the ministry, and we were able to look at $3.47 million that was there and lapses in programs of about $731,000. Those were in terms of grants in place of taxes. The request wasn't quite as high as what we'd anticipated, so we were able to find about $730,000 under that particular one. It's a combination of a couple things where we found the money. Part of it is the ministry's value review savings.

Mr. Taylor: So we're only about $94 million short from being able to fund the airport tunnel. I'm just kidding about that.

A couple more questions for the minister. The $500,000 for assisting with the H1N1 pandemic: will that be reimbursed by the federal government? Does it fall under the category of disaster recovery? If not, why not?

Mr. Goudreau: There is a formula that's usually used and normally followed when we make a request to the federal government. That request generally triggers, I believe, after $1 per capita per event. So we need to spend about $3 million plus per event before we can trigger some federal dollars coming in. This year most of the individual numbers were below that – $1.7 million, $3.3 million, $3.1 million, $1.8 million – so we're not able to access federal dollars for the majority of them. They were all below that level to be able to trigger dollars. That's including the H1N1, so I don't expect that we're going to get any recovery at that particular level where we are committing the half million dollars.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you to the minister for that. That also gives me a sense of how much of the $19.5 million for disaster recovery and municipal wildfire would be recoverable from the federal government. It sounds like not much, if any, this year. Too bad we can't put in a block request for that, but unfortunately we can't.

This is my last question on Municipal Affairs. Could the minister explain to me what the $500,000 for assisting with the H1N1 pandemic is specifically for? Mr. Chairman, I should know this. I'm sorry; I don't. I just want to find out for sure because this $500,000 is separate, of course, from considerable supplementary expenditures on H1N1 under the ministry of health's budget.

Mr. Goudreau: The $500,000 of those costs was incurred by the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. We are doing a fair amount of co-ordination across the province to make sure that some of the services are there. So when the decision was made to open up the stadiums, for instance, our agency was involved in getting those kinds of things to happen.

Mr. Taylor: So just as a supplementary to that, just a clarification. None of that would be specifically for H1N1 shots for municipal emergency workers, police, fire, EMS, that sort of thing, then. That would be under the health budget.

Mr. Goudreau: It was more of a co-ordination effort amongst all of the members.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think Moses could relate well to Alberta. If it's not a summer of floods, then it's potentially a summer of fires, and if somehow we miss both of those, we can potentially worry about grasshoppers as opposed to locusts. In terms of being proactive and reducing the costs of, say, fires or floods, in the case of floods has the Municipal Affairs department required cities and towns to stop building on flood plains?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Chairman, I know that that particular issue has come up over and over again over the last many, many years. Certainly, there's an encouragement there. We are constantly working with our municipalities. Naturally, that seems to be the most attractive land to build on. It tends to be the land that has the best views and, you know, the most ideal places. So there's a tremendous amount of pressure from people who want to build and for municipalities to develop those particular properties and, on the same side, to look at the risk factors involved, so where we're saying that the risks are 1 in 100 years, then there are probably more options for them to build than if there are risks that might be a 1 in 20 years or 1 in 10 years flood activity.

Over the years there are some areas – I'm very familiar with Watino, for instance, a community up in my constituency, where it typically flooded probably every 25, 30 years. Today there's not a single building there, nor do we allow any type of development.

We are working with our municipalities. We're encouraging them not only on floods but on fire and fire mitigation, working with SRD staff – and some of the new funding we received from the federal government in terms of the community development trust dollars – to fireproof communities, to make sure that communities can respond to fires, that we minimize the impact of threats of fires. So in both instances we're trying to take a preventative approach, an approach to try to minimize that.

Are we successful in all cases? No. We still have some municipalities that have some issues. Some municipalities over the years have actually developed properties, that are for sale and that people are still building on, that are subject to potential floods, and we are working with them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I know, for example, that the Highwood River had two such incidents one week after the other. They were supposedly 100-year events. But, unfortunately, in the High River area they're still building below the flood plain. As a province I'm wondering if we should be paying out the insurance costs for people who knowingly purchase in an area that is below the flood plain.

The other circumstance – and I don't know whether you can comment on this or not, and I don't know whether any of the funding goes towards this – is in terms of wildfire assistance programs as it relates to municipalities. There is always a balance between not taking up more agricultural land, for example, having an attractive forest or the beauty of nature surrounding towns and cities. Is the province working with the municipalities to sort of fireproof the surrounding areas?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Chairman, certainly, the discussion around High River was a number of years ago. We're requesting at this time a supplementary estimate for a total of $15.34 million. The High River incidents at that particular time – and I believe it was the same time that the Bow overran its banks as well, and we lost some property around Kananaskis. It was a huge disaster year for the province of Alberta. I believe that year we probably spent about $120 million towards offsetting some of the losses and the costs. That's when I think the High River incidents happened a couple times, back to back. We're working with the municipalities and certainly trying to devise ways to flood-proof their communities.

As I indicated, on wildfires we're doing the same thing. Those communities that are subject and are closer to the forest areas where there is predominantly a high concentration of wood fibre around their community that might be subject to flash burns, or quick burns, where there are really no formal firebreaks, we're working with those communities to try to minimize the impact of potential fires and the threats of fires to their communities. It's a work in progress. Certainly, the community development trust fund that was transferred from the federal government to the province and spread amongst a number of ministries: a good part of those dollars are used exactly for fireproofing communities.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the cross-ministry co-operation. For example, SRD works with parks in terms of setting out fire bans and so on. Within the Municipal Affairs department is there a co-ordination such as putting areas out of bounds, say, for quads during a high fire type circumstance? Do you have that ability within Municipal Affairs to say to SRD or to say to parks and recreation, you know, that there's danger potential, so we've got to keep people out of this area except for just walk-in, non fire type of circumstances?

Mr. Goudreau: My responsibility, Mr. Chairman, probably ends where the municipality ends. Once we get into the green zones or into the public lands, then it becomes an SRD decision, or if it gets into a parks area, then it becomes the responsibility of the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. They would have that authority to call that. Typically the local municipality knows best when they're under threat or potential threat. They can impose fire bans.

They can impose different bans, including transportation bans or weight bans and those kinds of things, on their roads if they feel that there's potential damage to their communities. So initially municipalities will.

If there tends to be a growing pressure from a number of municipalities or threat that might occur to municipalities, then our Emergency Management Agency will get in touch with the municipalities. Often it's the other way around, where municipalities are deemed to have the responsibility over their own jurisdiction. If they feel they need help, then we strongly encourage them to call us before things happen or when issues are small rather than waiting till the issues just flare up and it's spread all over the place. It's two-way communication that we're establishing. We encourage municipalities to act sooner rather than later.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If there aren't any more questions with regard to Municipal Affairs, I would like to move on to Tourism, Parks and Recreation. I just wanted to make sure. Thank you.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation

Mr. Chase: The breakdown of expenditures, the supplementary amount of $8,590,000, which is net of $902,000 from lower than budgeted spending in other programs, is requested to provide $8,992,000 to complete 13 nominal sum disposals of parkland to municipalities to fulfill prior agreements. I'm not sure who's handling this portfolio. I am a little bit concerned that we're creating a larger sort of footprint and losing potential parkland in the process, and we're spending $9 million to further reduce parkland. If someone could set me straight on that, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm happy to. The bulk of the $9 million comes out of Sylvan Lake and the town of Sylvan Lake, and that is about $7.69 million of the total. It's been a very long negotiated agreement with the town. It's always been a bit awkward because the park separated the business from the lake. Of the rest of them, Willow Creek down in the MD of Willow Creek was $1.4 million. Most of the rest are quite small: Horseshoe Canyon, Hanmore Lake, Crane Lake West in Bonnyville, Sun Haven, the summer village of Sunbreaker Cove, Crane Lake East in Bonnyville, Groat Creek, Fork Lake, Holmes Crossing. I can give the hon. member some because I'm pretty familiar with some of the stuff up in our area.

A lot of these areas are very expensive for us to run and to look after or to supervise. In these cases, all of them, we have a very willing participant, that's a municipality. These aren't going to private developers. They're going to counties, MDs, towns who want to run that park, basically, to better suit the needs of the people that live around there. I know they've been through quite an extensive consultation. It simply is, really, about making sure that we can focus the provincial level resources on areas that actually make a difference. I think we've got a pretty good record in establishing and preserving parks in our parks system, but when you're nipping away at a whole bunch of little ones, where there are people who are ready and more able to run them, those are the ones. I'll have a copy of this made and sent over to the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I was sort of looking at the larger picture. If the land continues to be park and it's operated by the municipality as opposed to the province, then I don't have a problem with that. Where I have a problem is with access for the public being further restricted. My concern – and I've brought this up in the House – is that with just barely 4 per cent of Alberta's land set aside for provincial parks and recreation areas, any loss of that already small amount is a concern for me.

Another expenditure, $500,000 for equipment and displays at the Canmore visitor information centre to complete the renovations of that facility. I don't begrudge one single cent of the millions of dollars – this probably brings it up fairly close to about 40 and a half million dollars – that have been spent over the last five years on the Canmore Nordic Centre primarily for water and waste treatment facilities. It's money well spent. It's a terrific facility. It's a jewel in our parks system. However – and I'm not suggesting it's an either/or – it concerns me when I look down the list and see that only $2,731,000 has been set aside for trail maintenance, repair, and upgrading of numerous provincial parks to expand the number of campgrounds. It really concerns me that we're spending a great amount of money to attract and promote Alberta from a tourist point of view, but we're not spending the money to maintain the facilities that we currently have.

I'll not go on, but I've experienced it as a park operator in the Kananaskis in 2002, '03, and '04, where less than $2 of a $17 registration fee were ploughed back into the maintenance of the park. It concerns me that we've spent almost as much money in putting more parks online for reservation than we have for actually maintaining the parks. To me, at some point if we're going to encourage people to come and have a wonderful wilderness experience in our Alberta, then we're going to have to start repairing. Just as we've got a multimillion-dollar repair bill for schools, we've got a multimillion-dollar repair bill for parks. The answer is not to reduce the number of parks but to repair those that are existing.

I realize that's a rather large comment, but I would welcome the proportional explanation for why we're spending almost the same amount of money on making fewer spots available on a first-come, first-served basis and then, once they get there, the value for it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, now, the $2.73 million. The reason it's here is because in the fall the federal government came to us and said: "We've got some money we'd like to put into parks. What have you got?" That's normally the only easy part of dealing with the federal government and trying to get money from them. As well as you, I don't want to send any of the money back to Ottawa because I, too, believe that one of the treasures we have is our parks, but we're spending, you know, $37 million on park operations. I don't want to get into what the trails are, but it's part of it. The $2.7 million really was this department facilitating from the western economic diversification community adjustment fund $2.7 million into Alberta parks, which we happily accepted, but it does show up here as kind of an afterthought.

Your comments about Canmore Creek. The demand for the Canmore Nordic Centre is literally multiplying in front of us. It truly is and will remain a very, very popular both local and resort destination. I think your comments are correct: reinvesting, investing in that are well-spent dollars.

I think that was all that we had.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the explanation. I hadn't realized, even though this is my fifth year, how much of the supplementary supply is actually funneled through federal funding. It's a revelation for me.

Ms Blakeman: That's not usual. That's just this year.

Mr. Chase: I'm corrected that this is a special circumstance.

I agree with the hon. President of the Treasury Board that for any federal funding that we can get, we want to say thank you, thank you, thank you.

I remain concerned about the amount of money we've spent in terms of promoting the province. We're sort of promoting what I see as a deteriorating circumstance in the majority of off-highway parks, and I don't know if, other than this federal transfer, we shouldn't actually be investing more in the parks system itself as opposed to the reservation system. If you're able to comment on those two figures, I would appreciate it. My understanding is that for every dollar we invest, there is a potential of a $10 return, and I want that sort of park wilderness experience to be really valued.

Mr. Snelgrove: I have to be a little careful here because I do have a park myself. I know how you can sell camping experiences, and I think, quite honestly, private industry can do that better if it's a camping experience you want. I think we need to understand that I might not be able to sell a wilderness experience on your mountain. I think parks are kind of going through their part and saying: what we do as government we should do well, but building a camping stall might not be it. Providing the opportunity for – and I think there has been some terrific work done by the Alberta hotel and lodging people and the campground operators to say: "You know, we're all in this together. Getting someone to Alberta is the goal. Where they go in Alberta, that's the key."

It could just be a personal observation, but I don't think we need to be the ones that build the campsites, that build the trails or maintain them. We sure need to understand what our customer wants, and we've got to connect the dots with a lot of private operators or in some cases our other departments. Give them what they want within the realm of maintaining and preserving ecosystems and some of our eastern slopes yet provide that experience that they will go somewhere else for. There is a lot of Alberta. You're correct that there's not a lot of it that's provincial parks, but they are still very good.

I think people are more aware of the environment that we camp in. I see a difference in the recycling that's happening in our campgrounds and the way they're more concerned about that. I mean, they all used to have a fire this high and sit back 20 feet. We are learning as a people that, you know, we kind of have to live with nature. It's the best gift we've been given. I think the evolution of camping will go where government can do what it needs to do. We can get a ton of private investment from private operators who can sell that experience, but I believe it's connecting us to the outside world that's their big key.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. That was very interesting. Can we just pursue that a little bit because I think the hesitation that I hear from people about private operators of campgrounds – and I agree with you. I think they can offer and do offer a great experience a number of times. I know there's one spot that I always stop in just the other side of Valemount because it's the right place, and they do a nice job. It's a private campground. I'm very happy to go there. I think the hesitation people have is that when you have a private operator, will we end up at the point where a private operator is operating campsites that are in protected areas? The concern always is that you end up with corners being cut or not the same level of vigilance.

Let's face it. Government has a job, part of which is around protection, and those employees are going to be more likely to kind of honour the boundaries of the wilderness areas they're in. You may not get that same vigilance with a private operator, who has a profit motive. That's why they're in business. Fine. I've got nothing against that, but there is a different focus on why they are doing something. I think people's hesitation is: are we going to be turning over our public campgrounds to private, and what will be the result of that? Will there still be the same vigilance around protecting it in context?

Mr. Snelgrove: Happy to engage because this is a really, really important discussion. I don't think that 20 years ago you had people willing to pay for an ecological experience, a few but not very darn many. Most people hooked up the tent trailer and went and camped. The world now has really changed, and I agree that the fit of privatizing our campgrounds hasn't gone as well as I certainly would have liked. You take a circumstance that might work for government. It doesn't necessarily work in the private. We tied their hands in many ways about providing camping experiences that people wanted.

I agree that if we don't very carefully manage our resources when we talk about access to sensitive areas – I think that the other thing that private industry has also gotten aware of is that they can't do the stuff that they used to do and get away with it. We have smarter people in government, I think, and in the business that know it's about pristine wilderness. I can tell the hon. member – I don't know if she's ever had the good fortune to go into some of the remote areas, whether it's a fishing camp or something – that the operators of these facilities that I have had the good fortune to know are absolutely the fussiest people I've ever met. There is no more of this throw your plate in the fire or your plastic fork or a beer can in the creek. They are far more aware.

But I agree with you. When we're going to get into the area of providing the experience that is truly rare, we'll either need to be very hands on, or we'll need to have very, very clear guidelines about what is acceptable and what is not acceptable, and there really shouldn't be a whole bunch of grey in the middle. So as we go forward and develop that in Alberta, we need to watch, but there is a way. If you're going to have access, under managed conditions I believe that you can have that partnership with private operators that, I think, exists there now in many cases.

Ms Blakeman: The other piece of this, then, is that one of the problems we had when we handed over sites before was that the infrastructure wasn't in great shape. I'm thinking of some of the campsites that I've been into, one of which is fairly close to where I have a recreational property. It's actually next door. For what I was used to, for the province of Alberta, it was in crappy shape. You know, the outhouse wasn't in good repair; the door was hanging, blah, blah, blah. Sorry. A little pun there. And it didn't get any better under the management. That was actually managed by a local fish and game association, right? But that's when you were trying to get other people to manage it.

So I'm wondering. If you're looking at shifting this, is there a long-term plan to invest in the infrastructure so that it gets handed over at a certain standard and that that standard is to be kept up? Or is it just, "As is, where is, we're handing it over now for you to manage; you take it as it is, and you improve it"? What are you looking at? Are we going to bring it up to a standard and expect it to be kept, or are we going to hand it over and say, "You bring it up to speed or keep it, you know, whatever, let it go"?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. I'll tell you, and this comes from experience because I did take one of the parks to run. I've been and I've done everything, and profit has never really been a big deal. One of the things we did is that we tried to get private business to come in, and then we wouldn't let them do what they would do. Everybody in the business will tell you that the washroom facilities in parks are absolutely the most important thing that you can do, yet you cannot go in and rebuild a washroom on the money you're generating from a five-year contract in a park of 80 sites. I can tell you that that won't work.

We need as a government to be able to go to private operators and say, "Okay; if you're going to make that investment, you have to be able to get a return" because nobody in their right mind, me included, would do it. I was fortunate to have a darn good ranger and some pretty good representatives, and we were able to make a deal. I said: okay; I'll invest. I put some big dollars in, but I had to have time to recover them. So there was no incentive for many people to improve it because they've still got to get a return.

Maybe it was the five-year or the two-year contract some wanted to have. You just can't make long-term business decisions on a two-year opportunity. You could invest and lose your equity to a low bidder. In many ways giving our parks to a low bidder probably isn't going to get the experience that we want from tourism. So it's that fine balance between, you know, an open and transparent business deal yet bringing in someone who's going to sell the experience that we want people to have when they come to Alberta and get a return from the investment that they're willing to make.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. So just to clarify, what I'm hearing, then, is that what we're likely to get is a contract that would set out what infrastructure was expected to be maintained or invested in by the private contractor. But in return for that, there's a longer period that the contract runs for in order to allow them to recoup their investment and make a profit out of it.

We wouldn't necessarily be investing up front the money to say: okay, it's in, you know, a class A shape, and we expect you to keep it in class A shape. We're not going to do the investment up front; we're going to put it in as part of the contract that they keep it up. Then – and this is going to be a familiar refrain coming from me – where's the monitoring and compliance enforcement? If you're going to run those contracts – and one of the things you guys are not good about is monitoring those contracts to make sure that what you think was going to happen happened and to be able to catch it before it's too far gone.

Go ahead.

Mr. Snelgrove: I think I missed probably the most important part of what you said before and the response. The fact is that when we went to privatizing, most of them were in the crappy shape you talked about. That really puts people at a huge disadvantage.

I really can't speak for how the minister wants to approach getting the washrooms and the rest of the parks into a shape that you would be able to have a contract that you could maintain. If the darn thing is falling apart when you get it – and normal contracts say that you will, given normal wear and tear, return it in as good as or better shape than you get it. But if you got it and it's falling apart and you give it back and it's falling apart, what have you accomplished? There does need to be that discussion about the starting, the way we're going to go to it, and then you can monitor.

But I agree. I think we spent a great deal of money, and we were known – once again, I can talk about myself – for years as having some of the best provincial parks. We've still got the parks, but we haven't managed them as well as we could have. I can accept that because I've seen them myself. It doesn't mean we can't be better. I think that with the partnership that they've developed with industry right now so that customer service becomes one of the biggest things they talk about – I'm talking the camping experience, and I know that other line up over here with the environmental experience – they're on the right track. I really do. I'm still involved with it but very remotely with the campground association. They've needed to pick up their boots, so I accept your nice criticism.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the fact that you've run a campground because that's the experience I had for three years. I'm not suggesting that private operators can't do a good job. I worked for a fellow; his name is Ian Nicholson. He is in charge of High Country Camping. That's the outfit I worked for. He's a former conservation officer, so he really gets what a quality camping experience entails.

The problem exists in terms of not only the maintenance but the support for the private operator. For example, my wife and I were so fastidious that we cleaned the firepits out down to the gravel. You would not find a cigarette butt anywhere within that area. But things that we couldn't control, for example, were the fencing. The fencing had gone down; the Texas gates were filled in on the roads. So what happened was that when the cattle were dropped off for free range, I became a herdsman. I did an awful lot of shovelling and raking, that kind of thing, because there wasn't that support in terms of the overall maintenance. That's a frustrating part.

Also, if I hadn't built the equivalent of sort of an information centre – my wife and I would gather, courtesy of Tourism, Parks and Recreation and SRD, information booklets. With material that I managed to confiscate from behind the local park shed, I was able to build an information centre and build with the wood that existed tables and stools and, you know, make it attractive for people to come. My wife and I would provide what information we could with regard to fishing regulations, with regard to the beautiful hikes to the Cataract falls, and so on.

But we found over the years that we were seeing reduced support from the province in terms of reduced conservation officers. In 2002, when we had the G-8, we had hot and cold running seasonals. We'd see them every day, and they could help out. But as we got through to 2004 and unless things have changed, if they've continued to decline, the areas that the conservation officers were required to supervise made it impossible for them to come in and talk to people about coolers on their picnic tables and the danger that, you know, if a bear comes into the camp, he's a dead bear if he goes near a cooler.

What I'm suggesting – and maybe it can't be covered under supplementary supply – is the need for co-ordination and support. If privatization is one of the ways that the province is going to move, then they still have to support the private operators to the same extent they do the provincial operators. That's my appeal.

In terms of maintaining the park – and you've experienced this first-hand – you can only put so many coats of paint on the wall of an outhouse that is starting to rot. If you're going to privatize it, the province has to make sure that there's funding available and directed to the operators and that they have sufficient funding to be able to hire the people to provide the maintenance. Some of the stuff I did wasn't pretty, but it was substantial.

Mr. Snelgrove: I can't believe I've talked about parks for this long and not mentioned the lovely Spring Beach resort on Muriel Lake. I just can't believe that. Well managed, well run, clean, neat campgrounds for the entire family. Did I mention that? Spring Beach resort on beautiful Muriel Lake, just south of Bonnyville. Just in case no one caught that.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other questions, then?

Ms Blakeman: I'm just wondering if anybody is speaking for the Culture and Community Spirit budget.

The Deputy Chair: We have not spoken on Transportation or Culture and Community Spirit, and that doesn't preclude us going back to any of the others either. It's still open. We've got a half an hour.

Ms Blakeman: All right. Well, if I can put in a plug for Culture and Community Spirit, then, that would be great. Anybody want to talk to me about that? All right. Go.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah. Just go ahead. Go for it.

Culture and Community Spirit

Ms Blakeman: This money has been requested to provide for site reclamation costs at a couple of different historical sites, so the obvious question is: which historical sites are they for? That money for the upgrading I think was in last year's budget, so why is the site reclamation so far behind? Related to environmental liabilities that were expensed in prior years, which are the sites, what were the environmental liabilities, and why wasn't the money closer to the actual expenditure of the upgrading? I'm curious as to why this is coming through as a supplementary supply. It should have been in the regular budget. Was there extra money that got thrown in there, or is there some sort of environmental problem and they had to clean it up, that they were on the hook for it and had to clean it up, so they had to come up with the money one way or another?

I'd just like to hear what the heck is going on. It's $2 million and change, $2.8 million. It's not an incredible amount of money, but I'm always curious with supplementary supply, especially when it's almost a billion dollars and nine different departments, and we had to respond to it in 24 hours. I just thought that I'd get that one on the record.

Go ahead, Minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, I really want to apologize because I didn't think that the hon. member would really want to talk about the reclamation of this. I thought she would get her plug in for other culture and community stuff because supplementary estimates hasn't necessarily stayed within the framework of supplements. I'm sorry; I didn't mean to suggest that this wasn't important. I just thought that there were bigger fish to fry with culture, but I will tell her.

5:30

The Culture and Community Spirit sites are the Turner Valley gas plant, the Bitumount, and the Greenhill mine. What we have done is started in many of these areas. Any time you're dealing with hydrocarbons and other kinds of contamination, often your original assessment is not exactly complete. The other thing that happens is that we are becoming – I want to say stricter, or we're getting a little fussier about how we do reclaim and how that will go forward. It is reacting to the recommendations from the Turner Valley gas advisory panel, that we got in September of last year, and it also works on an abandonment of the Dingman No. 2 well bore. Any time you're getting down there, if you've got a bad abandonment, you literally can spend millions, and you can't quit halfway through, normally, when you're down there. But it is basically around the environmental issues of those three areas. Actually, I don't know why I didn't list it in the sup estimates so you'd know.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you for telling me which one it is because I know a lot about the Turner Valley historic gas plant, not the least of which because that's where the Blakeman side of my family comes from. My father used to party underneath the gas flares in the middle of the night. Yes, yes, yes. So Turner Valley and gas. Yup.

I have been to the site a couple of times, and we, in fact, have had people here in the gallery. Roxanne Walsh has been an activist down there for some time around that site. Because we weren't very environmentally conscious way back when, we dumped stuff on the ground outside of plants and didn't necessarily clean up when there were spills, and it's a huge problem.

On the one hand, I think people in Alberta genuinely want that museum to exist. It is very much part of our heritage. It's where our money came from originally, before Leduc No. 1, and it still comes from natural gas to a great degree, depending on the year. So I think it's very much a part of our heritage, and people want to see it and experience it.

On the other side, this place has got problems. I don't think we even begin to understand – I'm trying to choose my words carefully here – how much work needs to be done on that site. I've raised questions in this House before around the testing that went on about leaching into the Sheep River, which runs right by it, next to it. The gas plant is on a bit of a slope, of course, and the slope ends in the river. This was also a wrestle between community development, health, and environment. Each one was testing differently and had different results. Ultimately, it comes under community development, which signed the contract to take it over. This is a tough one because we do want to clean it up. We want to make it possible for people to participate in this site. I just have real questions about whether we can.

The Dingman flare is a perfect example because as weird as that might seem to people, that direct flaring is part of our heritage. People wanted to see it, but it ended up getting shut down in order to deal with the site that it was coming from, that actual well. It's on the side of a hill. When you drive across the bridge, that Dingman flare is, you know, 25 feet away. You can see it, but it's flaring 25 feet away from a road, and it's flaring out of the ground.

Can you tell me how much money is being spent on that site, and specifically what is being done? We've gone back on that site a number of times, often for testing, occasionally to remove some of the soil and the contaminants, so I'm interested in what exactly happened on that site.

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't know the exact number. I know that on that site they are going to do an enhancement of the containment system, and I know they're using some of the money to do a risk assessment of the river basin, but I don't know the exact dollars.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. You know, there was something else about culture that I wanted to ask. [interjection] Ticketmaster? No. That's Service Alberta.

You know what? I think that for the specifics of what we've got in front of us on this supplementary supply, I'm fine with the explanation. They should've been able to do it in the regular budget. It shouldn't be coming through as a supplementary supply, but it did, and at least we know what it is now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If it's all right, I'd like to move along to Transportation.

The Deputy Chair: Fine.

Mr. Chase: Am I talking to the Treasury minister? Thank you. Thank you for indicating.

Transportation

Mr. Chase: I'll note how things are broken down, and then I'll put forward the questions. The supplementary amount of $73,827,000, which is net of $148,833,000 from lower than budgeted spending in other programs, is requested for the following programs: approximately $13 million for the Alberta municipal infrastructure program; approximately $86 million for the Alberta cities transportation partnerships; approximately $12 million for the resource road program; $8 million and change for the streets improvement program; almost $76 million for the municipal water, waste-water program/water for life, a terrific investment; $15 million for the federal public transit trust; approximately $12 million for the Canada-Alberta municipal rural infrastructure fund; and $250,000 for program services.

Of these various amounts $30 million is being reallocated to corporate human resources for separation payments. This comes from page 47. Is it possible to provide, as specific as possible, the types of severance packages that were given out? How many people, you know, to the nearest hundred, I suppose, were impacted? Is it possible to provide specifics as to the type of restructuring that occurred? I'm throwing this all out. How much money is the government expected to save in the long term? Will the Auditor General be looking at these separation payments?

It seems, from a quick perusal, that Transportation is getting very hard hit in terms of separation payments. We've seen several millions of dollars go to separation in the health care programs, and this seems like a large chunk of change.

If I can just sit down at this point and get an answer to why such a large separation. Hopefully we're not seeing a Steve West in Transportation.

Mr. Snelgrove: Oh, no. The $30 million is not for Transportation. We have been working with all departments to try to establish more of a corporate approach to much of what we do in government, whether it's our IT, in payroll, and stuff like that, also in our approach to the people that work with us. We are going to have some layoffs, that we actually announced earlier in the summer, that were the result of contracting out some of the IT/desktop contracts for cross-government through Service Alberta. There would be approximately 110 people that would be let go because of that. They're just being let go. We haven't spent any of that $30 million yet. That is to address some changes that are going to come about from some of our restructuring, and that is to deal with all government. The severance packages, if they are union, are dealt with in our union agreements. Our packages for management/nonmanagement are set out in our understanding with our –

I'm struggling for the word. But there is a set amount. These are not for any specific part.

I should say that most of the money that Transportation had to reaccount for here was as a result of us trying to access every penny we could from the opportunities that the federal government had in their different spending programs. Whether it was for some of the stimulus funding; we had to be flexible in anticipating that. We didn't exactly know where they were coming from. We took money out of MSI, put it in Treasury Board. Because the federal government often says that it has to be new money, it couldn't come from that department. So we took it, anticipated that we might need it. It worked out very well for Albertans, but a lot of this was a shell game, to make sure that we could access all that we could from the federal government. So this, in all fairness to Luke, wasn't his poor planning. That was us trying to use that department to access the federal government money.

Mr. Chase: I appreciate the clarification. I thought it was a very potentially large hit to a single ministry. I'm very aware that the number of roads in Alberta that are rapidly approaching that fair to poor condition are significant, and we need people in place to oversee that.

Again, I'm appreciative of the federal dollars. It makes it a little bit difficult, I think, for our minister of finance to be hammering away at the feds in terms of transfers when it seems that there have been some significant transfers this year. But that's his discussion.

The reallocation was made possible by changes to the rules for matching of federal stimulus funding. The result is that less funding went to capital projects. Which projects, large-scale if you like, were cancelled due to the ministry having to pull back funding?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. There was nothing cancelled, Mr. Chairman. Last year, as the cost pressures changed, we started to get projects done for much less money. So it wasn't a case of us pulling back in specific projects. It was simply realizing a savings from the economic changes that we went into. It wasn't a case of cancelling to do that. As a matter of fact, with the federal government spending, I actually think they ought to have made that commitment to Alberta at least every year for the next 10 years. I still have a little trouble doing cartwheels with them in their pictures when they give us $800 million and take $21 billion back. I'm still not sold that we're getting an equitable partnership with our good friends. But it's better than it was, so we'll continue to work with them. But it's from savings on projects, not from cancelling.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Provincial highway systems left $6.9 million in funding on the table. We've talked about, you know, the 40 per cent benefit of reduced costs in materials, and I talked about the fact that almost half of our highways are approaching that poor condition. I'm just wondering why that funding wasn't used to rehabilitate more of our province's aging highways.

Mr. Snelgrove: It is hard to put it in a line sometimes. You know, I think they spent last year close to $400 million on preserving and maintaining highways. So I do have to know: okay; how did you save this from that? We have an accounting, things we follow. If they actually save it at this line, it has to show to that line. Some of the savings came from a decrease in the cost of supplies. I think most of it came in process and how they administer some of the contracts that we do. So we're not saving the money at the expense of the road itself. We're saving the money in the way that we approach how we do our maintenance.

Mr. Chase: Again, I want to look at having good roads as an investment as opposed to an expense, so I don't want to get caught up in the definitions of spending, saving, and investing.

Why was $50 million that was budgeted for noncash items not spent? Again, I think we've probably reached the bottom of our recession in terms of saving that 40 per cent deduction that we've currently got. I think that window of opportunity is probably starting to close.

Mr. Snelgrove: The $50.4 million from noncash spending resulted from the lower capital amortization requirements because we didn't build as much. Much as our friends in the Wildrose would like to think that it isn't there, amortization is a real number, and it is in our budget, and if we build less, we'll account for less. The other part is that we suspended nominal sum disposals, and transportation is one department that normally has to get rid of a lot of government land along or near the highways we don't need, and that has to show as a cost to our books. So where we had anticipated getting rid of some of that land, where we don't get the money but we have to show it, we didn't do that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's just a matter of the budgeting process.

There's $148 million needed for municipalities that's partly showing up in the supplementary supply. There was sort of a 10-year agreement with municipalities going to receive a certain amount of funding, and of course, dependent on the recession, there was a formula built into what kind of funding went. Why wasn't this budgeted for during last year's estimates? Is this additional funding coming out of next year's reduced budget for municipal support? It's a significant chunk of change, and I'm sure the municipalities are wondering at what point they're going to receive it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, we made a conscientious effort last year to move money out, knowing it would be going to the municipalities eventually but knowing that if we needed to access federal dollars, it wouldn't be considered existing money. If we had put it all in MSI up front, the feds would not qualify for it now. I'm telling stories out of school. We probably won't get any money ever again. Strike me dead. Whatever. The fact is we took it out when we were able to meet the requirements, then we were able to replace it, and as our budget went, we were able to top back up to make sure that everyone still received their equitable funding. You know, a little bit of smoke and mirrors in how we dealt with the federal programs, but that basically was taken out with the purpose of being replaced when we could.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. So that I completely understand: the idea was to set aside as much money as we possibly could with the hope, anticipation, expectation that the federal government would match our designated savings?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. It was so that whatever program criteria they came up with, they couldn't get us on a technicality. We really in Alberta are spending near what we can, from a government or from a supported point of view, in infrastructure. So we needed to make sure that we were, one, doing projects that we needed to do. We're one of the few provinces that actually has a capital plan that goes a few years out, so we felt it was very important to make sure that that capital plan, that had been prioritized when there wasn't someone looking over your shoulder and telling you to spend, spend, spend, was put in place. So we took the money out, anticipating that if we had to use it to match federal and municipal funds, we would have available room in our capital plan in our existing finances.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In conclusion, while this was a rushed process, I do appreciate the answers that have been provided by the ministers. In particular, I want to thank the President of the Treasury Board for filling in in such a substantive way. Thank you very much.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly former member 607, Mr. Mike Cardinal, who is seated in your gallery. Mr. Cardinal was first elected in the general election held in 1989 to represent the constituency of Athabasca-Lac La Biche, re-elected in '93, '97, and 2001 to represent the constituency of Athabasca-Wabasca, and re-elected in 2004 to represent the constituency of Athabasca-Redwater. Mr. Cardinal served in six cabinet portfolios, and I'm proud to say he did an excellent job. He's left some very big shoes for me to fill as he's my predecessor. I'm also proud to say he's my friend and mentor and has served Alberta very well. He's accompanied this afternoon by Peter Bidlock, a prominent businessman in Edmonton who is a member of Travel Alberta's strategic marketing council. I'd ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of nine interns who are currently learning on the job within my Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology. These interns come to us from a variety of Alberta postsecondary institutions and programs, so we know they have the knowledge and skills to succeed. In fact, they are already valuable assets in the divisions where they work. I'd ask them to rise as I call out their names. We have Krista Comfort, Alisha Cupido, Crystal Lee, Jo Tolentino, Stephen Boyd, Angela Ta, Olga Romero, Lindsay Manz, Brent Wellsch, Ameer Persson. They are all in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they all rise, as I said, to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two people who are very important to me. First of all, my wife, Wanda, who is visiting question period this afternoon, and also my son Barry, who is on reading week, taking the week off from the Lethbridge community college where he is studying business. I'd ask them both to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a special guest seated in the members' gallery today, Mr. Ron Boutin of the Edmonton maximum security prison, in my riding of Edmonton-Manning. I will tell the Assembly more of what Mr. Boutin has been doing at the Edmonton maximum security prison in my member's statement. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Boutin last year. I was impressed by the operation. I would like to formally introduce him to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. Please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to introduce some very special guests who are joining us in the Assembly this afternoon. They are students of Brentwood elementary school. There are 62 visitors, and they're seated in the public gallery. If I could, I would like to acknowledge the teachers or group leaders that are with them: Mr. Vantour, Ms Capton, Mrs. Rossman, and Ms Oseen as well as parent helpers Mr. Fehr, Ms Jacobson, Mrs. Keirstead, and Mrs. Peters. I'd ask this group to rise so that all members can give our traditional warm welcome to this group of outstanding young students from Sherwood Park.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce two Albertans. The first is no stranger to this place – she's worked in the Legislature for many years – Evelyn Oberg. Evelyn is working in my office here in the Annex. I'd like to ask Evelyn to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Evelyn, thank you.

As well, indeed a new Canadian, who has been in Alberta for over two years. He also is working in my office, and that is Rolando Nicolas. I'd ask Rolando to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one other introduction I would like to make, and that is a group of student representatives that are in the Legislature today doing their work, representing students from across this province, talking to members about postsecondary education and their concerns and bringing them forward, and I certainly do encourage them to do that.

They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'll read their names off very quickly: Ms Carol Neuman, who's the executive director of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. We have Mr. Robert Jones, who's the chair and VP external, Mount Royal University; Miss Amber Herman, vice-chair, VP events, Medicine Hat College; Mr. Timothy Jobs, director of finance and VP of academic at NAIT; Ms Kerri Hartman, who's their treasurer and VP campus life of Grant MacEwan University. We have Steven Kwasny, who's director of policy and also president of Red Deer College; Mr. Colin Rose, director of advancement, president of SAIT students' union association; Miss Heather MacBeath, director of marketing and communications, VP academic at SAIT; Mr. Travis McIntosh, who's the president, Students' Association of Mount Royal University. We have Mr. Brady Schnell, president, Medicine Hat College; Ms Sage Wheeler, president, Alberta College of Art & Design Students' Association; and Mr. Geoff Tate, who's the president of the NAIT

Students' Association. I see they have risen in the gallery. I would ask all members to give them a warm appreciation for what they do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please as well join me in recognizing the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who's celebrating a birthday anniversary today.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think we have some folks here from the Lakeland country home school, located in Vermilion. These students are from around different areas of Alberta and provide a tremendous asset to many of the families around Alberta. If they're in the gallery, I would please ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Lethbridge Technology Commercialization Centre

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to this House about a new partnership in Lethbridge that will help the city attract new technology-based start-up businesses. Thanks to a $4 million grant from the federal government's community adjustment fund, a commitment of funding from the city of Lethbridge, and an investment of $1 million from Iunctus Geomatics, Lethbridge will see the creation of a new incubation centre to help draw and foster new high-tech businesses.

The Technology Commercialization Centre will be based in a 10,000 square foot facility designed to offer flexible space and support services to start-up technology businesses. Iunctus, which is a Lethbridge-based company that has grown exponentially over the past decade, will move its operations to a second structure while a third will be built nearby as home to a secure data centre with a backup power supply. As Iunctus president Ryan Johnson puts it, his company has grown up in Lethbridge, and this is an opportunity to partner with the community that has helped it become the success it is today.

Mr. Speaker, this partnership is truly a win-win situation for the city of Lethbridge, the province of Alberta, and Iunctus Geomatics. By attracting new support businesses to Lethbridge, the centre will bring jobs to the city. It will also provide opportunities for graduates of Lethbridge College and the University of Lethbridge. At the same time these new highly specialized businesses will be able to support Iunctus Geomatics and supply the company with the qualified workers they need to continue to grow. As Mayor Bob Tarleck stated, the centre will "strengthen existing industries and attract new businesses as part of [Lethbridge's] commitment to developing a globally strong, knowledge-based economy."

Mr. Speaker, Lethbridge and the surrounding area have long been known as the hub of the agricultural and food processing industries. With the advent of the Technology Commercialization Centre, it is well on its way to developing an even more diverse economy. In doing so, the city of Lethbridge is taking to heart the priorities outlined by this government to diversify and develop a leading-edge economy that will take full advantage of all of the resources of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ron Boutin

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I introduced Mr. Ron Boutin of the Edmonton maximum security prison earlier today, who is here to watch question period. Mr. Boutin is the warden of the Edmonton maximum security prison. He has devoted the last 30 years with the Correctional Service of Canada to ensure public safety. He was appointed warden in August 2007.

Edmonton maximum houses approximately 250 offenders, all of which have sentences of over two years. Mr. Boutin has faced many challenges in his role. One of the major issues has been finding ways to deal with offender aggression. The solution that originated at the Edmonton maximum security prison has become a national policy for all maximum security prisons throughout Canada. More attention is paid to an offender's eventual return to the community, and they are being taught job skills, such as welding and carpentry. There is also more accountability for prisoners through the offender disciplinary process.

Mr. Boutin is known for the pride he has in his dealings with the public, for his fairness, and for his willingness to listen. I am proud of Mr. Boutin's progress at Edmonton maximum. It has made the prison a safer place, which certainly has a positive impact on our city as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Grandparents' Rights of Access to Grandchildren

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It takes a village to raise a child, or an extended family at least. In Alberta certain members of an extended family can be shut out of a child's life, and I'm talking about grandparents. Over the years I've heard from numerous grandparents who are grief stricken at being denied access to their grandchildren. It is argued that it is in the best interests of the child to be acquainted with their extended family and to have a place in that family. Access is the child's right and should not be used as a form of punishment by the parents or the grandparents for wrongs either real or imagined.

Yes, grandparents can at their own cost go to civil court and try to convince a judge to allow them access to their grandchildren, but this is onerous, expensive, time consuming, and some would say unnatural. Access, custody, and guardianship is governed by half a dozen provincial statutes and three different courts, a bewildering maze to work your way through for a nonlawyer, especially when all you want to do is have a relationship with your grandchild. The Provincial Court Act does contain a specific provision for grandparent access, and it describes the process of access and custody for a child and the criteria for the best interests of the child. However, the Family Law Act allows the parents the right to determine the individuals they want their children to associate with, and the court can only grant a leave of application for contact with the child if it's determined to be in the best interests of the child.

It's bewildering, frustrating, and heartbreaking. We need a better, nonadversarial method to address this situation. On behalf of grandparents, including one of my constituents, Wendy Walker, I ask the government to work toward an improved role for grandparents, one that is not defined by court litigation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Immigrant Employment Mentorship

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is expected that Alberta will have a labour shortage of 100,000 workers by 2013, and projections suggest that by 2011 Canada could be completely reliant on immigration for its net labour force growth. Many of the skilled immigrants in Alberta have valuable skills and experiences but have difficulty finding employment commensurate with those skills and experiences. Lack of employment networks and unfamiliarity with the Canadian workplace culture and expectations are two of the significant barriers they face.

I'm pleased to inform you that action is being taken in Calgary and in Edmonton to ensure that skilled immigrants coming to our province are well positioned to respond to Alberta's labour market needs and that employers are aware of the rich potential of the immigrant demographic. The recently formed Calgary region and Edmonton region immigrant employment councils are nonprofit organizations dedicated to ensuring immigrants' meaningful participation in our labour market.

The councils have each identified mentoring as an excellent means by which skilled immigrants can become better prepared for employment in their field and a way for employers to better understand the advantage of having these workers. The councils are each launching mentoring programs to connect these skilled immigrants with people already employed in their field in March. The findings from these pilot projects will be shared at a mentorship summit in September 2010.

Mr. Speaker, full employment of immigrants is good for our economy. Because of the Calgary and Edmonton immigrant employment councils most skilled immigrants will be able to obtain employment that matches their education and skills, benefiting themselves, our communities, and Alberta's employers. I'm pleased to note that the Ministry of Employment and Immigration has supported both immigrant employment councils, joining other funders like Citizenship and Immigration Canada. The Calgary and Edmonton immigrant employment councils are unique initiatives offering practical solutions to our province's future labour needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Competitiveness Review of Royalties

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government appointed the Alberta Royalty Review Panel, which urged the government to increase royalties by about 20 per cent, an additional $2 billion per year. Later that month the government announced an increase to royalty rates of not $2 billion but $1.4 billion, instead.

Three months later they decided even that was too much, and they announced their first rollback, a new contract with Suncor that would have reduced our take by about 40 per cent per barrel as they went to a bitumen basis of calculation. Three months later they announced another rollback, this time for deep drilling, costing Albertans $37 million a year. Seven months later there was a new deal with Syncrude and another rollback. Our take per barrel was cut nearly in half. The next day there was another rollback. This time new wells would see a royalty exemption of $172 million in the first year and more than half a billion by 2013. Last March there was yet another rollback for oil and gas, which would cap royalties at 5 per cent regardless of the price of oil or the profit margins of the companies extracting our resource.

The Premier has rolled back royalties at least five times, and government admits that it cost the province about $2 billion a year so far. The Premier even bragged about saving industry about $500 million in one quarter.

We have seen delay after delay to the competitiveness review, which is being hammered out behind closed doors with the oil and gas industry. The citizens who own the resource are being kept in the dark and excluded. When I asked the minister during estimates why these changes were being made without Albertans involved, he said: Henry and Martha would be so lost. Mr. Speaker, they're trying to lose us.

We have no choice but to conclude that this government is letting oil and gas write its own ticket. The oil industry has been funnelling money to a party that's even further to the right of the Progressive Conservatives to put pressure on the government on royalties. It is obvious that when faced with this threat, the government is prepared to fold like a cheap tent.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the minister of advanced education said, "the base operating grants of every institution in this province [are] protected." This morning, however, it was revealed that by consolidating a series of separate grants, the government has effectively hidden a reduction in expected grant funding of $27 million to the University of Alberta. If the minister won't give Albertans a straight answer, perhaps the Premier will. Students in postsecondary institutions have ridden this government boom-and-bust fiscal roller coaster for far too long. When is the Premier going to start treating postsecondary education as an investment by delivering a plan for stable, predictable funding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has met with all of the postsecondary institutions and gave them good information on what to expect from this year's budget. He is continuing to work with them to ensure that postsecondary education remains a priority for this government.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this government's incompetent management is close to creating a crisis in postsecondary education. Cutbacks and tuition hikes are not the solution. Why isn't this government exploring constructive options such as low-interest loans for postsecondary institutions, that would allow them to maintain capacity as Alberta's economy recovers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be more than happy to correct some of the gross errors in the preamble. Number one, the tuition increases this year are based on the CPI cap. We are maintaining that cap as an investment in this province's future. Number two, the base operating grant for all of the postsecondary institutions in the province of Alberta for the past six years has gone up 42 per cent, and we protected that. That's a great investment in the future of this province.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this government has also eliminated targeted funding to high-demand programs which produce skilled workers. Alberta will need these workers as we emerge out of the recession. Is the Premier not concerned that in addition to running up a massive budget deficit, his legacy will be presiding over a massive skills deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm not exactly sure where the hon. member is doing his research, other than perhaps the Edmonton Journal, which I would advise is probably not the best place to do his research given the fact that what he's talking about is probably rumour as opposed to actual fact. The training part of it in terms of apprenticeship is based on the demand of the number of apprentices that are showing up at the postsecondary institutions. We have a very good handle on where that's going, and this province does more training of apprentices per capita than any other province in the country.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a tradition across Canada of sharing the costs of postsecondary education between provincial governments, which pay two-thirds, and students, who pay one-third. But as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has demonstrated, this balance is being jeopardized as the government downloads more of the cost to students. To the minister of advanced education. The government's failure to invest in postsecondary institutions is forcing them to ask for massive hikes to tuition in professional faculties. Why is the minister not coming forward with a clearer position on these increases?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how much clearer I could be on this issue. The institutions told us that when we froze tuitions at the 2004 levels, there may have been some areas where we made an error. I simply said to them: "If you believe that there was an error made in 2004, present those facts to me and to the students, and let's have a look at them. If there was an error, we'll fix it." That's the only adjustments we're talking about. The CPI cap on tuitions of 1.5 per cent for this year stands.

Mr. Chase: Given that postsecondary institutions are trying to make up for their reduced provincial funding by raising additional fees, will the minister solve both the students' and institutions' dilemma by investing the necessary funds to eliminate the need for mandatory fee hikes?

Mr. Horner: Today, as I stand here, I know of one, maybe two institutions out of the 26 that we work with within the province that are talking about external fees of, you know, a significant nature. We're still working with the postsecondary system and crunching the numbers to ensure that we have accessibility, that we have affordability for the students. So to say that the entire system is looking at these huge increases is simply not correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In response to my questions yesterday regarding postsecondary funding, the minister stated, "Unfortunately, he hasn't been reading the truth." My quest for the truth continues. Given that students need to make admission decisions and institutions need to set their budgets, when can they expect definitive answers from this minister?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said to the hon. member several times with regard to the market modifier question, which is what he's after, so far I believe I've received from three institutions their proposals. We're reviewing them as we speak, and within weeks we will be able to deliver what we think is going to be the appropriate response to those postsecondary institutions so that they can ensure that they have their tuitions in the calendars at the appropriate time so that students and parents can make the appropriate decisions as to where the kids want to go for their postsecondary.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Funding for Calgary Hip and Knee Surgeries

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The minister needs to answer an obvious question that he completely evaded yesterday. Why is Calgary receiving funding for an extra 200 hip and knee procedures in the next six weeks while Edmonton is receiving funding for only 16?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that the surgical teams are ready and able to do those extra surgeries in Calgary. In Edmonton we spoke with the Royal Alex this morning, and they would tell you that they have a temporary shortage of anaesthetists.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. It's interesting that he spoke to them this morning because this announcement was made several days ago. To the same minister: given that he's admitted, or indicated, that waiting lists are kept by local surgeons, which local surgeons in Edmonton were consulted about their wait-lists before this morning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was actually in a different meeting when I phoned for other purposes, and that's where that information came from, but I'll try and get that answer for you, hon. member. I know that we talked with a lot of people across the province, and if you want a definitive list of doctors, I'll try and get that for you. It wasn't I who did the phoning – it was Alberta Health Services – but I'll get that information for you.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I'll look forward to that being presented in this Assembly.

Again to the same minister: while he's tabling the list of surgeons that his people consulted in making up this 10 to 1 discrepancy in favour of Calgary, will he also table the wait-lists and the wait times for hip and knee surgeries at all Edmonton and Calgary facilities so that we can know whether or not this decision was based on good evidence or on politics or on strategic marketing by HRC?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe what I indicated yesterday and perhaps in days earlier is that staff with Alberta Health Services had talked with doctors and surgical team members and/or staff or whomever in various parts of the province, so I'll try and get that list more definitively defined for you. I'll try and get you more information on the question you've just asked as well. Those are details that are really in the hands of Alberta Health Services, but I'll see what I can do to help you out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans young and old are concerned about our province's return to large deficits and debt. These people are worried not for themselves but for their kids and grandkids. They want them to have the same Alberta advantage that they enjoyed, and they see that advantage slipping away. This week the President of the Treasury Board suggested that those Albertans voicing concern over skyrocketing debt levels are only concerned about themselves. Although this statement is as laughable as the minister's handling of the public purse, does the minister actually believe that those concerned with piling debt on our kids' backs are only thinking about themselves?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, I'm as equally concerned about people who do not wish to share facts.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I guess I'll have to explain that point of view to my four kids when they're old enough to understand what higher taxes and fewer jobs in Alberta mean.

Mr. Speaker, one need only look to Saskatchewan for how a competent conservative government would manage our finances. Yesterday Premier Wall announced that his government would limit health spending to – wait for it – inflation plus population growth and would freeze overall spending at current levels in order to balance their books. To the same minister: why aren't you following the example of our neighbour and national economic leader, I might add, by reining in our deficit? Or does Premier Wall care about only himself?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, probably a couple of reasons. One, Albertans have worked very hard to put ourselves in the opportunity we're in, to be able to provide world-class leading health care, publicly funded in this province. I'm not prepared to turn around and tell Aunt Martha and Uncle Henry, who need their hips, just to wait because Saskatchewan is now leading the way in health care.

Mr. Speaker, these are the people that say, "We're only going to cut $1.3 billion out of health care" in their recently released budget, "and it won't affect health care at all." They need to come clean. What 30 or 40 hospitals are they going to close? What major facilities in Edmonton and Calgary are they going to close? Just come clean.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member knows that we would not cut anything. We would raise health spending by inflation plus growth. He knows that. He's misinformed as usual.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this government's spending is irresponsible and out of control, and Albertans know it. To the Premier. You've already broken your promise this year that you made to Albertans at your party's AGM to limit spending increases to inflation plus population growth. Will this open-buffet spending policy continue next year as well, or will you follow Premier Wall's example and help us get back on the road to sound fiscal management?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to population growth and inflation we did something this year that is quite unique in the country of Canada, and that is to assist the Alberta Health Services Board in a long-term plan to provide health services in Alberta by eliminating the accumulated deficit of the board and giving them five years of committed funding. We're the only jurisdiction in Canada to do that. In fact, I know it's very easy for other Premiers, perhaps, to try and balance the budget, but just look at the many people that are in the Maz centre and over at the Royal Alex in the neonatal unit from neighbouring provinces that come here to Alberta to get the best health care in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

East Calgary Health Centre

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents of east Calgary are inquiring on a daily basis about the east Calgary health centre. This centre was built and designed to provide flexible, integrated, co-ordinated services, being respectful of the diverse nature and needs of the population: individuals, families, and the community of east Calgary. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is the status of the east Calgary health centre?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the status of the east Calgary health centre is that it is still on our capital plan. It's being reviewed right now along with dozens and dozens of other health facilities that are also in the plan and some new ones that wish to become part of the plan, and we'll have that finalized very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The shell of the centre stands vacant since about mid-2009. Seventy-five thousand square feet of interior space in this building remains in its raw state, uncompleted, yet it is my understanding that the capital budget provided funding allocation for the completion of this centre. To the same minister: can the minister tell the residents of east Calgary when they can expect to begin accessing services in this centre?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that we'll have the health facilities capital plan completed, I hope, by March 31; that's the date that I've committed to. At that time we'll be able to provide information about that particular east Calgary health complex along with all the others throughout Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for this answer. The east Calgary health centre was to provide services in many, many areas, including mental health and addictions, seniors' resources, diverse services: home care, primary care, primary medical care, well-child services, community development initiatives, and childhood obesity intervention. To the same minister: where are these program services being delivered to meet the needs of the residents of east Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that for the time being the residents would find those services either at the Peter Lougheed health centre or perhaps at the Rockyview hospital or some other one that's not too far away. The important thing here is that our capital plan is undergoing very close scrutiny at the moment, and as soon as we have it ready, I'll inform this member and all members of the House about the progress.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Electoral Reform

Mr. Hehr: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans know their electoral system is badly broken, yet the government keeps applying tiny bits of Scotch tape to the Election Act instead of enacting real reform. To the Minister of Justice. You were quoted today as follows: we believe the system that we have now serves Albertans well. How can you justify that statement given the well-documented problems in the last election?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand by that statement. I believe that the most important thing that Elections Alberta needs to do is to ensure that there is a system that Albertans can have confidence in to elect a government, and I believe that that is what happened. That doesn't mean to say that there isn't room for improvement. We have of course received recommendations from the former Chief Electoral Officer with suggested changes that related to the last two elections, and we'll be responding in due time.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the political minister for that answer, and I'd encourage her to implement some of those 182 changes she mentioned of the last gentleman who actually held the position before.

Of those 182 recommendations one was fixed election dates. Can we look forward to seeing those? Many of my constituents really have expressed an interest in seeing that coming forward.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that there are a number of opinions with respect to fixed election dates. The opinion of this government is that they are not necessary for us. We believe that it is possible and quite reasonable for elections in Alberta to be run according to when it is appropriate to call an election. We've seen in other provinces criticism that once you have fixed election dates, the government agenda tends to drive toward that date, and I think it impacts good government.

Mr. Hehr: Now, I guess my follow-up question to the answer would be that if you deem that fixed election dates are not necessary, is that you answering as the political minister or as the Justice minister when you answer that question?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My job with respect to the Election Act is to be the Justice minister. My job is to ensure that we respond to the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer, and that is the job that I will do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Podiatry Surgery

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents are asking me about costs for foot surgery. It seems that these costs are covered in one part of the province but not in other locations. Therefore, I have to ask the Minister of Health and Wellness a question. Why are my constituents being told that they have to pay for foot surgery if it is done in Edmonton but not if it's done in Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, if a procedure is covered in one part of the province, it should be covered throughout the province. This particular case, obviously, needs to be looked into. Typically, podiatry services is one of the complementary services, and as part of the Alberta health care insurance plan there are certain types of foot surgery that are covered. I'd be happy to look into that further.

Mr. Sandhu: First supplemental: will the announcement you made yesterday help address this type of surgery?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement dealt more with urgent surgeries such as cancer surgeries and so on, but I will look into the specific case if the hon. member will provide me with some additional details. I'd be happy to pursue it for him.

Mr. Sandhu: The final: what will you do to clear up my constituents' confusion? They are very concerned.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, hon. member, if you like, we can sit down and have a meeting with them and get the particulars: get the date, get the description, find out some information from the referring doctor, and so on. Then we can address it and deal with it as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue of industry water use continues to be a concern. We still have oil sands production using a minimum of two barrels of water per barrel of oil, and other methods of resource extraction anticipate using more water, not less water. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. How can the minister be certain that the current system is able to handle increasingly water-intensive unconventional oil and gas production?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of the use of water is dealt with in two ways. First of all, we have a requirement in place, particularly for injection uses – and the member referred to the new types of oil exploration and industrial work that require water – that they have as first choice and be able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the department that saline water is not available. So that deals with part of it. The other part is that we put maximums on the amount of water that can be withdrawn to protect the integrity of the stream itself.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, given that some of Alberta's biggest oil sands producers have said that they would not voluntarily stop pulling water during low-stream flow, is the government going to make compliance compulsory to save our water? It has to be compulsory.

2:10

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue here is that the total amount of water that is currently under licence in the Athabasca River is a minute portion of the overall stream flow. What we're talking about is future users that will come on stream. In that respect we've made it very, very clear that the in-stream flow needs of the Athabasca River and virtually any other river in Alberta will have to be recognized before there is industrial use.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Some companies are still using fresh water in deep formations for enhanced oil recovery. Will the minister ban this practice?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it's not so black and white. It would be nice if it were. The fact of the matter, as I've already indicated in the answer to my first question, is that there is a requirement that the primary source of water for these kinds of facilities would be saline water, would be brackish water, would be salt water. There are certain circumstances where there is not access to that source of water, and in those circumstances and those circumstances only they can receive a waiver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Public-private Partnerships

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's been discussion in this House that has stated that we will incur $5 billion-plus in P3 debt or unaccounted-for capital expenditures. To the President of the Treasury Board: can you please explain? We have billions in the sustainability fund. What are we borrowing and, for goodness sakes, why?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, with regard to P3s this government has made very effective use of the P3 process in building the ring roads and building some of the schools. It's not just about the capital costs that come with building the P3; it's the built-in guaranteed operational costs that accompany the P3 process that give certainty to the taxpayers on both ends of the equation. It's our responsibility, even encouraged by the Auditor General, to look into and verify and use all available means at our disposal to achieve the best possible cost for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. There seems to be considerable confusion as to how this is accounted for in our books. Can you please explain to my constituents how this is reported in the financial statements?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, our P3s are accounted for in the line in our books that very clearly spells out the total cost of our P3s. As a matter of fact, going into this year, total financial asset liabilities on capital was around $2.9 billion. In three years if it stays the same, our total financial liabilities on capital projects would be about $5.9 billion, or an increase of $3 billion. That's very small when you consider our net asset liabilities exceed $20 billion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My last supplemental is to the same hon. President of the Treasury Board. If the only reason that we are borrowing again is to support capital projects, why not just slow down on construction and stay out of debt?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a good point. The fact is that we are only borrowing for capital. We are not borrowing nor have incurred any operational deficit, so borrowing or, as most would say, smart debt. In Alberta we realize that if we're going to lead Canada coming out of this recession, we need to have the infrastructure that enables industry to succeed, and we will use those tools. When you consider the last ring road in Calgary saved us several hundred million dollars – you know what? Quitting halfway around the city isn't my idea of a good project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Family Farms

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are going in ever-increasing numbers to farmers' markets both urban and rural, yet because of the design of our agricultural industry, often as a result of the government funding structure, small family farms continue to disappear from the Alberta landscape. This government just recently announced Explore Local, a program that's meant to "capture growth opportunities in the local food market." To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: through this initiative how many dollars will go directly to new and small-scale, locally focused producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will get the number for the hon. member on what would qualify in that particular category, but of course with these programs there are a number of categories that qualify for funding. Those categories that are accessed first by whatever area of the industry will get the money. We have seen an over 30 per cent increase in market garden sales over the past couple of years, and it's a huge opportunity for Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that number is in the budget, which has already been tabled.

Ms Pastoor: If I'd found it, I would have probably not asked the question.

The Speaker: Please continue.

Ms Pastoor: What is the minister using as a funding definition for farming when small farm-direct producers are not included? I think that was partly in your last answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work with a number of small producers. We have people that are working off of acreages right now, and the hon. member and others have given me names of producers that want to access our programs. Some of these are becoming very profitable, and the understanding within the community in Alberta of the value of the safety and quality of the food that's produced here is really being showcased in those markets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. When will the minister introduce farm-direct initiatives that will help small family and unconventional farmers compete against the huge industrial farms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we already do. What you would consider large operations in the province, about 20 per cent of the agricultural operations in Alberta, produce about 80 per cent of the agricultural goods. The remainder are what would be considered smaller or medium-sized operations. When we talk about that and think about the size of those things, an average livestock operation provides the protein requirements for about 900 people. So these may be considered small, but in fact they're very big operations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government's ongoing cuts to postsecondary education will reduce access to school for students. The University of Alberta is already coping with a $59 million deficit, and this government saw fit to kick them while they're down with an additional $20 million cut. Teachers who've been promised jobs will be laid off, and students who've been promised affordable education will be unable to afford it. Why is the minister of advanced education making postsecondary school less affordable for students?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I could ask the hon. member to refer to my answers earlier because it's the same question that was asked by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Really, postsecondary in this province is second to none in any jurisdiction, I would wager, in North America. We have also been very, very generous in terms of the support to our postsecondaries; as I said, a 42 per cent increase over the last six years. We've maintained that momentum. The University of Alberta was in the headlines today, and that's where the question came from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister didn't answer the question the first time, and he didn't answer it the second time. It's ridiculous for this minister to claim that he can meet a commitment to create 16,000 new student spaces in postsecondary schools while delivering blow after blow to their budgets. How will this minister be able to keep his commitment to create 16,000 new student spaces given the cuts to postsecondary education contained in this budget?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to actually take a look at the numbers, which I know he hasn't done, that are based on what the University of Alberta received last year less prepayments for things that were done in the year before, and then look at the base operating grant that was provided to the University of Alberta versus the dollars that they received this year versus the number of other projects that are coming forward. The point of my answer is that it isn't just, well, $20 million is off because that's what the headline was. We're still working with the University of Alberta to ensure that we can meet our commitments across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I read the provost of the university's letter. Mr. Amrhein wrote a letter in which he is contradicting what the minister is saying about the funding for the University of Alberta. Now, the university's plan is to recoup some of these costs, and that'll cost students an additional $550 a year in fees on top of very expensive tuition fees already. Many students will simply be unable to afford it, Mr. Minister. Why won't the minister admit that rather than improving access to postsecondary education in this province, he's placing it out of reach for more and more Albertans?

2:20

Mr. Horner: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the University of Alberta is not the entire Campus Alberta. The University of Alberta has put a proposal in front of their board and in front of us and the students for this fee across the board. That is not, by any stretch of the imagination, yet done. The University of Alberta has put a proposal in front of the ministry and the department as it relates to market modifiers, or some professional tuition increases. That is not yet done. The university has talked about the sticker shock that they've got. We're still working with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Municipal Election Campaign Financing

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are concerns among municipal councillors and mayors about changes to the municipal election campaign contributions act. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Don't tell me this means that if an individual intends to run for mayor or councillor, he or she can't fund their own campaigns.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you are aware, Bill 203, a private member's bill, was adopted by this House nearly a year ago. My ministry staff is working very hard to ensure that the Local Authorities Election Act is workable and practical. As it stands now, an individual can spend up to a maximum of $5,000, and that's contributions from any one source. As I have previously indicated, we plan on introducing amendments to the existing legislation this spring to ensure that this is workable and practical.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister: can the minister explain where this legislation is as far as being implemented right now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the bill was passed about a year ago. We sort of feel that the members of the House believe that accountability and transparency of local governments are extremely important. The work that we did with Albertans indicates the same thing. So we are presently looking at a practical approach to levelling the playing field so that all municipal candidates in Alberta are governed by the same election campaign rules. Now, the guidelines will further promote strong and vibrant municipal governments that serve all Albertans.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister. My supplementary question: will these proposed guidelines also affect school trustees, who are governed by the Local Authorities Election Act?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no. These proposed provisions will not affect the school board trustees' elections. They are all aimed at the municipal elections.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Cabinet Policy Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year taxpayers paid each and every government MLA a total of over $1.4 million to sit on internal cabinet policy committees. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. How are government members appointed to the cabinet policy committees?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the selection of the committee members for the cabinet policy is done by the Premier and Executive Council.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: for the government members appointed to the cabinet policy committees by the Premier through Executive Council, are they appointed by order in council, by regulation, or ministerial order?

Mr. Snelgrove: I guess I'm just from the old club, Mr. Speaker. When somebody tells me to show up at a committee meeting, I go. I really didn't ask who appointed me.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the President of the Treasury Board: will the hon. minister provide to this Assembly the statutory instrument by which these members were appointed to these five separate cabinet policy committees and received last year over $1.4 million in payment?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we can provide and have provided to this Assembly what every member of this Assembly gets paid from different committees. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has forgotten his particular amount, I see here he was paid as the chair of the legislative Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. MacDonald: That's public.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah, it is public, as we were all paid. Who appointed you to that? Amount paid for policy field committees: $11,000, $16,750. Who appointed you to those?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bison Industry

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta livestock industry has suffered several setbacks in recent years, and it is now questionable whether ranchers can even make a living from cattle ranching. Buffalo – and I know the proper term is bison, but I prefer the term buffalo because it has more of a frontier ring to it – has a number of advantages over beef. Buffalo meat has less fat and produces less cholesterol. Ranching of range buffalo on native grasses will restore habitat for endangered species and eliminate the reliance on high grain prices. My question to the hon. minister of agriculture: has the minister investigated the market for buffalo products?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I'm pleased to report today that the bison industry is one of the bright spots in the agricultural industry, and it's grown large. There are in excess of 85,000 bison in Alberta. We work with the United States and with European nations to promote the markets there. This past year, as a matter of fact, 10,000 live bison were even shipped out of Alberta into other countries for programs. So it's a bright future indeed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: could the existing federal and provincial programs be modified to promote and accommodate the raising of buffalo for commercial markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the programs that the province of Alberta has designed and that the federal government has designed put bison in the same categories as all other livestock groups, so bison qualify for every type of funding that's available for other livestock groups. We, of course, in the province of Alberta have programs above and beyond what the federal government and other provinces have in place also.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: in the minister's discussions with our trading partners – and I'm speaking more of the Asian trading partners than American partners – has the minister raised the issue of exporting buffalo products to Asia and other countries?

Mr. Hayden: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Any opportunity that we have when we're speaking with trading partners from throughout the world, we of course mention the bison industry in Alberta and we promote it. ALMA promotes it. We work hand in hand with the bison industry associations in the province to promote their product around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Oil Sands Image

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be a bit of a misplaced focus when it comes to addressing the negative reputation that the oil sands are getting. On the one hand, this government is putting out promotional pamphlets in Alberta schools, and the Ministry of Energy is measuring their performance in shaping Albertans' knowledge of the energy industry. But the danger to our industry comes, I think, from ignorance from outside the province. To the Minister of Energy: why the misplaced priorities?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I wouldn't agree with that statement, Mr. Speaker. It's not one or the other. Clearly, one of the things that we need to do is continue to inform and ensure that Albertans understand the importance of the energy industry in this province. There have been and will continue to be initiatives externally. That's not going to change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week in budget debates the Minister of Energy acknowledged that the government was not doing enough to promote the oil sands. We agree. What is this minister going to do differently from the last Minister of Energy in that regard?

Mr. Liepert: I missed part of that question, Mr. Speaker, but I think that in essence it's: what are we going to do? I would suggest to the member that we're going to do many of the things we outlined in our business plan and more.

Mr. Taylor: To improve the reputation of the oil sands, the minister has to concentrate his efforts beyond Alberta's borders. Given that, is the minister concerned about the clear failure of our lobbyists in our offices in Washington?

Mr. Liepert: Well, that's not a fair statement, Mr. Speaker. You know, the world is – what? – 8 billion people or whatever it is. It's a massive task to counter some of those well-funded organizations that want to destroy our industry. We need to do everything we can to fight back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

2:30 Value Review of Government Departments

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Treasury Board has recently undertaken spending reviews within each department, leading to about $1.3 billion in savings of taxpayers' money. This is certainly a positive step. My question is to the hon. President of the Treasury Board. In what areas were savings achieved, and how were they identified?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, in one way I think the success of the value reviews is the fact that very few in the public or even in our government would actually have known where they came from, showing that they were very effective in removing them. We looked at accommodation, we looked at some of the granting opportunities or synergies in some of the grants, we looked at internal financial accounting and procurement, but mostly we worked with our departments collectively.

Mr. Fawcett: Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, since the minister was going to give me an example from Service Alberta, I'll ask the minister directly. What changes are you planning to make, knowing that your budget has seen a 15 per cent reduction, that will actually improve service to Albertans and not negatively impact front-line services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're planning to introduce a number of efficiencies. Some of the areas include simplified and standardized government contracts; more electronic invoicing; standard vendors for computer hardware, cellphones, and hand-held devices; software licences for the whole government, not just licences per department. This won't impact front-line services because it's going to make it easier for companies to do business with government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. Let's go back to the hon. President of the Treasury Board. It's great that our dollars are being spent more efficiently where they are currently allocated, but it may be true in many or some instances that we do not need to spend this money at all. Are there plans in place to examine the value and relevancy of specific programs within each department?

Mr. Snelgrove: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, I think it was a mindset change to go from what is easy and typical government to grow and to not re-establish priorities. I can absolutely commit to the hon. member and all hon. members that we are going to continue the work of the internal review. If it means program elimination, we just want to be darn careful that we don't have an unintended effect on a different department by cancelling a program in one area. We want to think these things through and make sure that we use a scalpel as opposed to an axe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

PDD Funding for Community Agencies

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When you look at all of the places where Albertans invest their hard-earned tax dollars, a very healthy amount of funding goes to the Seniors and Community Supports department. Yesterday I attended the main estimates meeting with the minister, and I have to say that I appreciated her directness and her candour. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given the concern that exists across this province with PDD groups, can she please confirm that her department will not enter into new contracts and then cut the funding during the budget year?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD program is a very important priority for this government and especially for myself and my department. The contracts that we develop through our community boards – and there are six regional community boards – are pretty important contracts. I've said in the past that we will honour our contracts, and I maintain to this day that we will honour our contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Groups that the government contracts with to provide supports to communities across the province need certainty. They need to hire staff. They need to ensure proper training is in place and be able to deliver on the programs that their clients, Albertans, rely on. My question, again to the same minister. Groups across this province are contacting me because they are afraid that some of the reviews that will take place this year are simply an exercise in service reduction. What is the goal of the minister and the government as it relates to these social assistance based reviews?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to express my appreciation for all the service agencies that provide the supports and services to our people with developmental disabilities. They work very closely with our boards, and they do a great job. I understand their concerns.

Any of the reviews that we're doing are for the benefit of the people of Alberta. Any reviews that are being done in my department are for purposes of clarity and consistency, efficiency and effectiveness, and sustainability in the programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the decision by her department to seek funding cuts from PDD agencies last year, these groups are justifiably concerned that the government's signature on a contract may not mean much. To identify areas where her department can improve its effectiveness, reduce administration, and maximize front-line services, will the minister commit to having an independent audit completed on the community boards' direct operations and PDD provincial operation budgets?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have six regional community boards. They all do an excellent job. They all send in their reports to my department. I want to reiterate that when we have a contract, we honour our contracts. We honoured all of our contracts last year, and we appreciated the co-operation from the agencies that work with the community boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Education Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education is shortchanging students by deliberately underfunding Alberta's public education system. By the time September rolls around and teachers are due for a salary increase, this minister will have racked up at least $175 million in an education funding shortfall. Why is the Minister of Education taking resources out of the classroom instead of doing what's right and providing sufficient funding up front to ensure our children's education isn't made to suffer?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we're not taking resources out of the classroom. In fact, budgets for school boards this year are the same overall as budgets last year. There is a requirement that school boards do have contracts with teachers for salary increases, and we're going to have to work with the teachers and with school boards to find in the long-term how we deal with those salary increases in a time of fiscal restraint. But the budgets are the same as last year: no monies, no cuts.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've seen the letters that school boards are sending home with children. Parents are fearful of warnings that school staff and resources will be cut back because of this minister's failure to adequately fund education. To the minister. You have had two years to plan for these cost pressures. Why do parents, teachers, and kids have to wait another several months for you to figure it out, all the while worrying about the future of their education?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, parents and students shouldn't have to worry about the future of education. We've talked to school boards. The school boards in this province are on the strongest financial footing anywhere. There is approximately $360 million in operational reserves in the school system in this province. What we've said to school boards is . . . [interjection] Edmonton-River-view is very rude today, Mr. Speaker.

What we've said to school boards is: "Do not adjust the student-teacher ratio. If you need to draw from your reserves, do so. If you need to go into deficit, do so." We'll work on the long-term agreement with teachers because there are always questions with respect to wages and resources.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the school boards' surplus is not this government's personal piggy bank. Now, schoolchildren are coming home with fearful tales that cuts are coming and that their education will suffer. Parents and school boards are worried, and this minister is trying to scapegoat the teachers by failing to fund a salary increase that he signed off on. Why is the minister sacrificing the quality of our children's education instead of funding current education levels like he promised?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, far from sacrificing the education of students today, I'm fighting hard to make sure that we improve education for students today. I'm working with school boards and with the ATA to make sure that happens. We do need to work through a period of time where we've got because of the arbitrated process, we understand, the adjustment from the average weekly earnings index. We do have some work to do, both short term and long term, in terms of how we finance that. Basically, there is only so much money, and the money can go to wages, or it can go to numbers of teachers. Either way we have a one-year period to do what the school boards are quite adequately funded to deal with. Over the longer term we'll deal with what those increases are over the first, second, third, and fourth years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Postsecondary Satellite Campuses

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We keep hearing about the harmony in Alberta's postsecondary system through the concept of Campus Alberta. However, it appears that there is a great deal of competitiveness for students, with institutions like the University of Lethbridge having a presence right here in Edmonton. My question today is to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Is this kind of competition a waste of taxpayer dollars when a community like Edmonton already has two universities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, Campus Alberta is about providing students with the opportunity to achieve their dreams wherever they are in the province from whatever institution they want. It's a system that doesn't have borders. Certainly, choice and accessibility for students is our top priority. The University of Lethbridge has had a presence in Edmonton for some time and has had success in the entire Edmonton region. We trust the institutions to know what's best for what their own budget is and where they need to be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: was the heightened level of competition the reason the University of Calgary closed their office here in Edmonton?

2:40

Mr. Horner: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the decision of the University of Calgary to close one of their satellite offices here in Edmonton is a budgetary one that the University of Calgary is perfectly capable of making, and they should be making those kinds of decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: instead of competing, why aren't we looking at expanding institutions based on enrolment demands, regions, and limiting the growth of others?

Mr. Horner: Well, in effect, Mr. Speaker, the last couple of years we've put into the Post-secondary Learning Act the sectoral categories that we have for postsecondary institutions in the province of Alberta, Campus Alberta. That six-sector model aligns and focuses the institutions so that they can concentrate on students who are looking specifically for programs that are offered in their sector. That helps us allocate resources. It also helps us respond to student demand, and that's exactly where we're going.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness would like to supplement an answer given yesterday, which will allow, then, a member who raised the question in the exchange with the minister to raise an additional question.

The hon. minister.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during the cut and thrust of question period and specifically in response to a question from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere I said that we have paid off or are covering the entire $1.3 billion deficit that the current provincial Health Services Board inherited from the previous regional boards. In fact, I should have said $0.3 billion, not $1.3 billion. Therefore, I just want to apologize for that error.*

I would also like to note that I did say it correctly later yesterday afternoon during debate, on page 156 of Hansard, when I said, "The provincial board inherited certain deficits." So I apologize once again, and I invite the member's questions, as you've indicated.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Minister. No need to apologize. But I am still puzzled by some of the statements from yesterday, specifically your saying that the Health Services Board has saved us $600 million or $700 million. I don't see how that is consistent when you just announced a $1.7 billion increase just in operating expenses, not to mention the debt portion. How are those numbers consistent? A $1.7 billion increase in spending doesn't equal $700 million in savings.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Services Board has indicated to me through their chair and their CEO that they feel they have about $600 million to $700 million of annualized savings as a result of common procurement procedures, a forthcoming centralized payroll system, and stopping the issue of doctor poaching, as it's sort of commonly referred to. Now, those are their numbers, hon. member, so we'll get more information if you like.

With respect to the deficit, Mr. Speaker, when you go back to about the period of '07-08, '08-09, somewhere in there, you can see where the deficits started to accumulate. What we've said is that we'll eradicate about $0.5 billion of that deficit this year, right now, and we'll look after $0.7 billion plus in the coming year. Then we're ramping up their adjusted base, and then we're giving them 6 per cent on top of that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, not counting the last three, 19 members were recognized today. We had 114 questions and answers – that's very significant – and 12 opposition members, seven private members were recognized. We're going to continue with the Routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Canadian Troops at Vancouver Olympics

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know I've not been the only one recently watching some of Canada's finest athletes, a number of which are Albertans, compete in Vancouver, where we captured our sixth medal last night. However, there's another group of Alberta's and Canada's finest present at the games this year, members of the Canadian armed forces. Some were deployed as early as January 6, and most will spend around two months away from their families, starting to return home the first week of March. There are also those who will stay on for another month, continuing to serve throughout the Paralympic Games.

There are three elements representing our forces at the 2010 games – the army, the navy, and the air force – totalling about 4,500 members, about 1,400 of which are soldiers from the army. About half of those are from the Canadian Forces base in Edmonton and my constituency.

The soldiers' mandate is to assist the RCMP with two unique skill sets. First, they are the eyes and the ears of the RCMP in the backcountry for multiple events, where they'll not only be on foot and on skis but on Ski-Doos and quads. Secondly, they have a mobility directive to ensure that the RCMP are moved quickly from one location to the other safely.

Our soldiers at the Olympics are led by our own CFB Edmonton's Colonel Andre Corbould, and he is supported by Brigade Sergeant Major, Chief Warrant Officer Ken Hodge. Typical of our dedicated members of our military and the duties that they carry out across the globe, most of the work they're doing at the Olympics is out of the spotlight.

I would ask that all Members of this Legislative Assembly join me in publicly thanking these men and women for yet another service that they provide to our country, to Albertans, and indeed to the whole world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Bill 4

Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 4, and that's the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important piece of legislation for industry. It doesn't add regulatory burden for industry. It actually provides some protection to industry by harmonizing our legislation with federal legislation which was amended in June of 2009. The rules already exist in federal legislation, mandated by the federal government, but matching our legislation with the federal legislation as much as possible helps to achieve standard conditions for the movement of dangerous goods within provinces and across Canada.

By mirroring the federal legislation, we're able to ensure our place in enforcing the rules and monitoring industry. If we don't mirror the federal legislation, we run the risk of losing our jurisdiction over industry in Alberta and our ability to enforce these rules the way we see appropriate. The legislation actually provides some protection to industry here in Alberta. The changes are minor and mainly administrative in nature. As I say, this legislation will ensure to industry that it continues to be business as usual in Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 4 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings from constituents today. The first is an e-mail from Amanda Hollman. She wishes to express her disappointment with recent changes to the funding regarding postsecondary. She has been upgrading herself, earning her GED, and is now in the top 10 per cent of high school graduates and achieving honours in the medical office assistant program, but she doesn't think it's going to be realistic for her to continue further without the student loan relief program. There's one story.

The Speaker: Hon. member, another one?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. The second tabling is also from a constituent, Donald R. MacRae. Mr. MacRae is expressing his distress at the government's decision to close Alberta Hospital. He reminds us that a quarter of the street people used to be institutionalized, and he wonders if, with the beautiful grounds that the hospital sits on, there isn't a condo grab or some similar undertaking going on here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a copy of a document titled Securities Regulatory Proposals Stemming from the 2007-08 Credit Market Turmoil and Its Effect on the Asset-backed Commercial Paper Market in Canada.

The second tabling I have is on behalf of a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The constituent's name is Karen Durda, and she has provided written permission for me to table an e-mail urging there to be no cuts in funding to schools throughout the province.

Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(6) I would request that the Government House Leader share with us the projected government business for the week commencing February 22.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the week commencing February 22, we anticipate that on Monday Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010, will be introduced for first reading.

On Tuesday, February 23, 2010, we will continue consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne – that will be day 8 – and then second reading of the Alberta Competitiveness Act as well as the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act and, time permitting, bills 2, 3, and 4: the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010; and the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010.

On Wednesday, February 24, in the afternoon again consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne, day 9, if there are any remaining who wish to participate; second reading for Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, Bill 4, the dangerous goods transportation act, and in Committee of the Whole the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act and, time permitting, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act and the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act.

On Thursday, February 25, in the afternoon again consideration of His Honour's speech – it will be day 10; therefore, the engrossing motion will come forward – second reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act; third reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation Act; and, time permitting, Bill 4, the dangerous goods act, at whatever stage it's at. We've provided for committee and third reading of bills 2 and 3 or whatever stage they're at.

Statement by the Speaker

Adjournment of Debate and Assembly by Same Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, I have a little statement with respect to a process procedure in the House. While this Assembly draws on hundreds of years of experience from parliaments around the world and over a hundred years in Alberta, we're still a dynamic institution open to change and, therefore, must continually assess our practices to ensure that they are appropriate for the Alberta Legislative Assembly in 2010.

The need to reassess one such practice arose on Tuesday, February 16, this week, when at the end of the sitting the Government House Leader moved to adjourn the debate on Bill 1 and then moved to adjourn the Assembly, all of which can be found at page 142 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

Over the years the chair and other presiding officers have consistently applied paragraph 465(9) of Beauchesne's sixth edition, which states that a member who has moved adjournment of debate "cannot afterwards (during the same debate) rise to move adjournment of the House." In order to revisit the appropriateness of this statement, the chair scoured the more obscure references in Beauchesne, which led him to the most recent edition of a venerable Canadian authority, the fourth edition of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure and Practice in the Dominion of Canada. This most recent edition was published in 1916.

In reviewing the dusty pages that are the authority for the passage in Beauchesne, the chair and table officers found it ambiguous as to whether the adjournment of the Assembly could be moved by the same member who successfully moved adjournment of debate. After reviewing the possible consequences that could arise and canvassing other authorities, the chair has determined that the procedure set on Tuesday can continue. To restate, the same member who moves adjournment of debate may move adjournment of the Assembly, but these would still have to be separate motions. It only took, hon. Government House Leader, nearly 100 years to apply this.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

10. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following changes to:

- (a) the Standing Committee on Private Bills be approved: that Mr. Lindsay replace Mr. Rodney;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved: that Mr. Groeneveld replace Mr. Bhardwaj, that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. Johnson, that Mr. Xiao replace Ms Woo-Paw, that Mr. Elniski replace Mr. Weadick.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion if anyone wants to participate. None? Then shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 16: Mr. Mason]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I've completed, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Completed? Okay.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise in response to the Speech from the Throne, read February 4, 2010, by His Honour Norman Kwong, Alberta's Lieutenant Governor. Along with my colleagues I want to thank Their Honours for their service to our province. We share your family's pride in both of you and the class and the infectious humour that you brought to your office.

In the past 105 years since our province was created, we've come a great distance. We've got a lot to be thankful for. The Speech from the Throne contained the following statement: "Our world may have changed, but our people have not. They remain hard working and innovative, entrepreneurial and compassionate, and, most of all, confident about our province and its future." Looking back through Alberta's history, this could not be more evident.

In the 1919 Speech from the Throne the Lieutenant Governor reflected on the end of the First World War and how Alberta's part throughout the four and a half years had been an honourable and important one, how, moving forward, we needed to address the concerns of employment, agriculture, health care, education, and infrastructure. It's not surprising that 91 years later these are still our top priorities.

Mr. Speaker, I've very seldom stood up in response to the Speech from the Throne, but as a member representing Little Bow, I today am pleased to give an agrarian or an agricultural viewpoint to this speech. This past weekend made me reflect on the changes that have occurred over the past 112 years. Our family celebrated the life of my aunt at her funeral last week. Barb was the last of the third generation of my paternal great-grandfather, who came to Alberta from Ireland to his homestead via York, Toronto, in 1898 along the Waterton River in the Yarrow district south of Pincher Creek. It's reported that his homestead raised beef for the North West Mounted Police at Fort Macleod. Their home was a visiting place for Father Lacombe and Kootenai Brown.

Today I can't imagine the hardships that pioneers of that day endured. There were no LRTs. There were no SUVs. There was no Greyhound bus or air bus air travel. Travel was by horseback or shank's mare. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they walked. Joseph Patrick McFarland's brother-in-law is reported to have walked from a sheep ranch in Montana, past Chief Mountain south of Cardston, all the way up to Calgary. When he found that Calgary wasn't to his liking, he walked back to the Yarrow district to help establish his ranch.

People of that era helped each other. They built their own churches, and they took care of one another. In 1906 Alberta spent $18,466 on agriculture. They spent $10,680 on education and $33,500 on public health. That was on behalf of 185,412 Albertans. In 1910 Alberta's population had doubled to 374,663 people, and agriculture's budget had blossomed to $24,000, 7 cents a person; $20,000 was spent on education, 6 cents a person, while public health care got $84,700, 23 cents a person.

Around that time two of the communities that I'm proud to represent had already been established for a couple of years, but in 1910, 100 years ago, the villages of Carmangay and Barons were formally incorporated. Fortunately for me, my grandfather started farming in Bindloss, Alberta, but moved to Barons, where Barb and her four siblings were raised. In those early years there were Norwegians, Swedes, Estonians, Finlanders, and even one French family, my wife's great-grandfather. All of these people adopted their new country and the language that was prevalent at the time, English, and the laws without any reservation.

As my dad and uncle grew up and married, they moved to Carmangay, where each of them started their own farms. My uncle John, who I really looked up to, never thought for once that he was building this country. I think I remember him saying that he was too busy paying for the farm, raising his girls, hoping someday to put them through university, and keeping the banker happy.

In the late 1920s my best friend's mom had emigrated from Czechoslovakia to Kuroki, Saskatchewan, with her parents as a young girl. His dad would immigrate to Raymond with his parents in 1930. Once again I marvel at what we have today and how some people today receive a government program or benefit and over a period of time then look upon it as their entitlement. If you were to have asked John and Jo what their biggest challenges were as newcomers to Canada, they would tell you: language and existence. There were no ESL programs, no programs to preserve their culture, and no food banks. They had to learn a new language on their own.

They preserved what few keepsakes they had from their home country in their own house, and if you wanted to see them, you were welcome to see their Czech culture in John and Jo's house. They preserved what they had, and without the help of neighbours, Jo would say, they wouldn't have made it. The neighbours provided them with cabbages, potatoes, and meat.

There were no government programs to help them establish a business. Later in life, after they married, the Carmangay Lions Club approached them and encouraged them to take over a local grocery store that had gone broke. There was no formal purchase agreement. The agreement was verbal, and the only condition was that they had to provide free locker service to the patrons that had prepaid for their locker supplies. In those days you didn't have deep freezers. You had a locker in a plant. It was a little wooden container, and that was where you kept your cold meat. John and Jo later added a meat butchering service and later dry goods to their store. Without any government help or assistance, they operated this family business and raised their three children until their retirement.

Today we spend millions of dollars provincially on ESL, cultural programs, seniors' benefits, programs for the less fortunate, children's services, and I often wonder: were these essential at the time when our pioneer parents helped establish this country?

My maternal grandparents had moved to Carmangay from Wisconsin in the early 1900s. You might be interested, as I know you are with a lot of people that hold higher office, that my grandfather's brother moved to Washington, and he would become the great-grandfather to the past governor of Alaska, Sarah Palin. One-room schools were the norm in the years that my grandfather farmed in the Carmangay district. He himself held office as a school trustee and the school board chairman for many years. I've seen the contracts, Mr. Speaker, that he signed from 1915 until the early 1930s. It's amazing to think that in those days a teacher's salary was $700 a year. Today we spend over $16 million a day on education. That's about $1,600 per person for every man, woman, and child.

We tend to think that regionalization is new, but that's not even true. In the early 1940s, when my grandfather was seeing the demise of the one-room school, they created the Lethbridge school division, which actually ran from Lethbridge-West to Fort Macleod up north past Carmangay. It was a huge distance then.

Looking at some of the old documents, we found that a vehicle registration for a 1943 Dodge cost $23. Today it's $78, not a bad change.

Around that time, my dad and my father-in-law also took their turns serving their village councils, and it wasn't uncommon for either one of them to jump into a trench when a waterline was broken and help the town man repair it because everyone wanted to have water, and money wasn't the issue. Per diems weren't even thought of, and there were no union jobs saying that you shouldn't go down and help in the trench, and I'm sure there weren't any scaffolds or anything else to protect them.

Moving forward into my generation, I have to look back and admire the pioneers. These were truly the people that built this country, not today's version of a senior.

Moving forward, as I said, I've seen change since 1972, when I and my wife started our own farm. We started from scratch. We sold rye for a dollar a bushel, barley for 90 cents a bushel. Diesel was 25 cents a gallon. That's 5 and a half cents a litre. Anhydrous ammonia was $40 a tonne. A 100-horsepower tractor cost $8,700. Interest rates a few years later hit 23 and three-quarter per cent in September 1981. I think the Premier and I shared that little bit of history together.

Yesterday barley was $2.90, rye was $3.63, fuel was 78 cents a litre, anhydrous is $580 a tonne, and a 100-horsepower tractor is $140,000. Our population is now 10 times larger than it was in 1905. Our Agriculture budget is $1.1 billion. Our Infrastructure budget is $1.1 billion. Education is $6.1 billion – and I think it bears repeating – $1,600 for every man, woman, and child in Alberta. Health, $15 billion a year, over $4,000 for every man, woman, and child.

As John F. Kennedy was quoted, "The farmer is the only man in our economy who buys everything at retail, sells everything at wholesale, and pays the freight both ways." I salute our farmers today, who continue to help feed a nation.

Alberta is a leader and will continue to be the production leader of clean energy, striving to meet the demands put onto our energy sector by people who would have it go another way. Our education is world class, from elementary schools straight through to our postsecondaries. We know that a well-educated workforce will keep us competitive in today's market, and we're looking forward to ensuring that all Albertans have the greatest advantage compared to our trading partners.

Our tax system is competitive and enticing towards the global economy, and I dare say our business incentives keep us competitive, and our personal tax structure is by far the most advantageous. Our personal income tax structure in Alberta is the most advantageous, in my opinion, for all Albertans. The world around us is definitely changing, and the goal of our government is to help Albertans change with it.

Again, I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to wish His Honour a very much well-deserved rest. He has served us well. He has been a dedicated servant to the province and a true representative, and I admire his culture and those of his pioneering forefathers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise on behalf of the constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere to respond to this government's Speech from the Throne. It has been one of the most remarkable and humbling experiences of my life to represent the teachers, health professionals, entrepreneurs, neighbours, friends, and family in my community to whom I owe so much for my own upbringing. It is an honour unlike any other that I've ever known to serve these people, and I pledge to do so to the best of my ability, however imperfect it may be. My remarks today are derived from the now thousands of conversations I've had with my constituents. I feel that my vision for this province is merely a reflection of the hopes and dreams that the majority of my constituents share.

My constituents are very entrepreneurial in nature. They are concerned that our province is losing its competitive advantage as the best place in Canada to start up and run a business. They are burdened by excessive and growing amounts of government regulation. Many own or work in our province's energy sector, which has been hit hard by lower commodity prices and this PC government's energy policies.

Given that oil and gas remains the primary driver of our economic engine, an important balance must be struck between creating a business environment that encourages ongoing exploration and development activity while at the same time ensuring that Albertans receive appropriate compensation for these resources. Unfortunately, our current provincial government has demonstrated by its actions that it has no understanding of how to strike this critical balance. Tens of billions of dollars in energy investment and tens of thousands of jobs created thereby have fled to neighbouring provinces due in large part to the new royalty framework, one of the most misguided and mishandled policy debacles in Alberta's history. Aside from reversing the damaging royalty hike imposed on our conventional oil and gas entrepreneurs by the current government, I'm committed to advocating for policies that create a business environment in which energy entrepreneurs can thrive and create jobs for all Albertans. Doing so is essential to the continued prosperity of our province.

My constituents are also concerned about our health care system. Improving our health care system is a top priority for almost every one of them. They know that we are increasing health care spending at a rate that is entirely unsustainable for young Albertans, especially given our aging population, and they also know that despite all the spending, wait times to undergo important medical procedures continue to increase.

Albertans deserve better, Mr. Speaker. We need a health care reform strategy that is centred around the needs of patients rather than the whims of a large, centralized bureaucracy in Edmonton. Meaningful health care reform is extremely difficult at the best of times, but it is made infinitely more challenging by our current provincial government's lack of a coherent plan. I'm of the view that a competent and responsive provincial government would articulate a clear plan for health care that voters understand. Such a government would first consult with provincial stakeholders, including doctors, nurses, home-care workers, patients, and others, in developing its plan. This has not been done.

After developing the plan, an effective government would communicate the specific health care goals they intend to achieve and why these goals are necessary. It would show how they intend to achieve these objectives and what timelines and milestones to expect along the way. The current government has failed to do this also.

An effective health care reform strategy would give Albertans a personal stake in health care reform. Just as Albertans were willing to pull together in support of eliminating our debt in the '90s, I believe Albertans would be willing to do the same to save our public health care system today but only if they are first consulted with and the overall health reform strategy is explained clearly to everyone up front. We can reform our health care system into one that is accessible and patient-centred without compromising universal accessibility. Dozens of western European countries have successfully tackled health care reform without abandoning their commitment to a public system. With Albertans' entrepreneurial spirit there is no reason why we cannot do the same.

In order to achieve this result, any Alberta health care reform strategy should set principle-based guidelines around which an acceptable plan can be developed. As a starting point I would include the following principles. The system must be sustainable for ourselves and future generations financially over the short and long term. The system must measurably improve the quality of our health care, including shorter waiting times for medical procedures and improved patient outcomes as well as increased access to family doctors and specialists, and these should be tracked. The system must allow each individual the maximum amount of choice regarding their personal health care decisions. And the system should ensure that the best health care professionals and facilities remain available to every individual regardless of ability to pay. It's time to start building a health care system that we can be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency is the fastest growing and among the very youngest in our province. We value the education of our children so very much. In my view, ensuring that all of Alberta's children receive a world-class education is one of the most important roles our provincial government can play in building our province. In partnership with the important core values taught by parents, education provides a launching point for a healthy and contributing citizen. To deny a child the proper education is to greatly increase the risk of losing that child to ignorance, poverty, and even crime.

The provincial government spends more per capita than any other province on education. The problem is that tens of millions of those dollars are wasted on what is a massive, centralized bureaucracy in Edmonton. For example, in my view, we spend millions on unnecessary standardized testing for grade 3 students. We spend millions more finding ways to burden our classroom teachers with additional paperwork, record keeping, and other make-work projects. Personally, I want our teachers spending their time teaching rather than filling out forms.

It is my view that the provincial government should work on moving millions of dollars in funding away from centralized bureaucracies and towards front-line teachers and staff in our children's schools. This means flowing more funding directly to individual schools, where principals, teachers, and parents know best where it is needed.

Mr. Speaker, a distinguishing and important feature of Alberta's education system is that it provides parents with a greater range of educational choices than do other systems in North America. Although strong public schools are critical to our education system, charter schools, private schools, and home-schooling provide educational opportunities and teaching methods that are sometimes unavailable in our public system.

In fact, our public school boards have responded to competition from charter, home, and private schooling by rolling out a diverse range of excellent core and optional courses that are second to none in North America, which is why Anita and I send our oldest and plan to send our younger three when they are old enough to a public school in our community. Our public schools have proven themselves to be able to compete with the best that charter, home, and private schools have to offer. Continuing to foster this culture of educational innovation and competition will pay dividends for our teachers, parents, and children for decades to come.

Mr. Speaker, one of these educational innovations that I think we should explore more in this province involves student-centred learning. As Internet and computer technologies continue their exponential advances, it is becoming clear that current teaching models need to be altered. For over a hundred years the traditional classroom model of a teacher lecturing students in front of a chalkboard served as the best way to teach large numbers of students simultaneously. However, this traditional model also has its limitations. It often results in gifted students having their potential restricted by peers who may not learn as quickly. On the opposite end of the spectrum, some students who fail to grasp key concepts are moved on to higher grades and more complicated subject matter regardless of whether or not they are ready. This can result in frustration, the domination of a teacher's time by a few struggling students, perpetual poor grades, and even behavioural problems.

I believe Alberta has the opportunity to lead the world in the way we deliver education to our children. Using emerging technologies to complement the work of our teachers will fundamentally alter for the better the way we educate our kids. Imagine an education system where the classroom is entirely centred around the learning needs of each individual student. Imagine a learning model where a student can take the time needed in select pedagogies specific to his or her learning capacities to master a specific competency before moving on to new material. Gifted students would be given the tools to reach their full potential. Students who need more time and practice to master basic concepts would receive such before moving on. In short, our children would be able to learn at the right pace and in the right way for them rather than participating in the traditional one-size-fits-all approach. Big changes such as these are difficult; I know that. However, I'm convinced that Alberta's teachers and parents are up for the challenge.

Mr. Speaker, we can only build the public health and education systems Albertans want if we have the money and provincial wealth necessary to pay for it. During the '90s Alberta established itself as one of the best places in the world to do business. We limited government spending growth, paid off the debt, lowered taxes, and provided tax incentives to attract new businesses and industries. The people of our province proudly referred to this as the Alberta advantage. Although Alberta still possesses some of these same features, our edge has slipped dramatically over the last decade. Our personal and corporate tax advantage has decreased and will soon be surpassed by several provinces, specifically on the corporate side, and our provincial government has no plan to regain that advantage.

Only a few short years after declaring Alberta debt free, the provincial government has taken on billions of new and unnecessary debt, with no commitment to paying it off over the short term. As mentioned previously, tens of billions of dollars in investment in Alberta's energy sector have fled to neighbouring jurisdictions, due in large part to the new royalty framework.

Provincial government spending has been growing out of control for some time. Over the past several years we have spent far more per capita than any other province in Canada. Government spending increases have been more than double the rate of provincial inflation plus population growth. By refusing to control spending to sustainable yearly increases, this government now finds itself in the position of both taking on massive amounts of debt while facing the prospect of cutting the promised programs that Albertans have come to rely on.

The current government's failure to plan was a plan to fail. Despite the recent damage done to our financial reputation and well-being, it is not too late to turn things around. An obvious first step would be to reverse the damaging royalty hike imposed by the current government on our oil and gas entrepreneurs. However, we must also develop and implement a long-term financial plan to become more economically competitive with jurisdictions around the world. In short, it's time to restore the Alberta advantage.

The first component in a long-term financial plan for our province is to stop the financial bleeding. The current provincial government is spending beyond its means. It's accruing debt for future generations to pay. In my view, piling up billions in debt on the backs of future generations to dull the pain of a self-inflicted spending hangover is the height of irresponsibility. So, too, is expanding the size of government entitlement programs to the point where the only way to adequately fund such is to raise taxes or increase debt on future generations. Over the past several decades we have relied on nonrenewable resource wealth to lower taxation rates while increasing spending on infrastructure and social programs. Continuing this course is unsustainable. We must diversify our economy and decrease our reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue.

So how do we do this? In a global economy entrepreneurs, businesses, and ideas flow to where the best opportunities for success exist. The best minds don't necessarily work where they graduate. Skilled workers are highly mobile and will go wherever the best opportunities arise. A technological breakthrough is often not commercialized where it is created. When contemplating where best to develop a new technology or product, entrepreneurs and corporate executives generally seek out jurisdictions where levels of taxation and burdensome regulations are low. Historically governments who gamble taxpayer money on investing in the next big idea or industry generally end up with a bill and nothing to show for it at the end of the day. If Alberta wants to successfully diversify its economy, we must make our province more fiscally attractive to the brightest people, best entrepreneurs, and most successful businesses.

I want to see an Alberta where my children and grandchildren will have jobs in industries that people are just now starting to dream about. We need to start planning today to make this a reality. A long-term financial plan for Alberta will be needed to accomplish this goal. I believe that any such plan should include the following three components: first, limit yearly government spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth; second, as economic growth increases and government revenues begin to outstrip newly restricted spending levels, invest the majority of resultant budget surpluses in Alberta's heritage fund; and third, as annual earnings from the heritage fund increase, thereby replacing our reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues, gradually begin lowering personal and corporate income taxes, thus attracting new people and new business. This kind of sustainable fiscal planning will accomplish the goal of diversifying our economy and will leave our children with even greater opportunities than we enjoy today.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for Alberta to step up and lead again. It is time to restore the Alberta advantage. We can and we must do better. We owe it to generations of Albertans past, present, and future to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and value his commitment to public education and so on.

There's been a lot of debate about the merits of containing government spending to a combination of inflation and population growth. There's a sort of intuitive appeal to that, and I can see that as a short-term way to control spending, it could be a tool.

My concern is that that, then, doesn't account for growth in the economy. That means that your government will never ever participate in the growth of the economy. If we adopted that level, say, this year, then forevermore the Alberta government spending would be stuck at the levels of this year in real per capita terms, and the people 10 or 20 or 30 years from now might be saying: "Well, you know, why are we funding our schools at the levels of 2010 or building roads at the levels of 2010? Our economy has grown. Why can't we have public services that reflect that?" I'm wondering how you justify holding that position of keeping government spending to population growth and inflation in light of my comments?

Mr. Anderson: Very good question. This has been done in other jurisdictions. You'll see this in Bill 204, that I'm going to be introducing next week, actually. I agree with you. You don't want to in perpetuity cap spending at inflation plus growth. You want to be competitive with other jurisdictions across the country and be able to hire nurses and doctors and teachers, et cetera, at the same rates as other jurisdictions.

So what I would propose is that you limit it to the rate of inflation plus population growth, which in the short term will keep us above the average of the other Canadian provinces for a long time. But, eventually, if the average per capita spending of the rest of Canadian provinces is at a level and that cap brings us below that level, we should adjust the cap to bring us up to the average of the other provinces.

What we want to do is just make sure that (a) our spending is sustainable. If we don't do that, Member, we are leaving such a debt, not just a physical $6 billion which is projected debt, on the backs of our kids, but we're also leaving them with a totally unsustainable set of social programs that they will not be able to pay for without losing the advantages that we have.

The reason you don't tie it to GDP, just incidentally, is – actually this government has over the last 10 years generally tied, if you look back, to GDP. That's generally the increase that has been accomplished. As you can see, it is not sustainable. It doesn't take into account things like scales of economy, where, basically, the more people you have, the bigger pot of money you have. You should be able to deliver the same amount of services for a more efficient cost. It doesn't take that into account.

I do believe this has been used in Colorado. It's been used very effectively in Colorado and several U.S. states. You've seen what's happened to California and New York and other states that have not had this in place. Now they're just slashing social spending, education programs, health care benefits. It's mass chaos.

So, yeah, that would be the answer to your question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just ask the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere whether he could elaborate a little bit on his suggestion that Alberta should innovate and have some health care reforms. I think he alluded to the western European countries, some of whom have different models but still have universal public health care. Would he not agree that the Canada Health Act, which is federal legislation, is somewhat constraining in that regard? How would he propose that Alberta might go about reforming the health care system along some of these other models? Could he be a little bit more specific about what type of models he might be alluding to?

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. There have actually been several studies on comparing these western European health care systems to ours and what types of reforms we could make that would still be in line with the Canada Health Act. One of them I'm glad to see the minister is talking about, which is activity-based funding. That is important. That is something that's going to create more efficiencies in the health care system, in hospitals. I think that that's just one of many examples. There's not enough time to have that debate right now, but I'm more than happy to talk about that.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but we must move on.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, then Athabasca-Redwater, then Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, then the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today in reply to the Speech from the Throne, so eloquently delivered by our Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong. I heard of the China Clipper a few years after immigrating to Alberta in the early 70s, and even to this day becoming a successful Canadian professional football player remains rare for Canadians of Chinese descent.

I was trying to follow, so to speak, the hon. Lieutenant Governor starting in the late '80s, when I was organizing and running children and youth cultural and multicultural programs. I came to recognize the barriers and challenges faced by many immigrant and minority youth and how issues impacting visible minority youth are so invisible in the eyes of our institutions. These young people also bear the added challenges of not having the vocabularies or lacking the language to articulate the issues and experiences of exclusion and discrimination.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Then by chance I saw the Hon. Norman Kwong interviewed by a Vancouver television station, and he talked about his experience with racism and discrimination. I thought: this is the guy that my kids need to hear from and learn from, a person in a leadership position who has the audacity to talk about unpleasant, difficult subjects. Though I was not able to commit him to speak to my kids, I was very pleased and honoured to recognize and celebrate his many achievements at the 2001 inaugural Asian Heritage Month event in Calgary, including introducing him and members of the Calgary Stampeders to a gymnasium full of youth from the Chinese community. Mr Speaker, we are indeed very fortunate to have the Hon. Norman Kwong as our Lieutenant Governor, who also serves as a source of inspiration and dynamism to our evolving, modern, and vibrant province.

3:30

According to Statistics Canada the province of Alberta has seen a population expansion of about 10 per cent every five years since 2001. For the city of Calgary it was at 13 per cent over a five-year period. We are an energetic, youthful province with a healthy number of young families and a median age of 36 for our population. A whole 20 per cent of our population of 3.5 million people is under 15 years old. But our province also mirrors many other industrialized centres that are experiencing declining birth rates combined with more and more people living longer. The abundance of natural resources and a generally robust economy has attracted continuous waves of skilled as well as entrepreneurial people to this province on the prairies.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne, I believe, has responded to and reflects the hopes and values of Albertans. Our government's commitment to act on the recommendations from the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health includes creating the first-ever provincial health act, that would articulate our collective beliefs and values through a set of principles which will guide the development of public health policies and program deliveries. This is a demonstration of our government's responsiveness to Albertans' expectation to be engaged in our ongoing effort to sustain a high-quality, efficient, and accountable health system. The path forward is one of ingenuity, greater predictability, and continuous engagement. Equally important, our stakeholders and citizens alike will gain and share greater understanding and ownership of the public health service that Albertans and our nation hold dear. These, I believe, will be very much welcomed by the constituents of Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. Speaker, it's imperative that our work here also serves to instill a sense of pride in our young people and those who come here for the economic opportunities. In order for us to sustain future prosperity for our province, I believe our government's commitment to the following areas, articulated through the throne speech, will help us achieve that: to strengthen and ensure the province's leadership role in research and in the innovation system under Alberta Innovates, to continue to build world-class universities of the 21st century, to demonstrate that Albertans take great pride in our environment and that we will be a leader in clean energy production as well as our interest in building public services and transportation systems that unite our communities in commerce and culture. With these investments in our people and infrastructure a modern, dynamic, and energetic Alberta is within reach.

I mentioned in the beginning of my speech that, comparatively, we are a province with a high proportion of younger population. Our government listened to Albertans with young families and responded with our pledge to meet our promise to create 14,000 new child care spaces this year. In addition, our government is launching an exciting new vision for education to ensure that learning is responsive to the needs of our future generations.

Our seniors, that will comprise 15 per cent of our population by 2020, present an urgent need to create the necessary accommodations in a timely manner. Our government is offering Albertans the opportunity to invest in our future through the purchase of capital bonds to build the much-needed seniors' accommodations. Many Albertans agree that this is an innovative and welcoming way to address the needs of our seniors.

Mr. Speaker, Imagine Calgary, which captured Calgarians' long-term vision for the city at the turn of this century, highlighted the city's value of peace, safety, and security. Calgarians identified living in peace, feeling safe in our homes and throughout our city, as a cherished goal. I'm confident the citizens of Calgary would be pleased with this government's continued commitment to the safe communities initiative to sustain safe, strong, and caring communities.

This government understands the importance of being tough on crime, but it also recognizes the importance of strong and effective social programs to help those in need. For example, our government will continue to work to develop 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012 and to work on the 10-year plan to end homelessness.

Mr. Speaker, our strong, competitive economic foundation and our high-quality social programs will continue to attract new Canadians to Alberta. This province has a vision where all citizens feel a sense of belonging and pride and participate in all aspects of this province. After all, our diversity strengthens our competitive advantage. It will lead Alberta into a prosperous future as we work together with trading partners to enhance investment opportunities.

An example of this is our commitment to working towards a western economic partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to create Canada's largest boundary-free investment market. This economic market will be well positioned to trade with the emerging Asian markets, and working together with B.C. and Saskatchewan on the joint trade mission to China and Japan will enhance our economic potential in Alberta and western Canada.

While the global economic recession has provided many challenges – we have experienced the lowest energy prices in many years; we've seen the worst economic recession since the Great Depression – we also have seen a resilient population, willing to tackle today's challenges with courage and optimism. It is this optimism that encourages me, knowing that regardless of what challenges we face, Albertans are up to the task. Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is well positioned to overcome these challenges and steer towards an even more vibrant and dynamic future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and a privilege to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. After listening to the eloquent and the compelling words of Her Majesty's representative, I'm certain I'm not alone in having left this Chamber with a renewed admiration and respect. As an immigrant from mainland China I will do everything I can to make this province, this country, a better place for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege to serve the people of Edmonton-McClung for nearly two years. Time and again they continue to inspire and impress me with their dedication and accomplishments and love for this great province. In many ways the Speech from the Throne captures the spirit of my constituents. They understand that these are challenging economic times not only for the people of Alberta but for all the people of the world. They know that after several years of unprecedented growth our government must continue to build the infrastructure for the future growth of our economy. They know that we must continue to build our great social services such as health care and education so that they will continue to serve our future generations.

Under the dedicated leadership of our Premier I know we can face these challenges with pride. Thanks to the decisions that this government took before the recession began, Alberta is the best prepared province in Canada to emerge stronger than ever. Not only did this government eliminate more than $23 billion in debt, but it has built up substantial savings of $17 billion in the sustainability fund. Today this sustainability fund provides us with the financial cushion we need so that Alberta remains unique as the only debt-free jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Speaker, while our government is fortunate enough to be able to draw on these savings, other jurisdictions in Canada continue to fall deeper into debt, with greater interest payments to maintain that debt. It is by no accident that Alberta finds itself in this fortunate position today. It was the bold leadership of our government with the experience of previous recessions that enacted the policies that now keep this province debt free. I commend this government's commitment to eliminate the deficit within three years so that we can start replenishing the sustainability fund for future economic downturns. With an economy that is already one of the strongest and the most competitive in North America, I know this is a goal we can achieve.

Mr. Speaker, today Albertans and Alberta businesses enjoy the lowest income taxes, and we are the only jurisdiction in Canada that has no provincial sales tax. This government is keeping its commitment to eliminate health care premiums. With that said, I'm particularly proud of our Premier's pledge to Albertans: no new taxes. However, in a global economy that is becoming more competitive, we must do more, and we will.

The first piece of legislation that this Assembly will consider is the Alberta Competitiveness Act. As His Honour stated in the throne speech, it will send a powerful message of our resolve to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in the world. To this end, Mr. Speaker, we must continue to minimize the cost of doing business in Alberta. We must eliminate unnecessary regulations and barriers that restrict our economy from reaching its full potential.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of our government's leadership in building a western economic partnership with our two great neighbours, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. This partnership will bring lasting benefits to all Albertans not only by building Canada's largest free trade and investment market but strengthening interprovincial collaboration on international marketing, innovation, and procurement. By working together, we will be able to better market our goods in the emerging markets. I also look forward to working with other provinces across our great nation in reducing trade barriers for an even more competitive Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta must also ensure that our energy industry remains the strongest, the most competitive in North America. After decades of development through hard work and sacrifice Alberta has the most secure and stable energy supply in North America. Ensuring that we continue to have an even more secure and stable supply of energy, which has to be developed in an environmentally responsible way, is vital to our future prosperity, and I'm proud to say that Alberta is on the right track, is leading the way. Initiatives such as the competitiveness review and many environmental initiatives are building an even more competitive 21st century energy industry that will benefit Albertans for generations.

Competitiveness also means having the most advanced, world-class infrastructure in North America. In my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we can see the positive results of this government's commitment to Albertans. The completion of the Anthony Henday ring road will provide an efficient transportation network for Edmontonians. Last year funding was approved for the construction of overpasses on Lessard Road and Callingwood Road, while planning continues for the proposed Cameron Heights overpass. Once completed, these overpasses will provide a safer and more convenient commute for my constituents and all Edmontonians. Eliminating these traffic lights will hopefully reduce the level of noise for my constituents who live alongside of the ring road.

Mr. Speaker, a competitive, next generation economy also means having the best education system in the world. Throughout Alberta new schools are being built for a new generation of students. Nearly $1 billion of funding for the smaller class size initiative has been targeted at lowering or maintaining class size averages. Two of these new schools have been planned for my constituency, Edmonton-McClung. In the Hamptons area the K to 9 Sister Annata Brockman Catholic school will be completed this fall, and in the Grange area a K to 9 public school will be completed in 2011. I'm very pleased that His Honour's speech dedicated our government to develop a new vision for education that will successfully serve a new generation of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour's Speech from the Throne outlined the bold vision of this Premier for a truly next generation economy. Thanks to the hard work of Albertans and the leadership of this government we are well positioned to be the most competitive jurisdiction in North America in the years to come. While we face the greatest economic recession in over half a century, we will recover. Albertans are a courageous people. I'm proud of this government's plan to prevail from this economic recession and build an even stronger province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak in reply to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I'd like to join my colleagues who previously spoke in thanking His Honour for his dedication and public service to the people of Alberta these last many years.

Mr. Speaker, while His Honour's speech detailed the challenges we currently face as Albertans, I'm confident that this Premier and this government have the right plan to build a truly next generation economy. Thanks to the responsible and prudent financial fiscal leadership of this government we find ourselves in the strongest position of any government in North America. During years of unprecedented growth this government paid off nearly $23 billion in debt, saved $17 billion in the sustainability fund, and invested another $8 billion in the heritage trust fund. This forward-thinking leadership continues to protect our key social services from the worst recession the global economy has seen in decades. Furthermore, with low taxes our province remains one of the most competitive jurisdictions to raise a family or conduct business in North America.

However, our greatest asset continues to be the hard-working, well-educated, and entrepreneurial people of this great province. With the right tools for success I know that there is nothing our people cannot accomplish together. One of these essential tools is a flexible, strong education system that all Albertans can depend on, regarded as one of the best in the world. A next generation economy demands a renewed long-term vision of education in our province.

Last year I was honoured to be asked by the Minister of Education to serve as co-chair for the Inspiring Education committee to conduct a dialogue with Albertans on the future of education in our province. The objectives of the committee were threefold: to heighten public appreciation of education in Alberta and the value of that education to a strong economy; secondly, to develop a clear understanding of what it will mean to be an educated Albertan in 2030 – in other words, what are the key outcomes that we want out of our education system? What's its purpose? What will it need to deliver in 20 years? – and thirdly, to help create a basis for a broad policy framework describing the overall direction, principles, and long-term goals for education in Alberta.

From April 2009 to June 2009 the Inspiring Education committee met with thousands of Albertans in Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Bonnyville, Red Deer, and beyond, right across this province. Others joined in online, and others met in smaller focus groups. Mr. Speaker, when the committee's report is released, I'm confident that it will help contribute to Alberta having the strongest plan in Canada for a 21st century education system, and Albertans can be proud that their input served as the foundation for this new vision for education in Alberta. After all, education is a lifelong journey that belongs to the students.

It's the same approach that the government is taking as we develop a 21st century vision for our publicly funded health care system. The Minister's Advisory Committee on Health recently proposed a new Alberta health act, the development of which would be guided by Albertans. At the same time, I'm very pleased that the government is providing stable, five-year funding to Alberta Health Services. These initiatives will ensure a health care system that is both patient focused and prepared to deal with growing cost pressures. This funding will help ensure that Alberta's seniors and my rural constituents can count on accessibility of health care and health care that meets their needs.

I'm also pleased that His Honour's speech outlined the government's plan to direct proceeds from the sale of Alberta capital bonds to seniors' accommodations, including continuing care and supportive living facilities. This government's renewed commitment to strengthening the social services that empower our citizens will be key to building a globally competitive economy in the 21st century.

As the Member for Athabasca-Redwater I was particularly pleased that His Honour's speech addressed a key economic driver of our province: our agriculture and agrifood industries. [some applause] Hear, hear. Through hard work, sacrifice, and ingenuity Alberta's agriculture producers have helped build our great province into a world-class producer of safe, high-quality food products. Today these producers face an increasingly globalized economy where competitiveness is crucial to long-term sustainability. Through initiatives such as the livestock and meat strategy we will continue to ensure that our producers are even more competitive to beat the competition from other countries and break into new emerging markets.

Another key driver of our next generation economy will be the continued responsible and sustainable development of our oil sands. As the Member for Athabasca-Redwater I have witnessed first-hand the tremendous economic prosperity they have brought to the province and the tremendous growth pressures. Today, more than 50 per cent of our GDP can be attributed to energy development, and Albertans are grateful for the natural resources our province has been blessed with. From our world-class social services to high-paying jobs energy development has been a primary contributor to our development as a province. As the rightful owners of these resources we must continue to ensure greater value-added development here in Alberta. This will mean Albertans receiving greater value for the resources they own, more jobs, more knowledge-based jobs, and a more competitive, stronger, more stable economy.

Part of this government's strategy to encourage value-added development is the collection of bitumen in kind rather than cash from energy companies involved in the oil sands development. Under current guidelines the government reserves the option to take bitumen in kind rather than cash, just as we do with our conventional oil. Essentially, the government could use this bitumen to stimulate value-added development here in Alberta or diversify our customer base. Mr. Speaker, I'm excited for the opportunities this program will have for the future development as a global energy producer and for my constituency, in particular. With the second-largest proven reserves of oil in the world the oil sands provide a safe and reliable source of energy for our fellow Canadians, the United States, and other emerging international partners.

To ensure the continued leadership of Alberta's economy, including the energy sector, our government is undertaking a competitiveness review to encourage additional investment. In an increasingly competitive global economy I'm pleased that this government is determined to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in North America to invest in and to do business in. Under the leadership of this Premier I know we will succeed. Albertans are by nature a forward-thinking, innovative people who do not settle for second-best, and they want a government with a positive vision that reflects their priorities and fulfills the potential of this great province.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Speech from the Throne delivered that. It outlines the government's vision of a 21st century education system that provides Albertans with the tools to succeed. It outlines the government's commitment to a sustainable, publicly-funded health care system that future generations will be able to depend on. It outlines this government's plan to ensure that our economy is the most competitive in North America. In short, Mr. Speaker, this government is working hard to meet the priorities of Albertans.

Together we will face the changes of the 21st century with the same ingenuity and optimism that has characterized Albertans and my rural constituents for generations. I'm very proud to be a fourth-generation Albertan, and my children are the fifth generation of our family in this province.

I'd like to again thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his years of public service to our province and the impact that he has left with all of us. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne, delivered so eloquently by His Honour the Hon. Norman Kwong. I'd also like to thank His Honour for his dedication to Alberta and his commitment to preserving and enhancing the heritage, traditions, and character of our province as Lieutenant Governor over the past five years. I'm sure that His Honour would also like me to acknowledge that he is the first and only great Alberta football player to serve in this illustrious role.

The Speech from the Throne highlighted many of this government's priorities. In the conclusion of this inspirational speech I can honestly say on behalf of my constituents that we have reason to be very optimistic about our province's future.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has one of the most volatile revenue streams in North America, being heavily reliant on resource revenues. No one could foresee the depth of the global economic downturn that we're currently facing. Economic fluctuations of this magnitude are out of Alberta's control. This is, indeed, a world-wide phenomenon.

What we can control is how we prepare for these fluctuations. Our government had the foresight to recognize that booms do not last forever and that fiscal responsibility and savings are crucial to the future prosperity of our province. To that end, Mr. Speaker, this government socked away some $17 billion in a one-of-its-kind sustainability fund, a fund that will allow Alberta, unlike any other jurisdiction in North America, to weather this economic storm without saddling our grandchildren with a debt burden. This foresight has allowed our government to uphold our ambitious capital plan, which is crucial to creating jobs in Alberta and providing the infrastructure that we need today and, indeed, for the future.

This is especially important because as the Lieutenant Governor stated in the throne speech, construction costs today are lower. In fact, Mr. Speaker, tenders for major projects are coming in significantly below cost estimates: more bang for our buck. Therefore, not only are we investing in vital infrastructure projects that Albertans need, but we are getting exceptional value for our investment in capital projects: schools, roads, hospitals, and much, much more. This government's capital plan supports an ever-changing Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our population and our economy have experienced tremendous growth in past years. At the height of the boom this province grew by the equivalent of a city the size of Red Deer per year, and we continue to grow by some 50,000 per year today. It is vital that our capital plan reflect the changing needs of Alberta. As an example, our continued economic and population growth have led to increased pressure to further develop our provincial highway network. Many of my constituents travel Alberta's highways on a daily basis, and I know they appreciate the government's continued efforts to foster the safe, efficient movement of people and goods throughout Alberta. I also know that through our government's preparation for this economic downturn we'll be able to continue to invest in our provincial highway network. I know that many of my constituents are very anxious to see the twinning of highway 19 between Nisku and the town of Devon. Investing in roads and highways is one of many infrastructure projects that our government has committed to.

As I mentioned earlier, we are a resource-based province, but our greatest resource is our people. As such, Mr. Speaker, services that touch people's lives each and every day are vital. The direction laid out in the throne speech puts a strong focus on health and education. I was pleased to hear the throne speech highlight that we will evolve our education system so that it will continue to enable every student to reach their full potential as a lifelong learner and citizen.

Mr. Speaker, with advances in technology traditional classroom teaching has become only one method for our students to learn. Interactive media and the Internet have become tools in our learning environment, something that was not even a dream 20 years ago. Our government has acknowledged this change, among others, which is why Inspiring Education was launched, and the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater referenced that in his speech earlier. This consultation was designed to advise the government of how Albertans see the future of basic education in our province. The throne speech highlighted that in response to this initiative, our government will launch a new vision for the basic education system in the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad to hear that this government has employed such forward-thinking tactics and has and continues to anticipate change. By preparing for this change and beginning to adapt now, we will see our education system remain one of the best in the world and well suited to ensure the prosperity and success of each and every student.

To complete the support for Albertans becoming lifelong learners, this government has continued to demonstrate leadership in our postsecondary education system. Campus Alberta, which is our province's collective postsecondary system, has seen two of our province's exceptional college facilities become universities, of course, Mr. Speaker, those being Mount Royal in Calgary and Grant MacEwan right here in Edmonton. What that has done is grow our degree-granting capacity and overall profile.

Further, ApplyAlberta was recently launched, which integrates the application process to all 26 publicly funded postsecondary institutions in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this initiative will enhance participation of Albertans as well as students from other jurisdictions in our province's exceptional advanced education system. This comes in addition to our system's current accomplishments, which include the University of Alberta being ranked the fourth best university in Canada and a respectable 59th world-wide.

Mr. Speaker, as the Lieutenant Governor stated during the throne speech, our global economy is undergoing profound changes. Here in Alberta the same technology and knowledge that has allowed our province to prosper in the past will need to be updated in order to remain competitive. Under the leadership of our Premier I'm proud to say that our government has recognized the changes in the global economy and is taking measures to ensure that Alberta remains prosperous and competitive not only in a Canadian context but also in a global context.

There is no single facet of our province that can foster competitiveness in our domestic and international economy. Rather, a comprehensive approach is needed, bringing together industry and government in order to develop an integrated strategy to ensure that Alberta's industries will be able to adequately respond to the changes that they face. Mr. Speaker, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is an example of the government's foresight and dedication to ensuring a healthy, thriving provincial economy. Essentially, Bill 1 will ensure that Alberta is ahead of the curve in responding to the changes in our global economy as they occur.

The Speech from the Throne allowed me the opportunity to reflect on the values of Albertans, especially those in my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to hold the trust of my constituents as their representative. I serve at the pleasure of the people of Devon, Leduc county, the city of Leduc, the town of Beaumont, the villages of New Sarepta and Hay Lakes, and two divisions of Camrose county. I'm very proud that my constituency was recognized by Alberta Venture magazine as the best place to do business in Alberta in 2009, thanks to the work of the Leduc-Nisku EDA and the many great business leaders and volunteers.

I'm proud to live in a province and an area whose citizens have such a dedicated work ethic, who persevere through difficult times and flourish through good times, who have a sincere, devoted commitment to fostering continued growth in our economy and providing for their families, and who take pride in calling themselves Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be an Albertan, and with our hard-working citizens and the sound leadership of our Premier I'm very optimistic about our future.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always an honour to have the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to take this opportunity to highlight some of the important initiatives my ministry is working on in response to the Speech from the Throne, delivered on February 4 by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to sincerely thank His Honour the Honourable Norman Kwong for his very distinguished service to the province of Alberta. His Honour is an inspirational champion who has shown that it is possible to achieve your dreams twice. So to His Honour I express my deepest gratitude and appreciation for his wisdom, his wit, and his dedication to the people of Alberta.

The government's decision to stay its course through the recent downturn in the economy has ensured that vulnerable Albertans will continue to receive the supports and services they need. My ministry focuses on programs that are vital to supporting seniors and persons with disabilities. I am proud that support for these groups continues to be a priority of this government. This priority is reflected in our comprehensive seniors' benefits package and programs for people with disabilities, both of which are among the best in the country.

For seniors we provide the highest monthly cash supplement, with the most generous income thresholds, through our Alberta seniors' benefit. This benefit provides $280 per single senior and $420 per month per senior couple. In fact, my ministry will provide over $400 million in the 2010-11 fiscal year to seniors through income supplements and assistance with expenses for prescription drugs, long-term care, housing, dental work, and eyeglasses.

For people with disabilities, including developmental disabilities, we provide one of the most generous monthly income support benefits through the assured income for the severely handicapped program, more commonly known as AISH. AISH clients receive a financial benefit of up to $1,188 per month as well as comprehensive health benefits for items and services like prescription drugs and dental and eye care, and they may also receive assistance to help pay for child care or special diets.

Like the rest of the country our population in Alberta is aging. Today there are approximately 391,000 seniors in our province. By 2016 that number will increase to more than half a million. We know this demographic shift will present a number of challenges and opportunities for all sectors of society, including governments, nonprofit and volunteer organizations, families, and individuals. We also know that the needs and circumstances of baby boomers will be different than those of our current seniors. As Alberta's population ages, we will need a holistic, aligned, co-ordinated, and sustainable approach to meeting the needs of an aging population.

In preparation for an aging population my ministry created the Demographic Planning Commission. The commission's role was to consult with Albertans and advise on meeting the needs of both current and future seniors. The commission asked Albertans what they believe future seniors will need and what they believe are the shared roles of families, individuals, communities, the private sector, and government in meeting these needs. Over 10,000 Albertans of all ages completed an online survey, and the commission met with over 100 stakeholder organizations across the province.

The three overriding messages we heard were, one, the need to ensure sustainability; two, the need for more choices; and three, the need to start planning now. This work along with input from other ministries and research is guiding the development of an aging population policy framework. This strategy provides seniors with more options that will allow them to remain as independent as possible for as long as possible while addressing changing health and housing needs. That's our continuing care strategy.

When thinking about care and housing options, many seniors have told us that they want to stay in their communities, with the people and in the places that make them feel most comfortable. This government's aim is to accelerate the growth and modernization of health and personal care services and to increase housing options across the continuing care system. A key part of the continuing care strategy is to build infrastructure that meets the aging in the right place vision.

I'm very pleased that part of the 2010-11 budget announcements included another $50 million for the development of more than 500 new affordable supportive living spaces in communities across Alberta. This government has now invested approximately $465 million for the development of approximately 9,000 new or up-graded affordable supportive living spaces since 1999.

I'm also proud that the new Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, which was taken through the House by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, supports my ministry's goal to improve the quality, supply, and client choice in the continuing care system. The new act, which is expected to be proclaimed in April, also recognizes and reflects the changing needs of Albertans who want to live as independently as possible while having access to the accommodations and services they need.

The act will ensure quality accommodation and services that enhance the safety and security of residents whether or not the facility is funded by government. It will also improve my ministry's ability to keep the standards current and will introduce features to meet the needs of an evolving supportive living sector. Under the new act there will continue to be a process for addressing complaints and concerns about accommodations and services as well as enhanced options that will allow my ministry to take the necessary steps, which may include closure if a facility operator consistently fails to meet standards.

Another important piece of legislation is the Protection for Persons in Care Act. This improved act will help ensure that safeguards are provided for adults receiving care and support services from government-funded agencies by improving abuse prevention, monitoring, and follow-up when abuse has been reported. This improved act will make a real difference in this province by enhancing the protection of vulnerable adults and ensuring abuse complaints continue to be addressed effectively. The act will also make people who provide care to clients more accountable for their actions in preventing abuse and protecting clients from harm. I thank, once again, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for taking this act through the House.

I'm also very proud of the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, or AGTA, which came into effect on October 30, 2009. The AGTA strives to maintain the dignity and autonomy of Albertans and allows adults to remain as independent as possible for as long as possible. I believe this legislation will improve the lives of many Albertans as it reflects a more current understanding of mental capacity and supported decision-making. The AGTA provides more decision support options through the capacity assessment continuum while providing protective safeguards for some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

One more program area I would like to mention is our persons with developmental disabilities, or the PDD, program. Without question, the PDD program is a good program and very important to the over 9,200 adults with developmental disabilities who we support. These individuals are among the most vulnerable Albertans, and the PDD program is critical to their personal independence and inclusion in their community. Because it is such a vital program, we want to ensure it is sustainable into the future. That is why I was pleased that with the 2010-11 budget we were able to maintain funding for the PDD program.

However, at the same time, it's important to improve the PDD program and make it even better. Over the past year we have received a lot of input from stakeholders about ways to improve the PDD program. The PDD community boards consulted with over 200 people, and I met with individuals supported by the program, their families, and many community agencies who deliver PDD supports. From those consultations we developed six priority actions. The six priority actions lay out very clear directions and goals, and these are intended to achieve clarity, consistency, effectiveness and efficiency, and sustainability. These changes will ensure that each person receiving PDD supports will be assessed in a common way and that the funding and supports they receive will be consistent. To me this is a fair and balanced approach. These changes will also ensure the PDD program remains viable today and into the future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, my ministry and I have been working very hard to bring forward initiatives and changes in legislation that better protect our most vulnerable adults while providing some of the best benefits and supports in the country. We remain committed to working with our community partners and agencies to fulfill my ministry's mandate to support vulnerable Albertans and enhance their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for her speech, and I have a question to ask. She talked about, I think, 2,000 additional spaces – maybe that's not the right number, but she can correct me – in seniors' housing, and I'm assuming that these will be assisted living type of beds. I'd like to know, first of all, if any of those beds are being achieved by the conversion of beds that are currently medical beds, that are long-term care beds specifically, and how seniors in assisted living in the new beds who have medical needs – require nursing care, for example, or require a lot of drugs, require assistance for bathing, perhaps, or toileting or going to meals – will be able to be accommodated in assisted living beds and how that will be made affordable for those seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To correct the hon. member from across the way, I did say that this year, in our 2010-11 budget, we have $50 million for the development of more than 500 new affordable supportive living spaces in our communities across Alberta. Then to further let him know what I said in my speech, this government has now invested approximately $465 million for the development of approximately 9,000 – 9,000 – new or upgraded affordable supportive living spaces since 1999.

Mr. Speaker, to further address the question from the member, my department is responsible for supportive or assisted living care. The long-term care is still within the Alberta Health and Wellness department and within Alberta Health Services. I can speak to what I am responsible for, and I can tell you that the majority of the spaces that we provide through our supportive living are new. We have refurbished some of our lodge spaces.

I can tell you that we don't call them beds anymore because they're far more than just beds. If you've looked at any of our affordable supportive living facilities that we have in Alberta, they're beautiful accommodations with entire bachelor suite type of apartments with even small kitchenettes in some cases. So when we talk about affordable supportive living, we're talking about some beautiful accommodations for our seniors, not just beds anymore but complete units where our seniors will be very comfortable in a very beautiful, home-like setting with their friends and family and in their communities. That's what we're striving for, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I appreciate that. I have a wonderful vision now of these units. But the question really relates to people who require a level of care that would normally be accommodated in a long-term care unit and whether or not any of these new assisted living beds are being achieved at the conversion of long-term care beds. I know that it crosses the boundary, but the minister should have an idea of how many units, lovely units, coming into her jurisdiction are coming at the expense of long-term care beds and how patients with needs like requiring assistance being toileted and taken for meals and bathing will be accommodated in an affordable way if there are not long-term care beds for them to go to. How will the assisted living beds, units, facilities be able to accommodate those people in a way that they and their families can afford?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under my program in Seniors and Community Supports I am not aware of any long-term care beds or units that have been converted to assisted or supportive living. I believe that any long-term care bed that we have now in the province of Alberta has remained long-term care and has not been converted.

The health care needs of our seniors in assisted living – let's talk about level 4, designated assisted living – are managed by Health and Wellness.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader again.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the first legitimate opportunity to do so, having moved to adjourn debate, I now wish, as the Speaker afforded the opportunity legitimately to do so, to move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, February 22.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:22 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On February 18, 2010, John Babcock died at the age of 109 years. He was a Canadian soldier and was Canada's last living link with the Great War, World War I. In our prayer today let us remember those Canadians who served and continue to serve our country. We give thanks to them and mourn the loss of those who have given their lives for us. Through Your grace grant them all glory, laud, and honour. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now participate in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, all. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of grade 6 students from Camilla school in Rivière Qui Barre in my constituency. They're just embarking upon their week at the Leg., and I can tell you they're very excited about doing that and very excited about the program that you and your group put on. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and they're accompanied by teacher Mrs. Amanda Murray and parent helpers Mr. David Soetaert, Mrs. Lori Reaville, Mr. Shawn Dolan, Mrs. Bianca Patterson, Mrs. Karen Streeter, Mrs. Monique Perrott, and Mr. Walter DeRudder. They're in the members' gallery, as I said. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 49 of the hardest working and brightest young people in my constituency from St. Benedict Catholic school. They're joined by Mrs. Lynne Holzman, Mrs. Tina Letki, Mrs. Kristie Brahim, and Mrs. Niki Hodgins.

We had a good chat outside, Mr. Speaker, about the different levels of government, about what we do here. These young people understood the laws that we pass, and we talked about what we're doing in spring session, defending the budget. Now they're going to see what we're doing here today. We have young people that want to be doctors, teachers, a veterinarian. One young fellow wants to be in the army, a hockey player, but none of them said politicians. Hopefully, we can inspire these young people in my constituency to run for public service in the service of this wonderful province, as many of us have done here.

Mr. Speaker, they're all in the public gallery. I would ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of all of my friends in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 27 guests that attended the Girl Guides of Canada 100th anniversary celebration earlier today in the rotunda.

Girl Guides of Canada has a rich tradition of leadership and community building in Alberta and Canada. When I joined Girl Guides of Canada 50 years ago, at the age of six, in the city where it all began a hundred years ago, St. Catharines, Ontario, I didn't realize that I was to be a member of the largest women's organization in the world, and I didn't know that I was about to have one of the greatest adventures of my life as a Brownie, a Girl Guide, a Sea Ranger, a leader, and a member of Trefoil Guild. On this day, February 22, we celebrate Thinking Day around the world, the birthdate of both Lord and Lady Baden-Powell.

Today's celebration in the rotunda is a testament to the contributions made by the Girl Guides over the last century. Mr. Speaker, seated in your gallery – I would ask them to stand as I call their names – are Margaret Utgoff, provincial commissioner; Henny Smit-Nielsen, provincial international adviser; Lori Coghill, parkland area commissioner; Pat Guillemaud, provincial PR adviser; past provincial commissioners Lissi Westergaard and Kay Clement; the 2010 committee chair, Terri Funk; area commissioners Beverly Simpson Headon and Kathy Batty; Leslie Horton, provincial cookie adviser; Edie Jubenville, provincial program adviser; Sue Fortunka, provincial program adviser; and Enidd Isaac, chair, national international selections committee.

Seated in the members' gallery are the Guiders Marguerite Helps, Mary Gerritson, Margaret Campbell, Liz Barter, Alice Mah, Madelyn Underhay, Laura Balding, Susan Balding, Liz Cotton, Janeen Marko, Isabelle Marko, Annie Desautels, Coral Desautels, and staff members Fennie Fraser and Mary Chibuk. They're standing in our galleries. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Assembly to give them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: I asked the question: how many boxes of Girl Guide cookies per year in the province of Alberta? I was told there were over 250,000 at $4, so that's over $1 million for cookies. So let's enjoy our cookies and milk.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the winners of the ATCO Olympic contest from my constituency, their family members, and the director of government affairs for ATCO. Representing ATCO is a name that is very familiar to this Assembly. His name is Mr. Roger Mazankowski. I'd ask you to rise. I'll ask the winners of the contest to rise as I mention their names as well: Lexie Lynn, Enrique Schwanke, and Chanel Perri. I'd also ask their families to rise with them and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very large group of firefighters who are here today in support of Bill 201 and to witness its second reading this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I believe they're seated in both galleries. They represent locals from across this province and beyond. With us we have firefighters from local 4739 Leduc, local 3021 Spruce Grove, local 2494 Fort McMurray, local 237 Lethbridge, local 209 Edmonton, local 867 Winnipeg, local 263 Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie local 2770, local 1190 Red Deer, local 255 Calgary, and local 2461 Strathcona as well as the Alberta Firefighters Association. With them are two other very special guests, Sharon Harris and Braxton Harris. They are the widow and son of Edmonton fire captain Alexander "Rainbow" Harris, who passed away, sadly, from esophageal cancer on June 20, 2009. These are just a sample of the very, very brave men and women across our province who lay their lives on the line every day to keep us and our loved ones safe. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2010 Olympics in Vancouver is a very special time for our country. For those who are able to attend, it will bring memories to last a lifetime. I'm introducing to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Enrique Schwanke, who won a trip to the Vancouver Olympics, along with Mr. Jason Schwanke Sr., Mr. Jason Schwanke Jr., and Alma Sarmiento. My colleague for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview will be doing a member's statement to follow about this trip. I believe they are seated in the public gallery. I would ask these four individuals to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Dave Hodgins. Mr. Hodgins started as a volunteer firefighter many, many years ago and was vice-president of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association and is now president of Fire Prevention Canada. More importantly, Dave Hodgins is our manager, managing director of Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Mr. Hodgins is here to witness the introduction of Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010, that will be introduced later by our Member for Calgary-Montrose. I'd ask Mr. Hodgins to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Then join with me in recognizing the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, who's celebrating an anniversary today of his arrival on Planet Earth. I don't know the exact date, but I think it's considerably more than that identified in a very transparent moment by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Girl Guides of Canada Centennial

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise to mark the 100th anniversary of the Girl Guides of Canada.

This past weekend I was honoured to be a part of the celebration held in my constituency and to have the opportunity to learn and visit with Guides and Scouts, the parents, and volunteer leaders and to hear about the awesome job they are doing in my constituency.

The Girl Guides of Canada have a powerful and meaningful mission statement. They work to enable girls to be confident, resourceful, and courageous and to make a difference in the world. In a world where our young women face so many challenges and opportunities, it is important for organizations such as this one to be there to help guide them along the way. The leaders work with the girls and teach them to be honest and trustworthy, use resources wisely, respect themselves and others, recognize and use their talents and abilities, protect the environment, live with courage and strength, and share in the sisterhood of Guiding.

Over the last century hundreds of thousands of girls have been touched by the Girl Guides organization, including two of my daughters, Kristen and Jacqueline, and, as we heard, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. Girl Guides of Canada has engaged girls and women in fun activities that have built new friendships, allowed them to learn new skills, serve their community, and grow as young women. Perhaps most importantly, Girl Guides provides the tools and resources for the girls of today to become the leaders of tomorrow.

Guides would not be possible without the commitment of thousands of women who dedicate countless hours to this worthy organization. Annually on February 22, which is called Thinking Day, Girl Guides from across the world take time to remember and celebrate the birthday of their founders, Lord and Lady Baden-Powell.

I would like to welcome all the Girl Guides and their leaders who are here at the Legislature today to celebrate their hundredth anniversary and to thank the hon. Speaker for hosting the celebration in the rotunda earlier today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Bissell Centre Centennial

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to the attention of this Assembly a very special occasion celebrated recently by an organization in our constituency, the hundredth anniversary of the Bissell Centre. The Bissell Centre is a nonprofit, charitable society that has been serving the community of Edmonton since 1910 with a formal vision statement of neighbour helping neighbour.

The centre started as a Methodist Church mission founded by William and Florence Pike. They worked from a storefront office at 96th Street and 103A Avenue, where the current police station now stands. Programs originally offered included a Sunday school, social groups, and a Ukrainian Sunday service to help Ukrainian immigrants settle into their new community. The mission later merged with the Presbyterian McQueen Institute, taking the name All People's Mission in 1925. When the Great Depression hit in the 1930s, All People's Mission began to focus its services to support people living on low and modest incomes. In 1935 the organization was christened the Bissell Institute after farm machinery baron Torrence Bissell donated $25,000, allowing the centre to move into its new brick building on the northeast corner of 96th Street and 103A Avenue.

Throughout its history the Bissell Centre has been an inclusive force for social change; for example, helping Second World War Japanese-Canadians who had been stripped of their property or advocating on behalf of First Nations people to protest laws preventing them from speaking their own languages.

The Bissell of today at 105 Avenue and 96th Street is a busy and ambitious operation, having expanded to the west and east centres downtown. The Bissell Centre has a powerful philosophy, that is one of hope for human potential and social justice. The Bissell Centre believes that every person has the right to have basic human needs satisfied and that each of us has a responsibility to care for one another.

Mr. Speaker, I invite you and the members of the Legislature to join me in celebrating the hundredth anniversary of this very important, vital institution.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

ATCO Celebrating Excellence Program

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and share a great program with you, the ATCO celebrating excellence program, that rewards young Albertans who have demonstrated leadership in their communities. Students in grade 4 through grade 12 from every corner of the province were invited to share stories about how they make a difference in their communities. Thousands responded. Of those thousands, 83 students were awarded laptops, that will assist them in their studies. The other 166, one boy and one girl from each constituency in Alberta, were selected for a once-in-a-lifetime experience this year.

With the support of the Alberta government these young leaders had the privilege of spending a day at the Olympic Games watching competition, a medal ceremony, and visiting Alberta House in the heart of downtown Vancouver. Because of the wonderful things that they do in their communities, these students were rewarded with a chance to witness the dedication and the determination of the world's best athletes. There is no doubt that they've come home inspired by the heroes of the Olympics, and we hope that this experience will encourage them to continue being involved in their communities and making a positive contribution to our great province.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all members to join me in congratulating these young people and all of the students who shared their stories through this program. These young leaders are our future, and we are so thankful that they are committed to making Alberta an even better place to live.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before moving to question period, I just wish to advise that when I call Orders of the Day in approximately an hour or so from now, I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay to rise and ask for unanimous consent to make a procedural change in the Order Paper. If you look in the Order Paper, we have motions other than government motions 503 and 505. The member will be asking for a switch, that Motion 503 become 505, that Motion 505 become 503. Unanimous consent will have to be given in order to deal with that procedural matter.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electoral Reform

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Justice minister said that the most important thing for Elections Alberta to do was to ensure that Albertans have confidence in their electoral system. Well, Albertans do not have confidence in their electoral system. They want to remedy 2008's pitiful 41 per cent voter turnout. Isn't the minister concerned that the erosion of democracy in Alberta is happening, enough to commit to allowing postsecondary campuses to have polling stations for students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that democracy is eroding in Alberta. Everyone is entitled to their opinion; that's what democracy is all about. However, we will be, as I said last Thursday, introducing legislation in due course that will respond to recommendations that have been made by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, a 41 per cent voting turnout is not a success in most people's books. That's a failing grade.

Of the 182 recommendations from the former Chief Electoral Officer one key recommendation was to increase accessibility of polls. I would be placing polling stations in high-traffic public locations. Will the minister do the same?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it's not my job to do that. It's the Chief Electoral Officer's job to do that.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, that question has been raised in this House before, and I'd be happy either now or at some other point in the debate to expand on the impracticalities of that.

Dr. Swann: Practical or not, Mr. Speaker, last week the new Chief Electoral Officer said that it wasn't his job to get people out to vote. This seems quite consistent with this minister's approach to electoral reform. Was this by design or was this coincidence that you both said the same thing?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure I understood the question, but if the question was, "Did I intend to ensure that people could have sensible and fair access to vote?" then our response to the report will address that in a very full way and ensure that that happens.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Protection of Children in Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The $27 million cut from child intervention services will without a doubt adversely affect the care of vulnerable children and youth. There will be fewer dollars for caseworkers, that are already overwhelmed by caseloads, caseworkers that supervise children and youth in very vulnerable situations, that provide safety and security when children need it most. To the Premier: how will the cuts to intervention services not lead to reduced monitoring in homes protecting children? How will it not produce that?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, children are a priority for this government, especially their safety, and those that are also in the care of government. The minister has laid out a very clear, articulate plan, and she'd be able to comment further on her plan.

Dr. Swann: Well, to the minister, then: how will the cuts not reduce services and monitoring in homes where children are most at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the cuts I can tell you, hon. member, I appreciate your concern, and I can understand that concern. I want you to know very clearly that with the change in this budget, the way the budget has been allocated, the restructuring of this budget will not affect front-line staff, critical workers, which you're concerned about. It will not affect accreditation of programs. In fact, the change in programs is because of efficiencies that have been created, and I can share that with you in another question.

Dr. Swann: That's really hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, when we've seen 75 per cent cuts in the last three years to in-home supervision. How can the minister justify these comments?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing I've learned, especially in this session, is that I need to look into the statistic that this member has brought forward. I don't know if it's accurate. Having said that, I can tell you that the efficiencies that have been created with child intervention very clearly have been with the movement of the youth that are in group homes, which on average per youth is $14,000 per month, for more permanency in foster homes. We've created over 900 spaces with foster homes and kinship care over the last 18 months. Foster homes and kinship care are on average about $1,500 a month, so there are savings and efficiencies in that area.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cabinet Policy Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why are appointments of Conservative MLAs to the Treasury Board and the Agenda and Priorities Committee done through an order in council, which is published, while appointments to the Conservative cabinet policy committees are not done through order in council but done through the Premier's office? Those appointments are done in secrecy.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, they can't be secret because everybody knows who sits on what committee, so I'm not quite sure where the member is going with it. We do have members that are appointed to what we call cabinet policy committees. They're there to talk about issues that come forward from Albertans, whether it be looking at regulations or laws that some constituents are asking us to put in place. They vet, discuss it, and bring it forward as a recommendation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: what legislative authority is the Premier using to appoint and pay Conservative caucus members to the internal cabinet policy committees, which meet behind closed doors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the CPCs, the cabinet policy committees, were put together to discuss issues and policies that come forward and to bring those recommendations. Many of those recommendations lead to legislation, and that legislation ends up here in the House for full and open debate, as does every piece of legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: is the Premier's exercise of this authority to appoint and pay cabinet policy committee members a violation of the Legislative Assembly Act, specifically section 37? Did you read that before you appointed those people?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I always trust you as the Speaker of this Assembly to make sure that nobody at all breaks any legislation with respect to this legislation.

The other thing is that I'm sure that across this way and in that party over there, even the party of three, they get paid for a whip, an assistant whip, and a House leader, and all of those things are paid for through the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The payment for whips, though, only applies to officially recognized parties, so in the case of the third party that wouldn't happen.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's failure to create value-added jobs in the oil sands is caused in part by the raw bitumen flowing to the United States via the Alberta Clipper and Keystone pipelines, taking Alberta jobs with it. When I asked about this last week, the Energy minister said that no new jobs were being created in the United States because they had existing capacity in the refineries there to handle the upgrading. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Does the minister stand behind the statements he made during his estimates last week?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have in front of me what our discussion was last week, but what is important, what I was trying to get across to the member, is that there is significant excess capacity in the United States. To just assume somehow that when bitumen is going to the U.S. to be refined, there are new jobs being created is not necessarily correct. If in some way my comments didn't reflect that, I'll put it on record as being so now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Interesting. In budget estimates the minister said that Alberta bitumen could be piped to existing American refineries and that new ones were not being built to handle the flow. The truth is that at least 10 American upgraders are being built or expanded to handle Alberta bitumen. They're investing more than $37 billion to increase capacity by more than a million barrels per day and creating more than 23,000 full-time jobs in the process. Why is the minister shipping Alberta jobs south instead of finding ways to give those 23,000 jobs back to unemployed Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what I did say to the member during estimates last week is that this is a market decision. If there is an economic business case to be made, the private sector will build upgraders and create jobs wherever they feel is the best return on investment. The reality today is that with the price of bitumen there is not a great incentive to build, but that could change as time moves on.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's not a market decision; it's a government policy. Unemployed tradespeople in Alberta need to look no further for where their jobs have gone than this government sitting over there. There are at least 10 different upgrader projects in Michigan, Illinois, Oklahoma, Indiana, Louisiana, Texas, and Ohio. Alberta's unemployment rate is more than 6 per cent, and we've lost 35,000 full-time jobs in the last year alone. Why won't the Energy minister stop sending our jobs and our bitumen to the United States and create real, permanent jobs here in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what this member has to remember is that the refining and upgrading that goes on in the United States is to serve a huge market. It takes supplies from all over the world wherever they can get it, including Canadian bitumen. I would just like to reiterate that it's this particular government, our policies that have created the jobs in the oil sands, not the policies of those two sitting there, who want to shut down the oil sands.

The Speaker: Hon. members, ordinarily on day 4 of the rotation, and this being day 4, the fifth question will go to the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. The hon. member has decided to switch his place today with another hon. member, and that's the reason why I'm now recognizing the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Provincial Budget Caucus Approval

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prior to me leaving the PC Party in January, the government caucus met to approve the basic parameters of the budget. One of the things agreed to almost unanimously was to limit the increase in overall spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth, or 3.5 per cent, but Budget 2010 calls for a 6 per cent increase in spending, or about 4.3 per cent if you don't include the superboard debt payment. In any event it certainly was not what was originally approved by caucus. To the Premier: as your caucus did not meet again until late January, did your caucus approve the spending increase prior to the budget being printed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget was presented by the minister. It included a one-time payment of all of the deficit that was incurred by Alberta Health Services. It also included a five-year increased funding commitment for the Alberta Health Services Board to ensure that we provide the best health services possible in the country of Canada. All of those will be publicly funded, obviously. Now it's giving the whole health system continued support, and they are better able to plan for the future.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, that was not my question. When I left the government in January, caucus had agreed to limit this year's spending increase to inflation plus population growth. That decision was altered. What I want to know is whether Albertans' elected representatives had any say in this change, so I'll repeat the question to the Premier. Did your caucus approve the spending increase above inflation plus population growth prior to the budget being printed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing the member should realize is that on the government side this caucus had a full discussion of all of the issues that are facing the Minister of Finance and Enterprise in terms of finding a budget that meets the needs of Albertans. There were revisions made to the budget, and one of them was, of course, increased funding for health because if we are going to make health a priority, as Albertans expect us to do. That's exactly what we did. We put it in place, and that budget is before this House for debate.

The other issue is about caucus or no caucus. It's not a policy issue. In question period we talk about how policy is formulated and why we took a particular stand on policy, not when or what happened in a caucus.

Mr. Anderson: Well, this is an issue about democracy, Mr. Speaker, and goes to the very heart of what we do in this House.

Just to confirm, caucus agreed to keep spending increases under the rate of inflation plus population growth. The government raised spending above that level prior to the budget being printed and then asked caucus to affirm that decision the day before or the week before the budget was presented. Is that what happened, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if I could just take that question and try and move it into a policy area but not talk about caucus deliberations, what that party wants to do is to limit spending to population and inflation, which is very good, very laudable, but in this particular instance we had to deal with the incurred deficit of Alberta Health Services.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that I don't ever hear coming from any of the other parties when it comes to inflation and population increase spending: what happens if we have the same population, but the age of our population increases? When we get older, we demand more health services. That means he's saying that he's not going to cover it from what I gather from his deliberations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Municipal Election Campaign Financing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government didn't think through the effect that new legislation would have on municipal election campaigns. According to the new rules, municipalities are going to hold onto funds for the candidates, but with campaign money not being released to the candidates until just four weeks to go before voters go to the polls, there will be no way to pay for most aspects of a municipal election campaign. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how is a candidate supposed to pay for signs, billboards, brochures, and even rent a campaign office without the money to pay for them?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, just as a reminder to the members of the House Bill 203, which was a private member's bill, was passed in this Legislature. We are now working to ensure that when it does take effect, it is workable, it is practical, and it aligns with the legislation that we presently have. We will be bringing forward amendments to that effect.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, that should work well. We're bringing forward government amendments to a private member's bill that the government has proclaimed without consulting with the AUMA and the AAMD and C. Why didn't you consult with them before proclaiming this legislation?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, again, not to defend the rights of a private member's bill, but there was a fair amount of consultation that did occur. My understanding is that there were contacts made with the AUMA, their executive, and representatives from AUMA as well as AAMD and C, so there was ongoing dialogue that way. As well, there were a number of letters and correspondence that were received from numerous elected officials from across the province as Bill 203 was developed.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that consultation with members of the AUMA and AAMD and C that the minister talks about, whether, you know, as members of those organizations or individual mayors, city councillors, town councillors, and so on and so forth, actually happened before the proclamation of this legislation – and the minister has already admitted that it needs to be amended, and it will be amended – why did they go ahead and proclaim the legislation? Why not just hold off on it till you've got it right?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, what we heard from people across the province is that, you know, generally Albertans believe in accountability, they believe in transparency, and they believe that our local governments are extremely important in providing the services to Albertans. We are attempting to level the playing field so that all municipal candidates across the province are governed by the same rules. Now, we are hearing from Albertans who are asking us to move forward with these particular initiatives, and I would dare say that the vast majority of people who talk about it want to see limits placed on such things as election spending.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo

Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the current economic situation some Albertans are worried about the status of our government's savings. Albertans are seeing their savings dwindle during this recession, and it seems there is no plan. To the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: to what extent has the global recession diminished our savings in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund during the fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Hays is very justified in his concerns about the heritage savings trust fund. It's one of the centrepieces of our party, put in place by the founder of our modern party, Premier Peter Lougheed. Did we lose money last year because of what happened in the markets? Yes. But the good news, if you look at the third-quarter report that was tabled the same day as the budget, is that this year we're projecting a $2 billion increase – a $2 billion increase – in the value of the heritage savings trust fund.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. The Canadian dollar is gaining in value. Is this having any impact on our investment strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The change in the currency value for the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar has both positive and negative effects. The negative effects are that a lot of the heritage trust fund is invested in U.S. securities, so if the U.S.

dollar gets weaker vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar, that decreases our value there; also, most of our exported oil and gas is purchased in U.S. dollars, so again when the Canadian dollar goes up, those U.S. dollars are worth less to us when they come in.

That's the bad news. The good news is that the rising value of the Canadian dollar signals the rest of the world's confidence in the Canadian economy and the Canadian financial system. This country is better situated than other countries to recover from the recession, and Alberta is the best situated of all the provinces.

Mr. Johnston: My final supplemental to the same minister: are there any plans to inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund this fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Inflation-proofing of the trust fund is done as a matter of course under normal times. Last year because the fund lost value, there was no inflation-proofing. This year because there is no inflation projected, there is no inflation-proofing. But for budget 2010-11 $300 million is allocated for inflation-proofing and to protect the value of that money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Edmonton Remand Centre

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the deplorable state of Edmonton's Remand Centre was highlighted in the legal decision Trang versus Alberta, Edmonton Remand Centre. Clearly the commentary contained in this legal decision is a black mark on justice in Alberta. To the Solicitor General. This Queen's Bench decision noted the inhumane conditions in Edmonton's Remand Centre amounted to Charter of Rights and Freedoms violations. Accordingly, what is the Sol Gen doing to rectify these ongoing and persistent violations at the facility?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision is not a black mark on justice in Alberta. It's certainly a cause for concern in the operation of our corrections facility, namely the Edmonton Remand Centre, but it is not a black mark on justice in Alberta. I don't accept that preamble at all.

Mr. Hehr: Black mark, cause for concern: tomayto, tomahto.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta court noted that a major problem in Edmonton's Remand Centre was overcrowding, overcrowding that still exists today. Given that the new remand centre is not to be finished until 2012, what interim measures are being introduced to address these issues?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision in question is still, in fact, before the courts, and Alberta at this point has not decided whether or not to appeal the decision. However, I can tell the member that we have taken steps to resolve most of the issues in the judgment, and we'll continue to work on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite what the Solicitor General says, we all know here that there are 800 inmates in the Edmonton Remand Centre at night. Really, that place is supposed to hold 500. What is he doing besides telling the House one thing when another situation exists? What is he really doing to rectify this ongoing Charter violation?

Mr. Oberle: I am and my department is working on resolving the issues within the Edmonton Remand Centre, and we're quite busy constructing a new one if the hon. member would care to go for a little drive, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has been criticized for spending $2 billion on carbon capture and storage when we're using the sustainability fund to balance the budget. My question to the Minister of Energy: why can't we eliminate the plan and save some money?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think we need to look at this as an investment and not an expenditure. It's an investment because not only does it help us meet our environmental challenges, but it will be an important element in extracting oil in the future but, most importantly, I would say long term the opportunity to sell the technology globally. One thing that I think we have to make clear is that unlike some parties who believe that this $2 billion investment over the next 15 years is not good for Alberta, we happen to believe it is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question for the same minister. Some people say that CCS is an unproven technology that never has been used effectively. Are we spending money on something that may not work?

Mr. Liepert: Well, in fact, it has proven to work in smaller scale projects throughout the province over the last 20 years. But, you know, there is a major project that has been under way in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, for a number of years – I think it's some 10 years now – where they've injected successfully some 13 million tonnes of CO₂. Again, it's just part of our diversification initiatives, and it will be a success.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Energy. Despite everything that we're doing, a lot of environmental group and political opponents continue to criticize this province for contributing to global warming through the oil sands. Are we a major obstacle to reducing greenhouse gases?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, it's important to get the truth out, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands really, I think, produce about one-tenth of 1 per cent of all the global greenhouse gases. You know, as an example, the oil sands are responsible for about 5 per cent of Canada's overall greenhouse gases whereas the transportation sector is about 25 per cent. So my guess is that on any given day there's more greenhouse gas from the tailpipes of vehicles on the streets of Montreal and Toronto than there is out of the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Energy Efficiency Rebate Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, meeting climate change goals is more than carbon capture and storage. It must include energy efficiency measures. The province is partnering with the feds through EcoEnergy to offer rebates to home and condo owners on boilers, hot water, and insulation, but the feds will also cover windows. Given that the purpose of rebates is to incent people to make improvement they wouldn't otherwise make and that windows are responsible for up to 50 per cent loss of energy efficiency, not including them is a big error. To the Minister of Environment: has the government moved any closer to funding window replacement as part of the energy efficiency rebate program?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the consumer rebate program has been up and in operation for some time now. Unfortunately, it does not include windows. I can't advise the member of anything different than that. It's a matter of getting the maximum amount of efficiency out of a limited amount of dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Although they meet the under-three-storeys requirement, most three-floor walk-ups are not eligible because they're rental units. Why doesn't the government include these under the rebate program?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue around rental units is a good one. I, frankly, would welcome some feedback and some suggestions from the opposition on how we might deal with that because in most rental units it is up to the tenant to pay for the cost of utilities. There's really no incentive even if there is a consumer rebate in the hands of the owner of the building. So it's necessary to try to point the rebate to the person who has the responsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister is exactly right. The individual renter has to pay the utilities but has no control over the energy efficiency of the building. That goes to the apartment owner, and they have no incentive to do anything because they're not paying the utilities. My recommendation to the minister: will he consider creating a special category for these kinds of rental buildings?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to create a special category, but as I just enunciated and the member confirmed, a category is not what's needed. What is needed here is being able to target the funds to the individuals that have control over making the decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Health System Utilization Review

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health has talked about a cost-benefit review of public versus private facilities doing certain medical procedures. We can have a debate about this in the House, but if the review is done properly, then the numbers won't lie. My question is to the Minister of Health. When did the cost-benefit review begin? Was it after he came to this portfolio, or was it started by the previous health minister? When will it be completed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge costings have been done off and on throughout the time that the former minister was there and the former minister before the former minister. It's just ongoing. What I specifically asked for was to add the word "benefit" to the word "cost" so that we would know not only the cost, but we'd also know more about the benefits. Some of that might have to do with convenience or distance or wait times. There are a number of other things to be considered in answering that question.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the government is now talking about activity-based funding. It's nice to see that after five years of our party promoting activity-based funding, someone on the government side has finally come around to the Wildrose way of thinking. Proper utilization is also important, and that is a priority this government has missed. We need to know the capacity of our operating rooms and diagnostic equipment in order to address the wait times. Will the minister launch a full system utilization review?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're constantly reviewing things. We're constantly making improvements. As for whose idea it was, it matters not to me whose idea it was. If it was theirs, good for them. If it was ours, which I suspect it might well have been, then good for us. The point is: if it's a good idea, we'll do it.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, he missed the question. That was the preamble.

We need a full system utilization review to know if, in fact, our facilities are being utilized properly. We also need a labour review to see if we have the labour to utilize those facilities. Will the minister launch a full system utilization review to know if we're using our equipment to the best?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I said that we do reviews all the time, so I thought I'd sort of addressed that. But we're going to be doing more. For example, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is about to engage in a province-wide blueprint for action, that will be determined by the end of September, that will culminate in the Alberta health care act. That's the type of consultation, input, and ongoing engagement Albertans want, and that's what they're going to get. There'll be more of that going on in the future. There's some good, effective evidence to show that evidence-based decision-making works, and that's what we're pursuing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Environmental Regulations

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have always been very, very protective of their environment, the pristine environment that we have in the province, and that's why the Lougheed administration put in place the first environment department in Canada. It's also why in the Getty administration, as they were going through the whole exercise, the minister of environmental protection, the Hon. Ralph Klein, introduced and passed the most comprehensive environmental legislation in the country, that being, of course, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Now, of course, we're still under attack from outside the province. To the minister of environmental protection: do you see any connection between the volume of regulations and the protection and enhancement of the environment?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there certainly is a relationship between the number of regulations and the protection of the environment, but sometimes, frankly, the regulations can get in the way of protecting the environment. That's why we're committed to streamlining the process. But let me be very, very clear. Streamlining the process has absolutely nothing to do with reducing our very strict standards. We will hold industry accountable, and we'll do so under a streamlined process.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to hear that, but I'm curious why it is that we continue to add regulations if, in fact, there's another way of doing it. I would encourage the minister to give us examples where, in fact, we can do it in a different manner.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think there are a couple of examples that I'd like to give if I have time. First of all, on the innovative side. Right now if a company wants to use waste heat to produce electricity, the regulations that we have require them to have a separate approval for each facility along the line. It doesn't make a whole lot of sense. The other is to reduce a number of redundancies where we have duplicate processes in place. Once is enough.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really curious how you're going to incorporate the new technologies into helping to reduce the number of regulations.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess as the Minister of Environment challenge is something that we welcome with open arms, and this will be yet another one. I'm not for a moment suggesting that it will be easy. I'm not for a moment suggesting that it's not complex. What I am suggesting is that it's absolutely critical that we do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Assessing Supports for PDD Clients

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this year's budget debate for Seniors and Community Supports the minister stated that over the next three years all of the 9,200 people supported by Persons with Developmental Disabilities will be reassessed using the supports intensity scale, SIS, to determine how much support they receive. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: what will be the total cost of performing the reassessment of PDD individuals, and will this be coming from the department's budget or from the PDD community boards' budget?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the cost of implementing the SIS supports assessment tool is very minimal. We did have to hire four people, but they're hired temporarily to help us get through the next few years in the assessment process. The cost of the assessment will come from the PDD budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister explain where the supports intensity scale came from and what the cost is of purchasing it and using it?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the cost for the SIS supports – the software that we have and the computer, the training, all of that – is very minimal. We did purchase it; I'm not sure what the name of the company is. The reason we purchased the SIS assessment tool is because it's a very well-researched program. It's used in 23 different states, and it's used in two other provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I guess my point on that question was that I believe it's American.

Will the minister inform the House how the level of PDD supports was determined before SIS and whether there's an evaluation process to track the difference between the new SIS and the previous method?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, once a person is determined to be eligible for PDD, there is an assessment process. We have six different regional community boards, and the evaluations they use have evolved throughout the years. They're not necessarily the same, and they're not necessarily consistent. We felt that it was very important that each individual in Alberta is assessed in a very consistent way, so we have a process now where somebody in Grande Prairie or a person with similar disabilities in Lethbridge can be assessed equally and fairly through the same system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Class Sizes and Utilization

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After doing a little bit of research, it came to my attention that from 2004 until 2009 there was an increase of 3,300 teachers in Alberta's school system, but there was only an increase of 12,000 students. That represents a 10.5 per cent increase in the number of teachers, but the student population only went up by 1.4 per cent. To the Minister of Education: what would drive such a huge increase in the teacher population relative to a small growth in the student population?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a very clear answer to that, the class size initiative. We've hired almost 3,000 teachers in order to meet the class size policy that was put in place after the ACOL report, Alberta's Commission on Learning. Almost all of those teachers that you're talking about are in response to meeting the class size initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cities like Las Vegas have realized that an exceptional growth in their student population warranted more schools, but they also realized that they did not have the budget to build or maintain those needed schools. To better utilize taxpayers' dollars, they've opted to educate students in shifts and run year-round schooling to better utilize the space they have. Our school buildings, new or old, sit empty for a third of the year and half the afternoon and evening. To the minister: have you considered adopting some of those well-developed methods to better utilize the school space that we currently have so that Education dollars go to educating students rather than to buildings and maintenance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there are a number of situations around the province where school boards have put in place programs either to do year-round schooling or to extend the school day, in some cases even considering whether double-shifting might be possible, to use the school on two different school days within one date, so to speak. Of course, there are always the issues of change management, which have to be dealt with. We've become used to the concept that we go to school for certain months of the year and for certain times of the day, but that really, clearly, has to change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We spend a lot of money building, running, and maintaining school buildings. I think the minister has picked up from my previous question that I have concerns about how we focus our expectations and performance requirements usually on the building rather than on outcomes. To the Minister of Education: do you have plans in place to help with that change management that will refocus our attention to the fact that our province's future rests on well-educated children, not on whether a community or neighbourhood has an attractive building to stand in?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm firmly of the opinion that public buildings should be attractive and should be the hub of the community and should be a place that we can be proud of.

The hon. member is absolutely right. As we go through the Inspiring Education process, talking about what kind of education we need to be successful in the future, we also have to look at our physical platforms and say: are the schools that we have performing the function that we need? There would have to be a lot of review on what an education facility looks like while recognizing that we have those facilities; they're important to communities in terms of libraries, gymnasiums, and the other things that are essential.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Northland School Division

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government disbanded the board of trustees of the Northland school division last month. Since then Albertans have been learning more and more about the social and economic challenges facing residents of Northland. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that the challenges facing Northland were beyond the capacity of the trustees alone to address, would you please describe the efforts your ministry has made to involve other ministries such as children's, Aboriginal Relations, and employment to support the work of the board of trustees, and will the minister table evidence of this previous . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with Health and Wellness, with Children's Services, with Aboriginal Relations, and with other ministries to make sure that we don't operate in a silo whether it's in the Northland school division or any other school division in the province. The absolute ability for us to co-operate in the interest of children is one of our primary purposes. The first phone calls I made after the changes to cabinet were to the Minister of Health and Wellness and to the Minister of Children's Services, talking about the need for us to continue our collaborative processes supporting children in the education process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Part of the question that you may have missed was the tabling of those initiatives prior to the disbanding of the Northland school board.

Given that the previous efforts of the trustees and the government did not succeed in producing acceptable academic results in Northland, what new resources and supports is the government placing at the disposal of the official trustee appointed last month?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very prudent not to give people answers while you're still asking the questions. We have a review team in place that's visiting each and every one of the communities involved in Northland, talking with the families in the communities, talking with the educators in those communities, working with the official trustee. Rushing in with a dump truck load of programs before we've asked all the questions and analyzed what we can best do to create the community engagement, the community value for education that's so necessary to succeed I think would be imprudent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This problem has existed for over 20 years. The government took very dramatic action, blaming the trustees. It would be nice to know what some of the remedies are.

Finally, when the inquiries committee's six-month deadline is up, will the minister release the report to the public immediately along with a timeline for acting on the committee's recommendations?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I take offence to the idea that anybody blamed the trustees. I was very clear that I wasn't blaming trustees. What we were looking for was another way to deal with a very, very important issue so that the children could be put first and we could find a way to move forward with results for the children. The trustees that were involved are still in place, as a matter of fact, as chairmen of their local councils, to which they're elected. We still hope that they will participate in this process. It's not about the trustees; it's about the children. We'll focus on that and make sure that we get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Payday Loans

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Payday loan companies seem to be growing rapidly in our province. In this challenging economy many Albertans are struggling to make ends meet and might turn to these high-cost lenders to help pay the bills. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. What are you doing to protect people who borrow from payday lenders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year I introduced the payday loans regulation that established strong, clear rules for the lenders. One of the measures is that it caps $23 per $100 for the amount of money borrowed. The federal government had to approve the maximum amount before it became effective. We recently received that approval, and effective March 1 that's the cap that will be in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Capping the cost of loans is certainly a good step, but what are you doing to help Albertans to stay out of this vicious cycle of borrowing at such a high cost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cap is, indeed, only one part of it. The other areas that are excluded are that there are no longer rollovers and discounting. That is when the lender withholds part of the loan, and often consumers receive less than they thought they were getting. It's about giving the consumers the right information to make better choices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: how is the minister making sure Albertans know their rights when they borrow from payday lenders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the best ways to protect consumers is to ensure that they know their rights when they do go into a payday loan business. One of things that will happen on March 1 is that all of this rate will have to be posted on the walls or on the windows. As well, we have a tipsheet. We also have what's called a payday loan calculator, so a consumer can go on the Service Alberta website and actually see what they're getting into when they do need to take one of these loans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Postsecondary Education Ancillary Fees

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's university students are currently charged an average of almost $1,000 a year in unregulated extra student fees, the highest of such fees in the country. Students and families can't budget for education when schools are allowed to increase fees in this arbitrary and excessive way. To the minister of advanced education: why won't the minister follow the leads of provinces like Manitoba and Ontario and start regulating these auxiliary fees?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed we are working with our student associations to ensure that we have an affordability framework for postsecondary education for all students and all institutions. I'm aware of a couple of institutions in the province right now that are floating proposals of ancillary fees. We're continuing to monitor that, and we'll report back.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we need more than monitoring. As the minister mentions, the University of Calgary is now considering plans to copy the U of A's move to raise unregulated student fees by another $500. Add that to tuition, and postsecondary education in this province is right back to being the most expensive in Canada. Why won't the minister of advanced education regulate these school fees, respect the tuition cap, and stop creating barriers to education?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are respecting the tuition cap. I've said in this House that the cap is near about 1.5 per cent this year. We're respecting that cap. She also mentioned in her preamble that these are considerations and proposals. It's hypothetical at this point.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, on one hand universities are looking at what is, in effect, a 10 per cent tuition increase. At the same time they're asking for huge, expensive exceptions to the tuition cap in certain programs. This will mean that fewer Albertan kids can afford education. Why won't government start focusing on access by saying no to both these increases and adequately funding institutions so they stop going after students for the money they need?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, the students and the taxpayers in society are the clients of these institutions. Obviously, we're going to make sure that we keep them focused on what they need to do, and that's affordability, that's access, and that's quality. All of the things that the hon. member has mentioned are proposals at this point in time. We'll see what happens when they come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Registered Nursing Graduates

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nurses in this province are a critical part of our health care system. If I'm in the hospital, I want an RN to assess me properly, identify what my nursing care needs are, get me healthy, and get me home. Nurses who are currently in school are coming to me with their concerns over having a job in Alberta when they graduate. My question is to the minister of health. How many nurses are graduating this spring, and what percentage will have a job here in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I expect several hundred are probably graduating. I don't have the exact number, but I'm sure we can find it for her. On average I think about 70 per cent, that I last heard, of our Alberta graduating nurses were finding employment with Alberta Health and Wellness or with Alberta Health Services or some related function that we're responsible for. There are other jobs for nurses such as in private facilities and such as in laboratories and so on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In August of 2009 Alberta Health Services hired only 40 per cent of the registered nurses who graduated that month. British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have benefited from Alberta nurses leaving Alberta to find work. My question is to the same minister. What is this minister doing to ensure that nurses who are graduating can find work here in our province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm in fact meeting with the United Nurses of Alberta. I've met with them already once, maybe twice, and we're meeting again on Wednesday to address this very issue. I've also met with the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, CARNA, and addressed the same issue with them. I've met with the health sciences folks, who look after the training aspects to a large degree, or at least the program development. I'm doing everything I can to speak and meet with nurses and find out what some of their ideas and solutions are as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the announcement last week to address wait times in surgery and the shortage of home care, can the minister of health tell us if a long-term health plan will also include more home care for patients when they leave the hospital?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I believe that is the plan, Mr. Speaker. Home care is a critical part of the way that we help deliver services and extended services and follow-up services to Albertans in need. Without home care a lot of our folks would not be back at their jobs as fast as they would be, they wouldn't be back on their two feet, as the expression goes, as quickly as we would like them to be, and a lot of general improvements otherwise would not be occurring. But we are confident that they are now, and I'm quite sure that home services will be increased in the next tranche.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:40 Property Assessment Appeals Training

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs with respect to the new property assessment complaints system that the province has adopted and that went into effect at the beginning of this year. Can the minister explain why appeal board members and assessment review board clerks need enhanced mandatory training?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of January 1 there is only one level of assessment appeal with three separate boards to hear different types of property assessment complaints. We have implemented a mandatory training component to ensure that those hearings are accountable, that they are done in an effective, efficient, and timely manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the same minister. Who is responsible for the cost of this enhanced training for these appeal board members?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government is covering the cost of training materials, the instructors, and meals during the training sessions, but the municipalities are responsible for the incidental travel costs that are involved. I want to be clear that training to ensure competent education is very essential, and that's because a lot of those decisions could eventually be appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister, has to do with the locations of these training sessions. Are these training sessions held in each municipality across the province?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, presently these sessions are being held or have been held in five central locations across the province, and that's in Lethbridge, Calgary, Red Deer, Edmonton, and Grande Prairie. Now, we've had several hundred people trained in 41 different sessions, and we are trying to minimize the cost to municipalities and are prepared to look at maybe other municipalities or other locations for training.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 19 different members were recognized today. That was 114 questions and responses. Of the 19 members 13 came from the various opposition parties and six from private government members.

We will continue with the Routine and members' statements in 30 seconds from now.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

National Flag of Canada Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A symbol of Canada that is known around the world is our flag. The Maple Leaf flag officially became Canada's flag on February 15, 1965, during Hon. Lester B. Pearson's time as a Canadian Prime Minister.

Our government thought that Canada needed a flag that was different from the Red Ensign. The Red Ensign had flown throughout our country for many years and showed our ties to Britain. There were many different designs that people wanted for the flag before the present flag was chosen. On December 15, 1964, a motion to adopt a national flag for Canada passed the House of Commons. The Senate of Canada approved the motion on December 17, 1964.

Mr. Speaker, since I moved to Canada in 1979, the Canadian flag has been a very important part of my life. I have placed the Canadian flag in both my house here in Edmonton and my native home in Punjab, India. I am so proud as a Canadian when I see the flag each and every morning. When I see the flag, I remember the troops who have fought for our country for freedom in the past and those who are still fighting today. I urge all Canadians to place the flag in their homes and businesses to show their pride in this great country of ours. Canada has been a great home for me and my family and will continue to be a great home for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Culturally Diverse Health Services

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second national transcultural conference, Multiple Voices for Enhancing Health Equity through Research, Policy, Education, and Clinical Practice, to be held in Calgary in the spring of 2010, is hosted by the child and women's health diversity program in collaboration with a number of stakeholders in Calgary and southern Alberta. Some people may question why such a conference is needed. Well, according to the organizers, while many parts of our country, including Alberta, are working to create more effective multicultural or inclusive health policies and practices, gaps in services exist. There is a need to share experiences when working with others to begin to identify national standards in the field.

The upcoming national transcultural conference has the following four objectives: examining current and emerging practices and strategies that are used to make health care institutions culturally viable; assessing the essential role of evidence-based research in the development of future transcultural diversity practices and policies; developing cultural competency, knowledge, and skills in health service delivery to reduce inequity in health care; and bringing together policy-makers, health care professionals, administrators, educators, and community representatives from across Canada to discuss cultural competency in a broader spectrum collectively.

Organizers believe that improving culturally and linguistically appropriate services will ensure that children and their families will access services at a level closer to their Canadian-born counterparts. One of the benefits of this change is improved health prevention, which will help to reduce the long-term burden on the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, a culturally competent system is one that possesses a set of behaviours, attitudes, policies, and procedures that enable an institution to effectively work with and serve a diverse community. These knowledge and skills are transferable to address issues of age, gender, ability, class, and other issues of diversity. Developing cultural competency will benefit our institution's overall capacity to serve our changing demographics in measurable ways in the years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Fish Creek Environmental Learning Centre

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the crown jewels in Calgary-Lougheed is Fish Creek provincial park. Like so many others from our constituency and around the world, I'm always spellbound by the beauty of the great outdoors. But during a recent visit I was also mesmerized by the great indoors at the newly, extensively renovated Fish Creek Environmental Learning Centre. It all adds up to a greener centre for all Albertans, which is even more connected to its environment than before. The project replaces dated construction materials and increases overall space while maintaining the look and feel of the original building.

It serves as a model of sustainable and innovative construction through progressive technologies in design, including Skyfold walls that provide convertible classroom and presentation spaces; Nana doors, which open rooms to the outdoor environment; high-efficiency heating, cooling, and water fixtures; a green roof upon which plants replace shingles; new educational technologies such as video conferencing; a celebration of each of Alberta's six natural regions and the plant and animal species found in them; and vibrant expressions of art courtesy of local students and artists.

School programming is already under way and, again, offers curriculum-based programs modelled on research, best practices, and a dedication to connecting students with their environment. Mr. Speaker, over 800,000 students, teachers, and volunteers have enjoyed award-winning programming at this important Calgary facility since 1982, myself included. I trust that all members of this House will join me in thanking and congratulating all involved as they celebrate the grand reopening of the Fish Creek Environmental Learning Centre.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Bill 6

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill is part of our government's response to strengthen the emergency management system across our province. This bill will extend the good-faith liability protection currently provided to firefighters to search and rescue workers and their organizations while they're providing emergency rescue services under the act. Alberta's search and rescue workers contribute greatly to the safety and security of our communities.

Another amendment will focus on the language of the act to change the current negligence standard for providing emergency services to one of good faith. This matches the language found in the Municipal Government Act. This will provide additional legal defences to the minister, local authorities, and their agents and will help limit their exposure to lawsuits.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, changes to the act will focus on regional emergency service delivery and will allow communities to work together. This administrative process will help with the financial and the training burden that's placed on municipalities today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I move that Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010, be moved to the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is an e-mail that I received from a constituent, Milena Laban. This constituent is urging funding not to be cut to public schools.

The second tabling I have is from a constituent also, Grace Parr on 67A Street. This is an e-mail correspondence to the former Minister of Health and Wellness. It is regarding funding cuts to PDD service providers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of several news releases and articles related to 10 upgrader expansions in the United States. The articles state that the projects will be upgrading Alberta bitumen. My colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referred to these projects in his questions earlier today.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Northern Alberta Development Council Act the Northern Alberta Development Council annual report 2007-2008.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, pursuant to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy annual report 2008-2009 and the Alberta Vital Statistics annual review 2008.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, now, if I can have the attention of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, I will deal with an issue that I gave notice of. I said I would be recognizing at this point in time the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, who wants to ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully request unanimous consent of the Assembly to change Motions Other than Government Motion 503 to 505 and 505 to 503. I have consulted with the Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

The Speaker: It's okay. There's no debate required in this. You need unanimous consent. I'm going to ask one question. Is any member opposed? If so, say no. Okay. Done.

Bill 201

Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member – I will call on the hon. member; he'll be the first speaker to move this bill – nine members have also indicated their desire to participate. I will outline those remaining eight after the hon. member has moved his bill.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and open debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. Bill 201 is an important piece of legislation and would require two cancers, primary site esophageal and primary site testicular, to be added to this province's list of presumptive cancers for firefighters.

Presumptive legislation can be seen all across Canada. In fact, Alberta was one of the first to introduce such legislation in 2003. The Workers' Compensation Act was amended in 2003 and states, in essence, that if a firefighter is diagnosed with a cancer where the primary site is among the lists in presumptive legislation, the illness shall be presumed to be an occupational disease. Without presumptive legislation the onus would fall on the firefighter to prove that their cancer was caused from their occupation and all too often be required to specify and prove at exactly which fire the cancer took hold, a daunting and impossible task, Mr. Speaker.

In simple terms, a firefighter's work environment can be the cause of the cancer development. This government has recognized this, and as a result eight cancers are currently listed in regulation as presumptive. These cancers include bladder, urethra, kidney, colorectal, and lung for nonsmokers, as well as leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Mr. Speaker, as stated, these cancers are listed in regulation, and as such this bill would require the Lieutenant Governor in Council to amend this regulation to include primary site esophageal and testicular cancer.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 201 builds on what this government has already achieved to protect our firefighters; however, advances in medical science are giving us new information in regard to cancer and its causes. All around North America in the last five to 10 years there has been an increasing amount of long-service firefighters and veterans being diagnosed with cancer. According to the International Association of Fire Fighters there are approximately 10 firefighters that lose their lives annually as a result of job-related cancers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, many have attributed the increase in cancers to the greater use of synthetics in building materials. The risk is not necessarily from the inhalation of fumes; rather, it's absorption of these dangerous chemicals through the skin. Just to illustrate this, I know that several members in this Assembly today participated last fall in the MLA firefighter for a day event. One of my colleagues who participated in that event commented that the smell of smoke permeated his skin despite the protective gear that he donned and that even after three showers that odour was still present. This is despite the exceptional advances that have been made in the protective gear worn by our firefighters. This exemplifies to me the risk that firefighters are faced with each day.

Firefighters are typically some of the healthiest people around. In fact, it is a job requirement that they be fit. This is why any spike in cancer is abnormal. Cancer is a devastating disease, and I believe that by passing Bill 201, we can provide comfort in a time of uncertainty.

Mr. Speaker, last year Edmonton lost two of its finest to cancer, all in the course of two weeks. In fact, it was the sixth in the span of a few years, an all too stark reality that reminded firefighters of the hidden dangers in their jobs. One of these individuals was Captain Bob Chalmers, who passed away last July from leukemia. May he rest in peace. He was a 35-year veteran of the Edmonton fire department and, sadly, only 60 years young. I'm very pleased to add that as a result of this Assembly's work in 2003 Captain Chalmers was able to receive benefits while undergoing treatment for his cancer. While fighting his six-year battle with the disease, and in typical fashion of the many men and women like those in our gallery today, he stated that he would not hesitate again to devote his life to firefighting.

3:00

The other hero we lost was Captain Alex "Rainbow" Harris, and I mentioned that his wife and son were here, Mr. Speaker. He was 53 years old. Mr. Harris passed away from esophageal cancer. However, as he was unable to pinpoint the exact fire where the cancer took hold, his claim was denied.

This is a tragedy, Mr. Speaker, two firefighters who devoted their lives to their community in similar fashion and who were treated differently by the rules.

In Calgary, of the 21 members of the Calgary fire department lost since 1923, 12 of those have been from cancer. This includes Captain Ed Briggs, who passed away from leukemia in 2004.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation, in all reality, is not so much for the firefighter as it is for their families, families who, when cancer strikes, drop everything to fight this disease alongside their loved one. Families face additional emotional stress as they battle for their loved one's life. Without workers' compensation these families are often faced with considerable financial stress.

I believe that each of us in the Assembly has met or knows a firefighter and has seen the immense impact that they have in our communities. These brave men and women put their lives on the line every day to protect Albertans, and we thank you for that. Firefighters do more than just fight fires. They attend medical emergencies, chemical spills, aid in natural disasters, and provide educational tools to the community.

The firefighters of this province have been very instrumental in having esophageal and testicular cancers added to the presumptive list of cancers that are currently listed in the legislation. They have been advocating government for these changes for several years. By adding the aforementioned cancers, we are giving firefighters peace of mind, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to thank all the Alberta firefighters for their dedication to the people of this province and the many who are here with us today who have been instrumental in this fight. Many of these cancers are often silent, discovered too late. Let us not be silent anymore on this issue. Firefighters fight to protect us; we should fight to protect them.

Mr. Speaker, it is a small measure that this Legislature can do by passing this legislation to attempt – and I stress, attempt – to repay the tremendous debt that the people of Alberta owe to these dedicated men and women who are so instrumental in the safety of all of our citizens. I look forward to further debate on the bill, and I pledge my support to firefighters with this bill.

I would move second reading, and I would humbly ask all hon. members to support passage of Bill 201.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I too would like to get on the record regarding Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, and thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his work on this amendment. I think it is appreciated not only in this House but across the province in the firefighting community if we could call it that. Certainly, Bill 201 will require the Lieutenant Governor in Council to amend the firefighters' primary site cancer regulation to include esophageal and testicular cancer.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon listed off the other cancers that are recognized as an occupational hazard or an occupational disease, and this is, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, not the last time we will be looking at an amendment in this House. I suspect, as research will hopefully prove me correct, that we're just beginning to understand the consequences of this very, very hazardous occupation for firefighters.

Firefighters have no idea when they report to work exactly what they're going to face, Mr. Speaker. In the course of their shift anything could happen. It could be a chemical spill as a result of a truck accident. It could be any amount of hazardous material that's inadvertently spilled that they are responding to. There are fires not only in residential neighbourhoods but also in commercial and industrial locations that they have to respond to. When we look at some of the materials that are now being used to construct our residential buildings, whether it's the epoxies and the glues that are in OSB, whether it's chemical additives to carpets so they don't mould, so they don't catch on fire, there are any number of exposures that a firefighter may encounter. Bill 201 is certainly further direction from the previous legislation, and I would encourage all hon. members to support this legislation.

Now, there are those that say differently, but surely we must recognize that there is strong scientific consensus that firefighters face a higher risk of developing a long list of cancers. As a result, not only Alberta but a number of other provinces have created presumptive clauses allowing firefighters to claim workers' compensation benefits if they should contract particular types of cancers that are defined in the regulations. The types of cancer that we're hopefully going to add as a result of Bill 201 appear to be within, certainly, the national mainstream. The hon. member is not asking for anything that has not already been discussed and debated in other Legislative Assemblies. British Columbia and Saskatchewan to our knowledge include testicular cancer in their regulations. Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick are examples of provinces that include both testicular and esophageal cancer in their comparable regulations.

Certainly, when we look at this, we realize, again, that Alberta firefighters place themselves at great personal danger for our citizens, and they deserve legal protections that recognize the harm they face almost on a daily basis. I have no problem supporting this amendment, and I again would like to thank the hon. member for his work on this.

Now, I was told that the officials in the Department of Employment and Immigration, the ones that keep their eye on the Workers' Compensation Board and the Workers' Compensation Act, are doing a study to see how other sectors of the workforce are affected by exposure in the workplace to various chemicals or various repetitive activities that may lead to the development of a cancer.

I have requested a number of times that the Department of Employment and Immigration once and for all do a long-term study on the hazards of welding in particular. To my knowledge, if this is proceeding, it's proceeding far too slowly. I would certainly like to see the province and the Department of Employment and Immigration, which oversees the legislation that governs this, have a look at what occupational health and safety laws and regulations need to be changed to ensure that all workers are protected. Firefighters, in my opinion, are a good first step. It's needed. It's necessary.

The idea of adding additional compensation coverage for all workers if their workplace has caused them to be susceptible to cancer: we need to examine this issue, we need to study this issue, and we need to act. Certainly, when you look at some of the welders — and I'm going to use that as an example — there are far too many welders at a very young age being affected by throat cancer to start with, and I think we need to look at that. Hopefully, the department that I mentioned earlier is working on that as we speak, and they have yet to make the results of their work public.

Certainly, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is a very good bill. It takes protection of firefighters an additional step. I don't think we will stop here. If there is a need for additional protection at a future date, hopefully this Assembly will deal with it straightaway as it's needed.

Again, thank you to the hon. member. I hope this bill receives speedy passage through this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have a long list of speakers here. I just want to read it out, and then I will recognize the next member. The next members will be Calgary-North Hill, Calgary-Varsity, Lacombe-Ponoka, Calgary-Fish Creek, Calgary-Hays, Edmonton-Strathcona, Airdrie-Chestermere, Drayton Valley-Calmor, and Cypress-Medicine Hat.

You are next, Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to provide some input to this important piece of legislation. Bill 201 is a great idea, and I know that there's an incredible degree of support for this bill. Bill 201 seeks to broaden the coverage for firefighters against potential hazards of their job, a job that I personally have a great deal of admiration for.

Through prior legislation we have committed to ensuring fair workers' compensation for firefighters for a variety of cancers related to their firefighting. It is an honour, Mr. Speaker, to stand up here because I know it was my predecessor in Calgary-North Hill, Richard Magnus, that brought forward the original piece of legislation.

Today there are new findings indicating that two additional types of cancer, esophageal cancer and testicular cancer, should be included along with the eight types already covered in the legislation. It is fitting, then, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 201 seeks to have those cancers included, following the same logic as put forward by my predecessor in prior legislation.

Firefighters provide an invaluable service, as we all know, and when the time comes, they act selflessly to save others, sometimes at great risk to their own well-being. Our firefighters should not have to be concerned that despite their courage and dedication they may not be compensated fairly if they acquire an illness as a result of their work.

I'd like to provide some background, Mr. Speaker, on the important mechanism that Bill 201 relies on as well as the prior legislation brought forward by my predecessor in 2003, that included the first types of cancer in this legislation. Bill 201 relies on presumptive legislation, as does the legislation currently in force. Presumptive legislation alleviates the burden of proof for the worker, in this case firefighters, for the purposes of workers' compensation. It presumes that if a firefighter acquires an illness potentially related to the hazardous materials he or she may have encountered and has been in the profession for a sufficient length of time, then the illness is a result of the occupational hazards. In the case of firefighters these hazards will primarily consist of toxic substances in a fire, burning chemicals and materials.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to recognize that presumptive legislation is not misplaced in its assumptions. There is both statistical and scientific support for the assertion that certain cancers are heavily correlated with a number of hazards faced by firefighters.

I was fortunate to participate in the MLA firefighter for a day that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon mentioned earlier, and I can attest that it's very obvious to me just from that very short experience that this is something that's real and is not something that is a myth.

While there is probably a very small chance that some of these cancers are not correlated, I do not doubt at all that in the vast majority of cases there is sufficient cause from an actuarial standpoint to support this legislation. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the burden of proof is definitely difficult in most circumstances, virtually impossible.

Consider smoking, for example, and its association with various types of cancers. There is overwhelming evidence that the toxins in cigarettes cause various cancers, and the messaging from the health community is consistent with this. Essentially, it is accepted as a fact that if every smoker develops certain types of cancers, it is a result of their heavy smoking. Of all the smokers who have been diagnosed with correlated cancers, did none of them acquire the cancer from exposure to something else? Well, maybe. More likely than not a small number acquired the cancer from something else other than smoking, maybe radiation or genetic predisposition, without which they would have never acquired the cancer. But how does one even prove that, Mr. Speaker?

We know that in a vast majority of cases certain toxins cause certain cancers with sufficient exposure. This is entirely true for firefighters, just as it is for smokers, Mr. Speaker, although I'm sure the firefighters have a different attitude towards toxic smoke than most smokers do.

Mr. Speaker, presumptive legislation does not just assume causation. Presumptive legislation infers causation based on extensively studied correlations between two factors, in this case certain cancers and toxic substances in a fire. In circumstances which our firefighters face, fair compensation requires this presumptive legislation. The burden of proof in individual specific cases is just simply not feasible, nor is it fair to treat our firefighters this way.

Mr. Speaker, I wasn't here earlier for the introductions but, you know, I was graciously hosted during our MLA firefighter for a day by an old school buddy of mine, Todd Russell, who is part of the Grande Prairie local 2770. I want to say hi to him. You know, I haven't seen him in a long, long time, and it was great to not only learn about their profession but to catch up with him. I went to elementary school with him and attended high school with him with the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose. I think that it's very, very important that we treat Todd and his wife and family and all of his colleagues up in the gallery and that they work with on a day-to-day basis in a way that's fair and respectful to the way that they put their lives on the line every day for us.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I have shed some light on why Bill 201 is so important. It's this reason for relying on presumptive legislation: if these two types of cancers are indeed tied to hazards in firefighting, then I believe it is our duty to include them in the firefighters' coverage. With that, I look forward to further debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to give my wholehearted support and that of my colleagues to Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I'd also like to give credit where credit is due to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who, as far as I am concerned, has basically completed the third volume in the trilogy of firefighter protection. As the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill noted, volume one came from a former MLA, Richard Magnus of Calgary-

North Hill. I believe that volume one was contributed to by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs last year with a continuance of firefighter recognition and protection legislation.

Again following in the footsteps of the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, I have gone to school with, worked with, and played with a number of firefighters over my years. The first significant individual that I'd like to mention is Rob Tomlinson. In 1966 Rob and I were attending Ernest Manning high school. I was upgrading, and he was completing his high school. We worked at Woodward's in the parcel pickup, so I worked with him, and I also went to school with him. In the fall of 1967 I began my university career, which took me towards a bachelor of education. While I was attending university classes, Rob was doing his training as a novice firefighter for the Calgary fire department. Rob's friendship continued throughout the years, and he played a pivotal role at my wedding to my wife, Heather, of going on 41 years. He played the role of best man at our wedding. Rob recently retired as a captain from the Calgary fire department.

I mention Rob because Rob talked to me about some of the tremendous obstacles he fought as a firefighter. One that comes to mind very strongly – and chemicals were involved – was putting out a fire in downtown Calgary at a restaurant called the Beachcomber. Now, the Beachcomber was probably the seventh or eighth name that that location had, and it had several false walls to it. Rob described in great detail crawling along the floor with his mask on and seeing a phone melting off the wall from the intense heat of the fire. So the chemicals that firefighters face are beyond a doubt a serious concern that leads to cancer, and this type of legislation, which does not require proof, is absolutely essential to protect our firefighters, who spend every day protecting us.

Other firefighters who I've had the pleasure of coming into contact with are Keith Hart of the famous Hart wrestling dynasty that Stu Hart founded in the city of Calgary. Keith and I were on opposite ends of propping for the Saracens rugby team. Another firefighter-cum-rugby player that I had the pleasure to associate with and who is also a teacher is Adrian Smith. I played rugby with Adrian on the U of C Stags. Most recently, a firefighter who I've come to know and tremendously respect is Greg McDougall. Greg McDougall was a firefighter for a number of years for the city of Calgary. Greg went through a series of very traumatic experiences, which he also shared with me.

My hope, Mr. Speaker, is that the type of firefighter protection that we're seeing today in Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, will be extended to provide firefighters who are currently on the job as well as those who retire with support for posttraumatic stress syndrome. A number of firefighters, unfortunately, have been driven to suicide because of the stress that they faced on their job. It has led to marital breakup. Anything that we can do to provide treatment for firefighters, whether on the job or when they're forced to leave because of stress, I think is absolutely essential. Right now the federal government has a program that recognizes posttraumatic stress syndrome for our military and also for our RCMP, but no such provincial regulation exists to provide firefighters, municipal police with this kind of counselling and support and likewise.

Another area that I'd like to see this extended to is to first responders in general. While it's the firefighters that put themselves in the most immediate danger in the centre of a burning building or in the centre of a spill, I don't want to leave out the fact that we have also police on the scene and we have paramedics frequently on the scene where these chemicals are very much in the air. The firefighters have the equipment in terms of the gas masks that they put on when they enter the building. In some cases they're almost better protected in their first response circumstances than policemen who are cordoning off the area or paramedics who are waiting to assist the firefighters as they retrieve the individuals from the hazardous circumstances that they find themselves in.

I would urge the government to extend this legislation to cover first responders as well. I'm sure that firefighters would support the extension to their first responder colleagues of this recognition that today we are affording to firefighters. There's no doubt about the danger they face. They should not be worried as they go into a burning building or clear up a chemical spill as to whether their insurance company will cover their situation and especially in the event of their passing continue to support their spouse and children.

This is a wonderful piece of legislation. As I say, volume three in the firefighters protection trilogy. Again I want to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for following in the footsteps of his predecessors in fighting for firefighters. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to have an opportunity to join in debate on Bill 201. I would like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his efforts in bringing forward the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. The legislation complements a broader initiative our government has been advancing which focuses on building safe and secure communities. Leading this initiative are those individuals who live and work in Alberta's communities. They know their communities best and what is needed to make them succeed. As a government we need to continue to offer support to our communities and the individuals who help to protect them. Individuals such as firefighters embody the greater qualities of community service.

I also want to acknowledge all the firefighters that are with us this afternoon watching this debate. They are a very strong part of our communities and add to the quality of life in our communities. Professional firefighters in larger centres do their jobs on a daily basis. Smaller communities, such as Lacombe and the area that I live in, often depend on volunteer firefighters for their services. They are also highly trained individuals that serve their communities from time to time. They receive calls at any time of night or day to respond to emergencies of many kinds, often fires but sometimes motor vehicle accidents and other emergencies. Mostly they don't know what they're getting into or what risks may confront them when they leave their homes.

In a past life I was a reeve of the county, and I want to say that I was part of the regional fire service in the Lacombe county that co-operated between the Lacombe county, Lacombe town, and other municipalities within the county. I spent some time with the firefighters there attending their practices and going to meetings with them. I understand the pressures and the dangers that they face in their jobs, and I want to acknowledge that. I also want to say that they are highly trained. We always enjoyed visiting with these firefighters when we would bring them a new piece of equipment like a big ladder truck, tandem tandem, about a million dollars. "You can tell the importance of the boys by the size of their toys," we said, and they appreciated that.

3:30

I want to acknowledge and thank the firefighters that are with us today in our gallery and all the firefighters that serve our communities from day to day. They perform their roles with the bravery and courage their daunting work requires. Our government will ensure that these men and women know that we're behind them. Bill 201 serves this end as it enhances the efforts that have been previously taken by the Alberta government.

Alberta was one of the first provinces to introduce presumptive legislation for firefighters. We've already heard what presumptive legislation is. Our government remains focused on the task of helping our emergency personnel who are on the front line of protecting our communities and assisting Albertans in times of vulnerability. Through enacting this legislation, we would join other jurisdictions in Canada that allow firefighters to claim workers' compensation for esophageal and testicular cancer. Recently Manitoba and New Brunswick added these two forms of cancer to their presumptive list as well. Mr. Speaker, these additions are an acknowledgement of the potential dangers of firefighting.

Comprehensive studies have shown that there is an increased risk of firefighters developing different forms of work-related cancer. The Alberta Workers' Compensation Board statistics indicate that almost 75 per cent of work-related firefighter deaths since the year 2000 have been due to cancer. The work of firefighters requires these individuals to respond immediately to emergency scenes that are often complex and dangerous. We want to ensure that firefighters have the best support for whatever repercussions may result from their duties. This is why we took steps before to implement effective workers' compensation benefits. This legislation is an extension of that previous support.

We know that firefighters are often cast into different environments that sometimes pose inexplicit consequences. Smoke from a burning structure can contain numerous toxins that will have lasting effects on all who are exposed to it, but this does not deter firefighters, who are trained to put the safety of those they are rescuing ahead of themselves. In the past we have seen firefighters enter into these situations with the goal of saving lives regardless of the consequences of engaging harmful fires.

I also want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I've experienced this personally myself. I had a farm – well, I still have a farm – and some years ago a large fire engulfed some of my barns with a lot of animals inside. We phoned the firefighters. They were there within a few minutes – you know, 15 minutes from town – and they just went right into this fire and put it out, saved an enormous amount of property, not human lives at that time but lives of animals. They put their lives on the line. I have been very, very thankful for the help that they provided for myself and my family.

History has demonstrated this time and again. Perhaps the most vivid example is the fire that consumed the World Trade Centre on 9/11. On that day several New York fire departments battled blazes in the Twin Towers in a heroic effort to save lives. It was a time of crisis, and these individuals engaged in the treacherous situation nevertheless, as all firefighters so often do. It is only years later, when the dust settles, that firefighters are faced with the repercussions of putting themselves in harm's way. Mr. Speaker, 9/11, like many serious fires, caused long-term effects to those who were embattled in dowsing the flames. There are now several documented cases of firefighters who have been afflicted with higher than normal rates of cancer directly as a result of fighting those fires. This is an unfortunate reality of firefighting. The work involves taking serious risks.

As a government we'll continue to provide support to comfort and compensate those brave individuals who take on such roles here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is our obligation to create a reasonable legislative framework that will allow these individuals to be compensated for damages suffered through keeping our communities safe. Bill 201 enhances the support for those who work to provide the relief, assistance, and rescue that Albertans need. It's difficult work, but that's what these men and women sign up for.

They never shy away from the hard and sometimes hazardous work their occupation requires. We know that when the call comes, our firefighters will be there. It's the Alberta way.

Through this legislation Alberta will again be leading in providing compensation benefits for our firefighters. In an emergency it's important to stick together and help each other out. That's how strong communities are built and protected. This is how fire departments approach each day together, united in an effort to take on whatever may be ahead of them. They often don't know all the dangers within a burning building, but this does not deter them. They still dutifully enter it as it is their job, and this is what they're trained for.

So when the flames die out and these brave individuals return home, if they are afflicted by illness as a result of their efforts, I believe they should be allowed to apply for compensation. They have demonstrated their resolve to support our communities, and I think it is only fitting that we in turn offer support through these measures as proposed in Bill 201.

With that, I would again like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his work on Bill 201. It is an important piece of legislation that serves to assist those who help make our communities safe and secure. I'm also encouraged by the support of all members of this Legislature. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will be offering my support as well for Bill 201.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the House in strong support of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. As a result of our elected positions, many in this House have had the opportunity to meet with first responders or to watch them work together to help people in a time of great need. For their selfless sacrifice and willingness to help others without hesitation or equivocation, we owe them our thanks and the proper protection against the hazards they experience. This is why I rise in support of this bill and why the entire Wildrose Alliance caucus stands in support of this bill.

Being a firefighter is not a typical job. The people who serve as firefighters are not typical people. I cannot think of many who would willingly rush into a burning building to save someone's pet or, more importantly, to risk their own life to save another, but they do this, and for this we are eternally grateful, Mr. Speaker. Many years ago we had a devastating fire in our home. From the eyes of a child these big, burly guys racing in and out of your house can be pretty intimidating. We lost everything, but what they did manage to save was really important: my dog and my turtles. From that day forward firefighters have and will always be my heroes.

In the course of their duties we know that they become exposed to materials that even the latest technology, building standards, workplace safety measures, or breathing equipment cannot protect them from. It is for this reason that the former Member for Calgary-North Hill proposed the original bill to help and protect firefighters. I supported the original bill, Mr. Speaker, because it was the right thing to do then, and these are the right things to support now.

Each member of this House could go on and on at length about the work that firefighters and all emergency workers do to protect life, limb, and property, but words will never do true justice to the risks they take, to the pride they feel, or to the care for the people of Alberta communities. Bill 201 is a small way that we can recognize their sacrifices, their willingness to race into the face of danger, and to help us in times of greater need.

My thanks to the sponsor, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I encourage all members to support Bill 201.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to voice my support for Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I would like to start by commending the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing forward such an important piece of legislation. Bill 201 proposes to strengthen Alberta's commitment to our firefighters by including two additional cancers, primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer, to the list of presumptive cancers that firefighters may claim for under workers' compensation.

Alberta firefighters play an integral role in the safety and well-being of our community. Every day they are asked to risk their lives in order to protect us and our property from the devastating effects of fire. In fact, firefighters are the only group of workers that cannot refuse to work due to unsafe conditions. Their jobs require them to risk their lives both in the moment that they are fighting a fire and in the longer term as they face the possibility of cancer.

Unfortunately, in this line of work firefighters are constantly being exposed to large amounts of toxins that are produced as a result of burning plastics, chemicals, and building materials. While they do have protective gear that helps to shield them from the harmful effects of these toxins, this equipment is not a hundred per cent effective, and some of the toxins will inevitably be absorbed into the body. Many of these toxins are highly carcinogenic. In fact, almost 75 per cent of work-related firefighter deaths in Alberta since 2000 have been due to cancer. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that it is impossible to tell when the seeds of cancer have been planted in our firefighters. The latent nature of these diseases means that it could be 20 or 30 years before they are detected, yet there is compelling scientific research which suggests that they are the result of a career spent fighting fires.

The province already recognizes eight cancers in its presumptive legislation for firefighters' compensation. However, research is showing that this list should be expanded. By including primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer, we can ensure that more Alberta firefighters and their families are adequately compensated for the sacrifices that they have made for our communities. That is why, Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is as much for the families of these firefighters as it is for the firefighters themselves. As anyone who has been touched by cancer knows, when an individual is diagnosed with cancer, it is their entire family that comes together to fight it.

In the absence of the presumptive legislation that would automatically assume that these cancers are work related, the onus is on the firefighters to prove that their illness is a result of their occupation. Without this legislation Alberta firefighters that are diagnosed with esophageal and primary site testicular cancer would have to file a workers' compensation claim and endure the uncertainties of the claims process. This process of claims and appeals can take years to produce a final decision, and even then there is no guarantee that the claims system will recognize their illness as occupational and award appropriate compensation. Bill 201 would allow these families to focus all of their attention and energy on fighting these diseases rather than on the claims and appeals process of workers' compensation.

Mr. Speaker, the life of a firefighter is one that can sustain substantial amounts of uncertainty, and their families live each day with the possibility that their loved one may not return home at the end of a shift. Even if these firefighters manage to enjoy a long career, they will continuously face the possibility of developing a life-threatening disease as a result of their line of work. Alberta firefighters and their families have made great sacrifices to ensure the safety and well-being of our communities and have taken many risks on our behalf.

Bill 201 would see these families protected from the devastating financial hardships that accompany a battle – primary site esophageal and primary site testicular cancers – allowing them to focus on getting through the daily struggles that these illnesses bring without having to worry about how they'll pay their bills. This legislation will also serve to reach out to those families and show them that Albertans appreciate all that they have done to help keep us safe and support them in their hour of need. At the heart of Bill 201 is respect and compassion for those who have served the people of our province so selflessly. The service of the men and women who bravely enter burning buildings, gladly risking their lives for ours, is quite obvious.

More subtle is the service rendered to the people of Alberta by the families of these firefighters. Each day, like the firefighters themselves, they deal with a great amount of uncertainty. Mr. Speaker, they're also the ones who will take care of our firefighters if they have to battle cancer and are the ones left behind if they lose that fight. For all that these families choose to sacrifice for the benefit of Albertans, I believe Bill 201 will go a long way in continuing to recognize their hardship and contributions.

I would once again like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for sponsoring this important piece of legislation. I wholeheartedly support Bill 201 and urge my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in order to lend my support and the support of our caucus to this private member's bill. As many, many speakers today have already talked about, we all share a tremendous amount of respect and appreciation for the work and the sacrifice that we see from our firefighters each and every day in all of our communities. These are people that work very, very hard to protect members of the community. Quite frankly, I think it's a very special person who chooses to make their living in the job of putting themselves in danger to protect and assist others. It is, without question, a heroic choice and a heroic type of work that they perform every day.

I have had the benefit to attend the firefighters' memorial service each year, as I'm sure other members of this Assembly have. Every time we attend that memorial, we stop and take time and consider the memory of those firefighters who have died in action. Without question a number of those who die in action are those who have succumbed to some form of cancer, whether it be a form of cancer that's already recognized under this legislation or, now in the future, whether it's a form of cancer which up until the hoped-to-be-soon passing of this legislation was not previously recognized by this piece of legislation. So I think it's very, very important that we add to the list. As one speaker has already pointed out, in so doing, we negate the obligation of that firefighter and/or his family or her family to subject themselves to the workers' compensation system and the challenges that exist in terms of proving the compensability of a particular type of illness or disease.

I have to also say, though, that when I attend those memorials, I am very aware of some of the other common diseases or processes which occur and result in the illness or death or injury of firefighters. There are those who most obviously and most tragically die while in action, and then there are those who succumb to the type of cancers we've identified or we are about to identify, but there are also those who die from heart disease. It's very common that heart disease of different forms will result in either injury or illness or fatality to firefighters; also lung diseases, stress, posttraumatic stress, and other illnesses that arise secondary to the particularly dangerous and hazardous type of work that they engage in.

In short, I believe that there are many firefighters out there who even today suffer from illness or injury, or there are families of people who have suffered from deaths which are not currently recognized under our workers' compensation system. While this bill will assist in identifying and adding to the list the types of cancers which receive presumptive treatment by the Workers' Compensation Board, I believe there is a great deal more work to be done in this regard in terms of understanding the hazards faced by firefighters in their day-to-day work.

I also think that there is another point that needs to be made here. I believe very strongly from my own conversations with many firefighters, particularly in my past life working as an occupational health and safety advocate and working in particular with a number of different professions, including firefighters, that what we know is that firefighters are not the only profession to be subjected to hazards in the workplace which ultimately kill or cause significant illnesses as a result of exposure to those hazards.

As much as we all appreciate and must remember every day the heroic efforts of firefighters, we should also remember that other workers who are exposed in their workplace to chemicals, whether burning chemicals or whether chemicals in the day-to-day handling requirements of their job, also become ill or may in fact die from exposure, and they are not always recognized. There is also the whole question of long-term injury to musculoskeletal parts of the body that, again, are difficult for workers to receive recognition of when dealing with the Workers' Compensation Board.

In short, the Workers' Compensation Board, particularly in Alberta, does not do a good job of recognizing or compensating for occupational disease and illness, and that means that workers in this province go uncompensated for illnesses and, in some cases, deaths that arise as a result of hazards to which they are exposed in their workplace. Almost 10 years ago now Justice Friedman reviewed our WCB system and made a number of recommendations with respect to how we needed to improve it. Although originally the government agreed to adopt those recommendations, they subsequently changed their mind on that decision, and there remain significant substantive flaws in our workers' compensation system in Alberta today. Workers do not have equal access to representation, there are concerns around the way in which medical advice is given within the system, and there is an adjudicative framework which discourages both workers from claiming and adjudicators from recognizing significant numbers of occupational diseases and illnesses within the workplace.

It is wonderful that everybody here is agreeing that firefighters need to receive compensation for a bit more of the injury and illnesses from which they suffer as a result of the good work that they do on our behalf. I don't at this point believe that we're coming close to recognizing all of those. I also believe that we are failing to understand that the bigger picture is that we have a system which does not fairly compensate our workers for the illnesses and the injuries that they suffer in their workplaces, which are under our watch. Ultimately, should we choose to deal with that much larger issue, I think we would also be doing a grand thing in memory of those firefighters who have sacrificed themselves on our behalf, and I do believe quite strongly that they would support that call.

I certainly hope that members of this Assembly will give some consideration to that and remember those discussions that we have had in the past about the fact that we have a very problematic workers' compensation system in this province, where a number of independent overseers have looked at it and made recommendations, calling on us to do better for Alberta workers, and that to date we have not responded to those recommendations.

As we happily go about passing this piece of legislation today, let us not forget the many, many other workers, both identified and not identified, who suffer injury, illness, disease, and death at their workplaces every day, every year, some of whom receive compensation, many of whom do not, in a province which, of course, as many people here will know, also suffers from the fact that it is the only province in the country which does not provide workers the capacity to ensure their own safety at their own workplaces as a matter of course. Through that, I'm talking about health and safety committees, which is a matter of law in every other jurisdiction in the country except for this one.

We could do much, much better protecting workers in this province before they become injured. We could do much better protecting firefighters in this province before they become injured, become ill, or succumb to disease, and I think it's important for members of this Assembly to be fully aware of that.

Having said that, I do support the particulars of this legislation. I just believe that there is much, much, much more for us to do if we are going to properly recognize and appreciate the work that is done every day by our firefighters and if we are to properly appreciate and recognize the work done every day by workers in Alberta and to properly to protect their health and their safety from here forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. There's a contingent of people in this province that dedicate their lives to working within emergency services. These people include police officers, paramedics, and firefighters. Daily these individuals put their lives on the line in efforts to ensure the well-being of other Albertans.

For firefighters the risks only begin on the site of a fire. Like they say, where there's smoke, there's fire. But there are also toxins. Despite their best efforts to protect themselves, these toxins make their way into firefighters' bloodstreams. Mr. Speaker, many people would assume that this occurs by inhalation, that these toxins are breathed in. While this is a contributing factor, more recent research has demonstrated that oftentimes these toxins are actually absorbed through the skin. In realizing this, one can begin to understand how vulnerable firefighters actually are as the entire surface area of their bodies can act to admit these toxins into their systems. While science and technology work to improve the protective wear that firefighters use, it remains that firefighters are exposed to more toxins in comparison to the average person.

Some of these toxins are what are called carcinogens, which are cancer-causing agents. Household items that seem benign can in combustion emit these carcinogens. For example, mothballs contain a substance that is a possible human carcinogen. Formaldehyde, a known human carcinogen, can be released from materials such as particleboard, insulation, and aerosol cans when they are combusted. These are just a few examples. Many other household substances, including things like paint thinner, glues, and plastics, can all emit potentially hazardous and cancerous substances. Mr. Speaker, the ingestion or absorption of these substances eventually leads to the circulation through the body by the bloodstream. They can then impact cells in all organs of the body, causing genetic mutations which can ultimately result in a tumour.

Research in this area has led to the development of presumptive legislation in Alberta and many other jurisdictions. Presumptive legislation ensures that if a firefighter develops a particular type of cancer and has been working with the fire protection service for a prescribed number of years, it is presumed that it is a direct result of their occupation. For example, in Alberta if an individual develops leukemia and has been working as a firefighter for a minimum of five years, it is assumed that the dominant cause of the cancer is a result of their profession as a firefighter and the associated exposure to combustion-related toxins. This permits workers to then claim compensation through the Workers' Compensation Board if as a result of their illness they are unable to work. Currently there are eight cancers in Alberta that fall under presumptive legislation: leukemia; brain cancer; bladder cancer; lung cancer, provided they are nonsmokers; ureter cancer; colorectal cancer; and non-Hodgkin's type lymphoma.

Mr. Speaker, since the passing of presumptive legislation to cover these eight cancers in firefighters, which was in 2003, research has continued to expose trends in the development of cancers in firefighters. More recent studies have begun to demonstrate that in addition to these eight cancers there is an increased occurrence of other types of cancer, specifically testicular and esophageal cancers. For example, a recent study took advantage of the California Cancer Registry, which is one of the largest of its kind in the world as it dates back to 1988 and contains over 1.1 million relevant case files.

The study compared the rates of several types of cancer in men that reported their primary occupation as firefighters to the remainder of the males in the database. This thorough and extensive study concluded that several types of cancer consistently occur more often in firefighters. The list includes several cancers, among them esophageal and testicular, the two cancers that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon is working diligently to include under presumptive legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the increased rate of occurrence of both testicular and esophageal cancer in the study that I'm referencing is significant at a 95 per cent confidence interval. Despite this, it is my understanding that some studies show smaller spikes in occurrence of these two cancers. In light of this, some believe that they do not merit being included in the presumptive cancers list. I couldn't disagree more.

Mr. Speaker, research is now telling society that the best method of prevention of all cancers is to lead a healthy lifestyle. This includes being active and eating well. By virtue of their vocation firefighters need to remain fit. Because of this, it is reasonable to conclude that in the absence of the toxins that their profession exposes them to, they would be at a reduced risk for cancer in comparison to the average citizen. Therefore, any spike in the occurrence of this disease is worthy of evaluation in terms of its relatedness to the profession of firefighting. I particularly believe that in light of the studies done on rates of occurrence of esophageal and testicular cancers, being a firefighter predisposes these individuals to their development. As such, like the other eight cancers, they have a higher frequency of occurrence in firefighters. I believe these two should be added under presumptive legislation.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters are integral to our society. They take risks and face challenges that some of us, fortunately, don't experience in the entirety of our lifetime. They do it to ensure the safety and security of all Albertans, our infrastructure, and, by extension of that, our communities.

Mr. Speaker, these are positions of honour, and it is therefore important that we as a government continue to demonstrate our support for the roles they play. I believe that by responding to the reasoned outcomes of our research community, which indicate an increased prevalence of testicular and esophageal cancer amongst individuals in the firefighting profession, we are continuing to show our appreciation for their hard work and sacrifice.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. I support it fully and urge my hon. colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a list of speakers here. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to rise in support of Bill 201 and would like to commend the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing such a current and relevant piece of legislation forward. The Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and myself share a common thread in that we both represent communities that have an integrated fire and ambulance service in place. They mean a lot to our communities, and I'll talk about that a little bit later. This is an obvious piece of legislation that needed to be – well, it's not so obvious. If it was so obvious, it would have been done by now. Obviously, the member has done his homework and has been listening to his constituents, and I commend him for that.

Ever since I was a little boy, I was, you know, very much a fan of and looked up to firefighters, like so many people in this Chamber probably did. My uncle Aro Dudley was a Calgary firefighter. We were neighbours of him. I remember being in awe watching the show Rescue 911, if you remember that. He was on it, and he had saved some little girl from a fire. I remember very vividly just how proud I was to be related to a real-life hero. When I saw this bill come forward, he was the first person that I thought of. But there are so many stories like that, and there are just so many heroes among our firefighters today.

Section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act, which this amends, specifically alludes to the integrated fire-ambulance services. It specifically says that in these cases this act covers these types of firefighters. I feel that that's really appropriate and a good thing and probably one of the reasons why this member is taking this bill through.

In Airdrie we have, as I said earlier, an integrated fire-ambulance team, EMS service, one that we are very proud of. It has become quite an issue of contention with this government in our community right now because our city council has just chosen to divest themselves of this service because of some happenings with the province.

I want to read an article into the record that was published in the local paper in Airdrie. I'm of the hope that the current minister of health will be able to assist my community in retaining our integrated service and actually reverse what has happened because of some developments with Alberta Health Services. I would like to put that into the record, and I'll do so now. The article is entitled Airdrie Emergency Services and Broken Promises and is as follows:

Many residents of Airdrie were disappointed when they heard the news the City would be divesting itself of its provincially renowned integrated fire and ambulance service.

Run by Chief Sheldon Leavitt, Airdrie Emergency Services has a sterling safety record, attracts and trains dozens of highly skilled individuals to Airdrie, and saves millions of taxpayers' dollars by efficiently integrating the use of equipment and personnel thereby limiting duplication and waste.

So why would the City feel the need to divest itself of this service? Two words – broken promises.

As a newly elected MLA, I was approached by [the] then Health Minister . . . to carry Bill 43, the Emergency Health Services Act (2008). The proposed law was to enshrine responsibility for providing ambulance services with the newly created Alberta Health Services (AHS) entity.

I immediately brought up a concern with the Minister, communicated to me by Mayor Linda Bruce shortly after taking office, that Airdrie was worried this centralization of authority might mean the end of our community's prized integrated service. I said that if the minister could guarantee me that this legislation would not interfere with Airdrie's ability to retain its integrated service, I would be happy to carry Bill 43 through the Legislature. The minister made the promise, and I, somewhat naively it turns out, took him at his word.

Roughly one year later, and to my great consternation, I received a phone call from our good mayor explaining that [Alberta Health Services] was alleging that Airdrie Emergency Services was in breach of its contract with AHS, and that the demands being made by AHS were so expensive in nature, the City may be forced to divest itself of its integrated service entirely.

The stated complaint by AHS was that the integrated service was overstretched and not adequately safe. Given the unblemished safety record of the service, I found that difficult to believe. Upon further investigation, it appears a high ranking bureaucrat at [Alberta Health Services] was on a bit of a power trip, and was looking for any excuse to have AHS take over Airdrie's integrated service.

After investigating this issue, I called [the] Minister . . . explained the situation and reminded him of his pledge. I suggested that all he needed to do was rein in one or two bureaucrats at AHS and the problem would be solved. He said he would look into it but that I should not involve myself. He hired a mediator. City managers provided three options they felt would address the stated concerns of AHS. AHS declined each option and stubbornly refused to alter its original position on the issue.

Late last year, [the] Minister . . . called me with the news that mediation had failed, but that he would have communications staff at [Alberta Health Services] call me about spinning the news to my constituents as a "public safety concern." I guess he has control over that part of the bureaucracy. I crossed the floor shortly thereafter.

Now, I've asked the current health minister to meet with the city and the city staff to see if there could be something worked out to keep our integrated service. The minister has very thoughtfully agreed to do that, which I'm very grateful for. There's a lot of hope in our town right now that this sort of nightmare might be over, especially for the staff of the integrated service. If anyone looks at the Airdrie papers for the last couple of weeks, since the minister agreed to that meeting, they'll see that there is a lot of hope that something might be done. I would just ask that the minister – he's not here right now, obviously on other duties, a very busy man – when he hears of this first-hand from the city, will do the right thing and reverse a very damaging decision by Alberta Health Services.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, may I just call on you. This is Bill 201 about firefighter cancers.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. As I stated earlier, the bill actually specifically addresses the integrated ambulance service, that is unique to many communities, including Leduc and Airdrie, so it's very, very relevant to the topic.

I will say this in conclusion, that I do support Bill 201 wholeheartedly.

I would conclude with another story by saying that, you know, when I was in New York late last year, I had the opportunity to visit the World Trade Center site. Across from the World Trade Center site is a church.

An Hon. Member: It's still standing.

4:10

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. It's still standing.

They based rescue operations out of that church. Firefighters from all across the world came there and were based out of there when they were going to and coming from. They would sleep right there in the graveyard that's at that church. It really had a special feeling to it, just a really special place.

I noticed that there's a pile of badges; I'd say about four feet tall. It's just a pile of badges from the different fire departments and police departments from around the world that came to serve there. There's a big kind of commemoration to it and a big photograph of it that you can see on every side of the church and then, of course, the badges in the church itself. I noticed to my excitement that the Edmonton fire department has the badge right smack on the very top. The picture just focuses right down on it, and the first thing you see is the Edmonton fire department. You know, I got to thinking about what absolutely amazing people would go all the way across North America to search and help their brethren in distress in the ruins of the World Trade Center. That was a special moment for me personally, and I think all Albertans and Edmontonians should take pride in being recognized that way.

I think Bill 201 is definitely the least that we could do to make sure that just as our friends in the fire departments across this great province are there for us when we need them, we're there for them when they need us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and voice my strong support for Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of men and women in Alberta have chosen career paths knowing that their job description would involve putting themselves in life-threatening situations to protect and rescue others. Firefighting is this career. Firefighters have received medical emergency training, which allows firefighters to perform rescue services and prehospital care in numerous situations.

As a former mayor I know first-hand that these men and women are also very active members of our communities, engaging in several charitable organizations and educating Albertans on fire safety and prevention. In my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar firefighters are active in different organizations and are certainly in our schools to teach our children the importance of fire safety. These men and women are trained to cope with numerous situations that could endanger lives and damage property, such as motor vehicle accidents and hazardous goods spills.

Mr. Speaker, there aren't many people that go to work every day knowing that they may face potentially life-threatening situations. There are endless terms we can use to describe these men and women. Brave and selfless are two that come to mind. But I believe there is no better term to describe these firefighters than heroes. Imagine a house or building engulfed in flames. While people are running away from the flames and smoke, firefighters have the instinct to run towards them. They are more concerned about the lives of the people trapped inside than the thick, black smoke and the over 500 degree Celsius temperature that await them.

As I said, rescuing people from burning buildings and extinguishing flames are only part of the firefighter's responsibility at the scene of a fire. Often fire victims have been exposed to large amounts of smoke or other toxic substances. Since this is part of the job, Alberta firefighters are required to receive emergency medical training. This training also allows firefighters to provide prehospital care to fire victims who have burns, who may have suffered from smoke inhalation or other injuries as a result of a fire. Mr. Speaker, prehospital care means the difference between a minor or a serious injury or even between life and death.

As a result of the educational programs in our schools our children know that a house fire can turn deadly in approximately three minutes and that the average response time for a firefighter to respond to a fire is only a few minutes. The time between the detection of a fire and the firefighters' arrival on the scene is very crucial. In light of these facts, firefighters across our province are leading fire prevention and evacuation seminars in our classrooms and in our communities. This increases knowledge about escape routes, reducing the likelihood of a fire and educating our children on how to make smart choices that can save lives.

The Alberta Fire and Injury Prevention Educators' Network is one of many examples of Alberta's firefighters' dedication to reducing both the number and severity of fires in our province. This group of men and women have made fire and injury prevention education a priority for our province's fire emergency services. The network also aims to recognize and close the gap between fire and injury prevention education so that Albertans have the best information possible on fire safety.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters are known for saving lives. We often think about the image of a firefighter carrying someone out, away from the flames, or providing prehospital care that saves lives. While these are the most visible ways of saving a life, I would suggest that firefighters are saving lives every day in our classrooms and our communities teaching Albertans about both fire and injury prevention. This preventative training saves lives in a different way, and Alberta firefighters should be commended for their dedication to public safety.

In addition to our firefighters' commitment to public safety and promotion of fire prevention in our communities, there is another area in which Alberta firefighters display their commitment to our communities. The volunteer work and charitable organizations that our firefighters are involved in is truly phenomenal. In my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar and, indeed, around the province fire departments have a strong desire to help those affected by fire and to bring smiles to children's faces.

Numerous fire departments raise funds for burn victims to ensure that money is available for necessary upgrades to the highly specialized equipment in their burn unit. This funding often provides the local burn units' health care teams with educational opportunities that allow them to remain informed of new treatment techniques. This provides comfort to those suffering serious burns. Raising funds for burn victims is one of many causes that the Alberta firefighters are associated with. Many fire departments across Alberta organize toy drives for underprivileged youth or raise funds for cancer charities for children.

Mr. Speaker, one of the realities of being a firefighter is going to work knowing that you may endanger yourself to save another's life.

Alberta's firefighters are truly heroes, and it is very difficult to show the depth of our gratitude for what they do. Anyone who has been victimized by a fire knows that there really is no proper way to thank the firemen and women who may have saved your home or a family member. Bill 201 recognizes the role that firefighters play in our society. It also recognizes the dangerous working conditions that firefighters face each and every day. One simple way we can display our respect and admiration for our firefighters is to support Bill 201. Bill 201 acknowledges that the risks associated with being a firefighter do not end once the flames are extinguished.

Spouses and the family members of our firefighters also make sacrifices when their loved ones are called out, and this might happen at supper, at a birthday party, or at any family event. It is a sacrifice that they all make. We also thank the spouses and families for their dedication and sacrifice as well for the support they give to our firemen and women. This bill goes further by thanking our firefighters for the role they play in our communities as lifesavers, educators, and volunteers.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. The wonderful work that he has done, an amazing amount of work, needs to be acknowledged as well. It is my pleasure to support Bill 201 and to thank all those who serve in this noble profession.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much. Also known as member 709.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise in support of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. Like the original amendments that were brought forward with respect to firefighters, I am fully in support of this bill. The bill amends the Workers' Compensation Act so that esophageal and testicular cancers will be added to the list of eligible cancers for which firefighters can be compensated.

Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties with our workers' compensation system and the way it is administered is that the onus of proof is very much on the person making the claim that the condition or injury from which they suffer directly arises out their work. So when certain diseases are deemed to be grounds for compensation, this makes that whole process much easier for the person who is making the application. I think that when there is clear evidence that particular diseases or injuries arise out of particular occupations, then we ought to make sure that people are entitled to that compensation.

Now, the Workers' Compensation Board currently recognizes kidney cancer, leukemia, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, brain, bladder, colorectal, lung, and uterine cancer. This is based, I think, on an approach that provides a great deal more fairness. If someone is suffering from cancer or other serious illness as a result of their occupation, the last thing they want to be doing is going through the various steps and hoops that are provided for in order to get the claim approved. This, unfortunately, is an all-too-common experience of people who apply in Alberta for workers' compensation. So by adding these two cancers, which designate a primary site esophageal cancer and a primary site testicular cancer, to the list of diseases to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies, that would mean that the applicant would not have to prove the relationship to their employment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the tremendous courage of our firefighters and the wonderful job they do protecting the lives and property of citizens. But I think that this bill is important for a different reason, and that is that people who are in a hazardous occupation and who are exposed to carcinogenic chemicals or other harmful materials in their environment that result in serious disease or injury have a right to be compensated.

This should apply not only to firefighters, in my view, but should be an underlying principle of workers' compensation in this province. I regret to say that I don't believe that it has been fully accommodated within the current practices of the Workers' Compensation Board or within the legislation that we now have. The principle of this bill is excellent, and I'm saying that it needs to be extended to all workers who face hazardous conditions in their employment and suffer long-term diseases or severe diseases as a result, not just firefighters. Not just because firefighters are brave do we award them with this.

It's important, I think, that we recognize that as human beings, as workers they have the right to compensation, and they have the right to be fairly compensated without having to go through enormous hoops and bureaucratic mazes and the frustration that comes from that. Mr. Speaker, I know, because in my position I've dealt with many people who have been frustrated by workers' compensation in this province, the almost desperate look in their eyes and just their gratitude that somebody will actually sit down and listen to them. Some people, in my view, have become almost obsessed with getting justice because they were denied justice, Mr. Speaker, under our workers' compensation system.

So, in my view, Bill 201 is a wonderful piece of legislation, and I commend the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing it forward, but its principle needs to be extended to other diseases and to other workers. This is something that we should be providing for anyone in our province who has been negatively impacted to the extent that they now have a disease that threatens their life or their livelihood as a result of their occupation. When those diseases can be shown to be caused by their occupation, then there should be deemed to be a sufficient reason for providing the compensation under the act.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, I very much support this bill, but I don't accept the notion that this protection is provided to firefighters by reason of their courage or their standing in the community. It ought to be provided to every worker who is in an occupation where their health and safety can be compromised and it can be shown, reliably, that particular diseases are a result of their occupation and the environment in which they do that job. So I would urge the government to go beyond private members' bills and bring forward some comprehensive legislation that extends this principle to all workers in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, brought forward by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I believe that the objective of Bill 201 is to enhance the Alberta Workers' Compensation Act by expanding the presumptive cancer list for firefighters. This is essential because in serving our communities, firefighters respond to emergencies and are exposed to a multitude of known and unknown dangers to their health and well-being.

I commend the province for already having substantial workers' compensation legislation, but Bill 201 would help ensure that this government supports our firefighters to the fullest. Alberta's current presumptive cancer list for firefighters includes brain, bladder, uterine, kidney, colorectal, lung, as well as leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Bill 201 would expand this list to include primary site esophageal cancer as well as primary site testicular cancer. These additions would help ensure that Alberta is in line with other provinces and states that have recently added esophageal and testicular cancer to their lists that presume cancers for firefighters. For instance, B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick as well as several jurisdictions in the United States include one or both of these cancers on their presumptive cancer lists.

I'd like to further discuss these examples of other jurisdictions as they demonstrate that Bill 201 is feasible and beneficial for firefighters. Mr. Speaker, Manitoba and New Brunswick have incorporated both esophageal cancer and testicular cancer in their presumptive cancer list. In 2009 Manitoba amended its Workers Compensation Act to incorporate esophageal and testicular cancers to their list of cancers covered by workers' compensation. The legislation is retroactive to 1992 and ensures that families of firefighters who fall ill or pass away can access money to cover their expenses. This amendment was known as Bill 17 and received royal assent on June 11, 2009. Mr. Speaker, esophageal and testicular cancers can develop in firefighters after regular exposure to harmful toxins over many years. This is why Manitoba set the minimum periods of employment at 25 years for esophageal cancer and 10 years for testicular cancer.

Mr. Speaker, New Brunswick also recently expanded its list of presumptive injuries. As of 2009 firefighters in New Brunswick may be awarded compensation or benefits in relation to esophageal and testicular cancer. New Brunswick's Firefighters' Compensation Act provides coverage to active and retired firefighters who have served the required number of years of service and who have been diagnosed with a specific cancer or who have suffered a heart attack within 24 hours of an emergency response.

Alberta should follow their lead as it would ensure that we continue to protect our honourable firefighters, who risk their own lives to protect ours. These provinces have rightly acknowledged that there is a link between firefighting as an occupation and certain cancers.

Mr. Speaker, Saskatchewan and British Columbia are also examples of provinces that have recently changed their legislation. However, they have only included primary site testicular cancer in their presumptive cancer lists. In '05 and '09 Saskatchewan and British Columbia respectively amended legislation to include testicular cancer under workers' compensation for firefighters. Similarly, Ontario amended its legislation to include esophageal cancer as a prescribed disease in 2007.

Mr. Speaker, these provinces have recognized the connection between certain cancers and firefighting as an occupation like Alberta has, as well. However, they've gone one step further in ensuring that firefighters are fully protected. Statistically firefighters develop certain types of cancers at a higher rate than other workers, and it's vital that these cancers are covered under the firefighters' workers' compensation. Bill 201 would help ensure that our province remains a national leader in workers' compensation coverage, which would provide further protection for Alberta's firefighters and their families.

In addition to the provinces that have recently expanded their presumptive injury list, there are also 17 states that have done the same to include both or one of these proposed cancers. These states include California, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, Texas, Rhode Island, Illinois, Alabama, Tennessee, New Hampshire, and Oklahoma. These 12 states have presumption laws that contain broad or nonspecific language that can be interpreted to cover all cancers. Other states such as Washington and Vermont have added only testicular cancer to their list of cancers presumed to be occupational diseases.

That being said, in Washington the presumption of occupational disease may be rebutted by a preponderance of evidence, including the use of tobacco products, physical fitness and weight, lifestyle, hereditary factors, and exposures from other employment or nonemployment activities. For instance, the presumption of occupational disease does not apply to a firefighter who develops a heart or lung condition who's a regular user of tobacco products or has a history of tobacco use.

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned earlier, these other jurisdictions are good indicators that Bill 201 is practical and feasible. Furthermore, an expanding list of presumptive injuries to include primary site esophageal and testicular cancers would reach out to our firefighters and show this government's support of the invaluable job that our firefighters do and our commitment to ensuring their well-being. We've talked about that a lot this afternoon.

Alberta is known for being a leader, which is why we should continue to ensure that firefighters have the proper workers' compensation rights. Let's continue to support our firefighters, who face safety risks in their service to Albertans each and every day, by passing Bill 201.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for introducing Bill 201 into the Legislative Assembly. Now, Bill 201 is to add two primary cancers to the presumptive list of cancers so that firefighters may claim under the workers' compensation if they get esophageal and testicular cancers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was just doing a literature research here on the computer. In San Francisco they did an extensive study: 1 in 3 firefighters either have or have had cancer. These are astronomically alarming rates amongst the population. In fact, lung cancer wasn't a leading cause of cancer amongst firefighters. The usual top cancers around are either lung cancer, usually due to smoking, or for men, 1 in 7 get prostate cancer. There's an alarmingly high rate of all these other cancers, especially amongst firefighters.

Before I go on, I'd just like to tell you a couple of brief stories about the interaction I have had with the heroes of our society. Personally our house had a big fire in Squamish. Recently the Olympics are right there, in Vancouver. Nobody was home. Thank God the fire department arrived and put the fire out and saved our home.

I was visiting in Boston at a conference years ago and was building my new home. Somebody was sleeping in my home for the weekend, and there was a fire. At 3:30 in the morning the fire department called and told my family that my home had been put on fire, and they had put it out.

Recently in Edmonton-Meadowlark one of the elementary schools had a fire in the summer, and they put the fire out. The school survived. It has been refurbished, rebuilt, and actually many of those children were introduced today.

Now, other things I'd like to say about these front-line heroes of our society. You know, you have police officers or paramedics or firefighters, those on the front lines of health care. I have had many interactions with them first-hand. In fact, many of them are my friends. We have integrated fire and EMS services in town. It's beyond fire. Any time there is a 911 call, these are the first responders that are there when there is a car accident. In fact, they get there before the ambulance and police do.

I remember as a STARS doctor being called to a scene in Strathcona. It was just like television. This pickup truck was underneath a train, a high-speed accident, and these are the people who rip these vehicles apart so that we can do fantastic work with them in the front lines in the emergency departments. They can't get to us health care workers until these folks up here put their lives at risk in 35 below weather at 3 in the morning in some strange, cold location.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Then there are the risks of stepping into a fire at 3 in the morning when you're tired. You're woken up, and suddenly you jump into a truck, put your uniform on. This is a profession that you have to shoot first and think later. You've got to act immediately. You don't have time to think. They are trained professionals, trained to act accordingly in the right way, and the last thing on their mind usually is their safety. The first thing on their mind is everybody else's safety. I'd just like to acknowledge the efforts of all our dear friends and heroes out there. You are the best of us.

Now, because they react first, they place themselves at the greatest risk. Mr. Speaker, when they come to us in the emergency room, patients are cleaned up, and the scene has been secured. When the to-do happens, they place themselves at greatest risk simply because they must. If they don't, there may be a hundred school kids that burn in that school.

As I said, you know, when I first started as a medical student, I did a ride-along with the paramedics. Gee, I felt really nauseated at the end of the ride because they made me sit backwards. We'd go sit in the fire hall. These guys would be cooking healthy food all the time, and they would be working out. As an ignorant, young medical student I thought: man, these guys have got an easy life. But when they're called into action, the reason they've got to eat this healthy food and the reason they have to get their rest and their sleep and the reason they are working out is because they might be called and they might have to lift a 300-pound man down the stairs, so they have to be in fantastic physical shape. In fact, if everybody else did in health care what these folks do, we would have no problems in the health care system. Healthy lifestyles, healthy eating: this is the embodiment of our society.

I would just like to say: you know what, Mr. Speaker? We have to endorse this. We can't even think about not endorsing this because, unfortunately, it's years later when the damaging effects of the poisonous chemicals are known. The dermal exposure from all of these chemicals that these heroes get from the plastics, the dioxin, the carbon monoxide, the cyanide, all the million chemicals: they experience them later on in their life. The last thing we need to do is ask them to prove to us where they got this from when, really, the evidence already exists.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for introducing this. I'd like to thank all of our friends up here in the gallery for being here. I'd like to thank all of our friends in the Assembly for speaking positively to this.

Thank you.

4:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak in support of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. The objective of this bill is to include two new cancers in the presumptive list of cancers that firefighters may claim under workers' compensation.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for sponsoring this important piece of legislation. I'd also like to take this time to extend thanks to the brave firefighters in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat, specifically those men and women who work in the communities of Medicine Hat, Redcliff, Bow Island, Cypress county, and Forty Mile county.

Mr. Speaker, many of these firefighters have come to see me and have expressed concern that they're not covered adequately by existing workers' compensation legislation. I am pleased to say that the proposals made under Bill 201 will effectively address their valid concerns.

Now, our current legislation does a decent job of ensuring that firefighters and their families do not have to suffer unsupported with a work-related cancer. However, this can always use some updating and improvement. In 2003 Bill 202, the workers' compensation presumptive legislation for firefighters act, received royal assent in Alberta. With the passing of this bill, Alberta became the second province in the country to provide its firefighters with presumptive legislation and coverage under the Workers' Compensation Board. This legislation was brought forward by the former Member for Calgary-North Hill, Richard Magnus, to protect firefighters and their families.

The dangers related to firefighting go beyond just fighting fires. These additional risks are now recognized by this legislation and proposed amendment changes. After all, Mr. Speaker, firefighters are vital to essential services in Alberta and are committed to the safety of all Albertans. We are incredibly lucky to have such brave men and women shield us from danger, and when a firefighter is unable to do their job, it weakens our line of defence.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat: it isn't just flames that pose an on-the-job hazard for firefighters. The unseen threat posed by toxic chemicals can be just as deadly. Firefighters are exposed to many compounds designated as carcinogens by the International Agency for Research on Cancer. These include benzene, diesel, engine exhaust, chloroform, soot, styrene, and formaldehyde. Some of these cancer-causing agents can actually be absorbed through the skin.

It's amazing that one of the most dangerous occupations in the world can become even more hazardous when smoke is factored in. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States points out that there are some 70,000 substances listed as toxic and that if these are to combine, there are over 70 million possible toxic combinations.

Moreover, science has shown an undeniable link between firefighting and cancer. The Alberta Workers' Compensation Board has stated that almost 75 per cent of work-related firefighter deaths since the year 2000 have also been due to cancer. The Workers' Compensation Act in regard to firefighters uses presumptive legislation to determine compensation, entitlement, application, and payment. The Workers' Compensation Act states in essence that if a firefighter is diagnosed with a cancer where a primary site is among the list in presumptive legislation, the illness shall be presumed to be an occupational disease. In simple terms, a firefighter's work environment can be the cause of cancer development, and that's why Alberta passed presumptive legislation.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Alberta was the first province to recognize seven forms of cancer as work related. Later an eighth primary site was added to the list. Currently these eight cancers are recognized by the Alberta government as more likely to develop in firefighters than in the general population, and these have been mentioned in debate many times today. If passed, Bill 201 would amend the list to include primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer.

In order to qualify under the primary site cancer regulation, a firefighter must prove a minimum period of exposure to the hazards of firefighting. For example, Mr. Speaker, to qualify for compensation for leukemia, a firefighter must have been a full member of the fire protection service for five years. For compensation for brain cancer it's 10 years. For bladder, lung, and ureter cancer it's 15 years. For kidney, colorectal, and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma they must have been working for a fire protection service for 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, without presumptive legislation the responsibility would fall to the firefighter to prove that their cancer was caused by their occupation. In the absence of presumptive legislation firefighters have been asked: at which fire did you contract this cancer?

This legislation removes the burden of proof from firefighters when a diagnosis is made. In addition, with this presumptive legislation firefighters who are diagnosed with cancer do not have to deal with the compounded stress of the diagnosis along with how they would provide for their families in the event that they are unable to work.

Mr. Speaker, advances in science and technology can provide us with new information regarding cancer and the causes of cancer on an ever-evolving basis. If passed, Alberta can continue to be a leader in the protection of our vital services and ensure that firefighters and their families feel a veil of protection in their choice of career. Moreover, it'll work to raise awareness of the important role that individuals play in our society. Finally, it could allay potential fears of those contemplating the profession, ultimately encouraging them to pursue it.

Our current legislation has taken into account the best interests of the firefighters themselves as well as the vocation of firefighting. By passing Bill 201, we will continue to demonstrate our appreciation and support for these everyday heroes. Firefighters put their lives on the line to protect us and the public, and they do not think twice about putting themselves in harm's way.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting in favour of this legislation, this bill, and urge all members of the House to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and speak in support of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for introducing this piece of legislation. I'd also like to take a moment to thank all the men and women who serve as firefighters to protect and provide safety to all Albertans. These men and women put their lives on the line every day. It is a risk that they and their families live with on a daily basis. They train relentlessly. They serve honourably, without hesitation and with great ability and perfection.

This bill we are discussing today is small but meaningful, a way to further support our firefighters. It is also another example of this government's commitment towards Alberta's firefighters, their families, and the safety of all Albertans. Bill 201 would make amendments that would expand the list of presumptive cancers for firefighters to include primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer. This expands what was achieved in 2003 with Bill 202, the workers' compensation presumptive legislation for firefighters act.

The 2003 legislation created firefighters' coverage for certain types of cancers under the WCB, including brain, bladder, urethra, kidney, colorectal, and lung as well as leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. However, since the first passing of this presumptive legislation research has begun to show that the current list of cancers should be expanded to include esophageal and testicular cancer. That is what Bill 201 achieves by including these two additional primary cancers in the presumptive list of cancers that firefighters may claim for under workers' compensation.

Mr. Speaker, I would specifically like to highlight the many important roles that firefighters play in keeping us safe and how this bill would provide support for these brave men and women. Each day firefighters arrive on the job not knowing what the day may bring. From motor vehicle accidents to wildfires to structural fires firefighters are exposed to various challenges and perform various roles with our safety as their primary objective. The roles of firefighters include fighting fires, rescuing people, as well as fire prevention. Prevention is the ultimate goal of firefighters. Preventing fires by taking necessary safety precautions reduces the number of incidents where firefighters are required to put their lives on the line for the safety of our families. However, incidents do occur that require firefighters to be on the job, ready to deal with any situation they may come upon. Firefighters are extensively trained to deal with a variety of different emergency situations.

Mr. Speaker, the current Minister of Infrastructure, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Member for Edmonton-Manning, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and the Member for Calgary-North Hill as well as myself spent a day last fall with firefighters learning about their training in a firefighter 101 course. It was very informative for all of us. It was also a great experience to take a walk in their shoes and just feel the adrenaline and what they go through on a daily basis.

These firefighters are trained to deal with the most complex and tragic motor vehicle accidents that require the use of technologies such as the jaws of life and other hydraulic tools to remove victims from motor vehicles. They also allowed us to demonstrate and play with the jaws of life a little bit to see what it is actually like to operate that apparatus.

Firefighting can also lead firefighters into complex and dangerous firefighting situations. In each circumstance firefighters use their training and ability to achieve the goal of saving lives, saving property, and protecting the environment. Fires under any circumstances can pose harmful and challenging environments. For example, most fires involve solids like wood, paper, grass, and plastic; however, a fire may also involve flammable liquids like petroleum, oils, and kerosene and flammable gases like methane, propane, butane, hydrogen, and carbon monoxide. Additionally, fires can also involve combustible metals like sodium, magnesium, lithium, and aluminum, each of which provides different and difficult challenges.

Our firefighters deal with these situations on a daily basis and have the training to know exactly how to best save lives, property, and our environment. However, Mr. Speaker, while firefighters are putting themselves out on the line to protect us, they face many personal dangers that can result in long-term debilitating effects. As described, firefighters are exposed on a regular basis to numerous burning materials, chemicals, and other toxins. When these chemicals and plastics burn, they combine to form complex and unknown chemical combinations which can be very harmful.

According to the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States there are more than 70,000 substances listed as toxic; however, when these toxins combine, there are approximately 70 million possible toxic combinations. Evidence points to these carcinogens as having a direct connection with various cancers. Despite our best efforts at prevention fires do occur, and this requires the training, knowledge, and the ability of these firefighters. Bill 201 fully recognizes the roles and situations that these men and women face and how in performing these roles . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you very much, but time now precludes any further debate.

I'll ask the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to close the debate.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is a pleasure to have this opportunity to bring such an important subject before the House. I want to thank all the men and women of the fire services in Alberta who have spent a good portion of their afternoon listening to the debate from my hon. colleagues. I want to thank my colleagues from both sides of the House for the eloquent way that they spoke to this topic and thank them all for their support. If I'm not mistaken, every member spoke very much in favour of this piece of legislation.

With that, I would move to close the debate, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a second time]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might beg the indulgence of the House to note that we have only five minutes left in the time period allocated for consideration of private members' business, bills, and I'm wondering if I might seek unanimous consent to call it 5 o'clock and move on to Motion 501.

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, we'll do that, but I am reluctant to do this. There are still five minutes left. An hon. member could be present to move a second bill, and that would be within the time frame. Can the Deputy Government House Leader advise me if that hon. member will raise a point later?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess if that member is here and wishes to deny the consent, then that would be the case. My concern is that five minutes is generally far less than what the member would normally have to properly introduce a bill, and it would be split over two days.

The Speaker: Again, my point is a procedural one. There is provision in here in the standing orders to continue this order of business till 5 o'clock, and the standing order says that we then move to the next one. There is opportunity for another private member to raise a bill and introduce the bill. The member not being here, I just want to make sure in my head that this does not preclude a privilege issue that we'll come back to later.

The hon. member can proceed with the request, then, for unanimous consent to adjourn this motion and proceed to the next order of business. Please make that request, and we'll see where it goes.

Mr. Renner: All right, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the House to conclude business for private members' bills and move on to a private member's motion, that being Motion 501.

The Speaker: I'll ask one question. Does any hon. member oppose this request? If so, say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

MLA Salaries and Benefits Review

501. Ms Pastoor moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish an independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits for Members of the Legislative Assembly and to report to the government and this Assembly on whether the current overall remuneration for members is fair and adequate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to stand up and speak to my Motion 501. The question would be: why should I be talking about this now? Partly, I think, we all understand how we draw numbers, and it's been fortuitous for me to be able to have drawn the number when, actually, at this point in time our salaries are frozen. So I believe that this is the time that would be good for an independent review to take their time and review the salaries and benefits, that haven't been reviewed for 16 years, by an independent commissioner. Actually, in this case it was an accounting firm, KPMG. At the end of, I believe, 2011 – our salaries are frozen for two years – the questions would be: should there be an increase, should there be a catch-up, or were, in fact, the salaries of 2009 still fair?

As I've mentioned, the last time there was a review was in 1994, and there were recommendations at that time. One of them was to have a basis for tracking compensation needs. They also thought that the comparison between the substantial gap between member and private-sector compensation wasn't, perhaps, a suitable way of comparison. At this point in time I think that the public and private salaries have come a little closer together, so I'm not sure that this particular recommendation, with the addendum to it, would be still valid.

The second recommendation was to appoint an independent commission and, in fact, that once every three to five years it should be reviewed by that commission. On December 2 in the Members' Services Committee, which is the committee at this point in time that does set our salaries, the leader of the fourth party proposed a motion to strike an independent committee to review the remunerations of the MLAs. At that point the Liberal members of that committee did support that. The Premier and his cabinet increased their own salaries behind closed doors within the last year; however, the Premier and the cabinet also announced that they would reduce their salaries as of October 29, and the October 15 release was released from the office of the Premier.

There certainly was a push-back from Albertans when the Liberals objected to the process in this House, but I believe the point is that Albertans do feel that they have a vested interest in how their elected officials are compensated and the benefits that they receive. As I've mentioned, how it compares to private and public compensation, I think, could certainly be a point that could be reviewed. At this point in time who gets what and for what I don't think is necessarily the issue. I think that the establishment of an independent commission to review our current salaries and benefits is the issue on the table.

Certainly, by passing this motion, we would be doing exactly what this Premier has said that he wants. He wants open, transparent, and accountable government. Because we as a government legislatively do vote on our own salaries – these are public dollars that are going out – I believe that all MLAs would also like an open, transparent, and accountable way of actually talking to their constituents and to other Albertans on how we are paid.

There were some jurisdictional comparisons, and there are some governments – the Parliament of Canada, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Labrador, and the Northwest Territories – where at this point the remuneration is decided by an arm's-length process, and it's formally recognized in legislation. The Northwest Territories has a different way of doing it, but they have it set out in legislation that within two years after the polling day of a general election the Speaker establishes a commission and appoints members who are independent, neutral, and knowledgeable, and they establish the guidelines and the principles for the responsibility of this commission. The commission then, of course, reviews MLAs' compensation.

One of the reasons I feel very strongly about this motion is that when I sat on city council, this is exactly what we did. We did have – I believe that it was KPMG as well – an independent accounting company that did do the comparisons. They did it within Alberta, within Alberta municipalities, and did come up with what we as a council – again, we had to vote on it because they were public dollars – decided was fair. Now, they also had a recommendation on how we would go forward.

Yes, in this House we do have a mechanism whereby every year the weekly earnings ratio is looked at, and our compensation raise is based on that. I think that may be fair. I'd like to have someone tell me that it's fair. The point is that all that does is really raise the base salary. It's some of the other compensations that I think have to be looked at in terms of what is fair: committee work and many of the extras that MLAs, of course, do.

I feel that when I had the independent review as an alderman, I had no problem defending my salary to people who probably thought, as they still do, that all politicians are overpaid. Unless someone has really walked a mile in someone else's moccasins, I don't think that they really understand what others do or the hours that are involved in someone else's jobs. MLAs work long, hard hours, but I don't believe the general population particularly cares about that as long as their voices are taken forward by their elected officials, which is why they were elected, and that they are fairly paid and only fairly compensated. Even if increases are justified, the public perception would be more amiable towards the increase if it came from an outside body and it didn't come from, certainly, those who would stand to benefit directly.

At present the MLA salaries and all of the allowances, et cetera, for ministers, the Premier, leaders of the opposition are posted publicly on the Assembly website. But to determine who receives the committee pay and the total amount paid out to each member requires that you look at the report of payments to Members of the Legislative Assembly, which is tabled once a year by the President of the Treasury Board. This is a sessional paper, and it's also available in the Legislature Library. I think that it requires a fair amount of work to dig out this information. At the present time it's not posted online, and I believe that it should be.

Clearly, the compensation from 1994 was . . . [Ms Pastoor's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a list of nine additional members who want to participate. We have approximately 45 minutes. I'm going to recognize them in the following order: the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon.

Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Drayton Valley-Calmar, then Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, then Calgary-Varsity, Strathcona, Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share some of my thoughts on Motion 501, which was brought forward by the Member for Lethbridge-East. This motion proposes to establish an independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits paid to MLAs. This commission then would be required to report their findings to the House. In my mind, this motion is all about ensuring that Albertans receive high-quality representation. While I recognize that there's some angst regarding the present compensation, it's important that it is adequate to ensure that existing and prospective MLAs are fairly paid for what they do. After all, Albertans deserve to have confidence knowing that they are receiving high-quality representation for their taxpayer dollars.

I also believe that Albertans recognize and expect that their elected representatives are fairly compensated for their work. Therefore, I think it is important that we have a process to determine MLA salaries that Albertans can be confident about. To this end, Mr. Speaker, I welcome this proposed independent commission. After all, this would help to ensure the confidence and support of Albertans. However, I believe that for it to be effective, it needs to represent the interests and perspectives of all Albertans. In my mind, the membership of the independent committee should reflect the diversity of the constituents that MLAs are elected to represent. It's important to understand as well that this commission will have to have the ability to look at this issue and could go either way with their findings. In fact, they could recommend that the existing compensation is less than it should be and should be increased.

This commission should also include members familiar with the different challenges facing rural and urban members. My constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat is a blended constituency that includes a vast area of rural Alberta, with oil and gas and agricultural issues. As well, my blended constituency includes about one-third of the city of Medicine Hat.

Mr. Speaker, this commission should also include someone who is familiar with the job of an MLA. After all, I believe that if we reflect this diversity correctly, the commission's report will provide Albertans the opportunity to carefully examine and reflect on its findings. Again, Albertans must have confidence in the membership of the independent commission in order to have confidence in the findings of this commission.

Some questions come to mind. Who will determine the makeup of this commission? Who is going to decide what is fair? For example, I might include the salaries of some of the presidents and CEOs of some of the companies in the oil and gas sector and the agricultural sector: EnCana, $12 million plus bonus; EPCOR, $1.9 million plus bonus; ATCO, $4 million plus bonus; Agrium, $7.9 million plus bonus. Given some of these numbers, what would the commission recommend?

In closing, I'd like to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing this motion to the attention of the House. I believe that creating an independent commission to explore the compensation given the members is a good idea. We just need to ensure that this commission reflects the values of all Albertans.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments and look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It truly is a privilege to rise and speak very much in favour of Motion 501, requesting that an independent committee be set up for MLA pay. I'd really like to congratulate the Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing forward this motion and putting some good, solid work into it. It's an idea that is long past its due date. It's time that Alberta really catches up to some jurisdictions in our great nation by following what they've done and establishing an independent committee to set MLA wages.

It's not that we necessarily do it badly here in this Legislature. It's not necessarily that what we have been paid here in the past or even right now is wrong. What it comes down to is the fact that in open and transparent governments, rightly or wrongly, the rank-and-file population, the Marthas and the Henrys of Alberta, don't want us to be in charge of setting our own pay rate. Simply put, it's like the Caesar's wife rule, I guess, that we politicians should be following: not only do we have to be pure; we have to be seen to be pure. By that, what I mean is that we shouldn't be setting our own rates. The average Albertan would feel much better if there was an independent commission that was established that could look at different salary structures around Alberta, with maybe some union representation, maybe some representation from the business community, maybe some representation from all walks of life on this committee to add a certain bit of context to what we do in the Legislature and on what our pay should be. Let's face it; that's going to entail a whole complex variety of arguments from all across the board.

Let's look at this. One of the things is that we want good people to come into this Legislature. That's going to entail some sort of pay to, I guess, reflect what people are willing to come to public service for. That said, there's got to be a recognition that we in this House do come here with, hopefully, higher goals than simply drawing a paycheque. For if that was the only thing, many of us who are here, well, wouldn't be doing this. That's not why we're here. At the same time, it has to reflect, I guess, a balance as to what is going to attract people to this House and a balance that reflects the public service element to what, in fact, we are doing.

I would state that the process that we've gone through here over the last course, since I was elected in March 2008, really hasn't been that transparent or open or, I guess, in step with what the Alberta electorate wants. Job number one, or I think the first thing we did here upon my arrival in the House, was to go into a Members' Services Committee and to pass what looked to the average Albertan like a large pay increase. If we look around, that's what happened. We did it at a Members' Services Committee meeting. Yeah, I saw the letters go out from the Premier's office saying that it was decided at an all-party committee level, but we know what happened. We came in here, and the government decided: we're going to boost pay. Fair enough. It's in your purview to do so, but it wasn't on an election platform. It wasn't decided beforehand. It was simply after an election where a vast majority was elected. We thought: "Hey, let's put through a pay raise. Now the time is right. They'll forget about it by the next election, and everything will be back to normal by then."

But that's just what I think. Maybe I'm wrong. Maybe I'm wrong. Nevertheless, to take this thing, whatever it is, from there, to take whether that was true or whether it was not true – let's just set up an independent committee to go forward and do this work. Take it out of the hands of the politicians. Yes, at the end of the day I know we're going to have to pass it, but at least we can wave around a piece of paper saying: "Look here. Sorry we have to do it, but this committee is making us do it."

Nevertheless, I appreciate the hon. member bringing this forward. I believe it goes a long way to having open and transparent government. I believe the people of Alberta would feel better about this motion being put forward, and it would simply take a lot of static off both the governing party and the politicians who are in this honourable Chamber.

I thank you for this time, for allowing me to speak, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to hearing other members of this honourable House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and join debate on Motion 501 as brought forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. This motion proposes to establish an independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits for Members of the Legislative Assembly. This commission would then report its findings to the all-party Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, the body currently responsible for all matters related to MLA remuneration.

The Special Standing Committee on Members' Services is comprised of 12 members and chaired by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. In addition to determining adjustments to MLAs' salaries, allowances, and benefits, the committee is responsible for approving the annual estimates of the Legislative Assembly Office; modifying regulations, orders, or other directives governing the office's financial and personnel administration; and establishing human resource information and financial management policy for the Legislative Assembly Office. Without a doubt this committee operates in a transparent and accountable manner. Records of its debates are available on the Legislative Assembly website, and public conversations surrounding the appropriate levels of MLA compensation are always welcome.

In 1998 the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services approved a motion to adjust components of member remuneration on April 1 of each year by the same percentage increase or decrease as in the average weekly earnings for Alberta as reported by Statistics Canada's survey of employment, payrolls, and hours for the immediately preceding calendar year. In February 2009 this committee voted to freeze this annual adjustment for the fiscal year April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of this all-party committee to review this policy in future deliberations. Therefore, the research and conclusions of the independent commission might be helpful to the committee in future meetings. Other parties in this Legislative Assembly through the Members' Services Committee could have input on how to assemble a commission that satisfactorily represents what they see as credible and reliable information on this topic.

Mr. Speaker, I support the proposal of an independent commission assisting the committee, but the assessment of remunerating MLAs' salary should be left to the Members' Services Committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and participate in the debate on Motion 501 this afternoon. Certainly, it's a motion that I think all hon. members of the House should give consideration to and, hopefully, support. What the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is proposing here is certainly a fine idea, to have an independent committee review our remuneration and certainly our benefits.

With no disrespect to the Members' Services Committee, I think this Legislative Assembly and democracy would be better served if our remuneration and benefits were set by a completely independent body. This issue has been discussed and debated through the entire province, particularly since the last election and particularly since each and every one of us in this House received a substantial increase in our pay and, it would be safe to say, our benefits as well.

Now, when you look at the work that individual members do regardless of what side of the House they sit on, members work very, very hard for their constituents and work very hard in this Assembly. There's no doubt about that. But when we look at what other jurisdictions have done whenever this discussion has occurred, we only have to look to the west, to British Columbia, and see what was done there. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, with British Columbia we're talking . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

Now, British Columbia started with the citizens' assembly. There were many, many things that came out of that citizens' assembly, including fixed election dates, what role citizens should play through referendum, the overall composition of the Assembly. Certainly, MLA pay and benefits were discussed. As I recall, we had a presentation from a member of that citizens' committee. This gentleman was from Creston, British Columbia. He talked in the presentation he made to us about how good it would be if there was another way to set the scale for remuneration and benefits to each and every MLA. It was interesting to hear this gentleman describe the proceedings of the citizens' assembly, and regardless of where they went in the province, whether it was urban, whether it was rural, whether it was south, or whether it was north, citizens all had sort of a consistent opinion on this matter.

When we look at this House, I really think we should see the merit in this motion. This should be the logical first step towards establishing a completely independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits for the members of this Assembly and to report to the government and to this Assembly on whether the current overall remuneration for members is fair and adequate and leave it at that. Certainly, other speakers have spoken about previous recommendations that have been made. The recommendations that were made, Mr. Speaker, were obviously read by Members' Services.

Now, it was discussed earlier, certainly, that KPMG recommended that MLAs' salaries should increase. They certainly have. In order to maintain public confidence in this institution and the members that have the privilege of sitting in here, I really would encourage everyone to please consider this motion, to give it some thought, pass it, and allow it to be the first step towards reforming how our benefits and our remuneration are set in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 501 as brought forward by the hon.

Member for Lethbridge-East. Motion 501 urges the government to establish an independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits for Members of the Legislative Assembly and to report to the government and this Assembly on whether the current overall remuneration for members is fair and adequate.

Mr. Speaker, I support the objectives of this motion as it is in line with this government's record of a transparent and accountable government. I welcome the opportunity to have a discussion on how MLAs' salaries and benefits are determined. But I can tell you from my past elected experiences, both as school board trustee and municipal councillor and mayor, that this is always a very difficult issue because at the end of the day elected officials are responsible to make the decision on their salaries, and it is never easy. I welcome and support this motion, as I believe my constituents will as well.

Establishing an independent commission presents certain questions and challenges. Challenges would arise such as how many members would sit on the commission as well as the process for selecting members. All parties represented in the Legislative Assembly could provide valuable input as to how to comprise the commission.

If this committee were formed, it is important that the commission should reflect the broad diversity of Albertans, whom Members of the Legislative Assembly serve. As elected officials MLAs gladly serve all members of their communities, and the membership of the commission should indeed reflect their interests and perspectives. This could include Albertans of various professions, including labourers, teachers, office workers, certainly business leaders, and others.

Mr. Speaker, other provinces have experience in establishing independent commissions to review MLAs' salaries and benefits. As such, it may be helpful to consider their expertise in forming the commission. The governments of British Columbia and Manitoba formed commissions in 2007 while Saskatchewan established an independent review committee in 2006. In selecting its membership, the Legislative Assembly could include members from these commissions for Alberta's own review. These individuals could include present and former Speakers, MLAs, chairs of the commission, and private citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing forward this well-intentioned motion. This committee would provide an opportunity to provide helpful advice to the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, which has the responsibility for establishing salaries and benefits for MLAs. In selecting its membership, I hope that all parties can provide useful input as to how to bring this committee forward to best reflect the diverse views and perspectives of our constituents. Therefore, I'd like to extend my support for Motion 501 and look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak to Motion 501 on MLA compensation, put forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. The motion conforms with some of the rules that we get when we ask to propose a motion in that it has to direct the government in some way. I just want to say from the beginning that I believe this is something that is ultimately in the purview of the Members' Services Committee. However, that does not mean that the Assembly itself could not take up the matter, I believe.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of public concern with respect to not only the level of compensation for MLAs and for members of Executive Council specifically but also the process by which these decisions have been made. I want to indicate in general that I think it's very important that there be some independent look at the compensation of MLAs. That is something that I think the public very much would like to see.

5:30

As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East indicated, at the last meeting of Members' Services Committee, in December, I made a similar motion, which has, however, some significant differences. That motion was made in Members' Services Committee, which I think is the more appropriate place to bring it. I'm going to support this motion, Mr. Speaker, but with some reservations. First of all, I believe that the appropriate place to deal with this is Members' Services. Members' Services Committee did in fact deal with it.

The other problem, though, is the general nature of the motion. First of all, it involves the government in determining the MLAs' compensation. I think that's a problem. I understand the problem the member has because when you submit motions for approval, they will tell you that there are certain ways that you can get a motion on the floor, and usually it's to urge the government to do something. But I have a reservation about the government selecting this committee. That's number one.

In the motion that I made in Members' Services Committee, it specifically said that the terms of reference of the committee must include "the requirement that the committee take into account the workload and remuneration of elected members of provincial and territorial Assemblies in Canada." That's important because I've had an experience before at the municipal order of government where a similar committee was appointed and the view on that committee – because this view primarily came from business members on the committee, they were amazed at the amount of work that politicians were asked to do for very little compensation. They had a frame of reference in their minds of the compensation levels you would see at an executive level in the private sector, which is quite a bit higher, so they felt that the compensation should be dramatically increased.

When the recommendation came back from the committee, it was for a significant increase in the salary of the city councillors at that time, and there was a public backlash against it. That's why when I made my motion, I specified that they have to look at compensation of other people doing the same job. I think that's really important. The risk here is, of course, that we're going to have recommendations made coming back to us for even bigger increases in our salary, and I think the public wouldn't stand for it. I think that's an important thing that has to be included in the terms of reference of any independent committee, and that is that we're comparing apples to apples, not apples to watermelons. That I think is something.

But, you know, I think we should support this motion because I think having some independent review of the compensation of MLAs is appropriate, and I think that the public expects some sort of action on our part to ensure that our compensation is not out of line with other MLAs as they operate in different provincial and territorial Assemblies. I would urge, then, all members to support the motion, and I would hope that some of the difficulties that I have outlined can be overcome in the implementation of it so that we do get truly an independent review of our compensation and one that is reasonable and compares us against our peers rather than against people who may have significantly higher expectations.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona, and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In speaking in favour of Motion 501, which is calling for an independent commission to recommend how compensation is provided for Members of this Legislative Assembly, it's important to note the nature of a motion. It's a recommendation of a desired direction, an urging the government to take steps in the direction suggested. It's extremely important that we have this discussion, and it gives me great hope that so far within this discussion, which we're better than halfway through, the majority of individuals who have spoken, while they may have expressed some individual reservations, support the notion that the motion is putting forward.

I personally believe, Mr. Speaker, that collectively we've lost the confidence of the Alberta electorate, and I say that in a very nonpartisan way. Forty-one per cent of eligible voters chose to participate in the March 2008 election. Whether they chose not to participate because they were satisfied with the status quo, whether they were busy that day, whether they were alienated, whether they didn't figure their vote counted, we'll never know exactly why we had such a low voter turnout, but something every single member of this House has urged for is transparency and accountability. The hon. Premier was chosen as the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party based on a platform of transparency and accountability, something that I believe every single member in this House shares.

Now, being a member of an opposition party, we basically are outvoted regardless of whether it's in the House or whether it's on a particular committee. I would suggest that this motion is not only in opposition parties' best interests, who are on the record asking for an independent commission, whether on the Members' Services Committee or in this House as a whole; I would say that this lets the government off the hook.

It takes away any accusation of self-interest by putting the authority on the shoulders of an independent commission, and I agree very much that we have to make sure that that commission has representation from former MLAs who can attest to the amount of work that we as representatives of our constituencies provide. It will be a challenge creating the membership on that independent commission; there's no doubt about it. But it takes the responsibility, to a large degree, for setting our own wages off our shoulders, and it puts it in the hands of an independent commission to make the recommendations, which then the Members' Services Committee will eventually accept or reject.

Now, we've had suggestions from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who generally, I believe, supported the motion, but he was the first to bring forward the spectre of large salary increases. That spectre has been echoed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: what if the independent committee looks at the work that we do and suggests that we're not being nearly compensated for the work we do? Well, again, the independence of the commission with the discussion in Members' Services to provide what might in this case be a leavening or a levelling of the proposed wage increase will be extremely important.

The convoluted calculation that led to the significant increase for the Premier and cabinet ministers was based on the opposition leaders getting a significant increase. Now, it's important to note that that wasn't something that they asked for; it was something that they actually voted against. But based on the fact that the committee decided to give the opposition leader an increase, they then said:

well, sheesh, if we've given the opposition leader this increase, we'd better darn well give our Premier and members of the cabinet an increase. That was a bit of a convoluted calculation, and with this Motion 501's recommendation the convolution would be taken out.

I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill is anxious to speak, and I am equally anxious to hear him, so thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 501, brought forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. There are a few things to keep in mind. I think a review by an independent group probably is a good idea, although currently that duty, of course, is done by the Members' Services Committee, which has representation from all parties now. So all parties are represented. The formation of an independent commission, I guess, could further promote accountability and transparency in regard to setting the salary and benefits for MLAs. Our government, of course, has always promoted these qualities through many different initiatives: all-party committees, ministerial expenses available for public view online, and so on.

Just prior to the formation of this type of commission I think certain criteria should be met and agreed on by all parties. The commission itself would need to represent the diverse views and interests of all our constituents, of all Albertans. I'm just trying to picture what that committee would look like. We would need, I guess, people from different occupations. So maybe we'd need a cashier, a teacher, a seven-figure CEO, construction worker, small businessperson, probably a QC – I'm looking around this room – a nurse, a fellow that owned a drilling company, a fellow that sold his business to do this.

People would understand, I think, perhaps, the opportunity cost, not just what we're compensated for the duties that we perform in this room or outside. When I think of that, would any of those people truly understand what this job is? I've been in it for a couple of years, and I'm still learning what this job is. But one thing I learned right away is that it's not just a job; it's your whole life while you're in here. The diversity that we would need on this committee would involve so many people from so many different areas of expertise, I think, to get it right that it would become a very, very large committee.

Then the next question, of course, is: should this committee be able to come to some consensus – it's been brought up a couple of times – when we got the answer, what would we do with it?

It's a bit complex. We could have, again, measurables against peers, but responsibilities and so on would be a bit different in every province, obligations. Our province, of course, is the economic driver for Canada at this time, so the decisions that are made here can impact the entire country. Again, I just don't know how you would measure that.

I think it would be complicated work. It could be cumbersome. I am having trouble visualizing what the committee would look like. But I do believe that all the members of this Assembly are interested in the views of their constituents regarding MLA compensation. Motion 501, you know, would give us the opportunity to learn from this independent commission, however it's made up, on whether compensation is fair and adequate. With all parties' consent and the committee reflecting Alberta's diverse population and backgrounds and experience, an independent commission could provide valuable input on the compensation of MLAs.

In summary, I'm not sure what this commission would look like, who it would be, or what the results would be, but in general I do support Motion 501, and I do urge all other members to support Motion 501. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Dr. Brown: I want to thank my colleagues for being brief to allow as many people as possible to participate in the debate. I am supportive of Motion 501, sponsored by my colleague from Lethbridge-East.

As my colleague from Strathcona has said, being an MLA is a lot more than a job; it's one's life. We do have a lot of responsibilities, and for those responsibilities we should be compensated in a fair and equitable manner. However, Mr. Speaker, the present means of setting compensation and benefits presents us with a clear conflict of interest. Our purpose and our duty in serving the House ought to be to give faithful and undivided loyalty to the best interests of our constituents and to all Albertans.

It's inherently as problematic for a committee of this House to determine their own compensation as it is for members of Executive Council to set theirs. Members of the House should divest themselves of this responsibility of setting their own salaries and those of the Executive Council. I support the motion for the establishment of an independent body to determine these matters and to make recommendations to the House.

Mr. Speaker, it's not for me to say what might be undertaken by such an independent body or what conclusions might be drawn from such a review. However, I would say that in my respectful opinion the present payment of the so-called transition allowances should be eliminated. They attract criticism, deservedly in my view, because they are far more generous than what transition allowances or severance payments or lump-sum retiring allowances are in the private sector. They continue to grow in magnitude with continued service in the House far beyond the upper limits of what jurisprudence would indicate as justifiable in the world of business, and they accrue even to those who voluntarily terminate their service with this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that an outside body might give serious consideration to reinstating some sort of a pension plan for members of the House which need not be modelled on the federal Parliament but might reflect the level of pensions available to managers in our civil service. Those members who have transition allowances accumulated might be permitted, perhaps, to contribute or transfer those benefits retroactively to a pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, the composition of an independent body should include not only professionals, experts in compensation, members of the business community but probably also ordinary members of the public at large. Whatever its makeup it should be free from the influences of members of this House, and its recommendations should be binding.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to eliminate the conflict of interest and the resulting stigma which accrues to us as Members of the Legislative Assembly when we set our own compensation. I urge all members of the Assembly to support the motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to say that, like many of the comments today, I support Motion 501. I believe that not only the fact but the perception of the fact relative to the independent review of setting salaries for MLAs is most appropriate. I think it reflects the spirit of what Albertans are saying in coffee shops. I want to say to the hon. member who is proposing the motion that I think this is a noble cause, and obviously she has been listening to what people are saying in coffee shops across Alberta.

Consequently, I will also be supporting Motion 501. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others to participate?

Then shall I call on the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a great deal of humility that I do stand up and thank everyone that has supported this motion. I really appreciate the comments that came from the speakers because I do know that they have reflected on this motion and have given it thought. So thank you for that. We know that motions are for government consideration and that they really don't have to do anything in particular with them, but passing this motion will open up and push the really important merit of the recognition of this discussion of what the commission would look like and of having an independent review.

Some of the comments that I have heard have been right on the point, as far as I'm concerned. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is asking for diverse members for this commission. I think we've heard that thought from other speakers, and I certainly agree. Also, because we would have diverse members, it doesn't preclude having an MLA on that commission or, in fact, perhaps a retired MLA that truly understands the kind of work that we do in this House. As has already been mentioned, it's more than a job. It truly is a 24-hours, seven days a week job where you're always sort of on.

Comparing my salary to EPCOR and EnCana presidents, I think, would be most interesting. However, I think that we have to compare apples to apples and not apples to extremely specialized apples.

The Member for Calgary-Hays also suggested that it should be left up to the Members' Services Committee. To me, it is still self-serving to set your own salaries, but the Members' Services Committee could work towards establishing this commission and what it should look like. I think that's the first discussion that would come forward before we would allow them to go forward and look at our salaries.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar was also calling on diverse membership and actually had some very good suggestions on the kind of commission it would be and the kind of members of society that would be reflected in that.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood suggested that the public really wants to know what our salaries are, and I agree with that. Again, I think that Members' Services could deal with what the commission should look like. As I've said, they could establish the parameters of what a commission would look like and what kind of people would comprise that committee. I think, Mr. Speaker, that having the criteria set by Members' Services is an excellent idea.

The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has suggested reinstating pension plans, which I've often thought was probably a fair idea, but perhaps these pension plans could start at 65 because I think that we know at this point in time that there are people that have been collecting very rich pensions for a great length of time. So if it started at 65 and if, unfortunately, a death occurred ahead of that, then there would be some kind of formula that would have that money go forward to their estate.

I think there have been some very good ideas expressed around this motion. As I've said, I think that having this motion pass will at least get this discussion to go forward, and I think at this point in time it is very important that it does so.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some visitors from Saxony, Germany, including the Hon. Stanislaw Tillich, who is the Minister President of the Free State of Saxony; Mrs. Veronika Tillich, the Minister President's wife; His Excellency Dr. Georg Witschel, who is the ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany, in his first official visit to Alberta; Mrs. Andrea Dombois, vice-president of the Parliament for the Free State of Saxony; State Secretary Johann-Adolf Cohausz, who is the spokesman for the government; Mr. Hansjörg König, State Secretary of the Ministry for Higher Education, Research and the Fine Arts; Dr. Roger Mackeldey, head of the division for international relations, state chancellery; Mrs. Jutta Wolf, division for international relations, state chancellery; Ms Melanie Ottenbreit, head of the press division; and a good friend of ours, Mr. Bernd Reuscher, honorary consul of Germany in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today President Tillich and I signed an agreement to renew the Alberta-Saxony co-operation for another five years. We both agreed that this agreement will further strengthen ties between our two jurisdictions, and we also agreed that we should get it signed before Canada plays Germany this afternoon. This agreement will provide us a platform for exploring new opportunities for collaboration. Germany is the largest economy in Europe. Alberta's relationship with this economic powerhouse will help us build a stronger position in a global marketplace and increase our province's competitive advantage. We also look forward to working with Ambassador Witschel and his staff to further enhance the ties between Alberta and Germany.

Mr. Speaker, our honoured guests are seated in your gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone who is indeed no stranger to us, the current Member of Parliament for Edmonton-St. Albert, the hon. Mr. Brent Rathgeber. Those of you who may know Brent will realize, of course, that in recent times he was the former MLA for Edmonton-Calder, until the electorate ultimately decided that they needed a taller one. It's a rare opportunity for Mr. Rathgeber to be here today, which may or may not have anything to do with Parliament currently being prorogued. I would invite him to stand and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another group of outstanding young students from Donnan elementary school in my constituency. Forty-seven of them are here today, including teachers and group leaders Mr. Jason Knight, Mr. Gerry Hawkes, and Mr. Sheldon Sitter. I would ask them all to please rise, and the rest of us can welcome them with a thunderous round of applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students from Holy Family Catholic school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I had the privilege of meeting them moments ago, and I hope they're having a good time at the Legislature. They're sitting in both galleries today. I ask them along with their teachers, Mrs. Marlene Norsworthy and Mrs. Isabel Pinto, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today three gentlemen who are seated front and centre in the members' gallery. We have Jim Bowhay, president of the Feeder Associations of Alberta, who is a cattle rancher from Sundre; Mr. Reg Schmidt, general manager of the Feeder Associations of Alberta and a cattle feeder from Thorsby, and I'm told by my hon. colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar that that's in her constituency; and we have Pat James, who is a 40-year member of the association and who has a ranch in Olds known as EV Ranches. Pat is also a member of the Farm Products Council of Canada, but more importantly Pat has been a long-time riding buddy of mine. We trail ride in the Rocky Mountains, and we've had a couple of occasions to try to give riding lessons to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, with limited success. I'd now ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Duncan Wojtaszek. Duncan is the executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS, which is an advocacy group representing the interests of over 70,000 university students across the province. CAUS has been working very hard for the past year to see the adoption of some of the recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer's report on the 2008 election regarding postsecondary students. I will be tabling their report and recommendations today, which is entitled Students and Democracy: Improving Post-Secondary Student Voter Turnout in Alberta Elections. I'd like to ask Duncan to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' Committee on Political Action. I'd ask them to rise as their names are called. They're seated in the public gallery. There's Glen Scott, chair and vice-president; Kathy Cayenne, local 071; Gerald Forbes, local 071; Bill Piggott, local 003; Garry Ritchie, local 003; Christina Sefton, local 048; and David Climenhaga, the staff adviser. Our caucus had a very nice chat with them this morning, and we look forward to working with them as we move forward. I ask all members of this Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you have another one?

Mr. Elniski: Yes, I have another one. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two individuals from the Children's Autism Services of Edmonton. One in 150 children are affected by autism, and many of these children are on the waiting list for treatment. Children's Autism Services of Edmonton has put forward a development proposal to build a clinic to meet the needs of children affected by autism and their families. I will be discussing more about this organization and their proposal in a member's statement later this afternoon. For now I would ask them both to rise: Miss Terri Duncan, the executive director of Children's Autism Services of Edmonton; and Mrs. Marcy Henschel, a mom of twins affected by autism. Please receive the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alberta Queen's Printer

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last session I asked a question in question period about the Queen's Printer and the downloading of copies from the Queen's Printer website. I'm pleased to say that subsequent to my question the Queen's Printer is now offering copies of all Alberta statutes from their website at no charge to the public and also, I should add, all Alberta regulations.

My thanks to the minister responsible for Service Alberta for the prompt action on this query. This may seem like a small concession and a small issue to many people. It was likely a small concession, but I would suggest that it is not a small issue. There are over 600 acts and over a thousand regulations that comprise Alberta statute law. We are all deemed to know the law. It is important to know the law, for if one should break the law, you will be brought to justice. To expect everyone to know all of Alberta's laws and the intricacies of those laws is absurd, yet it is important for government not to erect barriers to a person's desire to know the laws that affect them in their everyday lives.

Unfortunately, Alberta law is just the tip of the iceberg, for there is also a myriad of Canadian acts and regulations as well as municipal bylaws that one must also wish to acquaint themselves with. Fortunately, however, Canadian statutes and many municipal bylaws are also readily available and downloadable from the website, free of charge, I might add.

As we all know, the law does not stop with the statutes and bylaws but extends to the many decisions of Alberta's courts as well as the Supreme Court of Canada. Again, we are fortunate to have all of those cases, at least all recent cases, readily available on the web.

I guess that in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that with the facilities we have through the Internet and with the co-operation of agencies such as the Queen's Printer, we in Alberta are very fortunate to have all of this important information at our fingertips, convenient and at little or no cost.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Children's Autism Services of Edmonton

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to speak a little bit more about the two people that I introduced earlier from Children's Autism Services of Edmonton, or CASE. As a service delivery agency CASE does a remarkable job supporting over 85 families in Edmonton with the challenge of raising a child affected by autism. While they do their best to meet the needs of the children affected with autism in Edmonton, they cannot continue to operate effectively without a proper treatment facility. Staff are spending more time driving to clients and less time with actual clients.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the family-focused treatment we expect in one of the best health care systems in the country. In 2008 CASE started a capital campaign called The Children Can't Wait, a campaign to grow a treatment centre. The campaign proposes to build a clinic with special equipment that will support the needs and growth of autistic children. With the facility CASE is expected to see a 20 per cent improvement in productivity because they will spend more time with their clients, addressing their needs, and less time commuting to their clients.

Edmonton is one of the only major cities in Canada without a treatment centre of this kind. CASE is hoping to raise $5.5 million to build this facility and are well on their way to doing so. Without our support, however, children affected by autism and parents like Marcy Henschel are unable to get the immediate, life-changing treatment that their children deserve.

Hon members, we need to act now to support this cause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electoral Reform

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member of this Assembly is sitting here today because our fellow citizens chose us to serve as their representatives. Some people may be a little jaded about democracy, but I'm still amazed, astounded, and grateful that we live in a nation where people rule themselves. We need not fear tyrants in Canada or in Alberta for our democratic system protects us from would-be dictators and autocrats.

We all know that the price of democracy is eternal vigilance, and Albertans have reason to be concerned about democracy in Alberta. This is no external threat but an internal one. The majority of Albertans have stopped exercising their right to vote, with voter turnout reaching an all-time low of 41 per cent last election. Voter turnout among young Albertans is particularly disappointing, but there are a few young people who are working hard to change that. The Council of Alberta University Students has identified a number of barriers to greater student participation in elections, and they have offered five recommendations to break down these barriers.

First, they feel that students should be allowed to choose between their residence during studies and their family home for the purpose of identifying their ordinary residence; that is, which constituency they can vote in. Second, they would like advance voting stations to be established on postsecondary campuses. Third, they would like advance voting for all electoral divisions at any returning office as well as any advance voting station. Fourth, they feel that returning officers should be selected earlier, a recommendation I think many candidates would heartily endorse.

Finally, these students would like to have Elections Alberta and individual returning officers work with student unions to increase voter turnout. The key here is accessibility and awareness. Make it easier for students to vote, and perhaps we can kick that voter turnout rate a couple of percentage points in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the council of Alberta students for considering these important issues and making these recommendations. I hope that this administration will heed their advice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Bawlf School Racism Project Achievement

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a special occasion when constituents from anywhere in Alberta are recognized on the world stage, and I'm proud to say that today is one of those occasions. It's my pleasure to be able to rise today and recognize a grade 8 class from Bawlf school, within the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright, for their participation in the Racism debate.

Racism is an online, world-wide debate with the goal of eradicating racism by starting with students, our future leaders, first. The countries represented during the debate included the United States, India, China, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Australia, and of course from Canada, Bawlf school.

For most grade 8 students I'm sure it would be intimidating to debate students from all corners of the world, but the students from Bawlf school believed in themselves and in the resolution they were debating. The resolution was: differences make us stronger. With that belief and a great deal of debating skill Bawlf school advanced all the way to the semifinals, Mr. Speaker. They came down to being one of the last four teams from around the world.

I'm incredibly proud of the students' success, but I'm most proud of the efforts of the students and the teachers from Bawlf school, who so effectively articulated the values and ideas of Canada and Alberta, and I know I share in the pride of the parents in their children's achievements.

Differences, Mr. Speaker, certainly do make us stronger, and the differences and the diversity within this Assembly are a perfect example of that. After all, it is a combination of our shared experiences and diversity that sheds light on new ways of thinking and improving the province in which we live.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend the staff and students of Bawlf school for their participation and accomplishments in the Racism debates and thank them for representing Alberta so well on the international stage. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Amanda Lindhout

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today to rise and speak about an event that I attended over the weekend. I and the Member for Calgary-East had the honour of meeting Amanda Lindhout, who was held hostage in Somalia for some 15 months.

Mr. Speaker, there is no honour significant enough and no medal or cup or award prestigious enough to recognize her. She put her life in danger because, as she put it, she wanted to bring light to the crisis in Somalia in her own humble way. Despite everything she went through, she says: despite my own suffering in Somalia and without condoning what was done to me, I feel that those inflicting the violence, while certainly not innocent, are deeply wounded and war traumatized individuals. It takes a profound human being to see the perpetrators of such acts in that way.

There is a need in our world today for individuals like Amanda. There's a need for people that stand up against injustice and recognize that they can do a small part in bringing more justice in our world. A few hours ago I learned of a Sikh man that was beheaded by the Taliban for being a minority in Pakistan. This world today more than ever needs individuals like Amanda that have the courage, the conviction, and the heart to do something about the injustices that are all around us throughout this world.

We need people like Amanda to stand strong, and we need nations like Canada to build a greater democratic and peaceful society around our world, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

1:50

Review of MLA Compensation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to acknowledge that yesterday afternoon the Assembly unanimously passed the Alberta Liberals' Motion 501, which called for an independent review of MLA pay. This is a very encouraging step. How this government responds to the passing of this motion will be a true test of its openness and accountability. To the Premier: when will the Premier establish an independent committee to review MLA pay?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will begin to work on establishing the committee. Because it was a motion passed before the House, it's incumbent upon the government to begin those discussions, and I'm open to the opposition taking part in those discussions just like we have MLAs taking part in the Members' Services Committee. We have members of all parties represented.

Dr. Swann: Thank you to the Premier. Again to the Premier: what does the Premier envision as the scope of the committee?

Mr. Stelmach: I have some ideas. I'm sure the Liberals have some ideas. The other parties have some ideas. Let's come together and build a committee and bring clarity to this issue.

Dr. Swann: Very good. Finally, to the Premier: does the Premier envision the committee being functional by this fall?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar.

Cabinet Policy Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Legislative Assembly Act in order to be paid for sitting on a cabinet policy committee, three things must happen: payments must be reported, the rate of payment must be set through order in council, and the appointments to these committees must be done by an order in council, by a ministerial order, or by regulation. My first question is to the Premier: why did the Premier appoint 69 government MLAs, that were paid last year $1.4 million, to five cabinet policy committees without issuing an order in council?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All members on CPCs are paid in accordance with an order in council that was passed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that we have requested a copy of this order in council going back to December 9, 2009, when will this order in council be made public?

Mr. Hancock: All orders in council are published and made public.

Mr. MacDonald: It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that this one to date has not.

Now, again to the Premier. The Premier set up these appointments; he can answer this question. Who in the Premier's office decided to set up the cabinet policy committees in such a way that the Legislative Assembly Act was not followed when those appointments were set up?

Mr. Stelmach: They're not committees of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Peter Lougheed Centre Beds

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago we asked the minister of health when the 140 empty beds at the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary would be opened to provide relief to the overburdened hospitals in Calgary. The minister said that he had already told Alberta Health Services to look into it, so these questions are to the minister. When can Calgary see these 140 beds opened?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that I would pass that information along to Alberta Health Services, and in fact it's on our agenda for further discussion tomorrow evening. I don't think that a decision will be made tomorrow evening, but it's up for discussion. It all has to be part of our longer term capital plan, which I said we would have ready on or about March 31.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. According to the March 2009 CEO's report of Alberta Health Services it was estimated that $48 million to $50 million would be needed in operating funds for the 140 beds at the Peter Lougheed. When these beds are open, will Health Services make this funding part of their permanent operating costs for the next five years, or is this a one-off this year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the answer in large part will come when we have the five-year funding plan in place. That'll be starting on April 1, 2010, and those very considerations and concerns that the hon. member has raised will be given the exact discussion that he requested and that I have demanded.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Existing hospitals are already understaffed. How many RNs and LPNs and support staff will be needed if those 140 beds are to be kept open?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I don't have the math in my head, Mr. Speaker. I visited that particular Peter Lougheed Centre a couple of weeks ago, and I can tell you that the nurses and the LPNs and the docs and the nurse practitioners and the front-line triage people are working extremely hard, and they're very pleased, as are the patients, to have the new wing open. What we're looking at now is: what's the best use of the 140 beds that had to be closed? We're considering all of that right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Government Caucus Consultation

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors have built this province. MLAs bring ideas from seniors to their respective caucuses. About a year and a half ago I sat on the government side when I brought an idea of a long-term care centre that the government committed to in a commitment to the people of Fort McMurray. New money has been spent, but the old commitments have not been lived up to. My question to the Premier is: why don't you listen to your backbench MLAs?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, I've said this in the House: we don't have any backbench MLAs; they're all government members. Secondly, we take the advice of all of our government members seriously. That's how we build our capital plan and all of our policies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out that as the budget came forward, the Premier failed to go back to his caucus, so what is disturbing is why he is not choosing to ask his caucus members when changes are being made. This summer he kicked me out of his government caucus without consulting with his caucus. My question is: for an MLA doing their job representing seniors, why were you failing to consult with your caucus members this past summer?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think there's a huge misunderstanding on that side of the House. If this Minister of Finance and Enterprise disclosed to caucus his budget before he introduced it in terms of all of our projections with respect to natural gas, oil, all of the tax implications or no tax implications, I would have had to fire him. I have great confidence in this minister. He brought in a tremendous budget. Albertans are supporting it in overwhelming numbers, and I stick to it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question now is Calgary MLAs. Of course, a commitment was made to the city of Calgary, commitments again that are now not being honoured. Are MLAs from Calgary going to be kicked out of the caucus for representing their constituents, for doing their job in bringing forward the points that are so important in an MLA's responsibility?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that he's referring to the municipal sustainability initiative. No province, absolutely no province in the country of Canada supports municipalities like this province. That is guaranteed. Secondly, in recognition of the good, close working co-operation we have with municipalities, we indicated to all municipalities through very open and transparent dialogue that there will be changes in the funding coming this year.

However, before the end of December we gave them a general knowledge in terms of what their MSI funding would look like. That is, I believe, good co-operation with municipalities, and many have worked that into their budgets and have continued to operate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Homelessness Initiatives

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. This minister has talked about the complex issues around homelessness and that there's no one-size-fits-all approach to ending homelessness. I would like to know what he is doing to address the realities that service agencies face of more demand and less support for assisting the homeless?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question. She's quite correct: there is not one size that fits all. Just over this weekend I saw an example of the private sector partnering with government and nongovernment agencies through something called project homeless connect, which was held downtown in Calgary at the Suncor Energy Centre. More than 5,200 people have participated in this over the past eight years. Some of the services that were provided included medical treatment, mental health services, and income support. I also had the opportunity to meet with 12 homeless people after they had asked me for a meeting, and they had some very interesting perspectives on this difficult issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the same minister. Some would perceive that using the word "partnership" could mean downloading onto municipalities and the nonprofit sector. Groups who protect vulnerable Albertans are stretched financially, and the cuts in this current budget certainly are not helping. What would this minister do to protect the many vulnerable Albertans, including the chronically homeless, who require various services?

2:00

Mr. Denis: I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question, a good question again. At the same time to this House: we're the only province that has a 10-year plan to end homelessness. We're just finishing the first year of this plan. We're ahead of schedule, where we are looking at going, but at the same time we have looked at some rationalization of some costs. It's important also to look at the taxpayers who are funding us and give them value for their money. You will see performance measures implemented by my department over the next several months.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Municipal Campaign Election Financing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs responded to my questions by saying that the government wants to "level the playing field" with election financing laws for municipalities. But here's the thing. The individual wards in Edmonton and Calgary are bigger than many entire municipalities, with 60,000 or more constituents. So what playing field is the minister trying to level, the urban-metro one with 60,000-plus constituents or the rural one with 10,000?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I was reiterating some of the comments that we are hearing from Albertans in general. Albertans are believing in accountability, and they are wanting to see transparency within their local governments. They believe that those issues are important. So part of the process of Bill 203 was the fact that we are trying to have the same rules for every elected official across the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would think that you would be trying to raise the bar rather than lower the bar. Given that the city of Edmonton has election financing rules that are already more comprehensive and in some ways stricter than the provincial rules, is the government trying to make Edmonton conform to weakened average provincial rules?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly the regulations and the rules and the amendments to the bill that are coming forward will provide some clarity to all municipal elected officials. I recognize that Edmonton has their own rules and regulations. When we do introduce the amendments, it's going to complement those types of decisions that they've made in the past.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know about clarity, but there's a big fat catch-22 here. Candidates are individually responsible for their campaign debts, but if the debt is greater than $5,000, they can't pay it individually because that would contravene the act's limits. How would the minister advise that this situation be addressed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think, you know, aside from disclosing the information that will be coming up after our break, that clarity will be provided when we introduce the amendments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Foreign Qualifications

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. New immigrants are constantly faced with the challenge of getting their international training and credentials recognized right here in Alberta. In fact, it can be so challenging that we hear about potential doctors, engineers, and other professionals working as taxi drivers and at fast-food counters. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What are you doing to help speed up this process so that they can utilize their expertise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there are anecdotal stories of doctors driving taxicabs. Any time we have human capital that is underutilized in this province, it is not only unfortunate to that very individual himself or herself but also to our economy and to all of Alberta. In view of that, right now our department is developing the foreign qualification recognition program, assisting self-governing bodies in determining who should and should not practise in Alberta. Let's keep in mind that it's not the government, nor is it us here in this House, who should determine who are qualified doctors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. Mr. Minister, we hear of so much red tape when it comes to evaluating foreign credentials. So my question is: are associations and other institutions properly equipped to fairly and quickly assess foreign credentials?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I started answering in my first answer, you don't want government or politicians making a decision on who are qualified doctors. That's why we task self-governing bodies such as the colleges and other professional organizations and/or employers. In view of that, my department has put in $2 million to develop tools assisting colleges and other self-governing bodies in processing and setting up expectations so that individuals, even before they board a plane coming to Alberta, can determine what their likelihood is of actually practising in this province in their profession.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Is your department doing enough to ensure that foreign-trained professionals can receive their credentials in a timely manner and resume their careers here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working very diligently to work with international professionals and international students because it is very, very important to our next generation economy. It's very important to the future of the province. Our prior learning assessment plan is there for international professionals coming into the province to help them bridge to whatever new credential they may need given their professional body. We stand ready to work with them to create the kind of bridging that needs to happen within the province.

Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been both supportive and proud of our troops serving overseas in the protection and defence of people's right to vote for a democratically elected representative. Given this backdrop, my question is for the Justice minister. Why did your government select an individual to run Elections Alberta who does not believe that it's his job to encourage people to vote, or is this the government's whole idea?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not my understanding that the government did select this individual. I believe that was the purview of this House.

Mr. Hehr: I understand that, but we all know who actually selects these individuals to run our departments.

Do you think it's possible for your department to maybe instruct this individual that their mandate is to encourage active participation in getting Albertans to vote, or are you going to ignore that job?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Officers of the Assembly

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, just for clarification. The person in question, the Chief Electoral Officer, is an officer of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, not the government of Alberta. If it came to my attention that a minister of the Crown was actually intervening in the affairs of an officer of the Legislative Assembly, there would be an intervention all right. It would come from me.

Third question.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that. I guess I just like the old way when the old guy was actually trying to actively promote things and actually get people to vote, but who am I to argue with the process that we have in place here?

I guess my final question for the political minister – I mean the Justice minister – is that given her answers today are what most people already know, are there really any substantive changes coming to the electoral act? Can we see some fixed election dates? Can we see some reform to university students being able to vote at the schools where they're going to school? Or what's going on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'd say is that if there are people in Alberta that are concerned about the efficiency, the transparency, or the honesty of this system, I would suggest that one of the reasons for that might be because of the sort of information that's being propagated through the prelims to these questions.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I have said on more than a regular basis, we will be introducing amendments to the Election Act based on the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer, both the current one and the previous one, as a result of lessons learned from the past two elections that are printed in published reports. I think we'll have a great debate in the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard in the Assembly that the number of teachers has increased in the province by 10 per cent while at the same time the student population has only increased by 1 per cent. My question to the Minister of Education is: have student achievement test results seen a corresponding rate of increase during that same time frame?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the short answer to that would have to be no. The PAT results, or the standard of excellence, have remained relatively stable during this time frame. There was a slight decline since 2005-2006. We saw improvement at the acceptable and excellence levels in 2008 and 2009. But I'd have to say that student outcomes have not increased commensurate with the investment in the class size initiative.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, we've repeatedly heard that high class sizes produce low test results. Then wouldn't it be logical to assume that lower class sizes should produce better test results? Why is this not the case?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that there are a number of factors that go into it. Having said that student outcomes haven't increased in a commensurate way is not to say that there haven't been a lot of good things happen as a result of the class size initiative. Teacher satisfaction, parent satisfaction with the education system has improved significantly. Obviously, the ability of teachers to do their jobs has improved significantly. With respect to the question of outcomes I think it's fair to say that the research and the literature suggest that class sizes themselves in the higher grades do not make a significant difference, but it does at K to 3.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then my final question to the same minister: what's this minister doing to improve test results aside from just trying to reduce class size?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to say that in this year's budget we have reprofiled the class size initiative money so that it is focusing on increasing the number of teachers at the K to 3 level, where the research shows that it does make a significant difference, and at the high school level with respect to the credit enrolment units for courses where it makes a difference; in other words, courses where safety is a factor or class size is a factor.

The other thing we have to realize is that there are differences in class sizes across the province, and what we report on are the averages of school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Peace and Police Officer Training Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We speak of the extreme importance of oil and gas in Alberta and to Albertans, but we can't lose sight of Alberta south of Calgary. The promised police college is very important for police services, retaining our rural culture, and fostering economic diversity in our rural communities. To the Solicitor General. Fort Macleod has had this carrot dangled in front of it since 2006. Why has the minister waited so long to provide them with answers?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't waited all that long. I've been in the position for about a month.

The hon. member will know the conditions under which this college was first suggested, that being that it gets private funding and it's operationally self-sufficient. Given the fact that I can't identify private funding to that level, I have no public funds to proceed. Given that, I will do everything I can to make this project proceed, but I can't make any promises at this time.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that. I think that's a tiny little door that's opened.

My next question is: can we expect a concrete, well-prepared, long-term implementation strategy or evidence of any sort of planning? What kind of work has been done to actually attract private? Should we maybe rethink private?

Mr. Oberle: Well, we can rethink private if we want, Mr. Speaker, but the fact remains that I don't have any public funds available to me right now. As the hon. member pointed out, we need long-term planning. I think we have a capital plan that stretches out for a very long term. In order to pull this project off, I would need to find a way to reprofile that, and I can't do that right now.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. My next question to the same minister: I guess, given those answers, what I'd like to hear is that there is a pledge that it will be built.

Mr. Oberle: I've made about the clearest pledge I can make, Mr. Speaker, and that is that I will work very hard for the citizens of Fort Macleod and the MLA that represents this area. I feel for their position. I will do everything I can to make that college happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Long-term Care Funding

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's NDP caucus has heard from Albertans what they want from their health care system, and as we've mentioned in the report of what people want, long-term care is a top concern. This government's move to close long-term care beds in favour of private assisted living facilities allows operators to charge outrageous fees for services that are covered under long-term care. Here's an example from one in Edmonton: if you need to be escorted to the dining room, $300 a month extra; $125 a month for help with putting on your support stockings; $75 a month to get your bedsheets washed. Why is the minister of health closing long-term care beds in this province and forcing people into private facilities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any long-term care beds that are being closed. In fact, the opposite is true. We're actually looking at building more long-term care spaces. We have about 20,000 such spaces in Alberta today. We have about 9,000 acute-care spaces. We need more. We have about 2,000 addiction treatment beds in this province, and we're working on increasing that as well. So it's really kind of the opposite to what the member is saying.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's not kind of the opposite. In fact, many long-term care beds have been closed in this province since the last election despite a previous promise to build 600 more.

Here are some more costs: incontinence management, $175 a month; oxygen, $175 a month; medication assistance, $200 a month. This is basic care, Mr. Minister, and public long-term care facilities do not charge extra for it. Why can't the minister of health see that forcing seniors to pay these kinds of fees for basic care could send grandparents to the poorhouse?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're going to be building more long-term care facilities. I think everybody knows that. The hon. member may have missed the announcement that there's a $100 million bond issue right now, and all of that money is going to go toward that. Plus we have a long-term plan coming out on or about March 31. It's called the health facilities capital plan. There will be, I anticipate, some additional good-news announcements in that package of goods as well.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear that this minister understands the difference between long-term care and assisted living because we're talking about assisted living. We released a report showing the government's plan to eliminate many of the long-term care beds in this province. Now, $300 a month for meal escorts, $150 a month for night checks, and $100 a month for a weekly bath is way too much for ordinary seniors and their families to be able to afford. Why won't the minister be clear that long-term care beds, where things are not charged for, are in fact what the government is intending to build?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sharply aware of some of the fundamental differences between long-term care and assisted living or daily assisted living or supportive living or whatever. I know that under the long-term care arrangements, for example, we must have 24/7 supervision by a registered nurse whereas in some of the other facilities registered nurses might be on call but not necessarily staffed at the facility. Nonetheless, the issues that he has raised are those that are on the table for discussion right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Primary Care Networks

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I met with a group of doctors on the management team of the Wolf Creek Primary Care Network. They, along with all Albertans, feel strongly about making improvements to our health care system. They support innovation and creative solutions that positively address faster access and better availability of services. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Since primary care networks are proving to be very effective in my area, can the minister assure us that they will continue to be funded?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have about 32 of these so-called primary care networks in Alberta that involve a team-based approach. Those teams vary; they could be a doctor, a pharmacist, a registered nurse, a dietitian, a physiotherapist, or any combination thereof. They're doing a very good job, in my view. My hope is that the PCNs will, of course, be continued, and that's what we're striving so hard to do. The funding, however, is going to be part of the discussion, depending on how the contract negotiations go. Those are coming up very soon, so my hope is there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you. Albertans also want more emphasis on prevention and wellness. My question is again for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister have any plans to expand primary care networks so that more Albertans will be able to benefit from this team-based approach for primary health care delivery?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the 32 that we already have up and running that are proving very successful, I'm aware of at least 11 others that are under development. I expect at least six of those to come on stream very soon. Now, the issue of the funding. This is all part of the five-year funding plan, so we just have to be patient until April 1 comes along, and then they'll have the details they seek.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Lacombe the Wolf Creek Primary Care Network, which includes Lacombe, Ponoka, Rimbey, and Sylvan Lake, does an outstanding job for constituents in central Alberta. Is there anything the minister can do to increase the effectiveness of primary care networks in terms of facilities and equipment that they require?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Wolf Creek PCN is one of the more recent ones. They have a tremendous response network there for diabetics in particular. I want to say on record how pleased I am with what they're doing in the Wolf Creek area. In total we see about 39 family physicians in eight clinics serving more than 80 per cent of the residents in that network's catchment area. That's a very good thing.

As for the equipment part, that, too, will come forward in the April 1 budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Carbon Emissions Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Walking and cycling have been used throughout the world to reduce car usage, road wear and improve citizen health and community connectivity. This government is doing the oil and gas sector a disservice in terms of meeting our emissions targets when it insists on spending billions on one big-ticket CCS but ignores the smaller initiatives that can have significant, enduring effects. To the Minister of Environment: what is the province doing to encourage more people-oriented initiatives like building cycling lanes and walking trails?

2:20

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate that there may be some environmental benefits to cycling and walking, I'd suggest that the benefits probably accrue more to the cyclers and the walkers. She may want to address that question to the minister of health.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I think that if they're walking or cycling, they may not be driving, and that should help us.

To the same minister: given that the municipal sustainability initiative has been cut two years in a row and given all the other areas this wonder-fund is supposed to cover for cities, how does the minister expect cities to extract money to pay for environmental programs which are more the minister's responsibility?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we just recently announced a $2 million contribution to a project jointly managed by AUMA and AAMD and C that will create a centre of excellence for municipalities large and small throughout the province to find opportunities for them to significantly increase their energy efficiency and at the same time decrease their environmental footprint. So while we're not expecting that we'll pay for the initiatives, we certainly will give them the expertise that they need to find the direction that they're going.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister. Well, here's an opportunity. Why doesn't the minister amend the Green TRIP program to include incentives to expand walking and cycling infrastructure?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't necessarily be opposed to doing such a thing, but I do want to point out that the Green TRIP program is designed to reduce in a significant way the carbon footprint. And while I said at the outset that there may be some marginal benefits from this, I don't think that's the best bang for the buck for this program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along the east side of the border hunting is a critical element of the economy. Particularly within the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright hunting is a significant economic driver. As such, ensuring a healthy deer and elk population and plenty of hunting experiences is critical. The threat of chronic wasting disease is a worry to many of my constituents concerned about their livelihood. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: now that hunting season is over, can you provide me and my constituents with an update on the management of the CWD issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have got, I think, a very solid monitoring program and process in place. After the last hunting season we confirmed that 10 new cases of this disease were found as a result of the program. Now, the disease boundaries have shifted slightly this year a bit south of highway 1 in one case and again a little further west near Wainwright. But the concentration of the disease is still situated around Empress and Edgerton and remains there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hunters have long advocated that they're the best tools the government has to ensure that deer and elk populations are managed appropriately, which in turn controls the spread and therefore the threat of CWD. I believe they are correct since utilizing them ensures economic stimulus for the region and manages the population. Can the minister indicate if there are any plans to change the policy of utilizing local hunters in the management of CWD?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a word, no way. We really believe that hunters have played a very positive role in this, and Alberta hunters have been key to the surveillance of the disease. The last hunting season they submitted about 4,500 heads for testing, and 4,166 of those have been tested. The proof of that is that hunters' value to the province of Alberta relative to the results that we're getting and relative to mitigating the circumstances around this disease is very positive for us. We will continue to work with that fraternity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's excellent news. We all know that chronic wasting disease is a difficult disease to manage and control, but with more information and monitoring we may increase the chance of successful management. It's important to know, however, whether the CWD has been contained to border communities or if it continues to spread. Is the province expanding its monitoring practices further beyond the border hunt zones to ensure that management practices are in line with the disease and its potential spread?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Again, the only wild deer in Alberta that have tested positive for chronic wasting disease have been within about 80 kilometres of the Saskatchewan border total, most of them within 20 kilometres of the Saskatchewan border. The majority of testing is done along the Saskatchewan border. We have to understand also, Mr. Speaker, that testing this disease occurs throughout the province of Alberta with receipt of these heads, and any deer that our officers find that show symptoms of disease are tested also. We continue to monitor this, and we think that with the help of our hunting community we will be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Signage on Highway Rights-of-way

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Driving from Calgary to Edmonton, one can't help but notice a variety of signs on private property, from semi-trailer billboards to the hay bale towers advertising feed, yet this minister specifically targets antinuclear signs, and his answers have not cleared things up. This issue is not just about removal of signs on private property; it is about a situation where of all the signs out there on the highways of the Peace Country only the signs against nuclear power were specifically targeted. To the minister: why?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that this hon. member is absolutely wrong. Look, I've told him many times that this department has a policy that we do not allow signs within our right-of-way, and they're noncompliant 300 metres on private land outside the right-of-way. On outside the right-of-way signs we send out letters telling people that they're not compliant and to remove the signs, but we don't remove them. Inside the right-of-way it doesn't matter what's on the sign. If they're not compliant, we will remove them.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, this is about expressing freedom of speech, and it has nothing to do with the right-of-way. It is not right that only the signs expressing opposition to a government policy are removed. We haven't had an answer on this. Perhaps the minister doesn't know why his department is having this removal done. What investigation of this has he undertaken?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this policy has absolutely nothing to do with freedom of speech. It has to do with noncompliant signs within a right-of-way, and if the signs are noncompliant, it doesn't matter what's written on them; they're going to be removed.

Mr. Kang: Those signs were not in noncompliance, Mr. Speaker. When can we and the people of the Peace Country expect to see a public formal review and report on this matter?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're looking into some of the claims, but I've got to tell this hon. member: they are noncompliant. We don't allow signs in the right-of-way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wood shipments out of Alberta are increasing, and the price of dimension lumber is slowly getting better. So much optimism in the forest industry right now, but also so many concerns coming to me from my mills in Whitecourt-St. Anne. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can you tell me and give me the assurance that you and your department are doing everything you can to make sure on the ground – not here in Edmonton but on the ground – that work is being done to fight the pine beetle?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, I can assure the member that everything that we can do is being done relative to mountain pine beetle. Of course, this situation changes on a daily and, certainly, yearly basis depending on a number of factors. The hon. member knows very well that influx and in-flight of beetles into Alberta is a major problem that we're faced with. But, yes, we are continuing to put a lot of dollars into this and to put front-line people and staff on the ground. They're there today as we speak, and we continue to work with this problem.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister. This concern is not just in Alberta. It's interprovincial, and there's a federal responsibility. What are you doing with the federal government to assure that there's some partnership in the dollars needed to fight this emergency?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we work very hard to try to convince the federal government that they should have a program in place. In fact, to my knowledge the federal government doesn't have a mountain pine beetle mitigation program. They've come at it with a bit of an ad hoc situation that helps us, to be sure. Very grateful for what they have done. But we continue to work very hard with the federal government, with our department people, dealing with them to try to get them to understand that if this problem leaves the province of Alberta and goes farther east, the federal government does have a very serious problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Care Decision-making

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the minister of health announced a surge in a few medical procedures. My question focuses on the ideas that can help cure long-term wait-lists, not Band-aids. This government made a flawed decision to centralize health care decisions in the hands of a few appointed bureaucrats. When will this government realize that taking away decision-making power from local health care administrators was wrong?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, people at the local level have every opportunity to speak to their MLAs to bring those issues forward. They have every opportunity to speak with their local health advisory councils. There are over a dozen of those in place. They have every opportunity to pick up the phone and call my office. There are a number of ways that people can still have direct input. I should also add that I'm on a very aggressive tour of all of Alberta right now, so I'm meeting with a lot of these people, and they can speak to me directly when I arrive there. There are just so many ways to do this.

Mr. Hinman: Well, that's interesting, but if they don't change this centralized health care system, Albertans will change this government. When this government centralized health care, it blocked competition and innovation. To the minister: does he know that the efficiencies and innovation that his superboard wants to achieve actually came from leading local health care administrators?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not so concerned with where good ideas come from. If there's a good idea and we have a chance to review it and we can cost it out and we can look at the benefits of that costing and it makes sense and it improves services and people are happy with that and we can move waiting lists down and we can improve access and we can unclog the system, you can count on us to do that. But it doesn't all happen overnight. One of the great things that we have right now, of course, is the five-year funding plan, which will assure us that the deliverables we seek will be worked on and diligently pursued until they are delivered.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, those are nice words, but he's still missing the point. He places more trust and authority in the hands of a few government-appointed bureaucrats than he does in local health care administrators, who see the flaws and the opportunities in our health care system every day and are blocked when trying to implement new ideas and procedures. Would the minister agree that when the superboard interferes with the implementation of these local initiatives, patient care suffers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, no, I won't agree because I can tell you with great assurance and with some authority that the people who are working to deliver those important health services are doing a darn good job, and they should be commended for what they're doing. With this six-week rollout we have doctors working extra weekends voluntarily. I mean, we're paying them for it, but they volunteered their service time to step up to the plate. We have people who were working full-time who are working some overtime, we have other people who were working part-time that are working more time, and they should be thanked as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Foster and Kinship Care Spaces

Ms Notley: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we know that 592 foster spaces were lost in Alberta as of March 2009 while 630 new spaces were found. That makes for a net increase of 40 foster and kinship care spaces in Alberta as of March 2009, seven months into the 18-month period discussed by the minister yesterday. Now, talking about spaces that are created without acknowledging those that are lost leads people to draw the wrong conclusions. Will the minister of children's services admit that her claim of 900 new spaces for children in government care . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can be very clear that permanent placement for children is a priority for this ministry and that over the past 18 months the foster care spaces and the kinship care spaces, which, you know, is when a grandmother or an aunt and uncle or whoever is kin to that family looks after the child, are well over 900 spaces. I can get the information, though, for this member over the last number of years and equate that and go through it if you'd like to see a statistical analysis of that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, to defend this government's cuts to children's services, the minister yesterday led this House to believe that the availability of foster and kinship care spaces had grown enough to accommodate a $30 million cut in her ministry. Talking about increases without talking about losses is only half the story.

There's an old Yiddish saying that sometimes a half-truth can be a whole lie. Will the minister admit that she only gave us half the truth yesterday?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you very clearly that, as I said previously, foster care spaces have increased, kinship care spaces have increased, and permanent adoptions have increased. In fact, the whole change with the child and family enhancement act is working, and that is where, as you know, previously a worker would go into a home, would remove that child, and often the child would remain in care for a very long time whereas now they work immediately with the family to assist the child being in the home. Those kinds of services are working.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it's deceptive to report an increase of 900 new foster spaces without telling people exactly how many spaces have been closed in the same time frame. Now, with nowhere near 900 additional foster spaces – who cares if they're new or old? – the minister's plan to save money on the backs of these fictional homes can't be real. Will she admit that she has no plan to cut $30 million without hurting the kids she is responsible for taking care of?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that the children and youth that are being cared for through this ministry are going to continue to be cared for in the way that they were yesterday, the way they are today, and they will be in the future. Because of the good work that's being done out in the community – there has been so much that has happened with this ministry that I am learning about that has created really something that is just profound for children and youth out in the community, and that's through foster care, kinship care, adoption placement, good support services programs, and as I said, I'll get you the statistical analysis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Trade Mission to Washington, DC

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta plan for economic recovery includes a push to become one of the most competitive jurisdictions to do business in the world. Obviously, I've spoken to many Albertans, as I'm sure my colleagues have, who are very supportive of this, but I've also spoken recently with constituents who are a little concerned about how this can be achieved in a time of recession. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. My constituents understand that there may be value in meeting with U.S. officials recently in Washington, DC, but in today's tight economic times how is this a prudent use of tax dollars?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's been over a year since a member of the cabinet has actually been to Washington to meet with officials, and we attended, with the Council of the Federation and governors from several states, meetings to talk about the ways that we can expand our interests in energy. We met with others thanks to the ambassador, Gary Doer, and the officials of the White House. We really focused our attention on those people that could provide us assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. I understand the minister met recently with Lisa Jackson, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency. The EPA has stated that it may go it alone, so to speak, if the U.S. Congress cannot pass climate change legislation. My question is to the same minister. What are the implications right here in Alberta?

Ms Evans: They could be dire if we, in fact, didn't do our due diligence. Ms Jackson spoke to us about the carbon intensive reductions that are necessary. So carbon intensive industries, she indicated, would require reductions. She spoke very eloquently about the fact that the Obama administration and her department, which has some 17,000 workers that are responsible for environmental protection, intend to keep environment front and centre even though jobs and health care are huge for the administration in the United States at this time.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. As part of the COF mission the minister attended two round-tables with Premiers and DC policy groups on border management, energy, and the environment. I'm hoping there were concrete benefits or insights that were gained that would help Alberta. Was that indeed the case?

Ms Evans: In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think it certainly opened my eyes to the large challenge we have to make sure that America is fully cognizant of our needs here. You know right away when you walk into a room and someone talks about the tar sands that they may not be friendly or disposed towards listening to the kinds of things that we've already done with the clean air technology strategy. We indicated at all junctures that we supported our Prime Minister and the President of the United States to discover better technology, to on a go-forward basis make sure that we followed through with what the Minister of Environment currently is doing, and that is making sure that we're as clean and green and sustainable as possible.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 19 individual members were recognized today. There were 110 questions and answers: 12 came from the opposition, seven from private government members.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Water Management

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In many ways human behaviour is predictable. We want to progress, but we want to do it in the easiest way possible, just as water. But there are consequences when we do not think things through. Our forefathers settled close to sources of readily available water so they could survive. They found ways to store water so that during drought times they had a source of water that would sustain them.

This government's water for life strategy is flawed and lacks the vision and commitment of our forefathers because it does not address the growth of Alberta or the changing climate and the need for increased water storage. We have more water over a shorter period of time and must build the infrastructure to capture and store this precious resource.

Unlike this government, who only focuses on the next election, our forefathers focused on the next generation. When you look at the regions in southern Alberta that have grown and thrived, they have been able to do so because of the ability to capture the value and energy of Alberta's water resources. Calgary, Lethbridge, Fort Macleod, Medicine Hat are just a few of those communities. The diversification and innovation in southern Alberta through water storage and distribution canals has allowed people in industry to flourish in a part of the province that is semi-arid. We produce a tremendous amount of produce and food products that Albertans enjoy, everything from cattle and corn to grains, legumes, sugar, and potatoes.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, our future food security is often overlooked. It's just as critical as our air, water, and land. This government needs to focus its infrastructure storage on water, H₂O, not the storage of CO₂. Albertans know how to do this. We are good stewards of the land, air, and our water, and we know that a government that does not focus on the future food sources, clean air, and water will undermine our quality of life.

As we recognize Scout Week, we need to be mindful of part of their law, to be wise in the use of all resources. I would encourage all the members in this House to visit the website aipa.org from Alberta Irrigation so that we can make sure that every drop counts and that we are able to enjoy farm-fresh Alberta products.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented on Monday, February 22, 2010. I can advise the House that the petitions comply with Standing Orders 90 through 94. Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one report to table, the appropriate number of copies of Students and Democracy from the Council of Alberta University Students and their five recommendations on how to improve democracy and improve voter turnout amongst our university students.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a report entitled The Learning Mosaic: A Multiple Perspectives Review of the Alberta Initiative for School Improvement as well as a summary report of that report. Just so people have an idea what the report is about, the conclusion says that AISI is an impressive change strategy that is perhaps without parallel in the world today. It contributes to teacher development and educational change in a manner that is stable, steady, and credible among the educators it most seeks to impact. AISI leadership is transparent, responsive, and trustworthy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, the appropriate number of copies of a document from the Churchill Retirement Community, an assisted living facility in Edmonton. The document provides a list of fees charged to residents for various services.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report by the NDP caucus entitled Alberta's Health Care: What People Want. The recommendations in the report are based on public hearings which we held in seven communities around the province. Participants at those hearings showed strong support for maintaining health care services that are both publicly funded and publicly delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first tabling is with permission from Mr. Keith Wilson on 56th Street and 90th Avenue in Edmonton. Mr. Wilson is writing urging the government to not cut funding for our schools.

The second tabling I have is also with permission from the author, Janice Stefancik, and it was sent to me and the hon. Minister of Education and the hon. Premier. It, too, is urging the government to not cut funding for our schools.

The third tabling I have is a letter that I wrote on December 9, 2009, to the hon. the Premier regarding the cabinet policy committees and how they were set up and requesting the order in council, that the Minister of Education agreed to table in this House forthwith today.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), the hon. member in tabling indicated that I had agreed to table an order in council. I did nothing of the sort. That's a total misrepresentation and would seek, at the very least, to engage us in debate. It's a misrepresentation. I made no such statement. What I did say is that all orders in council are published.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that quite interesting. Now, I don't have the benefit of the Blues before me, but certainly in the exchange in question period when I asked the Premier today regarding the appointment to the cabinet policy committees by this government, I thought that I had heard the hon. Minister of Education, who was responding for whatever reason, I don't know, on behalf of the Premier, indicate that not only was there an order in council to set up the 69 individuals to the cabinet policy committees, where we spent $1.4 million last year paying them, but that it was a published document and was certainly public. My interpretation was that the hon. Minister of Education certainly had no problem tabling that at the appropriate time in the Assembly so that we could see once and for all how this process works.

I don't really think that there's a point of order here, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, I think it's certainly clarified now by the words that were used, and the words will be printed in Hansard, so all can read that.

Just a couple of points before we go to Orders of the Day. Tomorrow during Tabling Returns and Reports it will be my intent to table with the Assembly the interim report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I will not make it available to anyone prior to my tabling it in the House tomorrow during the appropriate mechanism of Tabling Returns and Reports. So, please, hon.

members, don't venture down to my office hoping to get a copy. You'll all get one at the same time, which I think is the fair and open and transparent approach with respect to this matter.

There was a bit of a disruption here in this Assembly during question period today. Pages were totally inappropriate in delivering a bunch of paper because it was delivered without my permission or my knowledge. That should not be taking place, will never take place, and there will be some clarification made by way of an educational process to ensure that doesn't happen again. Members are here in this Assembly to pay attention to one another, to focus on the subject at hand, to be civil and courteous to one another, and not to be disrupted by the movement of paper and people moving and walking behind them in the lanes in which they sit. The hon. member who asked them to distribute the information was not following the traditional protocol of this Assembly.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ensure that some concerns and questions are put on the record concerning the supplementary supply estimates. It's a lot of money, as the President of the Treasury Board realizes, I'm sure. One of the concerns I'd like to get on the record is how this number has grown over the years. You know, it's not realistic to expect budget perfection. I think we all aim for it, and this president might get there. I don't know.

An Hon. Member: He's a good man.

Dr. Taft: He's a good man. He's a good man.

We do have some concerns about the trends with supplementary supply estimates. [interjection] Well, there always has to be a qualifier there.

If you were to go back, Mr. Speaker, over the years, you would see that the general trend is quite dramatically upward, although it's not always even. Sometimes it spikes and drops and spike and drops. But if you look at it over the last decade or so, it's more often that this supplementary supply estimate is in the range of a billion dollars or more than it used to be. The extreme would have been 10 years ago when the supplementary supply estimate was about $30 million, if my figures are right, which is darn near perfection with budgeting. Now we're looking at $958 million. That's not, of course, the record. The record in the last decade or so was about five years ago when we hit over $2 billion. I'm trying to remember if that might not have been a result of BSE or something else.

In any case, the general point is that a billion dollars or thereabouts is a terrific fudge factor or a terrific amount of money to have to make up in this sort of supplementary supply. We're always urging the government to refine its budgeting processes, to increase its discipline in controlling budgeting. We understand that there are lots of things that might come along: mountain pine beetle, BSE, forest fires, floods, those kinds of natural disasters, H1N1. I don't think anybody is going to argue with some extra spending on that. But I think we need to always challenge the government to come as close at the end of the year to meeting its budget targets as is possible. It looks right now like we're close to a billion dollars off, and it's possible that there'll be a second supplementary supply bill before we're all done.

Those are my general comments.

I want to, however, Mr. Speaker, give the government some accolades for moving the budget process up a little bit. I have long been a supporter of that, and I've urged that kind of action from the government. We were in the habit for many years of not passing the budget until well into the fiscal year that the budget addressed. We seem to be improving at least that part of the budgeting process, so perhaps that will also be reflected in greater accuracy at the end of the year. By having the budget this year moved through and passed before the beginning of the fiscal year, then all the agencies that depend on that budget may well be able to plan more effectively for their year and, as a consequence, be more accurate in their financial management.

I'm going to just speak a little bit about the extra funding requested for Health and Wellness here, Mr. Speaker, because it's an awful lot of money, and it's getting folded in with a very large increase in the budget for next year. I'm glad to see that there are special provisions for the H1N1 flu. See how happy I am, Mr. President? Two compliments there. It's still the season of Valentine's.

I'm glad to see that there is a special allocation for H1N1 vaccine costs because it would have truly been unfair to take that out of the regular operating budget of the health care system. I think everybody or most of us, at least, in this Assembly understood that that was more akin to a forest fire or a flood or some other natural disaster, that's dealt with out of separate funds. So that's a good move.

I am concerned with the management of some of the funding for some of the special projects under Health and Wellness, in particular, for example, the surge in expenditures for hip and knee surgeries. That's money that's going to come out of this budget year. It was quite a chunk of money, I believe, a week ago. Now, my concern, Mr. Speaker, is around the administration of those funds. I'm concerned that there be the strictest possible conflict-of-interest policies in place around the allocation of funds to surgeries done in private, investor-driven facilities. That would include organizations like HRC and the cataract surgery clinics in Calgary and some other locations.

My concern is that a substantial part of that money is getting steered toward private, for-profit clinics by people in the public system who actually have a vested interest in those clinics. It's poor management, and it invites abuse. I hope that we have a government here that will bring in strict conflict-of-interest policies because I'm going to be working hard to ensure that those conflicts of interest are not allowed to occur.

It would be really helpful if the President of the Treasury Board could give us some more detail on where the Health and Wellness funding is going. How much, for example, is going to things like air ambulance, municipal ambulance? How is that whole ambulance transfer process going? Is that costing more? Is that driving up some of the costs? Is that one of the issues behind this extra allocation? What's happening to pharmaceutical costs and drug costs? Those historically have been inflating. What about lab costs? Some of those will be probably caught up in the H1N1 allocation, but what's happening in other lab costs? Why are we seeing such a need for extra funding for Health and Wellness over and above the H1N1 issue?

There's one other issue that I would like to get on the record. I see there's another $73 million, almost $74 million, for Transportation. I'm a little surprised at that because, after all, we've heard so much about how estimates for a lot of that work are actually coming in way below what was budgeted. I would be curious if the President of the Treasury Board might be able to explain exactly the dynamic behind the increase in expenditures in Transportation, particularly when we're in a period of real financial restraint.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate on Bill 5 this afternoon. We were having a discussion last week on supplementary supply, and it was unfortunately cut short. I, too, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, have questions surrounding the allocation, first off, of $243 million to Alberta Health and Wellness. Now, it's only last fall that all hon. members from the Assembly and taxpayers read with startled interest the Auditor General's report and realized that there had essentially been an override of financial accountability at Alberta Health Services when the budget in the business plan had not, as I understand the Auditor General's report, been authorized.

Now, we know the fiscal dilemma that Alberta Health Services is in. We know this allocation here is for funding through to March of this year. We know that last year there were also one-time allocations. One only has to look at part 1 of the Alberta Health and Wellness annual report to recognize that there were additional monies allocated. I believe, and I could stand corrected, that it was in the neighbourhood of 300-plus million dollars. The majority of it went to the old Calgary health authority in one form or another. This seems to be a persistent, chronic pattern of this government. Health care services and the delivery of those services certainly is not improving, but we're being asked to give more and more money.

Now we're finding out that amounts of this money, Mr. Speaker, are being used to channel health services or health procedures to private facilities. How much of this is going to go through this $243 million allocation to private hospitals is a good question. Also, can the minister responsible, in this case the hon. President of the Treasury Board, be confident that the Auditor General's recommendations from last fall have been implemented to ensure that the budgeting process is now being followed?

Certainly, whenever you look at the Alberta Health Services Board and the fact that it may meet for 35 to 40 minutes in public on a monthly basis, that's not good enough, that short period of time. They're spending 9-plus billion dollars, and they should be accountable through the ministries to the Assembly and then through to the taxpayers.

When we look at the past practices, I for one don't have a great deal of confidence in this government to deliver public health care efficiently and effectively. They have failed to date. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has certainly detailed this in the past and detailed it with considerable accuracy, to the point where citizens are now directly questioning whether this government is capable of managing the biggest budget of any respective department.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I also have questions around – and this goes back to the 2008-09 annual report, where on page 3 it is noted that at the end of March last year, in 2009, there was $1.5 billion from fourth-quarter results that was transferred. If we go to page 16 of the same report, we will see where in the sustainability fund, another great Liberal idea . . . [interjection] You may laugh, hon. member, but it was past Conservative caucuses that initially rejected that sound fiscal economic idea. Fortunately, one Conservative caucus had the sense to see that it was needed, and you are living on that savings account as we speak.

The additional cash of $1.5 billion from 2008-09 fourth quarter results will be deposited in the fund in 2009-10. So here we have essentially a $1.5 billion allocation. I understand that a portion of this was investment income. I would be grateful to know if that was investment income from the general revenue fund or where exactly that investment income has come from. I would like a breakdown of that $1.5 billion in the course of this debate as to how much was left over or unexpended from various government ministries or programs in that year and brought forward to this year.

Now, that money has been brought forward, Mr. Speaker, but at the same time we are looking for a considerable amount of cash here, in total close to a billion dollars, $920 million. So that's a lot of money. At one point in the budget year we're getting this amount reallocated or put in the sustainability fund, and then probably six months after the annual report is published, we're before this House looking for two-thirds of that amount back to pay for programs in Health and in Culture and in Employment and Immigration.

One, again, can see the significant negative effects of the recession and why there would be additional funding needed for Employment and Immigration. Tourism, Parks and Recreation is looking for $12 million. That's at least the amount, if not more, that we will spend at the Winter Olympics promoting this Conservative government. I see it, Mr. Speaker, as a promotion of the government, not of this fine province. Sustainable Resource Development for other reasons is getting additional money for forest fires. Housing and Urban Affairs.

Transportation is certainly an interesting one. I would like to point out that with the Transportation department when you look at the annual report from last year – and hopefully I can get an explanation in the course of the debate from the President of the Treasury Board – in 2008-09 Transportation had unexpended amounts of $550 million. Now, again, this is taking from Peter to pay Paul. That money was reallocated or shifted ahead into the next year for capital projects, as I understand it, some of it, at least. But here they're looking for $73 million, Mr. Speaker. So how exactly does this work? If you go to the front of the annual report, you will see where some of the funds that were left over in 2008-09 are set aside for projects that are going to take place in this year and the following year as well, but not all of that money. So I would like an explanation.

Transportation wouldn't be the only department. Infrastructure certainly had a significant amount left over, $505 million according to my research. Of course, not all of that was turned back into the general revenue fund, but some of it must have been.

I would like to know as we debate and we discuss this advance or supplementary supply: how much does the President of the Treasury Board expect will be left over in unexpended amounts this year? We went through this process last year, and we see quietly in the footnotes $1.5 billion that was found and put in the sustainability fund. I'm not saying it's a bad idea, but I would just like to have full disclosure of these amounts.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to the President of the Treasury Board: how much do you anticipate you will have left over at the end of next month, March 31, 2010, from this budget year to put back in the sustainability fund? I'm not talking about extra investment income or money from the sale of oil and gas leases; I'm talking about unexpended amounts from each and every respective ministry. How much will it be, and will it be an amount equal to or greater than the supplementary budget that we are discussing here this afternoon?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Comments, questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are you on the 29(2)(a), or are you on your own?

Mr. Mason: I'm on my own.

The Speaker: Okay. Go for it.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 5, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010. This bill is requesting nearly a billion dollars in supplementary supply for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2010. That in itself is a breathtaking figure. We're used to using billions when we talk about the finances of our province, but that's a very large amount for supplementary supply.

It includes Advanced Education and Technology; Culture and Community Spirit; Employment and Immigration; Health and Wellness, of course, $176 million there; Housing and Urban Affairs; Municipal Affairs; well, pretty much every department.

Advanced Education and Technology is requesting $30 million for student loan disbursements, but at the same time, Mr. Speaker, we're seeing tuition fees rise around the province. The government, I think, has an inkling how much extra debt they are asking students to take on in this province, but they're cutting funding in the 2010 budget. They want an extra $270 million for the University of Alberta centre for interdisciplinary studies. In general, much of the costs are being passed on to students.

We've already seen, if I can turn to Employment and Immigration, where the ministry wants an extra $129.7 million for income supports due to a higher caseload and a higher cost per case. January already saw the highest income support caseload since 1997. All of these budget lines are cut in next year's budget, especially the line that went most over budget; that is, for people expected to work or working. The budget relies, then, on vague hopes that the recession will end and people will no longer need the same government resources. What guarantees do we have that the government will not be coming back and asking for funding to come back the next year?

Mr. Speaker, I brought this to the attention of the Minister of Transportation last night in estimates. What we've seen in a lot of cases is cuts in one year's budget for specific programs of specific departments and then supplementary estimates to make up, in some cases exceed, the cuts that were made in the budget. So it makes it very hard for us to see what exactly the budget numbers mean. I at one point said to the Minister of Transportation: what do the numbers in the budget mean? When you cut it in the budget and then you go back and you replace it with supplementary supply and then you cut it again in the budget the next year, what does the budget actually mean?

I think there is in some cases a misuse of supplementary estimates in order to create the impression in a budget that spending is actually under control. The government is cutting spending in some areas and then replacing the money after the budget is approved. I think that many of these programs require more funding. Not all, but many of them do require funding, especially when you're in a recession and people are hurting. It doesn't make sense to me to use supplementary estimates in this way.

Using Transportation as an example, they want an extra $73 million, much of which is going to programs which were cut last year and will be cut again in next year's budget. So are these cuts being used to hide what the government is actually spending? I don't think that that's an appropriate thing to do. There are many programs that deserve proper funding, and I would like to see those things funded but funded, you know, up front and in an honest manner.

Mr. Speaker, we've got $150 million for Sustainable Resource Development, including $130 million for firefighting. That's similar to a figure last year. I think it's a fair assumption to make that we're going to have forest fires most summers, and if it's an ongoing, predictable expense, it should be included in the budget and not just used by supplementary supply.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to go into detail on all of these departments, but I do think that the government needs to reduce its dependence on supplementary supply because I think it masks a bigger problem, which is the inability to budget accurately and then live within the budget that's provided. It's an excuse for, I think, a little bit of breakdown on discipline. In saying that, I'm not suggesting that we need to make widespread cuts to important services that people need or any cuts at all. I am simply saying that it means that the government is getting sloppy in its budgeting process and that it undermines the value of a budget document.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments, I will take my seat. Before I do, though, I wonder if I could request of you permission to distribute . . .

The Speaker: Why don't we deal with 29(2)(a) and get the bill out of the way, and then I'll recognize you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Additional speakers?

Then the hon. President of the Treasury Board to conclude the debate.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to acknowledge the constructive comments from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and in fact I do take very seriously the opportunity to maintain a very close watch on government spending. It is easy to ascertain from this particular document that if you take out the spending from the '08-09 accumulated health deficit ending March 31, '09, if you take out the capital that was used in most cases to access federal funding programs, deal with the H1N1 and the fires, we are dealing with less than half of 1 per cent of our budget. It's actually smaller than that, but just given that the opportunity for math is not something that they need to waste much more time on, I would at this time close debate in second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would respectfully request permission to distribute copies of the report prepared by the NDP caucus called What People Want, health care in Alberta. It is a result of public hearings that we conducted in seven cities around the province in the fall and a number of public meetings that we've held recently around the province. It represents the views of many individuals and organizations that are involved in the health care field in our province.

Statement by the Speaker

Distribution of Items to Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, the background to this is that a little while ago, before we had Orders of the Day, I rose and I basically said that a certain thing had happened in the House today. One of the things that's really important is how we deal with decorum in the House, and there are a variety of ways that groups and agencies and individuals get their message to us. Sometimes you'll receive in your offices prior to 1:30 of the day a ribbon, a pin from a group, a cause: it's HIV day, it's awareness day, it's daffodil day, it's Red Cross day, or something like this. We wear these ribbons, and we wear these pins.

Sometimes they come to my office and ask me to put them on the desks of hon. members, and depending what they are, we invariably say yes because they're small and they're not disruptive. But on other occasions there are bigger packages that groups want to have delivered to MLAs. We had a situation yesterday with the Girl Guides. Basically, they said that they wanted all members to have some cookies, so we said: sure, they could be circulated. But they could only be circulated after, essentially, Orders of the Day were called so that it was not disruptive during the Routine and anything else.

Then there are some other things that, basically, I've said, no, can never be put on members' desks. Now, I've had requests made by individuals in the past to have samples of tainted meat put on the desk of every member to highlight a cause. When the pork industry was really, really down and piglets were literally being given away, I had groups advocating their promotion of the price of pork to give every MLA in this Assembly a piglet, and would I allow them to put it on their desks in the Assembly? One other member in the past has come very genuinely, very enthusiastically, saying: "Look, we have to do everything we can to promote the SPCA. I'd like to give every MLA a kitten and have it placed on their desks." Well, okay. The answer to those was no, but there are other ways of doing this.

Now, there's a great way of getting the message through. If an individual member wants to convey an envelope of information to other members, ask my office, let me make sure that it's appropriate, and we can deliver it after Orders of the Day are called so that there's no major interruption and disturbance of the Routine. You're all supposed to be focused on question period and listening to one another and all these other things that are very, very important.

Unfortunately, something got through. A member went and got the pages to go and do it, which was not the way it was supposed to have been done, so then the pages had to go back and retrieve these documents. The Sergeant-at-Arms, you must have them under lock and key someplace, under an embargo. Well, first of all, would you have them returned to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood now? He's dutifully asked for the appropriate process, he's got all of his envelopes back, and we'll ask the pages now to distribute them to all members so that they're least disruptive and interruptive of the process of the Routine in the House, and love will prevail.

Second thing. I've now had an opportunity to look at the Blues with respect to the exchange, the point of order from the Government House Leader and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the Government House Leader is absolutely correct. There's absolutely nothing in the Blues that suggests that he said that he was going to be tabling any OC. When you stood up, you said you understood. Okay, we deal with it. But the point was correctly raised by the Government House Leader, and a point of order would have been upheld. Again love is in the air, so let's go forward.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Bhardwaj moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 18: Mr. Hancock]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to take the opportunity to afford a few comments with respect to the Speech from the Throne delivered most graciously by His Honour the Hon. Norman L. Kwong, the Lieutenant Governor, and start, as others in the House have done, by thanking the Lieutenant Governor for his years of service to this province as Lieutenant Governor and for providing both a sense of humour and graciousness to the office that has really served the office well and, therefore, served Albertans well.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne addressed a number of topics that I think are very important not only to my constituents but to all Albertans. One of the first substantive portions of the Speech from the Throne deals with Alberta's resource-based economy, which "brings with it one of the most volatile revenue streams in North America, providing surpluses in good times but prone to sudden economic reversals." I think that statement in the throne speech is extremely important for us, positioning us as we go forward, first of all, to recognize that we do have a resource-based economy in the province, that the oil and gas industry particularly but also the forestry industry are subject to world-based commodity markets and are subject to a high volatility not only with respect to price but also with respect to the quantity that's needed from time to time in the world economy.

As a prudent government in the province of Alberta with that type of an economy, there are two things that really speaks to. One is to ensure that when the economy is working well and when our resource-based industry, particularly our carbon industry and oil and gas, is in a high-price mode, the revenue which comes from the sale of that asset is used wisely and invested wisely not just for current Albertans but also for future Albertans. I want to speak to that. The second thing which it points out to us most urgently is the need for us to make sure that we look to the future economy of the province and what the foundation of that future economy will be. More than one constituent has said to me that they wish that we could broaden the base of the economy so that we weren't so affected by the swings in the oil and gas prices.

In saying that, I think it's necessary to clear up one of the fundamental questions that many Albertans ask. They ask: "What happened to the money? Where did the money go? We had a very solid economy a couple of years ago with a good revenue stream from oil and gas. Why didn't we save it?" When I talk to Albertans who ask that question and tell them what's actually happened, it's a message which a lot of Albertans I don't think have heard, that we've actually done a very good job with that revenue stream.

When you look at the record, Alberta has paid off $23 billion to $25 billion in debt. That's an investment in future Albertans. That debt was accumulated in earlier years both in terms of program spending and in terms of spending on infrastructure, but it was a debt which would have burdened future generations of Albertans in terms of paying it off. So I think getting that debt paid off was a very prudent thing to do.

We've built $40 billion in enduring infrastructure. We've created a platform for the province to move forward in terms of our postsecondary institutions, in terms of our schools, in terms of our transportation infrastructure, roads, particularly. There's a significant investment that will help to continue to build the future economy and build the future of the province. There is an appropriate place to take money from the sale of an asset, the oil and gas asset that's owned by Albertans, and invest it in a multigenerational infrastructure. I think that's important.

We saved $17 billion in the sustainability fund because of the recognition that in a volatile economy there will be downswings and that when there are downswings, Albertans want to be protected from the impact of that downswing over a period of time. The $17 billion that we have in the sustainability fund is doing exactly that right now. We don't have to have a knee-jerk reaction. We don't have to wrench the economy and the community back. We don't have to cut back on important areas like health care and education in order to be fiscally prudent and to stop from building that deficit for future Albertans. So the $17 billion is well set aside.

Then an additional $8 billion has been contributed to the heritage savings trust fund and associated endowments. I'm particularly proud, Mr. Speaker, of the access to the future fund, with a little over a billion dollars – I'd hoped that it would grow to $3 billion by now – which is invested in an endowment fund which will help to fuel future learning potential for young Albertans. You could say the same about the billion dollars or so that's been invested in the ingenuity fund and an extra billion, I believe it is, that was invested in the heritage savings medical research fund. Each of those endowments are funds which drive the future economy by driving our knowledge base, and that's a very, very important message.

I think that when you add all that up and see that there's been $90 billion not wasted, not dissipated but which has served to do exactly what Albertans would have wanted it to do – to pay off the debt, to put us on a sound fiscal footing, to invest in the future infrastructure needed for the future economy, and to invest in the future knowledge base which is needed for the future economy – Mr. Speaker, I think a very good record. When we start the throne speech and see the comment about Alberta's fiscal advantage and the acknowledgement of the volatile revenue streams, I think it's really important to point out that there has been a very, very strong fiscal record in Alberta, using the resources that Alberta has to invest in the future of Alberta.

The other piece that I wanted to focus on, Mr. Speaker, is later on under the Increasingly Competitive in a Global Economy section of the throne speech, the statement that "Albertans know that a good education is an essential foundation to prepare for the future." That is an exceedingly important statement. We are moving into an era, well, we're well into the era, well into the 21st century now, 10 years into it, where the world is getting smaller. Alberta has always traded out into the world and always will trade out into the world because we are a relatively small population, but we're not always going to have the benefit of trading out into the world just with our resource base. Oil and gas, as we can see now, the carbon-based energy, is increasingly coming under fire with respect to the environmental issues around greenhouse gases and particularly carbon dioxide, and more and more effort is being put into finding renewable sources of energy.

As we trade out into the world, it's not just the export of our oil and gas products. It's not just the export of raw forestry products. It's what we do with our products and how we use the benefit of those products to prepare our students and our economy to compete in a knowledge-based world – adding value to our resource products, adding value to our agricultural products – but also moving to the biosciences and the life sciences and being able to trade out into the world in the service industries, providing expertise.

Again, this is not new for Alberta. Alberta has led the world in the past on environmental technologies. We've shipped environmental technologies and knowledge about environmental sustainability all around the world. We've certainly shipped knowledge with respect to our oil and gas industry, tertiary and quaternary production, to various places in the world where they've exploited their oil and gas resources perhaps too quickly, resulting in problems. It's knowledge from Alberta that has gone to help them to recoup those areas.

It's also knowledge which will allow us to further exploit those resources that we have because I think it's fair to say that in most of the conventional fields, not only in this province but right around the world, we're only able to exploit about 25 to 35 per cent of the resource that's there. Technology, including how we increase pressure on oil wells through the injection of carbon dioxide, solving two problems at once, is very, very important to us.

The statement that a good education is an essential foundation to prepare for the future couldn't be more true than right here in Alberta, and it's for that reason that we really do need to focus on how we ensure that every single Albertan has the opportunity to maximize his or her potential, that every Alberta child has a good educational opportunity to move from where they are now to where they can be, to find out what they're good at and to be able to develop that potential. That's what we're working towards, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta.

Over the course of the last year we've talked extensively about Inspiring Education. Inspiring Education had two basic purposes. The first and perhaps the most important one was to have Albertans talk about the value of education to our community and our society and to understand that without education we are at peril. Without education in a world that's moving more and more to technology, where knowledge and information are available to more and more people and where the ability to use that knowledge and information in appropriate ways is becoming so important, those that do not have the capacity or the ability to operate in that type of a world will fall behind.

We've seen all over the world examples where economies have moved ahead, but not all the people have moved ahead with the economies, so the wide diversity in economic opportunity, the wide diversity in quality of life has created a strain on civil society. That's not what we want for our province and for our country. It's imperative that we have education as a value in our community, education as a value in our families, and education as a value in our province.

We have a very cosmopolitan community here, with people with backgrounds from all over the world. We live together here in peace and harmony better than anyplace in the world, and we can continue to do that if we make sure that every Albertan, whether their family has been here for generations or whether they're just new arrivals, whether they're new arrivals coming with the benefit of education and the benefit of income or whether they're coming as a refugee, has that opportunity to find their potential, to maximize that potential, to grow up to be able to take care of themselves and their families, and to contribute back to their community as a full citizen.

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more important, in my view, in this throne speech than the focus on education as an essential foundation to prepare for the future, and I think what we're doing in Inspiring Education and raising the societal value for education by having that discussion front and centre is so important.

The second piece, of course, is important as well, and that's where we talk about what it means to be an educated Albertan in the year 2029. That's important, Mr. Speaker, because most of us are experts on education because we all went through the system some 40 years ago, well, maybe some a little later than that. It has been a long time since most of us have been in the classroom, yet I'd hazard a guess that if we went into a classroom today, most of us would recognize it very fondly. It hasn't changed very much. Yes, there's maybe a Smart board up at the front of the room, a whiteboard where there used to be a blackboard, but beyond that, the essential formula of education has not changed significantly over the years, yet our world has changed significantly.

It's been 15 years now that we've had access to the World Wide Web, and now we're into Web 2, and we're into very, very robust technologies where people can have access to information. They can basically go anywhere in the world, see anywhere in the world, and it's moving rapidly, so we do need to ask what it means to be an educated Albertan in the year 2029. What is it that our children are going to have to know to be able to participate in that global economy, to be able to be citizens of a global community as well as participate in a local economy and be citizens in their local community?

It doesn't mean that what we're doing now is wrong. Alberta is recognized as having one of the best education systems in the world. I think it's fair to say that regardless of how you measure it, people from around the world coming to see what we're doing basically indicates that that statement is correct, that people do recognize Alberta as having one of the best education systems in the world. That's great for today, but if we stand still, if we don't recognize that there's a need to change as the world changes, that we need to examine new pedagogy, that we need to examine how we use technology in education, not use technology as education but how we use the tool to make sure that our children can have those advantages and be among the best in the world and continue to be among the best in the world, then we will lose the opportunity to have the quality of life that we want not just for ourselves but for all Albertans. We will have that problem of a civil society which is riddled because there's too wide a gap between those who have and those who don't have.

I may be accused of being passionate about education, in which case I would plead guilty, Mr. Speaker. I may be accused of being single-minded about education. I don't think I'm totally single-minded about it, but I am single-minded about the concept that education is the foundation and is fundamental to our success . . . [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time is so short.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Education was mid-sentence. I wonder if he'd like to complete his sentence.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you wish to comment?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the time for questions and answers is so short, and there's so much more to be said. I think I'll leave it there.

3:40

The Speaker: Others to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. We're under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Bhullar: Oh. We're still doing that. Well, in that case I will take the privilege that I've been afforded as a member of this Assembly to ask the member a question and the opportunity to ask him a question.

Sir, many of the international experts that visited Alberta and spoke at the Inspiring Education conference commented on how this was a process that is not taking place in very many jurisdictions throughout North America. They said that this sort of open and transparent dialogue with the citizens, asking them for input on what that future Albertan looks like and how the system should reflect enabling such future Albertans – they said that that doesn't happen. My question to you. We've set a very large stage. We've gotten praise, essentially, from some of the world's best thinkers in education. How, sir, are we going to ensure that we walk the walk when it comes down to looking at the Inspiring Education report?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if you wish to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm so glad he asked that question. I should have thought of getting to that point because it is important for us to lay out for Albertans that the discussion is not over and that it can never be over, that we need to continue the discussion on an ongoing basis of how we inspire education.

We have issues in education in this province. For example, the ministers of education across the country, the Council of Ministers of Education, are meeting in Toronto next week. One of our agenda items is always: how do we eliminate the gap in success between First Nation, Métis, and Inuit students and other students? There are issues that we need to deal with, so we need to keep the discussion first and foremost.

In Alberta, specifically following up on this, we expect the report from the task force on Inspiring Education imminently, and then we will be developing what would have been called in the old days before technology a white paper to frame the issues for discussion. We're using technology so that it can be a robust discussion across the province on the issues that come out of the discussion, but there will be more things that we need to deal with.

What are the physical platforms that we need in terms of the infrastructure for education? What kind of curriculum is necessary to move from a content base and a knowledge base to an innovation and creativity and skills base? What does it mean for our pedagogy? How do our teachers teach in a new learning environment? The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere touched on that in his comments last Thursday. What does it mean for pedagogy in the change? There's a lot more work to be done, a lot more discussion to happen, and of course the School Act or the revision of the school act, the education act, whatever it ends up being called, which will come back to the session in the fall.

The Speaker: Others?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to participate.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to address this Assembly on behalf of the Edmonton-Calder constituency in response to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to touch on a few key priorities outlined in the speech that I believe are crucial to all Albertans, priorities that my constituents care about, like fiscal responsibility, health care, infrastructure, and the funding for education.

Edmonton-Calder is a blue-collar constituency with a proud history of planes, trains, and automobiles. Mr. Speaker, I was born and raised in this constituency, and I face the same issues as my constituents. Edmonton-Calder residents work hard to provide for their families. They must always strike the right balance between spending and saving, and they must create a budget that allows them to get the most out of their incomes. When times are tough, many individuals will cover a shortfall with savings because it's smarter than taking what amounts to a cash advance on a credit card.

The government of Alberta is using its savings in the budget of 2010. By offsetting this year's deficits with savings from the sustainability fund, we will not see the devastating cuts to priority services that many Albertans fear, nor will we do what most jurisdictions do, which is borrow to cover operations. Mr. Speaker, my constituents cannot afford this to happen.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

As the deputy chair of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee I am reassured by the savings mandate of this government for future generations. Our rainy-day fund, the sustainability fund, is a second useful tool. Our rainy days are near an end, and we have put Alberta in the best possible position for sustainable recovery.

Albertans have worked hard to stimulate growth and development in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. They want to see their tax dollars go to further protect health care and education funding, just like the personal incomes that they manage. They do not want to burden their children's generations with servicing debt payments. It is important for us to help all Albertans by funding priority areas, especially with some of our most vulnerable, senior citizens. Edmonton-Calder is home to seven major senior citizens' homes: Shepherd's Care, Rosslyn lodge, Venta Care, Extencicare, Rosedale, Lions Kensington, and the Kipnes Centre for Veterans. Shepherd's Care Vanguard recently received $3 million in additional funding this year for 29 new spaces. This is incredible news for the seniors in my constituency.

Are there any other concerns that need to be addressed for this group? The majority of seniors are on a fixed income and cannot be burdened by an increase in health care expenses. Over the past years many seniors in Edmonton-Calder have expressed their concerns with the future of PDD funding. One of my constituents, Mr. Bill Shillabeer, is a senior who has a daughter in her 30s living in a group home. Bill is very concerned about who will take care of his daughter when he is gone. Mr. Speaker, this is a concern that many Albertans in this position have, and as a government we must continue to support the services and programs that Bill and his daughter need.

Health care can be identified by the majority of Albertans, not just seniors, as the number one priority in this budget. This has not changed from my parents' generation or from the generation before that, Mr. Speaker. This government has always strived to eliminate barriers to accessibility and affordability of health care in Alberta, and it will continue to do so. New challenges continue to emerge, but we will manage as we have always managed.

An important priority that was outlined in the Speech from the Throne for my constituents is the spending for infrastructure. The $20.1 billion in infrastructure spending outlined in Alberta's three-year capital plan will help provide my constituents with jobs, and for this I am thankful. Approximately 60 per cent of Edmonton's industrial land is in Edmonton-Calder. To connect to this industry, we rely on sound infrastructure. Infrastructure spending not only creates jobs for my constituents but allows Edmonton-Calder to continue to be the centre for air, rail, and road transportation within the capital region.

This infrastructure spending can also go towards building new educational institutions in this province. To postsecondary institutions in Edmonton-Calder, like NAIT, it can mean expansion. To my elementary, junior high, and high schools it can mean smaller classes, better tools, and instruction that is student focused.

I am confident that this government will continue to make education a priority so that future generations can build on the innovation and technology that Albertans have seen in the last century. I'm a member of the board of directors of Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures, and I look forward to being part of the future innovation. This structure will give Alberta the necessary tools, education, and technologies it needs to break into new markets and then to increase its competitive advantage.

Mr. Speaker, all of the key priorities I have mentioned today need to remain a focal point for this province in the years to come. By doing so, we can create a sustainable province that serves the best interests of its residents both in good times and in bad.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the Speech from the Throne. I guess a Speech from the Throne can be considered to be in parallel with a state of the union. I met somebody not too long ago who gave me an example of what a ruler some few hundred years ago used to do to assess the state of his kingdom. I found that to be very interesting, to say the least. What this particular ruler used to do was dress up as a beggar. He would ensure that nobody could recognize him and go and see how fellow citizens treated somebody that was so vulnerable. He didn't go to see how a specific agency or a religious leader and so on treated this vulnerable person. He went to see what the average person on the streets in those days thought of and how they treated these individuals.

Mr. Speaker, that really inspired me to consider the state of our province and our nation in many different respects. I think that in this House we have discussions very often on the policy and the financial implications of what we discuss in this Assembly. We talk about the budget, and we have great stories to tell, Mr. Speaker. We've improved the fiscal position by almost $50 billion while maintaining low taxes; $23 billion in debt was paid off, and nearly $25 billion was saved. We have a $17 billion sustainability fund. I think that is good news.

Mr. Speaker, we have a commitment to health care, I think, that signals how much value we place on health care in this province, but we also present a very realistic outlook that says that we know Albertans expect better when it comes to health care, and so does the government. So we'll aim to get there.

In addition, 100 new police officers is, I think, a wonderful item in keeping with our safe communities priorities.

We'll meet and surpass our 14,000 child care spaces commitment, that the Premier made, which I think is profound news.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go a little bit further and reflect on our society as a whole. I'd first like to just recognize the fact that I think people in Alberta and in Canada do not – do not – give thanks enough for living in a free and just and secular democracy. I think that if we just look at some international occurrences over the last number of months, we should be giving thanks for being Albertan and Canadian.

The very concept of building codes, Mr. Speaker, and safety codes ensuring construction is safe is something that we should take a great deal of pride in. Ask the people of Haiti how much they wish more of their structures were built with such codes. Again, such a small thing that we take for granted but something that is so profound.

Mr. Speaker, next I want to reflect on integration. I firmly believe that we as a nation are no stronger in our diversity unless we integrate. I think the truth of Canada is not realized if we are divided, if we keep up the artificial borders that surround us. If we continue to see difference, the potential of our diversity is not realized. With that, I think we must do a couple of things. One is to look at what unites us, and the second is looking at what divides us.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at what divides us, I think each of us needs to look at our pasts. Whether we're new immigrants or old immigrants, whether we're immigrants or the children of immigrants or the grandchildren or great-grandchildren of immigrants, we need to ask ourselves if there are any aspects of our past, any beliefs or stereotypes or myths from our past, that we bring with us today. Is there anything from our past that is not contributing in a positive light to the unity of our citizenship?

I think this requires very honest dialogue with ourselves, ourselves as individuals, ourselves as family units, as local communities, and broader. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because these stereotypes and myths that humanity far too often keeps perpetuating lead to polarizing politics, where we continue to have this us and them mentality, where one group sees themselves in one way and fails to recognize something good in another. This sort of polarizing politics I think comes about when the leaders of the day have no vision that is grand enough to capture the positive attention of their citizens. As a result, people stoop to the lowest common denominator, and they try to find divisions, real or not, to separate and divide people.

We should be very fortunate that in this nation it does not happen as much as it happens in other parts of the world. In other parts of the world these divisions lead to true harm – physical harm, mental harm, emotional harm, sexual abuse, and sexual assault – all because people see difference. This harm, Mr. Speaker, led to me seeing something this morning. I woke up to an e-mail from a human rights organization in the U.S. outlining what they believed happened where the Taliban have killed a few Sikh youth in Pakistan. Why? Because they could capitalize on difference. Because they could capitalize on difference. Because the leaders of the day throughout the world may lack true vision and true compassion, they resort to difference. It's disgusting. It's absolutely disgusting.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we must look at what unites us, and that is a conversation that we can have for a long period of time. That is a conversation that can uplift each of us, but we just don't have it enough. We don't have it enough in this Legislature, we don't have it enough in this nation, we don't have it enough in the media because it's easier to divide, to polarize.

If we look at what unites us, I am inspired by a story that I read of a Rwandan genocide survivor. She wrote in her book that she refuses to see those that killed her family, her friends, and thousands of her fellow people through a lens of hate. She says: I refuse to give them that power because if I give them that power, they win. She says: if I give them the power to hate them, they win. I think she is a profound human being, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if I could have such compassion and such depth, but I think she has set the standard for each of us. If she can look at those that butchered so many of her countrymen through a lens of compassion and say, "If we are to move forward, if we are to have harmony, then we must see no difference," then I think that each of us can do our own little parts.

Mr. Speaker, we have profound examples here. I had the absolute privilege of meeting Major Harjit Singh Sajjan, who was the first officer wearing a turban in the Canadian Forces. In 1989 he joined the forces, and I am in awe of this man. I'm in awe because he joined the forces at a time when Sikh people were still having debates on whether or not the turban could be allowed in the RCMP. I'm in awe of him because he's served in Afghanistan twice, and I'm in awe of my country because of what he represents in Afghanistan. He said that the people of Afghanistan saw him as a symbol of democracy that works. When the people of Afghanistan saw this fellow, who looks more like them than the rest of the soldiers, who wears the Canadian flag on his arm, they saw that democracy works, that having a secular democracy works, that having the rule of law works, that having equality works.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you can be safe while being a minority. You can live in peace. You can enjoy opportunities. You can have the freedom to create your own destiny. You can be protected by laws in the book as well as those that must uphold them. You can be safe in the hands of another. You don't need to fear those that are different. He shows that you don't need power. Harjit Sajjan is an example of that for these people, that you don't need power and majority. You don't need more wealth than somebody else to be protected.

There are thousands of stories such as this that show that Canada works, that Alberta works. We need to spread this message by example throughout the world, Mr. Speaker – throughout the world – and it's here in this very Assembly that such inspiring ideals should arise, yet it's often not the case. We are often lost in our own theatre, which, I must confess, I've done myself a few times. It reminds me a little of recess. I think I enjoy it now more than I did when I was a child.

Mr. Speaker, these are but a couple of examples of what is so profound about us. I really hope that we are able to reflect on this a little more. I really hope that we're able to tell these stories a little more. We have greatness all around us. The hope that we need is all around us. It's not hidden in a corner. It's not showcased on prime-time television. Yes, during this time, during the Olympics, we'll see that hope on the Olympic podium, but more often the hope is amongst our people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today in support of the Speech from the Throne so graciously delivered by our Lieutenant Governor, His Honour Norman Kwong. Before I discuss the throne speech, I would like to take time to thank His Honour and his wife, Mary, for both their wise and kind words and their years of dedicated service to our province.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne highlighted many of this government's priorities, including strong communities and a healthy environment. Others have spoken on numerous issues outlined in the Speech from the Throne, and I've enjoyed them all. In my response I would like to focus on the province's goals to build the transportation infrastructure required to sustain current and future growth and to find new ways to improve and protect the environment.

Mr. Speaker, building new roads provides jobs and is an excellent way to boost the economy both today and in the future. Our goal is to provide safe and efficient transportation networks throughout the province and into other provinces, territories, and states. Transportation infrastructure, or roads, acts as corridors for linking trade, investment, people, and new ideas both in commerce and in tourism. Roads connect us to markets, connect us to our friends and families and other places, and connect us to our natural environment.

Our natural environment is one of our greatest tourism assets. People need or desire to get out of their urban environments from time to time to connect with the outdoors: the prairies, the parklands, the mountains, and also with lakes, rivers, and streams. To get to these places, we need roads that are safe, reliable, and in the right places.

The throne speech clearly stated:

We are working toward a western economic partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to create Canada's largest boundary-free trade and investment market.

It also says:

Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are key and sustainable economic drivers of our province. We are a responsible producer of safe, high-quality food products that are in demand all over the world, but we need to break into new markets and beat the competition from other countries that export agricultural products.

Much of this export-bound produce travels by road to ports in Vancouver, travelling through the Kicking Horse Pass on highway 1, the Yellowhead Pass on highway 16, and even some through the Crowsnest Pass on highway 3. These may be the best roads we have now, but for most of our transportation needs there could be another route.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the main part of my comments today, which is an important issue to my constituents in Lacombe-Ponoka and especially to constituents in the Rocky Mountain House area and many other Albertans and residents of Saskatchewan that live east of central Alberta, and that is the matter of finishing the final link of the route through the Howse Pass. More specifically, the Howse Pass is a perfect example of how trade corridors were the foundation of this country's history and will be part of Alberta's future.

The Howse Pass, which could be an extension of the David Thompson highway, is located on the border of British Columbia and Alberta. It has a long history in our province. Beginning at the junction of the North Saskatchewan and Howse rivers, it follows the Howse River to the confluence of the Freshfield, Forbes, and Conway creeks to the Alberta-British Columbia border. From there it continues through Crown lands controlled by the province of British Columbia to the junction of the Blaeberry River and Cairnes Creek, which is near Golden, B.C. It was part of the Kootenay Trail, linking the eastern slope of the Rockies with the Columbia valley, a traditional aboriginal transportation route for many years, probably even many centuries.

Europeans didn't arrive on the scene until about 200 years ago. In 1807 David Thompson and a North West Company party first used the pass, which was then subsequently used by the Canadian fur traders to explore and establish a post west of the Rockies. The pass was named after Joseph Howse, a Hudson's Bay Company employee who first crossed the pass in 1809. In 1871 Walter Moberly, a surveyor for the Canadian Pacific Railway, concluded that the Howse Pass was the best location for a railway line because of its lower elevation and a shorter distance. In spite of this, on April 2, 1872, prior to the 1872 federal election, the federal government from thousands of miles away, in Ottawa of course, adopted the Yellowhead Pass over the Howse Pass by an order in council. So the Howse Pass was rejected at that point. A leading reason given at the time was to leave open a variety of harbour location options. I just wonder sometimes if the politics of the day may have had an impact on that decision. If you just go back to your history books, in 1872 you'll find that there was a railway scandal that actually caused the Prime Minister of the day to resign.

By 1918 the Alberta-British Columbia interprovincial survey concurred with Moberly. They said – and this is a quote as well – that the Howse Pass is of a lower altitude than Kicking Horse by 319 feet and has no steep approaches and will some day be found suitable for a trunk motor road from the Columbia to the prairies, the feasibility of using the pass for such a road or for a railway having already been established. End of quote. So by that time, 1918, motor cars were more common – they weren't even in existence in 1872 – and they established that this would be a great route.

Mr. Speaker, last week my wife, Pauline, and I travelled the David Thompson highway on our way to Vancouver, and it reminded me of the very first time I travelled the David Thompson highway. It was about 1966. The road was under construction, so we actually travelled on detours, which were no more than dirt trails through the forest along the river near Saskatchewan River Crossing. I was probably among the very first people to actually travel by car all the way from Nordegg to highway 93 to the junction of Saskatchewan River Crossing.

Mr. Speaker, over a hundred years have passed since these decisions. Some of the factors for determining location have changed, and new transportation issues are at hand as we move forward. There is potential for this pass to be part of Alberta's future transportation infrastructure and contribute to a healthy environment and a more competitive transportation network.

Howse Pass is an example of a road that would initiate economic growth and reduce our impact on the environment. This route is through a fairly level area, and it passes through the lowest land point between Mount Assiniboine and Mount Columbia. It is a direct connection from Saskatchewan River Crossing to near Golden, British Columbia. It would extend the province's highway 11, which is the David Thompson highway, over the Continental Divide to the Trans-Canada highway in B.C.

Mr. Speaker, there are many benefits to the construction of the Howse Pass. Building this pass would reduce fuel consumption and carbon emissions as Howse Pass shortens the driving distance from central Alberta to Vancouver by about 100 kilometres. About 80 per cent of CO₂ in the transportation footprint comes from tailpipes, and reducing the drive to cross over the Rocky Mountains can significantly reduce this impact. The pass could be an alternative route for travel and transportation of good when the Yellowhead or Kicking Horse passes are closed due to landslides, accidents, or frequent avalanches.

Some critiques of the pass are evident, but they can be overcome. For instance, part of the pass goes over Banff national park, and there is a legitimate concern for the wildlife there. The animal overpasses that have successfully been built over highway 1 near Lake Louise and Banff are excellent models of a structure that could be built on the Howse Pass and could be much more creative if built as the highway is being constructed.

Mr. Speaker, care for our environment and for our national parks is important to our government. Traffic diverted to the Howse Pass highway will travel through Banff national park for a mere 34 kilometres. On the highway 1 route traffic travels 126 kilometres through the Banff and Yoho national parks, and on highway 16 traffic travels 76 kilometres through Jasper national park, a mere 34 kilometres through the Howse Pass. Mr. Speaker, protecting our environment, reducing our carbon footprint, and conserving energy are important.

An independent cost-benefit study for a Howse Pass highway was completed in October 2005 by Schollie Research & Consulting in Red Deer. This study was funded by the Clearwater county, the town of Rocky Mountain House, the Lacombe county, and the government of Alberta. This economic feasibility study supported construction of the Howse Pass highway as the entire central Alberta region would benefit from net contribution to the economy. It will basically bring central Alberta and regions as far away as Saskatoon at least a hundred kilometres closer to markets.

As His Honour stated in the Speech from the Throne, “a strong economic recovery requires an Alberta that is constantly striving to be better, stronger, and smarter.” To increase our competitiveness in the global economy, the federal and provincial governments should work collaboratively towards the construction of Howse Pass. Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will look for ways to make our economy more competitive in a very challenging and aggressive world-wide economy. To improve the competitive advantage of many of our products produced in both Alberta and Saskatchewan, we need to remove barriers to our markets, the most obvious barrier being the expansive portion of mountain transportation. The future economy will see emphasis on new ways to increase safety, efficiency, and practicality. The Howse Pass holds the potential to meet many key points defined in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, we will build transportation systems that unite our communities and commerce, culture, and tourism. As we seek to achieve the competitive goals of our province, it is important to bring the construction of the Howse Pass into serious consideration. This could be a great asset not only to my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka but to all of central Alberta.

It is time, and I’m asking our government to collaborate with the government of British Columbia and the federal government to develop the final link, or the last spike, in a 21st century transportation strategy.

In closing, I would like again to thank the Lieutenant Governor for presenting the Speech from the Throne. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The comments on the Howse Pass brought back fond memories. In the 1960s I was on a committee, chaired by Marwood Swain from the hon. member’s constituency, that was promoting the construction of the Howse Pass at that time. It was my understanding that the whole issue had died, so I’m very pleased to hear that there’s some interest. My question is: is there an active movement in the member’s constituency to actually revive this plan to construct a highway across the Howse Pass?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question, hon. member. I’m not aware at the moment of any really active movement to promote it, but I do know that over the past several years – and I mentioned the report that was done by Schollie and associates from Red Deer. I think it was Schollie. This report was done in 2005, and it actually outlined the economic and social benefits of the Howse Pass project. The study was done in 2005, tabled with the government. There was some opposition from environmentalists and the federal government, that didn’t want to build any more roads in national parks. The fact is that the entire Icefields Parkway from Jasper to Lake Louise is a big highway right down the middle of a national park, and it is strictly for tourists. There is no commercial traffic on that road. What we need is a road that goes from central Alberta straight across to British Columbia using the David Thompson highway as the first link and then the Howse Pass as a very short link into B.C. It will cut off, you know, many, many miles from central Alberta.

I think for people from Calgary it won’t make much difference. For people from Edmonton it won’t make much difference. But in central Alberta probably half a million people are kind of land locked behind the mountains, away from their markets and their shortest route into British Columbia. So there is a movement out there. I know that Clearwater county and Rocky Mountain House and Lacombe county and probably Red Deer county and now even the town of Golden, B.C., are onside. I think in the future they will continue to work collaboratively to address this issue with their respective governments. We need the federal government to come onside first, and then the provincial governments can move forward.

The question about funding for the Howse Pass is a big issue as well. It will probably be in the hundreds of millions of dollars, but it is no different than what B.C. did with the Coquihalla highway years ago to shorten the route around the Fraser Canyon. They turned it into a toll road, and it actually paid for itself. People were happy to pay a few bucks to take the shortcut on a new road. The tolls are gone from the Coquihalla highway now if you go down there. The road is paid for, the public owns it, and it’s a wonderful short route through B.C. My opinion would be that this could be a toll road. The cost to the taxpayer is nothing except for the users.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I’m wondering if the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka can indicate: is there any chance, if the Howse Pass road was built, that another road could be closed? My concern, of course, is with habitat destruction, and that’s very rare and special habitat through there. If a new road was opened through the Howse Pass, is it possible to, say, restrict traffic or even close highways somewhere else in Banff?

Mr. Prins: Thank you, again, for that question. I think that is a good question as well. The answer would probably be absolutely not. Right now highway 1 from, say, Banff to Golden is one of the most dangerous highways in all of Canada. A few years ago the fatality rate on that highway was five times the average of Alberta highway fatalities. That’s the stretch through the Kicking Horse Pass. The federal government and the B.C. government have put a lot of money into improving that stretch of highway. I don’t know if you’ve been through there lately, but just beyond Field, on the way to Golden, there’s a brand new bridge through there down the Kicking Horse Pass. They’ve spent close to a billion dollars on that section of road between Banff and Golden. It’s not quite a billion dollars at this point, but I think later projects, that came in after this study, probably total a billion dollars.

What we want to do is decant some of the traffic away from that road, take the busyness off that road, and put them on a new highway through the Howse Pass. It would divert some of the traffic. Both the Kicking Horse Pass and the Yellowhead Pass from time to time close because of avalanches, mudslides, accidents, and whatever. When that happens, there's a total blockage, and the Howse Pass would be an alternate route to suffice for that problem.

The Acting Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

4:20 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

[Adjourned debate February 16: Mr. Hancock]

Mr. Hancock: I need to take an opportunity to address Bill 1, albeit hopefully briefly. I think Bill 1 is a very important piece of legislation. Legislation in this House can have several purposes, and in fact I think Bill 1 has several purposes. The first purpose of any legislation, I would suggest, is to provide a sense of direction. In some cases it can be almost poetry; it can be symbolic. Basically, one of the things that I think needs to be symbolized in Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is that Alberta needs to be positioned in the world as a very competitive place to do business.

I was mentioning only this afternoon in the response to the Speech from the Throne how important it is for us to be well educated as Albertans. We're in a northern climate. We're a fair distance away from significant population nodes in the world. If we want to compete in the world, if we want to be citizens of the world, we need to have a good education. If we want to have opportunity for our children in Alberta, we need to be competitive.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's very important that we send a message to Albertans and to the world that Alberta is a competitive place. It's a good place to live, it's got equality of life, it's got a strong education system, and it's a place where government does not get in the way of people doing business, does not get in the way of people in their ordinary lives yet has the appropriate regulations to ensure that we protect our environment, the appropriate level of protection in terms of workplace safety, in terms, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose said earlier, that our buildings are safe, and those sorts of things.

That's always one of the most difficult tasks, I think, for a government. Whenever anything goes wrong in the world, somebody will say: there ought to be a law. And we get burdened by adding more and more laws to our lives. We were talking in an earlier debate in an earlier session about government and what government's role is, and there may be philosophical differences of viewpoints even in this House about the role of government. One of the things that I've always maintained is that government should not get in the way. Government should do the appropriate things that are necessary for a society to live together in peace and harmony, but it shouldn't go above and beyond it. It shouldn't be restricting individuals' ability to have and run their lives in their own interests, in what they believe to be important for themselves and their families.

Yet we do need government, and we do need some rules and regulations. We need criminal law, for example, because some people do not abide by the norms of society. We need codes in some cases, but we have to be careful that we're not telling people how to live their lives over and above what is necessary for a civil society. So there's a balance that is a very difficult one to achieve because, obviously, people do want to ensure that bad things don't happen; for example, every time there's a school bus accident in the province. There have been school bus accidents in the province, and they shouldn't happen, but when you take a look at those situations, people say: well, there ought to be a law. We look to see what more we could do to ensure that that situation doesn't happen again.

Oftentimes the things we ought to do are to go back and say: what responsibilities do we have as individuals to act in a cautious manner, to act in a prudent manner? You know, we shouldn't have to have a rule that says the bus driver has to go to the back of the bus to make sure that all the kids got off. We shouldn't have to have a rule that says you shouldn't run a bus if the back wheels are rusty and will fall off. You shouldn't have to have those rules. So there is that balance. We want to make sure that our children are protected. We want to make sure that our buildings are built right. We want to make sure that our environment is protected. Albertans, generally speaking, I think, are people who are environmentalists. We value the big blue sky and the clean water and the clean air. We value that, so we want to have environmental regulation.

What we need to have is a balance that says that while we understand the need for appropriate regulatory frameworks, we need to also have appropriate processes to make sure that those regulatory frameworks are operated appropriately so that they're not getting in the way of people living their lives and doing business but are ensuring that business is done appropriately and lives are lived appropriately. That is a very interesting balance.

I think Bill 1 is important because it gives us, again, the framework to look at what we're doing as a government, to say that during the boom years in the province, when there have been lots of things happening, people have looked around and said, "This has gone wrong; there ought to be a law," and then a new law is created. In terms of codification perhaps things don't need to be codified if you can have a good policy framework in place. We need to look at that and make sure that we're not overburdening our society with rules but that we have the appropriate rules so that we can have the kind of society we want.

So I think Bill 1 is a very symbolic bill from that perspective because it really in the preamble sets that stage, but it also then goes on to provide for a mechanism by which we can examine our rules and say: "In what areas have we gone overboard with the rules? Let's get rid of those."

It's not simply a numeric thing. Some people say that, well, B.C. or some other jurisdiction has said: we're going to cut back on the rules by 35 per cent. If you look at some of the places where they've done that, it's actually sort of an arbitrary and not useful process to go through because often what they've done is, yes, reduced a number of regulations but not necessarily the thickness. They just consolidate three regulations into one regulation and call it a day, and that doesn't help anybody. What we really need to do is to look and say, "Does the regulation provide a useful purpose? Is it there for a good reason? Is that reason still necessary? Are we doing something that we don't need to do?" If we're doing something we don't need to do, we should get rid of it.

I think it's very important for us to have a framework to constantly be able to assess the burden of law that we put on society. That's not to say that law is unnecessary; law is necessary. But there is a time and a place when law becomes a burden, and we should be careful of that.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make those few comments about the Alberta Competitiveness Act itself as both a symbolic act and a useful act but also, then, to take it one step further and comment about how that might be interpreted in other areas. For example, in the area of education we need to do, as government has indicated it will do and shall do, a value review to look at everything we're doing, because it's not just in the area of a regulatory reform and regulatory burden. It's not just in the area of whether it's competitive to do business in the province that we need to ensure that our resources are used to the most value for Albertans.

Last fall, for example, we had an opportunity to speak with school boards across the province, to ask them to work with us to identify the things that we're doing that don't add value. Are we asking for reports in areas that those reports don't actually accomplish much? If so, then we should stop asking for those reports. If we think those reports have value, we should be able to justify the value that we get from them. We need to look at everything that we're doing. We need to ask school boards to co-operate regionally to make sure that the resources we have afforded education go to helping to achieve the outcomes that we need in education, that every child has the opportunity to maximize their personal potential.

If we can do that, then the fact that we are in a fiscal restraint or the fact that we are in a period of time when we have a fiscal surplus, either of those can be weathered appropriately. When we are in a time of fiscal restraint, we can ensure that resources go to get the most value for Albertans' dollars, and when we're in a time of fiscal surplus, we can save that surplus for the benefit of future Albertans. Those, I think, are laudable objectives.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Alberta Competitiveness Act is important both for what it actually says and what it actually does and for the message that it should send to all of us in government: to talk to the people we work with in our communities to find out where we're actually putting more of a burden than necessary, more regulation than necessary, more requirement with respect to paperwork and bureaucracy than necessary to accomplish the laudable goals of having a safe, civil society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. I listened to the minister's comments with some interest and will agree and will disagree on some of them. I am puzzled by the fate of what I think the former Premier used to call the stupid rules committee or something to that effect, the committee that was struck – and I think it was chaired by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View – which was supposed to cut red tape and do away with unnecessary rules and follow the example of the B.C. government and so on. It just seemed to disappear, so you'll have to excuse me, but I greet this bill with some skepticism, and you'll hear more about that when I have a chance to talk about it at length.

Why should a member have any more confidence in this bill? Given what happened to that stupid rules committee, it's just that there's an inconsistency. I mean, there's talk here, but historically there's been no action. Frankly, I'm not sure why I should think there would be action now. Maybe the minister can speak to that.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very important question, and I think it deserves a response. The response would be that there is no single point in time when you can say that the job is done. In fact, the dumb rules committee did some good work in its time. In fact, we have a Regulatory Review Secretariat that's chaired by one of our members, which reviews every new regulation coming forward to determine whether it's necessary and appropriate. There are processes in place to deal with regulation. In fact, before my time in this House, I served as a private-sector member on a review committee which actually had the effect of cutting back regulation.

But in government, regardless of what government you're in, whether you're a socialist government or a conservative government, regulations tend to grow, and laws tend to grow. I mean, members of the opposition have in the past wondered whether we would have more legislation. The very fact that we sit all the time suggests that we should be bringing legislation to the House because, after all, that's mainly what we do after passing a budget.

So legislation will grow, regulation will creep, and there's always a necessity to pick a point and say: we're going to have a new and renewed effort. Some of those times it has to be done with more vigour. This is one of those times, and that's why the Alberta Competitiveness Act, I think, is so important right now. We're in recessionary times. We want Alberta to be well positioned to lead not only Canada but the world out of that recession. If we're going to do that, we have to look at the overlap and duplication in so many of our processes and regulations.

It's not that the previous activities didn't work; they did. They had efficacy. They removed regulation; they've stopped regulations from coming in. But there is always an incessant pressure to grow the regulatory burden. We need at this time more than any other time to really focus on what the appropriate processes of government should be, the appropriate value we should be getting, and how we should intercede when necessary but not always necessarily intercede in the lives of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Speaking of competitiveness, again to the hon. member. In terms of business research and development Alberta's performance has been dismal. Spending in research and development by Alberta businesses as a share of GDP ranks last among the four largest provinces, sits well below the national average, and has stayed relatively flat over time. What would the hon. minister like to see done or achieved through this competitiveness review to reverse this trend?

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises an interesting question, so let's just speculate on that. At one point in time I think there were seven different ethics committees that were necessary if somebody wanted to do medical research, seven different ethics committees that you might have to go to. If you wanted to do trials, for example, you'd have to go to the university. If presumably you were starting at the University of Alberta, you'd go to their ethics committee. Then you'd have to go to the Capital health ethics committee. Then if your patient population that was involved in this test or study was in other geographic areas, you might have to go to eight ethics committees across the province to be able to deal there. If you had another educational institution involved, there might yet be another ethics committee. All of them are doing exactly the same thing. So why would you have eight or nine ethics committees in the way of getting your research done when one would do the trick?

The Deputy Speaker: To speak on the bill, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first congratulate Ashleigh McIvor and her family. Just a few minutes ago she won a gold medal in skiing for Canada. [applause] I will say that that's now six gold medals. That's one behind the lead, so we're doing well. We're doing well.

Now, on a not so positive note I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. There's no doubt we need to be more competitive, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Education clearly pointed out and spoke to. There is no doubt about that. It is good to see that this Premier and his government are finally willing to pay, at the very least, lip service to this important fact. I'm glad to see a growing Wildrose Alliance movement has had the intended effect, I hope.

During the 1990s Alberta established itself as one of the best places, Mr. Speaker, in the world to do business. We limited government spending growth. We paid off debt. We lowered taxes and provided tax incentives to attract new businesses and industries to our great province. The people of our province proudly referred to this as the Alberta advantage. Although Alberta still possesses some of these same features, our edge has slipped dramatically over the last decade.

Our tax advantage, for example, both in regard to personal and business income taxes has decreased dramatically as well. For example, B.C. now has lower income taxes for any person making under $118,000. That's the vast majority of the population. For any person who makes under $118,000 – that would be nurses, home-care workers, teachers, police officers, welders, construction workers, or janitors – it now makes more sense from a personal income tax perspective to live in B.C. That's definitely not what we want to be the case, I would argue.

We haven't lowered business taxes for years, and many provinces are quickly catching up to us, with plans to surpass us soon. If we allow them to, Albertans will lose jobs to other jurisdictions – it's as simple as that – and we will lose Albertans to other jurisdictions, which we certainly do not want.

Energy, Mr. Speaker, as everyone in this House knows, is our most important industry currently and pays for the health, education, and other programs Albertans and their families rely on. Because of this government's actions tens of billions of dollars in energy investment and the tens of thousands of jobs created therefrom have fled to neighbouring provinces due in large part to the new royalty framework, which I believe was one of the most misguided, mishandled policy debacles in all of Alberta's history. This has made us less competitive.

Then there is the danger on the horizon that we can see. Provincial government spending has been growing out of control for some time. Over the past several years we have spent far more per capita than any other province in Canada. Government spending has increased at more than double the rate of inflation plus population growth. By refusing to control spending to sustainable yearly increases, the provincial government now finds itself in the position of both taking on massive amounts of debt, a planned $6 billion by 2012, while facing the prospect of cutting the promised programs that Albertans have come to rely on.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, piling up debt on the backs of future generations to dull the pain of a self-inflicted spending hangover is the height of irresponsibility. So, too, is expanding the size of government entitlement programs to the point where the only way to adequately fund those programs is to raise taxes or increase debt for future generations. It is my view that if we continue on our present course, we will leave ourselves and our children with an Alberta disadvantage. As nonrenewable resource revenues decrease, taxes increase; health, education, and other important social services are cut; and opportunities disappear.

Finally, the issue of overregulation and red tape, which the Minister of Education spoke to earlier. The regulatory burden on Alberta businesses, our engine of job creation, is astounding. Several independent assessments rank Alberta dead last nationally in this area. It is, in very fact, the Alberta disadvantage. It costs business billions of dollars in compliance costs, delays billions in investment, and costs thousands of jobs and millions of hours of opportunity costs. This government has done nothing to address this issue to this point.

I could go on about the current government's abysmal record with regard to helping our province be more competitive, but I will not. I will not. Bill 1, in my view, could be – and I emphasize could be – a first small step in the right direction. If this is simply lip service or a tool for appointing new do-nothing committees or agencies, then this bill will be a failure. If, however, this bill is used to mimic what has been done by other jurisdictions to become more competitive, then it is worth the support of this House, in my view.

The Wildrose is always looking for pioneers in our own province and in other jurisdictions who have found innovative ways to improve their economy and social programs. We like solutions to problems that mimic them, if appropriate, in the Alberta context. I will focus on one example today, that of our good neighbour to the west, British Columbia.

In 2001 the newly elected right-of-centre party – most would call them conservative although they do go by a different name, to be sure – promised to reduce regulation by one-third, or 33 per cent. It sounded to me, when I first heard that, like a typical promise, a big promise short on detail, but it turned out not to be. Through deregulation and regulatory reform efforts they exceeded that target, and to date they have reduced regulatory requirements in British Columbia by 42 per cent from 2001, a truly remarkable figure.

How did they do it? First, they identified a minister responsible for regulatory reform. The minister championed the initiative and reported to colleagues and to the public on the government's progress. Second, they established a regulatory reform office responsible for leading the initiative. They call it Straightforward B.C., and that organization was put within the ministry of the minister in charge of this initiative.

Third, they established a baseline measure. This is so important. I very much appreciated the remarks of the Education minister on this, but where I do disagree with him is this idea that if we do not track our progress numerically, we can still have the intended effect. There's no doubt you could have some effect doing that. I feel that you need to track those. You need to have measurable goals and objectives, or it just does not happen. It's just a fact of life, I think, in government especially.

They established a baseline measure by counting all regulatory requirements contained in provincial legislation and accompanying regulations and policies. This central database established a starting point so that they could monitor their progress. Just for the record, they started with a stunning 384,000 identified regulations in the province of British Columbia.

Their new office, Straightforward B.C., then reviewed existing legislation by developing and implementing three-year plans that laid out when each ministry would be reviewing existing regulations. Priority was given to regulations that affected economic competitiveness.

Next, they made an effort to control new regulation by creating a regulatory reform policy that set out criteria that must be used to develop and assess new regulations. Ministers must certify that proposed legislation and regulations have been developed using the criteria and provide rationale for any deviations.

Finally, and very importantly, the ministries set real and tangible targets and reported on performance. Targets were set out in the annual three-year business plans, as mentioned, for each ministry. The minister responsible for the initiative reported monthly to cabinet on the government's progress, and quarterly progress reports were published publicly. To date there's been a 42 per cent reduction in the regulatory burden, so roughly 239,000 regulations now exist in B.C. compared to the aforementioned 384,000 when they started.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view that this government, the current government in Alberta, has done a very poor job of making us competitive since the current Premier took office. They have some successes before that, but it has been a disaster since. It's never too late to do the right thing. I will be supporting this bill with the caveat that this had better be more than just lip service. We have a good example to follow in B.C. on reducing red tape, so let's do it. The Wildrose has been offering solutions to make us more competitive in the energy sector as well as offering ideas to maintain the Alberta advantage through better fiscal management and savings, so let's do it. In short, it's time to stop talking about being competitive and start being competitive.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for his comments. One thing he and I do share in common is a concern about the tax burden on working families in this province.

He mentioned a comparison to B.C. One thing that he did not mention is that B.C. currently has a 7 per cent sales tax and on July 1, 2010, will move to a 12 per cent harmonized tax with the federal government. I would like to ask this member if he supports the introduction of a sales tax in Alberta.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's a bit of a stretch, but I'll do my best. First of all, the harmonized tax didn't increase their tax burden. As you know, that's just a harmonization of the GST with the provincial sales tax. I mean, I don't know where that's coming from. You know, for a lot of people income tax takes more of our money away than sales tax because sales tax, as you know, hon. member, often gets worked into the prices, whether you have it or not. It's just that corporations will generally know where the supply-demand curves are, and they'll account for the GST, so essentially you're going to get a lot of times, not all of the time, generally the same pricing.

I don't think that really has anything to do with my comments on personal income tax. That fact is that everyone under $118,000 in income in B.C. pays more tax than they do here. That's almost 90 per cent of the population of Alberta. So we're not that competitive. We think we're competitive. We think we've got a great Alberta advantage, and we do still have some, there's no doubt, but if we do not start seriously working on this, the Alberta advantage that you and I grew up with in our younger years, now that we're old men, we might not be able to pass that on to our kids, especially with the incredible overspending that we are currently doing in this province. It's very important that we get that under control, that we put a plan in place where we can actually start lowering taxes to remain competitive.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the member's comments with interest. He raised an issue which he'll need to explain to me. I've thought about this with his party's platform for some time. It looks to me like his party's position is that the Alberta government should cut taxes, it should maintain programs, it should reduce royalties, and at the same time it should avoid debt. That seems to me an impossibility. My question to the member from Airdrie-Chestermere, because he more or less spoke directly to that issue in his comments, is: how are you going to do that?

Mr. Anderson: It's actually just basic economic theory. We're going to build the pie. We're going to create more wealth in our country and in our province. That means that the same amount of people will actually pay more in tax revenues but not on a per-person basis. I think this is basic conservative economic theory, and I espouse it.

The other thing that we need to do – and this is something I know you agree with because I've heard you talk about it a hundred times – is we need to grow the Alberta heritage fund. We need to continue to grow it to the point where the interest from that fund every year replaces our reliance on oil and natural gas revenues and thereby eventually allows us to slowly lower income taxes, replace the need for income taxes with a mountain of investment capital that is providing interest each and every year. That is how I think we can, outside of just simply growing the economic pie through lower taxation, attracting new businesses, et cetera, to the province. Those are kind of the two main ways I see that we can accomplish all those great things. We can have our cake and eat it too. It's the great thing about being a Conservative.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a comment for the follow-up question. First off, the member had mentioned about the PST in B.C. Actually, it becomes a much broader tax when you put it with the GST as opposed to the narrower tax. That notwithstanding, I don't think I heard an exact answer. Would this member like to see an introduction of a sales tax in Alberta under any circumstances?

Mr. Anderson: Well, you know, I think it's pretty clear that should any type of sales tax be implemented or be proposed, we have clear legislation . . .

An Hon. Member: We?

Mr. Anderson: Sorry. The government has clear legislation that states that that would have to go to a referendum vote, and I support that concept.

The Deputy Speaker: I have a list here of speakers sent to me recently. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join second reading debate on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This act will essentially create a body charged with assessing the progress of initiatives aimed at improving Alberta's international competitiveness. Moreover, this body will also be charged with creating recommendations to further enhance government, business, and industry programs designed to improve competitiveness. In simple terms, this means that Bill 1 will create a mechanism to ensure that Alberta remains the best place in North America to invest.

Now, for many this might mean a review of our royalty structure and energy industry. After all, Alberta is Canada's energy powerhouse, and this industry, perhaps more than any other, dramatically impacts our provincial revenue and our overall economy. This is a reality that is well known in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. In fact, around 60 per cent of Alberta's total energy revenues have come from the bountiful natural gas reserves in and around my constituency.

It is clear that Alberta needs to be competitive in this area. However, I would argue that competitiveness goes beyond energy, investment, and development. Rather, it's important to ensure that Alberta remains competitive in all areas of the economy, be they energy, agriculture, or tourism. In my mind, Bill 1 will allow us to remain competitive from a trade perspective. In fact, I would argue that the benefits to trade competitiveness are perhaps the greatest strength of this legislation.

Nowhere does this become more apparent than by looking at agriculture, specifically the ag food industry. One of the most dramatic events affecting this sector of the economy is the slow closing or constriction of our largest market, the United States. We can all remember the situation that arose with BSE a couple of years back, and we can all remember the havoc that it caused our ranchers and their families. Simply put, Alberta's agricultural sector has increasingly made itself dependent on one market, and if this market closes or contracts, it could negatively impact this sector. In fact, just days ago the President of the United States announced that Canada will no longer be on the restricted list of countries affected by the buy American incentive protectionism. Mr. Speaker, this is good news. This is a change.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is to look for additional markets not to replace the United States but to complement and diversify, and increasingly this means eastern Asia and other parts of the world. However, when we look to expand our trade beyond the United States, it quickly becomes obvious that we're not competing alone. Rather, jurisdictions like Australia and Argentina are actively competing with us for access to Asian markets. This, of course, leads us back to the issue of competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, all markets and all consumers look for two things, price and quality. Now, with Alberta placed in a position where it is competing with mass-producing jurisdictions like Australia and Argentina, it becomes difficult for us to compete from a price perspective. This means there is a large quantity of goods on the market, which in turn drives prices down.

However, Alberta can compete on the quality side of the equation with quality grain like durum and barley. We have quality Alberta beef. From a competitive perspective this means that initiatives need to be expanded that further develop the high quality of Alberta's agricultural goods. Initiatives like livestock age verification and meat packaging and processing can dramatically enhance the quality of Alberta's agricultural products. Initiatives like getting rid of the monopoly marketing structure for grains and an increase in quality can mean an increase in price.

Mr. Speaker, a second area of international competitiveness I would like to explore is the idea of expanding our name recognition. After all, Albertans already know about the quality of our agricultural sector, they already know about the strength of our energy industry, and they already know about the potential of our people. What is important from a competitive perspective is that the rest of the world knows. The world needs to know that Alberta is the provider of safe, secure, and convenient energy. They need to know that Alberta has a world-class agricultural sector committed to safety and quality, and they need to know that Alberta is committed to free trade and industrial development. Essentially, in order to be competitive, I believe Alberta needs to expand, develop, and strengthen its international name recognition. People in foreign countries need to instantly associate Alberta with quality and sound business sense.

In addition, people around the world should also be able to instantly recognize Alberta as a beacon of world-class tourism. After all, our national parks are already the envy of the world. Instantly Banff, Jasper, and Waterton come to mind. While I support measures to promote our already world-class tourist destinations, I feel that from a competitiveness standpoint we should focus on some of our more hidden treasures, treasures like the Milk River badlands, where they are currently excavating dinosaur fossils for the Royal Tyrrell Museum; Writing-on-Stone provincial park, where there's one of the greatest concentrations of rock art in North America; and Medalta Pottery, which historically made 75 per cent of this country's pottery at the turn of the century.

These treasures, which are in and near my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat, are truly spectacular and could stand to benefit greatly from the international limelight. Mr. Speaker, there are treasures all over this province. I believe that promoting these treasures like this should be one of the key priorities of the competitiveness body created by this act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe that in order to be competitive on the world stage, we need to recognize and encourage our export-based businesses, businesses like Meggitt industries in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. Last weekend here in Edmonton Meggitt industries won the prestigious exporter of the year award from the Alberta Chamber of Commerce. This award recognizes an organization that has achieved outstanding success in exporting their products outside of Canada's borders. In the case of Meggitt industries these products are primarily unmanned vehicle systems. These systems are very interesting pieces of technology that can have many practical uses, both in the military, by police forces, and commercially as well.

Also, that is why the Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems is located in Medicine Hat. The unmanned vehicles made and exported by Meggitt industries include land, sea, and air vehicles. The land vehicles are used for search and rescue as well as towing military targets in live-fire exercises. The sea vehicles are Zodiac-type boats, which are used by countries to remotely patrol harbours and also anywhere that there are naval exercises. Their vehicles are drones, et cetera, that we hear so much about that are used in both military and civilian applications from surveillance in Afghanistan to patrols using radar and spectral imaging for such things as search and rescue and watching for forest fires. All these are controlled remotely and offer the military the opportunity to create a realistic training scenario, and they offer civilian applications to carry out their work while keeping people out of harm's way.

Mr. Speaker, because of the success of this company and its technology its products are in high demand all over the world, including the United States, Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom, and South Africa, to mention a few. This is truly a great success story for this industry, my constituency, and indeed Alberta as a whole. After all, Alberta is an exporting jurisdiction that transports billions of dollars of energy products every year, and for a technology industry to win exporter of the year truly highlights the value and potential of Alberta's technology. After all, this is just one example of how Alberta's technology is leading the world.

5:00

In closing, I'd like to thank the government for its sound decision-making, exemplified by its commitment to overall competitiveness, competitiveness that stretches beyond the energy industry and royalties to examine where Alberta stands on the international stage and where we need to go to remain an in-demand jurisdiction. To this end, I believe that initiatives like adding value to our agricultural products, developing our international name recognition, and recognizing our export businesses will go a long way towards telling the world who we are and what we're capable of. Albertans already know this, but it's our job to make sure that the rest of the world knows. I will offer my full support to Bill 1, and I encourage all members of the House to join me.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question to the hon. member, speaking of value-added initiatives. While synthetic crude oil production has increased, an enormous amount of bitumen continues to be shipped by pipeline out of this province. Indeed, the share of synthetic crude oil and bitumen production remaining in Alberta for refining and transport fuels has fallen, from 34 per cent a decade ago to 23 per cent in 2007, the latest statistics that I have. Would the hon. member think it is to our competitive advantage to ensure that there is a significant increase in the upgrading of bitumen here in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that question. Yes, I do. I believe that there's an advantage to increasing our upgrading, and I believe that the fact that there are upgraders standing in the wings ready to be built, as far as I know, in this province speaks to that point. When you talk about the 1.3 million barrels of oil being produced by the oil sands ramping up to 5 million barrels per day perhaps by 2015, my question is: how many upgraders is that going to take to be able to handle that amount of capacity? The reason I ask that question is: how much can each upgrader do? If we're talking 1.3 million barrels per day, and we need, according to the quotes that you mentioned, perhaps a couple more upgraders to handle those – and I don't know the capacity of each upgrader – when that increases by two- or threefold, does that mean, then, that we should have two or three times as many upgraders built in Alberta to be able to take that? Is that actually realistic?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same member. I appreciate that response. However, as the next export pipeline is commissioned and comes on stream, it is to my knowledge going to provide at least 600,000 barrels a day of extra export capacity, all going south. As this production of bitumen increases – and I hope the hon. member is right, that it increases significantly; I don't know if it will reach the 5 million barrels a day mark in such a short period of time – do you think we should take our export eggs, put them in separate baskets and that the next pipeline that is to be built from this province, whether it's for upgraded bitumen or bitumen products, should be to tidewater in either Kitimat or Prince George so that we can serve the east Asian market?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. One of the things to remember as well is that the Alberta government is not building the pipelines. It is the companies themselves that are doing this. This is all industry. The hon. member has mentioned something about perhaps looking at moving to the tidewater, whether it's to Kitimat or whether it's to someplace on the west coast. Certainly, that's possible. I think that if the thing is warranted by the companies, they will consider that.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the hon. member not agree that it's in the public interest in this province to ensure that we diversify our export markets not only to the lower 48 states for our petroleum and petroleum products but also to the Asian markets, which are expanding much more quickly than the American market?

Mr. Mitzel: I think this goes back to the point I mentioned about diversification. In my notes I talked about diversification and the fact that in order to be competitive, we should work with what we have in value-added. We should also consider diversification. I was speaking at the moment about agriculture and agrifood products, but the hon. member brings up energy. We are the powerhouse for energy in Canada, and certainly the opportunity to diversify is there as well.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to read the list here again. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, the Member for Calgary-Hays, the Member for St. Albert.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure it'll come as a shock and a surprise that I have a very different reading of this legislation than the government or the member from the third party, now the Wildrose Alliance. I think this is one of the silliest bills I've ever seen. I read it carefully, I think about it, and it just strikes me as silly, wasteful, empty, pointless, and misguided. I'm not sure what else I can say to make my position clear.

Mr. MacDonald: You've convinced me.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I've convinced one person already.

I have trouble right from the beginning with this bill. Obviously, being economically competitive is important and so on, but underlying this bill, if we ask ourselves as legislators what's beneath the surface here, beneath the surface is essentially a view of a society as an economy. I think a society is much more than an economy. I think that we would be better off to have bills that address not competitiveness but all kinds of other things: productivity or social justice or equality or co-operation.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

One of the issues that I think we need to acknowledge and debate in this Assembly as this bill works its way through is: what does competition mean? Inevitably with competition there are winners and losers. So you might want to just change this and call this the Alberta winners and losers act. If we understand Alberta as being fundamentally driven by competitiveness, then we're also, really, re-enacting what, for example, we've watched in the Olympics right now, which is a handful of winners and a huge number of very worthy competitors who lost. If we build our society on that principle, then we're going to end up with a society where there's a handful of winners and a huge number of very worthy people who are the losers. I think we need to think through that approach to a society.

I also wonder even: how is competitiveness defined here? One of my great frustrations with this government's business plans and so much of its legislation is that they're so vaguely presented that you don't actually know what they mean. How would you know if it succeeded? How would you know if something happened? In this case, how would we know if we were more competitive? How is competitiveness reflected in our society? Does it mean that the rich get richer? Does it mean that we have a better education system? Does it mean that we're closing the gap between the impoverished and the middle class, that we're enriching the middle class, that we're more culturally advanced? What does it mean? There's no clear sense of that in this piece of legislation.

Of course, then, without that you could say: well, how is it measured? Well, you can't measure it if we don't define it. I mean, if we were to look at, say, the activities of Goldman Sachs – they were devoted to competitiveness – or Bear Stearns or some of those other merchant banks on Wall Street, that was all about competitiveness, wasn't it? If there was one lesson in the last couple of years in the global economy, it's that unfettered competitiveness is destructive. In fact, one of the great lessons for the conservative movement of the last couple of years – and it's a lesson apparently lost on some – is that unfettered competitiveness is a bad idea. Committing yourself to nothing more than competitiveness sets you up for disaster. So I hope we hear some discussion about that from the government on this bill.

Are we talking here about long-term competitiveness or short-term competitiveness? Once you unleash competitiveness, inevitably the time frame gets tighter and tighter and tighter, and decisions are made to become competitive in the next few years and then in the next year and then in the next few months until we're really scrambling on this treadmill that's getting us nowhere but down. It does become, as so many people have observed, a race to the bottom. So I don't see what's in this piece of legislation to help us avoid a race to the bottom.

Does this mean more tax cuts until we have the lowest tax regime in the developed world? Then why stop there? That's not as competitive as, you know, China might be or India. Does it mean reduced environmental rules? Does it mean other adjustments like that that become lower labour standards? You know, one of the reasons I'm told in this Assembly over and over that farm workers have no coverage under WCB or occupational health and safety or the labour code is: well, we'd be uncompetitive. Well, if that holds for agriculture workers, then pretty soon it's going to hold for other workers, industrial workers and others. So this kind of blind commitment to competitiveness, I think, is ignorant. It's short sighted, it's misguided, and it'll be destructive.

What is the point of competitiveness, Mr. Speaker? Has this government asked itself: why do we want to be more competitive? Is it because we want to be wealthier? Is it because we want to be culturally richer? Is it because we want to have healthier people living longer lives? If those are the goals of being competitive, then why don't we have acts that talk about that? Why are we so focused on competitiveness?

Now, the Minister of Education spoke of the preamble to Bill 1 as if it were poetry. That was his word, and I gagged. I object to the very first line of this preamble, which reads: "Whereas Alberta's success is founded on the competitiveness and the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans." Mr. Speaker, that's nothing short of distortion. That's a misrepresentation. I can tell you that Alberta's success is founded every bit as much on co-operativeness. Alberta's success is founded on people coming together in the late 1800s to form school boards so that they could all pay taxes so that their kids could get an education. They co-operated. Alberta's success is founded on religious organizations and municipalities bringing people together to build hospitals. It's founded on people coming together and co-operating as farmers to bring in all kinds of improvements to our agricultural system. It's based on programs like rural electrification. The rural electrification program, one of the most important advances in the history of Alberta, didn't happen because of competition. So this nonsense in the first sentence of the preamble here, that Alberta's success is founded on competitiveness, should be struck from this legislation.

Then it goes on, Mr. Speaker. The next phrase of this preamble goes like this: "Whereas competitiveness is core to the Government of Alberta's plan to position Alberta for sustained prosperity." It goes on. The fourth line of this preamble may be the most disturbing line in this legislation: "Whereas the Government of Alberta believes that the role of government is to create the conditions for competitiveness."

Mr. Speaker, it may be news to members of this Assembly, but the role of government is not to create conditions for competitiveness. The role of government, I would argue, is to steward this province's people and natural resources to build a better future. Sometimes that's through healthy competition, and a lot of the time it isn't. But if members of this governing party actually believe what this legislation says, that "the role of government is to create the conditions for competitiveness so that entrepreneurship, innovation and investment will generate benefits for Albertans," I think we're in worse trouble than I ever believed.

What about justice? What about cultural development? What about the role of government in making sure that every Albertan has a meal and that every Albertan has a roof over their head and that every Albertan has the right to vote in provincial elections? Now, those would be legitimate roles for government. Those could be considered as the role for government.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, even if we were to accept the notion that the role of government is to generate competitiveness, isn't it really the role of government to be a referee? If we accept that sometimes competition is good, then isn't it the role of government to make sure that it's healthy and fair competition? Isn't it the role of government, for example, to make sure that children born into impoverished families have a fair right to compete equally with children born into families where there's wealth and all kinds of opportunity? That used to be a role for government.

Mr. Speaker, I think what we've done in this piece of legislation is lost sight of what government really is about. I think that this reflects a government that's been captured by one ideology and one set of interests and has stopped taking the long-term welfare of our society into consideration. My esteemed colleague from Lethbridge-East, if I may quote her without even having consulted her, said something to me in the fall that really, really stuck with me. She said: you know, it took centuries to separate the church from the state, and now we have to separate the corporation from the state. I think truer words were never said.

We have here a piece of legislation that doesn't actually reflect the broad interests of the people of Alberta. This is a flagship bill that essentially says that the role of government is to create conditions so that corporations can flourish. Well, sure, that is a role of government, but it's certainly not the role of government, and it certainly is misguided to say that Alberta's success is founded on competitiveness.

Many people here probably don't realize it, but the roots of the New Democratic Party actually go back to the city of Calgary and very, very important political activity that happened in the city of Calgary in the 1930s that led to the foundation of the CCF, which eventually led to the rise of the New Democrats. It's true. I wish that some acknowledgement of those traditions was also in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on beyond that, but I think my point is clear here. This is a piece of legislation that is misguided, and I'd like it to be struck from the Order Paper of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Thank you. First, I'd like to compliment the hon. member for a great speech. I enjoyed it very much, and I agreed with all of it, which is not something I always can say about his speeches. In this particular case I thought he was absolutely dead on, Mr. Speaker.

I'd just like to ask the hon. member what he thinks the government needs to do in order to be competitive with other jurisdictions in the matter of education. I don't think he spoke at great length about that aspect.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the matter of education, I'm going to focus on postsecondary education if I may. My strong feeling is that not just for competitiveness but for the health of our democracy, for the health of our society we need to invest in stable, long-term, generous funding for postsecondary education as well as for K to 12, but I'm just choosing to focus on postsecondary education. Historically the concept of public education in this country – and it is a very, very proud history – is that it was the great equalizer, that we made sure that every child, no matter how privileged or underprivileged, had the right to an education. That started in grade 1 and then in kindergarten, and it went right through to postsecondary education, and many, many, many Albertans and many, many Canadians have benefited from that.

One of the key roles of government is to make sure that that opportunity is sustained, and I would argue that an important way to do that is to stabilize the funding for postsecondary education so that tuition fees can actually be reduced. When I was a student way, way back, tuition fees were, I want to say, $300, something like that, and it was unusual for students to have to work to support themselves while they went through university. I think there's been a real loss when we now see students who have to work 10, 20, 30 hours a week to put themselves through university.

One of the things I'd like to see government do is understand that a crucial role for them is to bring all members of this society along through a generous education program, starting at preschool and going right through to postgraduate. We're halfway there. We're maybe even more than halfway there, but we're slipping. Let's stop the slippage and reverse it.

I will also raise, if I may, one other key point here, which is that I think it is morally abhorrent that in this province we allow children to sit in classrooms hungry through no fault of their own and that this government refuses to take any direct action about that. I think that it is morally bankrupt of this government to do that. I tell you that if you wanted to win me over to competitiveness, then you could come forward and say: you know, we're going to make this a more competitive society by feeding our kids who are hungry through no fault of their own and giving them a chance. They're sitting in schools by the thousands, as young as six and seven and eight, wondering where their next meal is going to come from. That's wrong, and it's a black mark on this government that it won't take any direct action on it. Fix our competitiveness there.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I found the member's comments quite interesting. I do agree with him with respect to the definition of competitiveness and that one of the opportunities that we have in this province is to explore exactly what that means. I was a little surprised to see the balance between – and I don't mean this in a facetious way – how we decide how to invest in social programs and how we can afford to pay for those social programs. Now, I do believe that if you read the legislation as the hon. member quoted and you read it very specifically, I could see some of the arguments that the hon. member made, but I'd like him to think a little bit more about what the consequences might be with respect to that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to stand in this Assembly and speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I am very pleased to expound on how this timely and important act can positively impact on my constituents in West Yellowhead. This important piece of legislation will examine ways to further enhance Alberta's competitive advantage.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is in an enviable position. We have an economic environment that promotes hard work, investment, risk taking, and entrepreneurship. More importantly, we have a government that facilitates and enhances this positive economic climate. I believe that through this act we will examine whether or not we are doing the best we can in accomplishing our objectives, and if not, we will act.

Mr. Speaker, one of this government's priorities is a competitive economic climate. A competitive economic climate is the result of many factors, including fiscal, trade, labour, and regulatory policies, just to name a few. Alberta currently has the most competitive fiscal policy of any province in Canada. It is one that values low taxes. After all, low tax rates are crucial to help small and large businesses and industries compete in the global economy. Our fiscal policy also enshrines sound fiscal management, which is exemplified by initiatives like the sustainability fund, a $17 billion fund designed to help sustain our programs if there is a decline in revenue.

Mr. Speaker, we also made great strides to reduce barriers to trade, investment, and labour through the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, known as TILMA, which we have signed with British Columbia. Through TILMA there will be increased access for businesses, investors, and workers to the markets of both Alberta and British Columbia, which will enhance the competitiveness of both jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, in comparison to other jurisdictions we are well positioned to compete in the world marketplace. However, I'd like to focus on specific areas in the microlevels of government where we could possibly improve on our competitive advantage, especially in relation to the forest industry.

Mr. Speaker, the forest industry is very important to my constituency of West Yellowhead, and this government recognizes the important contribution of this industry to the overall Alberta economy. As such, this government has made efforts to limit the amount of unnecessary regulation while at the same time promoting innovative changes aimed at increasing the competitiveness of this industry.

However, Mr. Speaker, regulatory pressures, particularly in the various levels of government, continue to have a direct effect on the forest industry. Those in the industry tell me that it is often the constant changes in regulation that erode our competitiveness, and while this government has made an effort to limit the amount of regulatory change, we could perhaps go even further. For example, when the Auditor General audits an SRD operation, it tends to be followed by an overabundance of regulatory changes launched to address the issues identified by the Auditor General. This can result in layers of regulations that increase costs, staff workloads, and decrease competitiveness.

In addressing these types of challenges, I would suggest that it is crucial to involve the industry and take common-sense approaches that address the identified issues while minimizing the layers of regulation. One way of addressing this would be to increase forest industry advocacy in both the senior and junior levels of government. At first advocacy may not seem like a component that would improve competitiveness. However, a lack of advocacy can result in and have the effect of regulations being developed without proper consultations. This can of course adversely affect the competitiveness of this industry.

Another area where we could remove red tape is in the process for conducting historical resource surveys. Currently whenever an industry is proposing development, they are required to conduct historical resource surveys that are of great cost to industry. These surveys are important to ensure that heritage sites are protected. However, they are required of forestry, energy, recreation, and even government often on the same landscape. Perhaps this process could be streamlined to ensure that there is not a redundancy while at the same time save industry money.

A third area where we can improve our competitiveness is in the process of surveying new or amended licence of occupation roads, or LOCs. Currently the costs of conducting road surveys are a huge burden on the forest industry and all industries that are required to survey new roads. Mr. Speaker, GPS technology has gone a long way in the last few years. The same surveying objectives could be achieved by using advanced GPS technology that would be even more cost-effective for industry.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize that on the larger scale, the macro level, Alberta is well above other jurisdictions when it comes to competitiveness. That said, the competitiveness review provides the opportunity to examine the micro-operations of government, ensure that regulations are in place which are mutually beneficial. This will further enhance our competitiveness advantage and enable an even higher standard of living for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Premier for introducing this important piece of legislation as I think it exemplifies his commitment to ensuring that Alberta remains the most competitive jurisdiction in North America.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I wonder if I might ask the hon. member across: does he not consider that some of the thought processes behind this Bill 1 in terms of competitiveness could be interpreted as a direct interference in the business community?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't see it as a direct interference with the business community at all. You know, the world has become a very small place. I think it's important that government and industry partner together to make sure that we are competitive in the global economy, so make sure that we have good regulations in place, make sure that we have safety for our workers, and make sure that we can compete in the global economy. If we continue to work and function within the microcosm, we're going to lose our advantage. I think that we're starting to see that as industries such as Russia's, China's, India's come on stream. With the innovation they have and the large population they have, we have to work together to make sure that we are there at the end of the day.

The Acting Speaker: Any others wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. It's always interesting when we start a new session to see what the government has selected for Bill 1. Sometimes there have been bills that have been selected which have a theme with which I can't disagree; I think children and poverty. There have been a number of them that had good intentions. Very rarely did they make a significant difference if you evaluate them. I think the same thing might be said of this one.

Competitiveness in and of itself is not a bad thing, considering the economic system in which we operate. It's something that's important, and it's the responsibility of governments to ensure that we are competitive. But to place it by itself without a reference to the other things that are important, I think, is showing that the government is far too single-minded with respect to the issue of economic or financial competitiveness.

I know that the hon. Minister of Justice has suggested in some of her questions that we need to take a broader view of this. But in my submission, Mr. Speaker, this bill is not written in a way that could lead a reasonable person to believe that a very broad measure of competitiveness is intended. I think that it's very clear that the act is focused very much on the economic competitiveness. In that sense it is one-sided, and it is focused on a number of things which are not new to this government in terms of competitiveness.

If I think back to the days when Ralph Klein was the Premier and he talked about the Alberta advantage, and you broke down the Alberta advantage and what many of the components of that were, they included things like lax environmental regulation, particularly in the vicinity of the oil sands. It meant that there weren't the same protections for workers in terms of health and safety, in terms of the enforcement. It meant that it was harder to organize unions, which is something that corporations like to see because they see that as part of the competitive environment. So this is not new to the government.

What is new, Mr. Speaker, is the rise of another political party in our province, which is, if you can believe it, even further to the right than the Progressive Conservative Party and the consternation and political concern that has arisen on the part of this government that it may be losing the favour of some elements in the business sector and particularly in the oil industry as a result of its very, very watered down changes to royalties in our province.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing that I would do is to suggest that we rename the bill, Bill 1, from the Alberta Competitiveness Act to the Wildrose Alliance inoculation act, something that will protect this government from those in business and particularly in the oil and gas industry that have become disappointed, shall we say, in the Progressive Conservative Party and have begun to fund the Wildrose Alliance Party as a way of bringing political pressure on the Progressive Conservatives to return to the fold of true conservatism. What that means, of course, is very low royalties, very low taxes, very low regulations, very high thresholds, for example, for forming unions or for protecting the rights of workers in our society.

This direction, this race to the bottom, is, I think, of great concern to all Albertans. This competitiveness, as practised by this government, comes at the expense of worker health and safety. It comes at the expense of the very poor in our society. It comes at the expense of environmental degradation, and it impacts in a significant way the cultural development of the province. It impacts education, and it impacts our health care system.

Now, we're running a very large deficit, Mr. Speaker, in this budget. The government has provided additional funds for health care and some aspects of education. They've cut many other things in the budget because it's a political budget dealing with the political situation the government now finds itself in.

One of the aspects that it does not address is the whole question of the revenue side of this province. Now, this government has, since I've been involved in politics municipally and here, introduced the flat tax on personal incomes in the province. Of course, the biggest reductions in taxes under that come for the very wealthiest of Albertans. It's very, very heavily weighted in that direction.

Many middle-income Albertans actually are paying more taxes, yet the government is not addressing the competitiveness of their taxation system on personal incomes for middle-income Albertans, who are actually paying more taxes than they would have. They are focused instead on the competitiveness of the wealthiest Albertans. According to calculations that have recently been made public, the value of that in terms of lost revenue in this budget is $5.5 billion, most of which goes to the very wealthiest individuals in our society. Mr. Speaker, that alone would cover the entire deficit of the province of Alberta in this budget.

Then there's the whole question of corporate taxes. At a time when corporations were earning massive profits and I think EnCana a few years ago earned a profit of I don't know if it was $7 billion or $9 billion of profit, this government has cut taxes on corporations by over a third in the last eight years. I was present when Steve West, who was then the Provincial Treasurer, announced the goal of cutting the rate for corporate taxes from 15 to 8 per cent. I think we're around 10 per cent now, Mr. Speaker, so the government's got a couple of points left to go, but that has also caused the government to give up several billion dollars of revenue in each budget year.

Now, these are policy decisions, Mr. Speaker. I assume that they have been taken in the pursuit of competitiveness, in pursuit of making Alberta a competitive place. But it has placed our province in deficit, and it's also made us extremely dependent on natural gas revenues, which is where we get the bulk of our royalty revenue.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're now in the difficult position that when the price of gas tanks, we have to lay off nurses. That's not a competitive government, in my view. It's a government that is spending its children's inheritance because it is unwilling to make those who can afford to pay more and who benefit the most from our society pay their fair share. Of course, we also have some of the lowest royalties in the world when it comes to oil and particularly for tar sands oil. These are policy decisions that this government has made already to try and make us, quote, more competitive.

Mr. Speaker, there are some things that I think the government could do to actually make us more competitive – and I'm still using it in a fairly narrow sense economically – and that is to start making investments in renewable energy in a big way. If we go forward as a province, we will find that there comes a time when it's more and more difficult to sell our oil on the international market and where oil in particular is being displaced as a major source of energy in the world. Now, that may be difficult to accept today, but I think it's a reality.

The problem is that this government is doing nothing to position this province so that it can be the energy leader in Canada in the future in a posthydrocarbon, postcarbon economy. I think that if we want to be competitive, then we need to focus on that. Simply a race to the bottom with the lowest possible taxes is not going to be the answer. You need to be intelligent about it. You can't just say: "We're going to slash our taxes to the very bone. We're going to charge the lowest royalties in the world, and the free market will take care of us." You know, the history of the world is replete with jurisdictions that have adopted that approach and have ended up in poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to talk a little bit about some of the language. I appreciated very much the comments from Edmonton-Riverview with respect to this bill and with respect to the one-sided and breathtaking assumptions contained in the preamble to the bill. "Whereas Alberta's success is founded on the competitiveness and the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans": that is a very questionable statement. For the government to quote it in the preamble to its Bill 1 is extremely presumptuous and downright, I think, inaccurate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview did talk about the co-operative spirit in Alberta, and I'd like to add to those remarks a little bit. Let's not forget the agricultural societies that were created in this province, the wheat pools. Let's not forget the gas co-operatives, which still operate; the rural electrification associations, which still operate. One of the things that gives me hope as a social democrat in Alberta is the co-operative traditions of this province, which are long and deep.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the United Farmers of Alberta represented much of that co-operative spirit among agricultural producers in the earlier years of our province. The United Farmers of Alberta government was, in fact, the same government that negotiated with Ottawa so that the natural resources in our soil belong to the province of Alberta and not to the federal government. Albertans owe that particular party and that movement a real debt of gratitude. The UFA still continues today but not as a political party. A large portion of that party, the UFA, was involved in the founding of the CCF in our province, which is, of course, the direct precursor to Alberta's NDP.

I think that if we look back on history, we'll find that the assumptions contained in this act are false and misrepresent Alberta's history, and I think they also are equally false in terms of a compass for moving the province forward. If we want to be more competitive, I think we need to make sure that we have a first-class health care system. That's one of the advantages Canada has relative to the United States in terms of the location of companies in our country.

A first-class education system is even more important to our competitiveness, so I think the government should be focusing on that, but there's not a mention of it in this act. A clean environment and good social conditions all go towards making Alberta more competitive, a more desirable place to invest and to live, and I think that the one-sided nature of this bill is in fact going to be at cross-purposes with true competitiveness, that we would like to see in our province. We would like to see the oil and gas industry continue to prosper at the same time as they pay their fair share and at the same time as we prepare for the day when renewable energy replaces carbon and hydrocarbon fuels.

We would like to see a much better bill than this, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I've always had some difficulty following the tax-the-rich economic theories that come from that part of the House. Just some clarification, because I've heard it twice, on how being competitive is somehow a race to the bottom. That would be one question, but I have a couple more if I may.

I'm just wondering how the member envisions us caring for our vulnerable and ensuring that we have good, well-paid jobs in this province and a safe work environment for all if we're not competitive and we don't attract national and international business investment to our province. That's one question.

The other question. When we spoke about investing in renewable energy, I'm just wondering how he envisions that replacing the hundred million dollars a day plus that flows into our province from our export of oil and gas.

A few questions there, but just some clarity on some of those would be great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to oblige. Well, the race to the bottom means basically lowering labour standards, environmental standards, and not being able to afford education and health care as is necessary.

I want to talk about another aspect, since you raised it, in terms of how we make sure that our people are working, and that has to do with the government policies around bitumen in our province and the mass export of unprocessed bitumen, creating billions of dollars of investment in the United States and thousands of jobs while we here in Alberta have lost in the last year I think 35,000 jobs.

There are many ways to be competitive, but certainly to let, as the Minister of Energy said in the House yesterday, the market decide where jobs are created with our resources I think is a complete abdication of the government's responsibility to look at how we build our economy in an intelligent way. That hemorrhaging of capital and jobs to the United States is something the government needs to address.

In terms of the money that we get from the export of our raw materials, that is fine as far as it goes, but unless we make sure that we take full advantage of value-added opportunities, then we will lose against what we could potentially have. It's fine to say that we get a lot of money from exporting natural gas with all of the volatiles in it to petrochemical industries in Chicago and so on and that we export our bitumen to the United States and allow them to build the upgraders and to create the jobs and to create the investment in a number of states in the United States. We're rich for now, so we lose sight of the fact that we are letting much of the riches that we possess slip through our fingers to the benefit of others.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I've always believed that the government's job is to create a level playing field and that business will come if there's money to be had. I think it's a false economy when the government interferes with that because it truly isn't what we talk about when we talk about a free market. If the marketplace is always depending on tax dollars to make their profit, then I'm not sure how we can call that a pure free market.

What I would like to see: in terms of them wanting competition, I would like to compete with the United States and have our own upgraders. I think that would be a good use of the taxpayers' money because ultimately we would have more control, and in the end competitiveness is about control. Maybe we should be looking at controlling more of our value-added jobs. If the member could comment on that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I agree generally with what the member has said. To me it's a question of policy.

The Acting Speaker: The next speaker, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the lateness of the hour, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 24, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we, the members of our province's Legislature, fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day and every day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House in his position as vice-chair of the Legislative Offices Committee.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to the Assembly the members of the 2009-10 Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, who are sitting in your gallery. This commission was established on July 31 of '09 with the daunting task of coming up with some 87 constituencies using a whole number of factors to make sure that they are fair and equitable. The commission had a series of hearings across the province, and now they are issuing their interim report. I am pleased to introduce the members of the commission. We have the hon. Judge Ernie Walter, chair of the boundaries commission, and the members: Keith Archer, Peter Dobbie, Allyson Jeffs, and Brian Evans. Of course, Brian was a member of this Assembly and also a minister. I see they have with them one of their very able administrators, Karen Sawchuk. I would ask our guests to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 44 very special guests from Win Ferguson school. The students are accompanied today by teachers Mrs. Ali Dixon and Mrs. Claudia Klippenstein, and parent helpers today are Mrs. Robin Lee, Mrs. Monica Schouten, Mrs. Donna MacLean, and Mr. Paul Kristensen. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a researcher funded through one of our Alberta Innovates corporations, Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions. Dr. Braden Manns, who is sitting in the members' gallery, is a physician, researcher, and an associate professor in the division of nephrology in the department of medicine at the University of Calgary. The chronic disease team that he helps lead brings together 23 specialists from across Canada and abroad in fields ranging from medicine to law, from nursing to knowledge transfer. Together they are tackling an urgent matter in health care, and that's how to help people with chronic medical conditions like diabetes and high blood pressure to better manage their health. His research is just one example of the excellent work coming out of Alberta Innovates. Again, Dr. Manns is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce some staff from my department who are on an orientation tour. I met with them in my office. Right about now they're probably wondering what they've gotten themselves into, but it's my honour to welcome them to this Chamber. I'd like to introduce Wendy Mallery, Nnam Okoye, Lena Borle, Wendy Joy, Marilyn Quaadvlieg, Kerrie Henson, Amanda Goulet, Michael Michalski, George Wiebe, LauraAnn Sedgwick, Christy Ma, Raena Chatwin, Dana Belyk, Teresa Babinski, Marcia White, Kathie Heard, Shannon Klaus, Gerhard Krueger, Lesley MacAllister, and Karen Bilinske. I'd ask them to rise and please accept the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly six human resources staff members who provide shared corporate services to both my ministry and Alberta Transportation. If I could please introduce Stacy Gloster, Donna-Joy Loe, Andrea Hayes, Michelle Sadler, Anita Belisle, and Khadija Allidina. They are here today to tour the Legislature Building. They are seated and have risen in the members' gallery, and I'd like all members to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members of the Assembly over a hundred individuals and families and organizations from across the province who've come here to show their concern for service cuts to persons with developmental disabilities. Every one of these Albertans is tremendously concerned that the millions of dollars in cuts will leave providers and parents scrambling to find adequate supports. I would ask our guests to rise or wave if they wish and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

2010 Arctic Winter Games

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, sports is an essential component of a healthy lifestyle and a strong population. From March 6 to 13 Grande Prairie will host the 21st annual Arctic Winter Games. This is an exciting opportunity for our province as participants from Alaska, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, northern Alberta, Nunavik, Nunavut, Greenland, the Sami people from the Sapmi region, and the Russian province of Yamal-Nenets come together in Grande Prairie to compete and celebrate their cultures.

The Arctic Winter Games are a unique celebration of sport and culture. They promote traditional aboriginal games based on survival in the north. There are three categories of sports that are included in the games: major sports; northern sports, including Inuit games, D  n   games, snowshoeing, dog mushing, and Inuit wrestling; as well as emerging sports. The games offer a venue where developing athletes and officials from across the north can meet and enhance their athletic skills and share their respective cultures.

The original philosophy behind these games is athletic competition, cultural exhibition, and social interchange. While participants of the games are looking forward to competing in this biennial event, the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti are very excited to have the opportunity to showcase their city and their hospitality. If you're interested in attending the Arctic Winter Games or want further information on the events, please visit www.awg2010.org.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members of this Assembly join me in welcoming participants, athletes, volunteers, performers, and spectators from all over the north to Grande Prairie.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Support for Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today a hundred Albertans have joined us here in the Legislature to express their disappointment and justifiable anger at the callousness of this administration's decision to claw back supports so desperately needed by people with developmental disabilities. Citizens who live with conditions such as autism, Down syndrome, fetal alcohol syndrome need the compassion, assistance, and understanding of a caring community. That community starts with their immediate family and friends, but it also encompasses all Albertans.

We're all part of a civilization, a civil society, with common rights and obligations. One of our duties is to ensure that people with special needs are looked after. Responsible leadership would make absolutely sure that there's enough public funding to meet the special needs of the people, including those who have joined us in the Legislature today and the many thousands of others with developmental disabilities across the province.

I applaud the men and women who devote their lives to caring for people with developmental disabilities. With meagre resources they are doing their absolute best to provide sons and daughters and the people they support with a quality of life.

Unfortunately, this administration is not providing sufficient support to allow people with developmental disabilities and their families and caregivers to live with a level of dignity that is their birthright. Millions of dollars in cuts have left aid providers and parents scrambling and desperate and vulnerable Albertans in crisis. This is the result of poor financial planning. These are not the actions of a compassionate and responsible government. I would ask the Premier to reconsider these cruel PDD cuts. The worth of a civilization is judged on how it treats its most vulnerable. Today this government is failing that important test.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Youth Apprenticeship Program

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately 6,000 students, 25 schools, five off-campus schools are part of Northern Lights school division 69, otherwise known as NLSD. NLSD operates one of our three youth apprenticeship program, or YAP, pilot projects in this province.

As a former teacher of the Northern Lights school district I am very proud of the work that NLSD is doing with this particular program. In the YAP program students begin in grade 7 and continue through grade 12 to explore career options through integrative learning of both trades and other professional vocations. Students can earn certificates in WHMIS, first aid, H₂S awareness, transportation of dangerous goods awareness, bear awareness, hunter education, and job safety skills.

YAP is currently a pilot project that expires in June of 2010. Northern Lights is hoping to extend the funding for the Lac La Biche program for the next three years as well as exploring the possibility of expanding it into my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

The youth apprenticeship program has successfully improved students' achievement, enhanced program choices, and increased participation and opportunities for First Nation, M  tis, and Inuit students. One hundred and seventy-five students participated in YAP, all of whom remain in school. Six of these students are currently enrolled in registered apprenticeship programs in Alberta. In 2009 these students accessed close to 15 per cent of the province's scholarships in the registered apprenticeship program.

Mr. Speaker, the YAP project has been a huge success for students in the Northern Lights school division. It gives them the ability to learn in a setting outside of the classroom through hands-on experience. This can increase their chances of staying in school and teaches them to develop skill sets that will encourage them to take an active role in their education. It also gives students who want to pursue a career in the trades a way to gain experience and understand the importance of applied learning as a means of achieving their goals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

International Mother Language Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November 1999 the United Nations proclaimed the first-ever International Mother Language Day. This date is celebrated each February 21 around the world. This holiday shows the importance that language has in our society as this is how we express our culture and heritage. International Mother Language Day is a great way to become more aware of other languages and cultures around the world.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a country where we are very lucky to speak our native language and celebrate our culture freely. This is something that many other countries do not allow, and we should be thankful for our freedom. I immigrated to Canada 30 years ago from Punjab, India. It is important to me that I am able to speak my native language, Punjabi, and can pass it on to my children.

In Alberta we have many people who speak languages other than English and French. Some schools offer language programs to help children retain their language if their mother tongue is not English or French, at the same time allowing English children to learn other languages and cultural traditions.

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency alone Kildare elementary school has an excellent Chinese Mandarin bilingual program, as does Londonderry school. Father Leo Green school has wonderful French and Spanish immersion programs. J.J. Bowlen junior high school will open a program for Spanish language and culture in the fall, and M.E. LaZerte offers courses in Mandarin and Ukrainian as well.

I would like to thank all the parents, teachers, and those in the community who promote diversity of language. May God bless our country for years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Royalty Framework

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the University of Calgary released a study concluding that Alberta ranks dead last in terms of competitiveness for oil and gas, citing this PC government's new royalty framework as the biggest reason. This policy has been among the most harmful and misguided public policy debacles in Alberta's history. It has severely damaged our international reputation as a stable and business-friendly jurisdiction to invest in. It has put thousands of Albertans out of work. It has bankrupted hundreds of small businesses, and ironically an initiative intended to increase revenues to the Provincial Treasury has actually resulted in the exact opposite.

Many of us have family and friends who are struggling to find work, and every time I talk with them, they simply ask why. Why would they do this? This government should have known better. They should have known that the answer to increasing provincial revenues is not to raise taxes on business. All this does is drive out investment and jobs and the income earners that pay taxes. They should have known the importance of the rule of law and respect for contracts in creating the stability necessary to attract and retain industry and businesses and the jobs and tax revenue they provide. They should have known that you can't overhaul the entire regulatory framework governing an industry without first consulting with that industry to make sure there are no unintended consequences.

That shale gas, for instance, was changing the investment landscape. Industry knew that information long before the new royalty framework. Many of this Premier's MLAs knew it and told the Premier so, yet it fell on deaf ears. Now the government, realizing its mistake, has undertaken a competitiveness review. This review is welcomed and needed, and I hope they get it right this time, but the government also says they want to move on. Well, for those whose jobs, businesses, and dreams have been shattered by this government's devastating carelessness, moving on is not so simple.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Affordable Supportive Living Initiatives

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Much has been said in this House over the last few weeks about continuing care options for seniors in our province. I am very proud to stand here and say that providing assistance to low-income seniors and persons with disabilities is, in fact, a major priority for this government. Evidence of this priority is reflected with the Seniors and Community Supports ministry leading the initiative to improve the choice and availability of continuing care accommodations in this province. This initiative is a priority through Alberta's continuing care strategy, now in full implementation, by increasing the supply of spaces and choice in the continuing care system.

This commitment continues, Mr. Speaker. For the 2010-11 fiscal year this government has budgeted $50 million for the affordable supportive living initiative, or ASLI, to help develop 500 more affordable supportive living long-term care and, I should add, group home spaces in Alberta. Since 1999 and including the funding in this year's budget, approximately $465 million in provincial capital funding has gone toward helping to build and modernize 9,000 affordable continuing care spaces across this province. This level of funding speaks volumes about our government's commitment to assisting vulnerable Albertans.

To help build spaces for these Albertans, the Alberta capital bonds were recently placed for sale. This innovative approach provides us with the opportunity to invest in the future of our province and at the same time help to address the changing accommodation needs of seniors and persons with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few important facts regarding ASLI funding that I think are worth mentioning and reminding members about. First of all, funding for these projects contains operator agreements that require a 22-year plan to ensure the project can continue to operate as an affordable supportive living facility. The accommodation rates charged in these facilities are capped at the maximum residential long-term rate.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Bill 204

Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010. That's Bill 204.

This bill would limit year-over-year increases in government spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth or the average spending of Canada's remaining nine provinces, whichever number is higher. This bill is, I believe, a critical step in reducing our province's $7.5 billion deficit and preserving the Alberta advantage for future generations.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 6 of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly and by doing so make public the interim report of the 2009-2010 Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries, and Names for Alberta. Each member will receive a copy of the report as soon as I table this.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PDD Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today in the House we have roughly a hundred guests whose quality of life has been negatively affected because of government changes to the persons with developmental disabilities program. They have sent me the following basic questions they want asked to the Premier. To the Premier: what did the province do with the $1,403.60 raised at a bottle drive in January and delivered here on February 10?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to supporting adults with developmental disabilities, and we're also committed to ensuring that the program that we have in place is sustainable for years to come to support all Albertans with developmental disabilities. The PDD program continues to be well funded. I believe it's in the area of about $600 million.

Any of the other details with respect to the program the minister responsible can answer.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the Premier. According to the Seniors and Community Supports business plan and budget for 2010 the total estimate for direct operations for PDD, their community boards, is $15.8 million. How many individuals would this support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PDD program is very important to this government and to all MLAs in this Assembly. I know that first-hand because I've heard from many of them. I'm committed to this program, and I can tell you that with the direct program we have for our people with developmental disabilities, in Michener I know we have approximately 270 people that are served in that program.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we're looking for some evidence that this money is being spent on the delivery of care to persons with developmental disabilities. What does the $119 million under supports to delivery system pay? What does it pay for, and why is there such a large difference in how this is allocated across the six PDD regions?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD program that we have here in Alberta is one of the very best in Canada. This program and our budget show our commitment to people with developmental disabilities. The goal of the program is to help our people with developmental disabilities to live the most independent and the best life that they can live. I'd like to quote my friends from the Camrose Association for Community Living where they say: our purpose is to help our friends with developmental disabilities live their best life.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today will also be to the Premier and given to me by the people that are visiting in our gallery. To the Premier. Typically board members are volunteers, certainly in the nonprofit organizations, that provide most of the supports to individuals funded by PDD. Why does it cost $915,000 for board governance for PDD?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, once again speaking about the PDD program being one of the very best in Canada, we have six regional boards, and the purpose of the boards is to be able to contract and develop programs within the different regions. Things are different in northern Alberta, obviously, than they are in southern Alberta. They are a very important part of the delivery of our program and making contracts with our service agencies so that we are able to give the best possible programs and services to people with developmental disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Madam Minister. I think we understand the difference between what they do, the care that they deliver, but I think the question was: what is the discrepancy between being able to run boards with volunteers and actually having to pay $915,000 for board governance?

My next question would be: with the estimates and target budget of 2010-11 and 2011-12 being the same as the 2009-10 forecast of $597 million . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I would like to say is that because this program is so important to this government, we want to make sure that the program is very consistent throughout the province. We want to make sure that there's clarity in the program. We want to make sure that there's efficiency and effectiveness, especially effectiveness, to the services that we provide. The most important things besides all of those is that this program is sustainable now and into the future. So we have a plan in place. It's our six-priority action plan, which we have travelled across the province and talked to people about to make this an even better program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the budget debate the minister of seniors stated that they were projecting PDD clients to increase from 50 to 100 people in the coming year. How does the minister expect to deal with the AUPE increases, annualized cost for individuals who have come into the service and that the budget is still being held at the '09-10 rate?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the member across is absolutely correct when she says that our budget remains level. I think that's a wonderful accomplishment considering what's happening in these times. We are always looking for efficiencies in our program so that we can support our people with developmental disabilities, so we will be looking for those efficiencies, and any savings that we find within my ministry will go directly to the front line for people with disabilities.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An interesting report came out today from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy, comparing Alberta, B.C., Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and the state of Texas. The report states that Alberta is the least competitive of those jurisdictions for oil and gas investment. This is extremely concerning. To the Premier: what are the Premier's thoughts about the conclusions this report presents?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it clearly follows what the government has in place. We have the Competitiveness Act before this House that's being debated. We want to ensure that we're the best place to do business in the North American continent. There have been substantial changes in not only price but in the availability of gas in shale, and that's changed the situation considerably. So we're waiting for the competitiveness review to be done and also completion of the act so that we can undertake putting the competitiveness review in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked the Minister of Energy about upcoming royalty changes, he stated, "The framework itself is in place and will stay in place." Does the Premier now think that more needs to be done than the tweaks to the payouts that the minister is considering?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will have the most competitive and innovative economy in North America. I just ask him to wait and listen for the completion and the presentation of the report, which will be here soon.

Mr. Taylor: You're not asking me to wait; you're asking 78,000 unemployed Albertans to wait.

We're hearing these days of record land sales in the province because of the interest in the Duvernay shale gas play, and you might almost be able to kid yourself into thinking that happy days are here again if it weren't for those 78,000 unemployed and were it not for this School of Public Policy report. To the Premier: is the province still committed to its own competitiveness review?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes, we are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A recently released health and safety report blames distracted driving for the death of an Edmonton teenager last summer. Distracted driving kills, and this government's refusal to introduce legislation to stop it amounts to negligence. The Transportation minister makes excuses about enforcement while drivers glued to cellphones continue plowing through stop signs. Why has this Minister of Transportation failed to implement the recommendations of a standing committee of this Legislature and draft legislation to stop drivers from talking and texting while driving?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is speaking about was a very, very tragic incident. This issue is a little more complex than what the member is talking about. We do have legislation in this province that deals with distracted driving. It's a very severe penalty of $402, I think, for the fine and six demerits, and because it's so severe, it doesn't get handled a lot. Let me tell you . . .

2:00

The Speaker: No. I'm sorry. We may get it next time.
The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. That's just smoke.

Every day that this government stalls, innocent Albertans risk becoming the latest victim of a distracted driver. In 2008 the RCMP reported that more than 300 people were killed in areas that they patrol and nearly 2,000 injured by distracted drivers. Pedestrians and motorists are dying on this minister's watch, and he is refusing to take action to stop it. When will this minister take action and ban the use of cellphones and texting while driving?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working hard at that every day. One thing that we want to make sure of is that we still push education on this system. The big thing is public safety here. We want to make sure that we keep people's eyes on the road and their hands on the wheel. Let me tell you that we can't just pick one-offs and do like everyone else, just pick cellphones as a distraction. There's a large number of distractions, and we're trying to put them all together and give the police another tool to keep our highways safe.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's been almost two years since a standing committee of this Legislature dealt with this issue, and the minister is still stalling. Every other province except one recognizes that drivers on cellphones can kill people and has done something about it. By failing to act, the minister is leaving responsible motorists and pedestrians at the mercy of those who text and talk behind the wheel. Why is he failing to protect Albertans by refusing to introduce cellphone legislation to protect the people of this province?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we are working on that legislation. We're working on the big picture of the legislation because we want to make sure we get it right. We want to make sure that it's practical, enforceable, and effective. In order to do that, we have to get it right. We will get it right, and we will bring it forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Services in Grande Prairie Area

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents from the Grande Prairie region are concerned about the current condition of and access to hospitals in our area. We currently have one of the oldest hospital facilities in the province at Beaverlodge and desperately need a regional hospital in Grande Prairie. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness tell us the status of the study his department is conducting on what a regional hospital facility should be and what a rural hospital facility should be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of Alberta's service optimization review of capital projects was to in fact ensure that we were providing the right services in the communities aforementioned and/or to identify any gaps in those services, similarly, in the locations mentioned. The general rule of thumb when talking about regional hospitals is that they're designed to provide a very broad spectrum of services and to function as a go-to place for a much broader population base, whereas rural hospitals are smaller and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. When can the residents of Grande Prairie and area expect a new regional hospital to be built?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, a lot of input has been provided to the review of that issue both from a community perspective and from Alberta Health Services perspective in terms of what they are looking to deliver there. Our three-year capital plan will be released at the end of March, around March 31, I hope, and at that time we'll have the announcements for the places that we're proceeding with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question to the same minister: what other actions is the minister taking to make sure that residents of Grande Prairie have timely access to the medical services they need?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the actions that I'm personally taking is that I'm travelling up there in about two or three weeks, I believe, and I would invite the hon. member who has asked the question to join me. I'll be visiting the QE II hospital there. I should also mention that one of the things we're doing right now is working with that community to support a capital project plan with respect to the emergency department and the endoscopy department. Those are some positive things, and they'll be completed next year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Grande Prairie Bone and Joint Clinic

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's an important day for health care in Grande Prairie. The bone and joint clinic at the QE II hospital in Grande Prairie reduced waiting times and human suffering by accelerating hip and knee surgery, yet despite the surge in orthopaedic funding announced last week, this clinic in Grande Prairie is being disbanded this week. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: who made the decision to phase out this program, and why?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the funding being phased out or ended per se. What I do know is that the current arrangement expires I think at the end of this fiscal year, but that issue is up to Alberta Health Services to review. As people here know, I'm meeting with them later tonight. Hon. member, I'd be pleased to address that question with Alberta Health Services later this evening.

Dr. Taft: Well, please do so because my information, which is very firm, is that they basically took their last patient on Monday.

Again to the same minister: what steps will be taken to ensure that the people of the Peace Country have similar access to orthopaedic surgery as the people of Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think we should make it clear that the clinic being talked about didn't actually, to my knowledge at least, perform surgeries at the site. They did more of the co-ordination of ensuring that the services got provided somewhere in the region around there. So if there's an issue here with respect to services for Peace River or other locations you've mentioned, then that, too, can come under the discussion this evening, and I'll make sure it does.

Dr. Taft: It was a co-ordinating service that, as I said, accelerated wait times and helped reduce people's suffering, and it should be continued.

Again to the same minister. Alberta Health Services has a hip and knee steering committee, which had a role – and I know this in writing – in deciding to fund this clinic last June. Who are the members of the Alberta Health Services hip and knee steering committee, what's their mandate, and exactly who are they accountable to?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll get the names that the member seeks; I don't have them with me, obviously. I know that about six years ago when we created this hip and knee steering committee as a subgroup of a larger management committee, its purpose really was to look at reducing wait times and managing the times better. I think they did a good job, hon. member. I'm curious to know about the funding issue that you mentioned, so I will find out about that and get back to you with the answers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Grasshopper Control

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dry conditions last fall provided excellent conditions for grasshoppers to lay their eggs, and counts of grasshoppers last summer indicated a strong possibility of an extreme problem for farmers this year if dry conditions persist this spring. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. What's the minister doing in preparation for such an occurrence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are keeping track of the conditions and where the conditions are the most severe with respect to the possibility of an infestation of grasshoppers. It does show a number of spots in our province that could have an infestation from moderate to severe. I'm particularly concerned with some areas southwest of Edmonton and in the Grande Prairie area and some areas in northern Alberta, but we are monitoring it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there adequate resources in the minister's budget to provide the necessary assistance to farmers similar to what happened in the last outbreak?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is always access to disaster funding should the outbreak be severe and be something beyond what our programs normally offer. I think it's worth noting that there are risk management tools and insurance programs in place that are heavily supported by government for instances of grasshopper infestations and other areas. I would hope that producers are looking at that risk.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. In previous years farmers have encountered shortages of the chemical to control grasshopper infestations. Can the minister assure farmers that there will be adequate supplies of product should such an event occur this year?

Mr. Hayden: Well, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the chemical is a private industry, but they're reading the same reports that government is and are looking at the same information. My expectation is that because it's the private sector, the chemical industry will be gearing up their supplies for the possibility of this infestation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

2:10 Support for Children with Disabilities

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nature of care that not only protects but nurtures children with disabilities in Alberta is of the utmost importance in ensuring that they experience the best quality of life possible. It is therefore essential that there be appropriate placements and ongoing evaluation of the care that is provided for vulnerable disabled children. To the minister: given the highly specific individual needs of disabled children, can the minister briefly introduce and follow up in writing what quality and quantity of training specific to physical or mental disabilities is required for Children and Youth Services staff above and beyond the limited staff members in the family support for children with disabilities program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that the family support for children with disabilities program is highly valued by our families. We did have a survey, and 86 per cent of families said that they value this program and recognize the good support and services that we do offer because it's customized to the needs of the child. I know this member does care about this area. I've seen you at many organizations out in the community, hon. member. What you've requested in writing – I think it would be the multidisciplinary teams that you're looking at for the specialized services – I can provide.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the follow-up, Madam Minister.

Is the minister absolutely certain that all Children and Youth Services staff are adequately trained and have the necessary understanding and experience to provide the proper placements and supports to Alberta's vulnerable disabled children?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely certain. I go back to what I said earlier about the families, to what we hear back from the families. I've been told that this is a leading program across Canada, and that's because of the good specialized support services that we offer to families. This is a $120 million area of the budget. We've added another $5 million in this coming budget to the programs, and it's with that support. As I said, hon. member, I will provide the information you are seeking.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What type of follow-up does the ministry conduct to ensure the well-being of disabled children after they have been placed in either foster care or kinship care? How frequently does the support evaluation occur to ensure that the placement and care continue to be appropriate?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, with the foster care program there was a review that was done two years ago. That review did show that there needed to be more extensive assessment with families, and that would include families with children with disabilities. That assessment is, of course, face-to-face interviews. Those have increased on a monthly basis as well as on a quarterly basis. I can get back to you as well about the orientation, the home training, and the follow-up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Athabasca River Water Management

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since an important portion of the oil sands is in my constituency, my constituents take great interest in the management of this important resource. The Cumulative Environmental Management Association recently released recommendations to better manage the lower Athabasca River. One area of contention is the amount of water used by industry during periods of extreme low flow. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What action is the government taking to move forward on the association's recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this report is one that was conducted at the request of our department, so we're pleased to have it. It's to be used in the implementation of phase 2 of our in-stream flow needs regime on the Athabasca River. I'm pleased to note that this is a multistakeholder process, and we've come a long way towards having a consensus report and consensus recommendation. I can assure the member that along with Fisheries and Oceans we'll be acting on the recommendations in the report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. I understand that the current water allocation to oil sands operations on the Athabasca River is only 2 per cent of the average annual river flow. The actual industry withdrawal is even less, about 1 per cent of the average flow. Furthermore, this minister has often expressed great confidence and assurance regarding the effectiveness of the existing water management framework for the Athabasca River. With all this in mind, why is an updated framework even necessary?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the ultimate goal in all of this is to maintain a high degree of protection on the Athabasca River. We consistently review our policies, and we really strive for continuous improvement. Clearly, we're not intending to get rid of what already works. Things are reasonably good. This framework is designed to deal with the longer term approach and, as I said in my response to the original question, to ensure that we protect the health of the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. The minister constantly notes that there have been 40 years of water quality monitoring in the oil sands region, but activities in the region have increased significantly in recent years. What type of monitoring is the government actually doing right now?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the Athabasca River and its tributaries have continuous monitoring at 11 sites in the region. We also audit the monitoring of the data that is collected by the operators operating within the region, and we have participating in the regional aquatics monitoring program more than a hundred water quality stations throughout the region. So as I have pointed out, there is a significant amount of ongoing monitoring of this river.

Electoral Reform

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the recent changes to the mission and vision of Elections Alberta highlight the inadequacies of the current approach to democratic renewal in Alberta. While the former Chief Electoral Officer engaged and encouraged the voting public, his replacement seems to have a less ambitious agenda. Why won't the minister admit what Albertans already know? Real democratic reform to Alberta's electoral system is not on the government agenda.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's legislation coming before this House very shortly that's going to deal with a number of great recommendations that were made by both the current Chief Electoral Officer and the former Chief Electoral Officer. I would say that the future of democracy in Alberta is certainly well and good in place, and he shouldn't be predicting anything else.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Stakeholder groups have spoken to me about what they perceive to be a wilful blindness to solve the problems that have been identified to the government many years ago. An example of this is providing university students with the ability to choose their ordinary residence for the purpose of voting. Why does this government refuse to act when these Albertans are asking for these types of changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We think that's an issue of a great deal of importance, as did the former Chief Electoral Officer. We've carefully reviewed the legislation, and I believe students do have that right at the moment.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of this Assembly, but it baffles me why this Legislature would hire an individual who does not want to actually promote individuals voting in elections. What bothers me more is the fact that this minister appears to be satisfied with a 41 per cent voter participation rate in Alberta. To that end, how many of the former electoral reforms will the Justice minister be bringing forward out of the 180 recommendations?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the legislation will be before this House shortly, and the hon. member will be able to see that for himself. I'm not going to debate that ahead of time. Mr. Speaker, the other thing that I think is very important to discuss here is this constant association between the voter turnout and whether or not democracy is in peril. In this very House one hon. member from this member's caucus speculated on 10 or 15 reasons why people may or may not have voted in the last election, and none of them had to do with democracy.

Legislated Spending Controls

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a bill that legislates a cap on government spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth. Several Alberta Chambers of Commerce chapters, the Taxpayers Federation, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Fraser Institute, and multiple financial policy experts have repeatedly recommended this type of legislation as a critical cornerstone of a responsible fiscal plan for this province as we move forward. To the minister of finance: does he support this type of legislation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I believe there's a private member's bill coming before the House on this subject. The principle, of course, I support it, and so does everybody here. But as we've had many discussions, putting that into an actual statutory requirement causes certain issues. If you look at what's happening in most of the U.S. states that have those types of rules right now, you're seeing massive cuts to education, law enforcement, health care. There needs to be some flexibility there that that statute law . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks. Actually, in those other jurisdictions it's the no-debt rule that's hurting them, not the spending cap rule. That's something that should be looked into.

Just prior to the Premier's leadership review last November he promised Albertans and PC Party members uneasy with his leadership that he would limit spending increases to inflation plus population growth. The Premier broke this promise a mere 90 days later with Budget 2010. Talk is cheap on this issue. It has to be legislated. If it's not, it won't happen. To the same minister: will he do the right thing for ourselves and for our kids and enshrine this important principle in legislation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I might remind the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere that this issue came before the party in Red Deer last November and was actually defeated. We usually listen a little bit to what our party congress says. Again, we're going to debate this issue next week, and we look forward to a full discussion.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I've heard this minister prior to his most recent appointment talk over and over again publicly, and eloquently I might add, about how off track our province's finances have wandered and the need for this exact type of legislated fiscal restraint. To the minister: now that he is in a position to make a real permanent difference on this issue, will he step up and champion this piece of legislation into law?

Dr. Morton: I can only assume, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere must be very pleased that I'm now the minister of finance for the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Employment Standards Information Program

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the government launched an employment standards campaign, and I believe it's called Tell Your Boss Where to Go. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mr. Minister, with an ominous title like this could you please clarify what the campaign is all about and, as such, how you can justify spending this kind of money during these times of very scarce resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tell Your Boss Where to Go campaign is simply about educating our young workforce about the rights and obligations that they have relevant to safety and labour standards. Indeed, it's a costly venture to educate, but we have cut the spending from $700,000 to $350,000 for this campaign. In the long run it saves Albertans money, it saves lost time, it saves injury times, and it's important that young people are informed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: I guess I would say thanks that you managed to cut this program in half from $700,000 to $350,000, but just the same wouldn't it make more sense to use this $350,000 to hire more employment standards officers to enforce the code?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, for $350,000 we probably would be able to hire about four compliance officers for one year. The benefit of education is long term. If properly educated, young people will prevent themselves from being injured, prevent their colleagues from being injured, so I think that it's a much more long-term positive effect that we will have. It's very important that they know their rights and exercise their rights.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: in keeping with the campaign theme, I'm just wondering if the minister might share what is the most effective way and whether he has ever told his boss where to go to find this information.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the hon. member is referring to my wife or the Premier, but I have to tell you that I haven't had the need to tell either one where to go. Both of them treat me, although differently, rather well. I would encourage all Alberta workers to tell their bosses where to go to get information on labour standards. There's a very easy way to find out. If you want to go on our website, go to hirestandards.alberta.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Energy Efficiency

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Window rebates, the inclusion of rental properties in rebate initiatives, and support for walking and cycling infrastructure are all smaller but significant initiatives to help reduce emissions. Further areas for the government to pursue are greener building codes and legislation to support the construction and demolition waste reduction program. To the Minister of Environment. Construction waste makes up 25 per cent of our total waste in Alberta, but only 10 per cent is recycled. When will the minister introduce construction and demolition waste reduction legislation? It's ready to go. It was supposed to come in the fall. Will we see it this spring?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we're currently engaged in conversations with the Alberta Construction Association and others associated with this initiative. We have a memorandum of understanding in place. I can advise the member that that dialogue is ongoing, and I am hopeful that we will be able to move forward as soon as possible.

Ms Blakeman: That was a nonanswer.

To the same minister: since 96 per cent of Albertans feel that conservation and energy efficiency in our homes is important and 86 per cent of Albertans are willing to pay more for this feature when purchasing a new home, when will the minister increase the energy efficiency requirements for new homes in the provincial building codes? That's directed to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I wasn't paying attention to the question.

Ms Blakeman: Well, that's typical but unfortunate.

Back to the Minister of Environment. Since there is a high degree of support for legislated energy efficiency targets and the government's own 2008 climate change strategy promised it would develop an energy efficiency act, when will the minister introduce energy efficiency legislation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of energy efficiency is one that's critical if we're going to be able to accomplish the much-needed commitment that we have to CO₂ reduction in our overall climate change strategy. That being said, the legislation that's already in place, the climate change and emissions management legislation, has significant amount of authority under our regulation-making powers, and we anticipate that we'll probably have a two-step approach. We'll be moving forward under existing legislation and then introducing new . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Market Modified Tuition Fees

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard concern from constituents, students, and educators that the proposed market modified based tuition fee increase to professional faculties would negatively impact accessibility for students with limited financial means, rural students, and students with disabilities. As well, students who intend to pursue a career inside the academic research arena definitely would not make as much money as those who practise. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What mechanism do you have in place to ensure equitable access for these students in the face of tuition increases?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to clarify that the market modifier question is really about some of the postsecondary institutions in the province feeling that in a few programs tuition may have been capped too low in 2004, and they requested that opportunity to make the case to me. We've said yes, that we would be open to them making the case, but it's a one-shot deal.

To address the question with regard to equitable access, that is certainly a priority of this government and this Premier. We've made significant changes over the last several years to our financial assistance program to assist our students. We increased the spousal earnings exemption.

Ms Woo-Paw: With the debt remuneration program removed and students having to rely more on loans, would the minister consider providing students impacted by this increase a longer period to pay off the loan, a longer interest-free period, or waiving a portion of their loan when they graduate, stay, and work within the province for a set period of time?

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made to increase tuition for any professional programs above the CPI cap. If and when that decision is made, we're going to ensure that it's fair and it's equitable to all students. I'd also like to clarify that we've not removed our debt relief program. We still ensure the debt above set threshold is forgiven for qualified graduates to help them ensure that they have manageable debt loads, which is something – again, the affordability framework in this province I would match up against any province in Canada. We're improving our repayment assistance plan to provide more flexibility to grad students.

Ms Woo-Paw: Again to the same minister: when will you be making your decision on the proposed tuition increases so students can plan accordingly?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to discussing the estimates in the House for our department because of the great things that we have done in terms of student finance, increasing the living allowances, increasing the lifetime loan maximums, but also we don't take the issue lightly as it relates to the market modifiers. We want to make sure that the decisions have the appropriate level of due diligence, that the institutions have the appropriate time to prepare their proposals, that we have the appropriate time to assess those proposals and make sure that they're covering off what we said we wanted to cover off, and then we'll make those decisions. It is one of the top priorities of the department right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:30 Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary is now the fourth-largest city and its airport is the third busiest in the country. The airport is expanding, and we need to provide for growth around it. The deadline for commitments from the federal and provincial governments for the Calgary International Airport tunnel is approaching, and after March 1 without those commitments the deal is dead. To the Minister of Transportation: why are you killing any chance of Calgary having this necessary airport tunnel by not providing any support, sir?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely wrong again today. We supply all kinds of support to the city of Calgary. This is a municipal, local road, and the municipal district of the city of Calgary should be making their priorities on what they do with the money we give them on what roads they plan to build.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary already committed $50 million, and the airport authority committed $40 million. This issue is a provincial one, not just one for the city of Calgary. This government should be looking at the issue from this perspective, not running away from it. To the minister again: why isn't the government treating this vital tunnel as an issue of provincial importance?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member knows that every single issue in the province is an issue for this government, but there are ways of handling the issues. I can't run out and try and find money on a tree somewhere to start supporting areas that are not my responsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as it would improve Alberta's competitiveness for the federal government to open up the Calgary airport to more flights from overseas, so too would it improve Alberta's competitiveness to have an airport that is fully accessible to the whole city of Calgary and the whole of Alberta. Why is the minister unable to see the competitiveness incentive behind this?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I also have to tell the hon. member that he's into another area that's not my jurisdiction. Other airlines' open skies agreements are the full purview of the federal government. They regulate who is allowed to fly into this country, province, wherever you want to call it. I've written letters to that minister agreeing that Alberta would love to have open skies and bring more people and allow other airlines to fly into Calgary and to fly into Edmonton so that we have more competitive rates for all of our constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Swan Hills Treatment Centre is an important facility in Alberta and has certainly served the province very well in removing thousands, maybe millions of tonnes of PCBs from the environment. However, unfortunately, it is now losing money. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Is he concerned about this operating loss, and what are his plans to rectify it?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I need to say that when the government took over the Swan Hills treatment plant, the goal was to provide a public service. The facility has done an excellent job to rid this province of PCBs and dioxins, and the primary goal is to operate a service that provides and is aimed to be efficient. There is no doubt that there is a $23 million annual net cost.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't hear him really enunciate what his plans were to rectify the situation.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, every five years we do an assessment of that plant, and there has been a review of the facility. We are presently as a government reviewing the recommendations.

If I can add that the federal regulations call for the elimination of PCBs in Canada by 2015, and that will have a major play on the revenue of that plant . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The treatment centre processes waste other than PCBs. You mentioned the year 2015. What will happen to that waste if the plant was to close in 2015?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not just looking at the cost efficiency. We are looking at where hazardous waste can be disposed of. Presently we have 57 facilities in this province that can dispose of different forms of hazardous waste. In addition, there are many out-of-province alternatives. As I said before, the PCBs are to be eliminated – well, I hope by the federal government – by 2015, so there are facilities out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Caribou Habitat Protection

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has bad forest management policies, and threatened and endangered species are paying the price. With less than 3,000 woodland caribou left in Alberta, they are a species at risk, and it is because their natural habitat has been decimated. For years the government has been warned about this. Why won't the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development look at the first word in his ministry's name and start protecting the habitat for caribou?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we have been protecting caribou habitat in the province of Alberta at least for 30 or 35 years. It's been very well recognized. The work that we're doing currently in the province of Alberta: again, well recognized. The caribou recovery plan and movements forward with things like the lower Athabasca regional plan all contain major pieces of work that have to do with habitat protection for caribou. We're very well aware of this, very well aware that Albertans and other Canadians . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] Thank you. The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, instead of protecting natural habitat, the government is faulting wolves. They poison them, and now they're shooting them from helicopters. In 2008 seventy-two wolves were killed, 160 more last year, and 35 so far this year. This government's plan to protect caribou must be bulk buying of bullets. Will the Minister of SRD tell this House how many more wolves will be shot from helicopters before he finally protects enough of the boreal forest to give caribou a future?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are times when the balance between predator and prey gets out of shape, and in certain areas in the province of Alberta that's what we have happening now. There are a number of reasons that the wolf population in this short term needs to be controlled. The control measures that we have put in place have helped the Little Smoky caribou herd be very successful over the last two or three years. They can't have it both ways. We need to do some control.

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the last general status of Alberta wild species report says that wolves are a problem because of human activity. This report didn't say that wolves should be shot because human activity is a priority. It said that maintenance of old growth forest is critical, but this government has ignored their own recommendation for five years. Why does the minister continue to ignore recommendations critical to the survival of woodland caribou?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, what I have to say is that the wolves that I'm talking to that live at my place aren't telling me that it's me that's bothering them or creating a situation where they have become more populous. The truth of the matter is that alternate sources of food, like more deer, more elk, more rabbits, more mice, more whatever, have created a situation where populations of wolves are increasing at exponential levels in some places. Some control is necessary, and we do that to protect the caribou.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Crime and Safe Communities Recommendations

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the government received the recommendations of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, that I had the privilege of chairing. At the press conference the Premier said that he would implement all of the recommendations that were released in this report. Sadly, that isn't happening. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why has your department not changed FOIP legislation so that law enforcement communities, school and health agencies could share information without the risk of being sued?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to FOIP legislation and that particular matter, that is something I'm prepared to check into and get back to the hon. member on.

Mrs. Forsyth: The safe communities report also recommended that a tracking system be established and reported on key indicators such as delays in court proceedings, the number and percentage of cases where bail is provided, the number of bail violations, and the percentage of cases in which the maximum penalty is provided. Why has the Justice minister not produced legislation on requiring annual reports on this?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we run a court system quite effectively. We've introduced in the last two years as a result of the report some very significant initiatives and projects such as the court case management project. We don't need legislation; we do it as a matter of course.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to read the report again. It was accepted by the Premier.

The issue of crime prevention is an important one, but the best crime prevention strategy is to stop crime before it takes place. To help prevent families from being overwhelmed and at risk, the task force recommended that a family source be established within the provincial government to provide information, resources, and community connections. When will the Justice minister identify that central resource, and when will it be in place, as the Premier has promised Albertans?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member has mentioned, there were 31 recommendations in that report. We've taken that very seriously. As a government we've committed half a billion dollars to do more than implement 31 recommendations, to change the way that government works, and to make sure that we honour that report. We take it very seriously.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we had the opportunity to recognize 18 different members. There were 108 questions and answers: 12 came from the opposition parties, six from the government.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: Are there additional tablings for today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Jan Buterman. They are commenting on their concern with the city centre inner-city school closure recommendations, particularly noting the Edmonton school board comments on being overburdened with 30,000 excess student spaces yet without explanation of the provincially mandated funding practices, and wonder how many people are aware of the demands placed upon school boards by the province when it comes to developing new facilities.

My second tabling is from David Phillips on the subject of needing a fair sales tax to pay for health care in which they note, "We need a fair sales tax to pay for health care."

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4

Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to move second reading of Bill 4, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010.

As I outlined when I introduced this bill several days ago, this is an important bill for industry. In essence, the act is just being refreshed, though, to ensure that Alberta's legislation is consistent with federal legislation. That federal legislation is the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, 1992, which was amended in June of 2009.

Components of this bill, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010, include giving Alberta the ability to require security plans for certain prescribed dangerous goods, requiring shippers to report lost and stolen shipments of dangerous goods, clarification of details for the manufacture and use of containers used in the transportation of dangerous goods, and introduction of an administrative penalty option that would enable Alberta Transportation and industry to deal with noncompliance issues outside the provincial court system.

This isn't adding regulation because, largely, the regulations already exist in federal legislation, but it does provide Alberta industry with protection by creating provincial jurisdiction over these issues so that it continues to be business as usual for industry here. Matching provincial legislation to federal legislation as much as possible also helps achieve some standard conditions for movement of dangerous goods within provinces and across Canada. The changes are mainly administrative in nature and minor, but it also helps protect our provincial jurisdiction over enforcing regulations.

I urge all members to support this important legislation, and I'd ask that we now adjourn debate. Thank you.

Bill 6

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Montrose I'd like to move second reading of Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, the vision for Municipal Affairs is to create strong, safe, and sustainable communities. This bill is part of our government's response to strengthen the emergency management system across the province. Search and rescue teams support our provincial emergency services. This bill will extend the good-faith liability protection currently provided to firefighters to search and rescue workers and their organizations.

There is growing concern over potential civil litigation, making it difficult for these organizations to recruit volunteers while incurring increased insurance and administrative costs. One search and rescue group in British Columbia suspended its service over concerns of legal liability. This is not only an Alberta issue, Mr. Speaker, but a national issue.

This bill will extend the good-faith liability protection currently provided to firefighters to search and rescue workers and their organizations while they're providing emergency rescue services under the act. By supporting search and rescue teams, we are demonstrating the government's commitment to providing safe and strong communities.

Another amendment, Mr. Speaker, will focus on the language of the act to change the current "gross negligence" standard for providing emergency services to one of "good faith." This matches the language found in the Municipal Government Act. Changing the legal standard from gross negligence to good faith would provide consistency and alignment with other legislation in Alberta that sets out a liability standard. This will also provide additional legal defences to the minister, local authorities, and their agents and help limit their exposure to lawsuits. An example is ham radio operators who perform a specialized function during an emergency on behalf of the ministry or a local authority.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, changes to the act will focus on regional emergency service delivery and will make it easy for communities to work together during an emergency. These amendments will allow for the establishment of regional service commissions, regional directors of emergency management, and other partnerships to deliver emergency management services. This will help municipalities provide a cross-jurisdictional response to a disaster, better serving their residents during a crisis. By centralizing services, the administrative, financial, and training burden placed on municipalities could be reduced.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this bill introduces changes that will help protect Alberta search and rescue teams from liability claims. Amendments will also strengthen the emergency management system by formalizing regional co-operation amongst communities. I urge members to support Bill 6, and I look forward to further discussions on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I request that we adjourn debate at this time on Bill 6, Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. President of the Treasury Board first.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As we deal in Committee of the Whole with appropriation, supplementary supply, it's important to identify the fact that the huge majority of the money in these supplementary estimates is being spent on health through the H1N1 and addressing the accumulated deficit of the health board ending in March of '09. It deals with the issue of forest fires, and quite candidly it forced us to move money from different areas to accommodate spending programs by the federal government. Outside of those numbers, the bulk of the increase was in Employment and Immigration, where it's very difficult to identify where the pressures on a social system will arise given the economic conditions that the government went through. In fact, when you take out the items that I've identified, it's actually less than one-half of 1 per cent of our total spending that was involved in it.

But a billion is a big number and deserves the attention of the Assembly, and I look forward to the discussion in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to approach this in a couple of different sections, and the first is to talk about the process, which the hon. President of the Treasury Board has referred to in his comments. There are a couple of observations that I'd like to make. I continue to be dismayed and perplexed, actually, about why we see such frequent requests for supplementary supply and the amount and the number of departments that are affected. I have a chart in front of me that staff were kind enough to make up, and it only goes back to '99-2000. Actually, since I've been here, the '96-97 fiscal year and on, there has been at least one and often two supplementary supply estimates every year.

I accept that there are some things that you need a supplementary supply budget for; for example, forest fires. We hope there are not any. They have to put some amount in the budget, and then you deal with what you get. Fair enough. I understand that, and I would expect to see that happening. But this has become common practice with this government, and it is far, far more than covering the costs of forest fires or this year the extraordinary costs of H1N1. You can certainly see a clear explanation for why that couldn't be anticipated down to the exact dollar.

I am more concerned with what I see as a planning and perhaps a management deficit in that this is now commonplace. We just expect it, at least one or two a year, and it's covering not one or two departments but nine, 10, 12, 14 departments. Often more than half of the departments that this government administers programs through come forward in a supplementary supply estimate, and at that I have to call question. We have nine departments in front of us this year, so I'll put that on the record.

You know, the government always gets up and says: "Oh, well, come on. Give us a break. There have been all kinds of things we couldn't anticipate." But I have to say that with the resources behind the government, with the time and care and expertise they're able to call upon to work out things like the projected price of a barrel of oil within, you know, a minutia of a cent or gas or the royalty rate, they clearly have a lot of expertise to pull upon for certain areas when they're interested in it. I just feel that they get sloppy in the rest of the areas and could be doing a better job overall on tightening up their original budgeting process.

The second thing I'm seeing in the budgeting process: again, I would call it a sloppiness except that it's worse than that because there's an intent behind it. I want to be careful to convey that I think this just isn't a matter of: well, whoops, didn't pay a lot of attention. I think this is deliberate. What I'm seeing in last year's budget and this year's budget – and we see the effect of last year's budget in the supplementary supply in front of us – is a lack of budgeting. When closely questioned on items that are in particular departments and just about any department but certainly the ones I witnessed, I would often hear back from ministers: well, we're working on that; well, we're developing a policy; yeah, well, we'll figure out a way to do that; well, you know, don't forget that we've got such and such a plan or a strategy coming.

In the world that I come from, which is the not-for-profit sector, a budget is clearly a plan on exactly how you're going to spend the money, where your revenue is going to come from, how your expenses are going to go out, and you've got to be pretty tight on that stuff. You can't say: "Yeah, I think I'm going to produce a show at the Citadel. It'll be a million bucks. It'll have some actors in it and be written by somebody, and yeah, there'll probably be costumes." You've got to know what you're doing. But that is what I'm seeing from the government, and I'm beginning to wonder if they actually are budgeting for particular programs.
