Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, look, the process is well understood by everybody that's involved in the process, and I believe that the hon. member opposite would understand it as well. The process works like this. When I receive the completed documentation from the regional advisory commission, we will then design a land-use plan, and the land-use plan will go out for consultation. At that point all of the public have an opportunity and all of the stakeholders have an opportunity to comment on the plan before it is finally developed for cabinet.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the regional advisory council report is the only opportunity for stakeholders to have input, will the minister or will he not release the report before it is watered down by cabinet and the land-use framework ultimately developed?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I seem to be having a bit of difficulty of getting the member to understand. There's a process in place. What does RAC mean? It means that it's a regional advisory committee. They are giving advice to the government. It's not a consultation process. As I explained, the consultation process will take place. Once the plan has been in its initial stage of development, it will go out for consultation at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Alberta Treasury Branches

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Taxpayers of Alberta guarantee Alberta Treasury Branch deposits of $23.8 billion. There's no room for mistake or mismanagement. To the minister of finance: why has the minister allowed ATB to mismanage the start-up of its new banking system to the point where it is now $140 million over budget and a year behind schedule?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've already spoken, to the public record, that I'm not pleased at all with that result, a cost overrun of that magnitude. I'm requesting a full report from ATB as to what happened and what's being done to prevent it from happening again.

I would point out to the hon. member that the Auditor General has noted that ATB is already taking steps to correct some of the problems they've experienced.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Speaking of the Auditor General, the office of the Auditor General has 14 outstanding recommendations for the Alberta

Treasury Branches, including one on risk management, one on senior management bonuses, one on internal audit programs, and one on internal control weaknesses. Why has the minister of finance failed to deal with these 14 outstanding recommendations?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we're dealing with all of them. We accept all of them. But I would remind the hon. member that we manage the relationship in terms of strategic direction for the Alberta Treasury Branches. I don't think he or anybody else in this House wants us to get back into the micromanaging of internal decisions of Crown corporations. We're not going there. We want operational independence for ATB.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well that the board of directors is appointed by this government. We have $23.8 billion in deposits that are guaranteed by the taxpayers. They have to be protected. Again, why has the minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor. I heard two questions there. Deal with the first one. We're moving on.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've met several times already with the chairman of the board. We've discussed these issues. We've accepted all of the Auditor General's recommendations. I'd remind the members opposite that the Auditor General—they're not playing get-you politics the way you guys are pretending. The Auditor General makes recommendations to improve systems. There's always room for improvement. We accepted the recommendations, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Water Supply and Snowpack

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the below-normal snowpack feeding Alberta's river basins this spring, many Albertans, and particularly farmers and ranchers, are concerned about the soil moisture conditions. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. While recent precipitation in southern and eastern parts of the province has improved the immediate soil moisture conditions, I'm interested to know where we're at with the snowpack forecasts and what we can expect in terms of runoff for river basin water supplies, particularly in southern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure it comes as no surprise to you that our water supply and snowpack are generally below average throughout the province this year, particularly well below average in the snowpack feeding the Oldman and Bow River systems. I do want to remind you and all members that precipitation recently experienced in southern Alberta and, historically, over the next couple of months will really determine whether we have a situation that will become very, very troublesome or not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Taking advantage of water storage opportunities is particularly important in times of water shortage. To the same minister: what measures are in place to ensure Albertans' water needs are met for agriculture, industry, and people needs?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we do have a series of provincially run reservoirs that help to store water. These reservoirs are at close to normal levels for this time of year, and tools are in place to increase the level if it's necessary. During dry periods these can be strategically used to divert or release water to maintain flows for human, aquatic, ecosystem, and agricultural needs. I think it's important to note that the water levels as we see them this year are far better than they were in the drought of 2001, so we do have plenty of opportunity to manage beyond now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. What programs are in place to help agriculture producers deal with impacts of water shortage, should they occur, and are these also available to producers operating on public lands?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of programs available, but I think that an important point the Minister of Environment pointed out also holds true for our irrigation canal systems and our storage areas. We don't anticipate any problem this year with respect to that. Our levels are high. We do have Growing Forward water management specialists that will work with producers with respect to their water needs for their livestock, and there are a number of risk management programs that are in place. We are also waiting for a response from the federal government at this point for coverage on the AgriRecovery program.

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I've just obtained new information with regard to the bonus system at Alberta Health Services. It turns out that 500 Alberta Health Services managers are eligible for what they euphemistically call pay at risk. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: how many millions of dollars are Alberta taxpayers at risk for if all 500 bonuses are paid?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very torqued and distorted question. The fact is that under the new system we have standardized contracts, and in actual fact the people at that higher income level don't even get the full range of pay that they're eligible for unless they perform the specific benchmarks and meet the measurements that have been set for them.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that most people understand that as doing your job.

Given that pay at risk translates into automatic bonuses unless you mess up, and given how many mess-ups there have been in Alberta Health Services, can the minister tell Albertans if any managers at all have not received their bonus for the past fiscal year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I do not manage those managers, but what we'll find out from Alberta Health Services, who does manage them, is an answer to that question.

Dr. Taft: Well, given the minister manages all kinds of other decisions of Alberta Health Services, will the minister confirm that the new standardized severance package for Alberta Health Services managers who lose their jobs is 12 months' pay plus a 15 per cent bonus?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about the bonus part offhand. I'll have to look into that. But I can tell you that the amount of severance has been brought down significantly from what it once used to be. It is in fact capped at the max of 12 months, and people find that to be very competitive with other multibillion-dollar organizations across this country. It's what's necessary in the industry to attract and retain the very best people to manage this multibillion-dollar situation in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Wildfire Update

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend there was a surge of fire activity across this province, especially in my community of Whitecourt, where we saw a major fire break out. SRD staff did a great job attacking this fire by ground and by air. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. These fires are expensive. We're 20 days into the budget year. I understand you've burned up your whole budget.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what's happened here is, of course, we have two parts to the budget relative to wildfire containment. The $90 million in the first part of that budget is to put people out in place across Alberta to do exactly as the member has indicated: to get on those fires, control them early. That part of the budget has been spent. We are now into looking at additional money from the sustainability fund, as we do annually, to apply to Treasury to manage the rest of the fire season.

Mr. VanderBurg: Given the situation and how dry it is in parts of this province, are you able to make the proper rules and regulations for the thousands of weekend warriors that come on quads and motorbikes out into the forest areas? What are you going to do about them?

Mr. Knight: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, that, again, is an excellent question. It is a situation that we do try to control. What we're doing is go out with advertisements. You see them now. You see the FireSmart. You see the 310-FIRE signs around. What we're doing is asking Albertans to be very aware of what they're doing when they're out and about in Alberta forested areas and to be responsible with respect to any fires that they may have started.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. Previous ministers have embraced the FireSmart program and then got communities ready and willing to help out with the problem. What are you doing to promote the FireSmart program?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I'm doing is responding to the FireSmart people that came to my farm, in fact. It is an ongoing program, a very valid program. It is being funded through alternate sources this year. Nevertheless, it is a good program; we will continue it. Again, I must emphasize that we need the co-operation of all Albertans with respect to this issue. It's an important issue for us all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:40 Womanspace Resource Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 25 years the Womanspace Resource Centre in Lethbridge has helped destitute women. Provincial agencies, service providers, including my office, have referred clients to Womanspace for assistance in free ID clinics, interim rent, and, certainly, interim damage deposits, teaching financial literacy and management. The closure has triggered a shortfall of services to Lethbridge citizens. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: given that Alberta has not much more than a . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I know that our ministry has offices located in Lethbridge that are there specifically to help people out. We have offices there that will help people out with their AISH with their PDD and with the office of the public guardian. I know that we provide these services. I'm not quite sure what that question was, but I do want to assure people that if there is a gap because of the closing of an agency that has done wonderful work in Lethbridge, we are there to help and support the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. One of the points that I didn't get out was that Alberta doesn't have much more than a desk and a chair for the status of women.

My next question would be to the Minister of Service Alberta. Will the minister explain how her ministry plans to deal with the fallout of the closure of Womanspace Resource Centre since photo ID is issued through her ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this to the House's attention. While Service Alberta does not provide grants or funding to community organizations, one of the things that we are working very hard on with the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs is the whole issue of identification cards for homeless and transient Albertans. We also have a wealth of resources to assist individuals in the area of renting, so we're there to assist when we can.

The Speaker: Don't look surprised, hon. member. Thirty-five seconds, no preambles. Proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Oh. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how is your ministry prepared to fill in the gaps left by the closure of Womanspace as a helping partner for your parent link family violence prevention and family and community support services in southern Alberta?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, what a loss for your community, hon. member, and I know you're a strong advocate for women. The Womanspace Resource Centre in Lethbridge has been known, as you said, for 25 years to empower woman through the provision of workshops and forums providing information referrals and resources for women. What I will do as the minister responsible for woman's issues in our government is write to my federal counterpart on behalf of the agency to ask that they reinstate the funding that you're inquiring about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Medical School Spaces

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An inspirational young Albertan from Calgary-Lougheed is applying to the University of Calgary's medical school. He's very concerned that there may not be a space for him if the university goes ahead with proposed cuts. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. At a time when many Albertans are struggling to find a family doctor, are you allowing universities to cut critical spaces at provincial medical schools?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time I don't believe that any student should not continue forward with the application process that they have. It's premature for any institutions to be talking about those kinds of cuts because we're still working with the institutions on the exact amount of funding for their entire programs for this year.

Mr. Rodney: To the same minister. Some might suggest it's unavoidable that targets need to be set for new doctors. Can you assure Albertans that you, indeed, will meet them?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are on record saying that we will continue to strive to meet the targets that we've set. As an example, for doctors that was 295 new doctors graduating from our postsecondaries, and that's still the target we're setting.

Mr. Rodney: My final question to the same minister. I've heard from constituents that they're concerned about accountability, a possible double standard about whether or not you're not actually setting a similar target for nurses as well. What's the minister's answer to that?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we've worked very hard with Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness, and Employment and Immigration on the health workforce action plan. We're going to continue to do that and continue to work with all of the facilities and the departments. Again, our target for nurses was 2,000 graduating; our target for LPNs was a thousand. We're going to strive to meet those targets.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. In all 19 members were recognized, 114 questions and responses. Nine of these came from the Liberals, the Official Opposition, four from the independents, six from the government caucus per se.

In 30 seconds we will continue with the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from Alberta One-Call dated March 29, 2010, which I referred to in my debate on Motion 508 yesterday afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like table the appropriate amount of copies of a letter. I tried to do this yesterday; I had the wrong copy, unfortunately. This is from Larry Stowards. He was denied Blue Cross coverage because of some pre-existing conditions even though he had had that same Blue Cross coverage for many decades with the city of Calgary. A real tragic situation.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, during Oral Question Period on April 14, 2010, regarding the incident at Suncor Energy's Strathcona refinery on March 15, 2010.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Evening Sitzings

17. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the remainder of the 2010 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

[Government Motion 17 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, amendments offered with respect to this bill? We are on amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just as a reminder to anybody that's catching up with us here, amendment A2 was an amendment to remove the section that gave the powers to the Chief Electoral Officer to insert fictitious names into the voters lists that were supplied out to candidates. The issue that I had raised around that was that it made it very hard for small and volunteer-based campaigns that really made a concerted effort to locate people that were on voters lists. In constituencies like mine, where people frequently move within the constituency, we would continue to pursue trying to find someone and, unfortunately, could likely spend quite a bit of volunteer time in a 28-day campaign – so you can't exactly be leisurely about this stuff – trying to pursue someone that would turn out to be nonexistent. I had felt that that was a particular hardship placed on small campaigns.

The sponsoring member, the Minister of Justice, was kind enough to come in and speak to it in which she had pointed out that this was a fairly common practice, that it was being inserted particularly to try and deal with electronic distribution of voters lists as a way of being able to trace back on that electronic fingerprint or footprint, if you want to put it that way. It still doesn't help me. I still think there has got to be a better way of injecting that electronic fingerprint into the distribution of these lists over the Internet or by, you know, recording the list onto some other kind of electronic distribution method, like the little key fobs and things like that. I still think that something needs to be done to fix this problem, so I continue to support the amendment that is on the floor, although I appreciate the minister coming in to put her clarifications on the table. I think this is a very, very imperfect way of doing things.

We seem to be caught right now in between that kind of electronic world, Internet world, and the plain old volunteer-based foot traffic, hard copy version of things in our election campaigns. I'm just seeing that turn up everywhere. As I explained to somebody the other day, you know, when I first started, I used to produce one paper version of my annual report, which was then sent out in the mail. Thirteen years later I'm now producing one hard copy version, which is still sent out in the mail, but I also have a website, which has to be updated once or twice a week with new information, which is why I talk so much in this House. I also am now doing an e-zine, which goes out about once a month unless there is a really big issue, and then it goes out more often. I'm also doing Facebook postings and, well, Twitter for those that get involved with that.

What was a way of sending out information in one paper version has now extrapolated itself. Nothing ever gets dropped. It's not as though we can stop doing the paper version, so everything just gets added onto. Those two worlds don't seem to be reconcilable at this point. Because we cannot drop the paper version of it and the volunteer-based approach to campaigning, I'm continuing to lean on the government to find some other way to do this than inserting fictional names into our voters database.

There are some other issues that I would like to talk about, but they are not specific to this amendment, so I will resume my seat and turn this over to one of my colleagues.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to speak in favour of the amendment. I have listened intently to some of the members who have spoken on this as well as read their comments in Hansard. I, too, am of the belief that having fictitious names inserted into an electoral list leads to much more waste of time on behalf of individuals in campaigning and campaign teams and people who are hitting the phone banks when these processes are already difficult enough.

I represent a downtown riding in Calgary, and this riding is subject to much turnover. Between one election and another there can be upwards of 50 per cent turnover in the area. People are essentially younger, more mobile, and come there to either start their lives and/or finish playing out the string in my riding, so you do have a tremendous amount of movement. With that, any kind of deviation from a standard list, which is generally very incomplete and generally will be hit and miss at best, just adds insult to injury in the process.

I know that when we were using the electoral list in the campaign last election, really for our riding it was not very useful at the best of times. Coupling that with the addition of fictitious names, I believe, would just add to more of a nightmare. Further, if they're really looking to clamp down on electoral fraud, there are always other ways to do it other than slipping in fictitious names.

Anyways, Mr. Chair, thank you very much for the opportunity. Having spoken in favour of this amendment, I encourage all other members of this House to do the same.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A2.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Chair, I just briefly want to discuss it again. I understand the concerns of the Member for Edmonton-Centre, but I just want to say, once again, that in this information age protecting lists is critical. No other solutions were brought forward in order to protect the electoral list, and I feel that it is critical. I appreciate that this is going in, and I guess my comment is that, if anything, we should perhaps be raising the penalty or what's going to happen to individuals that are caught using these lists illegally. But I'm against the amendment, in favour of the bills that exist in that we need to be able to ensure the integrity of our lists in not being misused. I'm voting against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wish to speak?
We'll call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back speaking to Bill 7. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak on Bill 7 in Committee of the Whole. As representatives from our caucus have already outlined, there are a number of concerns with respect to this piece of legislation, most of which focus on what it doesn't do, the many problems that it fails to address, and the very small "c" conservative approach it takes to ensuring that we deal with the clear problems that we have in Alberta with respect to, among other things, voter participation. I'd like to perhaps start my discussion on this issue by introducing another amendment to this bill. I think what I'll do is just have it distributed first and then speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the amendment is delivered. Hon. members, this is amendment A3.

I'll ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to please begin.

Ms Notley: Thank you. This amendment is a motion I'm moving on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 4 in the proposed section 4 as follows: in subsection (2) by striking out "may" and substituting "shall" and then, further, in subsection (5) by striking out "a breakdown of results and a summary of costs" and substituting "a breakdown of results, a summary of costs and recommendations to improve future elections."

The reason that we are proposing this amendment is because we are attempting to convince this government to acknowledge and respect the recommendations made by the previous Chief Electoral Officer, who was suggesting that future CEOs provide information to the public about voting in an effort to address low voter turnout. The previous Chief Electoral Officer, the Chief Electoral Officer who was not reappointed by a majority vote of the Legislative Offices Committee, that was not unanimous, had recommended that someone should have the obligation to encourage people to vote. Unfortunately, when it brought forward this legislation, this government steadfastly refused to acknowledge or incorporate that recommendation.

What this amendment would do, of course, is that it would compel the Chief Electoral Officer to promote voter turnout and voter participation. It would also compel the Chief Electoral Officer to make recommendations after each election, by-election, plebiscite, senatorial vote to recommend improvements should they be necessary. The idea is that the Chief Electoral Officer is tasked by legislation with the objective of always trying to improve our system of democracy and always trying to enhance the level of participation in our system of democracy. I know that it's a revolutionary concept; nonetheless, it is one that many people who are kind of fond of democracy think would be a good idea and at this point remains absent from the proposed piece of legislation.

Why is this something that we need to focus on here in Alberta? Well, as has been mentioned numerous times in this Legislature but just can't be said enough, we had a voter turnout in the last election of roughly just under 40 per cent – 40 per cent of Albertans. That means 60 per cent of Albertans did not bother to cast their ballots. The vast majority of those who did not vote were young Albertans. Research shows that if you don't vote in your first one or two elections, the likelihood of you ever voting goes down, which means that the long-term prognosis for our province's democracy is that voter turnout will continue to go down unless significant action is taken to reverse that trend.

Now, just to be clear, let's look at what the average is across the country. The averages range from, you know, highs of 80 per cent in some jurisdictions, but the average across the country, even including the dismal results in this province, is slightly over 60 per cent. I think that people in this House should be very embarrassed and concerned about the fact that our voter turnout in this province is so low.

One of the reasons why this is a concern, of course, is that our recently appointed Chief Electoral Officer, one who was not appointed unanimously by those involved with the appointment process but one who was appointed by a majority of members that happened to correspond with the government caucus, has publicly stated that he does not believe it's his job to promote democracy or increase voter turnout, which, again, I find absolutely shocking. I find it shocking that the government would have appointed someone who believed that was his role. The head of elections doesn't think it's important to have more people involved in elections? That's sort of like saying that a CEO of a company doesn't think it's important to have more people buy their product, unless, of course, you're trying to undersell your product for some reason, which appears to be the case here.

Interestingly, when that Chief Electoral Officer stated that he didn't believe it was his obligation to increase voter turnout, he actually pointed to the oh so neutral and objective observations of one Preston Manning, who has also advocated that it ought not to be the role of the Chief Electoral Officer to encourage democracy.

Mr. Hehr: He also said that he wasn't going to take his pension.

Ms Notley: He may have also said that he wasn't going to take his pension. I'll believe it when I see it, frankly.

Anyway, the bigger concern that I have, really, is that all of that mirrors a movement that you see in the United States, which goes back to the early '90s under that brilliant political adviser Karl Rove, who, of course, was behind that guy who has since been collectively described as the worst president in the history of the United States. Their view of how you ran politics was to get as few people voting as possible, to reduce your voter turnout as much as possible so that your radical right-wing folks, who are really motivated, will come out to the polls. Then they have more sway and more ability . . .

An Hon. Member: They don't want that now.

Ms Notley: They may not want that now because, of course, we have a new home for the radical right-wing voters, I'm reminded by my colleagues not even across the way, just directly in front.

Nonetheless, the reality is that that's what the genesis is of that notion, that what you do is you don't get moderate or progressive people to be interested in the political process. You keep them away as much as you possibly can from the political process, and then you get the extremists, who typically are on the right, to exercise a disproportionate amount of influence in their vote.

That is the model used by the George Bush administration in the U.S. all through the '90s. It's not at all a surprise to me that someone like Preston Manning would advocate that we don't take many steps to increase the rate of voter participation in Alberta. But I would say that it's really quite disturbing that we would think to actually adopt that approach to our politics in Alberta. I don't think that's in the best interests of Albertans. I don't think that's in the best interests of so many key issues that we need to deal with in this province.

I think that there is much to be gained by enhancing the participation of all Albertans to ensure that we come up with the best solution to whatever the problem is based on the greatest number of opinions and inputs that we can possibly solicit. Yet, clearly, that's not what this government wants. Clearly, they want to keep people home if at all possible. That's why we have a Chief Electoral Officer who steadfastly refuses to engage in activities geared towards increasing participation.

The amendment that we are putting forward today would simply, as I said before, compel the Chief Electoral Officer, despite his reluctance, despite his respect and affection for Preston Manning, to actually engage in the promotion of democracy in our province, to actually increase the number of people who will cast a ballot. That's what this amendment would do.

I heartily encourage all members of this Assembly to support this amendment and take a much delayed step in addressing what is becoming a long-standing problem in our province with respect to our democracy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's indeed a privilege to be able to speak in favour of this amendment. In the words of Victor Hugo: greater than the tread of mighty armies is an idea whose time has come. This is one of those things that really is a good amendment. We have here a situation in Alberta, that the hon. member brought up, that shows the dismal state of our democracy. We have a low voter turnout, 41 per cent, for reasons sometimes unbeknownst to us. It just is what it is.

Needless to say, any work that this Legislature can do or an office of this Legislature can do to promote and extend democracy, to encourage both young and old to make it out to the polls, to pay attention to this Legislature, to understand the workings of government, to understand what bills are being brought forward, and to take an interest in how democracy is working and how our government is performing I believe would be a good thing. It seems to me to be logical that our people in charge of elections would be those who would carry out that work for us, that those people in charge of instituting our elections would be the people who would develop democracy days or things of that nature in this province and go out and advocate for individuals to participate.

That's why I like this amendment. It says that the Chief Electoral Officer not only may but shall actually promote democracy in this province. That means actively work to get people to take their democratic responsibility to heart and make it out to the polls.

It really is amazing that we as a Legislative Assembly hired an individual who claimed that that is not his responsibility. Now, it was a committee of this Legislature that did it. I will point out, however, that it was a majority government committee that did set the wheels into motion for this. It just seems strange that we would hire a person for this job when they didn't believe that actively promoting people or engaging and encouraging people to get out and vote was his job. However, that being said, it happened.

Maybe individuals who hired him, recommended him for the job, or individuals from the government side said: "Listen here. We're going to hire you, but let's not worry about this democratic participation thing. Let's just keep things the way they are, and everyone will be happy. Well, at least we'll be happy. We'll go forward like that." I don't know if it was said in the interview process or when he met before the committee of this Legislature to get his position as the Chief Electoral Officer, whether he said that he didn't think promoting democracy was his responsibility. However, needless to say, a couple of weeks after he got the job, he did state this. I thought this was awfully weird.

What this amendment is trying to do is rectify this unfortunate thing that has happened here in the province of Alberta. That unfortunate thing is that we have a Chief Electoral Officer that doesn't believe it is his job to promote democracy. Clearly, there is a breakdown in thinking in this, clearly a breakdown in communication between the powers that be and a person who is entrusted in this body. What this amendment does is that it corrects that. What it does is that it allows us to make amends for a mistake that has happened. It allows us to now change the parameters of this job description, to have this individual who can go out now with our support in this Legislature and promote democracy to encourage people, first-time voters to go out and take part, to do those things.

I think it'd be a great thing if we could somehow in the next election go from a 41 per cent participation rate to a 51 per cent participation rate. That would be a great thing, and if the Chief Electoral Officer could be part of that, I for one would be very proud of the work we did here today in passing this amendment.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to speak. I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this well-thought-out and well-reasoned amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. My colleague for Calgary-Buffalo is being too modest in that he had an almost identical amendment that contained the first part of this, the section that appears as section (a) of amendment A3. That is the part that would now be requiring the Chief Electoral Officer to engage in education and providing information to the public about the election process and the democratic right to vote, section 4(2). In order to make sure that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was able to put forward this whole amendment, including the second part, he nicely gave way. So thank you to the member for doing that. I am in support of this amendment, clearly, as my colleague was going to do half of it anyway, although I think the second half is equally of merit.

I guess my question is: if the Chief Electoral Officer as an impartial body is not the one that is charged with educating the public, who is? Do we really want government charged with that? I mean, government in this province is highly partisan. Do we really want to hand that over to government and the Public Affairs Bureau to be educating people on the electoral process and the democratic right to vote? I don't think so. Maybe government members do because it would be more likely to kind of go their way and put them in a good light, but I don't think the rest of the citizens in the province and, certainly, I don't as a member of the Official Opposition want to see that be the group that's charged with doing this.

If it's not going to be the government and it's not going to be the Chief Electoral Officer, well, who else? Well, there are some very good not-for-profit organizations that are out there operating on this, like Democracy Watch and Fair Vote. Frankly, I think that at the point that we're going to charge them with this particular duty, it's incumbent on the government to start funding them, and I can't see the government taking that step with any kind of a happy smile on their face. Once again, if it's not the Chief Electoral Officer, who is it? I'm not getting any kind of an answer on that.

I think it's pretty clear that this is the appropriate place to lay the responsibility to take care of that education, and I think that there are a lot of different kinds of opportunities that could be taken up under this particular section. One of the things that I had spoken about with one of the previous Chief Electoral Officers was, you know, a series of posters that could be sent out to apartment buildings, basically multifamily units where they're locked off and there's a security access, a series of posters sent around at the beginning or just prior to the election campaign that essentially said: "We're going into an election campaign. Please be aware that people will be coming into your building campaigning on behalf of candidates. This is part of the democratic process. Please understand that under the Election Act they're allowed to come into your building." You know, some kind of information that's being passed on.

Certainly, in my constituency and I think for anybody that's dealing with gated communities or multifamily units with security access, getting access to the building can be a real hassle, and the poster idea sounded like a really good one to me. That's exactly the kind of thing that is an option for the Chief Electoral Officer to be fulfilling this section if we do pass this amendment and make it into a requirement of the job rather than an option for the job, which is, indeed, what's happening here.

The second part of this, subsection (5), is essentially along the same lines in that, you know, once the election has happened, the Chief Electoral Officer would provide "a breakdown of results, a summary of costs," and it's inserting here, "and recommendations to improve future elections." All of that would be included in the report that goes to the standing committee, and that standing committee lays the report before the Legislative Assembly.

Now, one of the interesting things that happens here – and a number of you may not be aware of this. In the first number of recommendations that were made by the previous Chief Electoral Officer, that individual did exactly that: gave them through to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, who then went in camera. God bless them; they really like to do this. Then there was a recommendation that that information not be released. So nobody else was aware of the recommendations that had been made. They just sort of became secret. I don't think that was actually the intention of the committee members, but in going in camera and discussing some of these things, one thing led to another, and they were excluded. They got pulled underneath that sort of cone of silence, and nobody even knew that recommendations had been made.

For the longest time, years and years later, I'm getting calls from the media and from others saying: do you have a copy of the recommendations that the Chief Electoral Officer made? I'm, you know, pawing through the binders and binders of stuff that I keep because I never throw anything out from any of these committees – I'll be a fire hazard before I'm done here – and then realizing that it was part of this material that, in fact, I couldn't release. I'd have to say: yes, I have it; yes, I've looked at it, but I can't release it.

Well, we're trying to have a public discussion on this stuff. So the importance of it being set up that the Chief Electoral Officer will – the word we're using here is “shall” – make recommendations for that and in this case that it would be included in the report that goes through the standing committee and gets tabled in the House. That way we wouldn't end up losing any bits of it, like we lost before. Frankly, that set us back a while because we had the initial set of recommendations, and then it wasn't until there was a whole second set of recommendations that the first set was able to become public. So we went for a period of time with nobody knowing that these recommendations had in fact been made by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Those were the comments that I wanted to make in support of the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I really do urge everyone to accept this. It's a fairly mundane but I think very important amendment to the act, nothing for the government to be afraid of. It's all good, happy things, so I hope that you will support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A3?

If not, I'll call the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on Bill 7.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, that was unfortunate but hardly surprising. There are so many things in this bill that were previously recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer, who was so unceremoniously asked to leave his role previously, that were really very, very good recommendations which have been ignored by this government. The most obvious one, of course, is the failure of the government to adopt the recommendation with respect to leadership campaigns and ensuring that donations made in the course of leadership campaigns are made public to ensure transparency to the public. Of course, that one was not followed through on, coincidentally, at a time when I figure we've probably got a 50-50 chance that the government may itself be going through a leadership campaign between now and the next election, so it's very convenient.

Nonetheless, the other thing that they did not follow up on is the notion of fixed election dates, and another thing that they didn't follow up on was the notion of assisting with anywhere voting and advance voting, particularly given the unique nature of Alberta's workforce in many cases, where we often have so many people working away from home, in camps, and who are for all intents and purposes prevented from voting. There were so many things this government could have done to increase and enhance democracy through this bill that they chose not to do.

One of the things that they are putting forward in this act which is a problem relates to how those potential voters who do not have the privilege of having a home and an address would still be able to cast their ballot. This government makes much ado about their so-called commitment to the homeless, yet we are moving forward on a piece of legislation that will limit and certainly obstruct those people's ability to participate in the electoral system.

On that basis I have another amendment that I'd like to put forward. I will distribute that amendment and then speak to it once it's been distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll pause for a moment while the next amendment is being distributed.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, this is amendment A4. Please go ahead.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment again appears to be on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. It moves that Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 31 in the proposed section 95 by striking out subsection (4). Subsection (4) states: “No elector shall vouch for more than one elector at an election.”

What the bill currently says is that where there is a potential voter who wants to cast their ballot but that voter does not have an address and identification, another person who does have an address and identification can vouch for this person, vouch for who they are and also vouch for the fact that they reside in the constituency in question. That's a good thing. The problem is that section 95(4) would limit that so that the person who is vouching can only vouch for one person. Basically, what would happen is that you would vouch for homeless person A, and then you would be unable to vouch for anyone else.

Now, the problem with that, of course – and it's something that, certainly, we see in my riding and, unfortunately, is a growing problem throughout our province; it has become quite an unprecedented problem, actually – is that when you have someone who is without an address and without ID who wants to vote, they should obviously be able to, but often the people who are most able to vouch for those people are people who work in shelters. As much as we would love for there to be one shelter worker for every homeless person, it's just simply not the case that there is. Frankly, that's probably not the best-case scenario anyway. What it means, then, is that very few people who are homeless will be given the opportunity to vote. This is really a significant problem.

I had the experience in the mid-90s of being very involved in a campaign in a riding that was at the time referred to as Vancouver-Mount Pleasant in downtown Vancouver, which took in large portions of the downtown east side. There were a number of people there that did not have ID and did not have addresses, but those people actually still had a community, and those people still cast their ballots. It was really quite amazing, the number of them who lined up to cast their ballots.

What happened in those situations was that the people working with them in the shelters, volunteers, could vouch for them. But had they been limited to a situation where one person could only vouch for one other person, many, many of those people living in the downtown east side would have had their right to vote taken from them, stolen from them by the election laws that we are putting into place.

Now, as much as this government claims to be trying to do everything they can to end homelessness, the fact of the matter is that the number of homeless in Alberta has only gone up over the last decade. As much as they may claim to be trying to do something about it, you know, I'm going to withhold my judgment at this point and suggest that we at least operate on the assumption that the trend that we've seen over the last few years is likely to continue, at least in the short term. If that's the case, we're on the verge, then, of passing a piece of legislation that is going to take away the right to vote from a growing section of our population.

We all remember the pictures just a few years ago of people with their families, you know, living in tents in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray and all over this province, where people were moving to Alberta yet did not have the ability to find a place to live. Those people would have struggled to be able to cast their vote had they been eligible to vote.

This piece of legislation will ensure that this problem continues. I think that there are many other ways that the concerns around people vouching for other people could be addressed in terms of the administration of that right and the administration of that process without at the same time taking away the right to vote from Albertans who at this time in their lives are both without home and without identification.

It's with that in mind that I put forward this amendment and ask that my colleagues in the Legislature support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much for the opportunity to speak on amendment A4, put on the floor by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Oh, boy, this is a really important amendment for, I would say, any constituency that's included in the core of cities, especially anything that's dealing with sort of traditionally disenfranchised voters. People who may be in emergency overnight shelters, transitional housing, may not have what's considered kind of traditional government identification like a driver's licence, a worker ID, that kind of thing.

We have a sort of series of cascading events that happen here. You've got somebody that's homeless or recovering from drug or alcohol rehab. They've been away from home long enough that their ID isn't valid anymore, so in effect they don't really have ID. They want to vote, and in other places we're allowing that if they don't have the two pieces of ID that satisfy, a person whose name is on the voters list may vouch for the individual. The term "elector" is very important here because it's signalling someone whose name is on the voters list. Now, that's a whole other cascading problem.

I'm going to back up one cascade here to just talk about the difficulty that it kind of dumps the load here of one elector vouching for one elector. It dumps that load onto our NGO organizations, that tend to be dealing most commonly with people who may be trying to vote without ID. Okay. So who's that? That's pretty obvious stuff. It does tend to be shelter workers, people that are around those shelters, rehabs, transitional housing, that would know someone and could say: "Yes. I know they were here last night. I can vouch for them." You see, it's even saying that a person who does not have an ordinary residence is deemed to reside at the shelter, hostel, or similar facility that most frequently provides services to the person, but you still have to have somebody that can vouch that that's where they were last night. Right? We're looking for the residency in Alberta bit.

Now, by saying that the elector can only vouch for one person, you basically would have to have – oh, I don't know – a couple of hundred volunteers at the emergency shelters if they can only vouch for one person. I think people haven't thought far enough ahead about what's being contemplated here. We need to be able to have a shelter worker that can say, "Yes, I can verify that" and then go through pretty much everybody that they know and can verify were at the shelter last night. But to say, "No, no, no, that person can only verify for one person," where are we supposed to come up with the rest of the electors who can verify for the rest of the people in the shelter? I hope that wasn't too convoluted, but that's what's being set up in this section. When you read the actual act, "No elector shall vouch for more than one elector at an election." That's where the problem is created, and that's what's trying to be addressed by, essentially, striking out that section.

Now, there's a second problem that is created here, and that is that the term "elector" has specific legal standing. An elector is someone whose name appears on the election list. You have to be on the election list already. Well, given the difficulties that we're having in trying to get a permanent voters list – the number of people that got knocked off the voters list in the last election, and nobody can explain why; the issues around enumerating – our fail rate on getting people properly onto the electors list last time was really high, and the percentage of changes was also accordingly high.

I'm just looking for those recommendations because they did give us an indication from the big electoral book of how many changes had to be made to the electors list, how many changes were made between the closing of the possible changes time period, and then how many changes were made following. I mean, it was like 7,000 people. In my constituency there were 7,000 people that were put on the voters list once the election campaign had actually begun, so the official revised voters list – over 7,000 people in my constituency, which is just a staggering number of people. That's the additional complication that's caused by this.

If we do not support this amendment, we're now in a situation of trying to find the people that are actually on the list and may not even know, for example, that they didn't make it on the list or that they got dumped out. Trying to find the person who is an elector, is already on the voters list, is able to verify the individual without the identification really does disenfranchise a very specific group of people, an identifiable group of people because they tend to be – I'm trying to be descriptive here without being discriminatory. I would argue that you're likely to find that that group of disenfranchised people is more likely to be residing in the centre of the cities, where you have the services that they would be seeking; for example, things like overnight shelters, transitional housing, rehab, even the day shelter programs that are available.

That's the problem that has been created in this act that I think needs to be addressed and has been picked up by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I really think that we should be supporting this because if we don't, we've created not one but two problems here. I hope that we can get some support from the government side to make sure that this particular amendment passes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening to the debate on this amendment, and I must say that I have some empathy with some of the arguments that have been put forward. If I can get some clarity from the hon. mover of the amendment as to the number of times she believes we would need to have more than one elector doing the verification for someone who would fall into the categories perhaps that the Member for Edmonton-Centre has discussed or perhaps family or some of those other situations that do arise on occasion during the election process. I was curious as to whether or not she could expand on some of that for me just to answer that kind of a question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I appreciate the question from the member. It is difficult, of course, to do an overall estimate. I think that the most recent count of Edmontonians who do not currently have an address, for instance, is roughly 3,000. I stand to be corrected, but that's what sits in my mind. Now, of course, not all of those people are without ID, obviously. Many of those people, although they might not have an address, might actually have ID, but many would not have ID. Of course, even where you have ID, you may or may not have an address on your ID, so that becomes a problem – it depends on the nature of the ID – because you need to not only swear that you are who you are; you need to swear you are a resident of that particular area.

I would suggest that probably between the riding of Edmonton-Centre, the riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the riding of Edmonton-Strathcona – am I missing any other ones? – maybe also Edmonton-Gold Bar as it currently exists, the vast majority would probably reside in those central ridings. That's more or less the number that I'm speaking about. That's the number that we're looking at.

Certainly, the experience that I had when I was in Vancouver is that the shelter workers might well over the course of a day vouch for up to 25 people, for instance. I think that would be a reasonable number that they would end up dealing with, and then you'd have more than one shelter worker and more than one shelter, but it could easily be up to that many. Also, of course, the shelter itself can't empty all its staff and have them run down to the polling station so that they can all be there. Typically what would happen is that they would assign one or two staff to be at the polling station to then verify if people who are typically residents at their shelter came through. That's how it worked when we went through this process on the downtown east side in Vancouver in the mid-90s, when I was helping to organize their election day process.

I think that's an estimate and a guesstimate for the member. I'm sorry that I can't be more specific, but I do know that if we limit it to one, the problem that we will definitely end up with is that a lot of people will come to vote, and they won't be allowed to vote.

The other thing. I'm not sure if the Member for Edmonton-Centre noted this or not, but I realize – it's perhaps a problem with our amendment – that by making it be an elector that swears for another elector, you could easily have someone who works at a shelter who is themselves not an elector in that electoral district.

Ms Blakeman: It doesn't narrow it.

Ms Notley: It doesn't narrow it. So you just need to be someone that can vote. Okay. That's good. That's not a problem.

But you're still probably looking at having to vouch for, I think, in some cases maybe up to 25, maybe only four or five but definitely more than one. We have the Youth Emergency Shelter in my riding. They can have people residing there who are eligible to vote, for instance. There is just a community that typically resides in my riding that does not have an address.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, it is a privilege to speak in favour of this amendment moved by the hon. member from the third party on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-

Norwood. In particular, we see this bill trying to ameliorate some of the difficulties in the voting process that numerous Albertans have throughout this province, not only in, I'd say, downtown centres, more disproportionately there, but also throughout the province. There are many people who lose their ID, do not have the appropriate papers, are not on the voters list who do from time to time come forward and need to have someone vouch that they are living in that constituency. I think what this amendment does is a very good thing. It allows for an individual to vouch for a certain group of individuals or a number of individuals who may need some verification as to the fact that they are living in a constituency, that they are working in the constituency, that they have been hanging their hat in that constituency for a little while or at least the night before the election. That's what this is meant to ameliorate.

If we want to get more specific, we can. Primarily, we have a homeless problem here in Alberta that tends to gravitate into the city centres, where individuals who are often excluded from the mainstream processes are staying. Currently there are homeless shelters located in downtown Calgary, downtown Edmonton. I know that in my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo there are two shelters. One is the Drop-in Centre; one would be the Mustard Seed. Individuals there happen to be homeless, and sadly they often or sometimes do not carry the requisite amount of paperwork to be able to vote.

Clearly, this bill is meant to allow for an individual who works with these individuals or spends time with these individuals to be able to go down and vouch for them at the voting station, where they can then go forward and say: hey, this gentleman resides at the Drop-in Centre or Mustard Seed or wherever, has been residing here for the last week, the last three days, the last night, and I'm vouching for him that he did this and that he should be able to take part in the election. That seems to be part of what we're trying to do here in Alberta, part of trying to extend the franchise to people who want to vote, who want to take part on voting day, who want to cast their ballot for either an individual or a political party. This should be encouraged and not stifled.

As the legislation is currently written – and the Member for Edmonton-Centre did an excellent job of going through the trouble with the bill, that first you had to find someone to vouch for you and, second of all, that that person then had to be on the voters list. Okay? Then also we looked at the last election, at some of the difficulties with being on the voters list. Voters lists were incomplete. They were shockingly absent of many of the people who lived in my constituency. We all know that downtown Calgary does have a transient or moving around population. Nevertheless, it was shocking how few people actually were on that list.

What we're asking people who don't have IDs to do is, first, find an individual who happens to be on the voters list. That could be an onerous task in the first place. What we're looking for is something that makes it a little easier for that person to go down and exercise his democratic right. It also encourages members of our population who are looking, hopefully, for some means to improve their lives. Maybe on that day in question, when the election is held, they'll say: jeepers creepers, this is going to be the start of me trying to pull myself up by my bootstraps. They're going to pull themselves up by their bootstraps, go down and cast a ballot for their political party, and the rest of their lives they're going to go by this, trying to re-enter their way into society.

This could be one of those moments in time that gives them what I think they refer to as a moment of clarity: "I know when I turned my life around. It was when I went down and voted at the 2012 election, when I found that person to vouch for me." This could be that moment of clarity that we'd be providing that individual with in this bill by making this amendment, by saying, "You, too, are going to be a part of the voting process" and making it easier for them. I'll tell you what. If we don't make this amendment, that person can go down there, try and find a way to vote, get frustrated and say: "Well, this society really doesn't want me anyway. Maybe it's right. Maybe it is too hard to take part in things. Maybe I'm better off just sort of not bothering to improve my life. Taking part in this kind of stuff is useless anyway."

I know I'm stretching it a bit, Mr. Chair. However, that's what we're kind of doing here. I really see this as being an opportunity to extend the franchise to some people who maybe need it, maybe want it, and it could lead to us not only promoting democracy but promoting people taking charge of their own lives. The changes put forward by the hon. member are very good, ones that I wish I had thought of myself and that I think would be very good for people in my area in certain situations, primarily the homeless or people without identification.

I thank you, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to speak on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology on amendment A4.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just trying to get a little more clarity around the intent of the amendment. When I look at the act and I look at some of the discussions that we've had as it related to why that would be in there, it's really a protection of, frankly, somebody coming with a group of people that might not be – and I'm pretty sure that the hon. member knows where I'm going. Also, we have had some discussions. This kind of mirrors what the federal legislation is. I guess I'd be curious as to the member's opinion. If we remove this, the protection for the Chief Electoral Officer against someone who would come in with a whole group of people, you know, where you'd have one person vouching for a busload, is that a fear of the member? By saying yes to your amendment, it's a possibility. I'm curious whether you have another option that we might look at.

Ms Notley: Well, two points to make. First, in response to the question of the hon. minister, I think that the first thing is of course to remove this piece right now because the one-to-one is the problem. But let's just say hypothetically – and I'm making this up as I go along, you know; this is my first attempt at governance – that through regulation one could potentially have a process where the CEO had an application process for vouchers. For instance, for people who perceive themselves as potentially people that would be in the position to vouch, there would be an application process that they might go through. That might be a voucher registrar or something like that. I'm just throwing this out there. Now, I'm sure I could find ways to critique that, too. Nonetheless, in theory, that might be a way to do it, so your vouchers have to apply to be vouchers. Just one possibility. I'm not sure how much more red tape that would create.

I understand the problem with a busload of a hundred people showing up that no one can distinguish – that's fair – but at the same time the answer that is in this legislation creates another problem.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre corrected me that we're probably looking more at a homeless population, for instance, in Alberta that could be as high as 18,000. If you have roughly 6,000 in Edmonton, 6,000 in Calgary, and 6,000 everywhere else, you're looking at potentially disenfranchising up to 18,000 Albertans.

I think there are ways in which this could be worked out. I'm not suggesting that the way I proposed is the answer. What you could do is eliminate this particular provision and then give yourself the regulatory discretion – and I know you all love regulatory discretion – to find a way to address the problem in a way that doesn't, you know, kill a spider with a sledgehammer.

That's my answer to the question.

Ms Blakeman: You know, I think what we're trying to do here is strike a reasonable balance in protecting the reliability of the electors list. We're trying to make it possible for people who are disenfranchised to have a reasonable access point, to have someone vouch for them, to be allowed to vote, and at the same time protect us from the busload of people that are driven up or the group that walks over from the nursing home – I can think of ones in my riding – and people try and vouch in 200 people.

Really, I think the way to do this is – if we leave it in the legislation, it's not possible. There is a prohibition. You cannot. It says, "No elector shall vouch for more than one elector at an election." The prohibition is in. If you take it out, you can still go and work with the shelters, go and work with, you know, the Chinese seniors' lodge, go and work with some of those groups that are going to be trying to vouch for people and say: how do we do this in a reasonable way? I'm about to choke – and anybody watching my face will know it – but you're going to end up having to put it into regulations so that you have some kind of a limit. [interjections] See? Unfortunately, that was all on the record, and my grandmother can read that and think: oh, dear, Laurie.

You know, we're trying to strike a balance here and protect the integrity of what we're doing and the integrity of the system and at the same time trying to make it possible for people who are seeking out a route to be enfranchised to get access to that. If you leave the prohibition in there, there is no opportunity to do it, so I think that out it must come.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. members for, really, I think satisfying some concerns that I had with this amendment. Given the discussions that we've had as to why we put that clause into the bill and given the fact that the opposition is very keen to help us work out the solution if our fears become a problem, I think we are certainly capable of creating some regulation around this. I'm glad that they support our making a regulation around this. It's fabulous.

I for one, Mr. Chairman, would probably support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Just a couple of words here. First off, I want to say that I actually agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre on something. It is a good day today. She has mentioned to me that it is about creating balance. This is about creating balance between the integrity of the voters lists and people not being disenfranchised.

Mr. Chair, prior to getting to this House, I handled a lot of elections litigation. I have to say that I've seen a lot of problems when you give too much subjective power to the particular Chief Electoral Officer. I'm quite concerned as to what happens when you get a busload of individuals coming in here with one person to vouch for them all, the pandemonium that that can create throughout the entire elections process, throughout the entire voting day. It may be very difficult to actually police, for lack of a better term, what specifically is going on. It may create a backlog for the other people that may be disenfranchised. Everybody has busy schedules in this province. They may not have the time to wait around.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had talked about accessibility issues with the homeless population. I thank her for that, and I share her concern. At the same time, it's again about balance. My department this year is actually going to be experimenting with issuing identification to homeless people, partially to address this issue in and of itself. I would submit to you that that's a better way to actually go and address the issue of disenfranchisement than changing the act in and of itself.

I'd say that if anything else this amendment should actually seek to raise the amount of people that one person can vouch for, to maybe five or even 10, but not get rid of it entirely. I think this leaves too much potential for an abuse of process in our election in and of itself. This will leave it open to abuse.

The Minister of Education and House leader had mentioned to me earlier that this largely resembles federal legislation, which, to my experience, works relatively fine, and I think that by deviating from this process, we're setting a really dangerous precedent here.

In conclusion, this tips the balance too far away from the integrity of the voters list. I will not be supporting this amendment, and I encourage all members to follow suit.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on amendment A4.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It gives me great pleasure to actually stand up and speak to this because I feel very strongly. I have many, many years of experience running elections at the federal, provincial, and municipal levels. We in the old days, when we actually used to have enumerators that would go out on the streets, took a great deal of pride that our lists were absolutely accurate. Then when we sat at the tables as deputy returning officers, you can rest assured that this, particularly in southern Alberta, was run as honestly as it possibly could be. From that experience I have a couple of comments.

Earlier in the day I spoke about the Womanspace Resource Centre in Lethbridge. Now, this would be a perfect example of women knowing other women because they've helped them get their ID. Once they have their ID, they're not too badly off, but if that election is called previous to them getting their ID, there is at least somebody in that organization that could vouch for them. So I think it's very important that these women would be recognized. I think that you can't have all of these people come to the polling stations each with their little friend in hand. There has to be a better way to do it.

One of the ways that I think could be done is that – I don't think this is creative thinking; I think this is what we do already. In fact, I know it's what we do. We just have to recognize that people in homeless shelters or people without ID are actually people that need to be treated with respect. Once we start getting that attitudinal change that these are people that must be recognized, then I think it's an easy thing to do.

One of the ways that it could be done, where one person might be able to vouch for many, is if an enumerator was assigned to homeless shelters, and that enumerator would go and enumerate these people. They would be the ones that were in charge of the list, and in fact the ballot boxes could be taken to homeless shelters so that we don't have to have these people perhaps taking a bus or not having the polling stations close to them.

We do this in nursing homes; we do it for many, many of our other vulnerable people; we take ballots to people's homes if they're incapacitated because we want to make sure that they can vote. We want to make sure that they're a part of the voting public. I believe that if homeless people had the ballot boxes taken to the shelters with an enumerator that had enumerated and knew who they were, there may be some people that would fall through the cracks that maybe hadn't been enumerated or perhaps there wasn't somebody to vouch for them, but I would suspect that we would get the majority of the people. Now, the enumeration can't be done weeks in advance. It would have to be done maybe a couple of days ahead of time because people are so transient.

When people, particularly those that are down on their luck and either pulling themselves up or they're sliding down further before they hit bottom before they can come back up again – the fact that they would be respected enough to have a ballot box brought to them and actually be allowed to vote I know would be a real push, I guess, for their self-esteem and that, really, they are a part of a much larger society. They're not just marginalized people that people sometimes pity. Instead of working with them as people and working with their great potential, often people do act in a pitying sort of way. Unfortunately, I've seen that kind of behaviour, particularly at suppers like the Christmas dinners or the Easter dinners, where the homeless are allowed to come. It's an attitudinal change that has to be explained, I guess, to some people.

I think there has to be another attitudinal change that would make sure that there was a way. There are many ways that it can be done. All it needs is the will. If there's a will, there's a way. I think the attitudinal change has to be on the part of the Chief Electoral Officer. I think his job is to make voting as easy and as available to every single person in Alberta so that they are allowed to vote. If he had an attitudinal change, I think that maybe this kind of one person being able to vouch for many people could happen. There are any number of ways that this can happen. It's simply a matter of will.

With that, Mr. Chairman, thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Following the lead of the Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, I, too, would suggest that I think the discussion has been useful. Section 95(4), "No elector shall vouch for more than one elector at an election." There could be abuse of the process if you took that out in terms of having one person vouch for a whole lot of people. But I think if you go up to subsection (2), it basically says that the person who is vouching has to be on the list in that polling station. So there are checks and balances in place. I agree with Edmonton-Centre that if there is a problem that needs to be resolved because that is not there, then we should try and do it through the Chief Electoral Officer and through regulations.

I would encourage people to support this amendment so that we can deal with this particular piece and move on to the next step.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A4.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 carried]

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Deputy Chair: On Bill 7 as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: That was very fun. I don't think that has ever happened before, so maybe I'll start a run and go with my third amendment although we'll see how this one goes.

With respect to the Election Act, as I've mentioned several times before, one of the concerns we have is the fact that the Chief Electoral Officer was making recommendations that we do everything possible to expand the opportunity for people to vote. Not all those recommendations found their way into the act. In deference to that fact and the fact that we would like to see ways in which people's opportunities to vote could be expanded, I have the following amendment to propose. I will distribute it and then speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause for a moment while that amendment is distributed. Hon. members, this is amendment A5.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I said, the concern that we had was the fact that we were looking for ways to expand access to voting and to ensure that more people had an opportunity to vote on more occasions. The motion that I'm putting forward on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood reads as follows: that Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended by striking out section 42 and substituting the following. Section 116(1) is struck out, and the following is substituted:

116(1) An elector who is unable to vote at an advance poll or at the poll on polling day may apply to vote by Special Ballot.

Currently in Bill 7 there is a proposal in section 42 to adjust slightly the definitions and the criteria that are currently listed in section 116(1). What we are proposing to do is to eliminate all of the criteria that are set out in section 116(1) and simply allow that an elector who is unable to vote at an advance poll or at the polling day may apply to vote by special ballot. The point of this, of course, is to simply expand the use of the special ballot so that more people have an opportunity to vote.

Now, as has been mentioned, the former Chief Electoral Officer had talked about a number of ways in which we could expand the opportunity for Albertans to cast their ballot, bearing in mind that we have concerns with respect to students and also voters who may be residing in locations away from their home on election day. The Chief Electoral Officer, for instance, essentially recommended that there be anywhere advance voting. He recommended permitting "electors to vote in any electoral division within the province during the days of advance voting and by Special Ballot, at any returning office, throughout the election period." The CEO also recommended permitting "the establishment of additional advance voting stations in high traffic areas and places where large numbers of electors are located [like] malls, airports, work camps, and college campuses."

Electors were originally restricted to voting at assigned polling stations in order to facilitate control over the list of electors and ensure the security of elections, but now that the list of electors is an electronic document, it is actually possible to take new measures to facilitate voting for people who are living far away from their place of ordinary residence. These measures would have made it easier for students, oil field workers, and other mobile tradespeople to vote as they could simply go to any returning office during advance polling, as opposed to what the situation is right now.

Now, in first reading the Attorney General said that they wouldn't be implementing this recommendation because of logistic issues, although they will be implementing the recommendation to allow people to vote in an advance poll for any reason. However, we see this as a fairly major missed opportunity. What this amendment does is get at that issue because what it does is essentially say that one needn't be, as is currently the case, physically incapacitated, absent from the electoral division on the specific election day, an inmate, someone employed by the CEO during the election, or someone that's subject to other circumstances that may or may not be applied by the Chief Electoral Officer. Instead, it simply says that if you can't be there on election day, you can get a special ballot. The end. Then your ballot will, of course, be counted later and all that other kind of stuff, but you can get a special ballot.

The rules around applying for a special ballot in terms of the opportunities for oversight and checking to ensure that that person is who they say they are and live where they say they live and all those other kinds of things would still be in place. You'd still have all those checks and balances. You would just open the door for more people to vote in more locations at more times for longer periods during the day. This, of course, is designed to do what I've kind of been harping on about all afternoon, which is increase the opportunity for people to vote and hopefully increase the voter turnout of Albertans.

That is what this recommendation is designed to do. It is, effectively, an attempt to get at those many recommendations that were put forward by the former Chief Electoral Officer which did not find their way into this piece of legislation. So I would ask my colleagues in the Assembly to reconsider the decision to not put those many other recommendations into this piece of legislation and to get at the same outcome, enhancing the opportunity for people to vote while maintaining the safeguards in place, and support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's, again, a privilege to speak to this amendment and in fact speak in favour of this amendment. It looks like a good amendment because it follows one of the recommendations made by the former Chief Electoral Officer. It enables more electors who want to take part in democracy to be able to cast a ballot, and it seems to me like all of the safeguards are in place. Basically, it's ensuring that an elector who is unable to vote at an advance poll or on polling day may apply to vote by special ballot. It just removes the criteria that you be incapacitated or have a disability. I think it just opens up the franchise to more people and more places, and really it can be used and handled with a well-planned, well-thought-out election that will allow more people to take part.

Again, I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for bringing it forward. It's a good amendment. It will extend the franchise. I think we're more than able to handle this type of amendment here in the 21st century.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I urge all of my other colleagues in the House to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak on amendment A5? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, regarding this amendment A5 if I could have a couple of questions answered before I decide whether I'm going to support it or not, I would really appreciate it. First to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman: how does the process work now? We were having a discussion in this area of the House, off the record of course, around what exactly is in place now regarding individuals who are unable to vote at the advance poll or on polling day, whether they're working in an area of Alberta far from their residence and they're out of town, whether they're sick, whether they're incapacitated in some way and shut in at their house and require a special ballot, whether or not they would be holidaying, for instance, in Florida or Arizona, in the case of an Alberta person who is retired and, fortunately, has a retirement income high enough to take a break during the extreme portion of the winter. This is very important because the last number of elections, as you well know, have been held in March.

If I could have a further explanation as to how this process around special ballots works now. Is an individual representing a campaign allowed to have more than one special ballot per trip? How does this work? I'm confused. I know what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo told me regarding the special ballots and how they worked or did not work in Calgary-Buffalo. I was under the assumption that a representative from an individual campaign could only deal with one special ballot at a time.

If I could have clarification from the hon. member regarding those questions, I would appreciate it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I will endeavour to provide as much clarification as I can. I may or may not be able to answer all of the questions. I'm not sure if one agent from one campaign is limited to one special ballot. I think, basically, the idea is that the special ballot is owned by the person who fills it out and signs it. So although a campaign may be able to transport the ballot from point A to point B, it needs to be filled out and signed, and there need to be copies of ID and all that kind of stuff provided by the person who's actually receiving the special ballot.

What happens right now is that you can use the special ballot if, for instance, you're not going to be in the jurisdiction on the advance polling days or on election day. You can go in and get a special ballot yourself, individually, and fill it out. If you are physically incapacitated either before or on election day, you can call up your local deputy returning officer and ask them to deliver a special ballot to your house, and then you would fill it out. All the appropriate things would be done, and then that ballot would be cast.

There's no question; certainly, I've been on campaigns where on election day itself we've been in the process where we've phoned people who've indicated in the past a desire to support our candidate. They have indicated: well, I can't come because I'm too sick or I broke my hip or yada, yada, yada. Then at that point the campaign might transport the ballot. I believe that the safeguards are still in place so that it's still ultimately the relationship between the voter who is filling out the special ballot and the returning officer. They still have to sign a declaration and provide ID and all that kind of stuff. That's the way it works right now.

Under the current section 116 these are the criteria where you become entitled to use a special ballot: if you are physically incapacitated; if you are absent from the electoral division; if you are, basically, an employee on election day of the deputy returning officer or the Chief Electoral Officer and otherwise engaged in the election; if you are an inmate; if you are a resident of a remote area designated under section 31 — and I'm assuming it's someplace where they can't get a poll to — or any other circumstance prescribed by the Chief Electoral Officer.

The point of this would be simply that if I am planning to vote and I know I'm going to be in town on election day, so I don't qualify that way, but if I also know that I'm working a 12-hour shift and that as much as I have a legal right to leave my place of employment — let's say I'm a nurse — to go cast my ballot but also know that we've been short-staffed for several years and that my supervisor is going to really not be happy with me if I exercise my right under the act to go and vote that day, and if I'm also working on the advance poll days and times, I might just walk into the returning office three days after the writ is dropped because I'm not working that week and fill out a special ballot and cast my ballot there.

That's the kind of extra ease because right now what happens is that you only have the limited days when advanced voting is allowed. Those hours are not all day long. There are specific hours during the day. Then you have the election day itself. The point of this would basically be to allow people to vote at any time during the election period regardless of whether or not they are physically incapacitated and regardless of whether they are or are not there on election day. It's, again, geared towards increasing participation and increasing the opportunity for people to participate.

I hope that answers some of your questions.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A5?

Hearing none, I will call the question.

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 7 as amended. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, this is an ideal time to bring it up. I have a question for the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and perhaps through the course of debate he could refresh my memory. Is it not the hon. member's bill from last year, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009? This is repealed in this act. I'm curious as to why the House spent considerable time on this last year, and now we find that this legislation has been repealed so quickly. If any hon. member could enlighten me through the course of debate on why this has occurred, I certainly would welcome that.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I have questions in committee on the coming into force of this proposed Bill 7. Certain sections, of course, are coming into force at certain times, and I would appreciate an explanation as to why this is occurring. Sections 77, 78, 79, and 85(a) and (b) come into force on January 1, 2011. Then how exactly is this going to work? Sections 31, 34, 35, 39, 41, 43, and 49 apply with respect to the next election that is held at least six months after the coming into force of this section and subsequent elections. If I'm interpreting this correctly, parts of this bill, if it was to be voted into law, would not apply if the next election was held six months after the coming into force of this bill.

I'm sort of looking at a bit of history here, Mr. Chairman. Going back to 1989, of course, it was only three years into the term of one of the previous Progressive Conservative regimes, and a snap election was held. I'm not saying this is going to happen, but I'm getting very, very suspicious. I can confidently say that we will be going to the polls provincially before the sustainability fund is drained. Now, how quickly the sustainability fund is drained is a billion dollar question, but I'm certainly going to be prepared myself. Yes. That would be 98(2).

Now, 98(3), sections 21, 54, 76, 83, 84, 86(b), 87, 88, and 94(b) come into force on the day that a writ is issued under section 40 of the Election Act for the next general election after this section comes into force.

Any number of things could happen here. This bill could be debated and passed, and the proclamation date could be – I don't know. There could be a lot of work put into this bill. There could be a lot of changes made to the Election Act, but the changes would not necessarily be reflected in how we govern ourselves in the next provincial election. So I'm curious why we have this coming into force that appears to be in three stages, Mr. Chairman. If the government members or the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General could provide an answer to that, I would be very grateful.

Before I move on, Mr. Chairman, certainly when you look at the back of the bill and you continue on, there's also 98(4), where sections 45, 56(f), 57(a), 58(a) and (b), 62, 63, 89, 90, and 97 come into force on proclamation. I was wrong. There are four stages to this bill, if it was to become law, before it becomes the rules from which we would conduct elections under.

I think those are very important questions, and I think they merit an explanation from the hon. Minister of Justice before we proceed.

Certainly, whenever I read Hansard, there has been a lot said in this Assembly about electronic voting. There has been a lot said in our caucus about electronic voting. I think the benchmark would be the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview regarding electronic voting. I think the hon. member summed it up very well.

Now, in the last number of years I've read a number of interesting articles, and this is long after we all witnessed the presidential election in Florida, the election that sent George W. Bush to the White House as President over Mr. Al Gore. [some applause] Wow, I wonder if the former President of the United States, George W. Bush, has things to do, or would he be watching this live on the Internet stream? I don't think he's had a clap like that in quite a while. That is sort of a reflection of that caucus, Mr. Chairman. I'm not going to, you know, be off topic here. I'm not going to be drawn off topic. Certainly not.

Now, when we look at the conduct of that election and the hanging chad, the different districts where there were issues over voting, of course, the final result had to be set through judicial review, as was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs' election in 2004. That went to various levels of the judiciary before it was finally resolved. When you have a voting system, it has to be accurate. In case there is a dispute, it has to be transparent. The proof of who voted, where they voted: that has to be available if there is to be a mechanism to resolve any differences. Certainly, the number of ballots granted to or taken by electors has to balance with either the number of ballots that are in the box or the number of destroyed ballots or rejected ballots, however you want to look at that.

We have a system in place now. We have a system, as the hon. member points out, where everyone can take a few minutes out of their day, whether it's before they go to work or after they come home from work, to vote. I'm not saying that perhaps we shouldn't change the voting hours to make it more convenient; we can certainly look at that. I find it quite odd that there are people in this country – and I'm talking about the Canadian military, the men and women in the Canadian military – who are willing to sacrifice their lives so that another country, in this case Afghanistan, can adapt, so that they can have a democracy like the one that we enjoy in this country. They're willing to literally risk their lives to support initiatives that support a democracy in that country. We have people in this country that don't even have 10 minutes to get up off the couch and make an effort to go to the local church or the local school and vote. I think this is quite odd. Hopefully, we can educate people and encourage them and give them a reason to get out and vote.

The second thing that strikes me, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that young people, particularly young women, tell me: "There is no reason to vote. What's the sense? It's not going to make any difference anyway." I remind people all the time, if they were to think about this, that their grandmothers, when they were young, probably didn't have the right to vote. Certainly, their great-grandmothers would not have had the vote. Women in the past, less than 100 years ago, went on hunger strikes, were willing to go to jail, and were willing to protest nonviolently to ensure that all women had the franchise to vote. I can't imagine what our country was like before women had the right to vote. Mr. Chairman, at one point you had to be of a certain religion or you had to own property and you had to be male in order to vote. We know that that's just wrong. We know all the arguments that were made to suggest that women should not have the right to vote. Those arguments were wrong.

I always make an effort to point out, particularly to young women: "It's not that long ago that women had to fight for the right to vote. Why are you dismissing the franchise that people fought for so vigorously so that you could have the right to vote?" It puzzles me why people don't vote. I am of the opinion that political parties – all of us are guilty – are not giving them a reason to vote. There are individuals in this country that are willing to sacrifice their lives so that others can have the vote while some of us sit on the couch, unwilling to make an effort to vote on election day.

If we continue down this pattern of electronic voting – now, I know that there are members in this House that think that they can just hop off the couch, take two steps, take the cushion out of the chair, sit in the chair before the computer, and vote. There are members – and I would encourage them to participate in the debate on this issue – who think this is the answer.

I reject that because I'm not confident that the system is foolproof. When you look at what happened in Florida and you read the op-ed pieces and the opinion pieces in the New York Times – and I know the members across the way may consider that to be a Liberal newspaper, but it's a very good newspaper. I would encourage them, if they have any time on the weekends, to have a squint at it. The New York Times, over the years since the incident I described earlier in Florida, has published a lot of articles regarding electronic voting and the potential for voter fraud. It's significant, and it's a significant risk. I don't think we should jeopardize our voting system here.

We have the lists. I know we can improve the lists. I think we should have an enumeration before each and every election. I know that there have been improvements made through the municipal census, through federal income tax information, and the co-ordinating of the different levels of governments with that list, but I think that there should be an enumeration. I don't think it is an unreasonable cost. When we have an enumeration with an accurate polling list, when we have that broken down by poll, and we have trained volunteers to conduct the election, I think it can be fair for every candidate in every political party.

But I am yet to be convinced that electronic voting is not open to fraud. Hon. members will say: "Well, you can make billions of dollars of transactions on the Internet; you can do that routinely. People do that. We are becoming a society where there is less paper. There is a significantly reduced paper trail, and there's more and more information being transmitted between parties electronically." I know that is true. I accept the argument, Mr. Chairman, that banks carry on transactions, and there are electronic contracts. In fact, there is a book I was looking at the other day in the library just on that very subject.

That being said, I am not convinced that for each individual who is listed to vote, even if we have these unique identification numbers – and to me it's frightening that we would even be talking about that – there is no way that we can guarantee that the system will not be compromised or that the integrity of the system will not be jeopardized. That is one reason why I'm very suspicious of this attempt to initiate electronic voting.

We talked earlier, Mr. Chairman, about this identifier, this voter ID, so to speak. I don't think that we need that on the list of electors in each respective poll. If there are any questions, we can just pull out our driver's licence or ID and show that to the election officials and get our ballot. It might take a minute or two longer, and the lineup may be five people instead of two, but that's not much of a price to pay whenever you consider that people are willing to jeopardize or risk their lives to promote democracy in another country. Certainly, I would urge all members of this Assembly to think very, very thoroughly before we open up our election process to electronic voting.

Now, moving on in the time that I have, Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting bill. I'm looking specifically at section 134. The section 134 that we know is repealed, and the following is substituted:

Printed or electronic advertising.

134(1) In this section, "advertisement" means an advertisement, for which there is or normally would be a charge, in any broadcast, print or electronic media, including telephone, fax, internet, e-mail and text messaging, with the purpose of promoting or opposing any registered political party or the election of a registered candidate.

(2) Every advertisement containing a reference to any election shall include the sponsor's name and contact information and indicate that the sponsor authorizes the advertisement.

I can certainly accept that.

(3) Subsection (2) . . .

This is the identification of the sponsor's name and contact information.

. . . does not apply to a printed or electronic advertisement bearing only one or more of the following:

(a) the colours and logo of a registered political party;

(b) the name of a registered political party;

(c) the name of a candidate.

Does this section allow for a campaign phone canvass, the demon dialer? We talked about the demon dialer earlier in debate, and many campaigns . . . [interjection] The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont seems to be quite fond of the demon dialer.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore utilizes the demon dialer. I guess it depends on how much money you have.

Certainly, I would like to know if this subsection applies to the demon dialer. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments. The hon. member started – and I lost track of what he was talking about after a while, but it was a little bit disingenuous, I think – by provoking Airdrie-Chestermere about the repeal of section 97. If he'd read the act, he'd realize that in the provisions of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act third-party advertising had been built into the act.

Mr. MacDonald: Not all of them.

Mr. Hancock: Well, you could point out some of those, but it's the normal course, when you're revising an act, to bring things into the appropriate sections, and the coming into force sections are clearly transitional provisions.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, earlier today we had discussions with the House leaders, and it was thought that it might be appropriate, once we'd dealt with the amendments that were coming to the floor, that we adjourn debate on this particular bill and move on with other business and come back to this bill later. Accordingly I would move that the committee adjourn debate on Bill 7.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Body Armour Control Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act. I'd like to begin by thanking those who support this bill. The proposed legislation would allow the police to seize body armour from individuals who do not have a permit who are not exempt from the requirement of obtaining a permit. Police officers, peace officers, emergency medical service providers, Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission inspectors, licensed private security guards, and others who need to wear body armour to do their jobs will be exempt from the requirement to get a permit.

This bill is drafted to ensure that law-abiding Albertans can continue to own and wear body armour. One of the ways the law does that is by exempting anyone who owns a valid firearms licence from having to get a separate permit for body armour. Recreational shooters, hunters, and gun owners more generally have firearms licences so will not be impacted by this act. Other individuals may be issued a permit on the basis that they have legitimate occupational or personal safety reasons to wear body armour.

This proposed legislation defines body armour to include garments or other items that are designed or adapted to protect the wearer from a weapon or other object used to cause injury or death. The proposed legislation does not apply to safety equipment used in sporting and recreational activities, nor does it apply to safety equipment worn to protect against workplace injuries; for example, safety equipment worn by loggers or meat cutters.

The permit system will be modelled on the licensing scheme contained in the Security Services and Investigators Act. Several provisions in this proposed legislation are modelled on that act. Applications will be processed by the registrar designated under that act, and applicants will be subject to rigorous criminal record and background checks. Violations of the act will be punishable by a fine or a short custodial sentence or both.

Mr. Chairman, by taking away gang members' sense of invincibility, we hope to decrease the potential for violence in public places.

I thank all members for participating in this debate and look forward to their feedback.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Ms Blakeman: I'm never incredibly keen on things where civil liberties are used as an excuse on either side, but clearly we are up against a societal challenge that we need to give government some tools to deal with, and gangs are one of them. They don't play fair, they don't play by the rules, and they're making it very difficult for well-intentioned organizations and individuals to be able to protect our citizens from being recruited into gangs.

In my constituency I have a number of communities that have escaped from war, have perhaps lived in refugee camps. These people are not unfamiliar with weapons; let me put it that way. We're trying to help them integrate into quite a different society. For younger people who see money and cars and nice stereos and a sense of family or belonging, it can be an irresistible lure. Then to have gang members who can walk into bars with body armour on and be invincible, it's even more difficult.

Sometimes I think we pass laws because we believe this will solve a problem, and all we do is create a whole bunch of other problems and a whole bunch of other work and cost and red tape, which irritates me because it just isn't thought through. I haven't been able to poke the holes in this legislation that I was expecting to be able to. I've looked through the list of exemptions. [interjections] Oh, it's got to be spring. The marijuana people are outside. Yeah, it's a long day. [interjection] Yes, there are many, many constituents of Edmonton-Centre that are currently on the Legislature Grounds. No question about it.

But in looking at the exceptions, it's essentially saying that anybody that would usually have a gun or who has a legitimate reason for having a gun also has access to this without additional permitting. It certainly covers our public employees, which I think should be paramount when we look at protecting firefighters and police officers and EMS personnel and wildlife officers, that my father still calls the fish feds. He has no love for them, I'll tell you. He'll be thrilled to hear that they have body armour. The one that I do find interesting is that the gaming and liquor control people are exempted from the requirement to hold a permit.

I'm aware, having listened to the Tannoy when I was back in my office, that there was a fairly vigorous give-and-take on this one, but I'm not finding what's being proposed here inappropriate. I'm not finding it putting any particular hardship or disadvantage on one group or another here. I think we struggle to be able to find out how to work with organizations like the sort of new version of gangs that exist in a highly technical, Internet-based world and move about in a way that we find difficult to track and control.

As much as I don't like putting those kinds of restrictions out, at this point I'm willing to support this legislation in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I feel it's important to once again rise and speak against this bill. There are just so many areas that need to be addressed. I understand the intent of the bill, but the question is: what are going to be the results? Are the outcomes going to match the intent? I just have to say that, no, I don't see how they are, any more than gun control and registering long guns have reduced the incidence of guns and those areas with that.

It's interesting. There's no question that we have a dilemma and need some tools to deal with, in fact, the gangs and those members who come into a bar and want to boast or act invincible because they're wearing body armour. I think that we should be able to pass legislation so that when someone comes in making threats or making intimidations and is wearing body armour – we could pass legislation that would allow for some pretty steep fines or some strict penalties, some time in jail for individuals that were wearing it and making threats.

I do not see the value in having to go through a process in order to get hold of body armour, especially when it comes to the question of: is this going to stop gang members from using it? In a small way maybe it might, but I think it just increases the black market, actually adds to their economic activities that go on when we have to register or have to have special – what would I say? – licensing to get hold of body armour.

I don't see how this is going to be a real tool that's going to in fact help the police deal with gangs. That's the number one reason that we hear, that this is a tool in order to address the gang activities. Again, it's been brought up several times by many members here in this House about these individuals that are going into a public place, bragging that they have on body armour, and making those threats.

Like I say, let's address that issue, that problem, not a general one that says: well, you no longer are able to get body armour or wear it unless you have a special licence. Again, you know, I understand the importance, that as a society safety is always a critical issue that we try and look at to ensure that our citizens are safe. Like I say, it does allow the police to have this tool where they can pull someone over to see: well, are you licensed to have this vest?

I think that this, then, opens up the next problem. I think it'll be amazing how many individuals will be able to go and get a licence and say, "Well, I've had threats on my life," on these other activities or whatever it is, be able to get a licence to get body armour even though their intent and their use are going to be illegal otherwise. Then we're going to be in a situation where it's legally acceptable because they've used the legal process to acquire a bulletproof vest or a stab-proof vest.

I just would urge the members of the House to reconsider the purpose of this bill. Is it in fact going to address the gang problems that we have? Like I say, in my mind, as I try and think through the process and how those people who want them are going to acquire them, I think they're going to have the loopholes to be able to get them. You know, I just have to wonder: what are we really going to accomplish in this other than restrict people who might for whatever reason want to get body armour and be nervous, not wanting to go and get licensed and going through the questions or whatever else? Again, I just think this is government taking a step that is too far, unnecessary. [interjection] Well, I know you can get one.

Mr. Chair, we just really need to look at it and say: "Is this going to stop the gangs? Is it going to stop someone from going into a bar?" Like I say, my thought process as I go through is that, yes, it might reduce a few, but the biggest concern I have is that it's going to increase the economic activity of those on how to get a vest.

Ms Blakeman: Black market vests.

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

Again, though, the experts are a whole group of people that are going to provide the legitimate reasons in order for someone to get a vest. Like I say, those whom we least want to have them will probably get registered, get licensed, and will be wearing these. I'd urge the members of the House to vote against this bill. It's unnecessary. It doesn't accomplish what we need.

Then the other area to look at. When we start making these lists and the cost in maintaining them and who's going to want to access those lists, again for the poor reasons that they want to do this, we're jeopardizing the system. Again, we have limited funds here in the province. We're not able to fund the police forces the way they want. They're always asking for more money, looking for new tools, new equipment, yet we're going to go sideways here and say: "Well, if we do these things, it's going to be a benefit. It's not going to cost very much."

Again, I'd just go back to what we've learned with the long gun registry: "This will only be a million or two." It's been over a billion. Everybody says: "Oh, no. This is going to be a simple process; you know, the papers. It's not going to be expensive." But the fact of the matter is that we're going to have to hire people in order to process the paperwork to do this. Those could be two people that could be out on the street, two people that could be actually assigned to gang activity. Maybe it's one person; maybe it's 20. I don't know how many it's going to be. It's hard to envision the demand or what's going to happen here. Again, I just think we need to focus. What is it that we want to do? This is a Band-Aid solution. I think the Band-Aid is going to fall off fairly quickly, and we're going to say: well, what have we accomplished here?

Again, I'd just urge the members to reconsider. What is this bill's intent? Is it going to accomplish those things? I don't believe it will. This isn't the tool that we want to give police officers to go after the gangs and those people that are going into public areas and putting on the body armour and making those threats. That's who we want to target. That's where we need a law. Those people that are acting aggressively, making threats in public, and wearing body armour: we want to penalize them. I hope that the members of the House will vote against this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to reiterate my opposition to this bill. Again, I just don't understand. The inconsistency just confuses me. I really do want to honestly hear a response to this from government members if any of them are willing to do it. I mean, most of the members on that side of the House, I would say the vast majority of them, opposed the long gun registry out of Ottawa. I know most, if not all, the rural MLAs certainly did. I'm assuming most of them over there – I don't have, you know, the record about that for every single MLA, but my guess, my sense was that most of them, if not the vast majority of them, were opposed to that.

Here we have a long gun registry in Canada that we've been fighting as a province against for a very long time. There, of course, you have it brought in by the eastern, federal Liberal Party, and they wanted every long gun to be registered. They thought that that would somehow curb crime and gun shootings in the cities or in the country. As we all know, it was a huge debacle. It was supposed to be just a few million dollars to set this registry up, and it turned into a billion-dollar boondoggle. It was a total failure. It didn't do anything to curb crime, all that sort of thing. So we have this, and rightfully we were opposed to it as a province. Most of the MLAs, anyway, in this Assembly across the way were opposed to it.

Now we move over to body armour. I have absolutely no problem with saying that if someone is using body armour in the furtherance of or carrying out of a crime or a gang shooting or something, I have absolutely no issue with tacking on an extra dollar amount or an extra jail time or whatever to say that that's not allowable. I understand what the police are trying to achieve there, and I would support that.

How do we then jump from that, which is a good goal, a laudable goal, and say: "Look. You know what? In order to enforce this, we're going to make sure that every single person who owns body armour has to license it." It just doesn't make any sense whatsoever. It's the same issue. Criminals are not going to license their body armour. What gang member is going to go and license his body armour? It just doesn't add up. It's absolutely a contradiction to say that you oppose the gun registry, but you're in favour of the body armour licensing registry. You've got, you know, some members saying: oh, the registry is different than licensing. No, it is not. It costs money to do this. You have to set up the process; you have to track it. We're against the long gun registry, but we're for a body armour registry. It makes no sense, Mr. Chair.

I'd like to hear from the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on this issue, why he supports the body armour registry. I'd like to hear from the hon. minister of agriculture on why he supports the body armour registry. I definitely would love to hear from the Minister of Transportation on why he is in favour of the body armour registry and how he thinks this is any different from the long gun registry, which I know he's opposed to. It just makes no sense. The Deputy Premier: I'd like to get his thoughts on it. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: I want to know his thoughts on that. Obviously, I know he's against the long gun registry. I know that. Why is he going to vote for this bill, or is he going to vote for this bill? The inconsistency is just through the roof.

I understand what they're trying to do. They're trying to make it difficult. They don't want people walking in, gang members walking into bars with body armour and intimidating everybody and all that sort of thing. I understand that. That's fine. The answer to that is not to make everybody, all law-abiding citizens who want to use it . . . [interjection] Well, I know it's difficult for someone like yourself, Minister, to understand, but there are a lot of people that make their living in very dangerous environments. For example, some people live in rough areas of town, and they feel better if they put on a vest because they think their 7-Eleven or somewhere might get ripped off. They might want to wear a piece of body armour. So now they have to register it? Come on. There's no point to this.

Just because members of this Assembly don't wear it doesn't mean that others don't want to wear it. I mean, there are websites you can go to and buy this stuff, so there's obviously a market for it. You know, it's not just police officers buying it. But the gang member who buys this stuff is not going to go and register it.

That's not what happened with the long gun registry. With the long gun registry at the very least you could say, well, at least you were registering something that could shoot somebody. Absolutely. A gun can obviously be used to kill somebody. There's no doubt about that. So there was that excuse. It didn't work. It was a bad idea. Most of us here were opposed to it. But at least you had that legitimate excuse that, yes, this is a weapon that can kill someone. But body armour? Mr. Chair, how is body armour going to kill somebody? Body armour is meant to protect people.

What are we going to register next? Are we going to register – I don't know – knives? Are we going to register mace? You know, a young lady who wants to go jogging and likes to bring mace with her – I know my wife takes mace with her in her little pack when she's out on her jog. And many, many people do the same thing. So why would we make that something you would need to register? You wouldn't do it. It's absolutely ridiculous that we're taking something that is essentially a protective device, something that is meant to protect people's lives, and we're making it essentially something that people, law-abiding citizens, have to go and register. That's certainly not the right thing to do by any stretch.

Again, I'd like to hear from the various different ministers. I'd like to hear from the minister of housing. I know he was dead against the long gun registry, so why is he for the body armour licensing registry? Definitely the Member for Battle River-Wainwright was against the long gun registry. What's changed, in his view, that he would support the body armour registry? It doesn't make any sense whatsoever.

It's a boondoggle. It's a waste of money. If we're going to expend resources, we should be expending resources on hiring more officers. If we're going to set aside however many millions of dollars it's going to be to administer this, we should instead take that money and put it into new Internet child exploitation teams, ICE teams, in other words. We should put it into more officers. We should put it into other things. There are about 30 other law enforcement mechanisms that we should be putting money into rather than expending money on registering protective body armour.

With that, I would like to get some answers from the government side. I don't know if they will or not. At least just give me the justification for why you would support this bill, but you didn't support the long gun registry. I find those positions to be very inconsistent.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on Bill 12? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Securities Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 13, the Alberta Securities Amendment Act, 2010. I was pleased to see that there were no issues raised at second reading, so I'd like to take a moment to remind members of the purpose of this bill. Bill 13 continues the work that Alberta has done in modernizing, streamlining, and harmonizing securities legislation over the past five years under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. As such, this bill includes amendments that ensure Alberta assists Canada in meeting its international commitments that strengthen regulatory enforcement and then further harmonize the registration regime in support of the passport system.

In terms of specifics, section 16 of the bill deals with the regulation of credit-rating organizations. What Bill 13 will do is adopt a new framework for regulating credit-rating organizations, the same framework that will be adopted across Canada. This new framework will require credit-rating organizations that want to be able to rate certain products and others that rely on that rating for regulatory purposes to meet the framework's criteria and apply to have the organization designated. This is key to strengthening the Alberta Securities Commission's ability to protect investors.

Bill 13 also contains amendments related to Canada's conversion to international financial reporting standards, or IFRS. IFRS is fast becoming the global language of accounting for public entities, making it easier to conduct business internationally and to raise funds through easier access to global markets. The move to IFRS will mean that our issuers' financial information will be readily comparable with issuers in other countries. The amendments in sections 2, 4, 8, 20, and 21 of the bill will facilitate the move to IFRS by January 1, 2011, by replacing existing terms with IFRS terms where necessary. This may seem like a minor point, but it's needed to help ensure a smooth transition for all involved.

Other amendments in Bill 13 are focused on regulatory enforcement. Sections 6, 7, and 10 to 13 will make sure that our legislation continues to be harmonized, streamlined, and up to date. This includes an amendment to strengthen regulatory enforcement to provide a timely means of dealing with issuers that refuse to rectify, clarify, or explain misleading disclosure. This will be done by broadening the powers of the Alberta Securities Commission and its executive director to issue a cease-trade order in instances of faulty disclosure. Again, this is about protecting investors. Investors need to have adequate, appropriate information on investment products so they can determine the risks involved and if the investment is right for them.

Moving along, section 17 of Bill 13 provides for further registration reform. These amendments will ensure that Alberta registration provisions are fully harmonized with the registration provisions elsewhere across Canada. Essentially we'll be replacing the term "deal in securities" with trading in securities as adopted by other jurisdictions and harmonizing the definition of dealer. We need to be sure we're speaking the same language as our counterparts, which will keep our dealings with other jurisdictions co-ordinated and co-operative.

Finally, section 19 of the bill deals with cost recovery. Currently there is an artificial distinction between costs associated with an investigation and those of a hearing. The amendment will make it easier for the Alberta Securities Commission to recover costs in the case of a person or company who has been found in contravention of Alberta's securities laws.

Before I conclude, I'd like to touch briefly on Alberta's constitutional challenge of the move to a national securities regulator. During second reading the rationale behind why we launched our reference and why we joined Quebec's reference was explained. I'm pleased to say that Quebec has agreed to join in our reference, sending a strong message of support for provincial jurisdiction over securities regulation. Intervening in support of each other's constitutional reference allows the two provinces to share resources and co-operate in addressing this important constitutional question.

As you've heard, Bill 13 is intended to help keep our securities legislation as up to date as possible. This requires ongoing reform, and as Alberta is the second-largest capital market in Canada, it's vital that we continue to show global leadership. This is important for Alberta, and this is important for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon at committee on Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010. I certainly appreciate the efforts of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South regarding this bill. I appreciate his remarks. Certainly, whenever we look at this amendment as presented by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise – and I understand it, again, to harmonize the passport system that originated with the memorandum of understanding from 2004 between the federal and the provincial governments and that the province of Ontario was excluded in that. Since then there have been changes, changes politically and changes to many different financial regulations.

The amendments in Bill 13 also support Canada's conversion to the international financial reporting standards. We are creating also a framework here, as I said earlier, for regulating credit-rating organizations. We will allow the Alberta Securities Commission to impose sanctions for late filing of disclosure. That is more similar to the model in British Columbia. Also, as the hon. member noted, there are further amendments to ensure that Alberta's registration regime is harmonized with other provinces.

It is our view that we should support this bill. There are some outstanding issues regarding securities regulation that I think we need to discuss. I think we're going to see more changes, more amendments.

These amendments will allow for the harmonization or mutual recognition of securities regulators in Canada through the passport system. Every year for the last six years, as I understand it, we have made amendments to security legislation across the country to bring the language in the legislation onto a common baseline. There is a lot of discussion, a lot of back and forth between the provinces over the legislative changes as one province would amend their legislation and then others would have to re-amend their legislation to bring it in line with the others and so on. The passport system is continually updated and harmonized as other provinces amend their securities legislation.

This bill – and we've got to point this out, Mr. Chairman – does not address the idea of a national securities regulator, but it is interesting to note there are currently 13 provincial and territorial securities regulators across Canada rather than a single national regulator. Now, Mr. Flaherty, the federal Finance minister, has been quoted as saying that Canada is the only industrialized country without a single securities regulator, and the Globe and Mail reported that Canada is one of only two countries in the 103-member International Organization of Securities Commissions without a national overseer.

Over the last few years all of the provinces, as I said earlier, excluding Ontario, had begun implementing a passport system which mutually recognizes the rules within each provincial regulator in order to facilitate transactions across borders. The federal government has been advocating for a national regulator, with resistance from B.C., Alberta, and, of course, as the hon. member noted, Quebec. B.C. has recently softened to the idea, but Alberta and Quebec continue to oppose the implementation of a national regulator. Over a year ago, in January 2009, a federal report led by a former Conservative minister, Tom Hockin, was released that recommended a national regulator, including provisions meant to accommodate the concerns raised in western Canada and Quebec such as regional offices being established in Vancouver, Calgary, and Montreal and a provision to allow provinces to opt in to the single regulator.

There was also a recommendation for a market participant opt-in for registrants and issuers who could elect to be regulated by the federal regulator. The current Minister of International and Inter-governmental Relations, as I understand it, responded by threatening legal action if national regulation is implemented, claiming it would be an infringement on provincial jurisdiction and that a regulator centralized in Ontario would not understand the unique market circumstances within Alberta. I can understand a bit of that, where the hon. minister would be coming from, particularly with the energy sector, particularly the junior oil and gas sector, in Calgary. They have certainly pointed out where their needs to raise money are unique to Alberta. But we certainly didn't have to wait long, of course, for our province to react and to challenge through the judicial system. [interjections] I believe they're talking about the airport tunnel in Calgary, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Anyway, keep talking with me, Member, and hopefully the other members will sort of quiet down so we can hear each other.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Chairman, before Christmas we found out that Alberta is to launch a court challenge over the federal move to create a national securities regulator. It's interesting – I know this is in the courts, and it will be winding its way through the courts – to see the political dynamics of this. You have the Conservative Prime Minister from Calgary. You have the Conservative finance minister in this government also from Calgary. Yet we find ourselves launching a court challenge provincially over the federal government's initiative to create this national securities regulator.

I can remember campaigning during the Calgary-Glenmore by-election. I don't want to keep bringing this up, but I happened upon a couple of houses, and the residents were very, very upset over the changes to some of the income trusts. Those changes, of course, had been initiated by the Conservative Prime Minister. These individuals took exception to that major change to income trusts. They expressed their opinion, as I recall, very, very vividly about this. I thought: hmm, what's this all going to mean?

I know people – and I can appreciate this – watch their investments very, very closely and can be very, very disappointed when for one reason or another, without any sort of formal announcement, there are changes; the playing field is changed. They may lose a significant part of their investment as a result of that. That's why we have to have a regulatory system that people have confidence in.

Certainly, these investors did not have confidence in the initiative that was originally started by the Conservative Prime Minister. How this relationship with our minister of finance is going to help or hinder further negotiations around whether this is provincial jurisdiction or a federal intrusion into provincial jurisdictions is going to be interesting to see. We know the Alberta government is going to the Court of Appeal here in the province to test the constitutional soundness of the federal government's move to create a single Canadian securities regulator. It's going to be interesting to see how this plays out.

According to the Alberta Finance and Enterprise broadsheet here, Securities regulation is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, and acknowledging federal authority in this area would have implications in other areas of financial regulation that have historically been provincial responsibility . . . The interests of Albertans and the Alberta capital market are best served by the existing regulatory structure. There is no need for this intrusion into provincial jurisdiction.

We're sort of unique here, Mr. Chairman. We're the only province or state, as a matter of fact, with our own state-owned bank, the Alberta Treasury Branches. I don't know if that's what the hon. minister was referring to or not, but that's an interesting take on this. How do we regulate that? What do outsiders or others think about us? You know, we're known for our free enterprise and independent spirit, yet we have a state-owned bank.

Alberta, as I understand it, is also intervening – and the hon. Member for Red Deer-South brought this up – in support of a similar challenge by the provincial government in Quebec to the Quebec Court of Appeal.

Joining with Quebec will allow the two provinces to share resources and co-operate in other aspects of the two cases. It also sends a stronger message of opposition to the federal plans [of Mr. Harper and Mr. Flaherty].

Alberta will argue the federal move to enact federal securities legislation and establish a single national securities regulator represents an unwarranted expansion of the federal trade and commerce constitutional power, opening the door to the federal regulation of other areas that have historically been regulated by the provinces. This could impact many areas that are currently considered to be matters of [exclusive] provincial responsibility. It could also hinder investment opportunities for small Alberta businesses.

Well, I hope not. I certainly hope that's not the case. I think the best thing we can do to enhance investment opportunities for small businesses is to keep our taxes low and competitive with the jurisdictions around us and ensure that we have a competitive economic playing field.

The federal [Conservative] government has announced its intention to ask the Supreme Court of Canada to confirm that it has the power to enact comprehensive legislation regulating securities. However, as it may be many months before [the federal government gets around to initiating this call], Alberta is moving forward now with its own reference and its intervention in Quebec's reference.

The province here certainly believes that this is an intrusion into an important area of provincial jurisdiction. We will see how this plays out in the courts.

Other than going to court, we certainly have other ways of dealing with this matter, in my view, legislative processes. It is odd – I shall put it to you this way, Mr. Chairman – that there would be this extreme difference of opinion between the federal Conservatives and their provincial cousins here in this province. My heart on this matter is with the provincial cousins because I think they are doing the right thing to just look at what is a provincial responsibility and what is a federal responsibility. This may take time, and it may cost money, but I think it's in the best interests of this province to follow that legal route.

Now, certainly, Mr. Chairman, when we look at the issue of the national securities regulator, it will unfold as these court cases wind their way through. I would think that it'll be next year and the year after that where we will have a similar amendment to what we're dealing with now to the securities legislation to reflect the yearly changes that occur. We know what people in the international investment community say, and we know how they feel regarding securities regulation. Certainly, they want to see a single regulator for this country. I don't know if that's an exceptionally good idea.

I know there are those who say: yes, we've got to get with the times, and the proposed regional offices will work just fine. But I'm in the wait-and-see mode because there are those, whether they're in London, England, or in New York City or in Hong Kong, that would take exception to the idea or the statement from any individual that securities regulation has been working smoothly, that investors' interests are being looked after.

Certainly, that is not the case. We only have to look at the newspapers in the last couple of days and read about the activities at Goldman Sachs. We look at these activities, and we look at the accusations that have been made. That erodes investor confidence, Mr. Chairman.

You know, whenever someone from Brussels or someone from London or anywhere else, as a matter of fact, suggests that, well, maybe because we have this system that has one regulator here and another regulator there instead of a nationally co-ordinated regulatory body – maybe that's not as bad as it sounds. The economic storm that was caused because of inadequate or lax regulations or regulations that were not being enforced by the authorities in the financial sector created many problems, as we all know, but in this country we have been luckier than most.

I can remember vividly in the mid-90s, when the neo-cons were talking about deregulating the financial sector in this country, Mr. Chairman. Fortunately, it was Mr. Chrétien and Mr. Martin who thought: no, we have to keep a regulatory regime that is tight and is enforceable. I think history has proven them to be right.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. I will cede the floor to another hon. member. I believe that Bill 13 is a bill that should be supported. There are routine changes in this, but there are also some very interesting amendments. We will see how they work in the future. We will also see what happens as the province of Quebec's initiative winds through the courts and also the federal government's reference to the Supreme Court. We'll see how all this works out, but we'll probably be back here this time next year to make additional changes as necessary to the securities law.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Hearing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Hearing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 9
Local Authorities Election Statutes
Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, as proposed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. Certainly, the passing and proclamation of the private member's Bill 203 stirred up a frenzy among municipalities. That frenzy, in my view, was justified. This legislation is intended to avoid some of the problems that municipalities identified, in particular a candidate's own campaign funds up to $10,000, the volunteer services, the question of campaigns funds, and the limits on contributions on an annual, not a campaign period, basis. I certainly heard last year from various municipal leaders. They weren't satisfied with that private member's bill, and we have this bill before us now.

I had an opportunity to talk about this bill earlier. I had some questions around the consultation process regarding that private member's bill. We can see clearly where, you know, the government is making an effort. This is a legislative repair job. Hopefully, if the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, as we see it, is passed, it will be viewed as fair by municipal levels of government and all those individuals who would care to run for an elected position in any one of those elected governments.

I'm of the view, Mr. Chairman, that we in this Assembly should ensure that our own financial records and our own contributions are completely above board. I would like to see all the financial statements before we tell civic politicians what they can and cannot do. We should be ensuring that our books are in order. I brought this up many times in this Assembly before.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would just encourage, advise all hon. members of this Assembly that at any time they can go to Elections Alberta, go to the reading room, and they can have a look through the files that are there for each year going back, I think, into the '70s. Certainly, the records that are there, the financial statements, the disclosures that are there: we should read them. We should ask ourselves some questions after we read those disclosure statements because, in my view, going through some of them, there are outstanding questions.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, we're telling civic politicians what they can and cannot do. At the same time, we can have some constituency associations for some parties and some members that during the year have budgets. I can't imagine what that's like. We usually raise money and try to save as much as is possible for preparations for the next election. Some constituencies have expenditures in the thousands of dollars a year. Some constituencies have sums in excess of $50,000, $60,000. Some of them have a hundred thousand dollars that are invested. I have no problem with that. Some of it is in GICs. Some of it is in trust accounts.

Exactly where does the money go that's spent, Mr. Chairman, by a constituency association? Some sums are quite large. I can see $1,500 to rent a hall and have a volunteer party for constituency volunteers, the ones that are working on the association, something like that, but there are amounts in the thousands of dollars in some constituencies. We have no idea where it's going, and we should have a process that outlines where it goes. Does it go for travel expenses for the member? Does it go for travel expenses for the executive? Is it going to send people to political conventions? Is it paying for their registration? Is it paying for their hotels? All this money is made through donations. Many of these donations have a tax break associated with them, so it wouldn't be unusual to ask for the details of where this money goes, but we don't do it.

The Progressive Conservatives' foundation fund is another example of a fund that for a number of years wasn't reported accurately and according to the act, yet we can see fit to tell civic politicians what they can and cannot do. I think it's a double standard, and I would just like to point that out.

At some time, hopefully over the summer, I'm going to get an opportunity to go back to Elections Alberta and have a look at some of the disclosure statements. I would love to sit down with the new Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta. Hopefully, he can address some of my concerns because there are some issues there that either I'm not understanding, or we have a very, very lax process. I think we should fix our own books before we tell others what they can and cannot do.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, it's 7:30. The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Very briefly, I'm pleased to hear that an amendment was accepted this afternoon to allow the disenfranchised or the homeless to actually participate in the important enfranchisement of having a vote. I think that was very progressive legislation, and I'm pleased to hear that it went forward.

Briefly, my concerns are what is not in this particular bill such as fixed election dates, concerns over leadership financing. However, I do want to note and I am very pleased that the issue with regard to leadership financing rules, disclosure, accountability, and transparency has been passed along by the Minister of Justice to committee – I believe it's the Standing Committee on the Economy – to come up with solutions and improve the transparency and accountability process. Therefore, I think that's a major step in the right direction.

What I would have liked to have seen also in Bill 7 would have been moving toward a citizens' assembly with the thought of at least having for discussion proportional representation because this first past the post system is not involving a sufficient number of Albertans. The fact that only 41 per cent participated in the last election was an all-time Canadian low as well as a provincial low.

So Bill 7 is a start, but with Lorne Gibson being basically summarily dismissed and his 189 recommendations, very few of which appear in this bill, not being taken into account, I believe that democracy in Alberta could be better served.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. members, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you. Mr. Chairman and hon. members, it's my pleasure this evening to introduce to you 29 students from various high schools across Alberta who are participating in the Forum for Young Albertans program. They are accompanied by their seven chaperones. The Forum for Young Albertans is a nonpartisan political learning opportunity for Alberta high school students. The program provides a wide variety of experiences for participants, including insight into the judicial system, the role of the bureaucracy, the function of interest groups, and the legislative process. The Speaker met with the students this morning in the Chamber, and this evening the Deputy Speaker enjoyed a dinner together with these students. These students will be meeting with many other members throughout the week. I'd ask the students and chaperones seated in the members' gallery to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: I'll speak in third. I'm okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is all about the democratic process and about how we can make our democracy more transparent, make it stronger, make it more fair. I understand that, and I do actually applaud the government on several of the amendments in the bill as I think they are a step in the right direction. Of course, there are many things that we think are omitted. In order to put that into context, I feel that it is necessary to talk a little bit about the state of our democracy from my perspective. I know very clearly that there are hon. members of this Assembly that will disagree with my assessment of the state of our democracy. That's fair. Thankfully, we have a democracy that we can debate in and that we can have differences of opinion in, and this is all good.

There are things that I do not think are very healthy in our democratic system, and there are things that need to be addressed. I felt so strongly about that, Mr. Chair, that I left the governing PC caucus and became a member of the Wildrose Alliance caucus a few short months ago. I did not do this on a whim. It's something I thought about very deeply, and it was, without doubt, the hardest, most difficult decision in a lot of ways that I've ever had to make. I wanted to comment on that, and I wanted to talk about that in order that I could put on the record for this Assembly and for people listening and for my constituents the reasons why I made the decision that I did. This, of course, will set the context for the rest of the discussion, the points that I want to bring up later on Bill 7.

With that, I'm going to read excerpts from my statement on why I made the decision that I did three short months ago so that we can better understand some of the flaws that I think should be addressed in Bill 7 and should be addressed as we move forward as a Legislature. So here we go.

As has been reported, I have made the decision to join the Wildrose Alliance [caucus and] Party.

Leaving the PC Party was a very difficult decision for me and my family. We value the friendships we have with many of our former caucus colleagues, party members and their families, and know that some may feel upset with [this] decision.

Ultimately, however, my political loyalties reside with the people of . . . Alberta and especially with those in the constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere who elected me to represent them. And it is principally to all of those that I wish to explain my decision to cross the floor.

Most Albertans will be disappointed to know that [in my view] politics in our province has evolved into a process that is almost completely undemocratic. Not only are there [rarely] free votes in the Legislature, there are very few free votes [from my point of view] in caucus. Virtually all legislation is created and developed by various unelected government appointees with direction from the Premier and a small cadre of Cabinet Ministers whose distinguishing attribute is unconditional allegiance to [their leader]. All other elected MLAs [in my experience] generally have little, if any, real input into the [major] decisions that impact the lives of their constituents.

Final government decisions are highly influenced by the Premier's chief-of-staff . . . This unelected [government appointee] is now paid more than the Premier (nearly $400,000 per year) and has effectively been given the power to override the views of the elected caucus [in some situations]. As a result, [Albertans] essentially have governance [at times] by bureaucratic fiat rather than by [the people's] democratically elected representatives.

Predictably, this undemocratic system has resulted in policies that are contrary to the small-c conservative sensibilities of most Albertans. From massive royalty hikes on our energy entrepreneurs, to awarding untendered transmission line contracts worth billions of dollars, [to the return to debt financing], to failing to protect the rights of free speech of our citizens, to behind-closed-doors salary increases, to the highly questionable $2 billion carbon capture and storage experiment (I could go on) – the advice and words of warning from many caucus MLAs have been largely ignored and dismissed, and extremely poor policy decisions have resulted.

Equally disturbing is that [the Premier and his inner circle] considers it a serious offence if elected MLAs speak up publicly for their constituents. By way of example, [the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo], a former Cabinet Minister . . . was ejected from . . . caucus . . . for simply speaking up [on behalf of] his most vulnerable constituents.

In response to publicly suggesting the need for improved fiscal responsibility, I and [some of] the other so-called "Fiscal Seven" had our positions within government [at the time] threatened . . . Even behind closed doors, MLAs who contradict the . . . chief-of-staff, the Premier, or a prominent Minister [in my experience were] often derided, shouted down, and threatened with having their political careers limited in some fashion.

Simply put, [it is my belief that] our system of governance has become entirely dysfunctional and is not something I can continue to be part of. Over the past two years, I committed myself to trying to make a positive impact within the government caucus [by advocating for the views and needs of my constituents, both in private and in public]. This is what the citizens of Alberta pay me to do.

That is what my constituents expect of me. I believe that defending poor public policy that has been developed by a small band of [largely] out-of-touch government appointees [and insiders, would be a poor investment of my life and of taxpayers' money.]

I . . . entered public life to try to make a difference for our province. I believe, with the right leadership, Alberta can become an example to the world of the unparalleled success that [comes from] protecting economic and individual freedoms, adhering to principles of fiscal and personal responsibility and remaining true to authentic democratic values.

These are principles I believe in. They are also principles held by the majority of my constituents who entrusted me with the honour of representing them. I have therefore determined that I will support the political party that best reflects and respects those principles.

In the Wildrose Alliance, I see a party which understands [and a caucus which understands] that the role of elected representatives is to vote in the best interests of their constituents, rather than to inform constituents of their [political] party's talking points.

I see in [the Wildrose leader] Danielle Smith a leader who is articulate, competent and committed to the modern, small-c conservative principles that I and the majority of my constituents hold dear.

And it is for [this reason] that I have decided to leave the Alberta PC Party [and caucus] and join Danielle Smith's Wildrose Alliance.

I, again, Mr. Chair, feel that this is an extremely important decision that I had to make. There were many that felt when I crossed the floor that I should resign and a by-election should be held in my constituency. I considered that a lot, and of course I've issued a challenge to the governing caucus, to the Premier, on that matter, which I'll talk about in a second. I wanted to address why – and this actually directly affects Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act – our system needs a little bit of work and why we've kind of gotten the role of an elected representative mixed up and turned around a little bit. So I again would read into the record excerpts of a piece entitled: why a by-election would not be in the best interests of my constituents. I will let them decide whether to agree with it or not.

Last week [at the time] I decided to leave the PC Party and join the Wildrose Alliance. As I explained in my public statement, I did this because I feel by doing so I will be able to more effectively represent and advocate for the needs and views of my constituents.

I did not make this decision in isolation. Over the past six months alone, I have had many hundreds of active PC Party members express to me that they had completely lost confidence in the current government. A significant number of these encouraged me to consider a different party affiliation – one that would more closely reflect small-c conservative values.

In the first two days after publicly announcing my decision, I received over 500 emails and phone calls from constituents on this matter. The vast majority of these have expressed agreement with my decision. Extensive polling conducted in the constituency over the last week has confirmed this overwhelming support.

However, some of those who do not support my decision have suggested that I should resign my seat and hold a by-election. Others feel I should sit as an Independent until the next election is called.

I carefully considered both of these options in the days and weeks leading up to my decision to cross the floor and came to the firm conclusion that both options were unacceptable. I wish to explain this conclusion.

On one level, I would be happy to contest a by-election. As stated earlier, constituent feedback and polling point to the likelihood of an overwhelming Wildrose Alliance victory should such an election be called.

The problem is that if I were to resign my seat, election law states that a by-election would not need to be called for 6 months. Assuming the Premier would likely delay the date as long as possible in hopes of recovering his Party's failing popularity [in this area], this would mean my constituents would be left without an MLA for 6 months. I receive hundreds of inquiries each week from constituents with a diverse range of concerns, varying from needing to access programs for the disabled to providing input for a Government Bill before the Legislature. To deny my constituents this representation (especially during the critical spring budget session of the Legislature) would be undemocratic and irresponsible.

I also felt that sitting as an Independent would be a mistake. My job is to represent the needs and views of my constituents in the most effective way possible. As an Independent, I would not have the opportunity to ask daily questions in question period. I would have less government resources at my disposal to fight for the infrastructure, policies and other initiatives those I represent wish me to advocate for. I therefore determined this option would also not be in my constituents' best interests.

And that brings me to my last, and potentially, most important point. As I've explained, one of the key reasons for my leaving the PC Party was due to the unacceptable concentration of decision-making power in the Premier's small (and largely unelected) inner circle. It is a widely accepted and unfortunate fact that Canada's Premiers and Prime Ministers hold more executive power than almost any comparable elected office in the world; even more than the Office of the President of the United States [for example].

We saw this power used a few months ago when the Premier ejected [the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo] from caucus for simply defending the needs of his senior constituents. On this basis, it would appear that the government feels that kicking out an elected MLA against his will (and without a vote by caucus) is democratic, but an MLA voluntarily leaving his Party in order to better represent his constituents is not.

One of the few checks on the power of the Premier's Office is the ability of an elected MLA to leave the caucus and sit with another party that better reflects the views and desires of his constituents. Whether it be incompetence, a lack of democracy, repeated poor policy decisions [or any other reason], an elected representative in our system needs to be able to say to the government, "You have failed my constituents – and on their behalf, I will sit with another group that allows me to better represent their rights and their views."

Under our system, we elect individuals, not political parties, to represent our interests in government. And representing my constituents' interests above that of a party is precisely why I have made the decision to cross the floor to the Wildrose Alliance.

Mr. Chairman, those are a couple of the statements that were made after that difficult decision, and I felt that they needed to be put on the record just so that there was a record of why I conducted the activity and why I did what I did.

Since that time, of course, there have been government members, specifically ministers, that have again asked that I run in a by-election. So my final piece – and, I'm sure, thankfully, for many of you – is my challenge to the Premier on that. I'll leave with this, and we can move on to fixed election dates and other fun things.

My Challenge to the Premier.

Democracy in our province is hurting.

[In the] last election Alberta had the lowest voter turnout in Canadian history. There is almost universal cynicism towards elected officials and their intentions [which is unfortunate and untrue.] And there is a prevailing feeling that the average Albertan has no voice or influence on the provincial issues that affect them personally.

We need democratic renewal in the worst way.

A couple of months ago I crossed the floor to Danielle Smith's Wildrose Alliance – a party I feel will, if elected by Albertans, usher in an unprecedented wave of democratic reform and government transparency.

Although I am confident the vast majority of my constituents support my decision to cross the floor, several individuals (including Cabinet Ministers in [the Premier's] government) have challenged me to step down and run in a by-election.

Initially, I chose not to do so because it would mean leaving my riding (the second most populous in Alberta) without representation for 6 months; and frankly, because I think an MLA should be able, on behalf of his constituents, to leave a party that [he or she feels] is incompetent and failing those that MLA represents.

That said, I wish to issue a challenge to the Premier and his government should they feel so strongly about the need for a by-election.

I will agree to resign and hold a by-election under the following conditions:

- First, so we don't waste taxpayer money, the Premier needs to announce the by-election on the same day as municipal elections to be held this fall (Oct. 18th). I will resign my seat exactly one day prior to the Premier dropping the election writ (this date must also be mutually agreed to) so he can call the election under current by-election law.
- Second, in order that Alberta retains full Senate representation in Ottawa starting in 2011 when Senator Tommy Banks retires, the Premier must call for a Senate election on that same day (Oct. 18th). This will also save taxpayer money. So far the Premier has refused to commit to Senate elections in the fall which means Albertans will be underrepresented starting in 2011 – this is unacceptable; and
- Lastly, we need to start addressing the democratic deficit in this province. I would therefore request the Premier fix an exact election date in 2012 (whatever date he wants is fine).

I'll give the Premier until the end of spring session to take me up on this deal – so he's got [a lot] of time to think about it.

Hopefully, at least some good for our democracy (i.e. senate elections and fixed election dates) will come of this.

Mr. Chair, I thank you for this opportunity to put these things on the record. I know that they're not the easiest things for some people in this Chamber to listen to, so I do thank the members opposite for grinning and bearing it. They are things I feel very passionately about.

It should be noted, too, that despite all that has been said in this Chamber back and forth and despite what many people may believe, I actually do have a great deal of respect for members opposite and members of all parties as I believe that we are here for the right reasons by and large. We're here to try to make a difference for Albertans and for our constituents. Although I do not agree with the methods employed by the government at this time – I don't condone them – and I think they are out of touch and they need to improve in the way that they conduct our democracy, I don't for a minute want anyone to feel that I think of them as any lesser people or anything like that. I know they're here for the right reasons and they're good folks, even the hon. minister over there, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, although it's a little shaky from time to time.

With that, I will sit down, and we can get back to the debate on Bill 7. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I feel that we need to go over a few more things one last time as we're debating Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I think the most important thing in a democracy is having a fair election. There are many things in this bill that set out and clarify some of the situations that have been in question before or challenged, and those are all good, but there are still some areas that concern me, and I feel that they need to be addressed.

One that I spoke about earlier – and many members have, but I want to address it once more – is the concern under section 4.1(1), test of new equipment and procedures. I'm very concerned with the latitude that's allowed in this area. I think that one of the things that really needs to be in there – and I hope that being on the record, the Chief Electoral Officer will look back and look at this. There needs to be a mechanism of tracing the actual vote. When we talk about electronic voting, you know, whether we're going to be able to do it in the future with our cellphone or other things, the problem and what we need to make sure that we avoid is, in fact: is it traceable? Is there evidence of the way people actually voted?

I know over in Europe it's quite amazing that the cellphone is becoming almost their lifeline. They can go up to vending machines; they can go golfing. They just literally dial in, and they're able to buy their pop, buy a sandwich, go to a movie. It's quite interesting how they're transforming into an electronic world.

Ms Pastoor: Every marketing firm knows what they've done.

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The problem with voting is that there's no evidence, and we need to know that when someone goes in and votes, there is a scrutineer, that they can challenge it, that they can check it and make sure that it's right. This is a real concern to me going forward, that this bill still allows the Chief Electoral Officer to make that option and say: well, we want to go strictly electronic. If it's not traceable, to me it's not acceptable. We need to be able to track that back, and the individual should be able to know that their vote is going to count.

If we want electronic counting, that's very different. Whether you use a punch card, whether you have a reader and you want to blacken a box, whatever it is, and you can literally put it through a machine, kind of like swiping your credit card or your debit card, and then you have it there, and then you put it in a box for evidence so it can be checked on after I feel is very important. An area of great concern to me is that we would possibly go down that route saying: "Oh, no. It's foolproof. You don't need to worry about it." There's nothing foolproof if there isn't evidence in a tracking system that you can go through.

Another area that we see at municipal levels and in many provinces and countries in the world: set election dates. Very disappointed that that hasn't been set into this bill. Set election dates are quite important when it comes to people wanting to look at running and knowing when it's going to happen. One of the toughest things, if someone is running a business or has a job, is to not be able to know when it's going to be called. They can try to gear up only to find out that it doesn't happen. If we really want to involve more people – if they know that in March 2012 there's going to be a provincial election, people can gear their business. They can gear their life to prepare for that. But if, in fact, tomorrow the Premier decides that we're calling an election, it's very hard, especially for opposition parties because for some reason the government party always seems to have a little better knowledge of when that's being called. They're told to get everything ready and to get their signs printed, those types of things. So you can kind of observe and be prepared.

Set election dates are really important, in my mind, if we're going to have a greater participation and people wanting to run and people perhaps even planning their vacations knowing: I'm going to take a week off in March 2012 because I want to help the candidate of my choice and to spend maximum time. There are a lot of people that are really dedicated and want to see the democratic process go forward. There are just thousands of volunteer hours that are given. So it would be a huge advantage if those people could actually plan and be prepared for those things and, again, involve more people because they know that it's coming and they prepare and they're excited because they get to participate and can plan for it. So it's something else that I hope, as this government continues sitting, they'll continue putting through the debate inside their caucus, hopefully, and say: "You know, it's the right thing to do. Let's bring in set election dates."

There's been a lot of discussion and debate about how we involve Albertans: how do we get them to really come out and vote? As I've said before, door-knocking is a great privilege, to get out and to meet Albertans: "What are your concerns? Why do you vote the way you do? What would you like to see government do different?" Probably the most discouraging thing that I've heard – again, if you take that cloud, there's always a silver lining – is the number of people that say: "You know, it doesn't matter who we vote for. You're all the same once you get in there. You don't represent us. The biggest thing is that you say one thing when you're here at my door, but then if you go and do something different or start supporting something else, what am I supposed to do? What can I do to stop you from not keeping your word on something that you're supporting?"

To me, if there's one thing that we could engage Canadians, Albertans, the municipal level, even our school boards, and everything else is to know that the people that we elect are always accountable to the people who elected them. There's only one process that I know of on accountability, and that's recall. To me, if recall was to be in the Election Statutes Amendment Act – I know many people say that should be a separate bill, that we can't bring in an amendment to add something to a bill. So that's a little bit disappointing. Recall is the ultimate accountability. If someone decides to do something – and we'll use the example of centralizing health care – and the people look at that and they disagree, there's nothing they can do. And human nature is such that when there isn't anything that we can do, why should we bother worrying or wasting any of our time or energy fighting against something: "There's nothing we can do. The government is going to pass this. We're going to have to wait three years or four years. They just came forward, and there's nothing that we can do."

Many people just feel, you know, that once every four years or every three years – the democratic process isn't democratic for the other 900, 1,200 days. I believe if we really want to engage Albertans and know that it makes a difference, if we really want to be accountable, recall is something that we need to look at. There are just so many areas. We need to look at the Election Statutes Amendment Act and say: what do we do so that Albertans are engaged, so they think that their voting makes a difference?

Another area that I've spoken on and I feel is important to bring it up again. If you talk about these things enough times, you know, you start to think through it and think: "Well, you know, maybe that is okay. That does have some credibility. That might involve more Albertans, and they'll have a desire to engage and be part of that." But being a small caucus, not having official party status, the way it's set up makes it very difficult to do the research, to get to ask the questions and hold the government accountable. I don't feel that our system and our set-up right now is really one where people say: "You know what? I'm going to vote for those parties because it's good, and I like to see the government being held accountable." They look at it as, "Well, my vote doesn't count."

It's interesting with the new Electoral Boundaries Commission, the big debate that is out there. So many individuals are saying: "Is it one Albertan? Is it one vote?" They are saying, "Well, you know, we're only a .97" or "This area actually is a .67, and this one actually is a 1.34." We're so concerned, and rightfully so. Is it one Albertan? Is it one vote? Again, I see the importance of that, the merit of that, but to take it one step further, if in fact 250,000 Albertans have voted for the Liberal party and their seats go down from 16 to nine, has there been a dynamic change in the desires of Albertans? I would say no, it hasn't, that we need to look at the actual number of votes.

To me, if in fact Albertans were to realize, you know, "If I vote for the Wildrose Alliance, the Liberals, or whatever the new party might be, I know that if they get an elected member, there's going to be $5 of research money going to that caucus," all of a sudden people will say: "No, I want that research. I want them to be able to get the message out and to send that to Albertans." That's really what it is. What's our goal? What do we want to achieve, and what are we trying to do? Are we trying to make a better health care system? Do we want more access for kids to get into universities? Do we want universities to be affordable, or do we want kids to think that it's free?

There is lots of discussion that we have on those things, yet we don't really tie it in often to elections. There's no tie-back, and there's no discussion, so when you fund the different parties by the number of Albertans that actually vote in that area, that's the philosophical debate: the research money, if we want to talk, that goes into that. Research money is invaluable. If you talk to, you know, a lot of the different companies that are moving forward, they look at it and they say: well, there's a percentage here that needs to go into research to make sure that we're always current and we're keeping up on things.

The democratic process is no different. We need to stay current. We need to be looking at the new ideas and having that research money going there. I think that that's something that would address and, again, would engage Albertans to say: my vote will make a difference. Whether there's 60,000 or 600,000 who vote for that party, it makes a difference, and it's the voters that are driving it rather than some Members' Services Committee who has a majority of government members and says: well, we're going to pick this party or that party; we'll give these ones extra funding but not those ones for partisan reasons. I want to engage Albertans and make them realize: no, you need to get out and vote because our votes are going to count so that more research can be done.

There are so many areas, Mr. Chair, where the Election Statutes Amendment Act is looking after some of the penny thoughts, the small ideas. How do we make sure these elections are fair? How do we do that? Those are all important, but I feel like we're missing the big picture. How do we engage Albertans? How do we ensure that what goes on in this House reflects the will of Albertans the best? How do we have a debate?

I was very disappointed in the emergency debate discussion that we had the other day. The Speaker got up and read all of the questions and the members' statements that had gone on, but there is no opposition party date, where you get to pick a discussion and do that. There was no discussion on cataract eye surgery. There were more questions that were attempted to be asked. The answers were more propaganda than answers. There was no discussion, and there's no way to do it.

Albertans, again, those that were contacting us, said: we just want a debate in there; let's have an open debate. That was the only way of doing that. Those are all different areas. Are we going to change our thoughts and, you know, look at a way of ensuring that the opposition parties can pick some debates and bring them forward? Like I say, this Bill 7 addresses a lot of the smaller issues, which are always important, but have we addressed the big issues? Are we moving forward?

One area, I guess, that I'd just like to share a little bit of thought on is that if you look back 50 years or a hundred years here in this wonderful province of ours and you see how things have evolved, whether it's in the aircraft carriers or the telecommunications, it's amazing the progress that we've made. Yet when it comes to the democratic process, have we evolved and gone forward in any direction? I would say no. We're stuck in that same old process of 1905, 1920, 1960, 1970, 1990, and nothing has changed.

We just are going through an Electoral Boundaries Commission on how we're going to change things, and many, many Albertans that I run into say: "Why do we need four more MLAs? What's the sense in that? There are already too many of you. There's got to be a better way of reducing that." I think there is.

You know, we're all shareholders. We talk about one Albertan, one vote, but how do we actually get to vote those shares? Why should I go out and vote those shares? When you're a minority shareholder, even in a corporation, and you get the annual report and they're saying to vote on who's going to be on the board and what their awards are going to be, you just think: "Oh, there are 27 million shares out there. I own 500 of them. Is there any point in me submitting my vote?" That's what Albertans often ask: "Is there any point in me submitting my vote?"

Another idea that I think is worth discussing and, again, we don't do enough is two ways to engage Albertans. Again, these are just ideas for discussion. I think that's the important thing; you always throw the idea out there. There's no question that in the urban area, where it's more concentrated, it's far easier to be able to represent those people. They have much more in common than in a rural area, where they might be spread over hundreds and hundreds of miles and very diverse in what's going on in that area.

Let's say, for the sake of the cities, we were to amalgamate every riding into two ridings. We'd take two and put them into one and reduce the city MLAs by half. But your voting authority: again, this is where if you want to be electronic in areas where you can do it, you can show that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore voted this way on this vote. But the votes that I would have voted actually represent whether there are 30,000 or, as in Airdrie-Chestermere, 65,000. You'd actually be voting for the number of people that you're representing, just like we do as shareholders. That's the type of electronic voting that, to me, would add great value and efficiency in how we're representing the people that we're asked to represent.

It doesn't have to be just one mouth that represents 40,000 people. That one mouth might do, as in the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, for 90,000 people. So when he pushes his button on voting, there's a huge vote there. Boom. All of a sudden it makes a difference. That would engage Albertans to say: well, no, I want to get out and vote.

Again, you just take your whole area or, if we really wanted to put in another novel idea, the number of people that actually came out and voted in your riding. If that was 12,000 people that voted, then you'd be representing 12,000. Then people would say: well, no, I want my MLA to have some clout. So maybe instead of 12,000 voting, 18,000 would or 25,000 would because you'd know that that MLA would be representing the number of votes they have. Or if we really wanted to take the next leap, say that you only vote for the number of people that actually voted for you, whether that was 4,200 or 6,000. You could do that.

Many people say: "What about the bicameral system? We need a Senate here in Alberta." There are some interesting, novel ideas on that as well, where the acting leader or the leaders of the different parties could actually vote a second time on a bill, representing the number of votes that that party received, yea or nay. It would have to go through a double vote, the first one by the members, the people on that level, but the second one by the parties to say: you know, well, there were 250,000 for the Liberals; there were 80,000 for the Wildrose Alliance and 90,000 for this one independent. You'd have a double check, where Albertans could really be in a much more democratic process, where you'd be representing them. There are a lot of interesting ideas.

Bill 7, like I say, is looking at the ground level. But to me we really need to expand the election statutes act. How are we going to engage more Albertans? How are we going to represent them? How are we going to be able to stop the government from doing something that the people really don't want, like the new royalty framework, the centralization of health care, billions of dollars on CO₂ wish thoughts, or $300 million on ethanol production because they decide that's the energy program that we want to go with, where they leave out windmills or biomass or geothermal? They're picking winners and losers. That isn't government's job, to pick winners and losers. We don't have a democratic system where we're able to send that message to the government.

I hope that as we continue working in this House, we'll expand our thoughts and our ideas to say: how do we engage Albertans? How do we actually make their vote count? Most important of all, how do we ensure that we as elected representatives are accountable to the people that we represent and not the party that we represent? Are we looking into all of those things? I would say that we're falling short on that. We can do much better.

I'll look forward to listening to further debate by other members on this bill.

The Chair: Any other hon. members? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, on the bill. I wanted to talk a little bit about: we've heard a lot of comments over what would improve our democracy the most. Everyone knows that we have a 40 per cent voter turnout roughly, and I don't think anyone is proud of that number. I don't think you can blame it on one or two or three or even four things. There are numerous reasons why we have such a low voter turnout.

I've also noticed that there's really a disconnect. I mean, many people in this Chamber had the opportunity to have dinner tonight with some young Albertans. You know, you talk with these young people. They're so engaged in the democratic process, and they're so excited to be there. It's just a breath of fresh air. But they're the exceptions to the general rule. Generally, when you talk to young Albertans or any Albertans about democracy and about politics and that sort of thing, their eyes kind of glaze over.

There's also a lot of cynicism towards politicians. You know what? Some of that is earned. No doubt about it. Some of it isn't earned, though. I mean, some of it is just simply not true. No one in here is corrupt or is taking money under the table. I sure hope not. I sure don't suspect anyone is. Maybe that's naïveté on my part, but I don't think that's the case. I hope it's not. People don't understand that the average person going into public life really does just want to contribute to their society and to contribute to their community and to their province and to their country.

We've got to start thinking about what would engage Albertans. What would get Albertans excited about democracy again? There are all kinds of gimmicks that we can throw out there, you know, like you see in the States, Rock the Vote and all these funny things. I think there's a fundamental underlying problem, and it's one of many. I don't think this is a panacea. This isn't going to solve everything. But if there was one thing that we could do in this Legislature that I think would contribute the most to getting Albertans engaged in the democratic process and giving them more faith in our democratic process, it would be the concept of enshrining mandatory free votes on all legislation and restoring the rightful role of an elected member to represent his constituents first and foremost over any other consideration. Party line, all these things: none of these things would matter as much as just representing your constituents on a base level.

When you go in and you vote on a bill in the Legislature, it should be because you honestly believe as an MLA that that is in your constituents' best interests and it's what they want, or if they're not engaged and they don't understand, you've analyzed the problem for them and you think that this is what they would want if they had analyzed it and done the background work on it. When we go into the House, that's all we should think about. We shouldn't think about what the party talking points are or anything like that. We shouldn't think about anything other than what is in our constituents' best interests.

People always say: well, okay, that sounds really great. Right? Everybody believes: yeah, sure, an MLA should be his or her constituents' voice to Edmonton, not their party's or Edmonton's voice to his or her constituents. I think everyone believes that or thinks that that's how it should work, but in fact it doesn't. We all know this in this Chamber. Everyone knows this, that that's not how it works.

I mean, sure, there's no doubt that many MLAs in the governing caucus and otherwise go and in caucus and behind closed doors and in private meetings and these sorts of things advocate for a viewpoint of their constituents. There's no doubt that that happens. Absolutely. But at the end of the day when they go into the House and actually put a vote down, actually stand up and vote on something or say yea or nay on something, they are essentially voting the party line. They are essentially voting what their party wants them to do, and then they're given talking points to take back and explain it to their constituents.

This isn't just Alberta in our country. This unfortunately is the case across Canada federally. We have an opportunity in this province. I mean, I look at some of the members over there, and I know that they're reform minded, that they want to change the system. I know that. I've had discussions into the wee hours of the morning with many of them on how we could make democracy stronger here and really get constituents engaged and totally reform the system so that we had free votes and representatives were empowered to represent their constituents first and foremost above any consideration. There's such an opportunity over there to do that, to spearhead that change, because the governing caucus does have a massive majority right now: 68 seats.

I tell you, if they would enshrine free votes as a mandatory staple of Alberta politics in the Legislature, I believe that the electorate would reward them handsomely for doing that. Sure, does it cede a little bit of power from the Premier's office? Obviously, it does. The Premier still has lots of power in that situation, lots of things that the executive does still and has the power over, but yeah, there's no doubt that the Premier and the cabinet would lose a little bit of power. They'd have to go do their groundwork. They'd have to go out there and have a good ground game and convince MLAs that this is the way it needs to work and that this is why it benefits the various constituencies, et cetera, et cetera. They would have to do that.

If people believed that they were sending somebody to Edmonton that first and foremost had their interests top of mind when they voted on a bill or when they voted in any committee, if that is what they thought they were voting for, I really think that would improve our democracy greatly. People would actually believe that they were voting for something. They would actually examine the policies of the individual candidates and look at their resumé's and look at their track record.

I mean, when I was a government member – I'll just use myself as an example; I won't use any of the government members – how on earth would my constituents know how I voted in caucus on Bill 50, for example? They all know now, but how would they know that? They couldn't possibly know it because I wouldn't be allowed to go out and tell them how I voted on it, and I certainly wouldn't be able to vote against the bill because it was decided in caucus otherwise. In some cases it is decided in the Premier's office otherwise. I just think that it's wrong.

Every election you should go into that election as an incumbent and be able to put your record before the people and say: "This is how I voted on a bill or on a motion or whatever. This is what I did. Yeah, I know that's what the party was saying and that's what the Premier was saying, but I voted this way." If we did that, I really think that the reverence for democracy and the opinion about elected officials would be greatly increased. Right now, unfortunately, it's just not the case. No one knows how their MLA votes on things.

I mean, there are people in every party that range on the spectrum. Obviously, we have different opinions on things, and we've voted against each other on a couple of things.

Mr. Hinman: Which one, for example?

Mr. Anderson: Well, don't even get me started.

In the governing caucus, I mean, there are people that are very conservative, absolute small "c" fiscal conservatives. Then there are others that, frankly, in any other province would be Liberals or New Democrats. It's a huge spectrum. I know. I was two years in that party. It's a huge spectrum. It's a big tent, as they say, and that's fine. I personally think that you can make a tent so big that eventually you don't stand for anything, but that's a debate for another day.

The point is that if I'm somebody in Edmonton – I don't know. Just pick a riding anywhere. I don't want to pick on anybody. If I'm a constituent in Edmonton-Whatever and my Tory MLA is running in another election as an incumbent, how the heck do I know what that Tory MLA voted on? I know what the party's record is. I know what the Premier's agenda is. That's pretty clear in the media. The Premier and his cabinet, obviously, are on the record on virtually everything, but how do I know what that individual MLA advocated for? Caucus meetings aren't published. The votes in caucus aren't published. The results from votes aren't published. I mean, you can't have democracy without transparency and accountability. You just can't do it. You can't have it as strong as it should be anyway.

I just really believe, you know, very strongly that if we empowered the individual MLA and we made sure that every vote they took was on the record – it doesn't mean every discussion has to be on the record. I realize that in order to get things done, you've got to have private discussions and private debates. I get that. But at the end of the day an MLA has to cast a vote, and when they cast that vote, the only thing on their mind should be that after getting all the evidence together, after hearing from the Premier and the cabinet and the caucus and the opposition parties and my constituents and reading the research and doing all these things, this is the conclusion that I think is in the best interests of my constituents, not what's in the best interest of my party or what's in the best interest of me personally, politically, or in the best interest of anything or in the interest of caucus solidarity or any of these other funny excuses that we use but just in the interests of my constituents.

If we could do that, if we could restore that level of trust with the electorate as elected officials, I really think that things would change. Albertans would get more involved because they would know they could go to an individual MLA and could advocate to that MLA. You know what? Your individual constituents would actually feel that they could sway your mind, and maybe they could, and you could take that message to Edmonton. But right now it doesn't work that way. Why bother to go see your MLA? I mean, sure, you can go and talk. But I know how these things work. Constituents come in, they go and talk, the well-meaning MLA goes and tries to find the minister or brings it up in caucus, but it's so busy, and it gets swept under the rug. There's not really time to debate it, and all kinds of things happen. In my view, it's just not true democracy.

Again, I don't blame the governing party for it. It's the way our system is set up in Canada, frankly. But that doesn't mean we need to always have it this way. You know, some people say: "Well, how would you do this? How would you enshrine mandatory free votes? You know, you can't have the government fall. Right? The government might fall. If somebody votes against the government's budget in their own party and the party falls, then you call an election. That's no good. So you've got to have whipped caucus votes, party line votes."

Well, you know what? I look at Quebec. They have a constitution, and their constitution, unless it conflicts with the federal constitution, takes precedence and is the binding law. Well, why don't we start looking at maybe an Alberta constitution? Why don't we start thinking about enshrining mandatory free votes in Alberta so that just because a government loses a vote on a bill, that doesn't trigger an automatic election? You have to have a vote of nonconfidence that is completely separate and stand-alone in order for the government to fall. In other words, opposition parties and government members can vote on something, can vote on an issue according to what they think their constituents want, and if the bill doesn't pass or if it's not going to pass, then the government and the opposition parties have to go back and make it work until it's got the majority of free votes in the House. That way the government won't feel threatened that: oh, we've got to pass it or our government will fall. I think it'll make for better legislation. I really do. Again, I think it will re-engage Albertans a lot more.

If we enshrine that principle in the constitution, in an Alberta constitution, I think it's sound to say that that would override any conventions that might be in place and that it would be allowed and would be constitutional and would be democratic. There's no reason why we have to continue to use the exact same system in the exact same way that's been around for 200, 300 years if you go back to, you know, talking about the Westminster system. We can change it. We can evolve – it is possible – and we should. I mean, we can set our own course in democracy, and we should.

We've got some great minds in this House from all parties, so let's put them together, and let's figure out a way to make mandatory free votes something that Alberta pioneers. We could do that. I'm really convinced of that. People say: well, if you have mandatory free votes, then situations might occur where you might break the budget. In other words, you have a budget set, and then someone brings a bill and through horse-trading, et cetera, you have another monetary bill that comes forward, and all of a sudden you've broken the budget and you've, you know, screwed up everything and, oh, the whole system would fall apart.

Well, that's again easily solved. It's called pay-as-you-go legislation. It's been implemented in many different places, of course, the United States being the foremost before the current administration. During the Clinton years they had pay-as-you-go legislation. If a new initiative came forward and was passed by a free vote in the House, if it cost something, it would have to be offset by a corresponding tax increase or cut to some other program area. Of course, that kept the pork barrel and the horse-trading and all that in check, and as you know, they ran huge surpluses during the Clinton administration. That was mostly from 1994. You had a Democratic President and a Republican Congress that came together and actually got something done on that front and controlled their spending.

You know, the little things that people say: oh, we can't have free votes because of X. There are ways that we can institute a system that would allow for these free votes without mass chaos or huge spending increases or governments falling every five minutes. I mean, we can do that, and I think that the people of Alberta would want us to do that.

It's something I feel very passionate about, obviously, and it's one of the reasons I left the government caucus. I didn't feel that this principle was top of mind. In fact, I didn't think at the time that it was anywhere close to top of mind. I feel that now that I'm in opposition I have the ability to advocate very freely the viewpoints of my constituents. I feel my constituents want this. I bet you most of our constituents want this. Sure, it's not their number one concern. I understand that. A lot of times people, especially our constituents because they're not in the process and they don't understand government like the people in this House do, know the system is broken, but they just can't put their finger on it. If you ask them, they know something is wrong, that something just doesn't feel right about this system. We've got to be big enough and smart enough to realize why certain things are broken. What's wrong with the system?

I think that, honestly, the reason why people feel their vote has absolutely no bearing whatsoever is because when they go into a voting booth, they know full well that even if they really like the local MLA or they don't like him or they like somebody, it doesn't matter because it's all going to come down to what the leader of the party says. Period. That's all that's going to matter. That, essentially, disenfranchises them, and in fact I would say that it disenfranchises all Albertans. It disenfranchises them all except for the ones that live in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Those are the only ones, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, where the MLA really, honestly does have a huge say in what laws are passed and in what things happen.

There are a few other cabinet ministers where that would be the case as well, but the vast majority – the vast majority – of MLAs have very little input. Sure, they have a little. You know, they can suggest, but at the end of the day, if they don't vote along the party lines, they're punished in some way and in some fashion, and that's just the way it is. We saw that with the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and we've all seen it in the internal party politics and internal party discipline that occurs on that side of the House and that, I'm sure, occurs in all kinds of parties across Canada.

We have a chance to change it. We've got the minds in here to do it. We have a lot of new MLAs in here that have only been on the job for a couple of years, and I think we even have a few of the veterans. You know, they've been around. I think there are some reform-minded people among our veteran bench as well. Why don't we get together and actually re-engage Albertans, restore the role of the MLA, restore the role of the elected representative? If we do that, I really believe democracy in Alberta will be stronger than it has ever been in the recent past.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 7 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report Bill 7.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 12, Bill 13, Bill 14, and Bill 9. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Those in agreement with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to move third reading of Bill 10, but before I do, might I suggest that the House give unanimous consent to amending standing orders to shorten the duration of the break between bells to one minute in the event of a division for the rest of this evening?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, too, hon. members. It's my pleasure to move on behalf of the Minister of Justice third reading of Bill 10, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 10, as a reminder to everyone, will allow the civil forfeiture process to continue to make crime unprofitable and will allow us to fund a wider range of victim and crime reduction programs. It's important legislation that will help to address the growing issue of gang crime and keep our communities safer, and for that reason I encourage all members to support Bill 10 in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I speak in support of Bill 10, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010. It accomplishes two main goals. One, it supports the victims by forcing the criminal to pay restitution, and it also takes away that funding that criminal organizations would use to their benefit to further their own devious demands. Therefore, I believe that it should go forward, and I support it in third.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spoke on this extensively in second and in committee. I, too, would like to speak in support of this bill. It does a couple of good things. It takes away some money and illegal profits, property of criminals who have gained access to their largesse by victimizing or by criminal activity here in Alberta. It gives the government the ability to do that. It also is going to allow more people to benefit from victims of crime funding. This is a pool of money that has gathered for some time now, and this will allow more people and more organizations to be able to apply for it and to be able to get compensation.

Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak in support of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing none, does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Bill 11 Witness Security Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is now my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a privilege to rise and speak in support of this bill. It establishes a province-wide witness protection program tailored for witnesses requiring short-term protection. It seems to me that this is a good bill because of the elements of organized crime that are moving into this province. It allows us to do more of our Alberta's-own solutions to our own criminal enterprises that are going on, and it gives us some more flexibility to do some good police work here at home.

I'm glad to support this, and I hope this takes a bite out of crime, I guess. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very briefly speaking in support of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act, what it does is parallel our federal system, it provides support for individuals who feel threatened, it encourages them to come forward and testify without fear of retribution, and therefore it is well worth supporting. It improves the carrying out of justice in this province by protecting individuals who are in a vulnerable position and allows them to testify with the assurance that they will be protected.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Bill 13 Securities Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010.

As was covered during prior debate, Bill 13 represents Alberta's commitment to ongoing reform of our securities regulatory system under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. This bill builds on the work that Alberta has done since 2004 to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws and also to ensure that Alberta supports Canada in meeting its international commitments. At their heart these amendments will ensure Alberta investors can continue to have confidence in our securities regulatory system.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again, speaking in support but with a degree of measured concerns over Bill 13, Securities Amendment Act, 2010, it seems that Alberta and Quebec are the holdouts in terms of a national securities commission, and interestingly we, or at least this province, frequently criticize decisions Quebec has made and accuse Quebec of being the recipient of Alberta's largesse when it comes to transfer payments. We're going to have to work somewhat more diligently across this nation.

While we're in Bill 13 agreeing to the passport system that exists across the nation, tightening of security is going to be extremely important. We have seen in this province billions of dollars lost because of weak regulation for asset-backed commercial paper. We haven't got hammered to the same extent that our southern trading partner has, but we definitely need to tighten up security regulation.

ATB suffered several million dollars in hits. AIMCo likewise suffered hits. We have the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta, who lost significant millions of dollars on their endowment funds because of investments in very risky asset-backed commercial paper.

One of the principles of the Alberta Liberal Party is that 30 to 35 per cent of all nonrenewable energy gains would be set aside in a fund. Approximately a third of that fund would go to supporting postsecondary endowment funds but with the proviso that the Auditor General would have strong regulatory powers over how investments are made because while endowment funds are private donations, to a large extent, from universities, the fund we're talking about would come directly from nonrenewable resource revenue.

Also, all Liberal constituency associations across the province are submitting resolutions for our policy convention here in Edmonton on May 15 and 16. With the importance of saving for the future to avoid this recessionary boom and bust, one of the resolutions that's being put forward by Calgary-Varsity under the name of Kurt Hansen, who is a director – he'd actually like to see between 40 and 50 per cent of nonrenewable funds put into the heritage trust fund so that we could build it up to a faster extent and have kind of an insurance policy against the ebb and flow of surpluses.

I do support this legislation, and it is, as I say, in keeping with other provinces. Therefore, it's extremely important that we maintain our relationship, especially our financial and trade relationship, with other provinces. Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010, goes a long way to that establishment.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Bill 14 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Transportation I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I hope members of the government are keeping track of the support that they're receiving on a wide variety of legislation. I want them to note that that support is not just restricted to the Liberal Official Opposition, but for the most part you've seen the support from the Wildrose party and previously from the ND Party.

The point I wish to make in referencing Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010, is that when the legislation makes sense, we embrace it; we support it. Bill 14 makes sense because the fines that are realized within a certain geographic location go back to that location that is paying for the police enforcement. It makes absolute sense, and therefore I am supporting Bill 14.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Bill 9
Local Authorities Election Statutes

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's now my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. While I can't cheer as loudly for Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, as I have for other legislation, it does move in the right direction. It does correct mistakes that were previously made that shut out the local authorities. It does address concerns that were brought forward by both the AUMA and the AAMD and C. It is attempting, as I say, to correct the mistakes previously made in Bill 203.

There is, beyond a doubt, a need to equalize, to have a common set of standards, whether it be municipal or provincial, in terms of how financing and how authority is given with regard to campaign funds. We as provincial legislators have the advantage of being able to offer a tax return for our campaign donations, and through that process there is a great deal of scrutiny and oversight, as there must be. The local municipal politicians do not have those advantages, but the same strict rules as to campaign financing need to apply not only to municipal elections but also to leadership elections. It is my hope that through the standing committee, as we review the legislation about leadership campaigns and financing, we'll finally in this province have a set of rules that apply universally, whether it's on leadership, whether it's municipal, or whether it's provincial.

Bill 9 isn't the be-all and end-all in terms of accountability, but it's a step in the right direction, and therefore we support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege for me to stand up and speak in support of Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I think this bill is a good start to bringing more autonomy to local elections. It sets some limits on donations that can be given and how they can be tracked. I think it clears up some of the misconceptions that were in the first attempt at this bill, and I think it'll go a long way to start bringing some clarification to our municipal elections.

I would like to add, though, that I hope this is just the first part of this bill, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act. I'd like to see in the future them possibly going to a system like we have with the provincial government, with the Chief Electoral Officer overseeing all elections here in Alberta, with a tax receipt being involved and some scrutiny. The tax receipt would also encourage more individuals to run and more individuals to give as well as have a uniformity of rules that go forward between different bodies and different elections in this province.

Like I said, I'm supportive of this bill. It's a good start to bringing some of the Wild West days of municipal elections sort of in line with election standards and election principles.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions or comments.

Seeing none, any hon. member want to join the debate on Bill 9?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to move on behalf of the Minister of Justice third reading of Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to touch on, since this is the last opportunity to speak to this bill – and I've talked, obviously, a lot about the different aspects of democracy that I'm concerned about. But there are a few points, almost a laundry list – well, five or six things – I just wanted to comment on briefly. I really do feel that as we go forward with this bill and with other bills, we need to be looking at these issues.

I want to first just quickly talk about the Public Accounts issue. If we're going to have a functioning democracy where there's accountability in this Legislature, we need to make sure that we have a transparent and accountable Public Accounts Committee. What went on there, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed being given, essentially, veto power, having to sign off on every committee move, is not appropriate, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose wants to be on the record for that. I hope that in the coming days that will be reversed.

There should be broad powers. I can't tell you how many times – and I've only been in opposition for one session – I've asked for documents from departments, and I've gotten a snow job on it. You know, "We can't do it for this reason," or they just ignore the request. It's just wrong. We've got to be able to hold the government to account. The government has all the resources in the world to defend their decisions and to defend their budget.

As an opposition and on behalf of the Official Opposition, I guess, I would say that all we're asking for is the ability to summon the documents that we need to see in order to hold the government to account. If they're making good decisions, if they're making decisions that don't have ulterior motives, they should be able to put those documents on the table, and we should be able to summon witnesses and documents. The chair, which is a member of the Official Opposition, should be able to ask for those documents, and they should be given, plain and simple, unless there's a national or provincial security issue or whatever. Those are the only times where they shouldn't be given, especially to members of the committee.

That's one thing I wanted to get on the record. If we're going to improve our democracy going forward, it can't just start at Bill 7 and end at Bill 7. We've got to make sure that that harmful decision is reversed.

The second point. I want to be fair to the Deputy Premier. He's been listening throughout this discussion, and, you know, he's been very thoughtful as he's been listening. I want to be on the record as saying, though – and it could have been anyone: the Deputy Premier, the Premier, any of the government cabinet ministers – that I do not believe that it is right for a government to on behalf of the government caucus submit what they feel the electoral boundary should be changed to to what is supposed to be a nonpartisan commission. That is just wrong.

It's one thing for an individual MLA or a party constituency association or someone else to do it, but when the government does it, when it comes from the office of the Premier or the Deputy Premier or a high-ranking minister, that puts undue influence, in my view, on that boundary commission. They are extremely compromised right now. You know, it's easy to say: oh, it's just a submission. It's not just a submission. It's a submission from the people that appointed them.

Again, this was a decision of government, you know, and I feel that it should be corrected, that it should be withdrawn. The commission should be allowed to do its work without having that pressure of having to deal with this submission. It's not right. It shouldn't happen. I mean, in my electoral boundary, for example, in Airdrie-Chestermere, it's quite funny. Foothills-Rocky View now starts on the west, Mr. Speaker. It goes to Airdrie. It's cut in half by Airdrie-Chestermere and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Then it actually starts again on the west. In other words, it's cut into two completely separate land masses without any kind of continuous border. That's what they're suggesting. I had a reporter tell me: oh, I don't think I've ever heard of anything like that before. Well, he's right. It's because it hasn't happened before. These are some really silly things.

We've done the analysis on Calgary-Glenmore. They've added polls that went Liberal in the last election and taken away Conservative ones. I understand, you know, that we all want to do well for our different constituencies, and we all want to be re-elected, but it is absolutely wrong for the government on behalf of government to do this. I really hope that the government will reconsider taking that off the table and making it absolutely, abundantly clear to this commission that there's no pressure whatsoever to implement the changes that they're proposing because it's not right, and it's undemocratic.

Thirdly, opposition caucus allowance. Right now the New Democrats, with two seats, have what's called a leader's allowance. It's not a leader's allowance; it's a caucus allowance. It's used for caucus research. It's used for caucus activities. The NDP gets it; the Wildrose, with three members, doesn't get it. It's so difficult. We have two researchers. I've got to tell you that every day I'm here, I'm up till 1 or 2 in the morning, trying to work through everything that's going on, trying to research the bills and look at it because we just do not have what we need to put a support staff together.

Again, the pattern here is democracy and a little bit of the lack thereof. All we're asking is that we be treated the same as our New Democratic friends so that we can put the resources – they have eight or nine staff; we have four. Two of them are assistants for three people, and then we have two researchers. It's so difficult to do this. I mean, I'm not trying to cry anyone a river. I'm just saying that if we're going to be able to do our job as an opposition, which is to research the bills and research the background information on those bills, we need to be able to have the ability to hire people to help us do that. If the government members think that some of our arguments are off base, well, then hopefully these researchers can help us to have arguments that they feel are better.

The point is that we've got to be able to have those resources available to us and be treated at least as fairly as the NDP caucus. It's only democratic. It's only fair. We'll talk about that in Members' Services Committee, but I wanted to get that on the record since we're about to close for the session.

I also want to make sure, going to the bill, that we need to be very, very, very careful when we start playing around with electronic voting. That is a very dangerous thing to do. I'm, obviously, one of the youngest members of this Assembly – I think third youngest – and I understand the need to be proactive with new media and new technologies. I get that. But there has got to be a paper trail. There have got to be scrutineers. There's got to be a way to verify voting.

If we allow it to go to electronic voting, yeah, you know what? The first, the second, the third time might go well, but it's just a matter of time before some really smart guy who is corrupt – and I'm sure no one in this room would think about doing it, but there are people out there that have no problem looking into ways to rig elections and to do different things that would bring our democracy, frankly, down. That is a slippery slope that we've got to be very, very careful of, and I sure hope that the hon. members opposite will not consider moving in that direction as we go forward.

On the issue of government advertising during an election, which is in Bill 7, again, I think that we need to start looking at making sure that the government, other than for public health emergencies and other emergencies, should not be able to advertise during an election period. That's not the place for the government to be spending government resources telling Albertans how great a job they're doing. It's not just this government that does it; governments across this country do it. It doesn't make it right. Again, we need to be leaders on this, and we can start in this House and make sure that we lead by example, that the government doesn't advertise during elections.

Finally, the concept of fixed election dates. It's not the cure-all. It's not the thing that's going to make it so that we have 70 per cent voting or 80 per cent voting turnout. It's not going to cure all ills, for sure. But it's not democratic. It just simply is not democratic. Everyone here knows it's not democratic. The government has total control on when they call it. They can prepare for it. They can roll out their programs all in line with it. The opposition can be caught completely flat footed. Of course, we do our best. All the opposition parties always do. But when I was in government, I advocated strongly for this, and I know there are members over there that believe in this, that in order to have a truly democratic election race, there has got to be a fixed election date. It is just not fair. It's too rigged in one direction if we don't do that, or too biased to the governing party if we don't do that. It's just the right thing to do. You know what? It's not as convenient for the government, for sure. That's life. But it's the right thing to do.

You know, Alberta has been a leader on so many different things that haven't been convenient: reforming our financial affairs in the early '90s to mid-90s, where we went from a province on the verge of insolvency, frankly, to one that got out of the mess and started to save for a time. Now we've fallen back into the same traps again, but the leadership we showed as a province in the '90s, for that period of time, was something that spread to the rest of Canada and became, actually, the de facto way that governments ran their finances. We can do that with democracy. We can do it with fixed election dates, we can do it with making sure that the opposition is given the resources that they need to be effective, and we can do it by what I talked about earlier, which is enshrining free votes as an absolute staple of our democratic system to restore the role of MLAs.

There are some good things in this bill, Bill 7. There are things that are being left out that should be in there. But at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, we have come up short with this bill, by and large. We can do way more. In the next year and a half or two years or – who knows? – six months or a year before the next election, whenever that is, I just hope that the MLAs, some of the more reform-minded MLAs in this government, whoever they may be, can really sit down and try to push the agenda of democratic reform so that they can leave that as a legacy.

Frankly, I think the voters will reward them for it. This is not in the Wildrose's best interests for them to do this. But if they would show forethought and the pioneering spirit on the issues of democratic reform, I believe the people of Alberta would reward them handsomely for doing so. I really do. So I hope they do it because it's the right thing to do, and it will make us a stronger democracy as we go forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Assembly for their time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In speaking in third to Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, I want to comment very briefly about what works. This evening we're seeing an example of what works in terms of parliamentary tradition. Our House leaders, through communication, established what would be the agenda for tonight. Agreements were made, and part of the agreement was that tomorrow we would have our question period. I'm very grateful that tomorrow we'll also have our regular Public Accounts because, as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out in his previous discussion, a correction has to be made in Public Accounts.

This past Wednesday, a week ago, the Westminster parliamentary tradition was overridden by a private member's motion from Wetaskiwin-Camrose. He has an opportunity tomorrow to correct the mistake that was made. For those members who aren't aware, not only does it go against Westminster parliamentary tradition, but it flies in the face of our own established regulations that say that only the chair of Public Accounts can sign the correspondence.

Now, speaking, again, as to what works with regard to Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. After a fashion, we do have a record of how we vote in this House. Possibly the methodology is used to a greater degree by members of the opposition, not because government doesn't necessarily want to be involved but because of the size of the government. The opposition has the opportunity to get on record how they are going to vote on a particular bill, and we've seen examples of that tonight on five bills already. While each bill does not have a personal record, Hansard does provide the record of the direction that members have, whether they support a piece of legislation or whether they're opposed to it.

One of the largest improvements in the democratic process that I will give the hon. the Premier credit for is the all-party standing policy committees because there is a transparent, accountable record of where members stand within the committees. While there may be differing opinions, those opinions are recorded, so while it's not an actual vote or a check-off assigned to various constituencies, there is that democratic opportunity of getting on record for the direction that you're supporting.

With regard to the free vote, again, maybe this is, to quote the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, the silver lining in the dark cloud. But as a member of the opposition and as whip for the opposition I view my role more as a facilitator than as a disciplinarian. I do not dictate to my membership, whether it's in a private member's bill or it's in a regular piece of legislation, how they should vote. I'm very proud as a member of the opposition that members are free, based on their conscience and their constituents' desires, to vote how they feel they should to be true to themselves and to be true to their constituents. So while that vote may not be individually recorded, it is there, and it is free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure to come and speak regarding Bill 7. I can say that there are some positive initiatives in this bill, yet it does fall short. Theory is: go big, or go home. I certainly suggest in terms of go home as one option. The other is to look and see what can be changed and amended to make this a better bill for Albertans.

I find it really quite interesting that perception is reality for those of us who have served at municipal councils or provincially or even federally. For that reason, perception can become reality. That's why we need to be concerned about this bill, Bill 7.

Presently the Alberta Legislature is not allowed to advertise during elections, and properly so. One has to ask the question: why should the government be allowed to advertise during elections? The Alberta Legislature is not allowed; why should the government be allowed? I think that is a shortcoming that needs to be addressed.

Second of all, it's important to recognize fixed election dates. The reality of it is that fixed election dates truly do provide certainty. For all in this House, especially on the government side, which I sat on for 13 years, there is quite a lot of upheaval in the last year before an election: "When is he going to call it? When do you think? What's going to go on? Is he going to shuffle the cabinet before he calls it for those who are not running again? You know, we'd better get those things all fixed up before the next election."

There's so much uncertainty within the government when this takes place. I think that for members on the government side, that would certainly provide greater certainty, knowing that on March 11, 2012, there will be a provincial election. I think that's healthy for democratic reform, considering that so many provinces do that.

Another issue may be this: what is the leverage of the Premier? Often within caucuses knives occasionally come out for those interested in becoming the next leader. I find it interesting that the Deputy Premier put in a 209-page report in terms of electoral boundary review. That's very well intended, but speaking of those who may be interested in being the Premier in the future.

Think of the upheaval that actually takes place when it comes to the next election. If a lot of knives come out within their own government party, there's certainly one way for the Premier under the existing system to fix that. He can put away the knives by just simply dropping a writ, because there is no fixed election date. So I'm operating under the fact that by this time next year we'll be into an election.

Ultimately, my theory is that in protection an amendment to this bill can ultimately provide certainty to not only people across Alberta; it will provide certainty to the government members because then they know. There can be no games played, and all Albertans know. It's not like: "Let's do a poll and see how we're doing. Well, we're only down by 20 points now. We're going to do it now because, ultimately, you know what that means? We could be down 30 points next month, so we'd better go and cut our losses when we are here." All of those things are whoever the governing party is, whoever the opposition is, but clearly it's not a level playing field.

I want to say that to keep to the spirit of democratic reform, why wouldn't we go ahead and have a fixed election date so that the head of Executive Council could not come forward to his cabinet and simply say, "I want to drop the writ today, and all you ministers are going to sign the writ because this is what we want to do"? Can you imagine if there was a large number of members on the opposite side who thought, "Maybe we want to change the leader"? That leader, who right now is called the Premier and the President of Executive Council, has the authority to say: "Well, I can quiet all of you down. I don't even have to kick you out of my caucus. I'll just drop a writ and call an election." No matter how many people are over there on the other side. My view is that under the existing system prepare for an election about this time next year. The issue would be – why? – because of discontent within their own governing party.

You know, in all fairness to the members on the government side it's not just discontent from them. They are just simply mirroring what their constituents and voters are telling them. That's exactly how democracy should work, and that's exactly how democratic reform should work. So at this time do the right thing. I would strongly suggest to the Attorney General that this bill, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, I believe, can best serve all Albertans. No matter if you're on the government side, no matter if you're on the opposition side, no matter where you sit as an Albertan, I think this is healthy. This is something that reflects not a 20th century way of thinking but, rather, a 21st century way of thinking.

The future is really about those who are not content with the existing system we have. Let's be bold. Let's be persistent. Let's be determined as we go forward. Let us go forward. It's a level playing field for everyone to feel comfortable that the good job you do as MLAs, in no matter what political party you represent or even as an independent, no matter what you do, at the end of the day it is the voters who will determine if you've done your job or not to deserve the honour and the privilege to return to this House.

Under the present structure this time next year we'll be wondering who will be invited back based on what voters think. Why don't we end that uncertainty and simply amend, simply say that in March 2012 there will be a provincial election? That would be the honourable thing and the most democratic thing in terms of reform in this 21st century.

I might add: who knows where the polls would be at that time? It could be good for the government; it could be bad. It could be good for the Wildrose or the New Democrats. Who knows? Maybe the New Democrats would be leading the polls. Who knows? They may not. Who knows? Maybe it would be the Liberals who are leading the polls. Who knows? It could be the government leading the polls. Who knows? It could be the new independent party leading the polls. Whatever that is, let us not forget that in politics perception is reality, and the perception of what we witness here is something that is not fair. It is something that is not on a level playing field, and that, I believe, is an Alberta value and an Alberta value that we all cherish.

I know members on the other side agree with what I'm saying, but right now they cannot speak out because of the fear of repercussion.

Election democratic reform is a positive initiative no matter what political party, and at the end of the day it will serve the very voters that elected each and every one of us to this very office and Legislative Assembly that we sit in. I know it is an honour and a privilege for all of us to sit here, so why don't we do the right thing and, in doing the right thing, have a fixed election date?

One final question would be to the Deputy Premier, who filed under the electoral boundary issue 209 pages. That's a busy night for one person, 209 pages. I must admit, I ask the question: would the Deputy Premier have by chance checked with Elections Alberta on all of the poll locations, of how they were and the results of those poll locations in the last election? To the Deputy Premier: I'd really like to know if, in fact, he's had the opportunity to see what the poll results were from Elections Alberta in the last election.

What it would do, then, if he comes back and says, "I haven't seen them," is that would be actually quite something because it would say that polling stations and divisions of electoral boundaries then, really, are more pure. It's more what I view as democratic reform in terms of viewing. But I have to ask: did the Deputy Premier actually go and has his office in his Spruce Grove constituency gone and asked for the polling stations? Does he know the results of the polling stations in Airdrie-Chestermere? Does he know of them in every constituency here? I think we all know where I'm leading relative to the perception of the next number of seats and how the boundaries would look.

I actually believe – and I'm going to quote and conclude with Joan Crockett from the Calgary Herald and Rob Breakenridge from QR77 in Calgary, who were on Alberta Primetime. I'm sure many of you might have watched Alberta Primetime. They're on there tonight. They said that of the five members of the committee three of them are Conservative, and there are two Liberals. What they find interesting about the Deputy Premier's submission, 209 pages, and a majority of members appointed by the government, is that it appears that the government's ideas may be very different than the Electoral Boundaries Commission's, the perception being that the government would go forward to submit under the perception of suggesting: we don't agree with the commission. Yet they appointed the majority of the members. One has to ask the question. Tonight on Alberta Primetime Rob Breakenridge and Joan Crockett were really, really quite perplexed by what they viewed as an assault on democracy based on the 209-page submission.

I'm quite certain now that the Deputy Premier will withdraw that at the proper time. I'm also quite certain that perception is important, but I think fixed election dates are an absolute necessity to reflect on the 21st century. The Legislature is not allowed to advertise during elections, so consequently why would the government be allowed to advertise during elections? Because there's a fear, in fairness to the government members, that it might be perceived that you're doing something to try to potentially buy votes. None of you would want to have that perception. I certainly wouldn't. I'm really suggesting to you another favour, to take on my free advice tonight.

To the Deputy Premier. The question that I ask – and feel free to use part of my 20 minutes to stand up and say if you are aware. Has your MLA office, in fact, contacted Elections Alberta relative to polling results of the last election? I would appreciate that answer because it will be even more pure if he were stand up and say: no, we have not requested that information from Elections Alberta. I think that perception will help the Deputy Premier and the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

On that note, I want to say that we are in the 21st century. Let us move forward with democratic reform. Rather than all of that uncertainty and speculation of what the President of Executive Council will do in the third or fourth year, especially with those interested in becoming Premier in the future, potential leadership hopefuls from whatever political party, I think it would be really, really interesting to avoid that tool to be used by one person in terms of as we go forward. It'll be a level playing field. It'll be more democratic. And guess what? Welcome to the 21st century.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair now shall recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. They really hit the nail on the head here. A lot of the stuff we do in this House and our legislative changes should follow the Caesar's wife rule; that is, Caesar's wife should not only be pure but be seen to be pure. That takes a lot of what's in the Legislature, a lot of the legislation that we do here above and beyond what is necessary to give the voting public the assurances they need that everything is above board, that their politicians are playing by the rules, that everything is fair and balanced.

Rightly or wrongly right now in this country and in this province we have an electorate who is disengaged. They think about all politicians: "Shake them up in the bag. It doesn't really matter. They don't care anyway, or they're all in it for themselves." We know that's not true, but we really have to go, then, above and beyond what is necessary to try to win back the support of Joe and Jane Albertan, the average citizen, to restore their faith in democracy.

I think we could have done a lot better on this bill than we did. I would give the government a C minus on this bill. They implemented roughly one-half of the old Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations, and really that's not quite good enough. We were looking for a whole-scale change to the way things have always been, the way things always have been done. Well, we could have gone a lot further.

We hear tonight, you know, lots of discussion on fixed election dates. That's one of those things, Mr. Speaker, that could have and should have been done. It would have removed the political gerrymandering, the political opportunism when a party in power can select a date to go to the polls. It would have made things free and clear for people to understand, when they are going to the polls, that elections happen as a regular occurrence in this province and not as a matter of expediency for one party or another to go to the polls.

I would also suggest that we could have moved right away on having leaders report their donors right to the Chief Electoral Officer. There was no need to send it to committee. Nevertheless, I wish it was so right now, but at least it's a start. At least it's getting the ball rolling to have this eventuality.

I for one am interested in who donates to leaders' campaigns. That to me would be one of those things where if an Alberta citizen didn't know, well, they might assume the worst. They'd assume that something untoward is going on there if politicians don't want to reveal who, in fact, has donated to their campaign. I'll tell you what; that's one of those Caesar's wife rules we should do. We should be posting that stuff to assure Joe and Jane Albertan that there is no chicanery or hijinks going on in the backrooms, that no Premier or no politician has been bought. That's one of those things that can happen.

There are a few other things that I could go on to, but I discussed these quite extensively in both second and committee. I really hope that this bill, although it starts off okay, will continue to be revised and revamped and that over the course of time many of the rationales for change put forward by the former Chief Electoral Officer are implemented and that we move to some of these things that appear obvious to rank-and-file Albertans, to make democracy not only pure but seen to be more pure.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this bill tonight.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and answers.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege once again to rise and debate Bill 7 at third reading in this House. Again, there are some small details, you know, the 189 recommendations that have come forward. It's good to see them coming forward, but again I have to comment that we are missing the big scope of democratic reform, and the Election Statutes Amendment Act is falling short.

It's been spoken to at length by many members, and I just need to bring it up again briefly. Fixed election dates are so critical in taking that level of what we want to call election gerrymandering out. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo certainly addressed that. Why would we want the Premier to be in a position where in order to maintain his power and authority, he has the ability to say, "Step in line or I'm going to call an election"? It's just wrong to be able to use something like that on the Alberta electorate in order to maintain power and authority and control over the people.

Again, many people have discussed the importance of banning government ads. There's a necessity for emergency announcements and job applications. There are a few legitimate areas, but there is no question that the government in the past has had a bad record of promoting their policies by saying, "This is a wonderful thing for Albertans" and promoting that. It's just not right. It needs to be banned during an election.

Another area that I believe for some reason I've missed on the list, the donations for new parties. There has been nothing made to accommodate for new parties to be able to get up and running – and it's very difficult and a challenge to do that – to be able to put money into a trust, in fact, so that once this party is up and running, people can get those political donations that allow grassroots people to be part of that. Again, why are we not allowing, you know, for those people who want to start a new party a method and a way of doing that?

Some of the democratic deficits that we've been looking at and mentioned many times tonight: what happened on the Public Accounts Committee. Again, it's just so backwards to think that a government member, the co-chair, has to sign off before a letter or a request can be put forward there.

You know, setting that election date, again, like I say, whether it's the third Monday in March or the third Monday in October or something, gives people the ability to plan and to set forward and to want to be able to work on those.

Again, you know, I've just got to make a comment that the manipulation that's going on, it seems, in wanting to give – well, speaking as a government person, let's make sure that we're in our best position to go into this; let's be able to call it on a date, and at this point let's make sure that we change the boundaries. I personally have been very disappointed in the attempt at the boundaries redistribution and even what has gone forward on the first one in that the number one consideration in my mind – of course, we're looking at representation by population, but you need to look at it geographically. To want to make leaps across rivers, reservoirs, or major roadways such as Macleod Trail and say, "Oh, we'll link this one community over across," when the problems in that community really have no relationship – I'm just so disappointed to see the Deputy Premier put forward his 207-page report and say, "You know, this is what we think needs to be adjusted." Again, you look at it, and there's just no question that gerrymandering is going on. You look at that, you can analyze, go look at the poll results and realize that this is what's going on.

You know, just to look at my own riding of Calgary-Glenmore, why wouldn't you adapt Kingsland in? That's a part of the community of Southwood. Why would you annex that out and put it across Macleod Trail into Acadia? What we're going to call the new riding we don't know, but it just doesn't make sense for the areas that you're representing to be pulling a little area out; you know, like Chestermere getting thrown all the way over into Calgary-Foothills. There's just so much of that. The people look at that, and the blogs are saying: "This is unbelievable. It's so blatant. Why are they doing that?"

Again, the democratic accountability on what this government has been doing in the last year and a half is just astounding to many people that I talk to. Bill 50 empowering the minister to make a declaration to say: "You know what? We need power lines, so therefore I'm going to be declare it, and they're going to be made." There are no needs tests anymore. It's just shocking. The centralized health care decisions. You know, we're going to say from Edmonton what's going on, and we'll say what's going to be in Calgary, what's going to be in Lethbridge, what's going to be in Fort McMurray or Grande Prairie or Red Deer. Again, that's centralized decision. And such things as the royalty framework fiasco . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, if you have private conversations, please go outside the Chamber. Thank you.

Hon. member, continue.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that, as we see, as we break for the summer, there's been a great democratic deficit. Bill 7 is not addressing it. The other bills are there. I guess perhaps the most important thing to me is that some of these bills should remain over the summer so people can comment on them. We shouldn't be closing off and passing Bill 7. There's a lot missing there. Again, it's kind of being pushed through. We have to accept that with the way our current system is set up. I believe that the people have been speaking to the MLAs, and they're not listening. It's going to be interesting as we go through the summer.

Like I say, what interested me the most were the comments from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo in his 13 years in government about the things that go on inside caucus. It's just quite amazing to think that the Premier is going to be left in a position that he can call an election at any time. This fall he can come forward and say: "You know what? Our health care, like our new royalty framework, is a failure. We've got a new idea. Here's what we're going to present. By the way, people, we want your mandate to do it, so we're going to call an election."

That's what I see coming this fall. They're going to be bringing forward a big bill and then say that they need to go to the people because of the failure of this government. It's sad that we've lost the Alberta advantage, that we've regressed to this point to where our number 1 bill, Bill 1, was: let's be competitive. To pass all this legislation saying that now we're going to be competitive: we're not going to be. Based on the principles of sound economics, based on the principles of a free market, we're not going to let entrepreneurs who have good ideas on how to develop energy go out and do that. Instead, we're going to pick $300 million for this type of energy, or we're going to put $2 billion into CO₂.

We're lacking in so many areas. Again, Bill 7 is just one more example of that. I get a strong feeling that it's going to pass here in about the next 30 seconds, so I'll sit down and see how the vote goes. I'm very disappointed with this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: On the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill?

Mr. Horner: Yes, please.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have sat here for a couple of hours listening to some hon. members in this House essentially accuse this member of doing something akin to gerrymandering, akin to dishonourable conduct. I find that reprehensible. [interjection] Hon. member, I have the floor. I listened to your ramble; you'll listen to mine.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talk about a report from government. There is no report from government. There was a compilation of individual maps drawn up by individual MLAs talking to their constituents, compiled in a binder for the ease of reference of the committee. That was submitted several weeks ago, prior to the written deadline. I, like many other MLAs from the Liberal opposition, from the ND opposition made an appointment to go and see the boundaries commission. The research for those private members that compiled that document was not done by government employees; it was done by our caucus. Our caucus is also called the government caucus because we form the government. The hon. member should perhaps look at the submission. I doubt that he has. He would see that it is not a report that flows to a conclusion. In fact, there are a number of errors where there is confrontation, where the maps don't match up.

Mr. Speaker, before levelling such erroneous and, I would say, reprehensible charges, he might want to look at the Hansard from the public discussion that we had with the commission last night. He might want to read the comments that I gave to the commission that outlined that this is for their benefit, for their information but that they had a very tough job to do, and we were going to accept what they had to do because there was conflict within the compilation that we gave them. I find it incredible that the morning after I was there, after a number of other MLAs have been there, they would have a press conference because they think they have found something.

The compilation, Mr. Speaker, that was submitted was submitted, as I said, prior to the deadline.

Mr. Liepert: Sleazy.

Mr. Horner: That would be one term I would use, hon. member.

Many of the MLAs in the past boundary reviews have presented. I presented in the last boundary review. In fact, the discussion in our caucus was that after the interim report MLAs should present because we represent our constituents. The hon. member has made some comments, I understand, to the press on what he thought happened in caucus. Obviously, he was wrong.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo had quite a ramble. He did talk about a lot of things, and he talked a lot about stuff that didn't make a lot of sense to me. He asked me whether or not I knew the poll results. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I know the poll results from my constituency. I would suggest that the hon. member knows the poll results from his constituency. I would guess that the hon. members, all private members, know the poll results. As you well know, those poll results are public information. It's a report that's presented. It's open to the public.

Did I phone up the boundaries commission and ask for poll results? No. I didn't have to. Nor did I look for them, because I didn't do the compilation. I did my own, and I would suggest that the hon. members might want to do their own work, too. But, Mr. Speaker, I didn't put in poll results. I didn't put in any of those sorts of things.

The hon. member is just trying to make some publicity for himself. The accusation of gerrymandering I find reprehensible.

I think this act goes a long way for democracy in this province. I fully support it, and I believe my members should, too.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for comment or question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the clarifications made by the hon. Deputy Premier. My single question is: will you honour the results of the electoral commission's findings?

Mr. Horner: Let me talk a little bit about what happened last time. Last time the commission went around the province, they did a similar type of process. We had a commission that was set up. We had some very honourable gentlemen and, I believe, two women, if I'm not mistaken, honourable Albertans that served on the committee last time we did this process. They did the process of going around the province. They went around the province and did the public meetings.

They prepared an interim report. We all got a look at the interim report. I noticed, Mr. Speaker, that in that interim report the Alexander reserve was carved out of the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert for some reason. I also noticed that there was a section of St. Albert that was added into that constituency. When talking to the mayor and talking to the chief of the Alexander band at the time, they suggested that they didn't want to be in a different constituency. What were they supposed to do? How were they supposed to remedy this? I said: "Well, you make a presentation. I can make that presentation as your MLA and talk about the various things that are going to happen in the future with that." So we made that presentation.

I'm very happy to say that the change that we suggested to the commission at that time of bringing the Alexander band back into the riding of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert ended up coming into the new ridings. It came in, Mr. Speaker, because when people turn left out of their driveway to go into town, when they turn left out of their driveway to go and vote, or they're part of a community like Morinville, where they do all of their trading, that makes the most sense for that to be a part of the community.

Hon. members would be interested to note that at the presentation we did the other night, we talked a lot about community leagues.

We talked a lot about keeping community leagues together where they belong to communities of interest, which really are the principles that the boundary commission used.

We talked a lot about natural boundaries, in my case the Sturgeon county boundary. Why wouldn't we use the Sturgeon county boundary? I know that in many of the submissions, part of the compilation that I put together and gave to the commission several weeks ago, a lot of the private members said: you know, we want to have boundary lines that are rivers or trade corridors or community leagues or whatever they might be. That was put into our submission.

Certainly, when we talked about . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Come on, Doug. Sit down and take another question.

Mr. Horner: Let me answer, Member.

When we talked about the last boundary review – and, Mr. Speaker, you'll know because you were in this Legislative Assembly – we actually lost a couple of ridings in the last boundary review. They were, I might add, PC ridings that were lost. They were rural ones. We had a lot of submissions, and yes, we honoured whatever the commission came out with.

Again, if hon. members would take the time to read the Hansard, which will be available from the public meetings that are a part of this process, they would find that what we told the committee was: here are the reasons why and the principles that surrounded all of these discussions; this is why we're putting these forward. We will obviously accept whatever the boundary commission submits to this Legislature for debate in this Legislature because that's what happens. That's the process. We'll honour that process.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Really quickly because I know we're short of time. I respect that the Deputy Premier has to rise up and defend himself. I'm sorry if he felt that that was defamatory or disingenuous, but the fact remains that there was a letter sent out on his letterhead on behalf of the government caucus from the office of the Deputy Premier that specifically laid out in a very co-ordinated way – all the different maps co-ordinated with each other, and it showed very specifically the way that this government wanted the boundaries to be redrawn. That is unacceptable, totally unacceptable.

The other thing. In the same letter, Deputy Premier, you asked for a meeting at the bottom of the letter. You asked for a meeting. Was that a private meeting? What kind was it? Was it just a presentation? Why didn't you say "presentation"? The question I have for the Deputy Premier is to explain this. How does he not think that this proposal that they're putting forward will not cause immense pressure on this commission, that the government appoints, to gerrymander – the answer is that it will create a lot of pressure.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) time has ended.

Back to the bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other hon. member wishing to join the debate on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Body Armour Control Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to move third reading.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Strathcona I would like to move Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Having previously participated in second and also in committee, I understand why there is objection to this particular bill. However, as I declared during the committee stage, I support and our caucus supports the fact that Chief Boyd and Chief Hanson, respectively the chiefs of Edmonton and Calgary, believe that this will provide them with one more tool in terms of fighting crime. The Liberal Party is on record as being tough on crime, and if this will accomplish that in the chiefs' minds and will provide their members a degree of support as they go about the doing of their duties – the Liberal caucus has met with the chiefs and fully supports their intention to uphold the laws of this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Sure. The good thing about third reading is that there's 29(2)(a). I asked these questions in committee, and I want to ask them to the government members now or to any government member who is willing to take this up. Please explain to me – please explain to me – why in this bill . . .

Mr. Liepert: He can't do that. He's got to refer to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Bill 12.

Mr. Anderson: No, no. This is Bill 12. Calm down, Energy. Calm down.

Is this 29(2)(a) for Calgary-Varsity?

The Deputy Speaker: No. For the first two members it's not 29(2)(a). After you are speaking, it will be 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Get your facts straight, Minister. Good grief.

Anyway, we're on the bill, Bill 12. What I'd like to know from these individuals – and I hope that they'll talk about it – is: why would you support disbanding the gun registry, yet you support what essentially is a body armour registry? It's one thing to support a bill that is going to add an additional penalty to using body armour in the perpetration of a crime. I understand that. I can agree with that. That makes sense. It's entirely another thing to say that we've got to take this body armour and that we've got to register it, for law-abiding citizens to register it. It's a waste of money. It's a waste of resources.

I just do not understand how a government on that side of the House can say over and over and over again, almost every time I've heard them talk about it, that they're against the gun registry, that it's a boondoggle, that criminals don't register their guns, that it doesn't cut down on crime, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, on and on and on. Great. I agree with all that. Then they turn around and they say in the same breath, "Oh, well, we're going to support, essentially, a body armour registry," where you have law-abiding citizens that need to register their body armour. They say: "Well, the police support it. The police support it." Well, great. The police supported the gun registry, so what's the difference?

I would like to know from this government: why the contradiction? It's a clear contradiction. There's no difference between registering and licensing; it's the same blinking thing. You still have to go to the government and say that you have it and register it. It's the same thing. So what's the difference? Why do they not support the gun registry, yet they support a body armour registry? That's the only part of the bill we have a problem with. That's the only problem. No one in here is saying that we think gang members should be able to wear body armour around. We're not saying that. We disagree with it. If they're using it in the perpetration of a crime, a shooting, whatever, we totally agree. Why not outlaw it or ban it in nightclubs? If that's a problem, ban it in nightclubs. Fine. I understand the reasoning behind that.

But then you go the next step. You take policing resources, that should be used for many of the initiatives that the hon. Justice minister has put forward, that are good initiatives – she wants to increase police on our streets. Fantastic. I agree with it. She wants to, you know, make sure that we have more sheriffs. Well, that's the Solicitor General. That's great. We want more ICE teams. That's great. These are all great things. So why are we using money, especially when times are tight financially, to essentially create a body armour registry? Of course, it's going to be integrated, but it's still going to cost money. There's no reason.

Criminals and gang members aren't going to register their body armour. It's ridiculous to think that they will. They won't. They absolutely will not do that. The only people that this affects are law-abiding citizens that for whatever reason feel they would like to, whether it's in their job or whether it's a woman that wants to wear a stab vest for whatever reason. Perhaps she has a hostile ex. I don't know. There are a hundred reasons. The point is: why do we take that liberty away?

You know what? The government is right. There aren't tens of thousands of Albertans that wear body armour. No one is saying that, but it does affect our personal liberty and a little bit more. It takes away an option that law-abiding citizens have, makes it more difficult for law-abiding citizens to protect themselves and to make a choice, to just make a choice. That's not right. It's also, like I said, a waste of taxpayer money. That's the other issue. So there's a liberty issue, and there's also a waste of taxpayer dollars issue.

I keep asking the other members on that side, and I have yet to hear any excuse other than: oh, the police want it. Well, police wanted the long gun registry, too. We agree with the police, I think, in this House on lots of different things, on most things. We want to give them all the tools that we can to fight crime, but there is a limit. That's why we didn't support the long gun registry. There's a limit to what we want to do because at some point it becomes burdensome and wasteful for taxpayers, and it starts taking away our liberties. The long gun registry: why should we have law-abiding farmers register their guns, their long guns, their hunting rifles? It's stupid. It's a silly law, and that's why we didn't support it.

It didn't create the intended effect that the government at the time, the federal Liberal government, was trying to get, so we fought it, and we're still kind of fighting it. It's now officially kind of gone, but now we have to dismantle the bureaucracy, and it still has to get through the Senate and all that stuff. The point is that it's moving. We spent all that time trying to get that out, and it took over a billion dollars before we realized the mistake there. Now we're going to duplicate it in Alberta, of all places, with a body armour registry?

I'm sure it won't cost as much, but it will still cost something. What if it costs $80,000? Say that it's really cheap and we get it done for $80,000. Well, that's a police officer. What if it takes $160,000? Well, that's two police officers or a new ICE team or something.

The point is that it takes resources out of effective policing resources, and it puts them into something that is absolutely ineffective. It's just totally ineffective to have a body armour registry. I would ask that the Justice minister and this government review that policy, and before they go and put it into regulation, I would hope that they would find a way to get it out. Leave the rest of it in there. Make it illegal to use it and run around with it in a nightclub and intimidate people. That's fine. I don't know how you'd word it; that's the Justice minister's job. But figure that out and slap a big penalty on them if they're using it in a crime, in a gang shooting, or make it an asset that can be seized when it's found with other illegal weapons or illegal narcotics or whatever. That's fine. We can all agree on that. But let's not take this to the silly step, to the silly level, where we start making law-abiding citizens register body armour. It's expensive. There's no reason to do it.

I know that 29(2)(a) is meant to question the speaker, but I would welcome the opportunity of two or three members of this government explaining the contradiction of why they support, essentially, a body armour registry and why they do not support a long gun registry. Hopefully, they can find a logical explanation for that because I think that Albertans would like to know. We certainly would like to know. That's the point of this House. That's why we're here, to debate these things. So somebody explain it to me. It's an open question, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there are five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing nobody taking on 29(2)(a), the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak in favour of this bill. Obviously, you can see that there are tensions in every legislation like that between civil liberties and, again, protection of the average citizen. I think in this bill it strikes the right balance. It doesn't seem to be logical that this is interfering with many Albertans' rights, if any. It allows for the police to do their work more efficiently and effectively. It is targeted primarily at gang members, and they are the ones currently using this stuff to do their nefarious deeds. It allows people who actually need the body armour legislation a process to get it and to use it effectively so that they can perform their jobs. Again, this bill tries to cut through that and tries to strike a balance between those two equations and I think does an effective job of doing this.

It does weigh on me that both of the police chiefs spoke very in favour with it. I realize that from their perspective they're having a real war out there on gang crime infiltrating the Alberta scene. If we can give them tools like this that can help, well, I'm supportive of it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was a privilege to speak to this this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no other hon. members, I shall now recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act, I think there are some very good points in the bill that have been recognized from members from all corners of this House. I say that there certainly is probably more positive than there is negative.

The issue, though, that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had mentioned relative to the contradiction I think is a fair question. It's also possible, as I know in my time on the government side, that sometimes when bills are introduced, there are contradictions and sometimes the question relative to, you know: what are the costs versus the benefit? As we know, we have to do a cost-benefit analysis, the cost of five more police officers for the bureaucratic red tape of a registry. Who would prefer five more police officers than the bureaucracy, especially in light of the fact that, certainly, I know in my time on that side of the House we supported the idea of government being out of our face when it came to ridiculous registries such as the long gun and others? I'm pleased to say that under the federal government and Prime Minister Harper that is being rectified.

I'm going to give the benefit of the doubt on Bill 12 to the Attorney General, recognizing the important points that have been raised by many members of this House but specifically on the contradiction referenced by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I think in all due fairness to provide the Attorney General with an opportunity to have a reflection of what has been discussed in here and to make the appropriate change relative to this because at the end of the day I think the destination of where we want to get to most of us in here can agree with. It's sometimes that the journey of getting to that destination may require a few changes or detours or even pulling over to the side of the road.

At this point the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has raised, I think, reasonable, measured questions on the contradiction that exists, and I'd welcome the opportunity for the Attorney General to clarify or at least give a better understanding for me on that contradiction that I don't have the answer to as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was interesting today that the one New Democratic member had an amendment passed, and she says that never has that happened before. So with Churchill's hope of never, never giving up, I will stand up once more to speak against Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act, and to give my reasons why I feel that this isn't in the best interests of this House to pass this bill.

First of all, to kind of look at a different angle, this really is giving a false sense of security or else possibly just the perception of action to appease those people that are upset about it. The problems with body armour are occurring and happening in some of our cities, so it says: oh, we need to do something and react. We've got too many bills that come forward, though, where a year later we have to bring amendments to or do something different to or let them kind of fall by the wayside.

We tried to get a proclamation date on child pornography reporting but failed to. Seeing that there's no proclamation date on this one, I hope that this one, if it does pass tonight, which I'm fearful that it will, will sit on the side, and government will say, "Well, we passed the bill; we forgot to proclaim it" or whatever so that we don't have to allocate manpower, allocate taxes, and allocate other resources towards actually registering or licensing, as they like to say, which is another sense of registering, body armour. It just isn't going to be in the best use of their – I mean, the point that I brought up before and again on a last hope of this bill not passing is that it's fines and penalties that we want to impose on perpetrators of crime.

That's who we want to focus our bills on, those that are actually endangering the lives of citizens. For someone to buy and wear body armour isn't a danger to others, but if they're using that and they're becoming bold and brash and making threats, then that's an opportunity where we can pass legislation to say that for someone who's wearing body armour and making threats, we're going to increase the fine, we're going increase the penalty, and we're going to go after those individuals.

To just go after the idea that if we set up this registry, this licensing agency, somehow Albertans are going to be safer I don't think is going to work. The criminals that want this body armour are going to circumvent it. They're going to get people that will argue and debate for them to show why they legally need it. You know: "I've had threats on my life. Therefore, I need it." And they say: "Oh, are you a gang member?" "Oh, absolutely not."

I mean, this is just this false sense of—ordinary Albertans, yes, are going to answer that, but those that are perpetrators of crimes, those that are part of criminal gangs are not going to respect this law. It's not going to accomplish anything. It's going to take up tax dollars, it's going to take up resources, and it's going to take up manpower in order to function on these things.

We don't need to do this. I hope that we'll have a vote against this, realizing that we can spend our time, our resources, and our manpower in better areas and go forward. Let's restore the Alberta advantage. Fortis et Liber, strong and free. Albertans want their freedoms to do these things and the opportunity to make that choice for themselves.

That's all I'll say. I hope that we'll have a vote against this. It's my last chance to speak against it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Is any other member wishing to join the debate on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce a fabulous group of students from Caernarvon elementary school. I had the pleasure of attending their social studies class not that long ago and discussed with them what goes on in this particular Chamber. I have to tell you that they were so well prepared and had a good understanding of what goes on over here, but I'm not surprised because their teacher, Mrs. Susanne Venaas, happens to be the cousin of Mme Micheline Gravel, who is our Clerk of Journals here in the Chamber. They are also accompanied by Ms Bobbi Jo Hollingsworth and Mrs. Line Johnston from Caernarvon elementary school. I would ask them all to rise and accept the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 22 students from Blessed Sacrament school in Wainwright. They are accompanied by one student teacher, Amelia Medeiros, and she has the distinct pleasure of having as a mentor Ms Michelle Folk, who is one of the greatest teachers I've ever met. I always aspired to be as good a teacher as her. They're also accompanied by parent helpers Laurene Kennelly, Bev Babcock, Cheryl Heier, Brett McDonald, and Angela Lee. They are in the public gallery behind me, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine, Mr. Ben Thorlakson, who, in addition to running several very successful cattle feeding operations and being involved in a broad range of beef industry research, is the past president of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Canada Beef Export Federation, and the Alberta Beef Producers and is one of the people who I conferred with before I agreed to do this job. He is accompanied today by his daughter Dr. Lori Thorlakson, who is a professor of political science at the University of Alberta and actually has some students in the building here today. I would like to ask them both to rise and enjoy the very warm traditional welcome of this Assembly, please.

The Speaker: The hon. deputy Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today that I'm very pleased to make to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. First of all, I would like to introduce one of my former colleagues, Dr. Bruce Miller. Please stand, Dr. Miller. He's joining us in the public gallery. Of course, he has served the public for many, many years as a church leader and educator and as a community activist. He served as the member for Edmonton-Glenora from '04 to '08, and he is now leading a congregation at Garneau United Church. Please join me in welcoming him back to the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a very accomplished young woman that I am pleased to be engaged with as part of the Equal Voice mentorship program, Lyndia Peters. Lyndia, please stand. Lyndia is originally from southern Alberta, graduated from the University of Lethbridge, and is employed with the city of Edmonton as a Youth Council co-ordinator. She also volunteers in the youth sector on the Youth Advisory Group to the Canadian Commission for UNESCO and is involved with a number of arts organizations near and dear to my heart, including the Edmonton Poetry Festival. Lyndia is here today at my urging to see how question period works. I would ask you all to please welcome her to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, do you have an introduction today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members here Executive Director Bev Walkner, senior manager of the intergovernmental and integrated health strategy policy branch, and Lara McClelland. They are both here with a number of staff members. I just want to say thank you to them for coming today and paying attention to what we do in the Legislature. The intergovernmental and integrated health strategy branch is responsible for federal-provincial initiatives, strategic policy, and aboriginal programs among several other duties. I would ask Bev and Lara and all of their staff to please rise, and the rest of us could perhaps welcome them with a warm round of applause. Thank you very much.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Nonprofit and Charitable Organizations

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Volunteer Week provides an excellent opportunity to acknowledge Alberta's more than 19,000 nonprofit and charitable organizations, with approximately 2.5 million volunteers and over 100,000 employees. These organizations are vital to the strength and well-being of our communities, contribute to our quality of life, and are essential to attracting people to our province and keeping them here.

A report produced by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations entitled Stretched to the Limit, an economic survey with responses from about 500 nonprofit groups across Alberta, revealed that many nonprofit organizations are under enormous strain, the result of greater demand for programs and services from clients with ever-growing complex needs, decreased funding, and increased operating costs.

Declining revenue sources for the nonprofit sector include foundation grants, individual donations, corporate donations and sponsorships, earned revenue, gifts in kind and stock, and government grants and contracts. Faced with these decreases, organizations have no capacity to absorb further cutbacks. Respondents indicated that the cumulative impact of even modest reductions of between 2 to 5 per cent can have huge impacts. More than 60 per cent of the survey respondents reported an increased demand for programs and services, and at the same time 65 per cent said their general operating costs have gone up substantially for things such as rent, utilities, insurance, staffing, supplies, and equipment.

The report affirms that Alberta's nonprofit sector is resilient and adaptable. While these groups have been adapting to changing circumstances, they are stretched to the limit. In fact, some have already cut programs and services in the communities they serve. According to the survey it's a situation that could become worse in the months ahead despite predictions of economic recovery.

One of the key suggested actions is continued dialogue and ongoing consultation between government and leaders in this sector to better understand the challenges.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Government Shortcomings

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a pattern of bad decisions this government continues to make. Just in the last few weeks two new problems have come to light, the political interference in the Electoral Boundaries Commission and awarding the cataract surgery contracts. This government does not have respect for the rule of law, for property rights, or for democracy. It is displaying the worst of human traits. With its desire to centralize power and control over others, they have created an atmosphere of envy and jealousy between regions, between business sectors, and between Albertans. Many Albertans are discouraged with loss of employment and business opportunities that once flourished here.

This government is showing politics at its worst, and in doing so, they are failing Albertans. They have failed our energy sector, first, with a punitive new royalty framework and now by creating ongoing uncertainty by delaying the release of the details of the competitiveness review changes. They have failed hard-working entrepreneurs, who are trying to compete on a level playing field, by rewarding friends of the PC Party with corporate welfare like carbon capture, ethanol plants, and billion-dollar power lines.

They have failed rural landowners with the trampling of property rights under Bill 36, the land-use framework, and bills 19 and 50, to build power lines we probably don't need. They have failed students by allowing postsecondary institutes to skirt around the legislative tuition increase caps. They have failed health workers and patients with a centralized health board that is causing costs to balloon while services deteriorate. They have failed taxpayers with a $7 billion plus cash deficit, the biggest in our province's history, and the return to deficit financing. They have failed voters with the democratic deficit. There are no fixed election dates, no set election, no free votes, no recall, and with the Legislature closing early, no accountability of question period for six months.

Former Premier Ralph Klein use to say: welcome to Ralph's world. This government has rolled up the welcome mat. Albertans want to know: what world does this government live in?

2011 Solar Decathlon

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate a group of students from the University of Calgary who have been asked to participate in the 2011 Solar Decathlon. The University of Calgary is the only team from Canada chosen to participate in this prestigious honour.

The Solar Decathlon is a biennial competition hosted by the United States Department of Energy. Student-led teams from around the world are invited to design, construct, and showcase solar-powered net zero homes. These homes are displayed at the National Mall in Washington, DC, and are judged by experts in 10 different fields. The Solar Decathlon attracts enormous attention from media, the public, governments, and industry leaders. In 2009 a Calgary-based team placed sixth out of 20 competitors. Next year's team will show approximately 200,000 spectators in Washington, DC, and the world what Alberta technology can achieve.

Alberta and its postsecondary learning institutions are dedicated to finding innovative solutions to today's toughest problems, including problems like productivity, energy efficiency, and competitiveness. Solutions to these problems are found right here at home in Alberta and at the University of Calgary. Team Canada's solar home is cutting edge; it's attractive, affordable, marketable, and above all it's sustainable. It's designed specifically for and with the collaboration of First Nations communities in southern Alberta.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, my hometown of Calgary is leading the country. These bright young minds are the future innovators of our nation, and I offer them sincere congratulations and support for their endeavours. I would ask all hon. members to join me in wishing the team from Calgary, Team Canada, good luck in Washington, DC.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

SAIT Trojans Men's Hockey Team

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the SAIT Trojans became the second team in the Alberta Colleges Athletic Conference history to win four straight men's hockey titles with a 4-1 victory over Concordia in the fifth and deciding game. Coach Ken Babey is now the winningest coach in postsecondary men's hockey history and hit the 400-win plateau.

SAIT Trojans players and staff are as follows: Jonathan Malin, Bradley Plumton, Travis Bradshaw, Mike Ullrich, Clayton Goodall, Ryan Hyland, Kyle Dorowicz, Sean Bassingthwaite, Robert Nocera, Geoff Rollins, Blake Robson, Sean Goodwin, Brock Michalsky, Garret Watson, Brady Mason, Shane Lust, Jessie Tresierra, Kevin Lessard, Thane Wood, Brennan Strang, Marco Guercio, and Shadoc Stoodley. In goal Landon Kroeker, Thomas Tartaglione, and Ryan Nieszner. Coaching staff: Head Coach Ken Babey, Jim McLean, Rob Sweeney, Jason Edwards, T.J. Babey, Ray Herrington, and Timothy Lees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Democracy and MLA Representation

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to you and through you to all members of this House that I have gained a new appreciation in the last week and a half for what an honour it is to be able to represent the constituents of Calgary-Currie in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I want to thank the members of all parties and, above all, to thank the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office for the many and varied kinds of assistance and co-operation they've given me to aid in my transition from where I was to where I am.

There exists a lot of goodwill in this Assembly, and while occasional bits of it may be driven by political expediency or schadenfreude, I believe that it is in the vast majority of instances real and genuine and that it springs from our common bipartisan bond that we share in this House. Each one of us put ourselves and our names forward for public service, and most days I believe and hope each of us gets out of bed, gets dressed far better than I ever had to when I was working in radio, and goes to work because in our heart of hearts we want to do our small part to do some good, to make a difference, to leave this province better than we found it on behalf of and for the sake of the people we represent.

Mr. Speaker, I know that goodwill exists, and I'd like to see us all put it to work more frequently on behalf of and for the sake of the Albertans that we all represent. You know, in my experience, it really doesn't matter how far apart you and I or this person or that person may be politically on quite a number of issues. If we share a concern about some other issue, when we have a common concern, we have common cause, and we can work together to solve the problem for the common good. I believe that approach puts Albertans first.

Mr. Speaker, in short order this House will rise, and we'll all go home to our respective constituencies for the summer. No matter whether we call ourselves PCs, Liberals, New Democrats, Wildrose Alliance, or independents, let's remember that our bosses are none other than the Albertans who elected us, and let's come back in the fall determined to work in their interests. Where that means working across or around party lines in common cause to put Albertans first, it is my hope that we will all be prepared to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge National Volunteer Week and all the amazing volunteers in my constituency, across our province, and across our great nation. This annual celebration recognizes the efforts of nearly 12.5 million volunteers across Canada. It is estimated that each year these volunteers donate over 2 billion hours of their personal time to the benefit of our communities. Our volunteers work tirelessly to make our province and our communities a great place to live, work, and raise our families. Their dedication to making a difference in our communities is truly remarkable.

There have been several volunteer appreciation dinners held throughout my constituency this week. It is a great honour for me to attend dinners in Calmar, Leduc county, Wetaskiwin county, and Drayton Valley-Brzeau. This week I along with the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose attended a dinner that honoured the recipients of the leaders of tomorrow awards for the youth in Wetaskiwin county and city. These outstanding young volunteers ranged in age from six to 21, and we were very impressed to learn about the contributions they are making in their communities, schools, churches, and hospitals, to name a few examples.

We would like to congratulate all the winners and, indeed, the youth who were nominated. These leaders of tomorrow are in reality leaders of today. The nominees represented some of Alberta's best and brightest, and it is important to have events like this to truly recognize and thank our volunteers for the work they do. National Volunteer Week reminds us to take time to thank our volunteers in our constituencies for their hard work and dedication.

Thank you to all our volunteers, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, would you join me as well in extending a very happy birthday to Her Majesty the Queen.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present two petitions. The first petition of 90 signatures from the Calgary area urges the government to "introduce a bill to amend the Alberta School Act to designate in legislation the identity of the party who is primarily responsible for ensuring a child's attendance at school."

The second petition, 119 signatures from the Calgary area, urges the government to "increase the number of Attendance Officers available to Alberta School Boards in order to enhance the enforcement of school attendance."

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to table for the House some petitions from students and parents in central Alberta. Government officials from my office and department met last Thursday with a group of students to discuss their concerns with diploma exams. The conversation was thorough and positive, and I appreciated the students exercising their citizenship and thoughtfully bringing their concerns to the government's attention. They provided me with over 450 signatures of students from Lacombe, Delburne, Caroline, Ponoka, Sundre so that the Assembly might be aware of their concerns as well.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's growing evidence that shows that past a certain point in a salary more money does not mean better results. In fact, a healthy, trusting, positive work environment provides the best incentive. In light of the current bonus system at Alberta Health Services and the fact that their own staff survey shows an almost toxic work environment, it's clear that Alberta Health Services is missing the point and putting their faith in money. Again to the Premier: will the Premier immediately put an end to a flawed bonus system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in response to the same question a couple of weeks ago I said that the minister of health is reviewing the situation with Alberta Health Services. Alberta Health Services itself is looking at a new system for remunerating their senior officials that sit as vice-presidents and other management positions. Any other information the minister has with respect to the progress on the file.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 30 per cent of the total bonuses for the 48 vice-presidents in Alberta Health Services will be determined by "adherence to values," can the Premier explain how any system can possibly measure an individual's adherence to values in an objective way?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak to the piece of information that the hon. member just gave, but I can tell about what we did in government, and that is that we eliminated, with of course the support of our senior managers, $40 million worth of bonuses going forward, and we worked it out with those officials. As I said, the minister of health is working with the Alberta Health Services Board to deal with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, taxpayers surely have a right to know where their money is going. Will the Premier give his word that immediately on receiving this information, it will be made public to all Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we do have a very open and transparent system of communicating with Albertans in terms of the level of compensation for all senior officials, including those that are elected. There is a range of salaries that go into the annual reports from all of the organizations that report to the various ministries.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hydroelectric Dam on the Peace River

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The B.C. government has just announced they're going to go ahead with a massive hydroelectric dam on the Peace River, adding to the two huge dams that are already in place. The flow to the Peace River delta has already been compromised, and all this Premier is willing to do is to seek intervenor status and offer weak platitudes about mitigating negative impacts. To the Premier: given that so much is at stake for Alberta if B.C. goes ahead with the dam, what specifically is the Premier going to do to protect Alberta's interests?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will be protecting Albertans' interests. As I told the media yesterday, I had a conversation with Premier Campbell on Saturday morning. He apprised me that they will be proceeding with the applications. Those applications, of course, will go to adjudication, and a quasi-judicial authority will make the decisions. We will of course be delivering our position. The Northwest Territories and First Nations have some issues. There are a considerable number of questions that have to be answered.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That anticipates the next question which is, really: why has the Premier not been seeking government-to-government negotiations instead of going cap in hand merely as an intervenor in this application?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Premier has called and given us advance notice of the application is a good step on his part and has also given us an opportunity to dialogue on this particular matter even further. As I said before, we will protect the interests of Albertans. There are numerous concerns. The Department of Environment, Department of Justice, and SRD will be involved, and it may include other departments in terms of delivering evidence to the quasi-judicial authority.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the run-of-river Dunvegan dam is downstream from B.C.'s two massive dams and a key renewable resource for Alberta, what effect will B.C.'s latest development and dam have on our ability to generate our sustainable energy resource?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is no development; it's being proposed. That is one of the questions that will be asked by the province. Again, it's the first part of a long process. This is discussion, of course, delivering the evidence to the committee that's going to take a number of years to deal with it and make a decision. But in the meantime we're going to ensure that the interests of Albertans are protected.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation for Occupational Cancers

Mr. MacDonald: Thirteen per cent of new cancer cases identified each year in Alberta could be work related. However, only 31 cancer-related claims were accepted by the Workers' Compensation Board in the last reported year. My first question is to the Premier. Given that there is over $300 million in the WCB's occupational disease reserve fund, will the Premier ensure that all Alberta workers have the same protections that firefighters have for work-related cancers? I believe the government did the right thing when they enhanced protection for firefighters.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's a technical matter, and the minister will respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, with pleasure. The Workers' Compensation Board makes decisions based on the facts, facts presented to the Workers' Compensation Board by the medical professionals. That is how cases are adjudicated. That is how entitlement is being adjudicated on files. When a worker gets injured, there's an obligation for either the employer, the worker, or the medical staff to report the accident. Reports are filed. Decisions are made by the WCB.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier, and this is not a technical matter; it's a matter of health and safety for Alberta workers. Why is the government reluctant to bring in legal protection so that Alberta workers such as welders have WCB protection if they are exposed to cancer-causing agents in their line of work?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister just answered the question. WCB makes the determination. They're a quasi-judicial authority separate from government, and they make those decisions on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: I would remind the hon. Premier that it's this government, his government, that writes the Occupational Health and Safety Act.

Now, again to the Premier: given that there are as many as 2,500 Albertans who could possibly die of occupational cancer by the year 2015, how can the Premier justify waiting five years before cutting exposure rates to cancer-causing agents in the workplace by half?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be known to Albertans that aside from insuring Albertans following an unfortunate work accident, the Workers' Compensation Board also provides our department of occupational health and safety with a significant amount of money for mitigating accidents. One of the areas where the funds are being spent is on making sure that our workers are informed properly and that laws relevant to the occupational health act are being enforced. We are focusing on preventing accidents by education, by putting the proper rules around workplace environments. But when accidents occur or when occupational diseases are developed, decisions by the WCB are made based on medical evidence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has severely eroded what was the Alberta advantage through its incompetence. The health minister has announced that since the handling of the cataract contract process has caused so much confusion and outrage, he'll be hosting a meeting this weekend with most of the stakeholders. This government fails to realize that they should consult the stakeholders before making major decisions. Given the damage this sudden cancellation has caused patients and providers, will the Premier step in and extend the old contract for 60 days so that this issue can be properly resolved? Will you step in, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked two or three times by the same member, and I've clearly indicated that there was a request for proposals that was put out with a closing date of January 15. Those who wished to be part of that process were. It was open. It was public. It was transparent. It was all done accordingly. However, there is a second blitz coming up, and that will include additional opportunities. That's one of the reasons why we're meeting on Saturday; it's to provide everybody with that information.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, that's why I asked the Premier.

Given that this government continues to make flawed decisions behind closed doors, will the Premier clear the air on this process, and will he have his health minister table those RFPs, as the health care act legislates, so that the right decision will be made rather than the bad political ones behind closed doors?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that question was also asked by one of the opposition colleagues, and I indicated then the same thing that I'll indicate now. I will look into this matter further.

Mr. Hinman: He needs to table and make it open.

You know, all good things come to an end but, thankfully, so do the bad ones. Given that the only procedure that will fix this government's vision is one that the citizens of Alberta will perform at the next election, can the Premier promise that this appointment will not be rescheduled from the spring of 2012?

Mr. Stelmach: All I know is that I'm not going for cataract surgery as yet. Hopefully, I don't have to before March of 2012. I really don't know where the poor fellow is going.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health System Governance

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Almost two years ago the government decided that Albertans needed a health care villain to continue the government's privatization agenda and to shield the Premier from responsibility. The superboard was struck in order to distance government from accountability when it came to decisions to cut public services and staff. They in turn set up their villain, Dr. Stephen Duckett, and his 50 vice-presidents. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why won't the minister stop hiding behind Alberta Health Services and take responsibility for the health care system once and for all?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've answered questions about this before as well, and I would encourage the hon. questioner to please read Hansard. It was very clearly indicated why we went from 12 different boards, including nine provincial ones and three others. It seemed appropriate to streamline them down to one central board. There have been a number of efficiencies as a result of that, more consistent information gathering as a result of that, and taxpayers are saving money and will be getting better service as a result as well.

Mr. Mason: Well, since Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness are two bureaucracies stumbling over each other to shield the minister from any responsibility and since the salary and bonus payments to two bureaucracies overloaded with at least 50 top officials are obscene and will cost taxpayers millions, why won't the health minister show real leadership and financial accountability by disbanding Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I've answered this question before as well, Mr. Speaker. The issue is that there are two arms in health care. There's one arm that does strategic policy setting, that is responsible for the budget, that is responsible for legislation, that is responsible for regulations, responsible for doctors' services, and so on. That's called the Department of Health and Wellness. On the other side, the other arm deals with the specific delivery of acute services, of long-term care services, of cancer services, contracts with nurses, and so on. That's the delivery arm. Why would he want the delivery arm shut off? It makes no sense.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister knows that we want health services delivered, just not in the crazy way that he's doing it.

Given that Alberta Health Services' survey showed that less than 30 per cent of employees were optimistic about the future of Alberta Health Services and given that Alberta Health Services has created chaos in the health care system, which is made even worse by the minister's constant political interference in their decisions, why won't you tell Dr. Duckett to pack his bags, dissolve Alberta Health Services, and finally step up and take full responsibility for Alberta's health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that kind of a torque and inflammatory question barely deserves the dignity of a response in this House. That's just absolute nonsense, and the member knows it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

High-intensity Residential Fires

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, another month, another high-intensity residential fire. It was four weeks ago yesterday that I brought this up the last time in this House. Today we're talking about the big fire in Airdrie, another Alberta classic, where one house catches fire, takes out three other houses with it, and damages another 14. That isn't normal anywhere but this province. Since Alberta's firefighters are as well trained and capable as any on the planet, I wonder if the Minister of Municipal Affairs might be willing to finally fess up that there's something terribly, terribly flawed in Alberta's building codes.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, a couple things. One is that our mandate is to save lives and as much property as possible. The other one is to reinforce what we already have, and that's a safe building code, with one that's even safer. Again, it's a very, very difficult time for anyone involved in fire, and that in fact motivates our staff to look at some of those issues and allows us to review what's happening and then to reinforce things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please acknowledge that Alberta's climate, windy and dry as it is, is unique and distinct from the rest of Canada and that we need unique and distinct fire prevention and abatement measures built into Alberta's fire and building codes?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are doing all of that. Alberta should be commended for the work it has done and not necessarily criticized for proactively taking some action by protecting Albertans. We've got some of the strictest building codes in the country. We've actually updated our building codes two years ahead of any other jurisdiction across Canada, and we're continuing our consultation process with our stakeholders and the public and making sure that we're doing things right.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that those claims don't do any good when people's houses keep burning down several at a time, all at once, and given that you can't put any more space between the homes that are already built, will this minister at least admit that vinyl siding is about the next best thing to lighter fluid in a fire and ban that stuff as a building material?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, our codes have changed to address some of that, and those are coming into effect as we speak. I think we need to remind ourselves that our fire standards are important to slow down the spread of fire. The whole idea is to give people more time to escape, to get out of their homes, while firefighters take the time needed to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

School Construction in Edmonton

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 this government announced plans that it would build six new schools in the Edmonton region and that two of them would be built in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. One is a K to 9 Catholic school, Sister Annata. I'm happy to report that this school is under construction and will be open for business this fall. Another one is the K to 9 public school in the Grange area. My question is for the hon. Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister assure my constituents that this Grange school is still on track?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the 18 schools being built under the Alberta schools alternative procurement program are on track. They are being built two years ahead of schedule. We will turn over those schools by June 30. One of the schools that was started two years ago in the hon. member's constituency is one of those schools. In September these schools will serve over 12,000 students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 the minister announced they would build 18 schools through the ASAP initiative, which is the Alberta schools alternative procurement program. I would like to ask the minister: is this process quicker than a traditional process, and has this lived up to this claim?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, yes, it is. In fact, it's two years ahead of schedule. Students in the ASAP 1 will be in their classrooms September 30. We're expecting the same with ASAP 2, and he has one of these schools. Yes, it is faster; yes, ASAP 1 saved $97 million. Stay tuned for the announcement of the next go-round.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Yes. My final question is to the same minister. Can you tell me the specific date when the Grange school is going to be built?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to say that we go through a very stringent evaluation of the school projects. That announcement is going to happen I believe tomorrow. I'm hoping that with the speed of the first go-round – it took two years shorter – the same thing will happen with this one. It is a good program. It is a good directive to keep our students very much educated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Use of Rocky View County Brand

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Freedom of speech doesn't seem to be a priority for this government. They took down only the antinuclear signs in Peace River, and now they are failing to protect the residents of Rocky View county's right to free speech. In January of this year cease-and-desist orders were issued by the town council to individuals running a website which was critical of the council's policies. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: does the minister agree with the Canadian Civil Liberties Association's criticism that the council infringed on the residents' right to free speech?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with those particular details. If the member opposite would want to give me more information on that, I would do the research and get back to her.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Perhaps the minister at the same time could tell me why nothing was done by the ministry to protect the rights and the freedoms of those same citizens of Rocky View.

2:10

Mr. Goudreau: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I've got no details as to what may or may not have happened and the reasons why they might not have released some of that information. I'm going to wait for the member to send me that information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms. Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, given that freedom of speech is only the most recent problem that the residents of Rocky View county have had with their council, could I also get the minister to agree to meet with these constituents to address their concerns?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, my role is to work with the individual municipalities. I think there might be other ministers in this room that might be more appropriate to respond to the issues that those particular individuals have. At this stage those are just allegations. Unless I get more information, I can't say yes or no that I would meet with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Medical Residency Positions

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have heard from my constituents that medical students are being denied access to residency spots at Alberta's teaching hospitals. Given our shortage of doctors I sincerely hope that this is not the case. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How many medical graduates and/or foreign-trained doctors are being denied residency training spots?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no Alberta medical graduates are denied any training spots because there's a spot for every one of them. Funding for postgraduate medical residency training has in fact increased rather dramatically over the last five years, and that includes a spot for every Alberta medical graduate. Alberta, in fact, will train about 1,300 medical residents this year. That's up very significantly from 886 residents in 2004, and that's about a 47 per cent increase. That's more residency physicians than we've ever had in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. What is the selection process or policy for Alberta's medical residency program at teaching hospitals?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, our Alberta international medical graduate program offers medical residency training positions to successful international medical graduate candidates who are residents of this province. The program begins with the screening of the applications and the applicants, and then a more detailed assessment is done regarding the applicants' knowledge, clinical skills, and abilities. Finally, those international medical graduate students who satisfactorily complete the four-month assessment period are then offered a full-time paid residency position.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: when an approved medical residency applicant drops out in the middle of their program, what happens to that spot? Does it remain vacant, or is it filled by another student?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's some built-in flexibility with respect to that circumstance, should it occur. There are also occasional dropouts precipitated for a variety of reasons, and that requires not only some flexibility but a less formal approach to seeing whether or not it's possible to put someone else into that program midway through an existing one. That is an important issue that is being looked at right now.

Charitable Gaming Model Review

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, last fall this government dispatched three MLAs from the backbenches to canvass charitable organizations about possible changes to Alberta's charitable gaming model, and they were supposed to deliver their final report by March 31. Obviously, this deadline has come and gone. My question is for the Solicitor General. When will this report be tabled in the Assembly? After today we adjourn for five months.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that the committee, in fact, met its deadline, and I'm in receipt of a report, which I'm reviewing right now. The AGLC is reviewing it as well. I have an internal process to follow, and upon completion of that process if it's determined that the report will be released, I'll do so.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General keeps setting and missing these deadlines, so let me just ask: why was this deadline missed?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have done no such thing. The member himself just said that the committee is required to table a report, and they did so on the deadline. I haven't missed any deadlines.

Mr. Hehr: Well, this Assembly just debated legislation that would see revenues dedicated to jurisdictions they originate from. Why were you considering redistributing gaming revenues raised in one jurisdiction to some other community?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, all good stuff for debate, but we'll wait until the report comes out and determine how to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

School Transportation Funding

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within Whitecourt-St. Anne Northern Gateway school division spans nearly 375 kilometres from end to end, further than the distance between Edmonton and Calgary. Each day 4,000 students in this division are transported over 12,000 kilometres. My questions are all to the Minister of Education. Pembina Hills school division receives $64 per weighted passenger more than Northern Gateway. They have fewer square kilometres, fewer weighted passengers, fewer routes, and a more compact school jurisdiction than does Northern Gateway. Mr. Minister: why the big difference?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, rural transportation funding is actually quite complex, I've discovered. School jurisdictions receive part of their transportation funding based on a density grid as well as distance funding and special transportation funding. At the heart of it is the density rate and Northern Gateway's placement on the transportation density grid. The density rate is multiplied by the jurisdiction's total number of eligible weighted passengers and eligible transported ECS students to determine their funding. Based on the fact that Pembina Hills has fewer weighted eligible passengers, they occupy a different spot on the grid, a higher rate, even though their division covers nearly the same area as Northern Gateway.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll make it even easier yet. Within my own riding Grande Yellowhead received $73 more than Northern Gateway per weighted passenger but has 700 fewer square kilometres, 1,500 fewer eligible passengers, 37 fewer routes. Why the big difference?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm given to understand that while Northern Gateway covers a greater area than Grande Yellowhead, for example, they do serve a greater number of eligible passengers and therefore are considered denser based on the density calculation, hence the difference in the result.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on about the injustices on this issue. Will the minister just meet with my staff and board members of Northern Gateway and get this issue resolved once and for all?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have been working with the division to review its transportation service area to ensure that it accurately reflects their jurisdiction profile. I'll be more than happy, once we have that review, to sit down and work with them to ensure that they're appropriately placed and have equitable funding based on the grid.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the next member to be recognized is the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. This doesn't follow the exact rotation that was outlined, but it's the result of an agreement between the member who had placement 4 and the member who had placement 12 today in the question period.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have shown their displeasure with the former minister of health's handling of health care. The new minister was like Superman, coming in, meeting with editorial boards in Calgary and Edmonton, picking up his cellphone and calling, saying: what's going on with the Tom Baker centre? That got to be a priority. It was quite impressive. I have to ask the minister: will he pick up his cellphone today, call Stephen Duckett in the same leadership approach and, in fact, go and tell him to stop the bonuses that have been mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the people who are involved in managing the delivery of health services in this province work extremely hard at their jobs to ensure that the best level of care is provided, that the best level of service is provided. When you're managing about a $10 billion budget and you're looking after, one way or another, 85,000-plus employees, when you're looking after responsibilities for over 400 health facilities, you have to attract the best people. It is common practice in both the public and private sectors to pay some form of bonuses in that respect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Given that the minister obviously didn't hear my first question, let me repeat it. Under the leadership style he used with the Edmonton and Calgary editorial boards, picking up his cellphone, calling to make changes, getting hands on, which we applaud and Albertans applaud, will the minister pick up his cellphone and call Stephen Duckett and cancel the superboard's bonuses for, in fact, 48 vice-presidents, that will cost Albertans millions of dollars?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think most of what the hon. member is asking about goes back more than about a year or perhaps even two in some cases. What we're doing is taking a look at all of those contracts, and I shouldn't say "we" because I'm not doing it; Alberta Health Services is. Nonetheless, those contracts are being looked at right now. There are obligations under contract, and some of them called for bonuses. What I can tell you is that going forward, all of these issues have been flagged for review, and that includes bonuses, that includes severances, and that includes pensions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Given the comment by the minister, I hope his cellphone battery isn't dead. I have an extra cellphone battery here today.

I would ask him to join me along with the Alberta legislative press gallery and take the same approach with them, where you cancel the bonuses, roll up your sleeves, similar to the approach that you used with the Calgary editorial board, where you said: let me . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's a tempting offer, but as all members know, cellphones aren't allowed in the Assembly, so I could hardly do that. But I understand the anxiety, and I hope I've explained sensibly and rationally that there are processes in motion. Thank you.

Research and Innovation Funding

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this government dissolved one of Alberta's most successful organizations, the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. AHFMR is being replaced by something called Alberta Innovates. Last Friday the chairman of Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions sent out a memo openly admitting, "We do not know the exact nature of Alberta Innovates . . . new funding programs." To the minister of advanced education: why did this government shut down AHFMR when it didn't have a detailed plan for what would take its place?

Mr. Horner: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would peruse the rest of the letter, I think what he would find is that in this current year the competition that the fund did was actually $4 million more into health research than what happened last year. In fact, next year that amount and potentially even more, dependent upon the endowment, will also go out into the research programs of health research in the province of Alberta, more attuned to what the Premier of this province at the time, Premier Lougheed, wanted the Alberta heritage fund for medical research to do.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a mess.

Given that Alberta's medical researchers have been told that the September application process for funds is being cancelled and the new funding structure won't be in place until the fall, what are medical researchers who depend on applying for funding this September supposed to do? What's your guidance to them?

Mr. Horner: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I believe – and I was looking for the confirmation – that the competition that closed today was for moving forward in the fall. What is at issue here are a number of salaried employees of the universities, if you will, not just in Edmonton but also in Calgary, that are potentially not going to win the award. Whether or not they would win an award the next year and whether or not they would win an award under the program that the new Alberta Health Solutions board is going to design is the question.

The statement that the Alberta heritage fund for medical research is no longer there is a false one because it is. The statement that we're going to continue to do what it used to do is a true statement.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the same minister: given that this minister has been in charge of this reorganization for longer than a year, actually, why is it that according to the chairman of Alberta Innovates in this memo Alberta Innovates is only now embarking on a strategic planning process? How could we be so far behind?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is forgetting a little bit of 18-month history here, and that is that we brought not only the Alberta heritage fund for medical research board but the University of Alberta's representatives from the health and medical fields, we brought researchers from across the province, we brought researchers in the innovation community from across Alberta together 18 months ago, and this is the culmination of their recommendations. Alberta Innovates was not written by this ministry or this minister. It was written by all of the stakeholders within that research continuum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Volunteer Contributions to Safe Communities

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a lot of discussion recently about screening and background checks to help ensure that vulnerable people are safe and that predators are kept away from volunteering with children. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. What programs are in place to help nonprofit and voluntary organizations address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, this is a problem that's been ongoing for some time. Not-for-profit and voluntary organizations as well as individual volunteers spend significant money obtaining police information checks every year. This important step in the volunteer screening process often results in the funding being diverted from core services and can act as a barrier to recruiting new volunteers. The volunteer police information check program covers the costs of police information checks for volunteers engaged directly with those vulnerable populations such as children, seniors, and the disabled. This $2.4 million, three-year program is jointly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. What role do volunteers and nonprofit organizations play in helping to create safe communities in Alberta?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, volunteers play an integral part in Alberta. It's part of our rich history. For over a hundred years volunteers have always helped one another build stronger, safer communities and helped one another always take care of the less fortunate. Volunteers help coach sports teams. They help serve meals to seniors. They help take care of the disadvantaged. [interjections] If the hon. member would have some respect during National Volunteer Week. We have thousands upon thousands of volunteers in our province, who do a great job to make Alberta the great province that it is.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Water Allocation

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's water allocation system is out of date. It was designed to provide for the irrigation districts first but also has to balance the water needs of our growing population and industry. Instead of dealing with the problem up front, the government is allowing irrigation districts to reallocate their water for commercial use. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: how does this move towards commoditization of water do anything but jeopardize the province's ability to protect water for agricultural use?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the licensing is handled under the Minister of Environment, I am pleased to report that with the new methods that are used now and the new approach that is used with irrigation, we're able to cover far more acres with less water than we did in the past, which is going to open up opportunities, I think, in the future for other uses by Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Has this minister considered what other countries' approaches are to water conservation, particularly, and to irrigation, and might they work here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, in fact, we have. Our agriculture industry is using the most modern technologies. The changeover is actually quite advanced, whereby we're able to irrigate crops with far less evaporation and far more of the water actually going to the growth of those crops.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given that this shift could take away farmers' rights to hold a plebiscite on water allocation, how can the minister be certain that farmers are really willing to permanently give up their water rights?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that farmers are wanting to give up any water rights with respect to the requirements that they have for their agricultural operations. It wouldn't make sense.

There's no common sense in an approach that would reserve water rights beyond those that are required to grow the crops that these agricultural producers grow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pension Reform

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As in all of Alberta, a fair number of my constituents are either retired or are approaching retirement age. Recently there has been a considerable amount of media attention around remarks made by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise that seemed to indicate that Alberta is no longer interested in pension reform. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Has Alberta changed its position on pension reform?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is no. The Alberta government has not changed our position. What we are saying – and it is what most pension experts are saying – is that the system is not broken. The question is: how can it be improved? It's working well for most Canadians. There does appear to be a problem for those Canadians in the middle-income bracket, so the question is how to tailor a solution that matches the problem. What we don't want to do is adopt a solution that punishes young Albertans. We don't want to do that. We will not do it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Reports indicate that Alberta is going to let the next decade pass before it looks at this issue. Is that true? Will the Alberta government not look at this issue for 10 years?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we all know not to believe everything we read in the newspaper. There was a little misreporting on that. There is a spectrum of possible solutions to the retirement income issue, ranging from voluntary private-sector solutions to more coercive government solutions. I was down there with a group of pension experts, and I asked: would it make sense to try the voluntary private-sector solutions first before moving to the more coercive and more expensive public sector? And I said: if so, would 10 years be an appropriate time length to try those private-sector solutions first? I'm looking forward to their answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. It isn't exactly clear what the government is going to do. What is the Alberta government going to do about pension reform next and when?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, our department staff is working with their counterparts in other provinces. We've also just finished a public consultation with Albertans and received some very worthwhile information and advice there. I will be going to a federal-provincial-territorial ministers' conference in June to meet with my counterparts to bring this information together. We, in turn, will issue a report that will go to all of the Premiers that meet at the Council of the Federation in August.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Noise Abatement

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I raised the issue of loud vehicle noise in the cities and the efforts of the Edmonton Police Service, the industry, and Alberta Transportation to establish testing procedures and recommendations for new legislation which would establish a provincial standard for noise emissions. We need to give officers objective noise emission levels and approved equipment. So far no legislation. To the Minister of Transportation: why is the desire of government to hit the summer barbecue circuit early more important than the eardrums and a quality night's sleep for many urban Albertans?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely don't know where this hon. member ever got the idea that we were bringing legislation forward on vehicle noise. The province has never ever indicated we'd do that, and no other jurisdiction in Canada is doing that. Yes, we've done preliminary research tests. We've been doing static tests on noise of motorcycles. Contrary to what she believes, there's no real way to prove the tests while they're moving.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since the minister's ADM is well aware of this issue, if the minister hasn't asked for a briefing, will he ask for a briefing, which would explain to him the need to establish a workable noise limit and approved noise-testing equipment and to understand that this was developed using automotive engineering test procedures?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm very aware of what she's talking about. That's why I'm telling her the real truth of the matter. The fact of the matter is that municipalities can give out and are giving out violations right now on noise with motorcycles. It's being done today.

Ms Blakeman: Given that the police service is having trouble getting this through the courts because it is not verifiable, it's not an objective way of dealing with this. Will the minister, since he wouldn't bring it forward this time, guarantee us that this House will see that legislation next fall?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I told her we have no intention of bringing it forward because it's not testable.

I want to reiterate that the Edmonton Police Service issued 383 tickets between May and October of last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

East Calgary Health Centre

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The completion and operation of the east Calgary health centre is urgently required to meet the growing need for health and wellness services for our constituents in Calgary-Fort, Calgary-East, and Calgary-Montrose constituencies. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. When will the centre be put into operation to serve our waiting constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Basically, the project referred to is nearing completion as we speak, and I'm expecting that centre to open very, very soon. That's very important because once it's opened, it will consolidate a number of services for people in that location and bring those services all together into one specific area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since its first schedule many people are anxious, waiting for the centre's completion. Why have there been so many delays?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, that particular health facility was readied, and then it was shelled in and was awaiting completion, which is now imminent. At the same time, they were still awaiting some details with respect to operational funding. As that was being done, some of the planning was also being finalized. The centre will consolidate a lot of services that were formerly provided at other facilities. It will bring them all under one roof. The really good news is that there are no more delays, hon. member, and the majority of those programs will be up and fully functioning later this summer and into the fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

School Board Advertising to Attract Students

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was driving into the city the other day, and I saw a Strathcona county school bus with a big sign on the back advertising Elk Island school division. I've seen other school divisions advertising on billboards and TV. To the Minister of Education: given the need for accountability why in these tight fiscal times are school boards spending precious education dollars on advertising rather than on students and programs?

Mr. Hancock: Well, it's a good question, Mr. Speaker. Locally elected school boards do have autonomy over their funds and get to direct them. They are restricted to 4 to 6 per cent on administrative funding, which is where advertising would come from. Spending on advertising comes out of that process, but it's within their budgetary discretion. It's a good question, though. All last fall we talked with school boards about whether the funds that we're using in the education system are helping us to achieve our outcomes and looking to say: can we cut back in areas where we're not achieving our outcomes? That being said, the school boards do get funded on a per capita basis, so they try to attract more students.

Mr. Griffiths: They try to attract more students. To the same minister, then: given that they're trying to attract students through advertising, have any of them done a business case in their business plans to show that spending money on advertising attracts enough students to offset the cost of the advertising and improves the students' education?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't be privy to that information. That's within the purview of the school board. We try not to collect more information from school boards and put them through more reporting processes than they absolutely have to do, so I don't have that kind of information. However, we do have a system of choice. Again, school boards do compete for students, unfortunately – that's part of the system – so they do engage their advertising dollars, but they have to be accountable to their electorate for the way they spend their dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that social media, the Internet, word of mouth, and great programs for students are the best ways to advertise and are free or improve education, will the minister begin discussions with the school boards to talk about curbing this policy so all dollars go to actually educating students?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the kind of discussion we engaged in last year and we're going to continue to have. The resources that we have are substantial, but they're never going to be enough to do everything that people want to do, so we have to focus on making sure that as we use the public's resources, we're achieving the outcomes in the system that we want to achieve. We need every school board, we need everybody involved in the system, we need every teacher in the school to look at every dollar that's being deployed to determine whether we're getting the best value for the money. So that discussion will continue, the value review that says: are we achieving outcomes with the investment we're making, and is what we're doing adding value? Every school board should be doing that, the provincial government should be doing that, and every school should be doing that.

911 Emergency System

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's 911 system is an important part of keeping Albertans safe during times of emergency. Whether a call is made to an ambulance for a medical emergency, to police to report a crime, or to a fire department to report a fire, citizens need to know that the system is reliable. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what portion of the 911 fees that we pay on our local phone bill goes towards the operators of the system?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, a reliable 911 system is an important part of keeping Albertans safe. The CRTC approves the fees, and under the current structure Telus charges 44 cents per line for each land line phone on a monthly basis. But more people are using cellphones now, and those 911 fees collected by the wireless providers are kept presently by the companies.

Mr. Allred: My next question to the same minister: since the issue falls within both municipal and federal jurisdictions, is your ministry doing anything to help municipalities ensure that these are used for 911 services?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, municipalities provide 911 services to their residents or through contracts on a regional basis. We are presently talking with our government colleagues to discuss the needs of Albertans and the 911 services, and we're also working with the municipalities and Telus to improve that system as well as reviewing how other provinces are handling these charges.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: since the provincial government has a role to play in ensuring that Alberta has the most reliable 911 system possible, is there anything the minister can do to make sure that all operators are adequately and fairly funded?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, even though we aren't the regulator, we're always looking at ways to co-ordinate resources so the 911 system is efficient and properly funded. We recognize that wireless services are not available everywhere, and we want to make sure that Albertans have access to wireless 911 across the province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Today 20 hon. members were recognized. That was 116 questions and responses. Of the 20 members recognized, eight came from the Liberal Official Opposition, four from the independents, and eight from the Progressive Conservative governing caucus.

We will continue the Routine and conclude it rather quickly. We were at Tabling Returns and Reports.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a publication entitled Stretched to the Limit: Economic Impact Survey, Alberta's Nonprofits & Charities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to table on behalf of an individual, Grace Irons, from Sherwood Park, Alberta, who contacted our office on behalf of her father, who is a constituent. She has issues around cataract eye surgery being taken away from the Gimbel Eye Centre and moved to the Royal Alex. She has given me permission to table this correspondence, and I appreciate the opportunity to do so.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, response to a question raised by Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, during Oral Question Period on April 20, 2010, requesting a copy of the document entitled Water License Change of Purpose: Administrative Licencing Criteria.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Oberle, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, responses to written questions 32, 33, 34, and 35, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 15, 2010, and return to orders of the Assembly MR 10 and MR 11, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 15, 2010.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I can call Orders of the Day or give you some statistical information with respect to this spring. I'll give the information. I'm sure you'll all enjoy it. Some of these numbers are to the end of last evening's sitting on April 20, and some of them are to now.

The number of sitting days this spring was 30 as compared to 48 last year. The number of minutes in the Assembly to this time last night was 6,973 compared to 12,934 in the 2009 sitting. The number of hours was 116 hours and 13 minutes, not counting today, compared to 215 hours and 34 minutes for the 2009 spring sitting, and the number of words spoken was 990,361 compared to 1,704,611.

Interestingly enough, though, in terms of the number of words spoken in standing committee meetings this spring, despite the difference of the 30 to the 48 days, including this morning's Public Accounts Committee, in committee 677,650 words were spoken compared to 878,459 in 2009 committees. That's rather large in proportion to the number of meetings.

The number of hours of committee meetings for this spring, also including this morning's Public Accounts Committee: 84 compared to 107 last year.

With respect to Oral Question Period, 18 sets of questions and answers or more for the current session, 11 times we had 18 sets of questions and answers, 14 times we had 19 sets of questions and answers, and on five occasions, including today, we had 20 sets of questions and answers. Compare that to the 2009 spring sitting. In 2009 we had 11 occasions with 18 sets and one occasion with 19 sets.

The total number of questions and answers for this spring was 3,359. That's an average of about 108.2 per day, keeping in mind that day 1 did not have an Oral Question Period. The total number of questions and answers for the spring of 2009 was 4,663. That was an average of 99.21 questions and answers per day, so that's almost a 10 per cent increase in questions and answers in 2010 as compared to 2009.

The number of government bills that will receive or have received royal assent is 15 compared to 46 a year ago. The number of government bills left on the Order Paper is one compared to five a year ago. Private members' public bills that will receive royal assent: two compared to one a year ago. And I do believe that this is the first time in the history of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta that an opposition member's private bill received third reading.

Private members' public bills that have received or will receive royal assent since 1993, when the standing orders affecting this item of business were amended: 48.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: After that exhausting list, Mr. Speaker, I would have to advise you that the business of the session has been completed. Therefore, pursuant to Government Motion 14, which was agreed to on April 13, 2010, I would ask that the House now stand adjourned.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:46 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 14]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 3rd Session (2010)

Activity to April 21, 2010

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back. I would ask members to remain standing after prayers and the national anthem so that we may pay tribute to former colleagues who have passed away.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

I would now ask Mr. Paul Lorieu, who is in the Speaker's gallery, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Mr. Dave Broda

September 17, 1944, to June 13, 2010

The Speaker: Hon. members, Mr. Dave Broda, former Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, the 682nd MLA sworn in, passed away on Sunday, June 13, 2010, at the age of 65 years.

Mr. Broda was first elected in the election held March 11, 1997, and served two terms until November 21, 2004. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Redwater for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Dave Broda served in the following committees: Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, Standing Committee on Public Accounts, Standing Committee on Public Affairs, Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and the Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee. Mr. Broda served as chair of the Long Term Care Policy Advisory Committee, which authored Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care, commonly known as the Broda report, in 1999.

Mr. Nigel Ian Pengelly

May 29, 1925, to July 3, 2010

The Speaker: Mr. Nigel Ian Pengelly, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 536, passed away on Saturday, July 3, 2010, at the age of 85 years.

Mr. Pengelly was first elected in the election held March 14, 1979, and served three terms until March 19, 1989. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Innisfail for the Progressive Conservative Party. Mr. Pengelly served on the following committees: Select Committee on Recreational and Commercial Fishing Industries in Alberta, Select Special Committee to Examine the Role of the Upper House in the Canadian Federal System, Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, Standing Committee on Private Bills, Standing Committee on Public Accounts, Standing Committee on Public Affairs, Standing Committee on the Alberta

Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, Special Committee to Prepare and Report Lists of Members to Compose the Select Standing Committees, and the Special Select Standing Committee on Members' Services.

Miss Wilma Helen Hunley

September 6, 1920, to October 22, 2010

The Speaker: Miss Wilma Helen Hunley, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 475, and a former Lieutenant Governor, passed away on Friday, October 22, 2010. I will provide more words on Miss Hunley tomorrow, on Tuesday, October 26, 2010.

The Speaker: Family members of Mr. Broda are here with us today in the Speaker's gallery. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I would ask you all to remember former hon. member Dave Broda and former hon. member Nigel Pengelly as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm honoured today to introduce to you all family members of our former colleague Dave Broda, who passed away since we last sat here in the Legislature. The family members are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask, as I introduce each family member, that they stand and at the end receive the warm welcome of the House, please. The family of the hon. Dave Broda: Mrs. Eileen Broda, spouse; Cindy Broda, daughter; Trina Broda, daughter; Susan Broda Olesko, daughter; Taylor Olesko, granddaughter; Mary Tachynski, sister; Kathy Tachynski, niece; Danny Tachynski, nephew; Patty Tachynski, niece. I would now ask all members to join with me in welcoming the family members of the hon. Dave Broda.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. First, it's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 60 enthusiastic and inquisitive grade 6 students from George P. Nicholson elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, in fact from my neighbourhood of Twin Brooks. The group of students is participating in the School at the Legislature, at least half of them are this week and half of them will be later on. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Maxine Sprague, along with parent helpers Mrs. Karen Brese, Mrs. Yuning Cui, and Mrs. Woytkiw. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent from Edmonton-Whitemud, Lori Simon. Lori is interested in the processes and proceedings of the House, and as her MLA I'm pleased to have her attend today. She is seated in the public gallery, and I'd like her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to introduce Mr. Kevin Pizzey, a grade 5 teacher at C.P. Blakely elementary school in Sylvan Lake. Kevin is a resident of the Red Deer-South constituency, he's an active volunteer in the constituency in Red Deer-North, but he's here today as president of the ATA local in Chinook's Edge school division. I can always count on Kevin to keep me apprised of what's going on in the schools in Red Deer and its surrounding areas on issues relative to the profession and to education. Mr. Pizzey is in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you a very large group from Innisfail middle school. We have with us today 80 grade 6 students from Innisfail middle school, who are seated in the members' gallery. They're accompanied by their teachers and helpers. I think it's so important that Alberta children visit our Legislature. As you know, they will be our leaders of tomorrow. I would like to introduce the teachers and the parent helpers. We have teachers Mrs. Dale Jensen, Mrs. Tanis Klymyk, Mr. Tom Stones, Mrs. Dawn Peters. We have Mrs. Denise Lester, Mrs. Leona Marshall, Mr. Tim Donald, Mr. Len McCook, Ms Gail Vander Vliet, Mrs. Jenna Grant, Mrs. Liana Jackson, Mrs. Ronda Leonard, and Mrs. Lisa Allan. I would like them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to defer it until after question period if I may.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals from the office of the Ombudsman. These individuals are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to ask them to rise and remain standing: Gordon Button, the Alberta Ombudsman; Jolene Morin, executive assistant to the Ombudsman; Suzanne Richford, director of corporate services; Diane Smith, assistant to the director of corporate services. I'd like to ask the Assembly to greet them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some of Canada's finest: staff and students of the Edmonton Garrison official languages centre. The Edmonton Garrison Language School and Official Languages Centre provides second-language training in English and French to the military community. We have with us here today Corporal Yan Landry, Private Eric Barbeau, Private Sebastien Toussaint, Private Dave Levesque, Private Nadia Lamoureux, Private Maude Loisele, Private Michael Owen, Private Jean-Sebastien Roy, Private Jeremie Tremblay, Private Mathieu Paré, and our teachers Deborah Stasiuk and Crystal Fraser. I welcome them, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Richard Andersen. On August 3, 2010, Mr. Andersen began his tenure as the president and CEO of Northlands. As a former general manager of Petco Park in San Diego and the executive vice-president of the San Diego Padres Mr. Andersen brings a wealth of experience to Northlands and to the city of Edmonton. Mr. Andersen is joined here today by his daughter Kathleen Andersen. Kathy is director of government and public relations at Northlands. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise, and I'd ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me today to introduce an Albertan who has demonstrated the forward thinking and intelligence of our former Premier Peter Lougheed, has demonstrated the charm and the Alberta advantage of former Premier Ralph Klein, and also the grassroot democracy and the principles associated with Preston Manning. Please join me in welcoming the leader of Alberta's newest official party, Danielle Smith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly two guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. The first one is Guy Smith, the president of AUPE, representing staff at Valley Park Manor and Red Deer nursing home, and also Philipia Bates Renouf, vice-president of AUPE assigned to central Alberta. They've both come to the Legislature to see the tabling of the AUPE petition to save the Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor from being closed this fall by Alberta Health Services. I'd ask my guests to now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 19 students from the Concordia College business and government class. These students are accompanied by their teacher, a constituent of mine, Liam Connelly. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. They may still be on tour. I'm not sure. They were doing a tour of the Leg. If they're in the audience, please rise.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did you want to introduce your guests now or at the conclusion of the Routine?

Ms Notley: I'll defer until after question period.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Brendan Fitzgerald and his mother, Anne Fitzgerald. Brendan and Anne are here today from CCSVI, a short term used to describe compromised flow of blood in veins. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, our Standing Order 7(1.1) indicates that exactly at 1:50 we shall interrupt and proceed to Oral Question Period. If I recognize the hon. minister now who wants to move with a ministerial statement, there is also recognition then afforded to a member from the Official Opposition to participate, and I suspect the Assembly will have a request from the Wildrose Alliance caucus and the ND caucus as well to participate in this ministerial statement.

I'm going to put forward a request to you. We're going to require unanimous consent, and the unanimous consent will include two things; first of all, that we proceed with Ministerial Statements time now, which means that the opening of question period will be deferred, and that at the same time approval will be provided to a spokesperson for the Wildrose Alliance Party and the ND Party and also to the Member for Calgary-Currie. Is anyone opposed?

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address a serious health issue for Albertans. Tobacco consumption is the leading avoidable cause of premature death in Alberta. It is responsible for approximately 3,000 deaths each year in Alberta, ranging from cardiovascular disease to cancer to lung disease. Tobacco use has a significant impact on our quality of life and places a substantial burden on our health care system.

For these reasons in 2002 our government set out a comprehensive strategy to reduce tobacco use by Albertans. This strategy included two tobacco tax increases, a province-wide smoking ban, and restrictions on tobacco displays and places where cigarettes can be sold. It also includes a provincial tobacco reduction strategy, in which we have invested $9 million. These efforts have had success, and I am pleased to report that tobacco use is now at an all-time low in Alberta. The decline in tobacco use points to a strong cause-and-effect relationship between effective tobacco control policies and reduced consumption.

While we are heading in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, we know that we are far away from being able to declare any sort of victory. Tobacco use continues to impact Albertans. Our memories of Barb Tarbox continue to remind us of this impact. Her courage and the journey with cancer that she shared with all of us remind us that we need to persevere and that we need to do more, more to reduce the harmful effects of tobacco use on our society and more to lessen the burden that tobacco use places on our health care system.

That is why I am pleased to announce today that we will take another step to move our tobacco reduction strategy forward by initiating legal action to recover health care costs from the tobacco industry. Last year this Legislature passed a bill to facilitate litigation against tobacco manufacturers. We will now move to join British Columbia, New Brunswick, and Ontario and commence litigation. We are confident that this action is the right thing to do. Some of the most costly illnesses to treat, such as cancer and heart disease, are caused by smoking. The litigation that we plan to commence will seek to share this burden with the manufacturers of this product.

This move is a necessary and important part of our tobacco reduction strategy, a comprehensive strategy with a clear focus to lessen the impact that tobacco has on the quality of life of Albertans and the burden it places on our health care system and also with the clear goal of reducing smoking in the future, especially amongst our youth. This government is committed to continued action on the tobacco reduction strategy, and I am pleased that my ministry is able to play a part in that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Justice minister for rising today to inform us about what this government has done and continues to do in order to reduce tobacco consumption in Alberta. The Justice minister indicated that since 2002 this government has set out a comprehensive strategy to reduce tobacco use by Albertans that included two tax increases, a province-wide smoking ban, restrictions on tobacco displays, and restrictions on places where cigarettes can be sold. Further, the hon. minister will begin initiating legal action to recover health care costs from the tobacco industry. I applaud this government for these actions.

The question remains, then: are we as an hon. House doing everything possible to reduce people's consumption of cigarettes? Sadly, I believe the answer is no. This government could do much more to lead by example and continue the battle against the use and abuse of cigarettes. There is a better way.

Here are a couple of examples of how we could do more. First, it is my understanding that this government continues to invest approximately $60 million in tobacco-related companies. In all seriousness, how can this government claim to lead by example against the insidious nature of the tobacco industry when it is, in fact, a stockholder? If you truly wanted to lead by example, you would immediately divest this government of its shares in these companies. It's simply the right thing to do.

Secondly, I believe this government should look at banning the use of cigarettes in vehicles where children are present. We all know that second-hand smoke is deadly, and it's the government's first responsibility to protect Alberta's children. I don't know how many times I've seen individuals smoking with young children in the car. Governments should look at protecting these individuals and bring in legislation to stop people from smoking when travelling with kids.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to applaud the government on today's announcement, but I implore them to do much more in the continued fight against the insidious nature of cigarettes and the tobacco industry.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as at 1:30 this afternoon the Wildrose Alliance receives official party status in the Assembly of Alberta.

I now will call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We echo the sentiments of the Justice minister. The government needs to play an active and ongoing role in reducing tobacco consumption, and we do support the action being taken.

All Albertans remember very vividly the important advocacy work that Barb Tarbox did to speak out against tobacco use. I don't think anyone could forget the dramatic images of Barb's battle with cancer and the tremendous courage she displayed in travelling the country and putting herself front and centre as an example of the toll that tobacco can take.

Fortunately, thanks to the work of people like Barb and other advocacy groups, smoking in Alberta is on the decline. The smoking rate among Alberta youth aged 15 to 19 dropped from 24 per cent in 2001 to 15 per cent in 2006. The proportion of Alberta youth under 18 exposed to second-hand smoke in their homes is also down, dropping from 22 per cent in 2001 to just 10 per cent in 2006.

But as the minister said, more can be done. Far too many Albertans are still suffering from cancer, cardiovascular disease, lung disease, and other tobacco-related illnesses, adding even more of a burden to our already malfunctioning health care system. That is why it is critical that we continue to drive home the message of preventative health care not only to improve lives for Albertans but also to alleviate the mounting pressure on our hospitals and emergency rooms.

As we will discuss later today, emergency rooms across the province are jammed and backed up to a breaking point. Every single day critically injured and ill patients are being denied the care they need partly because the message of basic preventative health care just isn't getting across.

The reduction we've seen in tobacco use is a positive example of what can be achieved with good advocacy, and the Wildrose caucus supports any action that shifts focus from treatment to prevention.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On behalf of the New Democratic caucus, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government deserves the sort of commendation that typically comes when you say, "Well, at last you've done the right thing" for this announcement that they will pursue litigation against the tobacco industry to recover health care costs. Thousands of Albertans have died and tens of thousands more have begun to smoke during the years that the government has procrastinated. With this issue as with so many others they have delayed action until the merits of the action were almost beyond obvious. Today, desperate to find anything to show that they are doing something positive in relation to the health of Albertans as their ineffective behaviour in relation to emergency department problems is exposed, they announce that this legal action is getting under way. Alberta should not be straggling in after other provinces on these matters. We should be setting the agenda in smart ways to ensure good health for Albertans.

Yes, it is appropriate to go after big tobacco for the costs resulting from their product sales; meanwhile, the need to adequately fund good health care, including a commitment to address the social determinants of health, is something that remains the responsibility of this government. As part of that, a good government would increase the investment in tobacco reduction actions from what is currently a million dollars per year so that the rates of use in the province would drop far more and the health care costs that this action today is designed to recoup would never be incurred in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to all hon. members for granting me the opportunity to respond. A little over three years ago I lost my mother to cancer seven weeks after she was diagnosed with three inoperable brain tumours. She was 82, and while nobody can say for sure, given that her sister is hale and hearty today at 84, her mother lived to the age of 99, her mother's sister is still alive at the age of 93, my mother's grandfather lived to the age of 98, and my mother's great-grandfather did as well, I can't help but wonder if mom would still be alive today if she hadn't been a smoker. While the brain tumours killed her, the doctor said that her primary cancer was the lung cancer that they thought they'd caught early a year and a half before, the lung cancer that showed up several years after she quit smoking.

Mom was never a heavy smoker. She only smoked about six or seven cigarettes a day, and this was back in the day when people smoked anywhere, any time. When she did quit, she was able to give it up without much in the way of withdrawal symptoms. Probably she could have quit at any time, but she went on smoking six or seven cigarettes a day for 50-plus years, and she never exhibited any of the health problems normally linked with smoking until they found that tumour on her lung.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. minister for doing the right thing today. Predictably, the argument will be made that tobacco manufacturers are engaged in a legal business, making a product that is legal to manufacture and sell to consenting adults. The tobacco industry and their spin doctors have hidden behind that claim of legal status for far too long, using it as, if you will, a smokescreen to manufacture and sell a highly addictive product that, if used as directed, will kill you. Every time that it costs a smoker's life, in the lead-up to that it burdens our health care system. The minister is right. It's time that burden was shared with the industry that's responsible for causing it.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Legislative Assembly Proceedings Broadcast

The Speaker: Hon. members, last week I provided to hon. members a sheet identifying the rotation for question period today. I won't go through that now, but later during the Routine I will table those documents once again and make a comment at the conclusion of the Routine for the records of our Assembly.

Two other items as well. Over the summer and the spring the Legislative Assembly Office has been involved in a major project here in this Assembly to update our broadcast equipment, including robotic cameras, recordings, graphics control systems. We now have five cameras instead of two cameras, which will provide us with an improved final product, including more options for shots and camera angles with improved picture quality and, hopefully, sound quality as well.

I would like to advise all that live coverage of the question period will be broadcast daily on Access TV and rebroadcast on Shaw TV at 5 every afternoon with a repeat broadcast to major centres at 10:30 p.m. Your ratings have actually been quite good to attain three broadcasts a day. In addition to that, we'll continue to provide live gavel-to-gavel broadcast coverage of all House proceedings through our website through a new program called Assembly Online.

I'd like to advise members that we now have also arrived at the continuation of an agreement between the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and Television Montana, TVMT, to broadcast and rebroadcast proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in Montana. This agreement started today at 1:30 on Television Montana cable television channels. It was, as I said, 1:30 today and will broadcast Monday through Thursday to the end of the daily Routine when the Assembly is in session.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: We will now commence for today. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For years now this government has promised Albertans they would fix health care. They've done report after report, shelving them one after the other. They've ripped money from the system and then thrown money at the problems they'd created. Now new reports say that we don't have enough beds. Once again we're putting lives at risk, and the emergency departments and doctors and nurses are at the end of their ropes. Mr. Premier, for years you have promised the best health care system to Albertans. We don't have the best health care system. When is it going to be delivered?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the key priority of our government is to have the best performing publicly funded health care system in Canada. We know that there are emergency room pressures. Patients don't want to see that, doctors don't want to see that, health care professionals don't want to see that, and neither do we. The minister has a plan in place that will alleviate some of the pressure, and he'll be able to answer the rest of the questions with respect to his plan.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, it's unclear to every Albertan, including us, what that plan might be. I expected excuses, but please give us the respect due to Albertans in this most vital service. Emergency rooms around the province are crowded, crowded to the hilt. Mr. Premier, why doesn't every Albertan have a family doctor?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has indicated that I will take these questions that deal with details and specifics. What I would like to do is start by directing the hon. member, who himself, of course, is an acknowledged and respected doctor, to the press release that was put out on October 20 wherein a four-point plan for addressing these pressures was clearly outlined. That is part of the larger plan, the five-year funding commitment, that will surely help address and reduce some of those pressures in emergency departments.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to be unwilling to answer the question. Why doesn't every family have a family doctor?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways to answer that question. Some people that I've met with may not want a family doctor or feel they don't need one, but that's not the main thing. We do have a shortage of doctors in some areas of the province. This is true. Some people have indicated that there are doctor shortages in some areas of the province, and that's why we have a very active physician recruitment plan, probably the most active plan on a per capita basis in Canada. We are recruiting some of the youngest people into the system. We pay them to settle in some of the remote areas. We have an active rural physician action plan, and that is starting to yield some results. It's very difficult to recruit to some areas for the numbers we'd like, but we are getting there.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Additional Beds To Relieve Emergency Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The plan to add 250 beds to Calgary and Edmonton hospitals was rushed and provides no details. No specifics were given for the number or type of beds or what the total cost would be. If there are no specifics, then there is no real plan. Mr. Speaker, we have a plan. Again to the Premier: was this announcement of new beds simply to deflect attention away from the fact that the proposed Alberta Health Act won't actually fix any of the problems Albertans care about?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are the only jurisdiction, the government of Alberta, that has provided predictable, five-year funding to the Alberta Health Services Board. That means that the board can plan over the next five years: the first three years a 6 per cent increase, and the other two will be a 4 and a half per cent increase to an ever-increasing budget. We also eliminated their deficit, and we topped up the operating funds for Alberta Health Services to meet what they said at that time were the pressures that they were experiencing. The minister and the board are working out a plan. They have announced part of that plan. There's more to come to alleviate the pressure.

Dr. Swann: Please, Mr. Premier, you talk about predictable funding. There is no new funding under Alberta Health Services to go along with the 250 beds. Please, what areas are going to be cut in order for these beds to be open, or was Alberta Health Services sitting on cash that they haven't spent?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, why is it that any time we want to improve performance, the opposition always calls for more money? Can we not improve performance within the envelope that's provided, not only paying off the deficit but also topping up their budget and then adding 6 per cent onto the top of it? That's a substantial increase. I've asked them just to deliver the plan. First thing they go is: how much more money? You look for better performance by Alberta Health Services given the dollars allocated.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, it's one thing to announce new beds, but it's another to tell us where the money is coming from. What is the plan, Mr. Premier? Where is the money coming from for these beds? Why was that not made clear at the time of the announcement?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, a 6 per cent increase over a budget that was increased to meet the demands that Alberta Health Services brought forward to the table when we entered into a five-year funding agreement. The money is there, 6 per cent funding today. They can move money around. I know – I have trust in the board – that they will deliver on not only opening more beds immediately but looking after some of the other pressures that we have coming forward.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans support the Liberal policy for a moratorium on the sale of Crown-owned land. Unfortunately though, we have a government hiding behind a loophole in legislation and selling our land to a private owner, a friend of the government, behind closed doors. While this has become common practice with this administration, there is a better way. To the Premier: has cabinet approved this sale?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our government's policy has always been, whether it's in the oil sands or whether it's in agriculture or any other industry, to balance the needs of economic growth, of increasing jobs in the province, balancing those needs in terms of landowner rights and also the environment. There's an application before the Minister of SRD. He is reviewing the application, and he will be able to provide the details in terms of the process of any sale of Crown lands.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even if there isn't a legal obligation to consult with Albertans on the sale of their land, isn't there a moral obligation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a process that is followed in terms of accepting any application from any landowner in terms of the disposal of any Crown property, and that's land that's owned by the people of Alberta. As I said, there is a process, and we're following that process. The minister may have other details.

Dr. Swann: Well, can the Premier confirm that this land is being sold for pennies on the dollar?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the situation as it stands today is that we have a proposal – a proposal – from a group of individuals that want to take a look at an agricultural prospect in southern Alberta. The idea that we are selling, have sold, or are going to sell: pure speculation. What's happening here is that there are members opposite who are watching TV ads and reading newspapers and deciding that that's government action based on what they read. There is a proposal that we're dealing with. We're assessing it and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I will table a letter from February of 2008 in which the Premier acknowledged that the province's emergency rooms were overcrowded. In it he promised to direct the then minister of health to establish an expert panel of emergency physicians to develop a plan to address this situation. To the Premier: why didn't you live up to your commitment in forming an expert panel?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure I know which letter the member is referring to because she was on the other side when she received the letter. The letter stipulates in terms of what government is committed to do; that is, to increase the number of spaces for training physicians, increase the number of spaces for training nurses in the province, increase the number of spaces for other health care professionals, and work with all in the system, including doctors and nurses, to ensure that we improve the performance, that we reduce waiting times, and improve access to health care in this province.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's why I'm on this side and not on that side.

Given that the Premier and the minister of health spent a lot of time talking about putting patients first, why has it taken so long for the Premier to keep his two-and-a-half-year-old promise to create this critically needed expert panel and, for that matter, plan?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister has consulted with physicians. He has consulted with physicians not only in terms of bone and joint surgery but also eye surgery and has consulted with emergency room physicians as well. They are part of putting a plan forward in terms of reducing the access time. At the end of the day we do have to train more physicians in Alberta, train more doctors, and we are well under way on that plan.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've seen what's happened with the bone and joint, and we've also seen what's happened with the eye care.

My final question is to the Premier. Given that emergency room overcrowding has now reached a critical breaking point – and I'm not asking for more money, Mr. Premier – will the Premier redirect funding from what should be lower priority initiatives such as your provincial branding, which no one can remember, in order to address this situation immediately?

Mr. Stelmach: In fact, we already have. We never spent all the money that was put into the branding initiative. We never did spend that money. That money will always move to the highest priority within the operation of government. I believe that there's about $10 million or $12 million that was not spent on the branding initiative.

On the other hand, it's bigger than just trying to find some quick, easy solution. Some of it is long term in terms of more doctors and more beds. The other is in training. It's constantly looking to other ways of providing that care. I'm proud to say that the physicians in this province have got together with other allied health care providers, and we're up to now 32 primary care networks. That's a step in the right direction.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For two and a half years this government has known that there is a dangerous crisis in health care, and it has been hiding this from Albertans. In February 2008 the Premier promised emergency department doctors that his government would take action to end the crisis in emergency rooms. Two and a half years have passed, and people have continued to suffer and even die in emergency rooms, yet this Premier has done nothing. Will the Premier admit the obvious, that he has failed utterly to protect Albertans when they need help the most?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've seen improvements in many areas of the system: 3,000 additional surgeries just done here recently. We are moving positively, progressively on the emergency room access. Part of the difficulty there, of course, is to find spaces for the seniors who require continuing care. We've added considerably more beds there, but we have to do more, and we're continuing to do more. That's why I thank all of the groups like Bethany and Good Sam that have come together, Covenant Health, partnering with government to provide more spaces in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the shortage of long-term care beds is a major reason for backed-up emergency rooms and given that the Premier promised 600 more long-term care beds in the last election and given that the government has since been steadily reducing them instead, will the Premier admit to misleading voters in the last election about his government's intention for long-term care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, actually, according to Alberta Health Services we will meet a target of something like 1,333 additional beds for seniors, so we're going to go far beyond what we thought we would be able to put in place in a short period of time.

The other thing. Rather than focusing on what the opposition wants to do – that is, traditional long-term care beds where we would split married couples after 50, 60 years because the system dictates it – Mr. Speaker, we're putting the senior first. We're putting the patient first, not what the opposition wants.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier continues to throw sand in the faces of Albertans about his real plans for long-term care beds, which are medical beds and which are necessary in order to clear up the backlog in emergency rooms, will he come clean with the Assembly, come clean with Albertans, and admit that he's reducing long-term care beds and he's part of the problem as far as increasing the waiting times in our emergency rooms? You're the problem.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think that most Albertans disagree with what the opposition member has said. Our plan here is to build continuing care beds. As the need of the senior increases – meaning that maybe they lose more mobility, maybe a bit more dementia, or maybe that more health care is required for that particular senior – we can add the additional services to the room. Why keep moving the senior from a traditional lodge setting to an auxiliary hospital or a nursing home, keep moving them around, when you could add the services to the very same space that they have? To me that makes very good common sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care Facility Closures

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are several guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees in the gallery extremely alarmed at what's happening to long-term care in Red Deer, as many of us are. Alberta Health Services' annual report shows that there are 252 people waiting for both acute care in the community and continuing care in the region, yet this government is closing 200 public long-term care beds in the Red Deer area. There's a better way. To the minister of health: is it not a mistake to be closing 200 public long-term care beds when there are 252 people waiting for them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I recall being in Red Deer for that opening with the minister of seniors. There's a brand new, state-of-the-art facility there. The people who are already in it say that it is just incredible. That's Extendicare Michener Hill. It's 280 brand new beds, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition should know that 220 of those are, in fact, long-term care beds.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will the minister admit that the whole plan is a mistake? It's clear that only 60 per cent of the staffing needed for that long-term care setting is in place. What does he say about that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the recruitment process is very thorough. It requires people to apply. It requires them to be interviewed. In a few cases it may even require them to be trained or upgraded in their training. It will vary. What I would like the hon. member and all Albertans to know, especially members in this House, is that in that brand new Extendicare facility 65 additional net new added capacity beds were also put in.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, he is defusing the problem and avoiding the question, which is really, fundamentally: will the minister immediately order that the Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor remain open and provide the necessary beds there?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer nursing home is one of our service facilities that has served Albertans extremely well, but it is aged. When the decision was made, it was looked at from the standpoint of whether or not it was more economical and better for Albertans to put money toward upgrading or to building new. The decision was made, clearly, to build new and to expand capacity at the same time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Relief for Emergency Wait Times

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been dire concerns about emergency room wait times in Alberta's hospitals for some time. Reports say that patients are waiting up to 5, 10, 12 hours in ERs. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is being done to address this problem?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of things are being done. I think the first and most important thing is actioning the five-year funding commitment, the first of its kind, which this government brought in a few months ago. Secondly, we do have a four-point plan, that I alluded to earlier, which includes looking at a new discharge protocol. It looks at more beds, obviously. It looks at increasing and expanding services for Health Link and also addressing additional monies that are needed for home-care services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement to the same minister: can the minister be specific about what is being done in Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, in my meeting at 8 o'clock this morning at the University of Alberta hospital, where I dropped in unannounced to see how things were going in emergency, I can tell you that they told me that there are 18 more transition beds, which are part of the emergency bed and acute-care bed protocol, that are being opened up as we speak. In fact, four of them are operational, fully functioning, today. Another nine will open on Monday, Mr. Speaker, and the remaining few will be open by mid-November. And that's just one example.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Health needs can be very unpredictable. How can a discharge date be set for a patient upon their admittance to an ER?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that is part of Alberta Health Services' multipronged approach to addressing ER pressures is not only to take a serious look at how patients are admitted but also to provide them with a plan on when they can go home. That's welcome news for everybody. What they've said is: let's take a look at this and talk with the family, talk with the patient and say that on this-and-this date you can expect to be discharged, assuming your condition warrants it. What they've added to that is to say: let's try to get it done by 11 a.m. to free up that space for others who might need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent weeks we have heard outrage from across Alberta regarding the sale of Crown lands for a potato farm. Instead of protecting Albertans' land, this government is selling it without public consultation. A moratorium on the sale of public lands would be a better way until debate can take place. To the minister of agriculture: is it true that Alberta Agriculture has concerns about this sale and that assessment for irrigation suitability has not been completed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department has stayed in close contact with sustainable resources. This is a proposal that's being looked at by that ministry, and they can comment on that. We want agricultural land to be used for its best and highest use to the benefit of all Albertans, and I'm sure that will be the guiding principles that that department uses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that case, to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what is the minister's response to Albertans who have referred to this deal as a breach of public trust?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, firstly, let's be clear that what we have in front of us is a proposal, as I had indicated earlier. This is a proposal. We have not sold anything. There is no sale agreement, no documents that would indicate that, and the idea that somehow or another there's been no consultation, no discussion ongoing with respect to this issue is false. I have met with county councillors, county reeves, the representatives from the grazing association that's involved in this thing over the last six months. There's nothing secret about this. We do not hold public consultation currently in the province of Alberta to sell land for agricultural purposes. It's served us well for a hundred years. A third and more of this province has been put into agricultural service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, this is the 21st century, not a hundred years ago.

Again to the minister of sustainable resources: given that other established ag operations in the region have been denied access to increased water allocation, where will this potato farmer get his water and at what cost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I couldn't give those details because I'm not privy to the information or the contracts that he may or may not have made. However, part of the proposal that's come forward is to develop about an 800-acre lake and wetland on this real estate. God Himself may provide the water. I don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many, including emergency room doctors, have told us that wait times in Alberta hospitals are reaching potentially crisis levels. They say that the main cause of this is a severe shortage of continuing care beds. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what are you doing to tackle this very important issue?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, among the strategies are things like opening more continuing care beds and also opening a lot more acute-care beds. Now, we've got approximately 800 new beds that have been opened for continuing care purposes since April of this year. That's a tremendous number of new beds, and that's welcome news to all Albertans. We do have the other protocols that I mentioned earlier with respect to discharge, with respect to home care, and with respect to the expansion of Alberta Health Link. There are a number of things happening like that, and tomorrow night when I meet with the head of emergency services, I expect I'll hear a few more ideas from him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a proud Calgary MLA may I ask the minister what he's doing to deal with this situation specifically in Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, specific to Calgary there's a combination of things happening to help deliver over 100 additional beds there. This is a combination of different types of beds – let's be clear – some of which have been alluded to or referred to in previous announcements and a lot of which are brand new added capacity. That includes more hospice beds, more acute-care beds, more subacute beds, more transition beds, and more continuing care beds. There's a lot that's going on right in Calgary as we speak, and there's more coming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, specific to Calgary, Minister, what are you doing to relieve pressure on the continuing care system around Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the big pressures being faced in emergency, as we know, is acute-care beds that are occupied by people who ought to be, should be, or could be in a continuing care setting. So in addition to building more continuing care beds, we're also looking at other overcrowding protocols. Some of that would require people to be moved from the emergency area up to an acute-care level, taking a look at which ones are in more serious condition, which ones can stay on stretchers, which ones need the beds. That particular protocol is very active here in Edmonton as well as in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The airport tunnel continues to be an important issue for Calgary. The Alberta government's failure to assist with the tunnel will strand commuters in Calgary, increase congestion on Deerfoot Trail, and harm the businesses in the area. With the current administration refusing to seriously consider supporting the Calgary airport tunnel, the city faces a difficult choice of forgoing other infrastructure projects or going without the tunnel. There must be a better way. To the Minister of Transportation: Calgarians strongly support this project, so why has the minister not supported the airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this government supports all municipal infrastructure to the best we possibly can. In fact, Calgary alone this year will get around a half a billion dollars in grants to be able to work on their priority infrastructure projects. I'm sure that we are all here to help support them with that, but we have to follow our processes. We have to do what we're responsible for, and we have to let the municipalities do what they're responsible for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the minister had the will, the airport tunnel could get off the ground.

Given that Deerfoot Trail is already over capacity, will the minister finally acknowledge the importance of this project and support the city of Calgary in getting the airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just have to keep repeating myself to this hon. member and keep telling him that we're here supporting things. Deerfoot Trail doesn't go on to the tunnel. The tunnel comes from the other side of the airport. I'm sure that this hon. member wants to get it done, and so do we, but he has to deal with his municipality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister unable to effectively lobby the federal government to support the need for the Calgary airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I lobby the federal government all the time trying to get support for all of our big projects in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

ID Cards for Homeless People

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government recently announced a program to help homeless Albertans obtain government-issued identification. While this is, no doubt, a great photo op for the government, some question the logic behind the program. My first question is to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Even though we're in an era of fiscal restraint, how can this minister rationalize making homeless people, those who are most in need, pay for the ID card?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to this question. This member had asked, realistically, about why we are charging this $12. Well, first off, assistance is available on an individual basis from Alberta Works for individuals who cannot afford the $12 fee. There are two reasons, though, that we went with the $12 fee, one being that there is an intrinsic value to identification, and secondly, for those who are able to afford it, that's roughly the break-even cost to the taxpayer. We wanted to be compassionate both to the homeless individual but also to the taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Many homeless Albertans are living high-risk lifestyles and cannot properly maintain their own independence. How can this minister reasonably assure Albertans that this program will not create more identification fraud and violate the personal security of these already vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta ID cards are among the most secure documents of their type in North America. This program will not change that. These ID cards are the same ID cards that all Albertans can apply for as well. It's about enabling these individuals to have access to ID and to make sure that if they want to store it, they can store it. It will not jeopardize the information and security of the current ID card that we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Using identification cards to track the homeless seems a bit Orwellian to me, but it just seems to be fine to this particular minister. How can the minister assure this House that tracking the homeless is in line with the privacy laws of Alberta, particularly if the card identifies the person as homeless?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question, but I can tell you that there is no intention to follow or track homeless people through this identification card program. It does provide Alberta identification cards to individuals, the same as individuals would get if they did not have drivers' licences. On top of that, this is strictly a voluntary program. It's designed to recognize that it can be difficult to get on your feet without identification.

Over the next few months I'm really looking forward to stories from the hundreds of Albertans who I anticipate are going to sign up for this program and will be able to go to banks, sign up, and get bank accounts. And when they're working, they can cash their cheques there as opposed to going through a cheque-cashing place and paying fees through the system.

I'm very proud of this program, Mr. Speaker, and I think every member of this Assembly should be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Standards for Addiction Treatment Centres

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At least a hundred and twenty thousand Albertans suffer from addictions, but we have treatment beds for less than 1 per cent of those Albertans, and the ones we do have are unregulated, unmonitored, and not even accredited. Given that a public inquiry concluded last week that 17-year-old Taylor

Argent's death at a treatment centre was associated with a profound absence of professional standards, will the minister today issue an apology to the Argent family and commit to implementing minimum standards in these addiction treatment centres across the province immediately?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I assume she's referring to a private facility just outside of Red Deer or Lacombe, in which case that is not under my direct sphere of responsibility, but I am concerned about all Albertans, and I am deeply saddened by the tragic death of this person referred to.

However, accreditations and standards and so on are being reviewed right now for public facilities, and perhaps as part of that we can also look at how we can work more closely with the private facilities, who probably have accreditation or licensing or some sort of an agreement, perhaps through United States standards.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Taylor Argent was referred to the CARC by staff at Alberta Health Services, and as of last week this centre was still advertised on the Alberta Health Services website, as were many other unaccredited centres, both private and public. Why won't the minister take responsibility for his government's role in this tragic incident and demand some transparent accountability before the safety of even more Alberta teens and adults suffers or they are put at risk?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, when you go to a doctor, it's my understanding from having spoken with literally hundreds of them, most of them one on one, that the doctor's obligation is to make you aware of every possible treatment, whether it's covered and funded publicly or not. That is what they must do. That was the circumstance that we had with Avastin, for example.

Now, in this case I'm sure Alberta Health Services folks, whoever they are, were acting in the best interests of the people who were asking the questions: "Where can we get some treatment? Where can we get in the quickest? What kind of services are available?" I'm sure they acted in the best faith to help that family at a time of great need.

Ms Notley: Indeed, they probably acted assuming, like most Albertans do, that the government actually monitors people who provide health services.

Since we have treatment beds for less than 1 per cent of those who are addicted in Alberta and since ER doctors have told this government that there's a serious crisis in ER caused in part by people with addictions and mental health issues, why won't the health minister fund an adequate number of regulated addictions beds so these Albertans can stay out of the ER and get the help that they need?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this government spends $600 million, approximately, every year helping people with mental health circumstances, a lot of them due to addictions. We are also responding with a mental health strategy, a province-wide strategy. As part of that, the accreditation protocols, the licensing protocols will be reviewed starting with the public facilities that are under our purview, and we'll look at other possibilities as well. By the end of spring we'll have it all sorted out, with a new strategy that people will surely embrace.

First Point of Contact for Special-needs Children

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, the system for recognizing and supporting special-needs children in this province is not working. There is, however, a better way through stronger ministerial co-operation, which would involve the first ministry contacted overseeing the provision of services to ensure that the needs of children and their families are met. To the Minister of Education: with coding on the way out how will the minister guarantee that special-needs children are identified and provided with the supports they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be my hope that we consider each and every one of our children and youth in this province special and that we would understand, when they come to school, that all of them have learning needs and that many of them have barriers to success that need to be overcome.

When we talk about getting rid of coding as a funding mechanism, it doesn't mean we would get rid of assessment of those needs and the ability to provide educational and other support programs for students as they need them to improve and help them with their learning process. It's not about coding a child to pigeonhole them and to provide funding; it's about understanding the learning needs of the child and providing the resources needed to achieve that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: for vulnerable special-needs children in the province's care will the minister accept full responsibility for every child whose first point of contact is her department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question because I know this member cares very much about this area of special-needs children in schools. This member was at that news conference. I can tell you that I am working closely with the Minister of Education and the minister of health along with Justice as well regarding it, just across ministries that relate to special-needs children and first point of entry. There's not a definitive answer to give you today, but it's very much in the works.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now to the minister of health: given that special-needs children are often first diagnosed by a physician or a psychologist, will the minister accept full responsibility for every child whose first point of contact is his department?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned about all Albertans regardless of their age, regardless of any other circumstances. If the member has a particular case that he feels hasn't been attended to, I would ask him to bring it to our attention. Otherwise, I was just talking about mental health needs, for example, and I can tell you that out of that $600 million we provide an additional $50 million just to help young people with mental health situations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Water Quality of Athabasca River

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last few months concern has been raised over Alberta's monitoring of the water in the Athabasca River. Albertans deserve to have a clear understanding of oil sands development. My question is to the Minister of Environment. My constituents understood that there had been a very thorough water monitoring of the river for decades. Can the minister tell us what kind of monitoring has been done and by whom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right. We have in fact been monitoring this river since the 1970s, we being government and our partners in monitoring. That monitoring includes the Alberta Environment long-term river networking program, the regional aquatics monitoring program, or RAMP, and recently we've initiated a containment load study to address any impact of emissions from land and water as well as the ecosystem on human health development. The bottom line is that we are constantly seeking the best information possible so that we can make appropriate decisions to protect this river and others in Alberta.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we've been criticized for the discrepancies between our water monitoring data and those of other scientists. Can the minister tell us why there are discrepancies and what governments are doing to address these discrepancies?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to an incident, a report this summer that indicated that there were conflicting opinions with respect to interpretation of data. The Premier indicated at that time that he was confused. Frankly, I'm confused, and I expect Albertans are confused. The Premier instructed me, and I have since formed a third-party committee of scientists, some of whom were recommended by Dr. Schindler and others by Alberta Environment, just to answer that very question.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we know that the federal government has also created its own review panel to look at water monitoring in the oil sands. Can the minister tell us if the government is actually being redundant in the panel that we've got here and if we're wasting resources by forming a provincial review committee that's doing the same thing as the federal government?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we are committed to using the best information possible. My understanding is that the federal panel will be looking specifically at RAMP and at the monitoring system. The panel that I asked be put in place is to have a look at the 30 to 40 years of data and help us to understand why there's a difference in interpreting that data. At the end of the day both of those groups will come together and, I'm sure, be making some strong recommendations on how we can improve not only our data gathering but our interpretation of that data.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

2:40 Emergency Medical Services (continued)

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week on The Rutherford Show the minister of health said that he had visited 23 emergency rooms across Alberta since becoming the minister of health, in order to talk with doctors, nurses, front-line staff to understand the needs of the province's emergency facilities. The next day he responded to a letter from Dr. Parks on the emergency room crisis, saying that the dire situation was a new revelation to him. To the minister of health: did you really visit 23 emergency rooms and see no evidence of the escalating crisis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is taking a little licence with what I said back to Dr. Parks, but I'll let that one go.

The fact is that I have visited these emergency departments – I visited another four or five on the weekend – and I'll continue doing that because I'm of the opinion that the way an emergency department ticks or doesn't tick gives you a snapshot of how the whole hospital works, and that's a fact. I've gone out and met with these folks – I'm meeting with some more tomorrow – and we're making improvements as we go. It doesn't fix itself overnight, as we all know, but fixes are in the works. A lot of it has already occurred, and more of it is coming.

Mr. Hinman: No. It's been two and a half years, Mr. Speaker, that they've been aware it, but they've done very little.

Given that it is now painfully clear that the Alberta Health superboard experiment has been a complete failure, will the minister agree to disband the superboard and decentralize the administration of our hospitals and return it to the local communities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are many advantages to having one centralized board, not the least of which, of course, is a more efficient system of delivery that is saving hundreds of millions of dollars, which we can put right back into health services on the front lines, which is where it is needed. There are no plans to disband this board. They've worked hard under very difficult circumstances. They now have a golden opportunity, with a five-year funding plan to work with, which is infinitely different than the $1.3 billion deficit they were looking at last year.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly questionable. Given that Dr. Grant Innes, the superboard's own head of emergency medicine for Calgary hospitals, said last week that it's the worst that it's ever been, how can this minister defend and keep the superboard in place? It's compounding the problem. It's about procurement and letting people out early. We don't need a superboard that says one size fits all. They need to address it at the local level.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's one reason we brought in a five-year funding plan with a 6 per cent assurance in the first year and in each of the next years, unlike what the Wildrose put out the day after our budget, saying that they would only offer 3.5 per cent. You show me where you're going to cut 2.5 per cent out, as your press release said, and then, hon. member, we'll talk. Okay?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Trade Dispute on Vegetable Oil Products

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province recently won a long-standing trade dispute with Ontario over policies that have restricted Alberta's vegetable oil producers and refiners from selling in Ontario. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Could you provide details about why Alberta filed a trade dispute over this matter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been very frustrating to have these interprovincial trade disputes that have mitigated against producers in Alberta marketing their product. Canola, for example, could not be shipped to Ontario and then put in through any other dairy-blend processing in Ontario. Ontario put up a barrier. In March of this year we took another stab at getting the government of Ontario to see whether or not they'd change their minds. They didn't, so we presented to the agreement on internal trade panel. They ruled in Alberta's favour, and as of February 1, 2011, it will be imperative that Ontario follow through.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you. My first supplemental is: being that we had already filed this same dispute and we hadn't won it, why did we have to file it again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason was, according to the panel process, that without an enforceable regulation attached to their strategies and their outcome deliverables, we weren't able to actually enforce any of their decisions. Now an enforcement provision has been added, similar to the TILMA provision for dispute reconciliation, and because it is part of this agreement – it's integral with the agreement – Ontario must comply. If they don't, they will be subject to fines of up to $5 million to actually address the matter. We are very hopeful this time that with all of the i's dotted and t's crossed and with the agreement of other provincial Premiers, we will get support from Ontario.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the minister of agriculture. How does this announcement benefit Alberta agricultural companies as well as producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canola represents about 17 per cent of our ag exports out of Alberta. It's a hugely important part of our agriculture industry. It totalled about $1.3 billion last year, and it's hugely important that we're in the domestic markets, too. This will be of great advantage to our producers, to have access again to the Ontario market.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, every time the Minister of Justice tries to justify her changes to legal aid, the answer seems increasingly confused. Members of the Law Society of Alberta have mobilized against the draconian cuts in provincial funding to Legal Aid Alberta. What was the point of this pilot project? To restrict access to justice for Alberta's most vulnerable people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two and a half years ago we as the Department of Justice, one of three parties to a legal aid agreement with the Law Society and the Legal Aid board, decided that we needed to provide Albertans with more than one model for legal aid. Therefore, we launched a principle-based approach to change delivery of legal aid in this province so that there were a diverse number of services available to people, including advice through law information centres, community law clinics, family law clinics, and in some cases certificates.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 12 the media reported that you stated, "I want to make it very clear that if there is a person who is in criminal court, who is charged and needs representation, legal aid funds that." Do you stand by that statement?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in that interview there were a number of points made by the reporter. One of those points was that people were being wrongfully convicted in this province. The first thing I said to that reporter was that I challenge him to provide me information because that would certainly be something that I was concerned about. We know that we have a constitutional obligation to provide legal defence to people who appear in criminal court in this province, and we'll continue to do so.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to hear that we understand our constitutional duties because the Provincial Court recently stated that changes to legal aid are forcing defendants to "look elsewhere for assistance." Wouldn't that mean that we're falling down on our constitutional obligations?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that before we start attributing quotes to people, we might want to make sure we know exactly where they're coming from. I will tell you that in conversations we've had with the Provincial Court and the Court of Queen's Bench, the position of the government of Alberta has been very clear. The courts understand fully that we are meeting our obligations. The courts understand that it is important to provide legal services to people who are charged with criminal offences in a number of forums. For many years we have had youth criminal defence offices and duty counsel in this province, that provide people with legal advice when they are charged to appear in criminal court, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Funding for Training

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There are thousands of students in Alberta who are still waiting to find out if they are approved for funding for training even though these classes started some two months ago. My question to the minister: why are these students still waiting for their money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, a very unfortunate situation, a situation that in part resulted as the computer system simply failed, a new computer system put in place to process these applications. Ironically, it was designed to serve these clients better, and as technology does from time to time, it has failed. However, this department has responded immediately by hiring additional staff, by appropriating staff from other departments, and they have been literally manually processing applications seven days a week.

Mr. Speaker, any application . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, I really appreciate these technical challenges, but my question again is: what do you say to the single mother who needs to feed her children but has yet to receive the funding and your ministry says that the funding is coming? What is she supposed to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to finish my initial answer, every application filed before September 27 now has been processed, and overall we have received over 7,600 applications. That mother who is in dire straits simply has to come to one of our 59 offices throughout the province, and if indeed in financial crisis, we will be issuing emergency benefits forthwith. We have issued over 500 emergency benefits to date, and we will continue to issue them as situations demand.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, Mr. Minister, I certainly appreciate these measures that you're taking, but how can you assure Albertans that this situation will not happen again?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's put it this way. This particular department issues somewhere between 50,000 to 60,000 cheques every month – every month – and you never hear about any problems arising. From time to time technology will fail, and if it does, we do have emergency procedures in place to supplement technological failure. I cannot give such an assurance because no one can give you an assurance that technology will not fail in the future. But I can assure you of one thing. There are processes in place that if technology were to fail in the future, we will be able to respond to it adequately and make sure that no one is in financial dire straits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Eighteen members were recognized. There were 108 questions and responses.

Before the Clerk calls Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you a group of individuals from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and the Alberta Council on Aging. They've come here today to witness the tabling of petitions concerning the closing of Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor, two publicly funded and delivered seniors' care facilities in Red Deer, plus staff shortages at Extendicare Michener Hill. I will ask them to rise as I mention their names: Tammy Graham, AUPE chair; Angela MacArthur, AUPE chair; Wendy Kicia, AUPE chair; Ray Tweedle, AUPE chair; Sam Denhaan, president of Central Alberta Council on Aging; Margie Lunt, board member, Alberta Council on Aging; Doug Janssen, director of the Alberta Council on Aging; and Jules Noel, AUPE provincial executive. Let's give them all a round of applause for 3,575 signatures on the petition.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my guests who are here today as well because they are concerned about the closure of seniors' facilities in Red Deer. I ask them to rise as I say their names. They are Jerine Johnson, Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 44 council representative and Valley Park Manor employee for 37 years; Jaime Urbina, AUPE local 44 council rep, former Red Deer nursing home staff, and now employed at Valley Park Manor; David Eggen, executive director of Friends of Medicare; Brenda Corney, chair of the Red Deer chapter of Friends of Medicare; Ken Collier, chair of the Red Deer chapter of the Council of Canadians; Bev Hanes, treasurer and board member of the Central Alberta Council on Aging; David Climenhaga, communications director of AUPE; and Tyler Bedford, communications officer with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. They've come to the Legislature to see the tabling of the AUPE petition to save the Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor. My guests are seated in both the public and members' galleries. I'd now ask the Assembly to provide them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there really is no need to introduce the same party twice or three times in the one question period.

We have standing orders, and at 3 o'clock Standing Order 7(7) is due to kick in. It says, "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." There is no way that this Routine will be concluded in less than perhaps 30 minutes from now, so I prefer to speed the process up. Rather than asking a member to move unanimous consent to go beyond 3 o'clock to conclude the Routine, I will just ask the question: is any member opposed to us not seeing 3 o'clock when we arrive at 3 o'clock and that we continue to the conclusion of the Routine? If you are opposed, say something.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

First Nations Economic Partnerships Initiative

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is privileged to be home to one of the largest and fastest growing aboriginal populations in the country. This government is committed to increasing the participation of First Nations people in the diverse economic opportunities our province offers.

On August 24 this year our efforts were nationally recognized by the Institute of Public Administration of Canada. The First Nations economic partnerships initiative, or FNEPI, received a national bronze award for innovative program management and generating positive outcomes in aboriginal economic development. FNEPI is the first program of its kind in Canada. It is delivered by the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations in partnership with Alberta Employment and Immigration to develop sustainable partnerships among First Nations, industry, and government.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen some really great successes. This initiative helped produce 100 partnership projects, and some of the successes include the Paul First Nation securing a $1.5 million electrical utilities contract; a trucking company in Hobbema with lucrative contracts thanks to strong ties between industry and First Nations; school camps where aboriginal children learn about careers in science and technology; and a partnership that will help First Nations in central Alberta tap into contracting opportunities in oil and gas.

Many of these success stories share some of the following commonalities: building long-term, mutually beneficial partnerships; leveraging existing networks; creating new business opportunities; and creating jobs and developing entrepreneurs. These are crucial elements in growing our province's competitiveness, and we know that a quarter of a million aboriginal people living in this province play an important role in this growth.

Recognition by IPAC is an honour and allows us to further share this successful partnership model with our public administration peers across the country. I congratulate the two ministries.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As if we needed more evidence that the Tories are no longer fit to govern, along comes Potatogate, the backroom deal to sell pristine, irreplaceable Crown land near Medicine Hat for a mere $75 per acre to friends, the kind of practice that has sadly become commonplace in this administration. For a song this Premier is going to allow the destruction of 16,000 acres of irreplaceable wildlife habitat, home to 70 per cent of Alberta's at-risk species. In return Alberta will see a privately owned commercial potato patch, a water-intensive crop where water is already fully allocated, in one of the most drought-prone regions of the province.

Once this sale goes through, the people of Alberta won't be able to control how the land is used even though the government has not yet completed its regional land-use plan for the area. It's mind boggling, but this short-sighted administration is eager to sell off public lands even before they've figured out the most effective use for these lands or the critical water issues that are already limiting other developments. Why are they even bothering to develop a land-use strategy if they're determined to pull stunts like this?

There's a better way. For years Alberta Liberals have demanded an immediate halt to the sale of public lands. Since this government won't do that, they should at least establish a transparent and honest process to determine how public lands should be sold. Only after the people of the region ratify a land-use plan would an Alberta Liberal government even consider allowing new commercial or industrial developments in the area.

Mr. Speaker, we demand that the Premier halt the sale of this grassland, establish a public consultation process for disposition of any such public land, strengthen provisions in the Public Lands Act to conserve prairie land, and enact legislation to protect environmentally significant native grasslands on public lands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Waste Reduction Week

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week marked the 10th year Albertans have celebrated Waste Reduction Week. Canadians from across the country took part in activities to help reduce waste and keep it out of landfills. Fortunately, many Albertans took up the challenge, including a large number of grade 4 students. Participating classes registered and conducted a five-day waste audit in the classroom and pledged to reduce waste in their classes for the rest of the year. During the week I had the privilege of visiting classrooms across Alberta, and I found the students' knowledge and enthusiasm for reducing waste truly refreshing. I came away from the visits confident that the next generation is ready and willing to do its part to reduce waste.

Of course, just because the week is over doesn't mean we should stop thinking about waste reduction in our homes and workplaces. There are many easy and practical things we can all do. Albertans should choose products with little or no packaging, buy in bulk, consider items that are durable, and practise the three Rs of reduce, reuse, and recycle to help to lessen waste in our province. Instead of throwing unwanted household items and used clothing in the garbage, donate the goods to community organizations.

I encourage everyone to take a close look at how they can reduce waste throughout the year. The choices you make, big or small, really do make an impact.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

3:00 National Child Abuse Awareness Month

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, it's often important to reflect on that which causes so much pain in our society. Unfortunately, I would ask us all to reflect on the fact that much of the pain in our world is caused by one human being hurting another, one human being purposely performing acts of either abuse or neglect that hurt another human being.

October is National Child Abuse Awareness Month. Nothing is more frightening than knowing that some children are at risk of abuse by those in positions of authority, those meant to protect them, those that we've entrusted with our most precious. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we all have a role to play. Everyone involved in a child's life shares in the responsibility to report any suspicions they have about potential abuse or neglect.

Every day concerned Albertans do this; they act on this responsibility and call the confidential child abuse hotline. Mr. Speaker, each of these calls represents a child or youth who may have been harmed, or his family may need help in dealing with or coping with some of the challenges they may be facing. Each of these calls has been critical in ensuring that children and youth are protected and kept safe. I would say that some of these calls could potentially have saved someone's life.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to continue to be vigilant, report abuse or neglect, and help support families to create positive, nurturing environments for youth and children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Dr. Gary McPherson

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I rise today to pay tribute to a great Albertan, Dr. Gary McPherson, who passed away earlier this year. If you knew Dr. McPherson, you are well aware of the influence this man had on the disability community in Alberta. Although Dr. McPherson had a permanent disability, and some might say it was because of that disability, he was a tireless advocate on behalf of people with disabilities.

Dr. McPherson's efforts on behalf of Albertans with disabilities began over two decades ago. In 1988 he was instrumental in the creation of the Premier's council, and he served as chair of that council for 10 years. His ideals of equality and citizenship for all people still influence council activities. Dr. McPherson was so influential that following his retirement as chair, they named the council's first citizen recognition award after him. This award is presented annually to an Albertan who demonstrates outstanding leadership in enhancing the lives of persons with disabilities.

Dr. McPherson was also a writer, a public speaker, a professor and an adviser at the University of Alberta, and president and chairman of the Steadward Centre, a health, fitness, lifestyle, and research facility serving people with disabilities. His achievements didn't stop there, however. For example, he was also inducted into both the Edmonton and the Alberta sports halls of fame.

It's fitting that we continue to honour him even after his passing. At a memorial for Dr. McPherson last June our Premier announced a scholarship in his name as a way to commemorate his lifelong dedication as a leader, advocate, and role model. I hope that as a province we will carry on honouring Dr. McPherson and his legacy by continuing the work he began.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

National School Library Day

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, October 25, marks the eighth annual National School Library Day. Across the province school library staff will be celebrating excellence in school library programs, hosting guest speakers, and linking up with community organizations to highlight the vital role of school libraries in the lives of our students. I think everybody in this House has a fond memory of visiting their school library to choose their favourite book and that special pride that we took in being able to take that book home and share it with our family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, October is also Canadian Library Month. I'm very pleased to rise today in honour of National School Library Day and Canadian Library Month and the many people who work tirelessly to support our libraries, including teachers, parents, principals, and community members. Alberta has benefited from the deep dedication of these people. Their dedication is matched by this government, which is committed to a strong, province-wide public library system.

Mr. Speaker, today's recognition also gives me the opportunity to talk about two important considerations when thinking about the future of our school and public libraries. First, in these times of fiscal restraint it is imperative that we make the most of our financial resources. We need to continue to look for ways in which our public libraries can partner with our school libraries. By doing so, we can make more efficient use of our resources and provide better access to both students and the public.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, libraries of today and the future should look much different than libraries of the past. Technology has significantly changed our society and our way of life, and libraries are no exception. Our libraries must recognize and adapt to these changes in order to sustain their importance and relevance in today's and tomorrow's world.

Finally, I'd like to recognize the Canadian Association for School Libraries and the Alberta School Library Council for their hard work in promoting awareness of the importance of libraries in our schools and communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Small Business Week

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week, October 17 to 23, was Small Business Week, which, as we all know, means celebrating the successes and contributions of small and medium-sized businesses all across Canada. Here in Alberta Business Link and the Chambers of Commerce held events across the province that saw businesspeople come together to learn, to network, and to socialize in the company of their peers. In pursuing their dreams, entrepreneurs and small-business owners show a great deal of courage and resilience, and their success benefits us all through jobs, economic activity, and, yes, tax revenues so that we can provide services to Albertans.

I'm pleased to be able to say that this innovative entrepreneurial spirit that characterizes small business is alive and well here in Alberta. With just over 10 per cent of Canada's population, Mr.

Speaker, Alberta is home to about 14 per cent of all of the small businesses in Canada. Small businesses, those employing fewer than 50 people, account for 95.7 per cent of all businesses with employees in Alberta. That's over 150,000 businesses. The small-business sector is also a vital contributor to our provincial economy. Alberta's small-business sector was responsible for 31 per cent, almost a full third, of Alberta's gross domestic product in 2008.

Finally, while a vibrant small-business sector is important to the economic health of every single community in this province, it is much more than that. Small business and small-business owners help build their communities right at the grassroots level, Mr. Speaker. They are very much a part of the communities where they operate, and they make themselves known beyond the bottom line and beyond the balance sheet. They sponsor kids' hockey teams. They donate to local charities and community drives and serve on school boards as well as many other community groups. Our communities are more vibrant and inviting thanks to their contributions.

On behalf of my colleagues, this Assembly, and Albertans in general thank you to small business for all that you do for Alberta.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on – and it's been a few months since we've been here – three members in their members' statements today highlighted a week or a day. I'd like to now bring you up to date about October so that all members will be able to say that we have recognized these events in our Assembly, and nobody will come under criticism for failing to recognize one or the other.

October is Autism Awareness Month, Brain Tumour Awareness Month, Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Canadian Library Month, Car Safety Month, Child Abuse Awareness Month, Community Living Awareness Month, Denturist Awareness Month, Eye Health Canada Month, Healthy Workplace Month, Influenza Immunization Awareness Month, International School Library Month, International Walk to School Month, Islamic History Month, Learning Disabilities Awareness Month, Lupus Awareness Month, National Occupational Therapy Month, Psoriasis Awareness Month, Renovation Month, Stamp Collecting Month, Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Awareness Month, Women's History Month.

October 29 will be World Psoriasis Day. October 31 will be Halloween, as it will be National UNICEF Day, as it will be World Thrift Day.

Next week we will move into November.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't tell you how impressed and thrilled I am to present a petition signed by 3,575 people from Red Deer and the surrounding area which is urging the government to "direct Alberta Health Services to immediately stop the closure of Valley Park Manor and the Red Deer Nursing Home." This is a lot of signatures. It's not easy to do that kind of work, and I really, really respect the people that did it.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have copies of the same petition, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly . . . to direct Alberta Health Services to immediately stop the closure of Valley Park Manor and the Red Deer Nursing Home.

This petition has 3,315 signatures.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a Standing Order 30 application.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I wish to inform the House that on completion of the daily Routine I will move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance, namely the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the state of emergency medical services in the province.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you also have a Standing Order 30 application?

Ms Blakeman: I do, sir. Thank you for recognizing me. According to Standing Order 30 I'd like to give oral notice that at the appropriate time, that is the conclusion of the Routine today, I would be raising the following issue under the Standing Order 30 provision:

Be it resolved that we adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss the urgent matter of the sale of approximately 16,000 acres of environmentally significant Crown-owned land near Bow Island for commercial agricultural use in a region with no open water allocation, without public consultation or adequate valuation, which will adversely affect protected and endangered species and habitat.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I'm pleased to introduce Bill 18 for first reading, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will bring monetary enforcement provisions to the agreement on internal trade and extend the existing provisions of TILMA to the New West Partnership trade agreement, that includes the province of Saskatchewan.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to support implementation of the province's renewable fuels standard in 2011. Amendments will help ensure Alberta's renewable fuel producers are at a level playing field, for fuel tax purposes, with those outside the province of Alberta. Amendments will also allow information sharing between Alberta Finance and Enterprise and Alberta Energy to support efficient administration of both fuel tax and renewable fuel programs and allow for the reduction of reporting burden for the industry. Other minor technical changes are made to support the renewable fuel standard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 19 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose on behalf of the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Bill 205

Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act.

The objective of this bill is to curb the theft of metal in Alberta by providing additional tools for law enforcement.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter written to Dr. Peter Kwan, president of emergency medicine with the Alberta Medical Association, from the Premier of Alberta regarding emergency service standards and access to health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings here, and I have the appropriate number of copies of the following documents: a letter dated February 22, 2008, from Dr. Paul Parks on behalf of the emergency medicine physicians at the University of Alberta hospital to the minister of health, describing significant overcrowding in emergency departments; a letter to the Premier from Peter Kwan, that was just tabled by the previous member, so I won't table that; a letter dated July 3, 2008, from Dr. Paul Parks to the minister of health, warning of systemic overcrowding in emergency departments; and a letter dated September 30, 2010, from Dr. Paul Parks to the minister of health, describing severe systemic overcrowding in emergency departments. Attached to this letter are documents from 2010 and 2008 listing cases of suboptimal health outcomes compiled by triage physicians at the University of Alberta emergency department.

Thank you.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood tabled the same thing, so we won't table it twice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon, and both of them are with permission. The first is a tabling from a constituent, Rick McEwen. Mr. McEwen is expressing his concern about the government's plan to close acute-care psychiatric beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

The second tabling I have is an open letter to the president of the University of Alberta. It's from the Justice for Janitors campaign, which is in full swing over at the university. Hopefully, this letter will encourage the university to meet with the janitors directly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have several tablings as well. Pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly the 43rd annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period of April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2010.

As well, hon. members, I am tabling with the House today a copy of the projected sitting days calendar and members' statements routines for the months of October, November, December 2010.

As well, I'm tabling with the House today a copy of the Oral Question Period rotation routine, effective October 25, 2010.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon.

Mrs. Ady, Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, pursuant to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation Act the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation 2009-2010 annual report and the Travel Alberta annual report 2009-2010.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Securities Act the Alberta Securities Commission 2010 annual report, Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2009 annual report, ATB Financial 2010 annual report, and Alberta Investment Management Corporation annual report 2009-2010.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we get to the Standing Order 30 application, I indicated earlier I'd be making a brief comment with respect to question period and members' statements. This need be part of the record, and Hansard is the only record that we have, so this will be there for future reference.

Hon. members, the chair would like to advise members of some changes to the rotation of questions during Oral Question Period and the rotation of members' statements. These changes were agreed to by House leaders and the independent member after a consultation process that we undertook mid-summer. The chair provided the information concerning these changes in a memo to all members dated October 19, 2010. The changes were necessitated primarily by the move of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to a new caucus association. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo advised of this change in a letter dated generically August 2010 and received in the Speaker's office on September 7, 2010. The member's letter indicated that this change would be effective, and I quote, at the commencement of the fall sitting of the fall Legislature 2010, which is today, October 25, 2010, so as at 1:30 p.m. today that change came into effect.

The rotation of questions remains the same for what are days 1 and 3 in the four-day rotation as announced earlier in the year 2010. On day 2, which is what today is designated as, question 15 is no longer a position held by the Official Opposition but moves to the Wildrose Alliance. The 19th question will belong to the Official Opposition and not the members of the government caucus for today.

On day 4, which will be Wednesday, October 27, this week, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is no longer entitled to the sixth question as an independent member; he's now part of the Wildrose Alliance caucus. Accordingly, the designations for questions 7 through 14 advance one place. The 15th question on day 4 belongs to the Wildrose Alliance, the 16th question belongs to members of the government caucus, the 17th question belongs to the Official Opposition, and the 18th question and after belong to members of the government caucus.

For today, day 2 in the rotation, the Official Opposition was entitled to ask the first three questions; the Wildrose Alliance the fourth and 15th questions; the New Democrats the fifth and 12th questions; the Official Opposition the sixth, eighth, 10th, 13th, 17th, and 19th questions; the government members' caucus the seventh, ninth, 11th, 14th, 16th, 18th questions and after 19 questions.

For Members' Statements the position held by the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as an independent member, every second Tuesday, will go to the Wildrose Alliance. Today saw government members entitled to six members' statements and the Official Opposition to one.

The House leaders have also requested that a member from the opposition be recognized each day for the second member's statements. I would ask the three House leaders of the three opposition parties, who are in the House today, to try and determine who that person will be on a daily basis because the paper just provided to me says: you choose. Well, I would like to be more definitive than that, so you choose and advise my office by 12:30 p.m. each day who that person is, please.

The chair would like to emphasize that this order in questions and members' statements gives effect to the agreement reached by House leaders and the sole remaining independent member, and the chair provided the information concerning these changes in a memo to all members dated October 19, 2010.

Earlier in the proceedings the chair tabled copies of the Oral Question Period rotation effective October 25, 2010, and the projected sitting days calendar of the fall sitting as well as the schedule for Members' Statements.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please proceed with your petition under Standing Order 30.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 30(7)(a) states that motions under this Standing Order "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." The section of emergency medicine of the Alberta Medical Association recently sent the minister of health a letter which indicated that emergency doctors are deeply concerned about what the letter called severe systemic overcrowding in emergency rooms in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, emergency room doctors are concerned that the overcrowding in emergency rooms is severe enough that patients are not receiving the care they need in sufficient time to prevent their condition from deteriorating. The letter to the minister says that overcrowding in our province today is worse than it has ever been, and front line emergency physicians continue to express grave concerns regarding their inability to provide safe or timely care to patients presenting to our Emergency Departments . . . we are routinely failing to meet even the basic recommended times to assess and treat acutely ill patients arriving to our hospitals.

The report goes on to say:

We feel compelled to continue to advocate on behalf of our patients, and recently members of our section have met with yourself, Deputy Minister Ramotar, as well as Dr. Duckett, in order to inform our healthcare leaders that Albertans continue to suffer and receive substandard emergency care as a direct result of a lack of capacity within the system. Again, our data and feedback from Emergency Physicians throughout the province indicate that our overcrowding problem continues to worsen and we anticipate the potential catastrophic collapse of timely emergency care delivery in the upcoming months. There must be an intervention immediately.

So says Dr. Parks.

Beauchesne's 390 states that a motion for emergency debate must meet the test of urgency, meaning urgency of debate. That is "when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately."

Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that there is a government bill on the Order Paper titled the Alberta Health Act. The information that the government has released to us about the bill indicates that it does not address the crisis in emergency health services in the province. I know of nothing on the Order Paper that would allow this House an opportunity to address this issue. I believe that this is a most urgent matter which requires the full attention of the Assembly. We should debate emergency department overcrowding today in this House so that the public can see where this Legislature stands on the matter and to advance possible solutions that will lead to better health outcomes for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my submission. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, then the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on this. We're dealing with a Standing Order 30 application; we're not having the debate yet, okay? The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has articulately explained, Standing Order 30 as well as what is in Beauchesne's clearly indicates that in order for a matter like this to be debated, it must be of urgent importance. I just wanted to on behalf of my colleagues say that I don't think that we could honestly have a more urgent matter come before this House. Truly, we are dealing with a matter of life and death. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood stated, Dr. Parks is very clear. The system, the emergency care system, is on the verge of collapse. Dr. Parks says in his letter that it must be dealt with immediately. There's a long list that has been tabled today – it was released to the media earlier today – of the incredible situations that have occurred in our emergency rooms: people having heart attacks and dying while waiting for care, receiving very distressing exams in public places, very private examinations in public places. This is serious stuff.

There is nothing on the Order Paper that's going to give us an opportunity to debate this, and if we don't debate this, if we don't find a solution to this, Mr. Speaker, people's lives are truly at stake here, and I think everyone in this Chamber knows that. So I would ask that you rule that we do get to have the opportunity today to debate this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to support this motion, and I will speak briefly to the urgency of it. I'll begin by reflecting on the minister of health's comments at a news conference last Wednesday, I believe it was, when he indicated that he himself had called around to the emergency rooms in Edmonton and Calgary to see how overcrowded they were. In total, there were something like 160 people at that moment waiting in Edmonton and Calgary emergency rooms to be admitted for beds that were not available, and that's pretty typical. So as we are standing here today at this moment, it's reasonable to assume that in Edmonton and Calgary alone there are about 150 people waiting in emergency rooms for beds and unable to get them.

Now, I would just like to briefly give you some specific examples, and these are taken from 25 pages of detailed notes given to me by emergency room doctors about their concerns. Every line refers to a case. I obviously won't read them all, but these are people at this moment who are in emergency care. Let me rephrase that. There are people just like the cases I'm going to read who are at this moment in emergency care.

Here's an example, documented events: "Significant cardiac ischemia, only place to assess was triage assess, admitted to [cardiac care unit] direct from waiting room." Next one: "COPD'er with heart rate of 150 . . . in waiting room for 3hrs before bed available.” Another case: “Multiple chest pain patients in [waiting room], no beds available for exam.” They can’t even be properly examined, Mr. Speaker. Imagine: what could be more urgent than going to the emergency room with clamping pain on your chest and not having any space to be assessed? It doesn’t get more urgent than that.

Here’s another real-life example:

Recorded by 0600 shift Doctor: arrived at 0600, multiple patients in [waiting room] with prolonged waits, and in capital letters,

No Free Beds In Entire [emergency department] to see patients. Saw two complex elderly patients with significant pain who filled the two existing triage assess beds (so had no area to even do triage ECG’s, [electrocardiograms]). Assessed five patients from a chair in the alcove beside E-pod (a non patient care area with no curtains or equipment).

That’s happening in our emergency rooms as we speak.

Saw my first patient in an ED bed at 0845 . . . A patient with drug overdose and seizure arrived with EMS at 0549, and finally got into an ED bed at 1100 for assessment and treatment.

I’ll just read one more, Mr. Speaker, because I know how much you value time. I need to show the members here 25 pages of detailed cases. I could go on for hours.

A patient with a seizure was in the [waiting room] >5hrs awaiting assessment and treatment.

A seizure in a waiting room waiting five hours for assessment and treatment.

When I finished my . . . shift, patient was still not in a bed. It was a miserable day. On that day there was an [emergency in-patient] in the department who had been . . .

Get this, Mr. Speaker.

. . . an admitted patient in the [emergency department] for 1 whole week!

I don’t know what could speak more clearly to the urgency of this issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodsky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by thanking the hon. member for bringing the matter forward at this time for discussion and those who have spoken before me. At the same time I don’t want to in any way, shape, or form detract from the seriousness of the situation although we do need some clarity on that, which I’ll get to in a moment.

Emergency room care is extremely important. We depend on it. We rely on it. That has been eloquently phrased by other speakers before me. I just want to endorse that I, too, recognize how important this particular issue is. That’s why they call it emergency.

However, I think what we need to deal with right now at this particular stage of the discussion, Mr. Speaker, following the presentation is: what constitutes urgency as defined or as has become the traditional definition in a House of Parliament such as we sit in today? More specifically, what are the criteria that would persuade a Speaker such as yourself or someone else to consider this a genuine urgency in terms of Legislature process?

Typically people will turn, as members have already, to Beauchesne, the sixth edition, 390, which has been cited. I just want to cite it again because it’s important for the public and for all members, particularly some who are new members and maybe don’t have as much experience with SO 30s as others here clearly do, to understand what 390 says. It says:

“Urgency” within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means “urgency of debate”, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

You yourself have commented on this particular ruling on a number of occasions. One of the more recent ones, Mr. Speaker, obviously, was April 19, 2010. I know I need not remind you of that, but in your ruling on that day, which, by the way, was also health related – it dealt with ophthalmological services – you cited what some of the requirements were that talked to urgency as defined by our parliamentary system. As part of that definition you and others on previous occasions would look at urgency in terms of whether or not there are opportunities, specifically other opportunities than today, to discuss, debate, question, or otherwise refer to the subject at hand.

We have already heard today, for example, more than 20 questions in question period that talked about health care related issues, and many of them were focused on the emergency care circumstance. Previous speakers have already also read directly from some of the letters and quoted people who have written in. So I want to say that there have been opportunities. There will be more opportunities for question period, for example.

Secondly, there will be additional opportunities as well as we introduce the Alberta Health Act, which, by the way, is on the Order Paper. Thank you, hon. members; someone did refer to that. It is on page 13 of our Order Paper under Leave to Introduce a Bill, Alberta Health Act, and my name is cited there as well. So there are opportunities to discuss under that act care, health care, and access to that care, and that is partly what this is all about.

Again, I do not in any way, shape, or form want to diminish the importance of emergency care and looking after it, but I have taken action immediately, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services has taken action immediately. I will be meeting with the person who authored the letter tomorrow. Fortunate for him, he had a holiday booked and had to honour it. I respect that, so the soonest we can get together is tomorrow.

My last point, Mr. Speaker, is simply that adjourning all of the important business of this House will not result in a specific decision or a specific action to be taken by this House. Debate here will not culminate in anything new or different by way of specific action. Now, that is not to say that specific action is not under way. It is. We’re already opening 250 more beds in Edmonton and Calgary, for example. It’s a combination: acute-care beds, transition beds, subacute beds, and other continuing care beds. All of this is important. We’ve opened over 800 continuing care beds alone since April of this year.

We have a lot of things that are going on right now. I answered some of those questions earlier, Mr. Speaker. I will not take the time of the House other than to say that the issue of understanding what urgency is in terms of legislative process is a lot different than understanding urgency in terms of the matter itself as clarified in Beauchesne.

I look forward to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I’ve given opportunity for all groups to participate with respect to this. It’s 19 minutes to 4 o’clock on a private members’ day. I am prepared to rule on whether the request for leave to proceed is in order.

First of all, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has met the requirement for providing at least two hours’ notice to the Speaker’s office. Notice was received in my office this morning at 8:39 a.m.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed could be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relates to “a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.” Needless to say, members have already pointed out parliamentary authorities on this subject, Beauchesne’s in paragraphs 387 to 390 and pages 689 to 696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and we know what the motion is.

I’ve been listening intently to the arguments put forward to the Standing Order 30 application, and I certainly would like to thank the hon. members who participated for participating. There’s no doubt in the chair’s mind that the issues concerning emergency medical services are of considerable importance to Albertans. The last time that the Assembly met was, I believe, April 21 of 2010, nearly six months or so ago. Today there were 18 hon. members recognized in the question period. Ten of the questions basically related to health-related matters, emergency related matters and the like.

This is normally a private members’ day. I heard that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere indicated that this was probably one of the most vital and one of the most important items that one could look at, and it’s his bill that would be scheduled for today, so I presume that on private members’ day that hon. member would be quite prepared to have his bill moved down the Order Paper to be dealt with another day. That gives you, I guess, an indication of the seriousness of what this is all about.

I heard the minister indicate that he’s visited some 23 or more emergency rooms in recent days, and there’s always an opportunity for new ideas to be generated.

If you look at page 695 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the chair may also “take into account the general wish of the House to have an emergency debate,” and the chair did hear that from a number of people. The reflection of 10 questions out of 18 earlier this afternoon, including questions on health from government members, would suggest that there is a general willingness to proceed with the debate on this matter.

As a result of all of that, I do find that the request for leave is in order, but there is a process we have to follow. I have to put forward a question to you on this, and there are some ways that this can go. Before putting the question to the Assembly, I would like to remind you of the rules governing the procedure once the chair finds a request for leave in order. I’ve found the request for leave to be in order. Standing Order 30 requires that the question be put to a vote of the Assembly.

If there are any objections to the question, then the chair will ask those members who support the motion to rise in their places. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed, and each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes to do so until all who wish to speak have done so until the normal House adjournment. Okay? If 15 or more members rise, we go immediately; I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to proceed.

If at least five members rise but less than 15, the question of whether the member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business is put immediately and, if necessary, is determined by division. So if five to 14 members rise, we have a vote. If fewer than five members rise, the motion will not proceed despite the fact that the chair will ask: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[There being objection taken to the question, the Speaker requested that those members who support the motion rise in their place. Ten members rose, which under Standing Order 30(4)(b) required the Speaker to immediately put the question whether the member has leave to move the ordinary business of the Assembly]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:46 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a division with respect to a question arising out of a Standing Order 30 application: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? Because of the very nature of the rules a certain number of people rose, which automatically clicked in the procedure for the bells. The bells have now rung. Ten minutes have gone by. This is a simple majority vote.

The Speaker: That application has not been approved by the Legislative Assembly.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you also had a Standing Order 30 application.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today at the appropriate point in the proceedings I had given oral notice of my desire to move a Standing Order 30 to adjourn the regular course of business to debate what we felt and still feel is a very urgent piece of public business that requires debate. I am very aware that this is private members’ day today, and I will move as quickly as I can through this as I wish to have this considered as quickly as possible.

The motion, which has been delivered to the table and which I read into the record earlier, is to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss the urgent matter of the sale of approximately 16,000 acres of environmentally significant Crown-owned land near Bow Island for commercial agricultural use in a region with no open water allocation, without public consultation or adequate valuation, which will adversely affect protected and endangered species and habitat.

Under the urgency argument, Mr. Speaker, again referring you to the usual sections in Beauchesne and in the new Canadian House of Commons Procedure and Practice, this development requires irrigation. We have been given an indication, both in this House today but also from those that are more closely affected than I am, that cabinet is considering this decision imminently. This truly brings into sharp focus the urgency of the decisions that are being made here, particularly around the fact that this development will require irrigation. There is no public knowledge of where the water will come from. The South Saskatchewan and Bow rivers have been closed to new water allocations, so that public question of water, everyone's fresh glass of drinking water, remains unanswered. The urgency for a discussion before the government makes a final decision is very relevant to my motion.

The concern throughout the nation is that water allocation is a critical issue. Water crosses our borders to other provinces and flows downstream, or not, to municipalities. Concern over availability of drinking water for residents is high. There is a question about real oversight regarding the sale of this public land owned by all Albertans because the government is refusing to have a public consultation on it and is falling back under the regulations. Given that they are selling this as agricultural land, they are allowed not to have public consultations, but that does mean that there's a very short timeline. The economic, environmental, and social impacts on people of that community and further is definitely urgent. So there is an issue of urgency around limiting public oversight.

The parameters in Beauchesne 387 to 398, whether there is opportunity for debate under the rules and provisions of the House, just very quickly. There are no other opportunities available to us, Mr. Speaker. It's not before the courts. It wasn't mentioned in the throne speech. There's no government bill on the Order Paper. There's no private member's public bill on the Order Paper. It wasn't outlined or any discussion of it alluded to in the government media release of October 19 that outlined the government's legislative session for the fall. The release date of a supplementary supply budget and what opportunity there might be for debate is also unknown at this point and also not expected. There's no notice for anything else on the Order Paper, written questions or motions for returns, that might satisfy that requirement for debate. We did ask a leader's question in Oral Question Period today and tried to set the issues out in a private member's statement, and we have been rebuffed by the government in attempts to get answers to our question.

Given that this is being reviewed today – we'd heard that it was going to be reviewed on Friday, now perhaps today or tomorrow. This is a decision that's being made without public consultation. It very much affects the land, the wildlife, and the habitat, and that has an effect on generations to come. Our ability to have any input on this decision, to have any public scrutiny and oversight on this decision, is very limited in time in that cabinet is deciding, and once that decision is made, it's moving on.

Again, I underline how urgent the issue of water allocation is. We have long awaited changes to the government's water management plan. We've not had anything in that, and especially relevant is the lack of the South Saskatchewan land-use plan. There seems to be a race to get this done by the government before that land-use plan comes into play. That, again, is the urgency of making this a full and public debate.

Given those concerns that I have raised, the moratorium on the issuance of new water licences over the basin for a number of years because of the water scarcity, where's that water coming from? It's also stressed the aquatic ecosystems there. There is no environmental assessment that we're aware of. There was no information coming from government on an environmental assessment around this land sale, with the fact that it is being rushed through before the South Saskatchewan regional land-use framework would come into effect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on this point. It's the Standing Order 30 application we're talking about.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We stand as the Wildrose caucus to support this urgent debate on the sale of 16,000 acres of Crown land. The reason why it's so urgent is because of all of the information that has come out in the news. The minister has even gone on to say that they would donate the proceeds from this to an environmental group, which just shows the problems in the whole situation.

In a democracy we allow an open debate. If this isn't brought forward now, at any date it's imminent that this could be signed and pushed through without any debate here in the House and certainly no input from those on the outside. A democracy also allows for competition, and there is none allowed. If we don't have the debate today, it's too late. If the minister signs off and sells this land, there's no opportunity for these other groups to even bid and purchase that. It wouldn't surprise me one bit if a wildlife group would come up and bid more money than perhaps the group that's put the proposal forward.

It's so critical that we have this debate today because of the news that's been leaking out there with this government saying that they're going to sign this off and that it's okay: we've been doing this for a hundred years. It isn't okay. We need to have the public debate. I would urge every member in here to vote in favour of this so that we could have the open debate.

The idea that we have question period and that allows for a debate: that's a 30-second question. There's no debate. There are no ideas. There are no proposals allowed to be put in there, and there certainly are no answers. As you often say, Mr. Speaker, it's question period, not answer period. They were asked earlier, and they weren't in there.

We need to have a debate. It's urgent because of the fact that the government has said that, yes, they're looking at it, and they could sign it any day. We'd urge all members to support this so that we could have an emergency debate and have the proper democratic process here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Other members to participate on the Standing Order 30 application? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Yes. Mr. Speaker, this clearly is not a matter of urgency. What we have in front of us and what this is all about is a proposal. It's a proposal that has not been and may never be concluded. The opposition is clearly predicting a future course of action of the government, and as usual I would suggest that the opposition is determining government action based on newspaper articles, headlines, and TV ads. In reality this proposal for ag development will be assessed for its merits relative to conservation, environmental protection, wildlife habitat, and the economic impact in the region.

Mr. Speaker, the standing order, I believe, does indicate that in order for a motion to proceed, it needs to meet conditions. "The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency." I would submit that this is not an emergency of any sort, genuine or otherwise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: That's it? Okay.

Hon. members, thank you very much for your position with respect to the Standing Order 30 application. The application was received in the Speaker's office this morning at 10:54, and it certainly fulfills all the requirements in terms of the administrative side of this. Standing Order 30 clearly indicates "a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

It has to do with a matter dealing with the sale of approximately 16,000 acres of environmentally significant Crown-owned land near Bow Island for commercial agricultural use in a region with no open water allocation, without public consultation or adequate valuation, which will adversely affect protected and endangered species and habitat.

Needless to say, the discussion had nothing to do with the motion at the moment but the urgency of it all.

Based on the arguments put forward, particularly the arguments put forward by the minister in this case, who highlights that this is only a proposal, that this has not been advanced and may never be advanced, the chair has to listen very attentively to those kinds of words and presumes that this matter will be coming back in by way of debate in the question period and other activities in the days to come.

In this case I'm sorry, but I don't find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204

Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010.

Bill 204 proposes to limit year-over-year increases in overall government spending to the greater of either the rate of inflation plus population growth or to where total government per capita spending is equal to or lesser than the average per capita spending of Canada's remaining nine provinces, whichever number is greater.

This bill is necessary because our province currently is spending beyond its means and has been doing so for a very long time. Despite record-high revenues over the past five years, despite a recession that although difficult was not even remotely as deep or as long as the last two to hit Alberta, our financial picture has become very bleak. Our sustainability fund is, by the government's own rosy predictions, set to expire in roughly two years. We are not only burning through our savings but accruing billions in debt for future generations to pay. Sadly, any interest made on the heritage fund over the past decade has been spent on the here and now, leaving not one cent for our kids and grandkids during a time when our natural resources have never been worth more and may never be worth this much again.

This government's per person spending has been first or second in the country for a very long time. Not only is this unsustainable but Albertans are not getting sufficient value for this spending. We see this with a health care system on the brink of collapse, as our emergency docs have said this past week, and we see this with a massive school shortage in many municipalities, like Airdrie and Chestermere, while perfectly good schools in other communities are closed and unnecessary new ones opened.

We are building billions of dollars' worth of infrastructure with no money left over to staff it. We may be building a lot of buildings and roads, but how can we expect our children to staff and maintain it all 20 years from now if we can't even afford to do it today? What kind of legacy is that? The temptation to impress constituents with unnecessary frills, the knee-jerk reaction to solve societal problems with public spending, and a general desire to be seen to be doing something regardless of how effective it is have become far too ingrained in our political culture.

We owe it to our children to change this culture of waste and government largesse. In my view, spending away our rainy-day fund within a short few years and piling up billions in new debt on the backs of future generations to dull the pain of a self-inflicted spending hangover is the height of irresponsibility. So, too, is expanding the size of government entitlement programs to the point where the only way to adequately fund them is to substantially raise taxes and to increase debt on future generations.

Bill 204 is the first step in a spending addiction recovery program. If we can take this first step as a province, the road back to fiscal sustainability is achievable. Not only does this kind of spending guideline make intuitive sense, it is not a new invention. Similar initiatives have proven to be very effective in other jurisdictions, and this plan is endorsed by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Fraser Institute, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, among others.

Let me take a moment to head off some misconceptions that I've heard surrounding this legislation. First of all, Parliamentary Counsel has confirmed that it is not a money bill and is therefore suitable for introduction as a private member's bill.

Some are concerned that if we fall behind other provinces in spending, we will not be able to deliver some of the core government services as well as other provinces do. To this I would point out that the formula calls for a limit in spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth or a spending increase equal to the average per capita program spending of Canada's remaining nine provinces, whichever number is greater. Accordingly, when this legislation eventually brings us back into the middle of the pack in terms of per capita provincial spending – and given our lead, this will take some time – we will be able to remain there and not fall behind other provinces.

Others have wrongfully pointed to problems in California. As we know, California is dealing with program cuts required to meet their balanced budget legislation. Balanced budget legislation is not the same as spending limitation laws. They are two entirely different pieces of legislation.

As we know too well in Alberta, revenues can swing wildly from year to year. This may mean that in a severe downturn revenues may plummet so dramatically that achieving a balanced budget is impossible without substantive cuts. That's not what this law does. Bill 204 limits year-over-year spending increases. It actually insulates governments from the need to drastically slash spending because it guards against massive overspending during good times so that when revenues do drop sharply – and sometimes they do – the need for cuts, if any, will be much, much less.

For a better comparison we should look to the state of Colorado, which passed a taxpayer bill of rights in 1992, that included a provision that government spending cannot exceed inflation plus population growth. Because of this law Colorado taxpayers enjoy a robust economy at lower tax rates than most other states. Their deficit during the past recession was very, very small compared with other states. In fact, the success of their innovative move in 1992 prompted many other U.S. states to pass expenditure limitation laws of their own.

Bill 204 will also make our long-term fiscal planning much stronger. By knowing what our expenditures will be down the road, we'll be better able to engage in long-term tax and debt reduction planning. This bill will also allow for a more manageable long-term saving strategy to be put in place. This is due to the economic fact that over the long term GDP and the tax revenues generated therefrom will outstrip the rate of inflation and population growth. This means we can save more and that we can tax less over time. What a legacy that would be. We could turn a sea of volatile, nonrenewable oil and gas into a mountain of permanent investment capital accruing with interest each and every year.

Another benefit of this bill and one that should appeal to the members opposite is that it will help moderate the expectations of the public as well as public-sector workers when it comes to how much the government is able to spend. Politicians will be able to use this legislation to help stiffen their resolve when it comes to saying no to things that are not priorities or to saying no to massive wage hikes that taxpayers simply cannot afford. While I believe the stability this bill offers will be positive for our social programs in the long run, making them far more efficient than they are today, it will still have the effect of curtailing the size and the scope of government bureaucracy. Departments will look for innovative ways to provide more efficient and better services by reallocating existing resources rather than simply asking for more funding while perpetuating outdated and wasteful programs and practices.

The bottom line is this. If our federal and provincial governments of the day had controlled spending in this way starting in 2000, both would be running surpluses this year despite being in the midst of a global slowdown. According to the calculations of CFIB inflation and population growth have increased by 72 per cent since 1997. Program expenditures, on the other hand, have increased 159 per cent, more than double that rate. Infrastructure is not even part of that calculation. That's just program expenses like staffing and overhead.

If Alberta's government had adopted this initiative in 1997, our financial future would be something we could be proud of. The $852 million deficit of 2008 would have instead been a $9.85 billion surplus. Even if we had only adopted it in 2002, our surplus in 2008 would have been $6.36 billion. This year, instead of projecting a record $7.6 billion cash deficit that is wiping out our emergency savings, we would be running a small surplus, one backed by a large sustainability fund and a heritage fund much larger than the one we have today. Instead of letting our heritage fund run down with stock prices and raiding its gains when investments rebound, we would have been making substantial contributions to it over the last five years. This would be a legacy we could have been proud of. It is a legacy that we can still build, but we have to start now, and passing Bill 204 is a first step in the right direction.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to congratulate the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere because clearly this bill, that is put forward by a private member, really is about guarding against waste. It allows for better planning in the long term and also in the medium term, not to mention in the immediate short term. Factoring in the key components of inflation and population growth I think is clearly an example of what Martha and Henry have been doing in their homes. It is an Alberta value. It's a value of how we care for our home. Do we go forward and spend like drunken sailors, or do we go and try to manage within the economics of what we're faced with today? Martha and Henry, who ultimately are all of our bosses in our constituencies, where we live, have told us: government, you need to operate like we operate in our Alberta households.

This bill really is a road map, and it's anchored by the pragmatism of Alberta values, Alberta values that talk about: spend within reason; don't spend more than what you have. No matter how good the times are or how bad the times are, we want to ensure that our future is looked after.

It's interesting. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I know, has a family of four boys aged one to six years old. This is really not about today; it's about tomorrow. It's about our future and about our children. Earlier today the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said about the grade 6 schoolchildren he introduced: our future leaders. Well, this very private member's bill is exactly about what the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talked about in terms of our children. It is about putting a fence around spending.

I see the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster; I see the member from Bragg Creek. Clearly, the Treasury Board president and the minister of finance have demonstrated in past years the importance of putting a rein on spending. Really, I'm sure they'll probably go out and consider buying the hon. member a ginger ale after this because of the motion of this. I see the hon. minister of finance shaking his head in agreement, so I can assume from that that he will be supporting this actual private member's bill. I'm glad to see that, and I will continue on since this is my time at this time.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's four boys: clearly, it is about our future and the economics. As the OECD countries have mentioned in the past, Canada in its spending, in terms of what's taking place in health care today and in this private motion, is an example of a train wreck ready to happen. Let's avoid it. Let's keep this on the rails. I believe this road map the hon. member is talking about is a very helpful road map. To the Minister of Transportation: a road map is always good because it sets the path in terms of where we go in the future. This will be for protecting those very children that he introduced today and all of our children.

I ask the hon. members in this Assembly today, clearly, to support this important economic road map in terms of laying a foundation and putting a fence around some of the needless and wasteful spending that has taken place before.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, as sponsored by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Essentially, this piece of legislation aims to place restrictions on current and future legislators by limiting annual increases in government spending. It would amend the Fiscal Responsibility Act by limiting spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth as determined by Stats Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member's intentions in bringing forward this piece of legislation. After all, fiscal prudence and responsibility are the cornerstones of this government. Fiscal responsibility allowed this government to eliminate the deficit and pay off nearly $23 billion in debt, and it allowed us to save billions of dollars in the sustainability fund in the event of future economic downturns. These policies have positioned Alberta to weather the current economic downturn better than most any other jurisdiction in North America. Furthermore, this government has committed itself to eliminating the current deficit within three years. We'll do so by controlling the growth of spending, which can certainly be accomplished without legislation.

Mr. Speaker, while I agree with the spirit of the intent of this legislation, I don't believe that it should be the law, and that was a clear message that we got from our party membership a year ago, when they defeated a similar resolution brought forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I will respect the message that we got from Albertans that day after a very healthy debate.

While limiting spending to inflation plus population growth is one method to control spending, it's not without flaws and limitations. For example, annual population growth does not necessarily match the practical demand on government for services, programs, and infrastructure. We all know that the requirement for government to spend money does not always come in small, predictable, bite-sized pieces, as was certainly evident in recent years, and it's impacted by many factors, including changing demographics. As an example, in the years to come, Alberta's seniors population will grow faster than our average population growth. For our government and for future governments this will mean a significant increase in the needs for seniors supports and medical services, that I do not want to hold from those people.

Other examples are postsecondary education, whose enrolment may not coincide with total population growth, and employment services or community supports, whose needs are more closely tied to global economic factors than local population increases.

Another real example is the 6 per cent increase allocated to Alberta Health Services over the next three years. Mr. Speaker, this certainly would not fit in with this formula. As calculated by the Minister of Health and Wellness, this 6 per cent comes from 2 per cent for inflation estimates, 2 and a half per cent for demographic changes in health care, and 1 and a half per cent for changes in innovation, pharmaceuticals, and different types of treatments. Certainly, that does not align with this kind of formula, but I think most Albertans agree that that's very prudent.

Essentially, total population growth is not an accurate reflection of the financial demands on government. Furthermore, a large component of government spending is comprised of wages, and these contracts can often be influenced by the demand for and supply of skilled labour and wages in the private sector and in other provinces, and they're often negotiated in multiyear terms. For these reasons government settlements may not be in line with general inflation.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 does not reflect the need for government to be responsible to acute regional challenges or to plan ahead for economic growth. The oil sands area and the community of Fort McMurray are a beautiful example of that. Periodically larger investments and infrastructure, transportation, and other social services are required and are indeed prudent. Currently Alberta is investing large amounts in infrastructure. This flexibility enables us to invest at a time when the value for money is at its peak and at a time when we need to keep Albertans working. Furthermore, this investment positions us for economic recovery, and frankly it responds to the demands of Albertans.

This member may want us to reduce spending, but according to his comments it seems it only applies to other constituencies and not necessarily his own. We should remind ourselves that today our revenues do in fact exceed our expenditures for operating costs. When you have a close look at the budget, the current deficit is actually created by a measured and aggressive investment in Alberta's infrastructure. That's a strategic and deliberate decision, that this member actually contributed to, and by funding those capital assets through our savings, our sustainability fund, we are not accumulating debt like other jurisdictions are doing. This member claims we are piling up billions in new debts on the backs of future generations. Well, Mr. Speaker, piling up savings at the expense of not spending on infrastructure would leave an infrastructure debt for future generations, which is indeed a debt for future generations.

I would encourage all members to go and ask their constituents if they believe we should cut our current infrastructure expenses. I believe we all know the answer to that question before we ask it. A law restricting spending would obstruct the ability of government to make any significant strategic periodic investments in infrastructure or programs when it makes the most sense.

Albertans are no strangers to volatile revenue conditions, and this recession has been no different. Years of unprecedented economic growth quickly gave way to the deepest recession in decades, but Alberta is exposed more than most to the ebb and flow of a resource-based economy, and it is due to this economy that Albertans must have the flexibility to soundly manage its fiscal framework in times of both economic prosperity and recession. Budget 2010 outlined a responsible and measured path to deal with our current difficulties without drastic sacrifice of the essential services that Albertans depend on.

Mr. Speaker, lastly, and most important to me, is that this bill restricts the ability of future legislators and future generations to budget as they see fit. As a wise man once said, it's easy to predict the past, but we do not have a crystal ball, and we don't know what challenges may lie ahead for us or for our children or our grandchildren. Why would we think we know what's best for the Alberta of 2030 or the Alberta of 2050? Why would we want to set up even more challenges for future generations by implementing this legislation, which would restrict the choices they can make and the tools that are at their disposal to enable success? Do we not have confidence in our children to make wise choices? I also have confidence that the legislators of today and of the future will make the best possible choices based on the requirements and the direction of Albertans.

While I understand why the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would bring this bill forward as one possible method of ensuring predictable expenditures, I do not believe it's the right fiscal plan for Alberta. Bill 204 may make sense on paper, but when you have to deal with real-life people and real-life challenges and real-life demographics, it's not practical, and it does not reflect the realities of budgeting and planning for Albertans. It would hinder this government's ability to be accountable to Albertans, it would make it more difficult to save and invest according to the needs of dynamic Albertans, and it would obstruct this government and future governments from adequately responding to unforeseen challenges and opportunities. I agree it's good policy, but I believe it's bad law. The allocation of resources is one of the most difficult and important jobs legislators have, and I am not prepared to abdicate that responsibility or to strip it from future generations.

For those reasons I will not be supporting Bill 204, and I urge my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 204. When my children were young, my husband and I didn't have a lot of money. What money we did have went to paying the mortgage, making sure the utility bills were paid, and buying food. These were what we considered the essentials in life. Because we set out a plan and budgeted for these expenses, any money that was left over went into our savings account. We knew that sometimes there would be unexpected spending emergencies or temporary shortfalls in our income, and this way they would be covered. When we got raises or sometimes unexpected amounts of money in a given year, we tried to keep our budget basically the same because we knew we could live just fine this year on the budget that worked for us last year.

There were two things that made us have to increase our budget, and one was inflation. Obviously, when the cost of gas or groceries goes up, you have to adjust your budget if you can afford to. The other thing that made it necessary to increase our family budget was having children.

This makes obvious sense, and I believe it works as well for government as it does for family. This is what fiscal responsibility means to our family and many other families. To us fiscal responsibility meant that your outgo did not exceed your income. What this meant to us as a family was that one could use credit or have debt to some degree but the challenge was deciding what was permissible debt and what was luxurious debt. For my husband and I there was only one good reason to be in debt, and that was to pay for a house, as there are not a lot of people who can purchase their house in cash.

Mr. Speaker, we have spent many decades operating our household with the understanding that sometimes I can't have what I want when I want it just because I want it. The point I'm trying to make is that because my husband and I budgeted, we knew exactly how much money we had to spend. Just because we made more money one year didn't mean we had to throw last year's budget out the window.

Knowing what you need to spend money on and sticking to it is the key to fiscal responsibility, and that is essentially, in my mind, what Bill 204 is trying to accomplish. Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, will allow the government to curb the kind of runaway spending that we have seen in recent years by implementing a spending cap of inflation plus population growth or the average spending of Canada's remaining provinces, whichever is higher.

What does fiscal responsibility truly mean? Does it mean eliminating the deficit, or does it mean getting the deficit under control? Better yet, Mr. Speaker, what do Albertans want to see? Well, I can only tell you what I have heard over the last many, many months. Albertans want us to establish a tradition of planning, which means they want departments to run efficiently, and they want departments to run with clear outcomes. They want the government to clearly assess needs, and they want the government to clearly set priorities.

Albertans believe effective budgeting and long-term planning is key. Albertans have clearly told us: it is very easy to say no to everything; it is harder to evaluate our province's responsibilities, look at past performances, assess the needs of each department, and decide where the money should go.

Let me give you an example of what I mean, Mr. Speaker. As an MLA I have spent a lot of time talking to the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek. Not once do I remember any constituent in Calgary-Fish Creek telling me to come up with a new slogan for Alberta. They quite liked Alberta advantage. They liked what it meant, and they liked having Alberta advantage as their slogan. Yet the government went ahead with $25 million over three years on rebranding our province. What a waste of money. The money that was spent on this foolish initiative could have been used for – let me think. How about home care for a few thousand seniors to free up acute-care beds?

Mr. Speaker, we must be fiscally responsible and live under spending restraints in the same manner that our Alberta families do. The government members will stand up and talk about the downturn in the economy – and, you know, I truly understand that – even though it was made a lot worse in the province because of the government's poor policies.

The Member for Athabasca-Redwater speaks about how members from their Progressive Conservative convention did not support the motion from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Well, Mr. Speaker, as someone who was on the other side, I saw hundreds and hundreds of motions or resolutions go through the convention floor when I was a member of the Progressive Conservatives. What happened to them? One of the biggest criticisms from the Progressive Conservatives who went to the convention was: what's happening to the motions and resolutions that hit the floor?

We also know that resource revenues in this province are subject to fluctuations which make it nearly impossible to forecast a specified revenue level. That's why our spending should be more independent of nonrenewable resources. We have seen this before and, quite frankly, should have learned the lesson already. Mr. Speaker, I love the Boy Scout's slogan, and I think it's a good one: Be Prepared.

I'm like many Albertans; I want us to restore the Alberta advantage. Alberta should be leading this country in fiscal responsibility, not in big government and not in huge debt. I urge everyone to support the bill so that our fiscal future will be on solid ground.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess this is what private members' business is for: to have an idea, and you can kind of dance around the facts a little bit and try and get across your point. And that's fine. The hon. member has his turn at the draw, and he's made it.

The problem I have with putting in a significant policy such as one that would limit your government's opportunity to look after its citizens, whether it be population plus inflation or whatever formula you want to jiggle around and come up with, is that in private members' business and committee we'll have roughly two hours to talk about the ramifications of what that might mean to health care or to seniors or to children's services: all departments that have tremendous stress, even more so in times of a downturn.

In the House, Mr. Speaker, we bring the budget in, and we spend roughly 70 hours in committee questioning the departments and the different ministries on where their priorities are. I don't think that it's practical for a private member to suggest that two hours in committee would set the tone for a government as compared to 70 hours every year to talk about the priorities.

The other flaw, and there are many, is in saying: well, you know, we don't have to deal with disasters; we can deal with them separately. That's true, but we also have other departments that have funding that they must account for, that they have no choice in. Environment, for example, maintains the carbon fund. That is an industry fund that revolves through their department, counts against their targets, but they really have no say in how much is contributed. It depends on the amount of buy-up there is and how much is to be spent back out. So if you're going to limit overall government spending, you may in a way be actually stopping some of the really good environmental initiatives that we have.

Some of the funding we're owed by the federal government, for example, health care. If we were to receive, finally, the roughly $800 million that Albertans are rightfully owed by the federal government on behalf of health care transfers, if you were to limit our spending to population plus inflation, we wouldn't be able to take it. We could take it, I guess, and put it in the bank, but the people that they've talked about all afternoon waiting for emergency room service probably wouldn't appreciate that very much.

Mr. Speaker, it also is important when they talk about: well, we can cut back on infrastructure. Like the Member for Athabasca-Redwater said, it's funny when you have your infrastructure how easy it is to suggest that others don't need it. For the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to suggest in any way, shape, or form that the area that he pretends to represent can possibly build the infrastructure and provide the services they need for the next ten years on population plus inflation is to suggest that he's not in touch with what's going on in his own backyard. To suggest that the growth areas like Airdrie, Lloydminster, Grande Prairie, and others will be able to just manage on population plus inflation: "Oh, well, just take it from someone else. As long as we get our own, we're good. As long as we make a headline, it appears that they're happy."

Mr. Speaker, the budget of Alberta deserves the full and complete attention of this Assembly for the time that's allocated at this point, and the people will continue to make decisions on that budget. For as long as they have this government they will be the ones in charge of where the priorities are in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't hear you there with the roaring applause that we got for this government for wanting to have no constraints on its spending.

It's interesting in these tough times how they spin the story. It wasn't too long ago when this government had huge surpluses, and thank heavens they had the foresight or, should I say, the problem that they couldn't spend enough money, that they were forced to have a sustainability fund. Back earlier, when for the first time in years we were running surpluses, in 2005, they changed their attitude. Rather than saving any surplus, it was to spend. It's interesting that the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater said, you know: well, in tough times we have a great opportunity to increase our spending because the price is down. But the real problem was that we spent $18 billion on infrastructure in about an 18-month period when the price was double what it currently is.

Government constraint is the toughest thing to do when you have free access to spend other people's money. It's very easy, and this government has fallen into that problem, that when something starts to come unfolded and there's a problem in front of them, they say: well, throw money at it. Yet they don't look at the consequences.

Let's just talk about the emergency room dilemma that we're being faced with right now and the shortage of beds. For two and a half years the Premier, the Executive Council, everybody knew that there was a problem, but we hadn't had a crisis yet, so it was ongoing. We've spent hundreds of millions of dollars building new facilities to shut down old ones that were still functional. To think that there's no way that we could move forward without spending a lot of money just simply isn't true. There are many, many good ways of planning to have that sustainability.

Let's go back and realize that in 2005 going through to 2008 a tremendous amount of money was spent on infrastructure. They were chasing the dollar and those people who could provide those services right up the ladder of expenses. We were spending an enormous amount of money. We even had bids put out where no bids were accepted because they couldn't do it, so we had a real problem. What does it come back to? It's fiscal restraint. Had there been restraint, where they couldn't increase their spending because the inflation and the population hadn't jumped that much, we would've had a lot more money in the sustainability fund. More important is that you'd have that gradual increase that is sustainable.

We continue to ask and press this government for what their 10-year sustainability plan is. They say that they have one. What's their infrastructure plan? Put that list out, and show this highway 63, this highway 3 to Medicine Hat. Prioritize it, and let us see where it is and what the estimates are on those. But, more important, if this government really wants to ensure that the tax dollars are spent right, that restraint needs to be there where they don't cycle and say: oh, we got some extra money; let's bid high and get all this done this year. This is about the boom years. That's when the restraint needs to be kept in. Had we kept that restraint in during the boom years and not spent our money foolishly, then we would have had lots more in the kitty right now in the heritage trust fund and the sustainability fund. More importantly, we could have had sustainable growth through our infrastructure. We could have addressed those areas.

It's interesting that the member says that Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, and Airdrie wouldn't be able to address their needs. They're correct. They wouldn't with the current formula that this government has. They suck a huge amount of money out of these communities and refuse to send any back. We need to change the political scene and the way we divide the dollars up.

If we were to change and acknowledge that we have three levels of government and only one taxpayer and to turn the three levels of government into, let's say, a think tank and say, "Okay; how are we going to divide up our responsibilities? How are we going to divide up our spending?" we wouldn't get the overlap that we have. Currently the federal government can take money from the taxpayer, the provincial government can take money from the taxpayer, and the municipal government gets the last dibs at it on property taxes and a few other local access fees and other things that they might throw at us. Then the taxpayer is left in this dilemma: you know, for the infrastructure that we need here, there aren't the tax dollars here.

If we were to just take two steps back and look at the pool of money that leaves an area and say that a percentage was to come back on a formula base, then you'd see that boom areas like Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Edmonton, Calgary, all those areas that were booming – the capital is leaving. It's just not coming back because greedy government grabs hold of it and says: we're going to spend it on our pet projects. And that they do, whether it's $2 billion for a CO₂ plant that isn't proven yet and jumping ahead on those things. But the point is that the government grabs it. We need to have that restraint.

This government has spent billions of dollars during the boom years at a very poor valuation for the taxpayers. Now they're saying: oh, we can spend billions of dollars now, which is going to help the taxpayers. But the problem is again going to happen. I don't know. There are still quite a few members here that were here back in 2003-2004, when the government decided that we wanted to be out of debt by 2005. They actually cut the infrastructure spending from about $3 billion down to $1.5 billion, and it absolutely destroyed the industry. All of a sudden there was twice as much capacity in the industry than the government was spending because they wanted to save at a time when they needed to be spending or to have that steady growth.

What this bill is about is the Fiscal Responsibility Act. That's why we need to pass this bill, to restrain government from uncontrolled spending, that they're always tempted to do when a problem arises: “Oh, we’ll throw some money at it. We can make this area happy; we can appease this area.” The truth is that this government wants to be able to increase its political slush funds and spend them on areas where they deem the problem is in order to try and buy the votes, to bring those people in.

It’s interesting, though. You know, the groups – and again, people will say that these are conservative groups. I’d call them sound economic think tanks. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce has brought forward that we need to have this restraint on our spending to population and inflation. The Fraser Institute, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation are among the many that realize the importance of this bill.

This isn’t something to scoff at lightly and say: “Oh, we don’t need it. We don’t want to be restrained. We can’t respond to an emergency.” Those emergency aspects can and should be kept in a separate silo. If, in fact, we have a major problem with the pine beetle, forest fires, whatever it is, that’s very different. Everybody understands that when their house is burning, you throw all your resources at it. We’re not talking about those things. We’re just talking the day-to-day operations of this government saying: “Oh, we need to respond here. We need to respond to this one. Let’s spend some money here.” There’s no thought even to what the cost of building this building is, let alone what we’re going to have to spend to operate it or if we actually have the nurses and the doctors to operate this.

I found it amazing in question period today that the question was asked many, many times: where are you going to get the money for the 200 extra beds in order to appease the problems in the emergency rooms? Yet they seemed to say: oh, we put out a five-year budget. They can guarantee it. It’s going to be 6 per cent these next two years, as if the opening of 200 beds isn’t going to cost anything new. Here they are speaking to that when we already have a cash income deficit of over $7 billion this year. The health boards had an over 13 per cent increase, I believe, to address their past one. They’ve already got every dollar allocated and spent. Then to say that we’re going to spend money on 200 more beds but just reallocate it from somewhere – they’ve already got a huge debt; they cannot reallocate the money.

This is the reason why you need to have fiscal restraint. It’s why you need to put it and pin it to something like population and inflation growth so that the money just isn’t wildly spent like drunken sailors, and then they look back and say: well, where is the money? They haven’t even looked at the fact that we’re going to open up 200 more beds. Do they have the nurses and the doctors to even fill those? Did they look at all of the costs? They’re not doing that.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker – and I think that it’s very relevant because they’re saying that we’ve discussed the budget. This is what it’s about. This government is throwing out new solutions daily that are costing hundreds of millions of dollars, and we’re not getting good taxpayers’ money. We need to do a better job. We need to have fiscal restraint. We can’t have this bulge in spending. Every time an extra dollar comes in, they don’t even think of the costs of being able to maintain those facilities or those people, keeping them hired, when we run out of money.

I will leave it at that. This is an important bill. It would serve the government well and would serve the taxpayers even better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to stand here today and share some thoughts on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. The central theme of Bill 204 is fiscal control and responsibility. This is a theme that this government knows quite well and a theme that I have personally taken to heart throughout my life. This government’s fiscal control and responsibility has propelled Alberta into arguably the best fiscal position in North America. Alberta has no debt and the lowest taxes in the country as well as long- and short-term savings for the future. We are the envy of our neighbours across North America. I would say that this shows that we have been incredibly fiscally responsible, especially when compared to other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of Bill 204 is to improve upon this already enviable scenario. However, I would argue that the proposal made by the proposed legislation might not address that goal. Specifically, Bill 204 proposes to limit government spending to a formula where total spending increases are equal to population growth plus inflation. In this formula both the rates of population growth and inflation would be determined by Statistics Canada and then would be multiplied by current government spending to determine the spending limit in the next year. It is also worth noting that under the proposed legislation spending exceptions would be made for disaster relief efforts.

My concerns with Bill 204 are twofold. Firstly, enacting legislation to control government spending effectively hampers the government’s fiscal flexibility. Secondly, tying government spending to a formula may not take into account Alberta’s volatile, resource-based economy. In short, governments must have the flexibility to act on economic changes and be accountable for those actions. Therefore, I believe that the ideals proposed in Bill 204 are well intentioned, but I am not convinced of its practical application.

The place for a government to exercise fiscal responsibility is through time-honoured vehicles like the throne speech and the annual budget process. Zero-based budgeting gives the opportunity to examine programs to see if they are still required or if they should be modified or eliminated. A standard formula for increases does not provide this incentive.

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned, my first concern is that Bill 204 would dramatically limit the government’s ability to be flexible in its year-to-year spending. Flexibility is important to every decision-maker, be they business leaders, governments, or households. In the household concept people need to be able to spend more money as they need to and save when they don’t. For example, it might be advantageous for a person to spend above a spending cap when goods are on sale or at bargain prices. This can help ensure getting value for your money.

This example holds true even if we take this example to the provincial level. As we have seen, during a period of economic slowdown the cost of commodities and labour may decrease. The cost of infrastructure, for example, can drop significantly. A wise government would use this decrease in cost to invest in public infrastructure projects. A bridge, roadway, or building could be built for far less than during a boom time. Essentially, this means that taxpaying citizens would be getting more for their tax dollar.

Mr. Speaker, if we were to enact proposals brought forth in Bill 204, we would not be able to reap benefits such as this. An economic downturn would come, and building prices would drop, but we would be unable to invest when prices are low. Now, some may argue that we would be able to simply shift funds from one department to another to take advantage of low construction costs. However, I would argue that initiating short-term cuts to programs in order to pay for infrastructure at an opportune time may in fact do more harm than good.

The second concern I have with Bill 204 centres on how the proposed restrictions might not work with Alberta's volatile economy. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, Alberta's economy can change quickly. For example, during periods of economic boom Alberta can see a huge influx of people move into the province. These people all require government services such as education and health care, and it is our responsibility as a government to provide these services to them. Providing services for this influx of people could mean spending more than our budget allows for.

Now, it is true that the formula proposed in Bill 204 takes into account population growth. However, I would argue that during a period of economic boom the population of Alberta could rise at such a rate that this formula, which takes into account the population of the past year, might not be responsive to rapid population growth. Moreover, a budget based on population growth would not take into account Alberta's large shadow populations. After all, centres such as Fort McMurray can experience a huge influx of people that may not be taken into account by Statistics Canada's population figures. These are people that need services provided by the government of Alberta; these are people that need health care and transportation networks. These are people that must be budgeted for. The measures proposed in Bill 204 do not allow government the flexibility it needs to effectively provide services to Albertans in periods of economic boom.

Now, this is not to say that fiscal control and responsibility is a bad thing. As I said initially, I'm a strong proponent of fiscal responsibility. Rather, Mr. Speaker, sound financial management has always been a cornerstone of this government, and I would argue that our track record of debt elimination and tax reduction speaks for itself. This government has proven itself to be a wise steward of Alberta's wealth. Therefore, I would call into question the need for Bill 204. Government spending should meet the needs of Albertans now and into the future. This includes fiscal sustainability, which this government has practised in the past and will continue to practise in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I will state again that the intention of this bill is good. After all, fiscal restraint is something that most of us can agree on. However, I am unconvinced that the measures proposed in Bill 204 will effectively achieve its objectives or lead to any improvement in our already enviable fiscal situation.

The place for a government to exercise fiscal responsibility is through the time-honoured vehicles of the throne speech and the annual budget process. This government will show its accountability through these vehicles and be judged on its delivery of services to Albertans within its own fiscal guidelines.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it is 5 o'clock. Standing Order 8(1) requires that Motions other than Government Motions be called. Therefore, the time limit for the consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Child and Youth Health Charter

509. Mr. Rogers moved on behalf of Dr. Sherman:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to formally adopt Canada's child and youth health charter sponsored by the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Paediatric Society, and the College of Family Physicians of Canada.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and begin debate on Motion 509 on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The intention of Motion 509 is to urge this government to formally adopt Canada's child and youth health charter. I believe that adopting this charter would contribute to the government's continuing goal of ensuring that all children in Alberta are provided with the right tools to maintain a healthy and secure livelihood.

I would first like to discuss how Canada's child and youth health charter was developed as well as to describe the promising framework that this charter provides. Mr. Speaker, the charter was developed through a collaborative process between the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Paediatric Society, and the College of Family Physicians of Canada. These groups are driven by a strong commitment to create a new health legacy for the children of Canada. They hosted a workshop that brought together 40 experts, stakeholders, and key influencers in the area of child health in an effort to establish the framework of the charter.

The framework of this charter is dissected into three main categories. These categories are key to creating an environment where children can reach their full potential and grow up happy, healthy, and secure. Mr. Speaker, the three categories are as follows: children need to develop in, one, a place with a safe and secure environment, both environmental and social; two, a place where children and youth can have good health and development, providing the best child care and educational opportunities; and three, a place where a full range of health resources is available, providing state-of-the-art medical practices and research.

In addition to these three categories, five general principles are applied to each one, which are universality, limiting financial burden on our youth, barrier-free access, measuring and monitoring all progress, and providing safe and secure communities. Mr. Speaker, because this charter was authored by physicians who have first-hand knowledge of these issues, the framework is constructed in a way that will best ensure a child's healthy development.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to turn to and discuss the positive way in which our government is facilitating objectives to improve child and youth health and how adopting the Canada child and youth health charter would be yet another tool at our disposal to help us meet many of our established government programs. Our government is doing its part to ensure that child health and well-being is of the highest quality in Canada. Although Alberta does not have a child and youth health charter, the government of Alberta strategic business plan as well as business plans for ministries such as Education, Children and Youth Services, and Health and Wellness make similar commitments that are relevant to the charter.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the first commitment of the charter, stating that children need a place with a safe and secure environment, matches with goals 3, 6, and 7 of the Alberta strategic business plan 2010 to 2013, which ensures that, goal 3, the high quality of Alberta's environment will be sustained; goal 6, Albertans will be independent, and our children will be well cared for; goal 7, Alberta will be a safe place to live, work, and raise a family. Because motion 509 is aligned with our government's priorities and objectives for the health and well-being of children, it should be an easy transition to adopt this charter.

In addition to what our government already has in place, this charter will reaffirm with Albertans as well as the international community that the province of Alberta continues to make children's health and well-being a top priority. Alberta has always been renowned for being a global leader in innovation and setting the pace for the quality of life for its citizens, and adopting this motion would be a clear continuation of this tradition. Since it has been endorsed by over 80 established organizations, including the United Nations, this further emphasizes our leadership in this area.

Another great opportunity that we gain by accepting this charter is that it places additional emphasis on such areas as childhood obesity, child mortality, injury, and mental health rates, areas of health care that are especially important to our government. Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that issues such as childhood obesity and child mortality rates are an ongoing concern in our province and in our nation. However, since this charter's introduction at the federal level there has been a positive decrease in these areas.

Finally and arguably, Mr. Speaker, it would be yet another tool that this government could use in order to ensure that child and youth well-being in Alberta remains sustainable, accountable, and transparent, values that Albertans have come to expect from this government.

I encourage all members in this Assembly to support Motion 509. Our children have a right to access the best possible care, and it is our responsibility to provide it to them. Government and all Albertans must work in a constructive manner to ensure that our children continue to enjoy the highest quality of life in Canada.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to speaking to Motion 509. First, I want to recognize the appropriateness of this motion coming from a physician, a man of integrity, a man who cares very deeply about the well-being of all Albertans but especially that of children. I also want to give a nod of support to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who so aptly outlined the importance of our House accepting this motion.

I am aware that a motion is basically a call for a direction. A motion suggests action but doesn't actually require action to be taken. A case in point: when this House unanimously accepted a motion that I put forward in terms of calling for a unified family court, with the help of the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright changing that motion to calling for a unified family court process, there was unanimous agreement in the House that this is a direction that we should be pursuing. Unfortunately, that was the last we heard of it. I'm hoping that this will not be the case for Motion 509. For a motion to proceed to action, we will need a government commitment for a timeline and a funding commitment to ensure that the five principles that are enshrined in the goals statements include universality, without financial burden, barrier-free access, measurement and monitoring, and safe and secure communities.

A recent Stats Canada figure indicated that the number of children in Alberta living below the poverty line is approximately 78,000. We cannot deal with children's needs unless we first start to recognize the problems associated with poverty. We also in dealing with children's needs need to recognize such issues as child care, such issues as investing in their education. This government has yet to fulfill its requirements for the 2003 Learning Commission. It agreed seven years ago that it would be important to establish funding for full-day kindergarten. The government agreed back in 2003 that it would be important to establish half-day junior kindergarten.

When we compare our child care system or the support we provide for parents who choose to stay at home, for example to that of Quebec, we are so far behind in terms of providing support for families and providing support for children. We have to go beyond the well-intentioned motherhood of this statement and enact it. There's no point in us patting ourselves on the shoulders and backs, saying: yes, we as an Assembly unanimously endorse this motion. We have a duty as elected representatives of our constituents to translate direction into action. That is extremely important to me.

We have other examples that this government was very reluctant and late in agreeing to. For example, there was the United Nations universal charter on the rights of children. Now, this government's reason for not endorsing it to the extent other provinces did was that, well, this was a federal matter, that the UN is talking about countries as opposed to provinces. However, that did not prevent other provinces from recognizing universal rights of the child.

I cannot imagine this motion not being accepted. But, again, the call to action is why I'm standing up today. Today in question period, for example, I talked about special-needs children and their needs not being met in this particular province. When I asked the hon. Education minister the question about "Well, now that coding is gone, what is it going to be replaced with so that we can be sure to recognize children's needs and then provide the necessary support to see that those needs are met?" the hon. minister had a very good observation. He said: well, all children are special. I agree with the idea that all children are special. I've devoted over half my life to advocating on behalf of children, 34 years in the classroom, and I'm particularly proud of being a grandparent the last six years.

Advocacy for children is extremely important, but again action is required. If we simply agree to the niceties, the necessities of Motion 509 but fail to act upon them, to bring them into the reality of our Alberta circumstance, where, despite being Canada's wealthiest province, we have the highest dropout rate in high school, we have the lowest postsecondary participation in the nation, we have the highest rates of suicide, the highest rates of divorce – these are not enviable statistics. Therefore, if we take Motion 509 first in accepting it as a direction but then actually put timelines to it and we say, for example, as was discussed in our deliberations over minimum wage, that we go forward with a poverty reduction strategy that takes into account the needs of families, then we'll have gone beyond just providing a nod, and we'll actually get to the point where we need to be for providing a direct action.

The previous bill that was debated was about sustainability and fiscal responsibility. I've put out two buttons in terms of trying to boil down the children's message to its lowest common denominator. One button for Children and Youth Services says Safe Kids Save Dollars. Another button message, which I tried to put into its most simple form, is Education Equals Economy.

What I'm calling for is the next step. When we as a House unanimously accept the positive directions that are being suggested as being necessary for a developed country with a conscience to implement, then we have to go the next step. I very much appreciate that this has been brought to our attention, but it has to get beyond a suggestion; it has to get to action. I hope this government initiates the action which will see the suggestion realized.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Motion 509 as sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Essentially, the motion urges the government of Alberta to formally adopt Canada's child and youth health charter with the goal of improving child and youth health throughout Canada. The charter would commit Alberta to doing its part in ensuring that Canada becomes a place with a safe and secure environment. Isn't that what all of our children want, a safe and secure place, a place where children and youth can have good health and development, a place where a full range of health resources is available to all the youth in our country?

Mr. Speaker, these are goals that this government has and continues to support. After all, the health and well-being of our youth are critical to the future prosperity of our province. In fact, these goals are supported in the government of Alberta's strategic business plan as well as in business plans for the ministries, including Education, Children and Youth Services, and Health and Wellness. Furthermore, the recently released report from the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health, a foundation for Alberta's health system, recommends the creation of an Alberta patient charter in a newly created Alberta health act. This patient charter would outline the rights and responsibilities of citizens in health care and services.

Mr. Speaker, while many of these goals are already enshrined in government policy, I believe a child and youth health charter could be useful in addressing the unique health challenges facing Alberta's youth. The charter was developed through collaboration between the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Paediatric Society, and the College of Family Physicians of Canada. Together these groups produced a charter to address issues such as childhood obesity and mortality rates as a result of workshops that brought together 40 experts, stakeholders, and other key stakeholders in child health.

The result was a document crafted by physicians who have expert, first-hand knowledge of child and youth health issues. Therefore, I believe the adoption of this charter could help shape even more beneficial and effective government policy on child and youth health in years to come. As such, I offer my support for Motion 509 in the hope that we can continue our efforts to improve the quality of life for our Alberta youth. Mr. Speaker, they deserve no less.

Thank you. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join debate on Motion 509:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to formally adopt Canada's child and youth health charter sponsored by the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Paediatric Society, and the College of Family Physicians of Canada.

I can quite easily support this motion. In fact, I would be very surprised if everybody in this House doesn't support this motion. But as my colleague from Calgary-Varsity pointed out a couple of speakers ago, the key here is turning words into action. This is a motion by which, if we pass it here today, the Legislative Assembly will urge the government to adopt a charter as a policy document, and that certainly can lead to action. But I would be very intrigued to hear from government members opposite how much thought they had put into the action that they're prepared to take around this if the motion does pass today.

The Canada child and health youth charter was created in 2007 as a collaborative effort, as the Member for Lethbridge-West pointed out. Its goal is to provide our children across the country the ability to reach their full potential, growing up happy, healthy, confident, and secure, and to ensure that Canadian children are among the healthiest in the world.

It aims to achieve its goals through some 16 statements categorized into three main headings which dictate that Canada must become:

1. A place with a safe and secure environment.

That means:

- (a) Clean water, air and soil;
 - (b) Protection from injury, exploitation and discrimination; and
 - (c) Healthy family, homes and communities.
2. A place where children and youth can have good health and development:
 - (a) Prenatal and maternal care for the best possible health at birth;
 - (b) Nutrition for proper growth, development and long-term health;
 - (c) Early learning opportunities and high-quality care, [both] at home and in the community;
 - (d) Opportunities and encouragement for physical activity;
 - (e) High-quality primary and secondary education;
 - (f) Affordable and available post-secondary education; and
 - (g) A commitment to social well-being and mental health.
 3. A place where a full range of health resources is available:
 - (a) Basic health care including immunization, drugs, and dental [needs] because tooth decay is the single biggest health problem for children in our country;

- (b) Mental health care and early help programs for children and youth;
- (c) Timely access to specialty diagnostic and health services;
- (d) Measurement and tracking the health of children and youth;
- (e) Research that focuses on the needs of [our] children and youth; and
- (f) Uninterrupted care as youth move to adult health services and between acute, chronic and community care, as well as between jurisdictions.

That's a big chunk of things that the Canada child and youth health charter promises our children and that it defines as the things that we should be working on for our children, which we would buy into at least as a group of Legislative Assembly people here today if we pass Motion 509. We need to think about what actions we're actually prepared to take to move that forward because if we're not preparing an action plan to follow this or if we don't urge the government to prepare an action plan to follow this or if the government doesn't just go ahead and prepare one on its own, then these are just nice words on paper, on a charter, in Hansard, and they don't really, really mean much.

The Canadian child and youth health charter has good intentions, and its goal is to aim to improve the level of care for children in Canada. But it's pretty easy to argue that individually all 16 of the proposed points are already currently being achieved or don't specifically need to be worked toward, and there may be little or no change that comes as a result of this commitment. I'm not suggesting that I'm arguing that, but I'm suggesting that there is a series of easy outs and loopholes here for those who should be developing an action plan around this charter to use it to say, "Well, look, it's in our business plan; we're already doing this over here; we're already doing that" and point to the number of things that are being done without a coherent, cohesive, perhaps holistic approach to all 16 of these points to make sure that we're moving the ball down the field. In order to be effective, a motion like this needs to be accompanied by a plan of what each of the 16 points aims to achieve in Alberta, some sort of action strategy to go along with this charter.

It's also worth noting that the 16 points brought forward here also coincide with a lot of the goals that a poverty reduction strategy might be formed around. As the guy who proposed that we add a recommendation around that at committee when we were putting forward recommendations on a minimum wage policy in this province, I would suggest that beyond this we do need to look at a poverty reduction strategy in the province of Alberta. This is one of only three jurisdictions in Canada that are not at least working on a poverty reduction strategy at this point.

Fighting poverty requires a strategy that involves co-ordination across all government departments. Many of the goals outlined in this charter are relevant to reducing poverty. Poverty is certainly relevant to reducing child health. This charter, if we adopt it or if we urge that the government adopt it, needs an action plan that involves a lot of co-ordination across government departments as well.

This is an interesting challenge and opportunity that we've presented ourselves here with Motion 509. I think it will pass this House. The challenge is not to get support for a motion like this. It would truly be challenging to vote against a motion like this because you wouldn't look like a good guy if you did. The challenge, though, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure, once we've actually recommended that the government do this, that we follow up as an Assembly, continuing to press the government to develop an action plan that will put these points into real practice on a daily basis for the benefit of our children.

You know, Mr. Speaker, just to close, one of the most frequently mentioned things I hear from my constituents and from people in other parts of Calgary is: what a great city Calgary is to raise a family in, to raise children in. I think that if I lived in Edmonton or Grande Prairie or anywhere else in this province, I would hear much the same thing. It is in principle and by and large it is very, very true, but we're not perfect. The fact that we're not perfect, I think, is part of the reason why we're here, to leave this place a little better than we found it. This charter, I think, has the opportunity, this motion has the opportunity to move us a little bit of the way along those lines. If we develop an action plan, then we'll have even more Calgarians and Edmontonians and people in the rest of Alberta saying: this is the greatest place in the country to raise a family.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Motion 509 urging the government to adopt Canada's child and youth health charter in the province of Alberta, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. In Alberta we value the notion that our children are being raised in the best possible environment to flourish in their development. To reach their potential, children and youth need to grow up in a place where they can thrive spiritually, emotionally, mentally, physically, and intellectually and get high-quality health care when they need it. This charter will be another practice in which our government continues to improve the health and security of our future generations.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons why I support this motion is the fact that it was developed and endorsed by such commendable organizations. The Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Paediatric Society, and the College of Family Physicians are established organizations that bring impressive resumé's to the table in regard to improving the well-being of Canadian children. These physicians provide first-hand knowledge of the issues the document addresses. It is also very impressive that over 80 organizations, including the United Nations, have endorsed this charter as being extremely beneficial to the children of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the principles of this motion are also very significant as they align nicely with our government's goals of achieving a healthy livelihood for all Alberta children regardless of race, ethnicity, creed, language, gender, physical ability, mental ability, cultural history, or life experience. Along with our government's already solid platform on this issue it will help to build a coalition of children and youth health initiatives that will create our best framework yet in improving our children's well-being.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, once again, I believe that Motion 509 is very valuable in improving child and youth health and development here in Alberta, and I fully support it in this Assembly. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise like all other members in this Assembly to speak in favour of this motion. As has been outlined already, I would be quite surprised to discover that anybody would not speak in favour of this motion. Part of the reason for that, of course, is where some of our concerns lie, in that we're talking about a charter. But, as is the case often with this government, we seem to have a new trend towards overusing that particular language, talking about a charter but then putting a little asterisk at the bottom of it saying that it's not a legally enforceable document; rather, it's just a statement of high-minded principles.

I think we can all agree to sign on to an unenforceable statement of high-minded principles, but the concern then is: if we're going to talk the talk, are we ensuring that what we're really doing is trying to get credit for walking the walk when that's not what we're doing? Certainly, my observation over the last two and a half years is that when it comes to promoting children's health, this government has not walked the walk. There have been critical decision-making points in the last two and a half years where they have made the wrong decision, and they have not made a decision that would ensure the greatest and best outcome for the health of children in the province of Alberta.

There are, of course, a lot of areas where we can identify that that's the case. I could be here for much longer than the few minutes that I have allocated to me to speak about this. I mean, in the last two years we have cut funding to aboriginal suicide prevention programs. We've embarked upon a wholesale review and revision of special-needs education in our education system, which I am quite convinced is going to lead to tremendous hardship and lack of opportunity for special-needs students.

We have at a variety of different times had the opportunity to look at income rates for families that are currently in poverty who have children. Whether that's with respect to the minimum wage issue, whether that's with respect to income replacement and income support programs, whether that's with respect to AISH, in all those cases we set those amounts at a level that is well, well below the poverty line. Of course, the children of those families live in poverty, so of course, as we know, that results in a deterioration in the health of those children.

In 2000 the federal government considered an antipoverty program, and several of the parties signed on to that antipoverty program. One of the elements of that antipoverty program was that we need to ensure that we have income for families regardless of the source and regardless of the rationale for those families having income, whether it be earned income or pension income or program income or whatever, but that that income not drop below the low-income cut-off measures. That was something that was signed on to by the majority of parliamentarians in, I believe, 2009, yet clearly that is not a set of principles that we've adopted here in Alberta. We continue to have one of the lowest minimum wage rates in the country, and we continue to have a scheme of user fees that very negatively affect those low-income families, whose children are most impacted by those kinds of programs. Unfortunately, in our province it means they're impacted negatively.

We have a profound lack of mental health services in this province, something that has been identified repeatedly to this government and something about which they have done absolutely nothing in the last two years.

We earlier today talked about the fact that we have addictions treatment programs, which the government spends no time monitoring or regulating or trying to improve the quality of. We've done absolutely nothing about those children who are most at risk, who suffer from problems that have the most profound impact on their health outcomes.

We have refused as a province to consider moving towards a comprehensive child care program. Child care is so fundamental to these issues. We know – the research is incontrovertible – that the better your child care program, your public, high-quality, accessible child care program in your jurisdiction, the better the health of those children, the better the education of those children, and the better the income of those children 10 or 15 years later. It is the single most effective tool to eliminate and eradicate poverty and to generally increase the well-being of everybody in society, whether rich or poor, yet it's something that this government repeatedly rejects.

We have, you know, half-day kindergarten when we've had a Learning Commission recommendation that's six years old now saying that we need to increase educational opportunities for our children, and we need to have full-day kindergarten. We don't have that yet.

We have a patchwork – well, I don't even think I can call it a patchwork because that implies more school lunches than we actually have. We have more of a scattering of school lunch dots, shall we say, across the province. In most cases we don't have a comprehensive school lunch program. We have kids across the province going to school hungry. The Minister of Education talks about: aren't we lucky in certain schools that certain principals stop by Costco on the way to school in the morning to see if they have any extra food that they're not going to put on the shelves that day, and maybe they'll donate it, and that principal can take it to the school, and isn't it great that we have such great periodic volunteers in our system? Well, that's not how you get healthy, well-fed children to school every morning, let me tell you. It's quite ridiculous that the Minister of Education would even talk about such a thing. I mean, we have all of these problems that exist within our system that are not actually moving toward supporting any of the goals in this charter, that we're being asked to vote on today.

One of the fundamental components of this charter is the notion of ensuring that children have no barrier to pharmaceutical care and drugs regardless of their income. But we know that that absolutely doesn't exist in the province of Alberta right now, that many families simply forgo getting prescription drug treatment for their children because they can't afford it.

We know that right now children who leave their home because of abusive or problematic situations, who are 14, 15, 16, who want to try and stay in school, have to, as a result of systems put in place by this government, couch surf for three to four months before they get any kind of income support from this government. That's the system that this government has put in.

We know that there are a lot of things that are not actually supporting these goals and which, in fact, confound the goals of this charter. As much as I think it will be wonderful that members of this Assembly vote to support this charter, I think the real key is that in so doing, they actually make some element of a commitment to bringing about the objectives which are reflected in the charter, because right now there's very, very little that the government does that is really, truly focused on bringing about those objectives. I wouldn't want to see us all pat ourselves on the back for signing a document which is unenforceable and effectively meaningless, particularly in the face of the government's record at this point.

My hope is that by voting in favour of it, we might actually see the government change their position on any one of the many programs I've just identified. With that optimistic hope in mind, I will take my seat.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to the debate. It's pretty much what I would have expected. I want to make some comments and then take a bit of a different tack. I notice this is a charter. I commend the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing it forward. The term "charter" is a bit misleading because "charter" suggests, to Canadians at least, something that's legally enforceable, that has legal standing. This does not, and that disappoints me. It's a bit like the Alberta health charter, or patients' charter of rights or whatever it's going to be called. It's not likely to have any meaning.

I've listened to some good comments: the Member for Calgary-Currie talking about poverty reduction and the members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Calgary-Currie talking about the need for action and resources and commitment. I think that was reinforced by the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

I noticed in here, Mr. Speaker, in this proposed charter of child and youth health, a reference to child nutrition. I'll just quote from the charter because this got me thinking of it. The charter commits to "a place where children and youth can have good health and development," including "nutrition for proper growth, development and long-term health."

Now, at first I thought, you know, this is a good thing. This is refreshing. It's a sign that we're advancing when a member of the government caucus brings forward a proposal to support a charter with that statement in it because, Mr. Speaker, you and many members of this Assembly will know that I have fought in here repeatedly over several years for the Alberta government to come forward with some funding for hungry children in Alberta.

People in this province, certainly in this Assembly, don't seem to realize that every day in Alberta, one of the wealthiest jurisdictions on the planet, thousands of kids sit in classrooms hungry through no fault of their own, and this government alone among provincial governments doesn't provide any specific funding to address that problem. I've raised that over the years repeatedly here. I've had heated exchanges with members of the cabinet. I've brought in kids. We've fed them at the Annex and brought them in here and introduced them and challenged the government to act. Over and over it's failed to act and lets the situation continue where in such a wealthy province so many children go hungry through no fault of their own.

Mr. Speaker, that then got me to thinking about the broader track record of this Assembly and of this province and, indeed, of this country on how we treat children. I know that for many years it was the case that this government refused to sign the UN charter on the rights of the child, and I'm not sure that it has even done that as of today. In my mind, a great embarrassment as an Albertan and as a Canadian that we would have a government that deliberately refuses to sign something as fundamental as the rights of the child. Then I try to square that position with this Motion 509, that has come forward from a government backbencher, and frankly I can't square it. I'm not sure. Maybe one of the government members can advise me whether Alberta has yet signed that UN charter on the rights of the child or not. I don't believe it has. I stand to be corrected.

Not just to pick on this government, I remember years ago – and, Mr. Speaker, I'm thinking it might have been 20 years ago – that the parliaments of Canada came together in an all-party motion to end child poverty in Canada by the year 2000. Now, I may have the details incorrect, but I believe that at the beginning of the 1990s the Parliament of Canada made a commitment to end child poverty in this country by the year 2000. You know what? We never came close. In fact, the ink on those commitments was barely dry before the excuses and the deferrals and the backpedalling began.

We have a county where child poverty is all too common. The Member for Calgary-Currie talked about what a great city Calgary is, and it is, as long as you have some money. I'm still struck by the very convincing evidence brought forward by, of all sources, the TD Bank that not only does Calgary have the highest percentage of high-income people of any major city in Canada; it has the highest percentage of low-income people as well. Child poverty exists by the thousands in a city as wealthy as Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, as much as I can personally get excited and support this charter, I have to tell you that I'm reluctant to support it. I'm reluctant to support it because I'm reluctant to participate in hypocrisy. I think that's the kind of exercise that this Assembly is embarking on. We're full of fine words, we're full of good intentions, but we can't even find the money to feed hungry kids in our own schools. Come on, people. Where do you get the nerve to take a stand like this, to stand here in this Assembly talking about how wonderful this charter is, how much it means to you as a member from Lethbridge or wherever, yet stand aside when there is a call to provide money for school hunger programs and do nothing? What could be more hypocritical?

I don't want a specifically pick on the Member for Lethbridge-West. I think it's true of this government generally and perhaps some members of some of the opposition parties as well. I'm specifically thinking of the Wildrose Alliance. I've had conversations with one of their members who thinks that it's not the government's business to worry about hungry kids. Well, I think it is, and I stand here very uneasy about supporting something that I know is little more than an empty exercise in rhetoric and a bit of grandstanding hypocrisy. I'd rather at least be honest and vote the thing down because this government is not going to do a darn thing about it.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said here a number of times that if we don't have the resources, that if we don't put some money and muscle and commitment behind this charter, nothing is going to happen. I think it's pretty clear that that's the intention of this government, to sail this through, to go out tomorrow, give out the news releases, pat themselves on the back, "Oh, aren't we good citizens; we voted for this charter" and then walk away from the challenges. I predict that's what's going to happen. I hope all the members of this Assembly prove me wrong.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

I'll call on the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it was my privilege on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I would like to thank all my colleagues who participated in the debate on this motion. I'd like to conclude by making a few more remarks and observations.

Mr. Speaker, ensuring the healthy well-being of our children is one of the greatest challenges facing not only this government but governments right across Canada. As my hon. colleagues and I have discussed today, the government is certainly providing support to facilitate child development and deal with the challenge of improving its standards of life for all of Alberta's children. However, there can always be improvement when this issue is our future generations. I strongly believe that a key improvement we can make is to adopt Canada's child and youth health charter. Along with our already sound platform to sustain children's healthy development, the addition of this charter will further demonstrate our government's commitment to child and youth health. It is aligned quite well with our government's priorities, which will make adjustments and modifications to our current system a very smooth process.

Also, this motion will ensure improvements in areas of child health that may need more focus. Mr. Speaker, this can be yet another area in which Alberta excels past other jurisdictions and serves as a leading example for child well-being in Canada and, indeed, around the world. Our children deserve the best possible quality of life, and once again our government will do whatever is necessary to make that happen.

I would again like to thank all hon. colleagues for debating this motion in the Assembly today and urge all members to support the motion. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:47 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 26, 2010

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome. I would ask hon. members to remain standing after the brief prayer so that we may pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away.

Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Miss Wilma Helen Hunley

September 6, 1920, to October 22, 2010

The Speaker: The Honourable Wilma Helen Hunley, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 475 in the history of Alberta, and former Lieutenant Governor passed away on Friday, October 22, 2010.

Miss Hunley was first elected in the election held on August 30, 1971, and served two terms until March 13, 1979. During her years of service she represented the constituency of Rocky Mountain House for the Progressive Conservative Party. She served as minister without portfolio, chair of the Alberta Human Resources Research Council, and as Solicitor General as well as Minister of Social Services and Community Health. She was the first woman to be given full ministerial status in the Alberta government with her appointment as the first female Solicitor General of Alberta. She served on the select standing committees on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; Public Accounts; Public Affairs; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education; and the special committee to make a recommendation to the Assembly for the position of Ombudsman.

The Honourable Helen Hunley was Alberta's 12th, and first female, Lieutenant Governor, serving from January 22, 1985, to March 11, 1991. Helen Hunley was also the first woman mayor of Rocky Mountain House, here in Alberta. She served as a Lieutenant, Canadian Women's Army Corps, from 1941 to 1946 and served overseas in Great Britain from 1943 to 1945.

Helen Hunley received the Order of Canada, status of Officer, in 1992 and the Golden Jubilee Medal in 2002. She was Dame of the Most Venerable Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in 1985 and received an Honorary Doctorate of Laws degree from the University of Alberta in 1985. She also served as an Honorary Lieutenant Colonel of the 20th Field Regiment of the Royal Canadian Artillery, starting in 1991, based in Red Deer, Alberta.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of her family who shared the burdens of public office. Family members of Miss Hunley are with us here today in the Speaker's gallery. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I'd ask all to remember former hon. member and Alberta Lieutenant Governor Wilma Helen Hunley as you may have known her or known of her. Rest eternal grant unto her, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon her. Amen.

Albertans will have the opportunity to pay their respects to the Honourable W. Helen Hunley, former Lieutenant Governor and former Member of the Legislative Assembly. Books of condolence are available to the public at a memorial table in the rotunda of the Alberta Legislature Building in Edmonton as well as McDougall Centre in Calgary. These books are available for signing between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday until November 5, 2010.

Those who are unable to pay condolences at either of the memorial locations can do so online at www.gov.ab.ca. A memorial service will be held on Saturday, November 6, 2010, at 1:30 p.m. at the Christian Reformed Church, Rocky Mountain House, Alberta. This service will be open to the public.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery today are family members of the Honourable Helen Hunley, and I would like to introduce them, please. I would ask them to stand. Please hold your recognition until we've concluded them all: Mrs. Arlene Miller, niece; Mr. Ron Miller, nephew-in-law; Mr. Kent Liang, nephew-in-law; Mr. Jim Bowhay, nephew; Tonya Olson, great-niece; Tabatha Brouwer, great-niece; Kalyn Hunley, great-niece; Rory Kirkpatrick. I would ask all members to join me in welcoming the members of the family of Helen Hunley.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another bright young group of individuals visiting our Legislature today from my constituency. We have with us, again, another group of over 80 students, grade 6s from Innisfail middle school, who are seated in the members' gallery, and they're accompanied by their teachers and parent helpers. As I indicated yesterday and many times before, I think it is so important for Alberta children to visit the Legislature. As you know, they will be our leaders of tomorrow. The teachers that are with us are Mrs. Rosemarie Pierzchalski, Ms Jill Kenway, Ms Becky Burbank, Mr. Cody Pivert. Our parent helpers are Mrs. Cheryl Janssen, Mrs. Linnea Thompson, Mrs. Dixie Ouellette, Mrs. Jody Bilton, Mrs. Nicole Pillman, Mrs. Janette Charlton, Ms Brenda Beagle, Mr. Bruce Layden, Mrs. Stacey Greig, Mr. Victor Hagglund, Mrs. Julie Ramrattan, and Mrs. Kim Vandermeer. I would like them all to rise in both galleries and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 16 students from Strathmore high school. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Rob Pirie, and one of their parents, Tracey Rogers. They drove down from Strathmore this morning and will be driving back today. I also am very privileged to have them here today, and I think it's an excellent thing that they've come to visit us. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of individuals from the office of the Auditor General. These individuals are seated in your gallery. I would like to ask them to rise and remain standing as I call their names: Merwan Saher, Auditor General, and Assistant Auditors General Brad Ireland, Ed Ryan, Jeff Dumont, and Jeff Olson. I would like to ask the Assembly to greet them with the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce one of my bosses, a constituent of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. He has been there for quite a few years, along with his wife. He's sitting in the members' gallery. It's my pleasure to introduce through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Bill Nahirney, who is joining us in this Legislature for the first time in the history of Alberta. I'd ask him to rise.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Miss Wilma Helen Hunley

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to honour and pay tribute to an outstanding Canadian, an exceptional Albertan, and a wonderful and caring citizen of Rocky Mountain House, the late Helen Hunley.

The Honourable Helen Hunley was the eighth of 12 children. She was born in Acme, Alberta, in 1920 and moved to Rocky Mountain House in 1933. She knew the value of education, travelling some four miles one way from their homestead to the Crimson Lake school. She was raised to be a hard worker, hauling railway ties and mine props by horse-drawn sleigh to railway cars about eight miles away and then, later, working as a telephone operator. She had a tremendous memory for numbers, and she memorized all the telephone numbers in the town of Rocky Mountain House although she was always quick to add that there were only 55 of them.

She enlisted in the Canadian Women's Army Corps and served overseas from 1943 to 1945. Upon returning, she was a partsman and later became the owner-operator of an International Harvester dealership, the only woman that had a dealership in North America. She established and managed an insurance agency, Helen Hunley Agencies Limited, which still operates today.

Helen Hunley was always active in her community. She served as a town councillor and mayor of Rocky Mountain House and in 1971 was elected to the Alberta Legislature. During her time as an MLA she was the first woman to hold a cabinet portfolio, serving as Solicitor General and Minister of Social Services and Community Health. In 1986 Helen Hunley became Alberta's first woman Lieutenant Governor. Being the first female to hold this position, she did not have any robes or official uniform of her own. To make sure that she was properly attired for her position, then Speaker Dr. David Carter offered to pay for her robes at his own expense, an offer which she cherished.

Part of Helen's philosophy about life was that all of us owe rent for the space we occupy on Earth, and that rent is paid by public service. I remember the advice she gave me when I entered into politics, which was that a promise made is a debt unpaid. Helen Hunley worked all her life to try to repay that debt. Her life is an example to all Albertans of how one can be dedicated to the service and well-being of others.

Helen celebrated her 90th birthday on September 6 and passed away this past Friday, October 22. On behalf of the Members of the Legislative Assembly I would like to extend condolences to the family of the Honourable Helen Hunley and thank them for her years of selfless service. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Democracy in Alberta

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I salute the hon. member's comments about our former Lieutenant Governor.

I rise today as the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, the oil sands capital of the world, and as the newest member of the Wildrose caucus. It remains an honour and a privilege to serve Albertans and to be a strong voice for my constituents in the oil sands capital. My responsibility as their MLA is to bring their voices to this very Assembly because those voices are my bosses', and those voices all across Alberta will decide in just over a year who will be their voice as MLA, who will be their voice as the next Premier.

Alberta has a rich history when it comes to change and the seismic shifts that have taken place over a rich 100 years. At the forefront of that change are Alberta values: the value of hard work, the value of honesty and looking Albertans squarely in the eye, the value of fairness as we sit here with four members as Alberta's newest official party, and the value of respect, never forgetting who our bosses are. I hope all MLAs will never forget that. Finally, the value of direct democracy. Be it in the town halls or in coffee shops, this is the foundation of our great province. Albertans raise their families on these important values. They know that I will always be a strong voice for my constituents because it is my responsibility as their MLA to be their voice.

History can be an important teacher, as an independent MLA for the past year and now as a member of a 21st-century party with a 21st-century leader. Yes, history is a great teacher, and school is in, and class is about to get a whole lot more interesting for all of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Alberta Tourism Awards

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the strategic tourism marketing commission I'm proud to rise today to celebrate excellence in Alberta's tourism industry. Last night our Tourism, Parks and Recreation minister presented the 2010 Alberta tourism awards, or Altos, to organizations and individuals who have made outstanding contributions to our tourism sector. Every region of our fine province was represented in the list of finalists this year, and the winners showcased the talent and expertise in this $5 billion industry. From the Alberta Pond Hockey Association doubling the size of its annual tournament in a few short years to sustainable business practices at Mount Engadine Lodge that respect the environment, the Royal Tyrrell Museum, the Canadian Badlands, the Remington Carriage Museum, Tourism Red Deer, and visitcalgary.com, all of the 2010 winners have set the bar very high indeed.

Mr. Speaker, one individual in particular was recognized last night as one of Alberta's great tourism ambassadors, Mr. LaVerne Erickson. Mr. Erickson is the founder of the Rosebud School of the Arts and the founder of two signature Alberta attractions, the award-winning Rosebud Theatre and Canadian Badlands Passion Play. And that's just the tip of the iceberg.

I ask all members of the Assembly to join me now in congratulating LaVerne Erickson and all of the 2010 Alberta tourism award recipients and finalists for a job very well done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

National Autism Awareness Month

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and recognize October as National Autism Awareness Month. Autism is a condition that affects the normal development of the brain, and it can have significant impacts on human behaviour. Children with autism suffer from a wide range of symptoms ranging from lack of speech to difficulty interacting with others.

Mr. Speaker, autism is a fairly common condition, and it is estimated that 1 out of every 90 kids have some form of this disorder. The month of October gives us the opportunity to reflect on the challenges faced by those dealing with autism as well as to recognize those organizations and individuals that have done so much to support families affected by this condition.

Mr. Speaker, the Maier centre for autism in west Edmonton will be a world-class autism support facility. Much of the funding for this facility has come from community donors. One of them is my constituent, Mr. Klaus Maier, whom the facility is named after and who donated not only the land for the facility but also $1 million towards the project. I'm very pleased that our government has recognized the invaluable role of the Maier centre and has recently presented a 1 and a half million dollar grant to assist with its development.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very truly proud to live in a province where people are so generous and committed to helping those in need. On this day I would like to ask all the members of this House to recognize the challenges that families with autism face and to consider: what can we do to enhance the quality of the lives of families affected by autism?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Waterfowl Deaths in Oil Sands Tailings Pond

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province is facing a crisis of leadership. This administration has failed to protect the environment or demonstrate leadership in our energy industry since today we heard about a second, undetermined as yet, loss of ducks in our tailings ponds. I'm at a loss to explain the Environment minister's confusion and frustration over how this could happen when these are built directly in migratory bird patterns. To the Premier: will the Premier confirm that the estimated number of ducks killed last night is over a thousand?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the event is being investigated as we speak. I'd say that this is sad and disappointing in light of the conclusion of the court proceedings and the judge's decision last week, but we will update the House and all Albertans on the progress of the investigation and the findings of that investigation.

Dr. Swann: Well, since it's only a few days since that sentence was handed down in a similar case, will the Premier finally use common sense and state publicly now that he will strengthen regulations to protect ducks and other wildlife in relation to our tailings ponds?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the regulations are there. Obviously, we not only enforce them, but we, with the federal government, took Syncrude to court. A decision has been made by the judge. It's both a fine and money invested in further research and also deterrence.

Unfortunately, like I said, it just happened last week, and now we have this other incident, which not only is frustrating, you know; it makes one angry. On the other hand, let's get the full detail of the investigation, and then, as I said, we will make that known to the House.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier be holding the Minister of Environment responsible for the repeat of the death of waterfowl at this pond and, if necessary, call for his resignation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, let's be just a bit more pragmatic here. Let's see what the investigation brings forward. Rules are rules, and we're there not only to make the rules but also to enforce them. There are many rules with respect to the environment. For any company that does not live up to the rules, we will enforce the legislation, but let's first find out what the investigation will bring.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Villa Caritas Long-term Care Facility

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Internal documents from Alberta Health Services show that the plan to convert Villa Caritas, a long-term care facility in Edmonton, into a psychogeriatric facility escalated from $12 million to $51 million. This change actually reduced long-term care beds in Edmonton by 150. To the Premier: why did the cost of this project increase to $51 million, 400 per cent, in just over a year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to Villa Caritas and the discussion that occurred as a result of not only the resident psychiatrists but also staff at Alberta Hospital, Covenant Health had made some changes reflecting the needs of the residents that were transferred. But I will say that I will defend any of the additional changes to the living accommodations for our seniors. These are individuals with some mental health issues. They lived in multiple-person wards. They will now have individual beds, individual bedrooms. They will have a nice, large green area, and they will have all of the services available in a much kinder setting. You can't just add more beds without putting more investment in it and bringing it up to the 2010 standard.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, $51.4 million could have funded 500 nurses for a year while this decision actually reduced long-term care beds in Edmonton. Is that your idea of good management, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the investment was very worth while in terms of improving the quality of life for seniors that were in the Alberta Hospital facility, and I will stand upon that statement. It's about time we started thinking about the quality of life in those institutions rather than bringing this forward and talking about how much it costs. Of course it costs. We're spending about $7 billion in infrastructure, and we're going to continue to do that because that is what improves the quality of life for all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this is about responsible use of the public purse in the long-term best interests of Albertans. Villa Caritas could have taken 150 people out of acute care and eased the emergency room crowding in Alberta. Does this Premier see this as an outrage, as most Albertans see it? Do you see how outraged we are at this decision, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to speak to the family members of those individuals that were for a large portion of their time in Alberta Hospital and now are in new facilities in Villa Caritas. Talk to the family members, and then come back to this House and report directly what the family members said in terms of the improvement of quality of life and, most importantly, improvement of services.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since doctors blew the whistle on unacceptable conditions in Alberta's emergency rooms, this government has been practising management by panic. A plan for new beds was rolled out before they even had nurses to staff them. Sixty-eight of the total 79 RN positions advertised for Calgary by Alberta Health Services were posted by the minister just last week. To the Premier: why has the Premier ignored the problem until doctors in emergency rooms finally risked their jobs to speak out and protect their patients?

Mr. Stelmach: The minister has had consultations with all physicians, as I said yesterday, from eye doctors to bone and joint physicians, in improving access in those particular areas. He's also had discussions with emergency docs. He'll have one again today with the emergency physicians to work together – AHS, Alberta Health and Wellness, and the physicians and nurses, I may add, as well – to make sure that we continue with the plan to improve access to emergency rooms and free up more beds for those that can be admitted to our hospitals.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's the same in Edmonton. Forty-six out of 75 RN positions advertised were posted just this past week. How does the Premier defend this?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, because we need more nurses. That's why it's posted.

Dr. Swann: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, he doesn't get it. We're talking about two years of underfunded emergency and long-term care, and they're lurching to solutions this past week. An Alberta Liberal government would ensure there were sufficient staff and funds immediately available to open more beds before making promises – before making promises – that take months to fulfill. Why has the Premier not acted responsibly and taken this course of action over the past two years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have acted responsibly. We not only paid off the accumulated deficit for Alberta Health Services; we also topped up the amount of funding to Alberta Health Services, reflecting what they told us would be the increase in needs, plus to that we added another 6 per cent. There'll be another 6 per cent added to this year's budget and 6 per cent after that plus 4 and a half and 4 and a half further down the road. So that's five years of committed funding. That is the best funding commitment there is in the country of Canada, and it speaks very well for the publicly funded health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this government shamefully shut down an emergency debate on the crisis state of our emergency rooms in Alberta. Albertans we have heard from are incensed that this government stonewalled this debate given the litany of horror stories that they have heard. There are pregnant women in triage and seniors with broken hips waiting hours and hours for care. To the Premier: will he explain why he directed his MLAs and his minister of health to deny Albertans this critical debate?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday in the House during question period, plans are in place to take away a lot of the pressure in the emergency room service: adding additional long-term care beds, adding additional continuing care beds, and increasing the number of staff. We have, you know, at this particular time good co-operation with the physicians and nurses. The nurses came to the table earlier this year with a contract that's going to help us meet the challenges. I do commend the nurses' union for that. I know the doctors are continuing to negotiate with the government, and we're going to continue to work together to improve the performance of our health care system.

Mr. Hinman: With due respect to the Premier, he didn't answer the question. Given the hundreds of examples of emergency room horror stories and the escalating issues over the last two and a half years with nothing being addressed, why did he and the health minister say no to this important debate yesterday in the House?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, nobody said no. This is a practice in the House. They made a motion that it's an emergency; we said that it's not an emergency. We're continuing to work with the health care professionals to make sure that we're constantly improving the system. Chatting about it and debating about it here in this particular Assembly is not going to give us more beds, it's not going to get more nurses working, nor is it going to attract more physicians to the province. That's the plan we have, and we're tackling it right now.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they've had two and a half years to address it. They didn't, and it's in an emergency state now.

I see they have no good answers, so let's try something else. Given that these horror stories were only from one emergency ward in Alberta, will the Premier show some leadership, do the right thing, and release the full list of suboptimal outcomes for every Alberta hospital so Albertans have a real, full picture of the crisis that exists in this province? Release the lists.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that yesterday there was a debate, and the decision was made. There is a provision in the standing orders that if there are sufficient members to rise in the House, then they can call a vote. Guess what? There wasn't the sufficient prerequisite number of members in the House to do the vote.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a letter to emergency room doctors dated February 23, 2008, the Premier assured them that more nurses and other medical staff will be hired and trained, yet just one year later, with the Premier's support, Alberta Health Services paid $24 million to buy out 448 nurses and imposed a hiring freeze. Today the government again says that staff shortages need to be overcome before we can fix the emergency room crisis. When will the Premier get off this merry-go-round of incompetence and put a stop to the unnecessary suffering of critically ill people in emergency rooms around the province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we have added more money, considerably more money, into the system. We're hiring more and more people every day, and that's not only nurses but other health care professionals. Professions are coming together and forming partnerships through the primary care networks. As the minister said yesterday, not necessarily everyone needs a doctor every day, but they may need a dietitian; they may need a respiratory therapist; they may need a physiotherapist. That is improving the efficiency of the system. I commend the people in health services for coming together with government and working towards a common goal, and that is constantly improving the system.

Mr. Mason: Constantly improving the system? Given that on March 23, 2009, Calgary hospital officials warned that the median wait time for emergency room patients who needed a hospital bed had grown to 16.6 hours and given that the government ignored the warning and given that the problem has continued to worsen since then, will the Premier admit that the government's failure to act on the emergency room crisis has cost lives and imposed great and unnecessary suffering on critically ill patients?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, nobody wants to wait in an emergency room. Everybody wants to be admitted as quickly as possible if the need is there for admission. Some people in emergency, obviously, are there because we do need more either primary care networks or doctors in communities to deal with some of the matters immediately. On the other hand, there is improvement, and there will be continued improvement in this particular area. We have added more continuing care beds to the system. We will continue to add more. Presently we're adding about 2,000 seniors to the seniors' list, to the demographics of this province. You know, in just a year that'll be 24,000 people. That's just showing how quickly our population is aging, and that's how quickly the system has to move forward.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if it wasn't so tragic, it would be hilarious. The Premier has to take responsibility for this scandal. Why does the Premier refuse to own up to his government's failure to take this crisis seriously two and a half years ago? Why won't he take responsibility?

Mr. Stelmach: I will take responsibility for additional funding, especially the five-year commitment, and responsibility for working with all of the health care professionals, working towards agreements that will ensure that we have stability in the system and, most importantly, the good health system that we have today. It needs some improvement, but I can tell you that our number one goal is to make sure that it is sustainable for future generations. What a lot of those people are talking about will never get us there to the next generation so that our youth in this province can enjoy the same good system we have today.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Additional Beds to Relieve Emergency Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this Premier has a strange way of measuring improvements in the health care system. I hope he can explain it to Albertans better than he has today. Alberta's health care system is run based on political need, not on the needs of its people. Emergency room overcrowding has been ignored for two years. The Premier stated yesterday that Alberta Health Services will open new acute-care beds in both Calgary and Edmonton within their current budget. To the Premier: if Alberta Health Services could open these beds with their current budgets, why did it take brave doctors and public outcry before the government acted last week?

Mr. Stelmach: The Alberta Health Services Board had plans in place. They're continuing to add more long-term care beds and continuing care facilities within the budget. Within the budget. Like I said before, not only did we pay off the accumulated deficit; we topped up the budget to what they thought would be reflecting the needs of Albertans plus another 6 per cent over and above that, and that is the budget they're working with. I believe there's enough there to sustain the system and grow it and meet the growing demands.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, every Albertan knows that the announcement made last week was made on the fly. That means the money to open the beds will have to come from somewhere. What's going to be cut, Mr. Premier, to allow these beds to open?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the same question was asked by the same member yesterday. I said that there won't be any cuts; there's additional money on the table. That's why we paid off the deficit, added the dollars plus 6 per cent over and above. There is enough money in the system. Albertans know that there is enough money in the system. All they're wanting is greater efficiencies and better co-operation amongst all those that deliver the services.

Dr. Swann: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans want and what the opposition is looking for is some transparency. What money is being spent to open these beds? It wasn't listed in the budget. What money are we talking about, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that every bed that opens in this province is not going to be identified in a budget document. There is a large amount of money going to Alberta Health Services. They take that money, and they make the best decisions for Albertans. To say that we're going to go and add every bed is nonsense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Protection of Landowner Rights

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans deeply treasure their land, and they take its stewardship very seriously. Landowners in my constituency have a lot of questions about recent legislation and how it will impact them and their property. My questions for the Minister of Infrastructure are about the former Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. Can the minister reassure my constituents that there were essential reasons for bringing this legislation forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right. Landowners have a very strong connection to the land. As our province continues to grow, it is critical that we protect our land and our rural way of life for our children and grandchildren. That is why Albertans have asked us to plan for future development, to consult well in advance of any projects, to protect sensitive areas, to use transportation and utility corridors where they make sense, and to minimize the overall impact.

The Speaker: And we'll get to the answer right away.
The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have been advised that Bill 19 extinguishes their landowner rights. Can the minister tell us what legal protections are in place for landowners under Bill 19?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this legislation is entirely about the protection of landowners. It does not extinguish any existing rights. In fact, in addition it requires government to consult with landowners if the land might be used for future large-scale projects. It gives landowners the option to continue to work their land before the project is built. If they would rather sell the land, the government is required to buy it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. If through this act land owned by one of my constituents is designated for a long-term transportation project, will the government freeze or prevent development on that land?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a farmer I strongly believe that landowners need the freedom to work their land. The legislation does allow that. If a farmer wants to build a barn or wants to build a shed, he or she certainly can. It is true that major industrial development could not go ahead on the site of a future highway. This only makes sense, Mr. Speaker. We must protect rural landowners as development occurs into the future. To do that, Albertans have asked us to plan . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:10 Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is in the process of making a decision regarding the sale of land for a potato farm without public input. We have land swaps and apparent decisions regarding water allocation taking place without the involvement or knowledge of the public. The minister has stated that there's nothing secretive about the deal, so to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: where are the consultation notes from the meetings with municipalities and individuals in the area, and will they ever be made public?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the matter of meetings that are attended by ministers of the Crown and representatives from municipalities, other individuals in the province of Alberta, representatives of associations across the province, I believe that there's an understanding that has been in place for an awfully long time that that information is privileged information. The member opposite may very well be right that notes from my meetings with people may not ever become public information.

Ms Pastoor: The minister stated yesterday, "God Himself may well provide the water." Now, I haven't spoken to God lately, but my understanding is that he's counting on us to conserve it. Will there be a public water assessment report before you approve this deal?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would suggest perhaps the member take the opportunity to do just that and have a little conversation.

But with respect to what we're dealing with here today, we have in front of us as a government a proposal – a proposal – that has been brought forward to my department with respect to some public land that the proponent would like to develop. That's the sum total of what we're dealing with today.

Ms Pastoor: Do we know how many acres of tax recovery land is included in this proposed purchase?

Mr. Knight: Again, Mr. Speaker, there's a proposal. It covers approximately 16,300 acres of land in south-central Alberta. The situation as to how this land breaks down on an acreage basis: again, I'm afraid I cannot stand here today and say that I understand acre by acre how this land breaks down, which pieces of it may or may not have been recovered or retrieved by the government at some point in tax recovery; some of it was.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Transmission Line Compensation

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the past few weeks I have attended a number of constituent meetings concerning the new proposed high-voltage DC power lines. My constituents are concerned with many issues related to this line. One of the main issues is the amount of compensation being paid to landowners for access to and use of their land. My question is to the Minister of Energy. How are the compensation rates for access and disturbance established for transmission lines?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it needs to be stated that the Alberta Utilities Commission will hold a public hearing on the transmission lines relative to the siting of such lines. The proponents of those transmission towers along with the landowners will negotiate a compensation, and if there is no agreement reached, it goes to the Surface Rights Board. I think at this particular stage it's important to point out as well that the compensation is attempted to be a fair balance between the landowner and the consumer that ultimately pays the cost of those.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and last question is again to the same minister, and that is: can the government, through regulation, set a minimum value for land based on industrial values rather than agricultural values?

Mr. Liepert: Well, that's an interesting concept, Mr. Speaker, because when many of these regulations were put into place, the province had not developed to the point where it is today. One of the reasons why the upgrade to the transmission system is required is because of the significant industrial development that's taken place in Alberta over the past 40 to 50 years. The concept of valuing it at an industrial base is something I'd be interested in discussing with my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Manufacturing Outsourcing for Kearl Lake Project

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Kearl Lake oil sands project is being supplied with over 200 large steel modules from a South Korean metal fabrication firm. This deal is worth over $250 million. In a letter dated June 2, 2010, to the Official Opposition the Minister of Transportation writes, "Alberta Transportation has been working with Imperial Oil on this project for some time." My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Why was the government working with Imperial Oil on this project when the steel fabrication industry in this province and the workers formerly employed in it were idle?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, whenever we have people come to us and say that they have products that have to be moved, then we have to work with them on how they're going to get them there.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why did the department not say, "If we are giving the tax concessions and the royalty breaks here in Alberta, this work should be done here in this province, not transported across the Pacific Ocean, up to Lewiston, Idaho, and then from there trucked to Fort McMurray"? Create jobs here in this province.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have to be competitive. We try everything. We can create jobs in this province, but I'm not going to be a dictator and tell people where they have to buy the product. I just have to make sure they can get the products to where they need them to do their business in Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the minister of finance. Given that Imperial Oil plans to spend over $40 million to improve the bridges and the roads in Montana, will that $40 million tab for those infrastructure improvements be written off their royalty bill here in this province?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the hon. member was opposed to NAFTA and the free trade agreement in the 1980s, like his Liberal counterparts. The oil sands in this province are built on free trade, and until that party gets that message, they're going to sit in opposition.

I think my hon. colleague would also like to say something.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to briefly supplement the answer to this question because this particular member has raised this issue in the past in this House. The time when that particular contract was let was back in the boom times in Alberta. A contract needed to be let by Imperial for the construction of these vessels, and it was not able to be met in this province.

The Speaker: We'll come back to this, I'm sure, at another point in time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Villa Caritas Long-term Care Facility

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I met with two patients from Alberta Hospital who were concerned with overcrowding. We have recently heard about long-term care patients in hospital beds who are blocking up ERs in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Wouldn't this problem have been avoided if Villa Caritas had remained a long-term care centre as was originally proposed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. I'm not one who likes to speculate at all on what-if scenarios. What I can tell you, though, is that we have done a lot, and I've announced a lot of that, and so has Alberta Health Services. Issues that are perplexing the emergency room departments that relate to continuing care are being addressed and dealt with. We have opened more than 800 continuing care spaces that are new since April, and there are more on the way between now and the end of December, for example.

Mr. Sandhu: Again to the same minister: what's being done to address overcrowding issues in the adult mental health program at Alberta Hospital Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services, which is responsible for the general management of Alberta Hospital Edmonton, does have protocols in place that deal with overcrowding or the fluctuations of bed needs. For example, they are looking at how to accommodate these people more quickly into the new Villa Caritas space. At the same time, let's keep in mind that about a year ago there were 20 bed vacancies at Alberta Hospital Edmonton, I'm told.

Also, I'll just conclude by saying that we have a province-wide mental health strategy that is coming forward very quickly, and I'll have that in a matter of months.

Mr. Sandhu: My final question is to the same minister. Are additional mental health beds being added to the health system any time soon?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, the short answer, I'm happy to say, is yes. In fact, the original projection for 106 of these mental health beds at the Villa Caritas has been increased by 44, so there will be almost immediately now an additional 44 mental health beds specifically to help out with the crowding situation that was alluded to earlier at Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Those new beds will go to the Villa Caritas site, a state-of-the-art facility, by the way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in the Calgary Herald it was reported that emergency room waits in Calgary hospitals had increased 54 per cent since last year. That is on average 14 to 20 hours longer than a year earlier. This is the track record of this minister of health's superefficient Alberta health superboard. To the minister of health. The superboard experiment has failed. When will this minister disband the superboard and return control of our emergency rooms to the doctors and front-line staff, who actually know what the needs are?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the doctors and the nurses and so many other administrators are an integral part of the system. They provide input very regularly. I'm going to get a lot of that input tonight, in fact, and I got some of it just a couple of hours ago when I dropped in at the Royal Alex hospital and had a visit and a chat there. I learned about some exciting new programs that they are bringing on stream. Those are all at the behest and in many cases at the direct leadership resulting from Alberta Health Services, who are working very hard to address some of these difficulties that have been flagged recently.

Mr. Anderson: We need less chatting – that’s for sure – and more doing.

Given the list released by our caucus yesterday of 322 emergency room horror stories over the past year in just one hospital, including men having strokes and heart attacks while waiting hours for a bed and pregnant women having cervical examinations in an open triage, when will the minister accept the fact that the superboard experiment has failed? It’s not working, Minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you what we’re not going to do: go back to having 300 health authorities out there, like was the case, perhaps, in some jurisdictions. I can tell you that we’re not going to go back to having hundreds of payroll departments or dozens of CEOs. We’ve got one centralized system now that is in its infancy still. Of course, there are some bumps and bruises and blemishes to be experienced along the way, but improvements are there, and cost efficiencies are there. Better health service access is coming, and it’s all part of this five-year funding plan that was just announced a few months ago. It’s working. It just takes a little time to take shape.

Mr. Anderson: You call a 54 per cent increase in emergency wait times more efficient? Serious? Mr. Speaker, is this minister honestly trying to tell Albertans that the extra 14 to 20 hours of waiting that each Albertan is facing in our emergency rooms today is somehow a justifiable result for the superboard’s first year? Honestly, is that what you’re saying, that it’s efficient enough?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I’m trying to explain to this hon. member is that we have for the first time in Canadian history a five-year funding plan that allows for a 6 per cent increase in each of the first three years, 4.5 per cent increases in years 4 and 5. That 6 per cent is what’s necessary to fix some of the kinds of problems that have been referred to. Had people followed what the Wildrose Alliance Party is talking about, they would have only seen a 3.5 per cent increase because that’s what they released the day after our budget. You tell me how that’s going to fix the problem.

Online Gaming

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Gaming stated in August that it intends to ante up and take a seat at the virtual table to provide sanctioned online gaming. B.C.’s Housing and Social Development minister stated unequivocally that online gambling will increase rates of addiction. To the Solicitor General: since this government dismantled AADAC last year, how are you planning to deal with this influx of gambling addicts?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member would know, we have a number of programs that provide services to problem gamblers. I think, first and foremost, I need to ensure that the hon. member is aware that the province of Alberta is not going to venture into the arena of online gaming.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I guess I’ll follow up that question again. We are not going into online gaming here as they have done in B.C.?

Mr. Oberle: I think that’s what I just said, Mr. Speaker. We have no plans at the moment to venture into the arena of online gaming. We will, as we always have, monitor developments in that arena, but we do not intend to proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Dual High School and University Enrolment

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2009 this Legislature passed my Motion 508 urging the government to develop programs to offer real-world learning opportunities like dual enrolment, which is enrolment in postsecondary courses while in high school. My questions are to the Minister of Education. What has your ministry done to implement recommendations made by Motion 508, specifically postsecondary instruction while in high school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of circumstances around the province which would provide those sorts of opportunities to students, and in fact they’ve proven to be very successful and very good projects. The paving health pathways initiatives, a three-year pilot specifically supported by $10 million in funding, resulted in dual enrolment opportunities for students in a number of jurisdictions in the health field specifically. Students that are interested in pursuing careers in health care are accessing colleges and universities in their jurisdictions to attain some credits towards their degrees while they’re still, of course, in high school. We have a number of campuses, for example, which I can go on and mention a little later.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that dual enrolment has been shown to increase overall graduation rates for even high-risk students, will the minister commit to extending programs like these to more Alberta high schools?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we’re encouraging school boards right across the province to look at programs that I would call programs of engagement; in other words, ways to help students with their transition not only throughout their K to 12 school career but transition to postsecondary.

As I was going to say, in Cold Lake, for example, the Cold Lake high school is co-located with Portage College; in Rocky Mountain House Red Deer College is co-located with the high school there; in Olds the high school is co-located with the college, opportunities there for students to avail themselves of postsecondary opportunities while they’re in high school, and it’s very successful in those circumstances. We’d look for more opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you, Mr. Minister. I’m glad they’re successful in those circumstances. The point is to make those circumstances available everywhere. Would you commit to starting such programs in, let’s say, five schools in the Calgary area with the lowest high school graduation rates in an effort to increase those high school graduation rates?

Mr. Hancock: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, local programming in Calgary high schools would be something that the Calgary board of education or the Calgary separate board would be responsible to do, but we’re certainly collaborating with school boards, encouraging school boards to look at these sorts of opportunities, find better ways to do them. Not every school can be co-located on a college campus or a university campus, but there are ways to integrate those programs into the high school programs and allow students to take those courses ahead of time or at the same time as their high school courses, and it's proven to be successful in those places that have used it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Special-needs Education

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents, students, and teachers have been anxiously waiting for a better way to provide special education in Alberta, but the government's review of special needs has been two years in the making with another year to go. Meanwhile special-needs grants have been frozen, parents are facing the same delays getting supports for their kids, and the government's plans are at best unclear. To the Minister of Education: what is the minister going to do to help families that are having trouble accessing special services for their children now?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, any parent that has a child with special needs now should be working with their school boards and with their schools to get access to the services that they need. If they have problems doing that, of course, they have the opportunity to call our office, and we'll assist them in working with their school boards to make sure that those opportunities are there. There's no excuse for students who are entrusted to a school board to not have access to the programming they need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This is a case of not passing the buck to the school board so they could actually initiate the plans. Under his plan the minister says that separate classes will stay available for students with severe disabilities, but without some kind of coding system what is to prevent these students from being shuffled into regular classrooms without the necessary support to ensure their successful inclusion?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, inclusion is not about every child being in any classroom; it's about finding the appropriate educational opportunity for each child included in the educational system. That means that the parents and the teachers, the educators, the principals, the health support, and the support staff have to work together collaboratively to design the best educational program for that child. In some cases it will be complete inclusion in a classroom. In some cases it'll be a partial inclusion in classrooms and partial special programming. Some parents will choose or perhaps the circumstances are such that a child needs separate programming.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Inclusion without the necessary aids to support teachers is not working and will not work. With districts attempting to integrate classrooms according to the minister's directives, where are the extra resources for teacher support and training that the government has been promising but has failed to deliver?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't directed school boards to include students in classrooms. That's just a fallacy. What we have done is a very careful program of redesign of special education programming in this province, working with stakeholders, working with parents, with school boards, with teachers, so that we can do a number of things. One is to make sure that teachers are well equipped to deal with the students that come into their classrooms. One is to make sure that they're supported by support staff that work with them as learning coaches and in other capacities to assist. It's not about coding and pigeonholing a child and labelling a child; it's about the learning needs of the child and supporting those learning needs. We're in the process. We'll get there.

Education Consultation

Ms Woo-Paw: My questions are also to the Minister of Education. On June 11 I was honoured to attend the announcement made by the ministers of Education, Health and Wellness, and Children and Youth Services on the Setting the Direction Framework: Government of Alberta Response, which addressed how government would work together to support children and youth through the implementation of an inclusive education system. I know this will take some time, but Albertans have some questions still. The vision of the setting the direction framework is for an inclusive education system. Does this mean that every student will be in every classroom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, an important question from Calgary-Varsity, supplemented by the question from my hon. colleague, because setting the direction is a very important process. It's not about being speedy; it's about getting the process right and doing it well. In doing that, there are a number of important things that we need to do. First of all, an inclusive education system in Alberta is a way of thinking and acting that demonstrates universal acceptance of and belonging for all students. It's a value-based approach, and the starting point for this should be the child's home, school, community. It's not an assumption that every child can be in every classroom. It goes beyond that, and it talks to what the capacities are that we need.

Ms Woo-Paw: So how are you and your colleagues beginning to implement the proposed recommendations resulting from this framework?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have a very important cross-ministry committee that's led by Dianne McConnell in our department, working with Health and with Children and Youth Services to make sure that our ministry departments are aligned in the service delivery because a lot of supporting students with special needs is making sure that we use most effectively the health resources we have and the support resources we have. That's first and foremost. Secondly, it's about putting in place programming so that teachers can have access to the skills that they need for the children that they have in their classroom. There are a number of other projects that are ongoing.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, specifically for teachers what are some of the short-term priorities that Education is focusing on?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of items in that area. I think there are 13 specific short-term items that we need to work on. One is making sure that we have professional development for teachers so that they can supplement their professional capacity to deal with the students who come into their care. One is setting up support resources like learning coaches and collaborative coaches to work with the schools and with the school boards to make sure that they identify the learning needs of the children and identify the support resources that those children need. A third is to work on reallocating the support resources so that they're available on a more effective basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Funding for Training

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Employment and Immigration described a software failure as merely an unfortunate situation that was quickly handled. This unfortunate situation, however, threatened thousands of students who ended up going to food banks, facing evictions from their homes, not able to afford their tuitions and to continue on with their education. Alberta Works did not work. Those on the front lines found the response from the minister's department uncaring, unco-ordinated, and inefficient. To the minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister can proceed now.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that fabulous question. Well, obviously, the member has difficulty with my using the term "unfortunate." I cannot think of a better term. I know that member would probably like me to use the word "tragic," and I imagine that for some individuals who found themselves in financial dire straits, it was tragic. We had a plan in place. Emergency cheques were issued to individuals who needed emergency services, and they can rely on that plan to be in place if such an event was to ever occur in the future.

Mr. Chase: That was cold comfort to the students at Bow Valley College that I spoke to.

If the same minister is so confident in his department's handling of the situation, will he table all documents in the House related to the transition to the new software system so that the public can see what contingency plans were in place? It was a screw-up. How are you going to fix it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my priority is to address the needs of Albertans. We found ourselves with a cohort of Albertans who obviously did not receive funding. A plan was put in place. Funding is being issued. Emergency funding has been issued. If the opposition is more interested in auditing our software program, they can have the pleasure of doing that, but we will be focusing on Albertans who need help.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. That's cold comfort for the students who are waiting three and a half months to get the cheques.

My final question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. As the ministry responsible for information technology leadership across government, will the minister investigate the software failure in Employment and Immigration to make sure this never happens again because it's the same program for AISH and other special-needs programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, commenting on this unfortunate incident with respect to the students and the challenges that the families are facing, as Minister of Service Alberta we take a lot of pride in the technology and the information we protect to make sure that Albertans are served well on a day-to-day basis. That is something we're working on with Employment and Immigration, with the minister, to ensure that we can move forward and learn from this as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents have been following the price of natural gas closely over the last few months. On June 7 the price was $4.84 per gigajoule, and today it's only $3.39 per gigajoule. This is good news for our heating bills but is not so good news for government revenue. The minister has changed the fiscal forecast to $3.75 per gigajoule. I'm just wondering if this is a change that the minister sees for the long term, or is it just a short-term change?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the change in the prices for natural gas can be summed up in one word: it's called U.S. shale gas. For the past couple of decades the United States had less and less gas of their own. They were imbalanced between supply and demand. They depended upon imports from the rest of the world but primarily western Canada and particularly Alberta. With the advent of shale gas, which is the result of new technology, horizontal drilling and multiple fracking has unlocked trillions of new cubic feet of gas. That's not good news for producers in the western Canada sedimentary basin.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So what do sustained low natural gas prices mean for the overall financial picture of the government's revenue?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's not a good-news story. Just to give you an example from my tenure here, from 2005, when I first became a member, to 2008 the natural resource revenues to this government averaged in the vicinity of $12 billion. Starting last year, this year, next year, post shale gas if you like, the average revenues to the government of Alberta will be in the vicinity of an average of $8 billion. So there's suddenly a $4 billion gap between what existed under the old regime and the new regime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister. Obviously, lots of talk today about health care and education. Albertans have relied on this robust revenue source in the past to fund these programs. What is the minister doing to replace this loss due to natural gas prices so that Albertans can continue to enjoy the same high-quality health care and education they have in the past?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there are some good-news stories on the revenue front. There's lots of shale gas in western Canada and in Alberta that will be produced using the new technology as well. Also, this new technology of horizontal drilling and multiple fracking is allowing the redrilling of old fields, Cardium and other fields like that, which were no longer producing at economical rates, but the combination of horizontal drilling and multiple fracking is allowing reaccess of that. Then, of course, there's the dramatic growth in bitumen production from the oil sands that will gradually fill that hole.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Eighteen members were recognized. There were 104 questions and responses.

Please join me in congratulating the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who is celebrating an anniversary today, a rather young anniversary, I might add, but an anniversary nonetheless.

In 30 seconds from now we'll go back to the Routine with two additional members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Entrepreneurial Award

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to advise the members of this Assembly today about a special honour earned by the bold and innovative entrepreneurs of Grande Prairie. Their talents and efforts have resulted in Grande Prairie being named Canada's most entrepreneurial city by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Grande Prairie, in particular, earned top scores for the number of self-employed people, or entrepreneurs, in the city. Whether it's in agriculture, forest industries, oil and gas, mining, or high tech, entrepreneurial opportunities abound in Grande Prairie. While Grande Prairie is the top-ranked city, I'm also happy to tell you that it's joined by four other Alberta cities in the top 10.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business makes its rankings based on three categories: presence, perspective, and policy. Policy is, of course, the category where our government's actions have an impact. Mr. Speaker, our government's Competitiveness Act, our action plan for Bringing Technology to Market, and our Campus Alberta and Alberta Innovates systems all work together to support an innovative and responsive economy in Grande Prairie and throughout our province.

For example, Mr. Speaker, Grande Prairie entrepreneurs have earned a number of innovation vouchers from Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures to commercialize their unique technology-based products and services. The Grande Prairie Centre for Research & Innovation reports that the Mighty Peace region is responsible for many of the patent inquiries made in Alberta last year. The city of Grande Prairie has adopted the BizPaL system to make it easier for businesses to start. It's obvious that bold initiatives, backed with effective programs, policies, and an entrepreneurial business climate, create an opportunity that benefits all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating the entrepreneurs of Grande Prairie and all of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Education for Special-needs Children

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Official Opposition critic for Children and Youth Services as well as Education and Advanced Education and Technology I've been contacted by families from across the province that have extreme difficulty in accessing services. As just one example, Roseanne Ledingham, a tireless advocate for her daughter Ashley, has been trying since the last school term to ensure an effective transition for Ashley in moving from elementary school, in which she progressed with supports that included speech-language therapy, resource teachers, and an IPP, to junior high.

Ashley is a child with severe and complex needs. The June 2010 report for her learning team IPP included the old form of coding of 44, 58, and 57: severe physical or medical disability, mild and moderate physical or medical disability, and severe language delay. AHS school speech-language services report that Ashley has a history of significant medical and learning problems, delays in her fine motor skills, expressive, and receptive language skills, ADHD, FASD, severe behavioural disturbance, anxiety syndromes, partial complex seizure disorder, sleeping disorders, allergies, and asthma.

There is a cross-ministry policy framework for children and youth with special needs and complex needs and their families. It's an excellent concept that unfortunately appears to be collecting dust on shelves. There was undoubtedly funding invested in consultations, task force meetings, et cetera, and the design and production of the actual documents. Yet Ashley's mother and advocate, Roseanne, had never heard of it until yesterday. Ashley is now 12 years old. She is not receiving the necessary aid in the classroom, has no IPP, and has been denied funding for speech-language therapy. Roseanne's respite allowance was cut to one hour a week.

Premier, your government can help Albertans now. This policy framework needs to have the actual policy developed. It has to be resourced, staffed, implemented, and supported by the government now.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 735 Albertans from around the province who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to ban the motocross raceway development within the current Blue Rapids Provincial Recreation Area boundaries as the addition of a raceway would interfere with public peace, current and future residents of the area, and the environment.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of the introduction of Bill 26, Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and chair of the Leg. Offices Committee.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act I'd like to table five copies of the report by the Auditor General entitled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, October 2010.

As well, I'd like to table five copies of the report by the Auditor General entitled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta: Results

Analysis, Financial Statements, and Other Performance Information for the Year Ended March 31, 2010. Copies of these two reports are being distributed to all members today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, and they both relate to my questions earlier today. The first is a letter that I received on behalf of the Official Opposition, dated June 2, 2010, from the Minister of Transportation, and I quoted this letter earlier regarding the Kearl oil sands project.

The second tabling I have is from the New York Times, and it's dated October 21, 2010. It details what's going on in Montana and Idaho regarding the shipments that we discussed in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the government's Policy Framework for Services for Children and Youth with Special and Complex Needs and Their Families. Excellent reading, which obviously needs to be implemented.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the e-mail and fax notice for the Standing Order 30 motion that I introduced yesterday, which our office sent to the Liberal House leader at 8:39 a.m. yesterday.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, Alberta Innovates technology futures 2009-2010 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, responses to questions raised by Mr. Hehr, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo; Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; Mr. Jacobs, hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner; and Mr. Mitzel, hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, on March 8, 2010, in Department of Sustainable Resource Development main estimates debates.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Electoral Boundaries Commission Final Report

18. Ms Redford moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, which was tabled by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly as an intersessional deposit on June 24, 2010, Sessional Paper 225/2010.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise and make some comments regarding Government Motion 18. Certainly, we see this process as it follows through with the redistribution of the electoral boundaries. Since the last time it was done, of course, we've had shifts in demographics, and some areas of the province have grown significantly while others, unfortunately, have not. You have this balance between large rural areas of the province, where it's obvious there are difficulties for hon. members to get to each and every community regardless of their size, and you have the other side of the issue, which is the urban areas, where there may be a much larger population in a concentrated area.

Certainly, there are difficulties in representing those neighbourhoods, or those communities, as well. You are dealing with a lot of problems. You are dealing with a lot of constituents, or citizens, who want access to government programs or want to give advice or express concerns on government policy. Regardless of where a respective member would have had the honour or the privilege of being elected, there certainly are issues.

I think the issues of representation, that we all face regardless of our communities, have been helped in the last number of years by the changes in electronic communication. It's much, much easier to contact members regardless of how they decide to, whether it be by e-mail or by Twitter. Certainly, that has been a means of communication that has come up in the media as recently as last week. But we do have our ways of communicating almost instantaneously now that we didn't have, say, 20 years ago.

I don't understand, with the increase or the improvement in communication, why we would need this motion to go from 83 to 87 seats. Certainly, if taxpayers or citizens were to stop and think about how this government has changed even since this Premier took over from his predecessor, people would realize exactly how much or how big this government has grown. There is the perception, which is not reality, that this is a small, disciplined government. It's not. It's a myth.

When the Premier was elected – now, I could stand corrected, and perhaps the hon. member can correct me – there were 18 members in the cabinet. There could have been 16. [interjection] Eighteen members? We count them now: there are 24 ministries. So that's definitely an increase in the size of government. If we increase the number of seats from the current 83 to 87 as proposed in this motion, we're going to see bigger government at a time when I don't think we need to see more representatives in this Assembly.

Getting back to what I had said earlier, because of the changes in communication, Mr. Speaker, 83 representatives is sufficient for this province. Other provinces, British Columbia and Ontario of note, get by. Their MLAs have much larger constituencies if you just take a look at population alone. We look at a province like Prince Edward Island, which actually reduced the number of MLAs that sit in their Legislative Assembly. The reduction of MLAs in this constituency was considered, but it was rejected. The idea that we would have 83 representatives here and that we would remain with that number was rejected. So in these difficult economic times we see the government growing in size.

The government deficit is growing; there's no doubt about that. This will be the third fiscal year in a row where we have seen a government deficit. The public eventually is going to connect the dots, and they will realize that this is a government, regardless of how disciplined they think they are, that is big; it's bloated. By expanding the size of the Assembly to 87 members, Mr. Speaker, we are just reflecting that trend.

I think a smaller government – certainly, we could start with having 16 ministries. We've talked about this before, and I'm not going to bore the House with our observations, but I think they're valid. They were almost good enough for the current Premier when he took office, but that discipline didn't last long. In March of 2008 we saw the cabinet grow in size.

Now, when this motion becomes a bill and then eventually, in some form or another, becomes a law, how will this reflect the economic times that we're going through? We're seeing a larger Assembly at the same time that we're requesting that people do with less.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I'm looking forward to this debate. I understand there will be amendments to this Electoral Boundaries Commission Act as we saw it, as it was presented to the House. Certainly, the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar will be following it with interest, to say the least.

I had made a suggestion earlier – and we have to be realistic here. The city of Edmonton lost a seat in a central neighbourhood the last time there was redistribution. That constituency still has not been restored. We are going to get one seat, but when you look at the population growth, the city of Edmonton and, certainly, the city of Calgary is where the growth has occurred. It's also occurred in Fort McMurray. Those points were accepted by the commission but, in my view, overlooked, and I must express my disappointment in that. Essentially, what this motion and the bill to follow will give to the city of Edmonton is the one seat that was taken away the last time this occurred. At the same time the population increased significantly.

We're looking at this. It's a balancing act, I know, between the interests of rural areas and urban areas, but I think that can be satisfied, Mr. Speaker, without increasing the size of this Assembly by four seats.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to propose an amendment, but there was a delay in the publishing. I hope the Clerk maybe has the copies we need. Indeed, I don't even have a copy of the amendment that's at the Clerk's desk.

The Speaker: Well, just a second. We'll have them circulated and see what this amendment is.

Hon. members, just be a little patient. These first few days we have a whole new crew of pages, so they're learning the system.

Hon. Member for Highwood, you can proceed, please.

3:00

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I still don't have a copy.

The Speaker: Oh, you don't have a copy either.

Mr. Groeneveld: It's coming. Here we go.

Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to propose an amendment by adding after "Sessional Paper 225/2010":

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Okotoks-High River be changed to Highwood, and be it further resolved that the Assembly direct the Chief Electoral Officer to revise the DVD forming part of the final report by incorporating all the amendments to this motion and to transmit the revised DVD forthwith to the Speaker for tabling in the Assembly.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, sir. I'm going to do this very briefly. First of all, I'd certainly like to recognize the hard work of the boundary commission. Highwood, as I know it, certainly have accepted the changes to the boundary; it's the name that we have some concerns about. The Highwood district came into being in 1971, Mr. Speaker. The constituency name really has some historical significance and portrays the nature of the landscape to the people of the area, which is dominated, of course, by the Highwood River.

The name Highwood itself, of course, has real local familiarity and support in the community, so the municipalities within this constituency support keeping the name as Highwood. I have letters of support here from the town of High River, the town of Okotoks, the municipality of High River, the municipality of Okotoks, and the MD of Foothills, which are the only ones left in the Highwood constituency, Mr. Speaker. I ask my colleagues to support me in retaining the name as Highwood as we know it.

The Speaker: The Assembly has before it an amendment to Motion 18. Further debate, discussion?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: Just sit down for a second, please, because there's one interesting little nuance that comes out of all of this. Under our Standing Order 29(2)(a) we allow for a five-minute question-and-answer period. The hon. Member for Highwood gets up, puts forward a motion. We approve the motion. When does he get to do his five minutes of penance with respect to his arguments?

An Hon. Member: At 6:05 tonight.

The Speaker: At 6:05 tonight. These interesting things cause great consternation for the chair.

The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to propose an amendment to Government Motion 18 and have copies distributed.

The Speaker: Let's have them distributed. We'll have one delivered to the hon. Member for Strathcona pronto, please, as well.

Hon. Member for Strathcona, please proceed.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to propose an amendment to Government Motion 18 concerning the names of the electoral divisions by requesting a name change to the riding that I represent.

Mr. Quest moved that Government Motion 18 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 225/2010": "except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Strathcona be changed to Strathcona-Sherwood Park."

I propose that the name of my riding, Strathcona, be changed to Strathcona-Sherwood Park for a couple of reasons. This constituency was renamed Strathcona in 2004, and since that time there's been some fairly significant confusion between my constituency of Strathcona and Edmonton-Strathcona for obvious reasons. As well, it'd be appropriate to rename the constituency Strathcona-Sherwood Park. The Strathcona constituency does now include approximately 17,000 residents in the urban Sherwood Park area. The proposed boundary change will reduce the rural area of the county, so that will significantly increase the urban population of Sherwood Park as a percentage of the constituency.

Thank you for your consideration, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers?
Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Speaker: While we wait, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Not on this amendment. Is this back to the motion?

The Speaker: The amendment is closed. We've concluded it. We're waiting to see what else happens, so the next speaker up is the one I'll recognize. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the motion as amended twice.

Mr. Hehr: I'll speak on the motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just following in the footsteps of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who reminded me of a certain circumstance about the motion put forward by the hon. Justice minister and some of the nuances contained in it. I agreed with much of what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said and would like to reiterate, possibly, a few of his comments and add a few of my own, and we'll see where this goes.

Looking back at what has happened not only since the last time we adjusted the constituency boundaries here in Alberta, much has changed here in Alberta. We've had what has no doubt been an explosion in population growth. This has occurred in many areas throughout Alberta. It's happened in Fort McMurray, it's happened in Edmonton, it's happened in Calgary, and it has happened in other jurisdictions as well, but primarily the growth has occurred in our cities. I think it's fair to say that, and in my view that is essentially what has happened. We see some of the redrawing of the electoral maps. I'm not so certain it reflected that growth primarily on a representation by population basis.

Now, I do know that that is not the test that was looked at by the good people who were in charge of redistributing our boundaries. The hon. Justice minister will correct me, but it's something to the effect of: what's best suited to provide effective government? Effective government. Nevertheless, I believe, whether it would have been Edmonton to get another seat or Calgary to get another seat or another rural district, if we were going to add any seats at all to the current boundaries, which is another issue that I'll touch on later in this debate, you know, it would have been more suited to be in one of those urban districts. Primarily, that is where the population has gone, and in my view it would have been better on a representation by population basis.

Now, there are arguments going forward that it is more difficult to represent a rural community. At the same point in time I put forward that it's difficult to represent an urban constituency. The point is that we've moved on from that. The fact is that with technology – you see it all over the place with BlackBerrys, with computers, with all these devices – I would maintain that it's getting easier, not more difficult, to keep in contact with your constituents. Those traditional cleavages that have existed between ridings in representing rural districts are beginning to disappear. I don't believe those arguments were fully reflected in the redrawing of the constituency map, but that's neither here nor there. We're seemingly going ahead with the redrawing that is going to play out this way.

I guess one of the more important questions – I should have started with this; nevertheless, I'll end with it – is: what was the necessity for adding four more seats to this honourable House? In my view, it was something that was unnecessary, something that will add approximately $50 million to the provincial coffers over the course of a four-year cycle, which is over the course of time no small change.

If given the times, given the work that we do, which is necessary work – democracy has a cost, and democracy should be well funded. I understand all of those arguments. Nevertheless, with technology the way it has gone, with continuing improvements on that front, in my view, we could have done just fine leaving the number of seats in this honourable House the way it is. I believe it would have led by example. If we're not hiring civil servants, why are we hiring more MLAs? All those cross-parallel arguments of what we're expecting our citizenry to go through we should in fact do in this House. Now, you can't do that in all situations, but this would have been an excellent opportunity to show that we were leading by example, and in my view it should have been done. I believe we put forward numerous amendments on that front to limit the number of MLAs to be added to this honourable House.

Nevertheless, those are my comments. I applaud the work of the committee members who were named to redraw the electoral map. It is not easy work, and they did their best and, in their view, came up with appropriate compromises. We are just here to comment. I'd just like to thank them for the work they did to the best of their abilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll let someone else take the floor.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, though, we do have Standing Order 29(2)(b) available, which affords five minutes for questions and responses. Would any individual member in the House like to raise a question of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo? Yes, hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with interest in the last eight or nine months to a fairly wide public discussion with respect to technology and the use of technology for elected representatives and how having this technology certainly does help elected representatives represent their constituents. However, I would appreciate the hon. member's thoughts on not only the speed of communication and the quantity of communication but, from my own experience as an elected representative, the importance of the quality of the communication.

I think we do spend an awful lot of time on cellphones, on BlackBerrys, perhaps on Twitter, on Facebook coming up with well-crafted phrases that are an important part of communicating in this new age. However, I still believe that there is nothing that can duplicate sitting down face to face with a constituent and having a real conversation not only about what they've written to you but about how they came to that conclusion, why they feel that way, what their own personal experience has been. I think those conversations, which in this age of technology become not as frequent as they used to be, are a very important part of what we need to do as elected representatives. I'd certainly appreciate the hon. member's views on that.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you for the question. How can you argue against something that sounds as rational as meeting with your constituent over coffee and discussing bills and going through the Orders of the Day. You can't, okay? Simply put, you can't. Nevertheless, there are ebbs and flows to these things and decisions that have to be made from time to time that are in the best interests of good government, best interests of, I guess, the financial realities that exist in this world. Okay? So I guess we could chop up our constituency even more and, let's say, double our MLAs. That would allow for even more conversation, for me to go over to the Calgary Co-op more and say hi to more people and talk about more bills. Simply put, there has to be some sort of limit to what we can do as a democratic institution. In my view, we are hitting that number pretty right on at what we have currently.

Now, I'm not a cabinet minister – I'm pointing out the obvious, yes – and I don't have maybe as many people clamouring at my door as the hon. minister does. Nevertheless, I would consider downtown Calgary-Buffalo a fairly busy riding with numerous individuals who may actually use government services more often than some other jurisdictions. In my view, I'm able to communicate fairly effectively with anyone who wants to get hold of me at any time.

I realize that the arguments put forward by the hon. member are very solid, and I can't argue against them. Nevertheless, there is a balance to these things. I appreciate her comments.

The Speaker: Additional questions or comments? None?

Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would move that Government Motion 18 be amended by adding something, and I guess they will distribute the motion at this point.

The Speaker: It has not been distributed yet, Clerk?

Just a second, sir. Okay. Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, please proceed. I think the distribution is just about complete.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As noted, I move that Government Motion 18 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 225/2010": "except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-Montrose be changed to Calgary-Greenway." This is something proposed by the Calgary Parks Foundation and supported by community leaders.

In June 1986 my predecessor the hon. Rick Orman, first-ever MLA for Calgary-Montrose, said in his maiden speech that he hoped that the northeast would have a park. It's with great pleasure that I speak about the east Calgary greenway, which is a large network of parks and green spaces that follows along the east Calgary ring road. This park is planned to be over 100 kilometres long, and the first phase of this development stretches from Airport Trail to 17th Avenue S.E., bordering every one of the five communities that will form the new boundary.

Along the greenway there are recreational destinations like playgrounds, dog parks, and even a 3.1 hectare interpretative wetland. This park is quickly becoming a dominant feature on the east side of Calgary, and it will be a major geographical marker of the east side. It's used by many residents in my constituency and beyond. With the proposed changes to the electoral divisions even more of this park will be incorporated into the riding. Renaming the constituency Calgary-Greenway would reflect the growing importance of this park and serve to unify the residents in east Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, there are precedents in other areas of our province for such proposed changes. The constituency of Calgary-Fish Creek is named after Fish Creek park, and Calgary-Nose Hill is named after Nose Hill park.

In addition to being a dominant feature in east Calgary, naming a constituency after a park has the added benefit of not excluding any residential community. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think this name, Calgary-Greenway, is reflective of the citizens of east Calgary. As I mentioned, community associations are supportive, and I strongly encourage all my colleagues in the House to join with me in supporting this name change.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose provide more details in his historical vignette on the proposal to go to Calgary-Greenway?

The Speaker: Hon. member, we'll be a little flexible here today. Go ahead.

Mr. Bhullar: Sir, I must confess that I am not as good at historical vignettes as the hon. Speaker. Members of this House would all, I think, concur with me that you, sir, are the master of that.

The Calgary greenway is a project that will run along the perimeter of the city of Calgary, around all of its outer borders. At present the first phase of this project is being completed on the east side. That's a big win for my constituents because, usually, when great things happen in Calgary, we've got to fight to make them happen on the east side. The first phase is happening on the east side. From 17th Ave. S.E., which is my southernmost boundary, it will run all the way up to Airport Trail. This is a unifier of all five communities that will be within the new boundary of the present Calgary-Montrose.

This is more than merely a trail system. It's a building block of community in many respects. We have a great deal of seniors within our communities that use this as a meeting place, and quite frankly the work is not even fully completed yet.

I'm incredibly excited by the east Calgary greenway. I'm proud of the fact that the first phase of this project is happening on the east side. I'm incredibly proud that the communities are supportive of this project. Quite frankly, I think it'll become a major geographical marker for the east side of Calgary.

The Speaker: We're on an amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. With the comments that have been proposed here in the House, I can't help but ask a question. This greenway is going to go around the entire city. If you talk about Nose Hill or Fish Creek, those communities are there. Is it not going to be somewhat confusing down the road when this takes place and the greenway is the whole area? I wonder whether it's appropriate to take Greenway. Then someone will wonder: "Well, is that northeast, southeast? Where in the city is it?" Geographically I don't know that there's going to be any connection to your riding 10 years from now, let alone in five.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the point is that at present it will have connection to the community. It will for the next number of years, but it will also be a marker to say that east Calgary was first with the greenway. That's why this is absolutely instrumental.

East Calgary will have access to the greenway project long before other quadrants of the city. That's why this is something that the residents of east Calgary are very proud of, sir. I would invite you to come along with me and take a walk along this pathway system, and you will see that in these communities, where people from a vast number of nations around the world reside and where people making extremely large amounts of money and people just surviving live, this particular project is something that unifies them. So this is something of significance to the people of the east side. With all due respect, I believe that for the next five to 10 years at the very least, sir, this project will be a very significant marker for the east side of Calgary.

It's something, as I said, the communities are supportive of, and the Calgary Parks Foundation has proposed this in writing. Quite frankly, I'm a big champion and supporter of this project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. We're still on the amendment.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't as interested in this amendment as I am now. My interest has been piqued. It sounds to me like the Calgary greenway project is almost like Central Park now, the way we've had a discussion of this.

The Speaker: I've got to just tell everybody now. We're talking about an amendment to a constituency name. We're not talking about building parks. The subject of this amendment is to change the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-Montrose to Calgary-Greenway. That is the subject of the amendment.

Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: I guess I'm still hedging my bet, whether I'm going to be supportive or against it, until I've heard a little more. Is this greenway project more like a large series of parks, or is it like Central Park? It sounds like quite a system here that you have. [A timer sounded]

The Speaker: Go ahead. Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: I guess that it's more just that my interest has been piqued here as to what exactly it is. I'm getting a fair representation from you, but just to sort of, I guess, broaden my scope and my knowledge, is this one large park? Is it a series of links? I'm just really trying to picture this and the relevance to the community.

The Speaker: Go ahead, sir.

Mr. Bhullar: Thanks for the opportunity to explain. It's a pathway system that runs, as I said, from 17th Avenue S.E., Elliston park, all the way up to Airport Trail. So that's the pathway, hence the name east Calgary greenway. Then throughout the pathway there are locations where there are meeting places. There are ponds. There is an interpretive centre. So it's a pathway system with a series of small parks incorporated into it. There will be playgrounds. It's a pretty significant piece of recreational infrastructure. I think that's the best way that I can put it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose was allowed to get up several times because he was part of that five-minute question-and-answer thing. When the buzzer went when he was speaking, I should have had him sit down. But, well, it's only day 2. So it was a nice thing.

We're still now on the amendment. If somebody wants to participate in the debate on the amendment, we'll allow it, but then we're going to bring this thing to a head.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Speaker: I said earlier that I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the debate of the motion now, which has been amended three times. Then we'll go to the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for permitting me to speak to Bill 18, as you pointed out, thrice amended. I must admit that I have a little bit of difficulty with the title of Bill 18, which says Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, sir. We are on Motion 18, not the bill.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Motion 18. Thank you.

The Speaker: It's not the bill. It's not the government reorganization act.

Mr. Chase: I appreciate it. We're talking about electoral boundaries, not government organization. Thank you for that clarification. It was the numeracy that caused me some initial confusion, now corrected.

With the establishment of electoral boundaries and the addition of four new electoral boundaries, I recognize the need to balance our increasing population in Alberta. But I have to wonder in the name of efficiency how it is that our cities have considerably fewer aldermen or alderwomen or councillors or Reeves to carry on the same local business and they seem to do it quite well. And we now require 87 individuals to carry out the governance of the province.

I appreciate the fact that my constituents call me on a regular basis. One of the methods I've used for contacting constituents, that has worked extremely well, is basically hanging out at the Grassroots farmers' market in Calgary-Varsity. When people seeing all the other vendors ask me, "What are you selling?" I simply reply: "I'm giving away democracy. It's in short supply in this province." We have some interesting discussions.

Electoral boundaries – for example, the change was made, I believe, in 2003. Originally West Dalhousie, where I resided, was part of Calgary-Foothills. It was changed to Calgary-Varsity, which was a large help to me because that's where I taught for 21 of my 34 years. So I see the need to accommodate population shifts, but as a member of the Liberal Party, and having stated this clearly, we believe that in this case more is not better in terms of the governance of the province.

In terms of the electoral boundaries and the commission as it represents improving democracy and governance in this province, it concerns me that the electoral officer Lorne Gibson . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt the speaker, but I would do so under Standing Order 23(f). This speaker and a number of other speakers have referred to the number of seats, and of course that wasn't within the purview of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. They had to abide by the law which had previously been passed by this Legislature, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, which increased the number of seats. So it's not relevant to be speaking about the number of seats in the debate about the acceptance of the boundaries commission report because the boundaries commission could not do but design 87 seats as directed by this Legislature.

The Speaker: Quite frankly, that's a very valid point. I think we should deal with the motion that we have in front of us.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much.

The Speaker: That matter has been dealt with in the House.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for the clarification, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Government House Leader, for pointing out the relevance.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: I realize that the Electoral Boundaries Commission was basically regulated by the discussion in this House, and I attempted to point out that this discussion on increasing and directing the boundaries commission to come up with four new electoral districts was not unanimous. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that that historical record and its relevance is worthy of note.

What I am concerned about is what now takes place in the four new electoral boundaries, that we're in the process of approving today. My concern is how we best improve the efficiency within those electoral boundaries. How is it that we can potentially improve, for example, voter turnout in these new regions?

One of the problems in previous electoral boundaries was the census. I'm hoping that the census information for these new boundaries will potentially be shared between the municipalities and the federal districts where there are overlaps. Having the numbers of voters, particularly in a new constituency, identified so that they can participate in the next election, whether it be 2012 or at some time earlier or later, is extremely important, and I'm hoping it's viewed as relevant.

I would hope that as we go forward with this larger, expanded democracy, we can gain greater participation than we have to date. The 2008 election was highly disappointing. However, I take some hope in the recent turnout, for example, in Calgary. Calgary, of course, is a recipient of two of these new electoral boundaries; call it timing or call it a reward for due diligence in Calgary and recognizing population growth. We just recently had a municipal election, Mr. Speaker, where we had over 50 per cent voter turnout. That is my hope not only for our four new electoral districts but for this province.

Thank you for allowing me to participate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(b) is available for five minutes of questions or comments should members choose. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Sure. I'd just like to hear more from the hon. member about his general feeling about the need for more MLAs, if we need more MLAs. Or do you think that should have been part of the report? I frankly think it's very relevant. This is a democracy, and we do like free debate and free speech, so I'd like to hear a little bit more about that if you could.

The Speaker: Well, unfortunately, the hon. member may wish to do that except that we are going to stay within the context. I mean, the motion is very, very clear. The Assembly has dealt with all of these other matters previously. We can waste five minutes of time, you know, whistling, but let's be relevant to what we have at hand today.

Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, do you want to try again?

Mr. Anderson: Well, may I get clarification? What are we allowed to talk about, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Well, let's take a look at Motion 18. It says:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, which was tabled by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly as an intersessional deposit on June 24, 2010.

This report follows a discussion in the House about what the parameters would be for the Electoral Boundaries Commission. It followed a process whereby leaders of the government, leaders of the opposition parties were to convey to the Speaker names that would then subsequently be appointed to form the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission then was created. It went out and held meetings. The document came back to the Assembly. It was reviewed by the Assembly. The committee went back out again and came back. So we're dealing now with the final thing.

In the meantime, we had a debate on a bill, in particular, that increased the number of ridings from 83 to 87.

What we're dealing with now is the conclusion, the report. We've done all that other stuff. It's now the 21st century, as I heard somebody say today. We'll stick with that.

Mr. Anderson: I'll be brief. Could you tell us a little bit about whether you like the report's boundaries for Calgary-Varsity, hon. member? Are there any communities that you think you would like to see in there, any ones that are not in there that, you know, you think should be in there, et cetera? What are your feelings on your own boundaries?

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely proud of the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. The reason for that pride is very similar to the pride I felt when Calgary voters turned out in the municipal election. I'm sure you're aware of this, but Calgary-Varsity had the largest voter turnout in this past election, which indicates the engagement of Calgary-Varsity constituents. It had nothing to do with myself. I was one of a number of very capable candidates running for the position of representing Calgary-Varsity constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I understand fully that the boundaries commission was given very strict parameters. They did their work, they went throughout the province, and they came up with what they believed was their best recommendation. While I support the effort and the methodology in arriving at these suggestions, I do not support the conclusion.

I understand and am appreciative of the fact that Fort McMurray's population was finally represented, especially with its satellite communities. I understand that Calgary's population has grown significantly. If I were in favour of expanding electoral districts, which, Mr. Speaker, I have clearly indicated that I'm not, if that were my reasoning in terms of population and representation, then I would suggest that Edmonton lost out because they previously had one of their constituency boundaries eliminated and the population has grown considerably since that was done. If I were a person who believed bigger is better, I would suggest that Edmonton was shortchanged; therefore, I cannot concur with the proposal of Motion 18 and the electoral boundaries findings.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We still have time if there are additional questions or comments under this segment.

If not, are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to propose an amendment to Government Motion 18. We'll have those distributed.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's have it circulated.

I think there's been circulation of this amendment now, hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, so would you kindly proceed?

Mr. Fawcett: Sure. Yeah. I would like to move that Government Motion 18 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 225/2010": "except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-North Hill be changed to Calgary-Klein."

Mr. Speaker, it truly is an honour to be able to move this amendment. I do concur with the Electoral Boundaries Commission report except in this one instance. Before I go on to explain the rationale behind the name that I'm proposing, I just want to point out to all members a particular problem I did have with the report, and that was around the name of two constituencies in Calgary that were so similar, I believe, and many of my constituents led me to believe, as to cause confusion within the city.

I think the way the process went is that during the second round of consultations the Electoral Boundaries Commission did with the public, a number of communities in the constituency of our hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay indicated that they would like their constituency to be renamed after their community association. The communities of Harvest Hills, Coventry Hills, Country Hills, Country Hills Estates, Panorama Hills, and Panorama Hills Estates have a community association called Northern Hills Community Association. I think that's an appropriate name for the constituency. I don't think the hon. member for that constituency has a problem with it, and I think the Electoral Boundaries Commission did see that there was some merit behind naming that constituency that particular name.

However, I'm not sure whether they contemplated – this is obviously a very complex process that they have to go through – that there were two names that were similar. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, that presents the opportunity that I have. I received a number of comments from constituents about this and the closeness between the two constituencies, and I started thinking: well, what may possibly be the solution?

Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure many in this Assembly are aware, but the former Premier of this province and hon. member of this Legislature from Calgary-Elbow, Premier Klein, was born and raised in the community of Tuxedo Park, which resides right in the middle of my constituency. That continues to be a source of pride for many people in that community.

Mr. Klein has had a distinguished career of over 25 years of service as the mayor of the city of Calgary and as Premier of this great province. He was elected as mayor in 1980 and served as the mayor for nine years, which included serving as mayor during the time when Calgary hosted the 1988 Winter Olympics, again, which remains a continued source of pride in the city of Calgary and something that we always look back on very fondly. The former Premier and the mayor at the time was certainly centre stage as being that gracious host to the world.

Not only that, Mr. Klein then moved into provincial politics and sat in this Legislature as the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, as I mentioned, but also held the portfolios of Minister of Environment and minister of I believe at that time it was called federal and intergovernmental affairs, at which time in 1992 he won the leadership race of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta and as such was sworn in as Premier of this great province on December 14, 1992. Subsequent to that, that Premier then led the PC Party in victories in elections in 1993, 1997, 2001, and 2004 and served this great province in the capacity of Premier until the fall of 2006.

Mr. Speaker, we do have precedent in naming constituencies after significant Albertans and in particular those that served as Premier of this great province and as mayors in our two great cities. We do have a Calgary-Lougheed. There's some discussion whether that's actually named after former Premier Lougheed or a family. But we also do have an Edmonton-Decore, an Edmonton-Manning, and an Edmonton-Rutherford.

I have had some questions about: "Well, why Premier Klein? There are other great Albertans." I agree. There are lots of great Albertans, thousands of great Albertans. But the fact is we don't have a thousand constituencies to name after them. I think there are certain thresholds, and obviously this particular precedent of naming constituencies after former mayors and Premiers is certainly one that would make sense in my area because of the source of pride that the community members that I represent have in having someone that has risen to prominence in the position of mayor and Premier come from their particular community.

There's no doubt that there may be some people out there that might have disagreed with the policies of the former Premier. That's what is so great about our society, that we can have those disagreements. But I think we should all stand in solidarity when it comes to recognizing those individuals that sacrifice so much of their personal life to give back to our society in the way that Premier Klein did. I think we're all very grateful for the fact that we are one of the only jurisdictions without any long-term debt, and I think that is certainly owed to the leadership of former Premier Klein, who was able in 2004 to announce that this province was debt free. I know that I'm grateful for myself. I also believe that I'm grateful for my future kids and grandkids that they don't have to have that burden put on them when they're born into this province.

Mr. Speaker, these are the reasons why I proposed this amendment to Government Motion 18. I look forward to having all members of this Legislature endorse and honour a great Albertan. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: We're on the amendment, the debate on the amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very specific to the amendment. I have no doubt about precedent: Manning, Lougheed, Decore. I do recognize the fact that we don't have an Edmonton-Getty, for example, that somehow in terms of recognizing contributions, Premier Getty was left out.

One of the concerns I have is the feelings of the constituents. I'm sure, possibly, that in 29(2)(a) this will come out, but I would like to get a sense of what kind of plebiscite or questioning process or involvement of the constituents in this particular selection of a name occurred. For example, Mr. Speaker, in the community newsletters – in this case they sometimes overlap our two constituencies because they border on each other – I have frequently asked constituents their opinions on a variety of issues and how I could better represent them. I would hope that the hon. MLA for what is currently named Calgary-North Hill and is proposed to be changed to Calgary-Klein has done the due diligence in terms of getting at least a strong poll of his constituents as to whether this is where they want to reside.

There is no one in this House, I would believe, that does not believe that Premier Klein was a controversial figure, and based on that controversy, people might feel uncomfortable. I'll give you an example of a district that felt uncomfortable. There was a proposal to name one of the schools Pierre Trudeau school. Well, we've got examples of prime ministers' names being placed on school edifices to recognize accomplishments, and I would suggest that probably Pierre Elliott Trudeau shared equally in the controversy that Premier Ralph Klein did. The community was consulted, and they said: we want a name on our school that more closely reflects our community. That was reflected in the name they chose.

I don't have any problem with the precedent. I don't have any problem in the notion of honouring former Premier Klein. I am extremely appreciative that Premier Klein, when asked to have his name placed on the Children's hospital, declined. I thought he showed great humility and great foresight in not having the Children's hospital named after him.

I would assume that the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill has shared this idea of honouring our former Premier with the Premier. I would be interested, Mr. Speaker, if the free flow of ideas that proceeded with the former amendment on changing to Calgary-Greenway, formerly Calgary-Montrose, would be provided to the representative, the MLA for Calgary-North Hill, because I would like to think that his constituents in large numbers were involved in this process and would feel comfortable with this naming.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the responses.

The Speaker: That free flow will come under Standing Order 29(2)(b), which now permits any member to ask questions or make comments of you. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill if you wanted to. Did you want to participate in it? We have that five-minute item.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to address some of the comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I'm not going to stand here and suggest that his opinions aren't valid or that sort of thing, but I want him to know that I tried to talk to as many constituents as possible over the fall. Some suggested proceeding with caution. You know, at times was Premier Klein a controversial figure? Certainly he was. I don't think there is anything that we bring forward as elected members or holders of public office that is going to have one hundred per cent unanimous agreement. But I want to allude for this member to a statement made by his former leader and the current hon. member Dr. Taft on the last day that . . .

The Speaker: You can't use that name.

Mr. Fawcett: Oh. Pardon me. Sorry. I retract that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the Premier's last day in the House said: "The Premier has never been afraid to wear his humanity on his sleeve, and I think everyone in this Legislature and in Legislatures across Canada should learn from the Premier's example."

Mr. Speaker, this is a gentleman that has left public life to go on to a private life. I don't think this is an opportunity to debate where he stood on issues and what policies he had. It's an opportunity to recognize the exemplary service that he provided Calgarians and Albertans over the last 25 years. That's what we're here to talk about today, and I'm hoping that all members can understand that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, I did go out and talk to as many constituents as possible. Just in the last week and a half I hit three community meetings in which I probably was in front of 300 to 400 constituents – a couple of them were AGMs in the community association; another was a contentious meeting about the siting of a facility – and mentioned this potential change to them and asked them to provide their feedback. I got not one comment back saying that this was a bad idea. Therefore, I think that this is something that should be supported by all members of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Okay. We're under Standing Order 29(2)(b) as a result of comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. Did you want to . . .

Mr. Chase: Yes. I believe I have the opportunity, now that the explanation has been given, to inquire further, do I?

The Speaker: Indeed so, sir. This is a bit of a reversal from the norm, but go ahead.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I guess I'm envious, Mr. Speaker, of the turnout at AGMs that Calgary-North Hill has had. When I've attended a variety of AGMs, whether it be Calgary-Varsity or Calgary Dalhousie, Triwood, et cetera, Banff Trail being another, I have never seen that great a turnout at an AGM. I'm assuming that the greater turnout was at the controversial meeting because there's nothing like controversy to bring out the electorate.

I will take the hon. member at his word that he did the due diligence in consulting a variety of his constituents. The instrument that I suggested that might have been used and provided a greater feedback was the community news. It'll be interesting as to whether the hon. member hears back from the people whose voices to date have been silent but may get a tremendous, in both senses of the word, surprise when this name change takes place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, did you want to raise a question or make a comment with respect to the comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity?

Mr. Danyluk: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. The hon. member made comments to say that, you know, he didn't really agree with the direction of naming a constituency or schools. I recently attended a school opening that was named after a member that sat in the Liberal Party, Don Massey. I just wanted to know exactly what his feeling was because he did have a lot of colleagues there that very much supported that.

The Speaker: Okay. Who else would like to participate in this debate on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. We are on the amendment as put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. Proceed.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I thank you for the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I note, as other speakers have already noted, that there is certainly a tradition in this House as well as in many Houses across the country to name constituencies after high-profile and well-respected historic figures, many of whom happen to coincidentally also be political figures. Certainly, that has occurred in the past.

I do, however, agree somewhat with the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. First of all, I think the current political figure that has been identified has been out of office for all of two and a half years. [interjections] Okay. Two and a half, three and a half, four: the point is that it's not long enough to suggest that he is part of history.

An Hon. Member: Do you want him to die first? Is that it?

Ms Notley: I wouldn't go there.

Indeed, I think that with the number of times that I've seen members of this government try to in fact distance themselves from some of the rather unfortunate policy decisions made under that previous Premier, we see that he is actually still an active part of our political discourse in this province.

More to the point, I think it speaks to the problem with this process. We have an Electoral Boundaries Commission, which consists of partisan appointments from two of the parties in the province and is not representing those who are not one of those two parties. As a result, the names that are identified are those that reflect particular partisan backgrounds. And while, you know, there comes a time when you can respect the historical integrity that comes from someone's role, I really think that the two, three, four years, however long it's been, that we've had since the former Premier has played an active role in our politics is simply too close.

I also think that it's not enough for the Member for Calgary-North Hill to come here and say: I talked to a few people, and no one disagreed. I, frankly, think that he should have been prepared to make his case better. I think he should have been prepared to come with letters of support from members of the community, from community leaders and community residents, so that it's not a question of a partisan group of people imposing their partisan agenda onto a community without black-and-white evidence of support with respect to that. So I think that that is a problem.

I think that ultimately – no question – we've seen Liberal caucus members recognized and we have seen Conservative caucus members recognized and leaders recognized, and that, of course, reflects the makeup of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, which, of course, is the underpinning of why the whole process is somewhat flawed.

I think that in this case it's just too close. As was identified, this was a very controversial figure. There are a lot of significant concerns about some of the actions of that figure that still are alive in vulnerable communities across the province. I think that it's simply too soon to suggest that this would be an appropriate decision, and I think that it would cast a rather partisan shadow across all of the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission should this decision go forward without extensive evidence that members of the community are seeking that outcome. That is why I will not vote in favour of this change.

The Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(b). Does anybody want to raise a question or make a comment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East under Standing Order 29(2)(b). Proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly cannot claim to know the former Premier as well as, certainly, some of his caucus and cabinet. However, it had been noted that he has already turned down the opportunity to have a hospital named after him. Believe it or not, despite all the controversy and despite what appeared to be flamboyancy, really his personal personality was not that flamboyant. My question would be: has the former Premier actually been asked if he would accept this if this is passed?

The Speaker: Okay. Just a second here now. Be very careful. It's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona whose five-minute question thing is involved. Now, if there's a way that the hon.

Member for Calgary-North Hill can get involved in this five-minute segment to answer that question, go for it. I presume that you're going to be going through the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona via the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I'll try to answer her questions, Mr. Speaker, and answer some others at the same time.

I do want this House to know that I did speak with Mr. Klein on two occasions, one – I believe it was the month of August – when I mentioned the possibility, and I did speak with him last night. He was certainly humbled by the gesture. Therefore, that consultation and agreement has taken place.

It really is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that we have some members of this Legislature that want to question the policy stances of an elected official that left office about four years ago. We're in today and now, and the only thing that I think is important about the history is recognizing those that gave exemplary service to our province.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think I will just leave it at that.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, did you want to get into this Q and A section? You can't get back to the main motion; you've already spoken. I recognized you at 3:07. The only way you're getting back in is through this mechanism. Go for it.

Mr. Hehr: Well, then, if I'm allowed to make a quick comment, I am actually differing from some members on this side. I think it's a reasonable motion to recognize a man who has spent 25 years in public office. Say what you want about this or that, he gave up significant portions of his private life to serve, and I see this as a reasonable way to recognize those contributions.

The Speaker: Anyone else on this Q and A portion? Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you've got a minute and 48.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. Something, Mr. Speaker, that we pride in ourselves as Liberals is the capacity to allow divergent thinking. I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for having the forthrightness, the conviction to state his points and his recognition of the hon. Premier Ralph Klein and his various contributions to this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. With that, I take it that that concludes this segment.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you wanted to get in on the amendment?

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The Speaker: Please, sir, proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have no question that he's been an outstanding Albertan. He's served us well, a phenomenal individual. My question is with the precedent. Do you just pick an area and allow that to happen? I know you said that he was born and grew up there. Is it more relevant to put him in an area like Calgary-Elbow, where he served for a long time? Is there a precedent in deciding what riding might represent that name and why you picked it: if it's his birthplace, where he grew up as opposed to the years of service to an area he actually represented? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hold on. Hold on. Let's be very careful, please. If the hon. member has concluded his comments, we will now, then, go to 29(2)(b). All right?

I'll recognize first of all the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, who wanted to say something, then the Minister of Energy, and then Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member probably brings up a valid comment, but I don't think there is any precedent. There are no rules about how these sorts of things happen. It was probably unlikely that the opportunity would have presented itself had there not been some changes. Maybe it would have presented itself in a different form sometime down the road. But when an opportunity presents itself, I think it's incumbent on us to step back and do the right thing, and I think this is the right thing.

Like I said, this is a source of pride in the community. I think that if you went back and looked over the historical voting records, this was a Premier and mayor that was pretty popular in the area where he grew up, and that helped shape who he was.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, it's still your five-minute segment.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that answer. I guess, like I say, this is an opportunity to name any place in the province. That's why I was wondering if he actually asked the Premier if there's a place that was near and dear to his heart that he would have liked to represent, you know, one over the other. Like I say, he spent a great deal of time in Calgary-Elbow. I'm just wondering. This opportunity is for 87 ridings, not just Calgary-North Hill.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I understand 29(2)(a), it's to ask questions.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(b).

Mr. Liepert: Or (b), whatever it is. I'd like to ask the Member for Calgary-Glenmore: if we're debating the electoral boundaries bill, which by my read of it will now have the former Premier Klein as a constituent of this particular member, is he prepared to face his constituent in the next provincial election and face him on the doorstep? I'd ask him if he's prepared to say that he supported this motion in the Legislature when it came for debate?

The Speaker: This is 29(2)(a), by the way. The (a) and (b) sometimes get me confused. Go ahead.

Mr. Hinman: I think that I said that I have supported the idea that Premier Klein deserves recognition for the service that he's done in the province. Actually, it would be my opportunity perhaps to represent him if Lakeview community was in the riding of Calgary-Klein. I don't know whether he's trying to be cheeky or what his point is. The point is for Calgary-North Hill, and I'm asking: is that the most appropriate place? I recognize that it is, I think, a very humbling thing for Premier Klein to be recognized in this nature. Where he wants to be represented: in fact, was that presented to him?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, did you want to participate in this section?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question if you don't mind, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I was listening to the discussion here about the constituency to be named Calgary-Klein. Of course, it will be up to the voters in the next election to determine who will be the first person and from what party they will come to represent that constituency. Has the hon. member given any consideration, in the length of time we've had this discussion, to whether or not his party will be targeting that constituency? I think it would be kind of ironic if the first MLA elected in Calgary-Klein was a Liberal or maybe a Wildrose Alliance. My question is, very quickly: have you given any consideration to targeting Calgary-Klein?

Mr. Hinman: The Wildrose believes that Alberta is a great place. We're honoured to serve Albertans wherever they are, and we're focused on all Alberta ridings to give them an opportunity to vote for a better party with better ideas with better government for the people.

The Speaker: Additional comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. We're still under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much. Again, in the interests of clarification, when I was explaining Premier Klein's humility and his desire not to have the Children's hospital named after him, a heckle arose from the current Minister of Energy suggesting that I was possibly making this up, that there was no historical relevance to Premier Klein turning down the honour of having the Children's hospital named after him. I just would like to put it on the record that his statements are a part of the historical record, and I would encourage the hon. Minister of Energy to do his homework.

The Speaker: Okay. We've got 10 seconds left.

Mr. Hinman: I'm not sure how to answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. We're back to the amendment. Is there an additional speaker who would like to participate in the debate on the amendment? I'll call the question, then. Is that correct?

Well, then, hon. members, we have before us an amendment to Government Motion 18, essentially the fourth amendment that's come forward this afternoon, and it's put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. It basically calls for a provision under the motion that the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-North Hill be changed to Calgary-Klein.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Speaker: We're back now to the motion. Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, are you getting involved?

Ms Calahasen: No. I was going to call for a vote, Mr. Speaker, a standing vote.

The Speaker: Well, you need more than one person. We've passed that. It's been dealt with.

Okay. We have a motion before the Assembly. Four amendments have been approved. Shall I now call the question that the motion as amended be approved?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Government Motion 18 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Okay. This matter is concluded. What will happen is that subsequent to this, a bill will have to be introduced in the Legislative Assembly. A new DVD, which will outline the actual boundaries, will have to be produced, and there will be a mechanism, outlined to all hon. members here in the last few days, where there will be someone taking members through, should they want to deal with specific amendments to the bill as it comes forward. The motion has now been dealt with.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 I introduced Bill 204, a private member's bill, which proposed to prohibit the use of hand-held cellphones while driving. The Standing Committee on the Economy reviewed Bill 204 and recommended that it not proceed and that a new offence of distracted driving be created. On April 14 the government introduced Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, which proposes to prohibit distracted driving.

As a former police officer I've witnessed first-hand the dangerous consequences of distracted driving. If there's one thing I know for sure, we have to do something about this. So many collisions and tragedies could have been prevented if drivers were simply more attentive and careful when they were behind the wheel.

I am pleased to speak to the merits of this bill and how it will benefit Albertans by improving traffic safety in our province. I also know that there is strong public support for this type of legislation. In a 2008 Angus Reid poll 89 per cent of Albertans said that they supported legislation that would ban the use of hand-held phones while driving. I wish the process could have been a little faster, but I think it's also important that we take the time to get it right.

Talking or texting on a hand-held cellphone while trying to drive is dangerous. Just look at the phones that are coming out these days. They allow drivers to access the Internet, send and receive e-mail and text messages, watch TV, listen to music, take photos, navigate using GPS, and, oh, yes, call someone.

Hand-held cellphones are just one piece of the puzzle. There are many other driver distractions that jeopardize traffic safety. Other distractions include personal grooming, using a laptop, writing, using an MP3 player, even reading. We need to go beyond simply banning the use of hand-held cellphones while driving and address the bigger issue of distracted driving.

International research indicates that 20 to 30 per cent of all collisions involve some form of driver distraction. Technological advances in recent years have added to this problem. Police want and need a tool to deal with more than just cellphone use while driving. Based on consultations with law enforcement representatives, they also want something that will help manage and reduce other driver distractions.

The challenge we face is to create a law that is comprehensive, practical, effective, and enforceable, and I think Bill 16 strikes the right balance. This bill will give law enforcement another tool to better address distracted driving in Alberta. I am proposing a new, comprehensive offence that restricts drivers from engaging in distracting activities, including, but not limited to, using hand-held cellphones or other wireless electronic devices, programming GPS units while driving, reading, writing, or grooming.

A driver who chooses to put everyone else at risk by driving distracted would face a fine of $172, which is in line with other moving violations. There will be no demerits attached to the distracted driving ticket. In the event that a distracted driver also commits a moving violation, demerits for the moving violation could apply. The distracted driving offence would complement, not replace, the current driving without due care and attention law, which is a more serious offence. The penalty for this offence is a fine of $402 and six demerit points.

Now, will there be any exceptions to these provisions? Yes. Hands-free phones are not covered in the legislation. I know that there's a question of: why not ban hands-free? Well, it isn't that simple. Enforcing hands-free is very difficult, and no other jurisdiction has included hands-free phones in their legislation.

The use of radio communications such as CB radios will be allowed for industry when used as a part of their direct duties and for search and rescue operations. This legislation will not interfere with the official duties of emergency services personnel, including enforcement, fire, and medical services. While driving, drivers will only be able to use a hand-held device to contact emergency services.

Like the consultations with law enforcement, the consultations with our many traffic safety stakeholders found that they, too, support this type of approach to the issue of distracted driving. I think it is important to acknowledge the effort of law enforcement and our traffic safety partners, for their input and commitment to this issue of traffic safety. Because of our positive relationships and co-ordinated efforts in addressing traffic safety, we are making a difference, and I know we will continue to move forward.

Since the introduction of this legislation last April, Albertans had an opportunity to review Bill 16 and provide comments. I am pleased to tell you that the majority of the feedback received from law enforcement, stakeholders, and the general public share positive comments and support for this bill. They are eager to see this bill become law.

Mr. Speaker, over the past several months Alberta Transportation received many letters, e-mails, and phone calls regarding Bill 16, and I know that many of us received feedback from our constituents as well. Many people wrote in with questions. Of the people who indicated support, 72 per cent are in favour of the bill. Information about Bill 16 is on Alberta Transportation's website, and it has received more than 7,000 hits since April, which indicates there's significant interest in this legislation. People want to learn more about this issue and are engaged and, I believe, want to be part of the solution.

Proceeding with this proposed legislation will give law enforcement another tool to help make our roads safer. We are also sending a strong message to all Albertans: when you are in your vehicle, your focus must be on your driving. We must take action on this important traffic safety issue. Traffic collisions impose enormous costs on our society, and anything we can do to improve safety provides tremendous benefits to all Albertans. This law is fundamental to good driving practice; however, I do recognize that this law alone will not reduce collisions but is a key part of our strategy to take action on this dangerous trend. Safety is a choice, Mr.

Speaker, and this bill combined with education, awareness, and enforcement can help Albertans make the right choice.

I want to thank my colleagues in the government caucus for supporting a very comprehensive piece of legislation. Once again Alberta is taking a bold approach to address an important issue, one that I am very proud to be part of. I trust my colleagues will support the proposed Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010.

I look forward to the upcoming debate on this subject, and I do have an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to be the first up to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. I respect his history of being a front-line police officer who I am sure had the unenviable job of being the first on an accident scene. He probably knows better than any other member in this House the carnage that occurs in road collisions. I appreciate his bringing this bill forward as a government bill because it bears more weight. I'm assuming that because it is a government bill, his government colleagues will be supportive of it.

My major concern is that it doesn't go far enough. In consultation with emergency physicians and having had this discussion on several occasions with Dr. Francescutti, who is an Edmonton emergency physician and newly elected chair of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada, it has been indicated by a variety of emergency physicians and other experts in injury that it's the cognitive action of discussing on the phone that is the major area of distraction as opposed to the simple act of holding the phone in your hand. Doctors from emergency departments have encouraged me personally to take this discussion further. It'll be interesting. I'll look forward to hearing another emergency physician's take on this particular bill, and that's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark who, again, has had that front-line experience and realizes the importance of being proactive in creating our legislation.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is long overdue, and I must admit today to having a type of déjà vu experience. I want to recount and explain. If you want to take it as a historical vignette à la the Speaker, you can. I want to bring people's memories back. Many of us were here in the House on Monday, April 25, 2005, when I introduced Motion 506, Hand-held Cellphone Use while Driving. I moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to prohibit the use of hand-held cellular phones while operating a motor vehicle.

I felt that that was an important issue in 2005. Nothing has been done since, and we find ourselves in 2010 still talking about it. I really hope for the hon. mover of this motion, the representative of Calgary-Hays, that this gets approval. As I say, I think it's a very large step in the direction.

What I want to point out in my vignette is that there were conflicted feelings about distracted driving legislation. The conflict had to do primarily with the hand-held nature. I want to share some of the comments that were made with regard to this, that show the conflict members had at that time. My hope is that those conflicted members have changed their minds in the interval.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West, the current Minister of Energy, began his debate stating:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased tonight to participate in the debate on Motion 506. This is an important debate because in many ways it tends to differentiate those who believe that government should be regulating more and more individuals' lives and freedoms and those, like myself, who feel that individuals need to accept responsibility for their actions.

That stated, here's where the conflict came in:

Mr. Speaker, science does not agree that banning the use of hand-held cellular phones will effectively eliminate the dangers of driver inattention. Furthermore, according to scientific studies driving and talking on a phone is not necessarily dangerous because of the physical act of holding the phone but, rather, from the mental act of having a conversation.

Now, while we rarely agree, in this particular case I fully agree with the hon. Minister of Energy when he stated – and I'll emphasize it again – that talking on a phone is not necessarily dangerous because of the physical act of holding the phone but, rather, from the mental act of having a conversation. To legislate against the physical act of holding the phone, then, seems to be somewhat counterproductive.

I sincerely hope he has changed his mind.

He concluded:

Motion 506 is not prudent. In fact, it goes against reason and science, and that is why I urge all of my colleagues in joining in voting against this motion.

I hope those sentiments have changed. I believe that education is not limited to the first five years of life, that we all have the potential of growing, and that is my hope.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort indicated:

From what I understand, this idea is not new in this House. In fact, in 2002 the former member for Lacombe-Stettler introduced an identical idea in the form of a private member's bill which, if passed, would have banned the use of hand-held cellular phones during the operation of a motor vehicle. But this Legislature at that time felt that such legislation was flawed from the beginning.

Again, I hope this member has seen the light.

It's important in this historical vignette that this was first proposed in 2002. How many lives, how many intrusions into families might have been prevented had this legislation been passed in 2002? I'm hoping we get on with the process.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort went on.

I realize that the use of hand-held cellular phones by careless drivers has caused traffic accidents, some of which have been extremely tragic. However, I also realize that passing laws every time we have an issue in our hands is not the best or the most appropriate way for us to govern. It is very reactionary for us just to jump on the bandwagon and argue that Alberta needs legislation banning cellular phone use in motor vehicles because it can cause accidents.

He goes on to say:

Does this mean that we should ban passengers from vehicles since they assuredly could distract the driver or cause a collision? Perhaps we should also consider banning radios, CD players from vehicles because they, too, can be distracting to drivers.

He was getting quite excited at this point.

Maybe we should also ban drive-throughs as they promote eating and driving, which can be as distracting as talking on a cellphone. So where would this end, Mr. Speaker?

Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope it comes to an end with Bill 16.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort went on to say:

I trust that the majority of Albertans do drive responsibly, pay attention to driving conditions, refrain from using their phones or other devices in situations when their undivided attention is most required. Albertans don't need this government constantly looking over their shoulder and telling them what they can and cannot do. I trust their judgment to do the right things, and I don't think that the poor judgment of a few should spoil it for the rest of us.

Well, I disagree, and I would gather that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays disagrees, too.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North stated:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to join the debate on Motion 506 tonight. I guess the old saying that there are no new ideas, just new politicians, holds some truth. I believe this idea was last debated in the House in 2002. It was voted down at that time, and I hope it will be voted down again tonight.

However, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North had a vision. She had a vision of this distracted driving legislation, Bill 16, eventually coming forward, and I give her credit for her vision. She stated:

Passing this motion would be an example of poor lawmaking, and as it has been pointed out in this Assembly on many occasions, we are not in the business of making bad laws. I applaud the hon. member for his intentions. I share them and know that he will provide valuable input in future discussions regarding the general theme of reducing preventable injuries.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, that's what I'm doing right now. But here's the insight that she indicated:

But unless we are willing to legislate against all distractions while driving, I would encourage all members not to support this motion.

So back in 2005 the hon. Member for Red Deer-North had a great idea, and I'm glad to see that it's surfacing in today's discussion.

Now, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said:

I do not feel that it's this government's job to legislate against common sense. Pulling over and having a long conversation on a cellphone makes sense, and many Albertans do so.

I agree with that, of course. That's the preferred option.

We should be encouraging Albertans to do this more often and increasing the use of hands-free devices as well, not dictating to them what they have to do when it hasn't been universally proven to be any more dangerous than having children fighting in the back seat of a car.

And I'm sure our fathers shared: "That's one. That's two. That's three." Then we waited for the car to pull over, and we would have a talking-to.

Albertans should have options like hands-free devices brought to their attention. As responsible as Albertans tend to be, I am confident that the majority of Albertans will make a common-sense decision to use hands-free devices more often.

So there's a vote in terms of hands-free being acceptable. I do not share that view. He went on to conclude:

I will not be supporting this motion, and I encourage all of the members to do the same.

Now, I don't want to restrict my debate to one party, so the former Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner currently representing Calgary-Glenmore had this to say:

I also feel that we've got far too many laws on the books already, so I have to ask the question. If we really are concerned about safety – and this always seems to be the intention of government in its bills and its regulations: safety, safety, safety – well, then, perhaps we should ban vehicles altogether and go back to horses. There weren't so many deaths. Or go back to the '20s and '30s and perhaps lower the speed limit to 30 miles per hour. How many accidents are fatal over 30 and under 30? There are many things that we can look at.

The fact of the matter is that we're supposed to be responsible when we're behind the wheel of a vehicle, and I expect each and every person to be that way, and we have laws in place. So I'll sit down, and I'll vote against this motion, though I understand the good intentions of it.

Again, where I'm coming from, Mr. Speaker, is that five years have passed. People's opinions hopefully have changed, and I'm hoping that we're going to lead the world in terms of recognizing that the mental distractions caused by hands-free are equally deadly to those of hand-held.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to participate in debate. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays: I wish you well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to be part of the debate on Bill 16. As Minister of Transportation I know how important this piece of legislation is for all Albertans. I also want to take this opportunity to thank the MLA for Calgary-Hays for his efforts in bringing this legislation forward. Throughout this process he educated us all on the dangers of distracted driving, and his passion for improving safety is truly commendable. I'm happy to speak to the merits of this bill and how it will benefit Albertans by improving traffic safety in our province.

Distracted driving is an issue all across North America and around the world. Many factors have contributed to this situation: tremendous technology advances over the last 20 years; a perceived need to be connected to work and home at all times; a perception that driving is an unproductive, second-nature task; and people trying to accomplish more in less time. As a result, there are many activities that people do behind the wheel that take their minds off the wheel and their attention off the road. This legislation addresses cellphones, but it also addresses additional distractions. These are activities such as texting, personal grooming, using a laptop, writing, using an MP3 player, reading, and a number of other things. Nowadays there are just too many things competing for the driver's attention.

To put this in perspective, international research shows that 20 to 30 per cent of all collisions involve driver distraction, and that goes way beyond just hand-held phone use. This is not acceptable, and clearly we have to take action. While other provinces in Canada have simply banned hand-held cellphones or electronic devices, we need to go beyond that to effectively address the bigger issues of driver distraction. I'm proud to say that this comprehensive approach to driver distractions is the first to go this far.

Our goal is to make our roads safer by changing driver attitudes and behaviors. The challenge we face is to create a law that is comprehensive, practical, effective, and enforceable, and I think Bill 16 strikes the right balance. It gives law enforcement some discretion to take action on unsafe driving behaviors in a reasonable manner. If you are just taking a sip of your coffee or simply touching a button on your car stereo, you won't get a ticket. However, if you're putting on makeup, texting, or playing on your laptop, you're obviously distracted. Any of these activities would be considered an offence under the proposed bill. Make no mistake; you cannot drive safely when you are distracted. You cannot multitask and drive at the same time. Bill 16 will give law enforcement another tool to better address distracted driving in Alberta and ultimately make our roads safer.

Since the introduction of the legislation Albertans have had an opportunity to review Bill 16 and provide comments, and I'm pleased to tell you that the majority of the feedback received from law enforcement, stakeholders, and the general public shared positive comments and support for this bill. They are eager to see the bill become law.

As the Minister of Transportation and the MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I can tell you that many people have said to me: glad you're doing something about this. Then they give me an example of something crazy that they've seen on our roads. I know that my department has received many letters and e-mails and phone calls. Albertans are curious about this proposed bill and want to know what it'll mean, and I'm so pleased to say that the majority of Albertans who have contacted us are in favour of this bill.

Proceeding with this proposed legislation will give law enforcement another tool to help make our roads safer. We are also sending a strong safety message to all Albertans: when you are in your vehicle, your focus must be on driving.

We must take action on this important traffic safety issue. Mr. Speaker, even one fatality on our roads is one too many. We are making improvements in reducing fatalities and injuries on our roads, and I'm pleased with the direction that we are going, but I also know that we can and we must do better. Traffic safety is a complex issue, and changing behaviors requires a comprehensive, focused, ongoing strategy. Our province's traffic safety plan does just that. Our strategy of public awareness campaigns, co-ordinated enforcement, effective legislation, working at the grassroots level, and the great work of our safety partners: all of these things are making a difference.

This is about all of us, every Albertan, and the role we play in making our roads safer. Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 16 will be a great addition to our strategy. I want to thank all Albertans for their support and for talking and educating themselves and others about the importance of focusing on the road. You've heard me say this many times: all of us want to get home safe to our families at the end of each and every day.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to give their full support to the proposed Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act. I look forward to its passage and becoming law.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My question is: as minister of transport do you recognize the need for exemptions? Obviously, police and emergency services; take it a step further, public transport, whether that be school buses or city-type buses, Greyhounds and so on. Do you also see the potential need for an exemption for transport trucks? When I say this, I'm also saying it could be the hands-free exemption as opposed to the hand-held because safety is extremely important.

Where I'm coming from is that for these individual drivers who fall into professional designations, whether emergency services or transport, do you recognize the need for them in their commercial endeavors and in their public safety provisions to be exempted from the legislation? Should it go the direction that I'm hoping, and that's hands-free, would these individuals be exempted? Do you think this would be a legitimate exemption? Personally, I do. I'd like your feedback as minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely I do. I think the simple way to answer that is: stay tuned. I think we will be seeing it when we go into committee. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will be bringing forward some amendments on feedback that we heard through the summer, and some of the things you spoke about just might happen to be in those amendments.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer I, too, heard a lot about this bill, and I got an awful lot of feedback, mostly positive.

I did get some concerns from ham radio operators. They have a lot of expensive equipment in their cars. One of the things they felt was that if they weren't allowed to use them all of the time, just on the occasions when they participated in search and rescue and at accident scenes – and they do provide a terrific service to the people of Alberta just by having that equipment in their cars – it probably wouldn't be worth their while to continue to have that equipment if they had too many restrictions on the use of it.

So I hope that going forward – and the minister can comment on this if he wishes – we recognize the valuable service these people provide for the people of Alberta with the equipment that they purchase and install in their cars.

Mr. Ouellette: I think you'll find that we have a lot of very good people in Alberta that do devote their time to emergency services and all different aspects of that. I think that when you see the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays bring his amendment forward, you'll see that part of that and the ham radio situation will be addressed in his amendment tomorrow or whenever we get into Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays brought some interesting statistics. I thought that it would be higher than 30 per cent of all collisions that are from distractions.

I'm wondering if the government is going to bring forward some reports or documents on why they've chosen to allow hands-free versus hand-held not being allowed. If we could see that. Also, whether they have any research that they can provide us about other areas that have implemented hands-free but have banned hand-held, whether there's been a change in the accident rate. Will the government bring forward a bunch of these reports or information on where we should be drawing the line on distracted driving?

I'm personally very concerned that we all understand that there are many distractions, and we're just basically forming a list that says: but not limited to. I just think that if safety is really what we're trying to address here, it should be a broader bill that just says that the peace officer could pull anybody over that is obviously distracted and driving in an irregular or erratic manner, to bring those people in as opposed to being found guilty because of something you're holding instead of what your actual driving is on the road.

Mr. Ouellette: In this country there is no one that's banned hands-free. So in this country there is no way to do a test on whether it's made any difference with hand-held or not hand-held.

The Acting Speaker: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak about this important piece of legislation, originally introduced last spring by the government. I want to start by complimenting the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his exceptionally well-researched soliloquy to the concept of: I told you so. I have to say it was really very impressive having him read back all these previous positions that had been so passionately taken by members of the government. You know, it raises a good point, which is simply that there is no question that there is safety to be achieved through this legislation. And it is heartening to see that the government has come some way in recognizing that and moving forward on that basis.

I think it's fairly clear that the research is out there that we can reduce the number of fatal and disabling traffic accidents by putting this type of legislation in place. Of course, the arguments against it are the same kind of arguments that people used to use against seat belts. You know, we'd always hear: why do we have to legislate common sense? Well, ultimately, someone finally made the point that – you know what? – with seat belt legislation you reduce injuries. The same is the case for this legislation, so it's a good piece of legislation.

I have some concerns with respect to the exclusion of hands-free communication from the application of this bill and the degree to which we might want to consider including the prohibition against hands-free into this bill. I appreciate the fact that there is no other jurisdiction in Canada that has gone that far yet, but that doesn't of course mean that on occasion this government couldn't actually be a leader in providing for public safety. So I think that's something that needs to be considered, and I suspect we'll receive more debate over the course of the passage of this bill.

The other issue I have, which, quite frankly, is a genuine question because I'm looking at the legislation and I'm seeking clarification on this piece, is the exemption in the legislation under section 2 that talks about exempting people who are required to have two-way radio communication for the purposes of their employment. I'm not actually sure if the use of that phrase "2-way radio communication" actually limits the scope of that exception or if, in fact, the government is exempting anybody who is required to use a cellphone for the purposes of their employment. If it's the former, well, then, I'm very interested in hearing why that exemption is there and how it's configured. If it's the latter, then I think we would advocate very strongly to have that exemption removed because many, many, many people are on the road because they are in the scope of their employment, and if all that is necessary is for the employer to say, "I need Joe to be available by cellphone" such that Joe has to have the cellphone with him, well, then, we're not getting anywhere with this.

What we're doing is saying: "Yeah, we recognize this is a huge public safety issue. We really want to get a handle on this unless your employer would rather that you not conduct yourself as safely as the research shows us you should." I appreciate the obvious exceptions that need to be in place with emergency personnel and police personnel and that kind of thing, but my concern is whether this exemption would ultimately be applied much more broadly than that group of people. So that's something that I'm actually seeking more clarification on from the sponsor of this bill because, obviously, that would be a concern for us.

Notwithstanding that, I'm at least pleased that we've taken this first step. I look forward to getting more information from the sponsor of the bill on these questions and look forward to ultimately having this bill passed in some form in the next couple of weeks.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the generous amount of research money that your party has been allocated, your caucus, I'm wondering if you've actually – you're usually very diligent in coming up with figures and numbers, and you made mention that you would like to see those numbers. So I guess my question for you is: has your caucus come up with some numbers to show that in jurisdictions that have passed this ban, there's been an actual reduction in accidents? And is there anywhere in the world where they've banned hands-free?

Are we really identifying the proper problem with distracted driving, or are we limiting it to just one area when, in fact, it needs to be much broader in going after the actual cause of distracted driving? It just seems like we're maybe going after one or two areas because they're popular. Do you have any research? Could you provide it? Like I say, even in the areas here in the country that have now banned hands-free, has there actually been a reduction in accidents? Could that be presented or tabled here in the House to have as information to make decisions?

Ms Notley: Well, although, certainly, our research budget is absolutely, gloriously generous compared to the research budget afforded to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, I will suggest that I suspect the research budget for the Ministry of Transportation is a touch bigger than ours, perhaps a hundredfold.

Certainly, I'm aware that some very important organizations have endorsed this move: the Alberta Motor Association, the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta, the Insurance Brokers' Association. These are all groups that typically do a lot of research, so I expect they probably do have the research. I don't have it in my notes, but I suspect they probably do have the research to show the compelling public safety objectives of even this legislation.

However, you are also correct that there is research out there to show that unless you include hands-free, you're not going to see the kinds of safety improvements that the legislation is pursuing at this point, that, in fact, you actually need to include hands-free as part of the ban in order to enjoy the accident-reduction statistics that the studies out there show. That's one study I'm aware of. Certainly, that's not an exhaustive list.

Mr. Hehr: I have a question for the hon. member. I, too, am concerned somewhat about the exemption for employees who are in the course of business. Do you think having that exemption would lead to difficulties, say, for our police officers in writing fines or enforcing them or court challenges if that exemption is allowed?

Ms Notley: Well, as I stated, my view is that I think there are some good, reasonable, sound reasons to exempt people like police officers, emergency personnel, those kinds of people from the application of this act. I might actually want to see it exempted and then refined through regulation so that there wasn't a full blanket exemption but, rather, some more legislative persuasion for ensuring that the employer of police and emergency personnel have to do all that they can to have the least distracting communication mechanism with those people.

My concern around the way the legislation is written right now is that it just talks about all employees who are required by their employer to have two-way radio communication. Depending on what that means – and that's why, of course, I've put the question out, to find out exactly who that actually covers. My concern is that if, you know, a real estate agent or – well, the list of people who are required by employers to be available by cellphone when they're on the road is endless. If that's simply what we're exempting, then that, of course, probably exempts half the people on the road on any given day. That's obviously (a) not good for public safety, and (b) I just don't think that there's any justification for treating the safety of employees differently than the safety of people who don't happen to be at work. Why should you lose those rights if it's not absolutely necessary for you to do your job? So the question becomes: what does that legislation and that exemption mean?

As I say, I continue to wait for more information from either the minister or from the sponsor of the bill because it may well be that I'm interpreting the exemption more broadly than is intended.

The Acting Speaker: Next speaker, the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 16. Just before I begin my comments, I want to give credit to the Member for Calgary-Hays as well as the hon. Minister of Transportation for their good work on this file. This has been a while coming, but I feel that we have struck the right balance here. I feel that we have got this right.

I just want to begin my comments, Mr. Speaker, with an act of contrition to this House in the fact that I have actually been an offender, using a cellphone while driving, believe it or not, as have many other people here, obviously.

An Hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Denis: No, I'm not going to resign. I'm not going to resign, hon. member.

All kidding aside, people's attitudes have really changed on this topic over the last few years. In fact, I was just talking to a constituent on the phone. He picked up the phone and said he was going to pull over. Several years ago people wouldn't think twice about just continuing to drive. In fact, attitudes are changing, but attitudes are not enough, Mr. Speaker.

Currently under the Traffic Safety Act a person can be prohibited from careless activities. It's a very subjective test, Mr. Speaker. Section 115 reads: "For the purpose of this section, a driver of a vehicle is driving carelessly if that driver drives the vehicle . . . without due care and attention." Now, some people have suggested to me in the past that this is enough, this is a catch-all, this subjective test is enough, and we don't need this legislation. I'd have to beg to differ.

Interestingly enough, a while ago, through a friend of mine I used to practise law with, I read about a judgment that happened in Calgary. In fact, a gentleman was found texting while driving, and the justice said that to be texting while driving may come close to the crime of dangerous driving. Now, of course, careless driving is a civil standard; dangerous driving deals with a criminal standard as well. This person was fined $2,000, he was sentenced to 90 days' driving prohibition, and he had to pay a $300 victim of crime surcharge. Now, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, that's the exception rather than the rule. Very seldom does careless driving actually make it that far. It's usually pled down. Again, it's a very cumbersome process for the courts to go and undertake, to go and move forward with this type of charge when you have a subjective standard.

I read through the bill as well. Of course, this bill does more than ban hand-held cellphone use; it actually looks at banning texting devices, texting machines. Section 115 deals with that as well, but it also, I'm pleased to say, bans reading or viewing printed material. It bans writing, printing, or sketching, engaging in personal grooming or hygiene, or any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations. Now, a couple things that are important there. First off, it allows for further amendments by way of regulation. It recognizes that devices or distractions that we don't know of today at some point in the future may actually pose a significant risk, and it allows the minister to go and make those steps through regulation.

In addition to that, it has both an objective and subjective test. You have the objective test banning certain devices and certain activities but also a subjective test if a person is found to be driving carelessly, and that could be a whole myriad of other issues. Let's also remember that most Albertans, Mr. Speaker, are law-abiding citizens, and the fact that we do have this objective test prohibiting these certain activities will in fact offer a significant deterrent to drivers on Alberta roads.

I have to say that this has not been a knee-jerk reaction. There has been significant study that the Minister of Transportation has undergone, and I believe that we have struck the right balance, that we have got it right, and we're not going to have to come back in the future with amendment after amendment after amendment.

I do want to share with this House, Mr. Speaker, a bit of a story. When I was a child, quite often my family and I would drive from Saskatchewan to Alberta, and my father, who worked in insurance, would start laughing over and over that Alberta actually didn't have seat belt legislation. We thought that this was funny. Well, of course, Alberta did get seat belt legislation in 1987, but later that came to me, and I was very happy that he had instilled in me the importance of safety and the importance of seat belts because I was almost killed in a traffic accident in 1990.

At the same time, I can tell you that very few people today question seat belt laws in Alberta or throughout Canada, and I'd put to this House, Mr. Speaker, that very few people five, 10 years from now are going to question this type of legislation. In fact, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has pointed out, this is becoming accepted throughout North America and, I would argue, throughout the world as well. Again, few people will question this, looking ahead five or 10 years. I would put to this House that very few people would not question it if we failed to do so and if, in fact, we were the only province without cellphone legislation as we were without seat belt legislation.

I do want to mention, just in conclusion, the issue of enforceability and why non hand-held devices were not included here. It is an issue of what we can reasonably expect our police and sheriffs to actually be able to enforce.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity had made a comment that there are some studies indicating that it's the mental act of having a conversation. The question I would put to this House is: as the next step, then, do you want to ban all conversation in vehicles? Is the driver not allowed to speak, then, to other passengers in the vehicle? The point is, Mr. Speaker, that we have struck the right balance in this legislation.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I also did put this on my Twitter as I do often ask for comments. I have to say that in jest somebody said to me: hurry up; I'm trying to watch the streaming video while I drive. Of course, this was in jest, but this underpins the need for this type of legislation. There has been a significant amount of technological advances over the last five, 10, 20 years. There will be more in the future as well, and we have to act now. We also have to train the drivers of today and tomorrow with good driving habits, and that begins with Bill 16.

I'm very proud to support this, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments that the hon. member has just made. He made the comment that he didn't expect that we'd be back having to add anything to this piece of legislation. I appreciate that probably it's enabling, which means that there could be some additions through regulations.

I'm curious about your take on these bright headlights and the fact that if you have to do as much driving on a two-lane highway as I do, those bright headlights are really more of a distraction, I believe, than a cellphone, not only those lights but also these four-wheel-drive vehicles that they build up. I know I parked by one in Rocky Mountain House the other day, and the headlights were above my eyes. Even if they've got their dims on, they're still going to be coming into the vehicle. To make matters even worse, those so-called fog lights, the ones that are down lower: they have the bright lights in those as well, and those you cannot adjust. So they're shining right in your face.

I'm curious what your take would be on adding those kinds of things to this bill because, quite frankly, they're getting very dangerous.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House for his comments. I do have a tendency to agree with him that some of the new bulbs in vehicle headlights can be an issue. In fact, my personal vehicle back in Calgary has xenon headlights, and they're very, very difficult at night. I can see how they can be very grating on a person's eyes.

The one distinction there, Mr. Speaker, is that that is a matter for regulation, for the hon. Minister of Transportation to look at. It doesn't necessarily deal with distracted driving. The pith and substance of this bill, Mr. Speaker, deals with distractions primarily in hand-held devices, GPSs and cellphones, and again the subjective standard as well.

While I respect his comments and think maybe that's something that the hon. Minister of Transportation should look at, I do not think that this fits in the pith and substance of Bill 16.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the hon. minister. Maybe I'm barking up the wrong tree here, but it pertains to one of the exemptions. It says in 115.1(4) that it allows the use of cellphones and other electronic devices in the course of employment. I was wondering whether in his view this was just an amendment that appears to me at first blush to be very wide and whether this is going to cause difficulties for our police officers and our courts to actually enforce. Are we now going to have to drag in phone records, all of that stuff, if someone is going to go to court? I'd just like to hear his contributions on that question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments. I do think, first off, that there does have to be a certain number of exemptions in the bill; one of them, for example, dealing with police. One of my best friends is a police officer, and I know some of the things that they go and deal with. They also have a significantly greater amount of driver training than the average person – and I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Hays would smile – to deal with that as well.

At the same time, I would also put to this member that as a matter of evidence if somebody is charged with this, a cellphone record could actually be used on a person's phone to indicate that they were using or not using a cellphone because sometimes it can be difficult to see if a person actually is using that phone, in and of itself. Of course, we will see some jurisprudence on this issue, as other provinces with similar bans have. Again, I really feel that we have struck the right balance here between an individual's liberty and also safety on the road. Let us all remember that driving is not a right; it is a privilege.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, about 27 seconds.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate your concerns. I do not equate speaking to electronic ethereal voices with having a conversation in the car. That said, I would like to ban back-seat drivers. I also want to acknowledge and connect with your stories of driving through Saskatchewan as I had a grandmother in Meota and one in Saskatoon.

The Acting Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join in debate at second reading on Bill 16. I more or less agree with the hon. minister of housing that we've got the balance just about right on this bill, I think, and we should have, too. I mean, this bill started out life as a private member's bill seeking to ban the use of hand-held cellphones, and that's basically all that it sought to do. This House in its wisdom saw fit to refer that private member's bill to one of the standing committees of the Legislature. That committee, having conducted public hearings, taken written submissions, brought forward a recommendation to the House, which the House followed, that the private member's bill should go no further but that the ministers of I believe it was Transportation, Justice, and Solicitor General, if I remember correctly, should collaborate on coming up with a government bill that would in fact address the broader issue of distracted driving.

I sat on that committee. We felt that it was important to go beyond just the issue of cellphones because there are any number of distractions that we can all fall prey to. The most distracted driving event that there is is if a wasp, a hornet, flies into your car. That pretty much distracts any driver. The statistics show that that's the most dangerous distraction that we can face. We can't very well ban hornets, but there are a number of distractions over which we do have control as drivers.

The minister was right: driving is a privilege, not a right. This bill seeks to address, I think, some of the most obvious and common sense of those distractions and say: lookit, we're not trying to be really heavy handed here. We're not saying that the police are going to pull up alongside every car on the highway, every car on the street, peer in the window to see what the driver is up to. What we're saying is that if the officer essentially has probable cause to believe that you are doing something that is distracting you while you're in a moving vehicle and in control of that moving vehicle, he has the right to pull you over and now, if we pass this bill, to ticket you for $172, I believe the fine is. Yes, it is $172 and no demerit points.

There was some logic that went into that, too. Without this bill the Traffic Safety Act forbids driving without due care and attention, driving without reasonable consideration for persons on the highway, and driving a vehicle on the highway in a manner that constitutes driving carelessly. If you're ticketed for that, you're issued a fine of $402 and six demerit points. Guess what? It's worth it for most people to challenge that ticket in court.

As we heard in submissions and hearings to the committee, police are very, very reluctant to lay those kinds of charges even when they feel that it would be justified to do so because it is very, very difficult to get a conviction in court. A lot of people fight the charge. A lot of times the charge gets plea bargained down. You know, it's not really, in the final analysis, worth their while to do that. So you have a situation where in order to address the problem of distracted driving today, we have to take a fairly draconian approach that people will fight in court, so nothing gets done.

This seeks to create a fine that is big enough to hurt a little bit, you know, big enough that you'll notice if you get ticketed but not so big that it's probably worth taking a day off and going and fighting it in court. I think in that instance we've got the balance absolutely right. In fact, I think this is one of the better bills that I've seen in my time in the Legislature in terms of the thought that has gone into it. I congratulate those involved in crafting the bill.

There are just a couple of things that I'm concerned about. One, I would like some clarification when we get to committee stage because the bill refers quite specifically to cellular telephones or other communication devices, and it also refers in other sections quite specifically to two-way radio communication. Now, I'm taking that to mean that we're talking about the old-style, old-school two-way radio in a vehicle with a hand-held microphone that's hard-wired into a radio set, probably mounted in the console or something like that. I'm not taking that to mean that two-way radio communication is a synonym, is interchangeable, with cellular telephone. I think the purpose of this bill here was to differentiate between the two, and I'm looking for some confirmation of that when we get to committee stage. If that's confirmed, that resolves that problem.

The other two issues, though, that are very important to me are these. There needs to be a public education strategy that goes along with this bill because there are enough instances now in jurisdictions around this continent and around the world where the banning of cellphone use has resulted in fewer drivers using their cellphones while driving, but in other jurisdictions it's proven to have no real effect on the percentage of drivers using cellular devices. So no matter how we word this bill, we need to be prepared to launch into a public education, advertising, advocacy campaign that goes along with the enforcement because what we really want to do with this bill, Mr. Speaker, is change behaviour for the better for the safety of us all.

The other concern is that the bill does not address hands-free cellular phones. Well, it does in effect in that it exempts them. I have a real problem with that because the research that I've seen and the research that came across our desks at committee clearly showed that you are just as distracted talking on a hands-free cellphone while driving a car as you are on a hand-held phone. It's not the act unless, of course, you drop the phone while you're driving down the Minister of Transportation's new stretch of pavement on southbound highway 2 or, worse, one of the old stretches of pavement. Unless you drop the phone.

It's not the act of holding the phone that's the distraction. It's the act of talking to someone not in the vehicle with you, someone who can't see out the windshield and see the same things that you can see sometimes before you see them and warn you to slow down or can back off the conversation because he sees that you're getting into a bit of a tight spot. No, the person on the other end of the phone is, you know, perhaps half a continent away, and they're just interested in getting a better price from you. They have no way of knowing whether you're in a driving pickle or not.

We do need to find a way, I believe, to ban all cellphone communications by drivers in a moving vehicle, with the obvious exception – and I'm talking for civilian drivers now – where there's a necessity to call 911. Okay? That exemption is, I believe, in the bill.

The safety issue and the distraction issue are the same. I understand that there's a bigger difficulty with enforcing the hands-free angle than the hand-held angle, but I think the minister of housing touched on it there a few minutes ago. It's a matter of degree of difficulty. I think it's a difficulty that we can overcome if we mate this legislation to a good, strong, effective public education strategy. That's the main flaw that I find with the bill. I'll be interested to see what comes of that as we get into the bill at committee stage.

In principle I have no problem supporting this bill. It is a significant step forward from where we are today. It is a significant step forward from where many jurisdictions have specifically addressed the hand-held cellphone use issue, like Ontario, for instance, which is celebrating, I believe, the one-year anniversary today of banning hand-held phones in their jurisdiction.

This is a step forward because it doesn't just deal with cellular phones. It deals with eating and drinking and combing your hair and reading a novel. I will never forget the day when I was driving to Mount Royal University back when it was a college when I was a sessional instructor there and I had an 8 o'clock class. I'm driving down Glenmore Trail in a snowstorm at 7:45 in the morning, traffic is moving at maybe 75 kilometres an hour, and here right in the middle lane is somebody in a great big honkin' Cadillac Escalade or a Ford Excursion or something like that . . .

An Hon. Member: Maybe that was me.

Mr. Taylor: No, it wasn't, unless you were in drag, hon. member, that day.

. . . driving down the road reading a novel when it was snowing. This bill takes care of ridiculous, irresponsible behaviour like that and gives our law enforcement officers the authority to do something realistic about it.

So in principle I'm absolutely delighted to support this bill. I think the committee did good work. I think the hon. member who brought this bill forward did good work. I think there was good work done by the ministries involved, and I look forward to this bill passing second reading and getting down to some of the details in committee.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think that whether this bill passes or fails will have potentially something to do with the exemptions. You also mentioned the importance of public education, and I agree very much with the need for public education. I think probably the organization that is going to equally need that education will be our law enforcement officers because unless they've got a sound case – if they're using possibly their webcams in their vehicles and they can record it just the way photoradar records licence plates and drivers with great detail, then I think the chances of enforcement will be better.

Also, we know that there are a number of companies who are way ahead of our provincial trend, and they've already banned individuals from talking while driving. But the lack of clarity, as you pointed out with CB radios, and the need to pull over in emergent circumstances: you and I have both had the pleasure or the danger of driving up highway 63, and there are very few pull-offs. I'm just wondering about drivers of transport trucks having the opportunity to communicate with their station about weather concerns as they're going past the lakes and so on. How do you see us defining those exemptions so that we capture the right balance?

Mr. Taylor: Well, hon. member, first, I think that what you're asking here involves a number of issues that we have to get to in committee, and we should all tackle those issues. Secondly, I think that these questions perhaps are best put to the sponsor of the bill or to the Minister of Transportation as opposed to an opposition MLA, who has only limited authority in this area. But, third, hon. member, the true answer to your question is that if the Minister of Transportation would just get on with the job of twinning highway 63, your question would be rendered irrelevant.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the many good points that the hon. member has brought forward. I have one other question, though, on clarification. Again, many members have talked about this, but it hasn't really been addressed. The minister of housing talked about it. I have a concern that we're making a list, and then because of that list we're excluding a lot of distracted driving. Again, it just seems like if a policeman is driving behind a vehicle and they see them driving erratically or poorly, that should qualify to pull them over to give them a ticket because they're obviously distracted and not paying attention.

In all your committee work, hon. member, that you were able to participate in, was that never brought up and discussed? Actually expanding the latitude of this to ensure that a policeman can pull someone over who's driving poorly and just give them a ticket as opposed to having to say, "Well, I saw you grooming your hair," when, in fact, the person argues, "Well, no, I was swatting at that hornet." It just seems like we're opening up this Pandora's box.

The other question is: in all of your exemptions when you talked on that, are you looking at an exemption for professional drivers with a class 1, 2, or 3 driver's licence, and someone with a regular driver's licence does not have that?

Mr. Taylor: Hon. member, the bill that is in front of us today is the result of a committee recommendation that the three ministries that I mentioned earlier – Transportation, Solicitor General, and Justice – get together and design and craft a distracted driving bill. Now, I assume that tomorrow or in the fullness of time – and the Government House Leader will be in control of this agenda – we will get to this bill in committee study. At that point we all have a crack at deciding what exemptions should or should not be in this bill. I've already indicated to you, hon. member, that I think one exemption that is in this bill we should perhaps consider taking out, and that's the issue of hands-free.

As far as addressing the issue of the bad driver who is just driving poorly as they drive down the road . . . [Mr. Taylor's speaking time expired] Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the bill the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening with interest for the last hour or so to the discussion and debate on Bill 16. Certainly, I would like to express on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar our appreciation to the hon. member from Calgary who has brought this bill forward. I spoke to a number of people over the summer in our constituency, and the vast majority of them instructed me to vote in favour of this legislation, which I'm only too glad to do. I think we will have safer highways as a result of this. It's a long time in coming, as has been discussed by previous speakers, but it is here, and it's certainly time that we get on with it.

It covers a wide range of distractions: cellphones, texting, computer screens, personal hygiene, reading, writing. Everyone has witnessed in the course of travelling across this province some of the driving habits of licensed motorists, and some of those habits, Mr. Speaker, as we all know, are very, very unsafe, everything from having pets over the steering wheel to reading books, as the hon. member has witnessed. A lot can be done. This is a start, and we should, again, express our gratitude to the hon. member.

Now, there are some exemptions to this, such as emergency personnel. The specific language of the bill includes an emergency vehicle. I would assume that that would include a tow truck driver. I hope we can get some clarification on that. There are concerns around this bill about how it's going to be enforced, but, again, this is a good start.

I don't think we can overlook the comments from the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, who earlier in the discussion suggested we could go a little bit further with some of the headlights that can now be customized into vehicles in this province. Certainly, constituents in Edmonton-Gold Bar have expressed an opinion on this very similar to what the hon. member has suggested or articulated here this afternoon. I have corresponded with the Minister of Transportation regarding this matter on behalf of one constituent in particular on 46th Street and 105th Avenue in our constituency. This gentleman goes into rural Alberta frequently for recreational purposes, and at night it is not only a distraction; it's a dangerous distraction whenever he is approaching a vehicle with these customized headlights. I agree with the constituent. I agree with the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House that we need to work on this as well. Hopefully, some control put on the intensity of the illumination from those lights will not take as long as what we heard regarding the response, or the lack of response in this case, to cellphone legislation in this province.

The Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act. The hon. member earlier talked about how technology is changing. Well, certainly, it is. On most if not all new vehicles, whether it is standard equipment or it can be purchased for $500 to $800 as an extra, there are many devices now that are fitted right into the car. There are buttons that are on the steering wheel that can require a person, if necessary, to answer a call hands free. Those devices exist. Microsoft has a system. I think it works with Ford. General Motors has a system. There's a real improvement in the technology, and those technological improvements are a reflection of other jurisdictions which have already passed laws similar to what we are proposing here with Bill 16. So the automotive industry has stepped up to the plate, and it's about time that this Assembly does as well.

Hopefully, this proposed bill, Bill 16, will be passed by this Assembly, and we won't waste a lot of time before it's proclaimed and it comes into force because I'm confident that it will improve highway safety. I'm an individual who has to curtail my own personal habits with cellphone use, Mr. Speaker, just like the hon. member across the way. It is a good thing, this bill, not only for my own safety but for the safety of the province.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members of Oprah Winfrey. I forget what her slogan was, but it was worthwhile in America to promote public safety through the restriction of cellphone use. I must admit that I don't get an opportunity to watch Oprah, but I certainly heard from our constituents what her opinion was, what their opinion is.

Mr. Speaker, again, thank you to the hon. member for bringing this forward. I think we're going to have safer streets and roads. On behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar who contacted us over the summer, thank you very much, sir.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. We talked about the difficulty of enforcement and the two levels of fines. My question to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has to do with: does he think that $172 is a sufficient fine? For example, a sheriff is driving down the highway, and he sees ahead of him a person that seems to be making unsafe lane changes. He puts on his lights, he's proceeding up to the driver, and at that moment the driver whips out his cellphone. The sheriff says, "I notice that you were distracted driving." He replies to the sheriff: "Yes. I saw the flashing lights, and I contacted my lawyer." Does he get the $172 fine, or does he get the $450? Do you have an opinion on whether this $172 fine is going to be sufficiently strong and financially punitive enough to get across the message?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly think that a fine changes people's habits. I can only speak from personal experience here. I was going to one of our caucus meetings in Calgary that the hon. member called, and I was looking at that development in Balzac. It's just on the left-hand side of the road as you're going south on highway 2. I was going too fast, and I was apprehended by one of Calgary's finest. I don't think the ticket was $172, but it was enough to curtail my speeding habits. If it's a deterrent for me, I'm confident that whatever fine that's administered or enforced or written will change the bad driving habits of other Alberta drivers.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to Bill 16? We are now back on Bill 16. Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to speak in favour of this bill. It is a bill that has been a long time coming. I believe it will lead to public safety and a lessening of the dangers to both people who use cellphones as well as those who don't. It will just make our roads much safer. Productivity time lost in this province, in fact this nation, due to traffic accidents is immense, and this will no doubt lead to increasing some of that productivity as well as keeping people generally safer.

I recognize that the bill does have a few exemptions. While we're there, I'd just like to ask a couple of questions of maybe the mover of the bill, who I would like to commend for his efforts on getting this bill through, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who has worked very hard to educate people on this and to bring forward a very good bill. But I have a couple of questions. It's primarily due to the exemptions, and maybe if I get them on the record, we can get an answer at some point in time.

For instance, we have an exemption here – I believe it's (c) – that says, "an individual driving or operating a vehicle who is using 2-way radio communication." Oh, that one is fine. Okay. It's the one when we're using a two-way radio device to communicate with an employer. I'm just wondering if that would be a blanket exemption for anyone who uses a two-way radio device or a cellular phone or something to that effect. I'm just looking for a little more clarification on that. If we could do that at the appropriate time, that would help me out in whether or not we could do something a little more to refine the bill even further. I believe that's in 115.1: whether that allows the use of cellphones and other electronic devices in the course of employment, what activities are contemplated by this exemption, and whether there is a list of those coming in the regulations or whether you can provide some clarification on that front. That would be greatly appreciated.

Just backing up a little bit, in my short time in the House I believe we've asked numerous questions on this going back to 2008, when we were going to see this type of legislation. I believe we first started out asking for a ban on cellphones, and now it has gone to distracted driving, which is, of course, a better bill, but it has taken some time. I appreciated the comments by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who pointed out that he brought in legislation although not exactly like this but similar to this way back in 2005, and I can't help but imagine.

I've heard this a time or two in this House that we can't legislate common sense and that type of stuff. You know, I understand that sentiment. But at the same point in time, you have to protect people, okay? If people were just using cellular phones and driving themselves off a cliff, fair be it. Some people might even say: thanks for thinning the herd. Nevertheless, it's not that simple. The simple fact of the matter is that people use cellphones. We have to make rules and laws that protect individuals. Other people use the road, and sometimes we have to look at the fact that sometimes we have to legislate to protect people from other people's inanity or lack of common sense. So I'd just like to put that on the record.

Nevertheless, I think this bill is a great move, and I believe it'll lead to safer streets and allow people to move forward with some clarity on what the law is here in Alberta. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, and I appreciate the comments from my hon. colleague for Calgary-Buffalo. Hon. colleague, I don't believe the law you practised was of a criminal nature. You can correct me if I'm wrong, but there are so many organizations, a number of them run by former policemen, whose business is dependent on getting people off tickets and so on. Do you think that at this point, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned, the education of the public, the $172 ticket will be enough initially to create the drivers' change in attitude that we're hoping for in Bill 16?

Mr. Hehr: I thank you for the question. I did hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie's explanation that it may actually clear up our court systems, allow us enough of a deterrent to keep people from fighting this bill and keep them from missing a day of work and having a police officer have to miss a day of work to come defend this. Prior to coming in here this afternoon, I hadn't really even thought about that angle, but $172 is around the range. Whether that can be fine-tuned to $250 I'm not sure. I'd like to do a little more research on that, but nevertheless it's in the ballpark, whether it's an exact figure. I'm not sure if putting it up to a $500 exemption – maybe that would be better.

I understand that oftentimes the higher the fine, the greater the compliance. That may be something to consider. I may actually go away and look at something on fines and their connection to laws and people filing and find out whether it would actually be too big of a pain to do it in that respect. It's a very good question and one that possibly the mover of the bill could discuss with us later on, the selection of $172 and his experience as a police officer or what the actual implications are for the legal system.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo raises some interesting points, especially around using a communication device in the course of your job. I can see some pretty innovative ideas of getting around the law by saying, "Well, I'm talking to my boss," when, in fact, you're talking to your wife. How is an officer going to make that judgment call out there?

I would recommend to the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays that he be a little bit more restrictive in these job definitions in the amendments that are being brought forward to perhaps restrict it to things like pilot vehicles, where there's evidence that it has to be used. I've noticed bumper stickers on corporate vehicles that say: "This vehicle does not use a communication device" and "How is my driving? Phone this number." More and more companies are recognizing the danger of this, and they are advising their people not to use it while they're driving.

On the issue of fines that was just discussed, I, too, was on this committee, and the whole idea of this is to keep the fine down to a minimum level to educate the public to comply, not to be punitive. We already have a fairly punitive law in the $500 range for driving without due care and attention. You want to have something that's not going to tie up the courts. You want to have something that's going to get people's attention when they're disobeying the law, that they're going to be angry, they're going to be upset, but they're going to think about what they did. Are they going to take another day off to go to court? Likely if it's $500, they would. Likely if it's a minimum fine, they'll pay it and say: I don't want to do that again, so I'll pay a little more attention to my driving. That was the whole intent of the committee bringing this minimum fine forward on this. You know, through regulation, if it doesn't work there, we can always change it and add to that at some point in time.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. The time is closed on that.
On the bill, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to commend the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this bill forward. Again, I would like to point out that the government has finally realized that great, good, and sensible ideas can actually come from the opposition. Take them, and then run with them.

One of the reasons that I think some of the ideas that come from our side are a little different from yours is because some of the people that we talk to are perhaps more open in their objections and their critiques of some of the government actions or, in fact, the things that they would like the government to do, which I think this is a good example of. Certainly, we've been talking about this and hearing about this from our constituencies for a very long time.

I do believe that this is a good first step, and one of the reasons I'm saying that – and it has been mentioned before – is because I am not really worried about where your hands are. It has been many, many, many years since I've had to worry about where the hands are and what they're doing. What I'm worried about is: where is your mind? What I really want to know is: where is your mind, and is it distracted?

I don't need research to tell me that distraction is distraction. I know that we've talked about the radio being a distraction. I don't find it necessarily a distraction unless I'm listening to a specific radio station with a specific host who definitely distracts me, and I will often change the station because I disagree with almost everything that he says. [interjection] Actually, it has just been drawn to my attention that there are two of them, that if I listen to them on the radio, I am very distracted.

One of the points that I'd like to make, that we have talked about, is the fact of the $167 or $178 fine. Actually, for people with money I don't believe that the fine will perhaps do what we want it to do, educate their behaviour. What really will change their behaviour are demerit marks. As they get closer – perhaps I shouldn't share my personal letters from the ministry of wherever that sends them out and says that you're close to your demerit marks total. I think that demerit marks really, especially because it affects your insurance, are a much quicker way of educating and changing the behaviour of drivers. I believe that it would be a much quicker way.

As I've said, I'm worried about where your mind is, not necessarily your hands, so I'm not particularly in favour of having the hands-free driving. Having said that, even GPSs can be very – I believe that there is some information that has actually said that if you take your mind off the road for a certain percentage of time, you actually have driven the distance of a football field, so what it does is the distraction cuts down your reaction time as well. So although I think this is a very good first step – and everyone that I have spoken to is certainly in favour of it – I've heard nothing other than the comment that I made that they think that even the hands-free driving can be distracting.

I had occasion to do some sign waving. Again, I know that I'm going to hear a lot of conversation about: well, that's distracting as well. But I was by a highway, and the traffic was coming. It was two solid hours. Needless to say, after even 10 minutes of sign waving, you try to think of something else other than just smiling, so I started to count. Every third person was on their cellphone as they went by me. That was a tremendous amount of people on cellphones within the two hours that I was watching. One of the other things that was interesting – and this is certainly where I'm going to get the talkback on the distraction – was that somebody actually took their hand off the wheel to wave at me while their other hand was using a cellphone. So it doesn't take much to distract drivers.

The other thing is that I think we would have to be very clear on what is an employee. As has been mentioned, I can see some pretty creative ways of saying that they're employees. I know that some companies are saying: "No. You cannot use cellphones. You have to pull over."

There's a broad range of people that we count on to get to us very quickly. I'm thinking of EMS and fire and police. These types of employees that we count on, by the time they get there, they have to have the information. Again, say an EMS situation, they have to be able to transmit all of that information to the hospital as they're transporting someone. Usually they don't transport alone. They're not driving and transporting. However, there is the occasion where that may happen. Again, they would be considered the employee.

The GPS is the one that I think is certainly the most useful and that we use a lot. If it was voice directed, I think that's better than having to actually look at it. Even if you're being voice directed to a direction, you are being very, very focused on that direction and where they're telling you: "Turn left. Turn right on such and such a street." You're very focused on what you're doing.

I think it's a little bit different than when you're arguing with whomever at the other end of the phone, particularly young teenage drivers, who won't be allowed to text, but they're talking to someone, and they totally get distracted. So even if they are hands-free and they're arguing with a girlfriend or they're arguing with their parent or they're arguing with whoever, you can rest assured that their distraction is very acute.

The other place – and I don't agree with it, but you see it all the time, too – is that when you're driving on the highway and you're alone, pretty much have the road to yourself, and you're talking with somebody on the phone, it's a whole pile different than if you're going bumper to bumper or you've missed a red light because you are on the phone. I'm not saying that we should do it, but it is a different scenario.

I think that B.C. and Ontario have sort of already got what we've got, and, again, they are allowing hands-free use. The other thing that we know is that all the car companies are coming out with hands-free equipment that I'm sure will probably be standard in not too long a time.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I would leave it at that because I know that there will be further discussion as we go forward with this bill both in committee and certainly on third. But a good step forward, a long time in coming. Again, kudos to the Member for Calgary-Hays, who finally brought this forward and brings it with his experience as a police officer, which I think gives it a tremendous amount of validity. As a one-time emergency nurse I understand some of the things that he's talking about because car accidents are pretty horrific no matter what's caused them, either drunk driving or distracted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What I want to note, Mr. Speaker, right off is the varied opinions of members throughout this House in terms of how far we take this legislation, but I think we've noticed unanimity in the need for this legislation to go forward. I'm just wondering: a question I have for my hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is that with an officer's interpretation of distracted driving, whether it's hands-free or hand-held, do you think that's going to change the officer's interpretation if he's seeing distracted driving occurring?

Ms Pastoor: Well, no, I don't. If need be, I'm sure that regulations will be able to define clearly exactly what these police officers are going to be charging someone with. I don't think there's anything more frustrating – and I know that many of our police officers go through this, particularly on the drug side of things. I think there's nothing more discouraging to the people that we hire to look after us than actually being able to charge people under the law within the parameters of the law that's been given them, and the next thing you know it's been beaten because of some loophole or perhaps some interpretation that has been different than the police officer's, that is doing his job. So I think that it must be very clear. Again, the educational part of it for the drivers will make it very clear what this officer is charging you with and how you've broken the law.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. Anyone wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I'm just interested that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East mentioned many times that she was very concerned on where the mind was and not where the hands are. Again, I just have to ask: does she find in distracted driving . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'm truly delighted today to introduce a very special friend. He's back to reacquaint himself with Alberta in a brand new position. His Excellency Andrew Needs is with us today representing New Zealand, a proud Commonwealth partner. New Zealand and Alberta share many things in common, trade opportunities and much more. We had a chance to chat – he will be meeting with our Premier this afternoon – not only on the trade opportunities that we're familiar with like the imports of lamb, New Zealand lamb being, we believe, the best in the world, but the exchange of technology, the work that our postsecondary institutions do together, his special interest in carbon sequestration, and the other kinds of technology that Alberta is hoping to become even more famous for in the years ahead. Ladies and gentlemen, here representing New Zealand, currently living in Canada, back again to hopefully enjoy Canadian hospitality, is His Excellency – and he likes to be known as Andrew – Andrew Needs. Would you please rise.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you'd agree, I'm sure, it's always a good day for an MLA when you have schoolchildren from your constituency visit, and that's the case for me today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from C.B. McMurdo elementary school in Wetaskiwin along with their teacher, Dawn Werner, and teacher helper Marnie Boyles. I'm very proud to have these great young Albertans and future leaders come and see how the Assembly works. They also had an opportunity to meet with the hon. Minister of Education. They're seated in the members' gallery, and if they'd stand, I would ask that my colleagues give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a great pleasure to introduce students from around Alberta to the Assembly through you. Today I'm introducing a class from one of the many fine schools in Edmonton-Riverview. It's a class from a francophone school, l'école Notre-Dame. There are 30 of them here today. They're seated in the public gallery, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Larochelle. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members 20 exceptional students from Sweet Grass elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are accompanied by teacher Nicki Gardner and group leaders Gwen Koch and Emmy Oben. They're here to observe the legislative process in action, and I'd ask all members to please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark it is with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students from the Meadowlark Christian school. I hope the students are enjoying their afternoon at the Legislature. At this time I'd ask the students, the parents, and the teachers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and inform you that I had a wonderful meeting with the public service orientation team from my department just this afternoon, and they're here in the gallery today. I have Lesley Kelly, Krystal Therien, Cheryl Friske, Genieve Simpson, Angela Wilson, Leanne Mathewson, Vivian Yeung, Karen Hayny, Ruth Gero, Jennifer Andressen, Isobel Lawson, Linda Gatzka, Jodie Buksa, Lenda Fisher, Ronald Mulick, Susanne George, Judy Chou, Claude Coupal, Jessica Smith, and John Lashley here. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly and my thanks for the great work that they do in the department.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my constituency assistant. Emily Plihal has been working with me for a number of months now, and prior to this, she was editor of our local paper, and in her spare time she helps her family in their guiding business. I would like to ask Emily to stand – Emily is in the members' gallery – and receive the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. There are six members of the Killarney Community League present in the members' gallery today, not only to watch the exciting happenings of the House, but more importantly they proudly represent a large community of people who celebrated the 50th anniversary of the Killarney Community League. I would ask each of them to stand as I mention their names. We have Ernest Pawluski, president of the Killarney Community League, Terry Baumgartner, Bill Maxim, Lorne Niehaus, and Mary Ellen Pawluski. I would ask all members of the House to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to do. My first introduction. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Giani Pargat Singh. It is a great pleasure to see Giani Pargat Singh here in the Assembly. The last seven to eight years he has been teaching and preaching to Sikhs across Canada, the U.S.A., the U.K., and spreading the message of love, peace, and brotherhood in the Sikh community. He belongs to the village where I was born in India and has always called me Uncle Peter. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The second introduction. I have known Mohinder Singh Cumo and Zora Singh Jhajj for the last eight years. Both are very dedicated members of the Sikh community. Every month along with other Sikh members from the community they prepare hot meals and serve them to the people in the Bissell Centre. They also devote a lot of time to the newcomers. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Baumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special friends who are joining us in the members' gallery today. Michael Groves has been a friend of mine for some 20-plus years, and we're such good friends that we often introduce each other as brothers. This is a very special year for Mr. Groves as he celebrated the birth of his first grandson, Daxton, and also met for the first time his son Terry. Michael is joined today by Terry Groves, and I would ask them both to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a constituent of mine in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Mrs. Dagmar Lofts. Dagmar is a 17-year constituent of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and a 20-year resident of Alberta living with multiple sclerosis. Dagmar received liberation therapy for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, or CCSVI, in Frankfurt, Germany, on August 20 and would like every Albertan with MS to be given a second chance at life. Dagmar is a member of CCSVI Edmonton, which is an advocacy group whose mission is to achieve timely approval of CCSVI research and treatment through an objective consideration of all available evidence. I want to welcome Dagmar, who is seated in the public gallery, to the Legislature, and I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Kevin Barlow. Kevin is a Mi'kmaq from Indian Island First Nation in New Brunswick. Kevin has dedicated more than 20 years of his career to improving the health and wellness of aboriginal peoples, and he is currently the inaugural chair of aboriginal programming with the Kaiser Foundation. He is the former executive director of the Canadian aboriginal AIDS network, and in 2006 Mr. Barlow received an award of excellence in aboriginal programming for his work in harm reduction by the Kaiser Foundation. I want to welcome Kevin, who is seated in the public gallery, to the Alberta Legislature, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Maurice Fitzgerald and his wife, Anne Fitzgerald. Maurice and Anne are here from CCSVI Edmonton. Anne has been afflicted with MS for 35 years, and they are looking to achieve timely approval for CCSVI research and treatment from our government. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Killarney Community League Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I rise today to honour and commemorate the Killarney Community League's 50-year anniversary of operation, which was celebrated on September 18, 2010, in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore.

Fifty years ago a number of Killarney residents met in the basement of the Church of the New Jerusalem to develop plans for the establishment of the community league for the area residents. With great determination community neighbours mobilized an ambitious plan to purchase land, and on January 20, 1960, the community league was established. Killarney Community League was named after Killarney, Ireland, and it was the first subdivision in Edmonton to be given an Irish name.

Over the past 50 years, Mr. Speaker, this community league has developed into a multipurpose centre for an abundance of activities and programs which foster strong community support. Activities include hockey, bowling, baseball, broomball, soccer, and basketball.

The Killarney Community League has also taken great pride in keeping the streets safe for their residents. In 1995 the Killarney residents started Edmonton's first community-wide foot patrol with the help of Constable Steven Chwok from the Edmonton Police Service. Today this foot patrol continues to serve the community very well.

Each year Killarney Community League residents continue to come forward and join the volunteer movement to keep the community league growing and vibrant for all to enjoy. Heartfelt thanks, Mr. Speaker, and an abundance of deep gratitude to all those volunteers from the past, present, and into the future who contribute to the bountiful success of the 50 years of the Killarney Community League.

Once again, congratulations on this historical 50-year milestone achievement, and best wishes in the days and years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Immediately upon being elected, Calgary's new mayor said that the construction of the Calgary airport tunnel was his top priority. Mr. Nenshi's words instilled great hope in the hearts of Calgarians, who understand the vital importance of the tunnel. As the MLA representing the northeast communities who are most affected by the expansion of Calgary's airport, I consider it a solemn duty to continue pushing this government to do their part to make the tunnel a reality. Our new mayor clearly understands that the tunnel must be built to avoid unbearable congestion in the northeast and on Deerfoot Trail, with all of the economic harm, environmental damage, and safety concerns that come with inadequate transportation links.

It is all too easy for this government to claim that Calgary alone should bear the cost of the tunnel. But that is fundamentally unfair, for the new runway at the airport that is causing this whole controversy will serve all Albertans. The airport expansion will boost Alberta's economy and quality of life as a whole; therefore, the province has a stake in the tunnel just as Calgarians do. I urge the Premier and his administration once again to step up to the plate for Alberta to help build this vital transportation link.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Conflict Resolution Day

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. October 21 last week was Conflict Resolution Day, an international day of awareness held to promote peaceful means of resolving conflict. The Association for Conflict Resolution designated the third Thursday of October as Conflict Resolution Day in 2005. This day highlights the importance of public awareness and practice of alternative dispute resolution. By working in collaboration with other organizations and international groups, the Association for Conflict Resolution has successfully organized day- and week-long celebrations in communities to celebrate this international day of awareness.

Mr. Speaker, the logo of this significant day is a tree. Similar to a tree Conflict Resolution Day will continue to grow, much like a tree does, supporting and improving alternative dispute resolution. In fact, the use of conflict resolution has grown in Alberta over the past 30 years and now is a routine and accepted part of the conflict resolution process in most fields of endeavour.

I encourage all Albertans to recognize those who work in conflict resolution, who have contributed to our society in peaceful means of mediation, arbitration, and conciliation. I also encourage Albertans to continue to practise these peaceful means in their schools, businesses, communities, and even within their families.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues sitting here today to promote the use of diplomatic conflict resolution and to continue to raise awareness of the different resolution methods available to Albertans. In addition to helping create safer and stronger communities, conflict resolution allows disputes to be settled more amicably and reduces the strain on our overworked court system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Trade Winds to Success Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in recognition of the Trade Winds to Success Training Society apprenticeship award banquet, which I attended on September 25, 2010. The banquet was a celebration of the achievements of the graduates, who have been successful in their apprenticeship towards their journeyman status. The event was particularly memorable for me as I remember the excitement and pride I felt when I became a journeyman auto mechanic in 1983.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is pleased to have been a supporter of the Trade Winds to Success project from the very beginning. In 1999 the Union Trading Trust Funds began talks with the federal government, the provincial government, and aboriginal communities to find ways of increasing the number of aboriginal people working in the trades. Trade Winds to Success is the outcome of this unique partnership, a partnership which has to date supported more than 350 apprentices towards their goal of achieving journeyman status. The Alberta government shares their vision, supporting aboriginal participation in the economy.

Mr. Speaker, one more time I would like to congratulate all of the apprentices who have completed their training and the Trade Winds society for helping them reach their goal.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Financial Operations

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ministers change, deputy ministers change, chief executive officers change. That leaves only one person completely responsible for the chaos that Alberta Health Services has experienced for the last two years. To the Premier. The Auditor General found that Alberta Health Services lost track of some $900 million. Is that the definition, Mr. Premier, of sound management?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has done what is his role, to look at the financial records of not only the province but all of the authorities that receive money from the province. The Alberta Health Services Board has met or will meet all of the recommendations in the Auditor's report.

I know there's a lot of detail to it, and the minister of health can respond to the other questions.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to hear from the Premier since you're the primary author of our health care reform.

Yesterday the Premier was boasting about all the money the government is throwing at health care, but isn't the Premier a little nervous when Alberta Health Services can't accurately say where the money is going?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has indicated that I will deal with some of these details, which the hon. member should already know, but in case he's not in the loop, I'll bring him up to speed. The fact is that we had 12 different health entities for the period in question, and the Auditor General indicated that each one of them had their own accounting systems, their own payroll systems, their own budgeting processes. Because they were independent silos, if you will, when it came to amalgamating them, people had to take the time to look at how to do that, and unfortunately some expenses were categorized in different areas. That's all it is.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's been two years since Alberta Health Services took over, and the Auditor General highlighted that Alberta Health Services had no plan to track where funds were going when it was created and still isn't fully implemented. Will the Premier take full responsibility for rushing the centralization without a plan and call it what it is, a failure?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's actually the very opposite. It is a tremendous success, but as I've indicated, looking at the past is always 100 per cent in 20/20 vision. Looking forward to the future, let's look at what some of the benefits will be. We no longer have as large an administration. That money now is going into health care services, which Albertans need. At the same time you have only one CEO, with a centralized reporting system, and having good controls in that regard is very important because it gives us better efficiency and better outcomes. This is what we're striving for. It's too bad the opposition doesn't like it.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Villa Caritas Long-term Care Facility

Dr. Swann: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said in the House, "I would ask the hon. member to speak to the family members of those individuals that were for a large portion of their time in Alberta Hospital and now are in new facilities in Villa Caritas." Well, I tried, but Villa Caritas will not open until November 30, so there was actually no one to talk to. To the Premier: how can the Premier claim to be on top of an issue when he doesn't know whether the facility is open or not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have to refer to the annual meeting of Covenant Health, where we had members of all of the hospitals that Covenant Health operates in the province meet in Edmonton, and there was a presentation made by one of the families. It was quite, you know, heartwarming to see the improvements in the amount of services offered but also the compassion and love shown to the people in Villa Caritas. I can only speak for the people that work in that facility and their compassion for their seniors.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the Premier was feeling the love.

What is the Premier's excuse for this health minister handing over 40 million extra dollars for completing Villa Caritas when there wasn't even a contract signed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I spoke with the Premier about this over the last few weeks, and I'm happy to tell you that the Villa Caritas site has now been upgraded. There are more final touches still being done so that this particular category of resident can be better accommodated and so that the people working in the facility can feel safe. Going from a long-term care or a continuing care type facility to what will now be a state-of-the-art facility for geriatric mental health patients required upgrades to nursing stations, to doors, to walls and windows, and that's been done.

Dr. Swann: Smoke and mirrors, Mr. Speaker.

We're talking about financial mismanagement to the tune of $40 million. Still no contract signed, Mr. Health Minister. What's that about?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the important thing is that a lease agreement is now in place, contrary to what the member is saying. It's true what the Auditor General said. He could not find a contracted piece of paper per se, but there were understandings, and he pointed that out. In fact, Alberta Health Services had already pointed it out as well. They've worked together on that to resolve that. It goes back to a previous administration, perhaps as far back as the Capital health authority, but it was an unintentional oversight.

It's been admitted to, it's been corrected, and today we have a signed lease agreement in place.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. More ducks are dead because of the tailings ponds. As long as there are tailings ponds, there will be dead ducks, but it's clear that this government does not have high enough standards for deterrent mechanisms, nor is reclamation of the tailings ponds a priority. The animals, birds, waterways, and environment are always going to lose up against tailings ponds and fast-paced oil production. My questions are to the Premier. Why has government given approval to any company when their cleanup plans do not meet the requirements of the ERCB's directive 074?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this current situation, which is sad and certainly disturbing, our job here is not to speculate. Our job is to regulate, to investigate, and, if necessary, to enforce the rules of the province.

Ms Blakeman: And you failed at doing that.

Back to the Premier: given that allowing oil sands and other development along wildlife and flight corridors will inevitably lead to the results we saw yesterday, why does this government continue to allow development and even expansion of existing ponds in those areas?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that we are moving very aggressively to new technology that will fundamentally change the way mining operates in the oil sands. Directive 074 that the member refers to has to do with the existing operators. As new operators come on, they will be implementing technology that minimizes the use of tailings ponds and maximizes recycling of water.

Ms Blakeman: Well, we'll wait a long time for that.

Back to the Premier again: why does the government separate environment and wildlife protection? In separate silos, separate ministries, we will continue to get the results we see today. Why?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we don't separate any of these issues. They're all important to the province of Alberta. As I said, this matter is under investigation. Let's hear the full investigation report. We'll bring, as I said yesterday, all of the evidence, what we heard through the investigation, to the House and communicate that with the rest of Albertans as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Anderson: From ducks to human beings. Yesterday, when asked why he and his caucus voted against a debate on the emergency room crisis, the Premier answered, "It's not an emergency." This after tabled documents show 322 horror stories over a six-month period in 2008 from just one of Alberta's emergency rooms. New statistics show the situation has only gotten worse. To the Premier. It has come to my attention that a large portion of these documents in question were sent to the Premier's office roughly four days after the last election. Can he please confirm this? And why did he not do anything about it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what documents or what information has been sent, but I can tell you that in this province – and this is last year's experience – 5,300 people every day admitted to hospital, 165,000 lab tests, an average of 140 babies born every day, the number of ambulances dispatched across the province of Alberta: that's a system that is working. Yes, there are improvements to be made to the system, but I can say that of the 5,300 people that are admitted every day, not every one is the horror story as that opposition always claims it to be.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Again to the Premier: given that I've also been informed that the then minister of health, the Member for Calgary-West, also received this document four days after the election, did nothing about it, and given how this government mishandled the H1N1 immunization debacle, is ignoring warnings from doctors of imminent health care emergencies the standard operating procedure of you folks over there?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, four days after the election the member that he referred to wasn't the minister.

Mr. Anderson: Given that what is transpiring in our emergency rooms is clearly dangerous to the health and well-being of Albertans, will this Premier immediately call in the Health Quality Council to independently investigate the situation? Why on earth wasn't this done two and a half years ago, when the Premier and his future health minister first became aware of it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I have permission to take this question because I have spoken with the Health Quality Council. We had a couple of informal chats earlier this month and a couple before that about a variety of issues. The bottom line is that today I issued a number of directives for Alberta Health Services to follow that will help ameliorate this situation, that is being somewhat exaggerated on the other side. Nonetheless, it will be addressed. As part of that, I also said that if and when a more formal review process by the Health Quality Council is necessary, then I will certainly consider it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health has just held a joint news conference with the ER doctors who have raised concerns that we've been dealing with in this House. Instead of real commitments to solve the tragic overcrowding in our emergency rooms, we heard vague words about accountability measures. How these will be achieved was not explained. My question is to the Premier. If these targets are not met, will you be accountable? Will you put your minister's job on the line? Will you put your job on the line?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister of health was part of the news conference, he'll be able to inform this House of what was said earlier this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. There was a lot said. I'll try and be as brief as I can, Mr. Speaker. Today in response to the meeting that we had last night with the emergency docs, which went very well, by the way, I directed Alberta Health Services to adopt some very specific performance measures.

The Speaker: And I'm sure the minister will get to that following the next question.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, the question was about accountability. I don't know why the Premier refuses to make himself accountable. Perhaps because he has made these promises before and never lifted a finger to keep them. My question is to the Premier. Why are you refusing to hold your minister and yourself accountable? Is it because you have no intention of keeping your promises again?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about that side of the House, the opposition, but this side is accountable every single day. We're accountable to Albertans. We listen carefully and attentively to what they say, and we act on the suggestions that we can to improve things.

For example, today I issued some directives, six of them in total, for Alberta Health Services to follow. Here are a couple of them: the maximum time in an emergency room for a nonadmitted person – in other words, someone who does not need an overnight stay – should not exceed four hours; the maximum time in an emergency room for an admitted person, one who does require an overnight stay, right from triage through to bed placement should not exceed eight hours. Those were accepted by the emergency docs because they are national standards, and we will have the protocol in place by Christmas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We've heard promises before, two and a half years ago. Given that the Premier has promised more long-term care beds and then reduced them, promised more nurses and then laid them off, can he tell the people of Alberta one thing: why should we trust you now?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a number of exciting initiatives have occurred and will continue to occur. You know why? Because we now have for the first time in Canada a five-year funding commitment from this government. Never before in the history of Canada has that been done. What will that do? That will allow us to have longer range planning, improved planning, predictable and stable funding to open up 1,300 additional care beds this year; 800 are already open.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, King Canute couldn't stop the tide with the wave of his hand, and this minister won't be able to solve overcrowded emergency rooms with just a wave of his hand and a signed directive. Is this minister aware of the fraudulent reporting practices in Britain relating to emergency room wait-time protocols? How is he going to prevent that from occurring here?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the example that has been brought in from a foreign country.

I want to just continue with something that is relevant to this. As part of the directives I issued today, I asked and directed Alberta Health Services to report publicly the actual performance of emergency departments by individual site in relation to the targets I indicated a little bit earlier. I also asked and directed Alberta Health Services to closely track and monitor and report on the progress being made toward the other protocols.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I think we all know that reporting and monitoring isn't going to help the person having a heart attack who can't get service in an emergency room. Given that 60 per cent of emergency room beds in urban hospitals are already backlogged with patients waiting for hospital rooms, what is this government going to do when winter flu season swamps emergency rooms?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I also this morning and this afternoon directed Alberta Health Services to immediately improve processes for hospital site leads – the vice-presidents, the medical directors, and the site directors – to respond to these periods of peak pressures in emergencies by ensuring that the delegated authority is there at the local site level on a per hospital basis so that immediate action can be taken to address issues like the hon. member has just brought up. We are acutely aware that a flu season is coming, and we're preparing for it.

Dr. Taft: You know, Mr. Speaker, wait time protocols and monitoring just doesn't cut it. It's not going to fix it. Is this government considering, for example, setting up all-weather tents to provide enough capacity for hospital emergency rooms? Are they going to do something real?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the fifth item that I directed today toward Alberta Health Services was in fact to accelerate new or additional bed openings where possible. At the same time, number 6 was to explore additional strategies on what could be done in concert with the emergency surgeons to deal with these sensitive issues. That's why we're opening 18 more transition beds at the University of Alberta hospital in the member's riding, as I recall, or close to it, and 21 new medical assessment unit beds at the Royal Alexandra, for example. There are other strategies that they've been commanded and directed to work on as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Federal Transfer Payments for Health

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we are all well aware, the federal government under the mandate of the Canada Health Act provides funding transfers to all provinces in Canada to help pay for a portion of our health care costs. My question is to the Premier. Is Alberta currently being treated equally in terms of funding transfers in comparison to all other provinces in Canada?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great importance to all Albertans. Last year the federal Finance minister unilaterally changed the 10-year agreement all provinces signed in 2004 to fund health care across the province. Our issue is that Alberta has been singled out as not receiving the same amount of funding as every other province and territory in Canada is receiving. In fact, it means that over the course of the agreement we may be paying billions more twice for health services that are being received in other provinces. I say that is definitely unfair because cancer is cancer. It doesn't matter. It's just as devastating in Ontario as it is in Alberta.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister advise the Assembly: how much money does the federal government in Ottawa send to Alberta for health care versus what other provinces receive, and if we are not being treated equally, what is the government of Alberta doing about this?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I can provide that information. We receive $548 per person in Canada Health transfer. The lowest any other province receives is $772. That's the lowest. The difference is $224 per person. You do the math. Alberta is receiving $850 million less than the next lowest province. This is clearly unfair. The previous finance minister raised it, I've raised it, and the Premier has spoken with the Prime Minister about it. Albertans send more money to Ottawa than any other province, and when it comes to health care, we get less back.

Mr. Dallas: My final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I've always believed that the Canadian federalism system was supposed to treat all provinces equally. Clearly, this is not the case when it comes to Canada Health transfers. To the minister: what steps is she taking to raise this issue with the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard a lot of chirping on the other side. Today people should be lining up with this government in support of our striving to get equality, being recognized by the Constitution as the terms of . . . [interjections] Excuse me, guys. I mean, really.

Under the terms of Confederation we deserve that equality. In my previous portfolio as the finance minister at the time, I wrote to the Hon. James Flaherty to talk about this. I have now followed up and will table a letter I have recently written to the Hon. Josée Verner talking about the importance of the federal government stepping up to the plate and treating us equally.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, on June 23 the Law Society of Alberta met and overwhelmingly decided that Alberta's new financial eligibility guidelines for legal aid were not adequate. Further, the Assistant Chief Judge of our Provincial Court stated that student legal services and law information centres can't handle the increased demands caused by cuts to Legal Aid. If that's correct, how can the minister say that Legal Aid adequately funds criminal defendants in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the Law Society did have a meeting. The Law Society did make a decision. The Law Society and the government of Alberta and the Legal Aid board have been discussing whether or not there need to be changes to the governance agreement. It's my understanding that the Law Society benchers have not yet decided what position they will take based on the recommendations of the members, and I leave it to the Law Society to decide what they'll decide to do in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. Given that the Law Society members have given a pretty profound judgment that the system is failing, will the minister admit that her pilot project has been a mistake and restore adequate funding to Legal Aid?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the Law Society I'm sure that the hon. member understands exactly what procedure is taking place in the Law Society. His characterization of the process is simplistic. It is not accurate in terms of the way that the Law Society governs itself. There are a number of steps that the Law Society will need to go through internally. I understand that they are having discussions as to how they might like to approach this issue.

The Law Society is one of three partners in legal aid, Mr. Speaker, and we're prepared to discuss with them whether or not we need to make some changes. I've always said that what we're doing with legal aid is taking a principle-based approach to changing the system that will serve Albertans better, and we'll continue to study that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the hon. minister inferring that my analysis might be simplistic, but how about the Assistant Chief Judge's assertion that people are not receiving adequate funding? Is his assertion simplistic as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we actually listen to the preliminary comments that this hon. member made in his opening remarks, that was not actually what the Associate Chief Justice of the Provincial Court said. The Associate Chief Justice, according to the hon. member's own remarks, said that law information centres were not an adequate substitute for criminal representation in provincial criminal court, and we agree with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Auditor General released his fall report. This report outlines several accounting and financial management issues related to the formation of Alberta Health Services. These questions raised by the Auditor General are very serious and, I believe, beg some clarification. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the cause of these financial issues? Has this money been properly accounted for?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll talk about the cause in a moment, but rest assured that the monies have all been accounted for. Nothing is missing, and the Auditor General said that. They were put into some incorrect categories because of the large transition from 12 entities down to one. It's important to stress that it was actually Alberta Health Services that first brought this issue to the attention of the Auditor General and said: please have a look into it. They did.

Secondly, let's remember that this is the largest merger in Canadian history; 90,000 employees and a number of different accounting systems had to be amalgamated. It's a complex process. It's now done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, I'm pleased to hear that this money is safe.

Again to the minister: can you tell this House what is being done to address these issues to assure Albertans that this will never happen again?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing that happened is that Alberta Health Services agreed to and accepted all of the recommendations. Secondly, they're going to be implementing them as quickly as they can. Thirdly, they came up with an action plan, one that calls for the consolidation of all major business systems into some common platforms. It also calls for the development of a plan to streamline year-end financial statements; it calls for the hiring of additional financial staff, where necessary, to help ensure this doesn't happen again; and it calls for a clearer definition of roles and responsibilities of the staff who do the financial reporting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final supplemental to the same minister: given the Auditor General's concerns, can the minister assure Albertans that this decision to move to one health region was the right one?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely the right decision to move to one central entity. I don't want to put too much of a fine line on the money side of it, but let me just tell you that in the first year, as reported in an Alberta Health Services annual report not that long ago, they cited about $500 million in savings by going from 12 down to one. Were there some bumps and bruises along the way? Of course. They could be anticipated. Again, the single largest merger in Canadian history has now occurred. But the bottom line to all of that is that those savings went straight back into the system that's helping address some of the pressure points, so the services are going to be more consistent and more equitable across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Daycare and Day Home Regulatory Compliance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General had some choice words about child care facilities in Alberta: inconsistencies in monitoring and enforcement, documentation was lacking when warnings were given, could not determine if verbal warnings were followed up with remedial actions. And these are government-approved facilities. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how can the minister ensure our children are getting the best possible care from the best staff when proper documentation and follow-ups cannot be tracked after verbal warnings are given?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, we have daycares and day homes in our province that are providing excellent care in the community for children whose families are working or are not able to be at home at the time. The children are, as I said, placed in our daycares or our day homes. We have a well-established system with good, solid regulation standards. The Auditor, you know, very much agreed with that. I can tell you that I did appreciate what the Auditor did identify for this ministry because it simply related to noncompliance for issues that are very minor such as posting a menu or not documenting when a child came into the daycare.

Mr. Chase: Well, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure didn't see the peanut warning, and he ended up in a hospital, so there's an example of the importance of warnings.

How much weight would the minister place on understaffing, change fatigue, and lack of training among staff as reasons for these criticisms?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was not a good analogy. I happened to be there in that situation, and that doesn't even relate to what the Auditor General's report said. I can tell you what the Auditor did say, though, and I feel very pleased about this as well, that families can be confident that our day homes and our daycares in the communities are very, very safe. Also, I appreciated, as I said, that the Auditor identified noncompliance for very minor, minor situations in the daycares and in the day homes. I agree with the improvements required, and we will be implementing the recommendations.

Mr. Chase: Well, I'm concerned that you're taking these recommendations as being minor, because children's lives and their well-being are affected. My question is: what specific steps will the minister take now to address the issues raised by the Auditor General? Or are you just going to pass them off as minor?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I'm concerned about how you're overstating them, because you are, and what that will mean to the public as a whole. The Auditor said they're very low-risk infractions, and I can tell you, as I said, that I will be implementing changes to what the Auditor has identified for the staff out in the field, and the staff will work toward that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in your riding, if a staff member went to a day home and saw that there wasn't a menu posted or it hadn't been entered into the log what time a child came in, that staff member would then speak to the provider of the day home or daycare, and they would then drive back to the community, and that number of hours would – the staff member now, perhaps, would have the provider fax that they had done that.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many constituents for some time about mounting pressures on emergency rooms in Alberta. The issue, of course, flared again recently in a letter written by the head of emergency medicine to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I understand that the minister had an important meeting about this last night, and I wonder: can the minister tell us what the outcome of that meeting was?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, we had an excellent meeting, which the emergency docs commented on today. The purpose was to meet face to face, open up the important lines of communication, and develop a work plan that would help accomplish some immediate solutions to alleviate the overcrowding issues that are very important to Albertans and, obviously, to the doctors. In that context, we developed some medium-term goals and some longer term goals. But make no mistake about it, we're doing some things immediately as well.

Mr. Rodney: To the same minister. It appears that members of the opposition are interested in this as well, and I'm certain that they would want to know, Mr. Speaker: what details and what commitments did the doctors ask specifically of you, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the most important commitments the doctors asked for was a stated set of benchmarks, performance measures, targets, what have you. This morning I announced what those were, with the four-hour time slot and the eight-hour time slot, which is already in Hansard. They also wanted a reporting back type of system, where we could track and monitor things in two weeks, in two months, and so on. I've offered that to them as well; I've committed to it. In the final point they also said: just give us greater accountability with on-site authority and management response capabilities. We've offered that to them as well, and I directed AHS with the challenge to deliver it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. It's great to hear about commitments, but we need some follow-through, for sure. So I think it's fair to ask on behalf of Albertans: what specific action is this minister going to take along with Alberta Health Services to deliver on those commitments?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, now that we have a framework, if you will, of action in place, we're going to watch very carefully to ensure that it is adhered to. That's called holding the feet to the fire for Alberta Health Services, and we're going to do that. In the meantime, we're opening 250 additional beds, many of them in Calgary and Edmonton, obviously. We're looking at other parts of the province as well because we need a multifaceted approach that deals with more beds, the new discharge protocol, improved services with Health Link, and increased home-care funding. We're doing all of that right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we learned about another serious environmental tragedy in the Wood Buffalo region. The impact on migratory birds is only one of the many threats that toxic tailings lakes pose, yet this government has already allowed them to cover a hundred and seventy square kilometres, and they're growing as I speak. To the Minister of Environment: why won't this government take real action to force companies to stop the growth of tailings lakes and eliminate them as soon as possible?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member should have a look at the facts. The facts are that we are taking real action, and the evidence is in the retirement of Suncor's tailings pond 1. Directive 074 clearly enunciates the responsibility of industry to implement technology that is going to severely restrict the growth of tailings ponds in the medium term and reduce the overall tailings pond legacy in the longer term.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that, at best, the ERCB directive 074 will see toxic lakes grow well beyond 1 trillion litres of toxic waste and that they will be with us for at least another 50 years – that's in the directive – and given that the ERCB has waived its weak-kneed measures 7 out of 9 times in the last year and a half, why won't the Minister of Environment admit the truth, that his current half-hearted measures will never get rid of these toxic lakes?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I won't admit it because it's not true. The fact of the matter is that the ERCB has not, as this member characterizes, waived the directive. What they have done is allowed for additional time to implement. Let's be absolutely clear to all members of this House and to all Albertans that it is a complete commitment on the part of the government and on the part of the ERCB to implement directive 074. It will happen.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, since this government's paltry penalty scheme has done nothing to force industry into cleaning up the ponds and keeping wildlife away and since industry's job is to make money for their shareholders while government's job is to ensure that jobs, people, water, air, and wildlife are prioritized and protected in that process, will this government commit to throwing out directive 074 and bringing in meaningful requirements that force industry to eliminate the toxic lakes and that they will enforce fully?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been engaged over the past four months in developing a tailings management regime that will do, in essence, what the member is asking for. No, we're not going to throw out directive 074, but by no means should anyone assume that directive 074 is the be-all and end-all. It clearly is not. We are committed to constantly improving the performance of this industry, and we will do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't have to read in the newspaper about the Crown land sale for potatoes because I wrote the article on October 8. There have been numerous e-mails, letters, phone calls, and personal consultations from the public, who complain that this is not a transparent process. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In 2007 the Auditor General recommended that guidelines for the leasing and selling of Crown land, that include when and whom to consult, must be developed. Why after three years is this recommendation still outstanding?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that all of the recommendations that have been forwarded from the Auditor General to the Department of Sustainable Resource Development are being dealt with. Most certainly, the one that deals with the transfer of public land and leases is a very serious matter for a number of Albertans. We do continue to move forward, and progress is being made with respect to that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: is the sale of Crown land for agricultural use part of that discussion, and will it be a transparent process?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, I would suggest that all of the transfer of public land in Alberta, whether it's for leases relative to aggregate, whether it's dispositions for cattle grazing, whether it's sale disposition for the use of municipalities or for the use of agriculture, is open and transparent now.

Ms Pastoor: You may be one of the few that believe that.

Do you agree that this proposed land sale should not go ahead before the completion of the South Saskatchewan regional plan, which, unfortunately, has already been delayed?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that, from my point of view, is no. We've been working on a land-use plan in different regions of the province of Alberta for at least 20 years, and during that period of time the province has to continue to develop the resources. The land base that we have in Alberta belongs to the people of the province of Alberta. It is our responsibility to be sure that it is developed in accordance with good practice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Villa Caritas Long-term Care Facility

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the report of the Auditor General, the Auditor General has raised concerns that Alberta Health Services is expending money without proper funding arrangements in place regarding Villa Caritas. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister please explain how funding arrangements were allowed to happen?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier, and I'll stress it again, that the important thing now is that the complete lease agreement is in place. It has been signed, and it's gone through.

Secondly, I want to just indicate that Covenant is a great partner to work with. They were going to build a long-term care facility, as you know, but when the need arose for a geriatric mental health program and for those residents to be accommodated in a new facility, the deal was made with them to proceed. We now have a state-of-the-art facility there, that'll be open soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if there have been cost escalations on this particular project, what exactly are the causes of the cost escalations?

2:30

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's not so much about cost escalations in this case as it is about repurposing, as it's known in the trade, of the facility. Repurposing of the facility means upgrading it or changing it in some way to accommodate the new use. I indicated before, and I'll indicate again that we need to have safe nursing stations designed and built in a different way for mental health patient needs than for long-term care patient needs, and there are other improvements as well.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. In light of the current discussions and current situation in our emergency departments within hospitals, does he think it was advisable to change the scope of Villa Caritas?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it was a good decision. I've looked at it very carefully, obviously. The new facility will offer a very modern, enhanced environment with large private rooms and bathrooms for all the patients, with dedicated space for recreational activities and for therapy needs and for social activities. It's also important to note that over 70 per cent – I believe that's the latest figure – of professional staff from the geriatric mental health program at Alberta Hospital Edmonton are now transferring to the new Villa Caritas site to continue providing outstanding care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Waterfowl Deaths in Oil Sands Tailings Pond

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to take this opportunity to compliment – I said compliment – the Minister of Energy because he was the only, the only one, who didn't throw the oil sands industry under the bus yesterday with the unfortunate duck situation. The Premier and the Minister of Environment clearly did. My question today is to the Minister of Environment. Will you apologize to the workers who are at the Mildred Lake site, working 24 hours a day, and, rather than being a judge and a jury and an executioner, wait for the findings first rather than the inexcusable tone that you used yesterday?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which media this member has been watching, but that is exactly what I have been saying. I have been doing my very best to turn down the rhetoric from members on the other side of the House from the media and point out to them that we have an investigation under way, and until that investigation has been concluded, we should not be jumping to any kind of conclusion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Minister of Environment can communicate that to his leader because the headlines today read that the Premier demands answers – he demands – yet here are the companies working out there, extraordinary lengths with technology, working 24 hours a day. They fail to talk about the motherhood that took place yesterday. It's inexcusable, his tone and the Premier's tone. So will you apologize for the Premier for what he had said in the media yesterday?

Mr. Renner: Again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this member is doing his research. The Premier is saying the same thing as I am saying: yes, we do want some answers. That's why we're conducting an investigation. We want to know – the Premier wants to know; I want to know – whether or not there were infractions of our regulations. That's what the investigation is all about.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is reassuring all Albertans that they're not going to be inflammatory as they continue to put gasoline on fire, why hasn't the minister, in fact, visited on-site that very situation? Why hasn't he been there? Why hasn't the Premier been there relative to the situation? Clearly, we hear about the oil sands. We hear about how important it is, but it's not important enough to go and visit.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the only person inflaming the situation in this House is that member over there.

I have expressed very publicly my disappointment that despite the fact that we have had significant progress and improvement in the way we deal with bird deterrents over the past two years, we are now having to live through this one more time. I am waiting with great anticipation to find out what the results of this inspection will be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Landowner Private Property Rights

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I raised some of my local landowners' concerns with respect to Bill 19, and my constituents appreciate the minister's reassurance. However, another recent bill that has caused some confusion with some of my constituents is Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. My questions today are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell us why Bill 36 is so important for Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, most certainly. Over the last number of years the government of Alberta has heard through a number – a number – of consultation processes that Albertans believe that we have need for better co-ordination, better planning, better policy, and better decision-making with respect to activity that's on the land base in the province of Alberta. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act allows regional plans to provide this leadership for the government and for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a constituent who was advised by a self-proclaimed land rights expert that Bill 36 will allow the government to extinguish existing rights, and this includes land titles, and that it restricts the right to compensation, thereby allowing the government to do with land as they see fit. Can the minister assure my constituents that this is not the case?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I categorically can affirm that, number one, the Alberta Bill of Rights protects property rights in the province of Alberta. It has done so and will continue to do so irrespective of any other act that we have in place. The Land Stewardship Act does not – and I will repeat: the Land Stewardship Act does not – take away any existing private property rights. The act does not provide the ability for expropriation or the removal of land or mineral title.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: That's all, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Protection of Personal Information

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School files, electronic health records, financial aid applications, drivers' licences: government handles a lot of personal information, but the Auditor General reports yesterday that this government is still not doing its job in keeping that information secure from hackers and fraudsters. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how can the minister justify leaving the personal information of citizens so insecure when they have had two years to fix the problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the Auditor General's report I'm very pleased to respond on this. At any time of day in the week we have the Auditor General's staff working with us on a regular basis to ensure that we are protecting Albertans' information. This department does protect Albertans' information. That's indicated by the number of recommendations that have been brought forward. We have supported all of his recommendations that he's given thus far.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's department is laying off hundreds of employees, isn't the cost-cutting putting the personal information of Albertans at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we did establish was that there is a chief information officer resident in Service Alberta. There are chief information officers in all departments across the government. Every November there's a review of the plans that we have in place to ensure that their websites and all their systems are on track and secure.

Mr. Kang: To the minister again: is the failure to adopt uniform IT security policies the fault of the minister's department alone, or are the other ministries refusing to follow Service Alberta's lead? If so, which ones?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is indeed a uniform policy across government, which is why the chief information officer process was set in place two years ago. Two years ago there were 12 recommendations from the Auditor General. Two we have completed, nine we've made significant progress on, and the one that was presented in his report most recently: we are working with him on that with respect to making sure that Albertans' information is protected.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that will conclude the question period for today. Today we were able to recognize 17 members, and there were 100 questions and responses provided.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Municipal Election

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to thank and congratulate the thousands of Albertans involved in October's municipal election. Candidates' staff, volunteers, and supportive family members make great sacrifices of time, money, and sometimes reputation in order to preserve our democracy. As an MLA from Calgary I would especially like to commend all candidates running for mayor, alderman, and school trustee in Calgary for their efforts in the hard-fought competition for votes.

At a time when public apathy challenges our democratic process, the excitement in Calgary's election was tremendous. Voter turnout was a whopping 53 per cent. This is Calgary's highest participation rate in more than three decades.

I applaud Calgary's new mayor, Naheed Nenshi, and his team for their successful campaign, their ability to tap technology, stir social media, and land a vibrant victory. Mr. Nenshi together with a steady stream of volunteers was able to broadcast his ideas, skills, and passion to the masses. With 15 people competing for the mayor's seat, Mr. Nenshi managed to take over 40 per cent of the total vote.

I also congratulate five new members of the city council: Gian-Carlo Carra, Peter Demong, Shane Keating, Gael MacLeod, and Richard Pootmans. I also congratulate the nine returning aldermen: Andre Chabot, Diane Colley-Urquhart, Druh Farrell, Dale Hodges, Ray Jones, Gord Lowe, John Mar, Brian Pincott, and Jim Stevenson.

We optimistically look forward to success as the new team works with our provincial government to improve the quality of life of all Calgarians and Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Daycare and Day Home Regulatory Compliance

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer a daycare near Edmonton had to be closed for the safety of the young children after allegations of physical discipline, shaming, and forced feeding. We learned that investigators had noted less severe concerns of the same nature in the previous two years' inspections. However, it was not until the ministry received specific complaints that they stepped in with a proper investigation. It's difficult to think about the risk to which children may have been exposed over the course of that two-year period.

Yesterday we learned from the Auditor General that the ministry responsible for ensuring the safety of children in daycare centres hasn't taken its responsibility seriously. We are told there's a lack of consistency in how licensing officers monitor child care programs, that where an inspector can't observe some criteria they are asked to inspect, they may not follow up to assure themselves that the issue is being addressed safely, professionally, and with the high quality that parents have a right to expect from those caring for their children.

The Auditor General went on to say, "Without adequately documenting the results of monitoring and enforcement activities, Authorities and the Department cannot demonstrate that child care programs meet Statutory Requirements or applicable standards." In other words, documentation is not adequate, and we cannot rely on the minister's assurances that child care centres are safe. The AG outlined that one of the common enforcement measures used by licensing officers is the verbal warning. He says that there is little documentation to show that improvements are ever made after these warnings are issued. He says that officers may wait months or even up to the next year to follow up.

In short, young children and babies are being allowed to stay in daycare centres that don't meet basic minimum standards perhaps for extended times. The Auditor General says, "Consistent failure to correct areas of seemingly low-risk non-compliance increases the probability of negative impacts on the health, safety, and well-being of children."

For years this government has ignored research that supports the value of high-quality, affordable child care. They have compromised the future of our children. Albertans and their children deserve better, and it is time for this government to act.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks in his capacity as chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the committee's report on Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill and referred to the committee on April 16, 2010.

I would like to extend the committee's sincere appreciation to the organizations, municipalities, and the individual Albertans who made written submissions and presentations on the bill. I would also like to thank the officials from Alberta Municipal Affairs for sharing their expertise during the review process and acknowledge the support provided to the committee by the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. Finally, I would like to recognize my fellow committee members, representing all parties in the Assembly, who have worked together over the past six months to complete a thorough review of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the report recommends that Bill 203 not proceed. I request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 203, Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: All those members who concur in the report, if you agree, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those who are opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Speaker: Okay. The report has been concurred in. Carried.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 26 Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave today to introduce Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation contains three major provisions. One, it provides coal-bed methane ownership certainty by declaring that coal-bed methane is and always has been natural gas for both Crown and freehold minerals. Two, it recognizes that existing agreements entered into by the natural gas owner or their lessee that specifically granted coal-bed methane rights to the coal owner or coal owner's lessee will not be affected. Three, it protects coal owners and their lessees, surface owners, and the government from being sued by natural gas owners or their lessees for extraction, reduction, or removal of coal-bed methane prior to enactment of this legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of my letter to Minister Flaherty on the Canada health transfer. The letter asked three basic questions on why Albertans are being treated unfairly by the federal government on this issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to table the appropriate number of copies of my letter that I referenced in my response to the question from Red Deer-South, the letter to Hon. Josée Verner discussing the fair and equitable treatment of Alberta under the terms of the Canadian federalism system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a tabling which I have permission to provide to the hon. members of the Assembly. It's a letter from a constituent, Laurent Godbout, who is deeply concerned by the government's plan to close or change the psychiatric care beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

The second letter I have is also regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton, and it is from a constituent, Catherine Jevic. Catherine expresses the same concerns as the first letter that I tabled.

Also, I have a public notice here. This is quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. It is a notice inviting people to a breakfast with the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. It has also listed here the hon. member as the Political Minister for Calgary. The details are here for everyone to see, and this event is taking place Friday, October 29, in the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill's constituency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit under tablings.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of annual reports for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the historic resources fund, and the Wild Rose Foundation as well as the annual review for the Alberta Human Rights Commission.

The Speaker: Before I call the next item, hon. members, today is the anniversary of birth for the hon. Member for Peace River and the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

[Debate adjourned October 26: Mr. Hinman speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, are you participating?

Mrs. Jablonski: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 19
Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright to move second reading of Bill 19, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

I want to point out first that this legislation does not introduce any new taxes, nor does it change any tax rates. It is essentially changing the timing for when tax is payable. This legislation supports the implementation of the province's upcoming renewable fuels standard in 2011. Without this legislation the renewable fuels standard program could see tax distortions that would have Alberta's renewable fuel production industry at a disadvantage compared to producers outside the province.

This is because currently fuel, including renewable fuel, can be imported to a refinery or terminal in Alberta without being subject to fuel tax. This contrasts with the sale of fuel by an Alberta renewable fuel producer, which, even if delivered to a refinery, is currently taxable. As such, an unfair tax situation exists where renewable fuel produced in Alberta is taxed while renewable fuel from outside the province may not be.

Alberta's fuel tax system inadvertently creates an incentive for fuel suppliers to purchase renewable fuel from outside Alberta. This legislation corrects this, leveling the playing field for tax purposes. It would allow renewable fuel from an Alberta producer to be sold to a fuel supplier here in Alberta without being subject to tax. Note, of course, that fuel tax is still charged later, when the fuel leaves the refinery or terminal or is sold into the marketplace.

This change also eases the administrative burden for both industry and government by ensuring there is not a mixture of taxed and untaxed fuel at a refinery or terminal, which could be difficult to track. This amendment also authorizes information sharing between Alberta Finance and Enterprise and Alberta Energy. Information sharing will improve administration and verification under both the fuel tax and renewable fuels standard programs. It also allows efficiencies to be developed under both programs to reduce the reporting and compliance burden for industry.

Finally, there are also a number of minor technical amendments to remove references in the act to blend stock and blending. Currently the term "blend stock" in the act refers to a nontaxable fuel. However, there are no blend stocks in Alberta, so this term has no real effect. Further, the term "blending" is commonly used by industry to describe the mixing of traditional fuel with renewable fuel, an entirely different meaning than the meaning of the term used in the act. Thus, the references in the Fuel Tax Act to blend stock and blending are removed to avoid confusion.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will help ensure Alberta's renewable fuel producers are on a level playing field for fuel tax purposes with producers outside the province. Amendments also allow information sharing between Alberta Finance and Enterprise and Alberta Energy to support efficient administration of both fuel tax and renewable fuel programs and allow for the reduction of reporting burden for industry. Other minor technical changes are made to support the renewable fuels standard.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that explanation from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. Certainly, I think this is a bill that we on this side of the House will support as it proceeds through the Assembly. As I understand it, these amendments to the Fuel Tax Act will remove the disincentive, that the hon. member talked about, for traditional fuel suppliers to purchase from Alberta-based renewable fuel producers. This amendment will also provide a more consistent method of taxing fuel with Bill 19.

Now, certainly, from what I can understand – and I'm looking through public accounts when I say this, Mr. Speaker – Alberta Finance and Enterprise tries to be consistent with the purposes of the renewable fuels standard established by Alberta Energy. One only has to look through there, and you can see the individual distributors who are receiving money or having a rebate for one reason or another from the government as they provide or distribute fuel to various users.

The bill, as I understand it, in a very modest way provides support or a contribution to climate change by removing this disincentive for Alberta businesses to produce renewable fuel. Hopefully, this bill is part of a larger strategy to address climate change targets by promoting the use of renewable fuels and also cleaner fuels, in my view. I would consider natural gas to be a very, very clean fuel. As I understand it, Alberta's renewable fuels standard will require an average of 2 per cent renewable diesel in diesel fuel and 5 per cent renewable ethanol in gasoline sold in Alberta.

Now, I think that we should also in the course of the debate and discussion on Bill 19 have a look at natural gas and how we should incent natural gas as a fuel for the transportation sector. Certainly, we would need a few dollars for a promotion like that, and, Mr. Speaker, I even have a location within the province's current budget where we could find a few dollars to do that.

I brought up this issue quite some time ago in the House regarding the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Alberta farm fuel benefit program. There are actually two programs, one of them in Alberta Finance and one of them in Alberta Agriculture. Of course, I was criticized, not by the current minister of agriculture, certainly, but by a previous one, that this has just been hard on farmers and to not worry if we happen to have a little bit of leakage in the government program. In this case the farm fuel benefit program, when you total it, was close to $100 million as an amount in the two programs. If there were invalid permits issued, then they should be retrieved by the government, and those individuals who are not valid farmers under that program should not have been eligible for any money.

Now, I was interested to read on page 121 in yesterday's report of the Auditor General that in December 2008 the department started a three-year continuous Alberta farm fuel benefit program renewal process. I applaud the minister for that effort. Each year the department contacts one-third of Alberta farm fuel benefit program registrants to renew their registration number and update all the information that is necessary. The renewal information is used to determine if the producers are still eligible to use marked fuel in their farming operations. Renewals for 2008 and 2009 are substantially complete, and they resulted in approximately 5,000 producers, or permits, as I understand it, being cancelled. The Auditor goes on to say that his office has reviewed the renewal and verification process, and they're satisfied that the process ensures the eligibility of recipients. So there have been up to 5,000 permits pulled from that file.

Certainly, that would indicate or conclude with this member that there has to be or should be a surplus in the amount of money that has been rebated from Alberta Finance. So a portion of this money, I think, should be used to incent particularly our trucking sector to convert from the use of diesel, whether it's mixed diesel or not, with a renewable fuel, a renewable manufactured fuel. We should be encouraging more and more of our trucking companies to convert to natural gas. I think it can be done. It's certainly being done in other jurisdictions. I don't know. Maybe the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne could update us. I don't know if on the truck routes – and there's a lot of trucking on highway 43 – there would be such a facility, if such a facility would now exist along that commercial stretch in Whitecourt. I know there would be for propane. I think in the discussion of this bill, Mr. Speaker, this is part of the solution to improving our climate change targets, having natural gas as a fuel for the transportation sector. I think we should be encouraging and, to a certain degree, incenting that to happen.

There is a conference going to occur in Calgary on this matter quite soon. I would like to see an increase in the domestic consumption of natural gas in this province for transportation. I know the price of natural gas has to climb significantly, even from what the minister of finance had targeted in the budget. We're 75 cents, I believe, below his initial target, and I know that target was revised in the first-quarter update. However, that being said, natural gas as a transportation fuel, I think, would be a real alternative to diesel whenever you compare conversions, if we could incent the location of some fuelling stations. Let's start on major trucking routes where a lot of freight moves by truck and see what happens. When we further discuss fuel taxes, I would like this House to consider that now is the time – particularly, we could say that the price is right because of the cost of natural gas – that we provide an incentive to some of the larger users of diesel fuel to consider natural gas as an alternative source of fuel.

Certainly, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright and also the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for their work on Bill 19. It'll be interesting to see how this proceeds through the House, but I have one question, that will hopefully be answered as we proceed through committee, and that would be: did the treasury lose any money as a result of the past practices that are being corrected with this amended legislation? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be uncharacteristically short. The reason for my supporting Bill 19, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, moved by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, is that it's doing what I've been asking for and been basically harping on this week in terms of achieving cross-ministerial co-operation and co-ordination. Amendments to the Fuel Tax Act will remove a disincentive for traditional fuel suppliers to purchase from Alberta-based renewable fuel producers. The act will provide a more consistent method of taxing fuel, and it's that consistency that is very important to me. Having Alberta Finance and Enterprise moving their practices to be more consistent with the purposes of the renewable fuel standards established by Alberta Energy, to me, is a step in the right direction.

I also appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the sort of made-in-Alberta solution to this in terms of removing an existing incentive for traditional fuel suppliers to purchase renewable fuel from outside Alberta, which is not taxed when delivered to a refinery in Alberta. The bill in a small way provides support to a very modest contribution to climate change by removing a disincentive for Alberta businesses to produce renewable.

There does not appear to be any reason why we would oppose it; therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are in support, and thank you for this opportunity.

The Speaker: Well, that one minute 40 second speech, though, does provide an opportunity for a five-minute question-and-comment period under section 29(2)(a), so would anyone like to participate?

There being none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to speak in support of Bill 19, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act. The amendments to the Fuel Tax Act will remove a disincentive for traditional fuel suppliers to purchase from Alberta-based renewable fuel producers, and that's good news. We can only hope to encourage more of the renewable fuels and the like within Alberta. It is actually one of the ways we can possibly diversify our economy, not only through these renewable fuel products, but hopefully this will lead this government to follow the lead of other jurisdictions and look for other opportunities in developing other renewable fuel sources such as solar and wind.

I'm hopeful that this act is just the beginning of a broader based climate change policy and a broader based look at how we're going to diversify our economy from one that has primarily relied on our oil and gas supplies to possibly look elsewhere. We haven't had a ton of success on that over the last 40 years, but maybe this bill is sort of signifying that we see a change coming, and that gives me hope. It also looks that this is going to ensure that the fuel tax framework administered by Alberta Finance and Enterprise is consistent with the purposes of renewable fuel standards established by Alberta Energy.

I would like to echo the comments made by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity. It shows some good cross-ministry work that is looking at: if the left arm is doing something, let's check out what the right arm is doing; let's see if they're working together. That is evident on this bill. I've alluded to this earlier. Transactions between renewable fuel producers and traditional fuel suppliers will no longer be taxed until the fuel enters the consumer distribution system. This will remove the existing incentive for traditional fuel suppliers to purchase renewable fuel from outside Alberta. Removing that barrier just makes common sense for many of the reasons I brought up earlier.

Simply put, we have to get into this renewable game and the game where we're moving our energy forces from the traditional use to some of the stuff that people are saying is going to become in vogue over the next 30, 40 years: solar, wind, and the like. Of course, there will always be a need for our energy industry, and I hope it produces for a long time and allows us an economic engine and advantage that we can rely on. Nevertheless, we have to do our part to not only diversify our economy but also to take climate change seriously. That is both very important at least to members on this side of the House and, I'm assuming by this bill, to many members on the other side as well.

I would also like to comment on the comments made in connection with this bill and possibly looking at how we can use this bill as sort of a template for moving more into utilizing our vast reserves of natural gas. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar so wisely pointed out, they are at a low in terms of price, and it may be an opportune time where we can use some of that cleaner burning fuel for possibly our trucking industry, possibly our buses in Edmonton and Calgary.

I know a local mayoralty candidate, Craig Burrows, former alderman, actually came up with that policy of converting the bus force to natural gas, and I think that was a very good idea. Possibly maybe some tweaking by members in this House could allow for municipalities or we could assist municipalities to sort of move in that direction by providing a little bit of the framework and the necessary legwork that's going to go into providing some of these opportunities to use natural gas more in not only our city centres but, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar pointed out, some of our busy trucking centres that are no doubt moving forward. It would also save them a great deal of money. Allowing people to make a few more extra dollars while they're saving the environment is a pretty good thing.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright for bringing forward this bill. I think it goes a long ways in trying to remove some of the disincentives for renewable fuels to be produced here in Alberta and to be worked on and to be refined and to hopefully get Alberta into the game of what much of the rest of the world has already embraced.

On that note, I will cede the floor to someone else. I thank you for the opportunity in allowing me to speak to this bill.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have a question?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask a question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. He referred a number of times to environmental benefits of renewable fuels. I wonder if he is convinced, I guess, or has strong evidence that the environmental benefits overall – that is, the potential carbon emissions of biofuels – are, in fact, substantially less than regular petroleum fuels and also whether or not he has concern that the conversion of agricultural land away from food production into the production of fuels will tend to drive up food prices and whether or not that's a concern.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the hon. member for the question. Of course, I have read numerous articles, and in fact I was up late not the other night but a few nights ago watching some Charlie Rose, where they were discussing exactly this issue on biofuels. I'm of two minds on that issue. There's no doubt we have to feed a growing world and a growing population and try to understand that we have some humanitarian standards throughout the globe. Of course that's a concern. It's a concern not only for people throughout the world, but there are also people here in Alberta who need an adequate food supply. There's no doubt that growing food locally and supplying our citizens with that food is very important. That said, we are at the beginning of biofuels, okay?

What biofuels we are producing now, although there are significant problems with them – they have not been seen so far to reduce greenhouse gases; in fact, they have been seen almost to do the opposite and to take up a lot of land and take agricultural land away. Some people are of the view that since we're just at the start of this, we should be doing some of this experimentation so we can refine our biofuels so they can play a part in our overcoming our addiction to fossil fuels, which, of course, are running out, and to help global warming and CO₂ emissions.

I understand the question. I am very concerned about being able to feed a population that is growing, but at the same time there has to be some room for at least some experimentation and some development of a biofuels industry. That's going to take some heavy monitoring by government. Government is going to have to do some heavy lifting in terms of monitoring what is the right balance on that and ensuring that this is not going to be an easy answer.

I'm still of these two minds, and hopefully I'll be able to work through it further, but I don't have a definite response, just a little bit of both there.

I thank the hon. member for the question.

The Speaker: Others?

Other speakers, then, on this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I just want to elaborate on the points that I raised in my question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I think there are a number of reasons why this bill may be necessary in order to, I guess, level the playing field, as it were. Essentially, I think that it's important that we raise some questions about some of the basic assumptions about the benefits of biofuels.

In the first instance, when you count in all of the emissions that are produced – for example, in the planting, the fertilizing, and the harvesting of these crops, the processing, and so on – plus the fact that they are still carbon-based fuels, you'll find that the environmental benefits relative to petroleum are not as great as many people assume. These are carbon-based fuels that are produced, and they release carbon into the atmosphere when they're burned. There's a considerable amount of carbon that's released into the atmosphere in the production of these fuels. You know, I think that that's one concern.

A real concern for me as well is the price of food for people. Now, I understand and have read articles relative to the production of biofuels in other countries, for example in Mexico, where serious shortages of corn, for example, which the low-income agricultural workers depend on, created hunger and some unrest. I think that there are instances like that around the world. Now, we're obviously not in that position, but we are in a position where the price of food has continued to rise and represents a significant burden for many people.

Now, set against that is the increased profitability for certain producers who want to get into the production of biofuels in a larger way. This will then provide some tax breaks for agricultural producers and to agribusiness, so it may well perform its function of stimulating the production of more biofuels. I don't want to say that I'm condemning biofuels as a whole, but I think it's important to raise some of these concerns.

The other thing that's apparent as sort of the fad of biofuels is past, probably closer to 10 years ago, was research that showed that in order to replace the entire production of petroleum fuels in transportation and other areas, you would basically need to convert all of the food production on the entire Earth perhaps several times in order to produce the amount of fuel that is currently derived from petroleum. It's certainly not an answer to the depletion of world oil stocks if anyone thought that that might be the case.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to say categorically that I think this is the wrong direction, but I do just want to simply put on the record a few of the limitations and concerns around biofuels and to indicate that, in particular, I think we need to be concerned about making sure that we are in fact providing food in an affordable way to all Alberta families and that we also do our share to combat world hunger. I know that many farmers around this province do work with – I'm trying to remember the name.

An Hon. Member: The Canadian Foodgrains Bank.

Mr. Mason: The Canadian Foodgrains Bank. Thank you very much.

I know that they are doing great work, that farmers throughout Alberta are growing crops specifically to help people who are going hungry in other parts of the world. I think that's a trend we need to support.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make those comments. This is not a categorical opposition to Bill 19 but simply to put some very I think important reservations on the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the comments that were made by the hon. members about the concern over biofuels. Currently it takes about 20 per cent more energy to produce the biofuels in terms of the amount of fertilizer, the amount of water, the cultivation of the crops, and so on. So it's a bit of a lose-lose circumstance.

I do have a question for the hon. member as to the new methodology. For example, we've talked about separating the wheat from the chaff and just using the chaff part for the production of the biofuels as opposed to taking away from the grain, whether it be corn, whether it be wheat, oats, et cetera, whether that might be a little bit more acceptable.

The second question I have for the hon. member is: would he like to see a larger portion of this fuel tax being allowed to the municipalities as opposed to provincial revenues so the money could be used for infrastructure, social support programs, and so on in the local areas?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for those questions. Certainly, the use of agricultural waste products as a stock for fuel production is an excellent idea, and I'm glad he brought that point up because I didn't really distinguish that from the use of food. If that's a cost-effective process, the use of waste products for fuel production is a great idea, but I think it's mostly where the sugar is in the plant that is the most useful for biofuels.

The other question, about more money for municipalities, is something that I strongly believe in. I think that fuel tax revenue should be used to support transportation primarily, and I think that municipalities need more support for that. I don't necessarily think that it has to be a bigger share of the fuel tax, but I do think that the province needs to work out an acceptable formula for revenue sharing with the municipal governments, who deliver many critical services directly to the public.

The tax base that they operate from, being the property tax, is not always the most suitable or sufficient in order to meet the needs of modern cities. In particular, property tax was designed originally for services to properties; that is to say, roads and streetlights, policing, fire protection, and so on. But modern rapid transit systems, some of the social services, and recreational programs that modern municipalities, especially large ones, are called upon to provide are difficult to operate and fund just based on the property tax.

Yes, I am a strong proponent of greater revenue sharing with municipalities to give them a reliable, predictable, and guaranteed source of revenue. Those things are all important. It shouldn't just be going up and down like a yo-yo so that every time the price of gas drops in the province of Alberta, the arrangements are changed. I think it's got to be something that they can plan on in order to make good long-term decisions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others under 29(2)(a)?

Other speakers?

Then I shall call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-South on behalf of the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright to close the debate.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I'd just call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Bill 18

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and move second reading of the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010, as introduced.

We have a real enthusiasm for this new partnership. I want to say, first of all, that the opportunity for this amendment act to expand the horizon of the pioneering that Alberta has done in breaking down trade barriers does not in any way detract from the affiliation and the affection we have for the country of Canada. This does not in any way anticipate that this New West Partnership that has been formed will replace or even supplant in any fashion the kinds of things that we do as a Confederation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

However, it is to take advantage of the fact that together the three provinces have 9 million people and a GDP of $550 billion per year. It's worthy of note that this is the epicentre in the global economy of some of the most incredible underdeveloped resources that are just waiting in all three provinces to be developed and expanded with the proper plan, with the proper partnerships, and with the proper affiliation. We started the process by breaking down trade barriers with British Columbia. Now we have Saskatchewan on board, which clearly shows how the west is leading the way.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are required for two reasons: first of all, to bring monetary enforcement provisions into the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade, the AIT, as it's commonly referenced, and secondly, to extend the existing provisions of TILMA to the New West Partnership trade agreement, that includes the province of Saskatchewan.

The AIT is the national agreement that governs domestic trade and labour mobility across Canada. One of the flaws in that agreement was that a jurisdiction could break the rules without any consequences, and just very recently, in the last few days, we've heard about that rule-breaking and consequences that now can be applied.

In 2009, when all the provinces, territories, and the federal government agreed that an enforcement mechanism should be added with monetary penalties, they were incorporated into the AIT, the agreement on internal trade. These monetary penalties are up to $5 million if a jurisdiction does not comply with an AIT panel ruling. This is the teeth that Alberta has long been advocating for and is consistent with what we put in the TILMA agreement, or the trade and labour mobility agreement, that we've had in effect with the province of British Columbia. In fact, the AIT dispute mechanism is modelled after TILMA. We're already seeing its effects with the recent vegetable oil ruling over Ontario.

What we're proposing would update our legislation so that we're compliant with the new AIT rules. Mr. Speaker, we fought for those rules to be changed on a national level. They have been in the AIT agreement. Now this puts us in harmonization with those rules. All provinces, territories, and the federal government have agreed to make these changes to legislation. It just makes sense to be in perfect alignment so that we have everybody playing by the same rules.

Now, in the second part of this particular amendment act we have the New West Partnership trade agreement. It is part of a vision that this Premier has held ever since he thought years ago as Transportation minister: "Why do we have weigh scales on both sides of the Alberta border? Why would we on highway 1 try to duplicate on the Alberta side or the British Columbia side the same kind of activity, the same kind of regulatory enforcement as the other province?" So he fought for and won the right to make sure we streamlined and had only one weigh scale, only one office, only one delivery centre to make sure that this barrier was broken down between the two provinces and that we were working simultaneously, in effect, with partnership.

This kind of fundamental principle has been the underlying principle now of the New West Partnership trade agreement. The change that we're bringing in, in effect, does not add any new obligations for Alberta or British Columbia. The amendments will, however, allow for a common set of provisions covering all domestic trade agreements that Alberta may be party to. This will ensure that Alberta can provide timely, consistent implementation of its domestic trade agreement obligations, especially if more provinces want to join the Alberta-B.C.-Saskatchewan free trade region, and, Mr. Speaker, we're hearing rumours of just that kind of interest from other partners.

Full implementation will improve interprovincial trade, investment, and labour mobility in the west and provide seamless access for businesses and workers with a range of opportunities. It will also increase our competitiveness in the global economy.

Mr. Speaker, breaking down trade, investment, and labour mobility barriers is important for our economies and our citizens. It has been part of our Premier's leadership both in the Competitiveness Act and in all the facets of the way we are thinking and reviewing how we can become more economic. It is imperative with a group like our economic council, in fact, that we find new ways, and this is one of the best new ways, we believe, that we can support not only our businesses but sensible approaches to governing between the various provinces. I encourage all hon. members to support these amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be prepared to answer any questions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Am I speaking to the bill, or is this 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: To the bill.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a delight to stand up and speak to this bill. I'm sure that everyone knows that on this side of the House we certainly hammered hard at some of the agreements in TILMA that we felt probably wouldn't be as successful in light of the fact that the AIT was in place. However, I think we also knew that the AIT wasn't as effective as it probably could have been. I think that I can remember speaking about one of the most important things, about being able to, as the minister has referred to, weigh trucks on each side of the border because they had to drop off the beer cases before they could get them across, which was one of the things that they really wanted to do. So that was successful.

Back to this Bill 18. It does bring Alberta in line with recently established monetary enforcement provisions contained in the newly established dispute resolution. The minister has referred to that, the one that we won with Ontario, which now allows canola products to actually be sold in Ontario. It also would rescind the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement established by Alberta and B.C. because the agreement can be superseded by the New West Partnership trade agreement, but what it's done is move it to schedule 6 when, in fact, TILMA had been in schedule 6.1.

Partly what this bill has done is consolidating and, I think, probably making it a little easier for other entities that would be interested in joining to be able to have their legislation perhaps go forward to be able to meet some of the legislation that would have to be put together for all the different provinces. It actually reflects the reality that domestic trade units like the New West Partnership trade agreement are becoming increasingly common and are likely to emerge more frequently during the near future. I think that we have seen this way back when. When we look at the European Common Market, it's the same sort of principle, and I think we can look at that market and say that certainly some portions of that have been very successful.

As I said, the recent changes to the AIT make it stronger, and more importantly its enforcement now makes it directly parallel to the provincial and regional trade labour agreements that have already been signed between British Columbia and Alberta. The impact of this could be that the act recognizes agreements to which Alberta is liable and a participant, and it deals broadly with enforcement measures that have recently been addressed, as I've said before. I think it's very important because I believe that one of the reasons that AIT didn't work was because there wasn't any enforcement. I don't care how many rules you make; if they're not enforceable, they're not worth the paper they're written on. I think that when we make rules, when we make legislation, let's have some way to enforce it so that, in fact, the playing field would be level for everyone.

It's also important to note that these changes reflect only domestic trade, and it's good for all Canadians when we can get our domestic trade going east-west instead of always north-south. The international aspects of the New West Partnership trade agreement and their importance in the overall agreement really are not considered within the scope of the amendment. I'm sure that some of the agreements would fall under NAFTA if we were going south.

In addition, the members of what had previously been the TILMA panel, which adjudicated complaints and awards, will not change to the New West Partnership trade agreement and will stay. I'm assuming that with Saskatchewan joining, they would be allowed to nominate people to be on that adjudication panel.

I think, as I've mentioned before, that since its inception we on this side haven't really supported TILMA because it was developed and implemented outside of the Assembly and without adequate public consultation in other democratic forums. I think that this was probably one of the strongest arguments that we felt was legitimate when we talked about TILMA. However, the acceptance of this concept on a national scale will likely have many beneficial effects.

The measure is really a common-sense approach to economic diversification. I'm going to go back to something that we've looked at in southern Alberta and I've discussed with the minister as well. We're looking at getting thebaine, which is a product that is making pharmaceutical heroin, for lack of a better word, but it's not really heroin. It's a very, very important new crop, and of course, again, that's a diversity that would be going right across our country, particularly to pharmaceutical firms.

For Alberta and B.C. the New West agreement really changes very little. As you know, we were already on the inside sort of looking out.

I think, as the minister has said, that the Premier has always asked for – and I think I see that his minister is doing it – going to the new markets, that clearly we're going to have to look at, which are China and India and, certainly, in that Pacific Rim. The expansion of our domestic markets and the Asian markets is crucial. Because of the severity of the recent economic downturn in the States, which has traditionally been our largest trading partner, and the changes to the regulatory structure in the U.S., Alberta must look further afield for economic and trade opportunities. I realize that this has sort of gone off on a tangent because, truly, Bill 18 is strictly for domestic use. However, a strong domestic product, even if it's with two or three provinces together, will have that advantage of going to the Pacific Rim or the Indian countries and being able to sell our products.

The Alberta government has always come out as a strong advocate for breaking down barriers to trade and labour mobility. I don't think that we on this side ever had any objection to that. Again, as I say, the only objection was that it was done in the backroom, so to speak, but TILMA has been a good example of this going forward.

I think the minister is really very good because I think she read my mind. One of the comments that I would like to make, which is a philosophical observation, is exactly what she mentioned, that I see Canada perhaps being regionalized. I think that, first and foremost, I am a Canadian, and I want to see Canada remain a very strong country. When I see what's happened with the agreement between B.C. and Alberta, clearly a lot of the action is in the west and has moved. It's an evolution within Canadian history. All of the action was in the east, which is where we were founded, and we're not that old a country. Compared to the European Common Market and some of the European countries, truly we are probably a country still in diapers.

I would hate to see us regionalize, where we fight against each other, but I believe that the start of TILMA, I'm hoping, is the start of something bigger that will unite the country in terms of being able to trade amongst our provinces and, in fact, where the provinces will work together for the betterment of all of Canada.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say that I support Bill 18.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in support of Bill 18, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010. I was a strong supporter of TILMA, the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, and I am now a strong supporter of the New West Partnership trade agreement, that this bill considers.

Alberta and B.C. were pioneers in working collaboratively to remove redundant barriers and enhance the movement of goods, services, and people across our borders. This work was noticed across Canada, and it was truly a historic day earlier this year when Saskatchewan joined B.C. in forging the New West Partnership and, specifically, the New West Partnership trade agreement. Bill 18 will extend the existing provisions of TILMA to the New West Partnership trade agreement, including Saskatchewan with B.C. and Alberta.

TILMA has been very successful for this province in reducing government red tape, contributing to job creation, and stimulating economic growth, and through this bill that will now extend to Saskatchewan, which will create a larger, stronger, and more dynamic region here in western Canada. I believe it really does kind of broaden our opportunity to have influence within Canada. Certainly, I'm a nationalist in terms of the importance of international trade and Canada taking strong, strong positions with regard to ensuring that we have open access to international markets, but I think this regional partnership will help us in international markets as well. This partnership creates the largest barrier-free trade and investment market within Canada, representing over 9 million people and a combined GDP of $555 billion.

I have for many, many years in my involvement as an agriculture producer, as a beef producer, seen the importance of removing barriers to trade. There are clearly the restrictions that we've seen, inappropriate restrictions to access to several markets, particularly in the beef industry, that have created a great deal of economic hardship for Canadians but also for Alberta cattle producers. I guess I see this partnership as helping us to have a stronger impact in international trade agreements, that are often led by our national government but are of particular importance to western Canada with our heavy dependence on the production of raw materials, whether that's in agriculture or oil and gas or forestry products. So that's extremely important in western Canada.

It was my privilege in the years prior to becoming involved as the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks to travel internationally as the chairman of the Canada Beef Export Federation as well as the Alberta Beef Producers, and I very clearly saw the importance of regional trade agreements or the importance of reducing interprovincial trade barriers, that have existed in Canada for many years. While you wouldn't think that's a direct connection, very often those interprovincial trade barriers impact how effective we can be in international markets, repeatedly in Asian countries, particularly, but also in Mexico. We saw situations where the fact that we hadn't gotten things resolved within Canada had some bearing on how well we did in some of those markets in terms of smoothing the way to keep products moving back and forth efficiently.

I guess that since becoming involved as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, I've also seen – particularly through the discussion of the TILMA that we've had over the last several years, two years in particular, I've understood in broader terms what some of these agreements mean to a whole range of other industries and small business across our province, and I appreciate the broader understanding that the discussion in this House has brought to myself. As I said, my understanding was primarily in agriculture, particularly the beef industry.

One of the things that I do appreciate about our country is the fact that we have a national animal health and food safety position, a national set of regulations. That's also important to get into markets and see products move freely into other markets. We just have to look down to the U.S., where there is, I would say, a more extensive regional set of regulations for a whole range of movement of goods and services state by state, and that makes it very difficult to move products even from, say, Alberta into various states. There isn't a uniform animal health and food safety standard in a number of the U.S. states, so that adds some complications. I think the fact that we have this national standard for animal health and food safety, then as we work to break down the barriers of interprovincial trade, we'll see better results internationally. I think even some of the more recent trade missions that have happened as a result of this partnership developing will bear good results for our province.

Not to extend my comments, Mr. Speaker, but I'm just very pleased to see us moving in this direction. I look forward to the success that we'll have in agriculture and in a wide range of products and goods and services for Alberta as a result of this initiative. I'd like to applaud the minister for bringing this forward, and I look forward to the success that we'll appreciate as a result of that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I'd like to speak briefly on the bill and express some of the concerns which I have. These concerns, I think, fall into three categories: the broad concern about free trade agreements generally; the concerns about TILMA, which we're repeating, because that was debated in this House some years ago; and then specific concerns relative to this act.

Mr. Speaker, our party opposed TILMA and continues to do that. We are not going to support this piece of legislation even though it doesn't change very much. We're not comfortable with the status quo of TILMA, so certainly extending it to one more province in general is not something that we're wildly in favour of.

I want to talk about one concern I have specifically. Members of this House may know that I was at one point, for a number of years, a member of the municipal council here in the city of Edmonton. One of the things that the TILMA act does is to severely limit the ability for municipalities to have local procurement programs. Over certain thresholds, which are fairly low – $75,000 for goods and services and $200,000 for construction – they have to accept competitive bids from anywhere in B.C. and Alberta, and now Saskatchewan will be included in that as well.

I support local procurement policies. I think that municipalities should have the authority, if they wish, as an economic development strategy to have a buy-local campaign. Why is that important? Well, Mr. Speaker, if you really look at it – of course, this is a broader concern with the North American free trade agreement as well – in other areas it really limits the capacity of local governments to have local procurement. When you have local procurement, you are going to be dealing with a greater number of small businesses, and they're going to employ more people locally. When you have to accept bids from somewhere else, they're going to tend to be larger companies with less local employment. This is a policy across the board in all free trade agreements – and it's a policy that tends to reduce the number of small businesses in your community – to become dependent on much larger corporations. It's an intentional strategy, in my view, which is behind this from large corporate entities in the world and Canada and the United States and Mexico and the governments, that are joined at the hip with those companies.

I've always been a strong supporter of local employment and small business, and I don't see the benefit to our communities, generally, of going in this direction. If you're a big company, I certainly see the benefit because it certainly removes any limitations there may be on your ability to get labour or capital virtually anywhere you want. I know that's something that the government members opposite believe in, but it's not something that I believe in. We've been fairly consistent in our opposition to this particular direction on the part of the government.

The bill has one very good point, something that we fought very hard at the time, which is what they call the Lieutenant Governor in Council's override position, which is schedule 6.1, section 7. Now, that is what's known as a King Henry VIII provision, and it gives the cabinet through regulation the authority to change legislation if that legislation conflicts with the directions set out in the TILMA bill. It's being eliminated, and I'm very glad of that, Mr. Speaker, because it's a very, very dangerous direction for any government to take, to give itself the power, without reference to the Legislature, to change laws. It has proven unnecessary, apparently, and has not been used, so the government has come around on the issue and is eliminating it here in this act. That's one thing that I'm very grateful to see.

I guess the other principle that I want to direct members' attention to is the whole question of sovereignty of Legislatures and parliaments and how these free trade agreements undermine that. If any law that we pass or any measure that we adopt contradicts these acts, it may in fact be overturned by different panels. Of course, with the free trade agreement in North America there are panels that can overturn the decisions of the Parliament of Canada or of this Legislature, and those have the effect of reducing the democratically-elected members' rights and the ability of parliaments and Legislatures to act in a sovereign manner in the areas of jurisdiction which they have.

I want to just point to one serious issue with relation to this and, obviously, not directly under TILMA, as an example. It's the export of unprocessed bitumen from our province. There are a number of economic analyses that show that a large number of jobs, both construction jobs and ongoing jobs in the industry, are essentially being created in the United States, where this bitumen is being upgraded. Now, it would certainly be our view to support what the Premier said at the time of his election as leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, which was, you know, that we want to get away from that. He likened the export of unprocessed bitumen to scraping off the topsoil of a farm and selling it. I agree with that characterization. I think it was accurate. But now with the massive development of upgrading and refining facilities in a number of states in the United States dependent on our bitumen, we're losing that. The difficulty is that the free trade agreements will make it very difficult indeed to go back and repatriate our jobs and make sure that we are in fact processing our raw materials as much as possible here in our own province. It's an example to me of the dangerous slippery slope that is presented by these free trade agreements.

Mr. Speaker, to summarize, I think this bill interferes with the autonomy of municipal governments. I think it undermines the position of our provincial Legislature. It undermines our ability as the people's elected representatives to make decisions. It undermines small business. It creates a system in which international capital is making more and more decisions about what happens in our province and we are making fewer and fewer decisions about what happens in our province. So it's not the direction that we support.

I expect that at some point in the province to the west of us and the province to the east of us there will be political change again, and we may find this western partnership reduced maybe to this province. I expect that at some point there's going to be political change in this province as well, and then they'll all be out, and I'll be happy.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize on my list the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to commend the minister for introducing this bill. She knows and I know that in the 21st century jurisdictions that don't look beyond their own borders will find themselves working in isolation, and they'll struggle to compete in an increasingly global marketplace, sir.

I think the New West Partnership agreement is critical. I think that, you know, you've heard that our neighbours in B.C. and Saskatchewan have come together to improve the internal trade and labour mobility agreements, but more than this, the New West Partnership reflects a commitment by western provinces to collaborate as a single region in promoting the west internationally. I think that's where the big payoff comes for our province, Mr. Speaker.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we can break down the barriers between our provinces. It's not a political barrier. These are good, common-sense business barriers that need to be worked on collaboratively. You know, we're better positioned to market the west internationally. We can attract businesses, foreign investment, and we can increase trade. It makes sense. It makes business sense, and I don't think that if one government changes or another government changes, it'll affect that.

Sir, once businesses are attracted to our part of the country, this legislation will allow them to move between our provinces with greater ease. In Whitecourt-St. Anne right now I have companies that are based in B.C. that tell me every time I meet with them of the frustration that they have, you know, working between the provinces, whether it's moving labour or goods. They're telling me through our discussions in the last year through TILMA that it's improving, that things are getting better. So if we can enhance that relationship, why not? It makes business sense. It employs people in my constituency. It makes my industry folks more competitive on not just a local basis but an international basis. It's good for all of us.

That's why, once again, I support this bill. I support the minister's initiative and know that this is just the first step in many steps that this Legislature can take to become stronger as a region in Canada.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must admit to feeling the same conflicted feelings as I did when we talked initially about the TILMA bill, and part of that conflict comes from how we do it. I'm concerned about the lowest common denominator in terms of practices, the potential of undercutting labour agreements, and so on. If it turns out that some contract achieved in B.C. is lower than that in Alberta, then we would import that lower agreement, and to me that's part of the problem.

I also have similar concerns to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood with regard to the potential loss of local determination and the effect on local economies, the equivalent of the Walmart moving in and knocking out the hardware store, the grocery store, and a series of small businesses.

On the other side of the coin, I believe in collaboration. I believe in co-operation. I believe in the vision that was put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview of the notion of the western tiger. As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East indicated, I don't see this as regionalism, a firewall, a border circumstance, where we put a moat around our western provinces, but I see some commonalities that could be achieved.

I must indicate that I consider myself to be a Canadian first and an Albertan second although for over 50 of my 63 years I've lived in this province and have strong roots in this province. My sort of national identity was formed by the fact that my father was in the Forces, and I was born, for example, in Saskatoon. From there we moved to Aylmer, Ontario, to Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, just outside Montreal. I moved temporarily back to stay with my grandmother in Saskatoon for a portion of grade 1. From there our family moved to Winnipeg, where I finished grades 1 through 3. Again I was back with my grandmother for a little while for grade 4. From Winnipeg the family moved to Namao airbase, just outside of Edmonton. From Edmonton to Toronto, from Toronto to Ottawa, and finally from Ottawa in 1966 we moved back to Alberta. This is why I celebrate the fabric and I feel connected to the various regions of Canada.

It bothers me when I hear talk of firewalls, when I hear certain Albertans complaining about equalization payments. The way I view that is that we're fortunate to be in this economic driver province, that we have money that can go on equalization payments. I can't imagine anybody wanting to trade places with a province that's the recipient of these transfers.

As I say, I view things from a national perspective, but I also see the potential of co-operation; for example, the bulk buying of certain products that would be of benefit to each of us. I'd like to see a national pharmacare program, but until such a time as that becomes possible, I'd like to at least see Saskatchewan, B.C., and Alberta buying drugs, generic preferably, at a reduced price so that we could all have that economic benefit. I don't see that as undercutting anyone's bottom line, but I see it as a sharing.

In terms of co-operation I like what I've seen at PNWER, the Pacific North West Economic Region, but also I would say that that E stands for "environmental."

The notion of working with those around us for our better and larger good makes tremendous sense to me. For example, I would much rather be in some cases importing timber from B.C. rather than using some of the B.C. practices of clear-cutting that have been adopted in this province, especially close to water bodies. The justification of the pine beetle for unsustainable practices instead of selective logging and burning, for example, would not be a practice I would want to import from B.C., and I know there are a number of people in B.C. that regret the type of logging that's been done there. Yes, B.C. has suffered from the pine beetle infestations. We're taking measures to avoid that spread farther east, but the measures that we have to take must be based on science. I'm not a proponent of large dams to the point where we're flooding timber and we're flooding farmland, so there are certain practices within B.C. that I would not necessarily want to import.

For example, Premier Brad Wall of Saskatchewan has expressed concerns about the takeover of the Potash company, and Prime Minister Harper has said: "Well, what's the problem here? You're going from an American owned to an Australian owned." He doesn't see that as a problem. The problem is the loss of local say, local control. In this case it's the entire province of Saskatchewan. Now, I'm not sure because I don't quite understand whether our AIMCo's potential investment in Potash, up to a 30 per cent share from what I've read and heard, is viewed by Saskatchewan as being as hostile a takeover as is being suggested as coming from Australia. I'm somewhat conflicted in terms of: we're wanting to be more co-operative, yet we're talking about large shares of Potash or taking over part of Saskatchewan's local control.

I also think that there are a number of practices that Saskatchewan or B.C., for that matter, would not want to borrow from us. That's, for example, the tailings ponds issue. We continue even though we know that tailings ponds, beyond dead ducks, are a threat not only to wildlife but also to our human well-being. I'm sure that's not a practice that we would want to be adopted.

Also, in terms of sustainability we have to be careful about the practices. For example, in situ SAGD, while it is in some ways less harmful than the mining, still cuts up the backcountry to such an extent that it does put animals and birds, especially of the migratory variety, in danger. We have to be sharing best scientific practices amongst Alberta, Saskatchewan, and B.C.

We've talked about, for example, the need to expand and diversify our economy. I agree with that. While I am not a wall builder, I see the advantage of the east-west trade, as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East indicated. You've seen me stand up in previous TILMA debates and talk about the need to twin highway 3 so that we go from our eastern border to our western border with a twinned highway, which will promote commerce and trade. I think, obviously, that if we're going to bring Saskatchewan into this larger TILMA agreement, then the standard measures that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had in terms of the tolls that we charge transport trucks and the safety inspections and so on I would hope would be the highest standards and the highest expectations – I didn't say the highest levies or highest taxes but the highest safety standards – and we would have a quality road system for connecting.

I am concerned, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood put forward, about the export to the south of our jobs. Again I talk about being conflicted because I believe that our water should be first used for human consumption and also for the benefit of our natural situations. I am worried about the amount of water that gets used up in irrigation, for example, the current practices, and the need to protect that water, yet it makes absolute sense in a TILMA circumstance to realize the direction our water flows. We have agreements on a national basis – for example with the Athabasca or the North Saskatchewan or the South Saskatchewan or, for going down to the States, the Milk River – as to how much allotment we're allowed to have in order to make sure that our receivers have what they need to carry on their livelihoods.

The idea of an extended treaty: I understand the benefits; my hesitation comes from the limitations. I do not believe, for example, in contracts like division 8, where the first group in determines the wages and the conditions for the rest. I believe that contracts should be negotiated in a fair way, and I do know that, for example, in B.C. and Saskatchewan the idea of unionized labour seems to be better accepted than it is in Alberta.

I also share the concerns that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated about the lowest price and, in some cases, a lower standard or quality, of having so much of our work for the oil sands being shipped long distances at great fuel costs: first from Korea, across the ocean, through the States, including Montana, where the companies are paying the States for the wear on their roads. But I'm not sure to what extent that compensation is coming our way in Alberta. I appreciate our economic drivers. I'm looking for a sustainable balance between our economy and our environment. I believe in co-operation; I believe in collaboration. If we all reach for the highest standards, then Bill 18 is going to satisfy my concerns.

I guess the adage think globally, act locally applies in terms of: what's good for Alberta should theoretically be good for the rest of Canada. Hopefully, Bill 18 will achieve that, and if that is the case, then it will probably receive my support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to try and go around all sides of the argument in trying to come up with a decision.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or question.

Seeing none, any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour and a pleasure to speak on Bill 18, Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010. Essentially, this bill will try to bring Alberta in line with recently established monetary enforcement provisions contained in the newly established dispute resolution chapter of the agreement on international trade, or AIT. What it does in the process is rescind the TILMA agreement established by Alberta and British Columbia just recently. The act aims to bring Alberta in line, like I said, with the monetary enforcement provisions established in the AIT.

In addition, this does replace TILMA. This agreement now becomes the New West Partnership trade agreement, or NWPTA, which has essentially expanded the previous TILMA agreement between Alberta and B.C. to include Saskatchewan. In essence, Bill 18 takes specific references to trade agreements out of the Government Organization Act in favour of generic language that focuses more broadly on trade agreements.

The central motivation for this change is twofold. The first reason is to reflect the reality that domestic trade units like the NWPTA are becoming increasingly common and are likely to emerge more frequently in the near future. It seems to be the direction of the world. The recent changes to the AIT now make it much stronger, and its enforcement now makes it more directly parallel to provincial and regional trade and labour agreements. That's essentially where the world is going, and Alberta is joining in and reflecting these changes and breaking down barriers to trade where they exist.

There seems to be a lot of commonality between British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan, so in the main these are probably good things. That's something that's going to have to be monitored from time to time by this government and other organizations to ensure that it is running smoothly, that the agreements still make sense, and that it's not simply a matter of dogma, that it's actually working for Alberta citizens.

The act recognizes agreements to which Alberta is liable and a participant and deals broadly with enforcement measures that have been recently established. It also sets in motion a move to create legislative structure for the New West Partnership so as to harmonize this legislation, so we can move to actually have some enforcement provisions to harmonize this legislation among the three organizations.

I was also present in this House when we previously argued against TILMA, and that was essentially for a couple of reasons. First off, we felt that it was being rammed through without a fair and full hearing of our partners at various municipal governments and other areas of the province who were uncomfortable with bringing it in. Essentially, it was not that this caucus is against trade or reducing barriers. It's not. It was simply that there was not a full and fair consultative process in place.

That's sort of where we're going. A lot of this stuff is good stuff. Let's look at this. The three provinces of the New West Partnership combine to form an economic unit representing 9 million people with a combined GDP of more than $550 billion. The driving concept behind the partnership is to increase the level of trade and to increase investment and labour mobility and allow people more opportunities. As a by-product of this partners are attempting to attract and retain talent from a broad spectrum of industry, business, and education and capitalize on a combined buying power in foreign markets. These tend to be good things. As we become more competitive and reduce these barriers, hopefully a lot of these things the bill is trying to accomplish will become evident. I am hopeful that they will lead to more prosperity here in Alberta without any of the necessary baggage or any corresponding weaknesses. Let's hope that is true.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this bill. It looks like a move in the right direction. I do recognize the point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up, that local procurement practices of cities are impacted by this, and that made some pretty good sense to me. Cities should have some sort of direction on how they're allowed local procurement, and there should be some provisions in there for cities to develop themselves or to spur economic development or to utilize the levers that are at their control. That is a concern for me.

I think, also, that a drawback of this bill may be the fact that it encourages buying products from a long distance away. I realize the theory is that having open markets reduces price and people get the best deal and competition happens. I understand that argument. At the same time we're moving at a time when there are concepts – as the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought up: think globally, act locally. We're looking at times when in this world we have a fisherman in Norway catching a fish, that fish is then being sent off to China to be canned, and that can was made in a smelter in Canada. It all comes together, and then it's sent three-quarters of the way around the world, to Australia, to be sold.

Now, I understand this could add to some future problems. I understand that. Nevertheless, those are things that we will have to keep an eye on in this bill, and it's outside the scope of this. I just bring up that those are some of the ramifications of the direction we are going in here. Although I understand it and generally support it, there's another side that looks at local procurement and local development as being also necessary. Maybe there are ways to do both of these things with this bill, to not only encourage trade and development with our partners but also to look to develop local sourcing for things. But, hey, Rome was not built in a day, sir.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak here today. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, then I would call the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak on Bill 18, which will bring Alberta in line with the recently established monitoring enforcement provisions contained in the newly established dispute resolution chapter of the agreement on internal trade and rescind the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, TILMA, established by Alberta and British Columbia. That agreement is superseded by the New West Partnership trade agreement, which has recently expanded the previous agreement between Alberta and B.C. and Saskatchewan.

When we look back, we look back at NAFTA. There were concerns that NAFTA would be damaging for our economy for Canada because we were negotiating with a much bigger economy, but NAFTA turned out to be good for Canada. I think that breaking down the barriers between different provinces or different countries, you know, it is the era whose time has come. I'll give you an example. Like, in India if a trucker was to go from one state to another state, he had to have a permit for every state. Even there they are breaking down the barriers. The trucker could get just one permit, and he could go right across the country.

Bringing Saskatchewan into the fold I think would increase competition. Who knows? Our prices may come down with more competition. You know, if the plumber from B.C. could come work here, we're going to have more competition. Maybe, you know, we will pay less for plumbers, and maybe electricians will be cheaper.

The objective is to reflect the reality that domestic trade units like the NWPTA are becoming increasingly common and are likely to merge more frequently. In the near future there will be more agreements. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview talked about the western tiger. The world is becoming like a global village, and there is no way that we can build firewalls around ourselves. We have to have these agreements in order to prosper.

This act also recognizes the agreements to which Alberta is liable and deals broadly with enforcement measures that have been recently established to address the dispute resolution issues stemming from AIT. It also sets in motion a move to create a less legislative structure for the New West Partnership, as to harmonize the legislation already created for TILMA compliance in order to bring Saskatchewan into the new agreement.

The only change for the government of Alberta will be that material which used to deal separately with AIT and schedule 6 and TILMA and schedule 6.1 will now become combined in a new schedule 6. Since its inception we have not seen TILMA because it was developed and implemented outside the Assembly without adequate public consultation in other democratic forums. However, the acceptance of this concept on a national scale would likely have many beneficial effects. This measure is a common-sense approach to economic diversification, in my opinion.

The agreement covers all public sector entities, including government ministries and their agencies, boards, and commissions, Crown corporations, municipalities, school boards, and publicly funded academic, health, and social service organizations. The three provinces of the New West Partnership combine to form an economic unit representing 9 million people and a combined GDP of more than $550 billion.

The driving concept behind the partnership is the removal of barriers to trade and to increase investment and labour mobility. As a by-product of this agreement the partners are attempting to create a much bigger negotiating bloc. This doesn't mean that, you know, we will be pitting east against west or north against south, but this will improve trade between different parts of the country, and we can capitalize on the combined buying power, even in the foreign markets. I was yesterday talking to some home builders in Calgary. They have banded together and they have gone to China so they could negotiate better deals on all kinds of home building supplies.

I think this agreement, if implemented properly, will benefit all the provinces. For those reasons I support Bill 18. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. Any hon. member?

Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to close the debate.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've had a very robust discussion. I'm very pleased that the other members have taken advantage of the opportunity to speak. If I could please conclude with calling the question on second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 16
Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today and join the debate on the distracted driving legislation that's before the Committee of the Whole this afternoon. Firstly, I would like to commend the MLA for Calgary-Hays for all his diligent work in bringing this forward in a private member's bill a year or so back and all the discussion that took place there.

Mr. Chairman, out on Alberta's roads today there are more distractions than ever before. This is undoubtedly a very important bill, and the purpose of this bill is to reduce traffic accidents and save lives on Alberta's roads. I want to talk for a moment about why I think this bill is especially important.

Firstly, today's technology is moving forward by leaps and bounds. Increasingly this technology is more and more mobile, and we can bring it with us in our vehicles. New apps are being introduced every day. These improvements have greatly increased the number of activities we can undertake, and many users will attempt to use them while driving. People can bring not only cellphones with them but MP3 players and a large number of other devices that can all be distracting to the driver.

Second, people are busier than they have ever been before. People today feel the need to be connected to their friends, to their family, and to their co-workers at all times. This adds to the first issue because people are under a lot of pressure to multitask and maximize the amount of work they get done during any particular day. Unfortunately, this includes multitasking while driving, completing tasks that would otherwise take their attention off the road.

Mr. Chairman, research has shown that between 20 and 30 per cent of all collisions are caused by distracted driving. More than ever before people are forgetting that as long as you're behind the wheel, your sole responsibility is to focus on driving. The intention of this legislation is to remind people of this principle and ensure the safety of themselves as well as other drivers, pedestrians, and other users of our public roadways.

This legislation will do a number of things. Most importantly, it will ban hand-held conversations on a cellphone and texting while driving. Further, this legislation will ban other activities such as personal grooming, reading printed material, using a laptop, or the indiscriminate use of GPS-like devices as well as e-mailing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some have suggested that they could be penalized for taking a sip of coffee. This is not true; it is a myth. This bill does not propose penalties for those who have a simple sip of coffee or are having a conversation with other passengers or having a pet in their car. This bill targets those individuals who engage in activities which distract their attention from the road and could lead to unsafe driving.

Mr. Chairman, the government has ensured that the approach to this bill was balanced and that a degree of common sense would be taken into consideration during implementation. This bill makes exceptions for those who work in professions where it is very important that the individual be able to talk on their cellphone while driving and also states that drivers will be able to use hands-free devices while driving. It has been suggested that the bill should go further in banning distracted activities. It would be near impossible to enforce a total ban on all activities that may distract a driver from being attentive to the road. Through consultation through the all-party Committee on the Economy I believe we have struck a balance that will increase safety on Alberta's roads.

I support this bill because not only does it restrain people from engaging in distracting activities, but it also raises awareness of the dangers of distracted driving, educating Albertans and helping to make them safer drivers. Will this legislation stop all distracted driving? Sadly, it will not, but it will prevent a significant amount of distracted driving and make our roads safer for our families and our children.

Mr. Chairman, it is important to note that this legislation does not prevent drivers from being penalized for other dangerous acts. If a driver is observed driving in a dangerous manner while distracted, that driver can still be charged with dangerous driving in addition to distracted driving.

Previous to this legislation we had received feedback that the distracted driving legislation did not adequately deal with the types of distractions found on the road today. This government is giving law enforcement officers and courts another tool to have flexibility in dealing with the complexities of distracted driving. The bill was drawn up with careful input from our enforcement partners, and their input is seen in this legislation. Those who enforce the laws on Alberta's roads obviously have a very difficult task, and any legislation which does not take into account this difficulty will not effectively achieve its purpose.

Since this legislation was crafted with the input of law enforcement officials, this legislation will be effective. Some have expressed concerns about the potential for enforcement of this legislation. I was in Australia in April and put on a fair number of miles driving through four different states. In all those miles I did not see one, single individual using a cellphone while driving. Why is that? Australia has a law prohibiting cellphone use, and it is observed by the public.

I think my most important point, Mr. Chairman, is that this bill has the full support of Albertans. Certainly, I have received a lot of calls, e-mails, and other support from my constituents in St. Albert. Everybody in Alberta wants safer roads, and most Albertans drive in a responsible and safe manner. This legislation is not intended to inconvenience or harm those drivers who already drive in a safe way. This legislation is intended for those who ignore safe driving practices or are obviously distracted by other activities while driving. This legislation is an education tool and will provide an incentive for everyone to drive safer.

Mr. Chairman, let me be clear. Most individuals do not make a conscious choice to drive in an unsafe manner or choose to be distracted. Most individuals use these devices because they are so convenient, not because it is a matter of life and death. We have made sure that the fine for contravening this law will not overly penalize the offender but give them the proper motivation to drive more responsibly.

I have no doubt that as more people comply with this legislation, lives will be saved. Not only will it save lives, Mr. Chairman, but this legislation aligns with our common sense. Those who drive while obviously distracted will be punished, while those who drive responsibly will be safer on Alberta's roads.

For all of the reasons previously mentioned, I support this legislation fully. It will save lives and is a practical and enforceable law. Mr. Chairman, I encourage all of the members of this House to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, has gone through second reading. I appreciate the debate we had on this important piece of legislation. Over the summer Albertans had an opportunity to review Bill 16 and provide comments, and I'm pleased to tell you that the majority of the feedback received from law enforcement, stakeholders, and the general public was positive and in support of this bill. Albertans are eager to see this bill become law.

Mr. Chairman, that said, we have identified a few points that require clarification, and these are being addressed through a House amendment. I want to be clear. These amendments provide clarification. They do not change the original intent of the legislation.

One of the points that came up this summer was related to the use of two-way radio communication devices, also known as citizens' band or CB radios, while driving. Some Albertans interpreted the exemptions for certain groups of drivers to use two-way radios as though these specific drivers could use any kind of communication device, even a hand-held cellphone. This was not the policy intent, so sections 115.1(3)(a), (b), and (c) of the bill should be amended to make it clear that these three specific groups of drivers can use two-way radios only for work-related purposes or while participating in an emergency management situation.

These specific drivers include those who are required by regulation or by the individual's employer to maintain two-way radio communication or for drivers who are participating in a search, rescue, or emergency management situation. For example, these specific drivers could include drivers of escort, pilot, or trail vehicles, taxi drivers, truck drivers, and couriers. Also, these specific drivers can only use other communication devices, including a hand-held cellphone, in the event that their two-way radio is not operational and, again, only for work purposes or an emergency management situation.

Mr. Chairman, the other point regarding radio communication is that technology now allows these devices to be used in hands-free mode. Currently the bill does not restrict Albertans from using a cellphone in hands-free mode, so it should be clarified that a radio communication device can also be used by Albertans in hands-free mode and that the minister may make regulations respecting the manner in which a radio communication device may be used in hands-free mode. This will provide clarification and consistency. These amendments would be addressed in sections 115.1(2) and 115.5(c) respectively.

Mr. Chairman, another point is the need to clarify in section 115.4(1)(a) that the restrictions on reading while driving apply to printed materials inside the vehicle. Examples would be newspapers, books, and magazines. This, of course, would not include reading or viewing things outside of the vehicle such as road signs, and it would also exclude vehicle instruments and gauges.

Proceeding with the House amendments to Bill 16 will strengthen the proposed legislation and reinforce our efforts to provide safe communities for Albertans. I'll now read the amendments to Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. The bill is to be amended as follows. In part A section 2 is amended

- (a) in the proposed section 115.1

- (i) in subsection (1)(a) by adding “, radio communication device” after “cellular telephone”;
- (ii) in subsection (2) by adding “or radio communication device” after “cellular telephone”;
- (iii) by striking out subsection (3)(a) and substituting the following:
 - (a) the use of a 2-way radio communication device, only for the purposes set out in the regulation, by an individual driving or operating an escort, pilot or trail vehicle who is required by regulation under this Act to maintain 2-way radio communication, or the use of a cellular telephone or other communication device by that individual for those purposes when 2-way radio communication is not functional or is unavailable,
- (iv) by striking out subsection (3)(b) and substituting the following:
 - (b) the use of a 2-way radio communication device, only for the purpose of maintaining communication with the individual's employer, by an individual driving or operating a vehicle who is required by the individual's employer to maintain 2-way radio communication while the individual is acting within the scope of the individual's employment, or the use of a cellular telephone or other communication device by that individual for that purpose when 2-way radio communication is not functional or is unavailable,
- (v) by striking out subsection (3)(c) and substituting the following:
 - (c) the use of a 2-way radio communication device, only for the purpose of participating in a search, rescue or emergency management situation, by an individual driving or operating a vehicle, or the use of a cellular telephone or other communication device by that individual for that purpose when 2-way radio communication is not functional or is unavailable, or
- (vi) by striking out subsection (3)(d) and substituting the following:
 - (d) the use of a cellular telephone or other communication device, only for the purpose of contacting an emergency response unit, by an individual driving or operating a vehicle.
- (b) in the proposed section 115.2(2)(b) by adding “or radio communication device” after “cellular telephone”;
- (c) in the proposed section 115.4(1)(a) by adding “located within the vehicle other than an instrument, gauge, device or system referred to in section 115.2(2)(f)” after “printed material”;
- (d) in the proposed section 115.5(c) by adding “, radio communication device” after “cellular telephone”.

The Chair: We have the amendment distributed. It shall be known as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A1.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. On amendment A1 I see this as strengthening and setting out the exemptions. The only sort of lack of clarity I see is with regard to an “individual's employer, by an individual driving or operating a vehicle who is required by the individual's employer to maintain 2-way radio communication.”

For example, I totally understand the need to exempt taxis. I understand the need to exempt public transport, buses, and so on. I also don't want to hinder the emergency communication that a truck driver – I used the highway 63 analogy yesterday – needs to make. But I'm just wondering how many loopholes might be enacted by someone who suggests: well, we need to have this 2-way communication in order to run our business.

Obviously, Canada Post, you know, would need to connect with main post offices. You sometimes wonder: could they pull over to do that? What kind of communication is acceptable versus unacceptable? For example, from my own experience working for High Country Camping in the Kananaskis area, I required the use of a 2-way radio because the coverage was so poor from tower to tower. In order to do my business, which often involved reporting an accident or an emergency circumstance, I needed to be able to use that 2-way radio.

I don't know enough about the satellite radios. For example, the RCMP: I'm assuming that in order to have them function in the wilderness areas that I operated in, they would have to stop and actually set it up to get the signal and the location they needed because the regular GPS that we see like OnStar and so on, there wouldn't be sufficient towers to allow that communication.

Obviously, for emergency circumstances, which includes tow trucks, this type of greater specificity would be required. I'm hoping that when the legislation is said and done, our enforcement organizations – our police, sheriffs, RCMP, et cetera – will clearly understand what is and isn't allowed. I believe the bottom line of all of this is: was there a distraction in the driving of the person who, in theory, is permitted to have the radio or the two-way communication but is using it inappropriately? In some cases that applies to police officers. Like, I can't imagine a police officer rushing to an accident scene typing on his computer. That to me would potentially put that police officer and the public in danger.

It will be interesting to see how tightly this amendment can be applied. I do believe it heads in the right direction, and after the vote has taken place, I will be offering an amendment which takes us even further.

I appreciate this opportunity to discuss amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. At this time I would like to move a subamendment of my own. If I can just briefly explain. This is an amendment that I believe should be moved and should be considered by this House, but because of the nature of the government amendment, amendment A1, we need to do it in this particular fashion and move my amendment as a subamendment to amendment A1. I will give it to the page to pass out now, and then I will speak to it momentarily.

Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment shall be known as subamendment SA1. Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, please continue.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Before I get into the meat of subamendment SA1, just a little bit of procedural explanation as it has been explained to me by Parliamentary Counsel. This would have been an amendment that stood on its own but for the fact that it seeks to amend sections of Bill 16 that the government amendment will amend as well. Of course, the government amendment, as it should, takes precedence. My amendment refers very specifically to one idea, and that is that I want to extend the ban on the use of cellphones while driving to include hands-free devices, and I'll speak to that in a moment.

The subamendment itself goes like this. I move that amendment A1 to Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in part A by striking out clause (a)(i) and (ii) and substituting the following:

- (i) by striking out subsection (1)(a) and substituting the following:
 - (a) holding, viewing, manipulating, or otherwise using a cellular telephone, radio communication device or other communication device that is capable of receiving or transmitting telephone communication, electronic data, electronic mail or text messages, or
- (ii) by striking out subsection (2).

Sub (2) in the bill reads:

An individual may drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while using a cellular telephone in hands-free mode.

Now, the first part is necessary in order to do the second part as well. There are two other parts to this subamendment: in part B by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

(b) by striking out the proposed section 115.2(2)(b) and in part C by striking out clause (d) and substituting the following:

- (d) in the proposed section 115.5(c) by striking out "a cellular telephone or" and substituting "an."

Basically, that's a lot of words and a lot of detail and a lot of protocol and procedure to get to one very, very simple concept, and that is that this subamendment seeks to extend the ban on the use of cellphones while driving to include hands-free devices.

Now, why would I want to do that other than to cause grief for our law enforcement agencies, who, admittedly, will have a tougher time enforcing this part than they will with hand-held cellphones? Well, the reason is very simple. There is a lot of research. We considered this research at the committee level when we were studying the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays' original private member's bill to ban hand-held cellular phones while driving. There is a lot of evidence that pretty clearly, in my mind, not only suggests but confirms that the act of talking on a cellphone while you are in control of a moving vehicle is in itself the distraction. It's not whether you're holding onto the phone or whether you're using a Bluetooth or a Ford Sync or an OnStar or any other form of hands-free device.

Yes, you do have the added complication that if you are on one of these while you're driving and you hit a pothole, not that the Minister of Transportation would ever allow that to happen in this province, the BlackBerry or the cellphone flies out of your hand, and you lunge for it, take your eyes off the road, and the next thing you know, you're in the ditch.

There is that added danger with a hand-held phone, but the evidence indicates that the real distraction is the fact that you are engaged in a conversation while in control of a moving vehicle with someone not in the vehicle with you, someone on the other end of the phone who is not capable of seeing changing traffic patterns in front of you, not capable, as a passenger in the passenger seat of your car would be, of anticipating problems up ahead, not capable of easing up on the conversation to allow you as the driver to deal with the more complex situation on the road but is, in fact, in an office 5,000 miles away just trying to get you to give him a better price on the thing he wants to buy from you. He has no context for his conversation that lines up with the driver's context, so the driver, in effect, is committed to whatever level of intensity that's involved in that conversation with the person on the other end of the phone on a hands-free unit the same way that he would be if he was talking on a hand-held unit, and that is the fundamental distraction.

Now, I will grant you that this is going to be a tough piece of the bill, if this subamendment passes today, for our traffic officers to enforce. How are they to know if you're driving down the road at 10 K under the limit in the fast lane and speeding up and slowing down and weaving and so on and so forth and doing those things that will be the usual triggers for a police officer under this bill and wanting to enforce this bill should it become law? How is he to know, when he sees you moving your lips, whether you're talking on a hands-free unit or you're just singing along to the radio or you're yelling back at the talk show host on the radio or something like that? It's a bit difficult. It's been suggested to me that it would in fact be so difficult that the officer would have to get a search warrant for your cellphone records to determine whether you were actually talking on the phone or not when he pulled you over. Otherwise, it's kind of your word against his.

Well, if there was an accident, if you were involved in an accident, there would probably be the desire to get a search warrant anyway to check to see if you were on your cellphone. There might very well be. There are a number of other provisions in our Traffic Safety Act right now that would allow the officer to lay the appropriate charges. You as the accused offender have the right, of course, to contest those charges in court, as you always would have.

But I'll remind the Legislature that the purpose of Bill 16 is not to deal with laying charges after an accident or a critical event. It's to give police officers the tool to intervene when they can see that you're not paying attention while you're driving, to intervene before you precipitate a critical event. It's entirely possible – I would suggest it's likely – that if you or I get pulled over by a police officer after this bill becomes law, amended as I'm proposing or not, we will not only be charged under the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act and subject to a $172 fine; we'll probably be facing another charge as well for an improper left turn or running a red light or impeding traffic or speeding or whatever. There are likely going to be two tickets issued every time a police officer pulls you over because he suspects you of distracted driving.

Quite frankly, I'm issuing a challenge here to the House to extend the ban to hands-free units because that is also a dangerous distraction. I can understand if you have some struggle with it. If this subamendment were to go down to defeat, then I think we have still served a purpose here in at least getting it onto the record.

I would suggest to you there's a very good chance that two or three or four or maybe five years down the road, after we've had experience with this piece of legislation, real-world experience in real time, and as we've been able to study the experiences that other jurisdictions have had with bills that merely ban the use of a hand-held cellphone but don't deal with some of these other distractions that we're dealing with in this bill, we will quite possibly want to come back, whether as a private member's bill or a government bill, with an amending piece of legislation to Bill 16 that actually extends the ban to hands-free units. That's what the research is indicating is the likely thing to happen in the future. I'm just suggesting that maybe we deal with that now and do a complete bill here that completely deals with distracted driving by also taking the exemption for hands-free cellphone use out of the picture and do it now rather than later because I think we'll be doing it eventually.

Mr. Chairman, that's my pitch for my subamendment. I will take my seat now and listen to the debate on this subamendment. Thank you.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has been channelling me because we're in total agreement on this subamendment. He was faster on the draw than I was because I thought that this was a sufficiently different amendment that it had to be introduced by itself. But that said, I'm totally supportive of it.

I indicated yesterday that I wanted to see Alberta being a world leader in terms of driver safety, and I indicated that that would be going the hands-free route, as a number of emergency physicians, including Dr. Francescutti and others from the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary medical schools, have indicated to me.

The evidence is in, and it's overwhelming that the distraction caused by cellphones is as serious as alcohol or speeding. Whether the driver is using a hand-held or a hands-free cellphone, driver distraction caused by the use of cellphones is serious, and it can be fatal.

Mr. Chair, we can safely walk while chewing gum in a city crowded with motor vehicles and other hazards. That is because one of those tasks, chewing gum, is not a cognitively demanding task, I would suggest, for most of us. But research clearly shows that people do not perform as well when trying to perform two attention-demanding tasks at the same time. The brain is behind all tasks needed for driving: visual, auditory, manual, and cognitive. A lot of the research that has been done comes from Understanding the Distracted Brain: Why Driving while Using Hands-free Cell Phones Is Risky Behaviour. That's the title of the document, a white paper produced by the U.S. National Safety Council in March 2010. That was one of the most recent pieces of research.

Mr. Chair, the amendment, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, divides things into sections. Section 2 of the amending act: the first part of the amendment would relate to section 115.1(2) from this bill. This is the provision that makes an exception to the general rule that no individual shall operate a vehicle on a highway while using a cellphone or other hand-held electronic device. Subsection (2) states that an individual may operate a vehicle on a highway while using a hands-free cellphone. The first amendment, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, removes this exception. The use of hands-free cellphones would be prohibited except in the cases listed in subsections (3) and (4). These are the exceptions for emergency personnel and so forth.

The second part of the amendment would delete section 115.2(2)(b). This is a provision that makes an exception to the general rule that no individual shall operate a vehicle on a highway while a display screen is activated. The exception to this general rule in subsection (2)(b) is that the rule does not apply to a hands-free cellphone. If the bill prohibits the use of hands-free cellphones, this exception is not needed. Using a mobile app is prohibited whether the driver is using a wireless computer or a smart phone.

The third part of the amendment would remove the power of the minister to make regulations on the use of hands-free cellphones and other hands-free electronic devices. If the previous parts of the amendment are accepted by this Assembly, there would be no ability for the minister to make exceptions in regulation.

Mr. Chair, the time to take action on the use of all cellphones while driving is now, before another Albertan is injured or killed by a distracted driver. I encourage us not to delay. I understand, as does the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, that this is taking a large leap forward that some members may not be comfortable with, but I believe that Alberta has been and can be a progressive province. I think that getting ahead of the game, supporting our law enforcement in the carrying out of this legislation as proposed in subamendment SA1, is what the people in the emergency departments are calling for, and I strongly support their intentions and the advice they're providing.

I believe in sort of flipping the Marshall McLuhan message that it's the medium rather than the message. In this case it's the message rather than the medium. The Member for Calgary-Currie and I are in full agreement that the hands-free direction is the way to go.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to share in the debate on SA1.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We must remember that the goal of the proposed legislation is to be practical, effective, and enforceable. While we recognize that some research concludes that hands-free cellphone use while driving is no safer than hand-held cellphones, provincial law enforcement representatives whom we consulted with expressed concerns around the enforceability of a hands-free ban. Some of the things mentioned were mentioned by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

I want to remind members that Alberta takes lawmaking very seriously and does not pass unenforceable laws, and this is what law enforcement personnel said to us: they feel that it would be unenforceable. Can we expect that law enforcement officers would be able to effectively distinguish hands-free cellphone use from, say, someone conversing with a passenger, a small child in the back seat, or from a driver singing or talking to themselves? How do you distinguish that? If you saw an infraction, you would have to stop that person and effectively have to seize the cellphone, and that goes contrary to what we're doing here today. Like I said: practical, effective, and enforceable.

Police resources are limited, and if we put officers in the position of having to subpoena cellphone records every time, then basically this legislation would not be utilized. With the existing legislation the driving carelessly would still be there, and that could be a result. If a police officer pulls someone over who they see weaving in and out of the lane, going through a stop sign, possibly speeding, then the undue care and attention or careless driving comes in, and if I'm not mistaken, that's $402 and six demerits. So that is always there.

So I must speak against the subamendment and encourage my colleagues not to support it.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for — let me see here — Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Edmonton-Calder. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rodney: It's all in Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. That's very good, hon. member. It is, indeed, all in Calder.

The hon. member made a comment very early on in his pitch for the bill in that the conversation in a vehicle presumes that the passenger is in fact paying attention to what's going on around them. I would argue that that is seldom, if ever, the case with respect to children, who typically are not aware of this particular type of thing. So to use that particular means of logic, would you seriously consider extending a ban on driver distraction to whether or not a person should have children in a vehicle? If you think about it, they're not generally aware of their surroundings. They typically tend to be very, very distracting. As a result of that, you have to ask yourself the question: where do you want to draw the line? Anyone with children is aware of how distracting they can be in a vehicle.

Mr. Taylor: My children are better behaved than yours.

Mr. Elniski: Well, that may very well be.

You know, then you ask yourself the question: what do you do with a pet, right? When you go back to the question about a cognitively demanding task, that also suggests, then, ultimately, no discussion in a vehicle, no music in a vehicle, and a driver's complete and total focus and attention on the road. Frankly, it becomes infinitely unenforceable because fundamentally, Mr. Chairman, the act of moving your lips in a vehicle should not be supported or regarded as potentially criminal behaviour or, in this case, behaviour that's in contravention of this legislation. You have to draw a line somewhere with respect to where you want to take this. I believe that the legislation as it currently stands has in fact drawn that line, and I cannot support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on subamendment SA1? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to just make a few comments on the subamendment. I have some sympathy for the mover of this subamendment. He is certainly correct in that the research indicates that the act of speaking on a phone, whether it's hands-free or not, is what is very distracting. Certainly, the research supports that. He's indicated that we should be a world leader going ahead. I don't believe there's any other jurisdiction in the world at present that has a hands-free ban, and I would suggest that our present legislation as proposed is being a world leader in that we've looked at a number of distractions other than pure cellphone use, and we have given the law enforcement officials the discretion to determine if the action is in fact distracting.

I think we've got to take baby steps in this and go ahead with the legislation as it is proposed. I think the mover of the subamendment has proposed the solution. He has put forward the subamendment. We're debating it. I'm suggesting we should defeat it but that maybe in four or five years from now there will be other provisions, and there'll be more support for going for the total ban. So I would urge members to defeat this, but let's keep in mind that perhaps four or five years later we need to revisit it. Maybe at that time there will be public support for it, and maybe there will be even some technology that will allow us to enforce it a little bit more fully.

I certainly support the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, that it's got to be practical, effective, and enforceable. I think the bill with the first amendment, without the subamendment, is practical, effective, and enforceable. This causes a further problem.

Thank you.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't going to join in the debate, but the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Calder have woken me up from my unwillingness to partake in this debate and to participate, at least in part, and give my reason and rationale behind why I think this amendment makes some sense and why the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays also make sense to me. Then after sort of playing it out in my mind and, hopefully, discussing it through, I'll be able to give a reasoned approach as to why I am supporting or not supporting this amendment.

I do hear the views of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. He sat on the committee that investigated the use of cellular phones. I take him at full value, as many of the other people in here did as well on that committee, that cellular phones are a distraction. Now, so are cellular phones that are hands-free. I accept that. I accept that the research indicates that, and I have a fundamental understanding of that provision.

Now, where the argument, I guess, went a little off the skids there was when the Member for Edmonton-Calder maybe went a little bit overboard to make a point or went from the sublime to the ridiculous, depending on what you want to call it. Cellular phones in the main are not necessary implements of having a car, okay? We all know that driving children to the park or to the rink or to a thing, well, is why the motor vehicle was invented. So to suggest that banning one thing necessarily means we have to ban all others is ludicrous, and I would just like to point that out here now. We shouldn't take opportunities to make these incredulous leaps to the absurd. I have probably done it a time or two myself in the House; nevertheless, I have probably been told when I have done that as well. So I would point that out.

I appreciate the fact that this amendment does attempt to deal with a problem that research indicates is out there. I also know that government should lead, but how far out in front can governments really lead – that's the question – if your population doesn't really want it, is not ready for it? A great man once told me that you can't lead from too far out in front. By implementing this piece of legislation, we may in fact be too far out in front, where the population is not ready for it. I generally feel that they may not be.

I also heard the comments from our Member for Calgary-Hays, who has been a police officer, that the law enforcement agencies have spoken out very clearly on this. They do not believe that this law is enforceable. It would cause them a considerable amount of grief, may actually tie up our court systems, and I take those comments at fair value as well.

You know, although I appreciate this amendment and I understand the reasoning for it, I also have heard the comments. At this time, I believe, after talking it through, I'm not going to support the amendment. It may not be an idea whose time has come. That said, should the research head this way? Should we do a continued monitoring of this situation? Should it be found that four or five years from now the hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferlo was completely out to lunch by not supporting this amendment, then we make that change.

We as an honourable House recognize that this is something that we need to show leadership on, but I think at this time we should take baby steps, and this is a significant step, this entire bill, towards showing care and attention to the road. For those reasons I won't be supporting the amendment although I do understand its merits. It's a 55-45 thing for me at this time.

I thank you for allowing me to speak on the amendment.

The Chair: Do any hon. members wish to speak on amendment SA1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: On amendment A1?

The Chair: On amendment A1.

Mr. Marz: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I do have some questions for the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays on the amendment. Perhaps he can enlighten me. He talked about laws that are unenforceable, and I'd like to just read section A(a)(iv)(b) at the bottom of the first page.

The use of a 2-way radio communication device, only for the purpose of maintaining communication with the individual's employer, by an individual driving or operating a vehicle who is required by the individual's employer to maintain 2-way radio communication while the individual is acting within the scope of the individual's employment, or the use of a cellular telephone or other communication device by that individual for that purpose when 2-way radio communication is not functional or is unavailable.

Over the course of my lifetime and in my experience I've found people to be quite innovative in trying to get around laws, and I'm sure the hon. member in his experience as a police officer has experienced that as well. I can see every small businessperson or family business that has a small sideline business basically using this to exempt every member of their family. Every farm pretty much will be exempt in this thing because they all have two-way radios and/or cellphones in every vehicle and self-propelled implement that they have. So I have some questions about that.

I know police officers can also be very innovative in enforcement. The example I'll cite is back in the day when there was a rear-end collision and the practice was to ask the person driving the vehicle in the back if he was following too close, and if he said no, which was a certain first impulse to do, then you charged him with driving without due care and attention. So perhaps the same thing could be applied here, where if you're using a cellphone or a communication device in an improper manner and you say no, then you could charge them with driving without due care and attention. Perhaps that would work. I see this as an out to make this virtually unenforceable in a lot of situations.

In second reading yesterday I also raised the issue about professional licensed ham radio operators that had communicated to me personally that they didn't feel the investment to have this equipment was worth while if they were only going to be able to use it there. Their argument is that they are professionals in the use of the equipment, and they do it safely. Those, I guess, that have a business can continue to use it if they basically state that their wife and their children are employees of their business. They could probably get around it that way. Perhaps you could shed some light on that particular issue for me.

5:30

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Regarding your first point, you're right. People are creative and innovative, and I've seen many situations where the police are, too.

Actually, I'll use your number 2 example first. I'll do that one. Under the regulations there would be exemptions for the ham radio operators, but that is going to be under the regulations. That's number 2.

The first one. It's only going to be used, basically, for the purposes outlined. They're at work, okay? There's a specific purpose that's outlined. I suppose if it's a pilot vehicle and he's not ahead of a vehicle that he's piloting, the exemption would not be there. That's one example. But if they were involved in the specific purpose outlined for their job, then they have the exemption.

To just respond to the creativity, no doubt it could happen. I suppose if it's nighttime and the officer couldn't see someone on there, it is possible. There could be instances where someone may get to – well, let's say they wouldn't be charged by the police. That can't be avoided. I'm looking at the greater good for this bill, not people that get away with something once in a while.

I hope that answers your questions.

The Chair: On amendment A1, any other hon. member wishing to speak on it? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A1.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I appreciate the hon. member bringing up that concern. To the mover of the government amendment: I want this legislation to pass regardless of wanting to leap ahead with the hands-free. As a police officer and as the other concerns were brought up to you, do you think it's enforceable in terms of the specifics? For example, a ham radio operator participating in a sanctioned search and rescue operation is different from a ham operator cruising down the highway. Is there a chance or possibly a further amendment that would tighten up the legislation to make it easier for law enforcement officials to be accurate?

My understanding is that the common denominator is the distracted driving that would alert the enforcement officer to this. In other words, if a person was humming in their car or talking to their children and they were still managing to drive safely down the highway, chances are it wouldn't come to the attention of an officer. If you could provide any qualifications so that people don't have the loopholes as the hon. member from Olds-Didsbury, I believe, mentioned . . .

Mr. Marz: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Chase: Okay. I left out three of the hills. Sorry. And they're important, especially to the people farming in that area.

If you can further expand on your explanation that makes it clear enough for enforcement, that would be appreciated.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can give an example of a search and rescue situation that could be escalating, and updates would have to be given on an ongoing basis. That is one example.

Distracted driving: there could be one offence; there could be many offences. I would suggest and I would say to you that many times a police officer will stop a vehicle for things I mentioned earlier, whether it's occupying two lanes, stop signs, speed, many, many other things, and there will be other charges as well.

As I mentioned in search and rescue, the idea is the updated information has to be ongoing, whether to save a life or save lives. It could be an airline crash or whatever it would be. That's why the exemptions are in there for these emergency vehicles.

The Chair: On amendment A1, any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a point of clarification to the member. Your amendment exempts two-way radio communication between people that are doing this as required by their employers. I just want to clarify whether or not individual contractors – for example, perhaps a semi or a dump truck driver who is self-employed but is working on contract with, let's say, Lafarge – would be exempt as well.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, that's correct. I'm aware of contractors and the way they work. I know many of them, and they require direction from a dispatcher, from an employer, even if it's a contractual situation. Yes, you're right. They would be exempt.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A1? On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Okay. I'm bringing it up again, sir. There are these amateur radio guys. How would they be affected by this amendment? Will they be exempt? They are certified under the federal Radiocommunication Act. You know, there are about 67,000 of them holding a certificate of proficiency in amateur radio. That's issued by the federal government. How will they be affected?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If I understood your question, they would be exempt. You mentioned amateur radio operators. Yes, they would.

Mr. Kang: Thank you.

The Chair: Any others?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We'll go on to the bill. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on the bill.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure for me to speak on this bill. I'd like to thank also the Member for Calgary-Hays for being the inventor of this bill and bringing it forward. I'd also like to thank all the members on the all-party committee that brought forth what I think are some fantastic recommendations. It's an example of how good things can happen when all members of this House work together co-operatively.

I'd just like to say that there was extensive consultation done with members of the public, also members of the enforcement services, and we seemed to get some real good support over the course of the consultation and also over the course of the summer. As everybody knows, this bill was introduced in the spring, and the public had ample opportunity over the summer to provide input.

I don't know about everybody else, but I certainly got a lot of discussion about it. By and large, people were pretty much in favour of what we were trying to do, and they felt it was a good starting point. It doesn't cover everything. I don't think with something like distracted driving you can possibly cover everything. Through the discussions we heard of all sorts of different things, different distractions that are out there. I don't think you could possibly cover everything. There are new distractions being invented every day.

I see new billboards up that are designed specifically to distract you. They're on intersections where there are traffic lights. Some of these are new digital electronic billboards, and at nighttime the lights can become quite bright quickly, and it does divert your attention away. At some point in time we may have to address some of those things. Like I said, we can't address everything in this bill to start with, but it is enabling legislation. It will allow the minister through regulation to add or subtract from this as necessary as time goes by.

Also, the bill isn't intended to be punitive or to be a revenue generator. It's intended to be an educational tool, and that's why we looked at the fines to be a bit of an inconvenience, to make people stop and think about their actions. Most people have the inclination to obey laws. Albertans are generally law-abiding citizens, and we found that with the seat belt legislation once it was put in place. We tried a lot of educational tools prior to the legislation, and compliance was really down. After the legislation came in, even though you can't have enforcement officers checking every vehicle all the time, compliance went up just because we basically had a law.

I'm hoping the same happens here although this situation deals with something totally different than seat belts because this is communication, electronic devices, and our society is addicted to them. If you don't believe that, watch your grandchildren or your children and try to take that little Game Boy or whatever electronic device is in front of them. It's about as close to an addiction as I can describe. I see my grandkids with these things all the time. This is going to be a little tougher, I think, to enforce as we go forward, but I do support the bill.

Getting back to some of the distractions, GPS was mentioned, and I can tell you that I think a GPS device, as long as you're not programming while you're driving, is actually a safety tool and not a distraction compared to—I think we can all relate stories about our spouses reading a road map for us as we just missed the last intersection.

Ms Pastoor: Men never ask for directions – never. Women know where they're going.

Mr. Marz: To the Member for Lethbridge-East, I did say "spouses." I wasn't gender specific on that, so please calm down. I think GPS, when used properly, can actually be a safety tool.

Billboards, as I mentioned before. There's actually a song from, I think, back in the '60s that mentions the distraction of billboards, something about a girl wearing nothing but a smile and a towel in the picture on the billboard near the big old highway. Yeah, we all remember that one.

Children misbehaving can also be a major distraction, and I've seen some fatalities based on people tending to children in the back seat while they're driving. That's very unfortunate.

Pets is another one. A lot of common sense has to be used here. I actually saw a guy go to the auction market with a couple of goats in the back of his car. It may not have been a distraction to him, but it certainly would have been to me.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I think the committee did a real good job, as did the Member for Calgary-Hays in bringing this forward. I'm certainly wishing to support this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to move an amendment to Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, and I'd like to have it distributed.

The Chair: We shall pause a moment for distribution of the amendment. This amendment shall be known as amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, please proceed.

Mr. Kang: I move that Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after the proposed section 115.5:

115.6 The Minister shall

- (a) collect statistics on motor vehicle accidents involving the use of hands-free cellular telephones and hands-free electronic devices, and
- (b) provide a report to the Legislative Assembly on the operation of sections 115.1 to 115.5 within 3 years of the coming into force of these sections, including recommendations on whether this Act should prohibit the use of hands-free cellular telephones and hands-free electronic devices while driving or operating a vehicle on a highway.

Mr. Chair, I agree with the Member for St. Albert that we may be looking at this four or five years down the road. The Member for Calgary-Varsity brought in a motion in 2005, and here we are in 2010 having a distracted driving bill. We are debating this, and it will establish that distracted driving is a serious problem for traffic safety.

I think there was agreement that hands-free cannot be enforced. Bill 16 goes a long way to addressing the problem of distraction caused by hand-held cellphones and other electronic devices; however, this bill takes no action on hands-free cellphones and other electronic devices. There is ample evidence that driving while using hands-free cellphones increases the risk of accidents, but since the enforcement issue comes into the picture, and at this time I know it maybe cannot be enforced, this law may stay on the books. Maybe if it's not enforced, it may be thrown out in the courts.

My amendment would require the Minister of Transportation to collect evidence about the way hands-free cellphones and other electronic devices contribute to motor vehicle accidents; in addition, the minister would be required to report back to this Assembly with that information within three years of the coming into force of this Bill 16. The Assembly would then have the evidence needed to make an informed decision on the question of expanding the current bill's prohibitions to hands-free devices as well.

As Albertans are overwhelmingly for Bill 16, I feel certain that if the evidence is there, they will support further changes to reduce the risk of motor vehicle accidents. This bill will go a long way to improve safety on the highways.

With this, I adjourn the debate on the bill, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

5:50

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and to ourselves. We ask for Your guidance with our deliberations in our Chamber and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two very special guests, and they are the new mayor of Calgary, His Worship Naheed Nenshi, and also the mayor of Edmonton, His Worship Stephen Mandel. I had the honour of hosting both for lunch today. As you know, Mayor Mandel recently won his third term as mayor of the city of Edmonton. He has brought to the city of Edmonton a lot of the common-sense, down-to-earth approach to local governance. Of course, Mayor Nenshi fought a very exciting, hard-won campaign bringing new ideas and new energy to the city of Calgary.

Our government and all of my colleagues here look forward to working with the two mayors and their colleagues and councils, working towards a more prosperous Alberta, continuing the good growth that we're enjoying, and working together so that we can set an example for the rest of Canada. With that, I would urge both of them to rise, and let's all receive them with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was a very nice welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to also welcome the mayors and someone else who's very special to us. I want to introduce to you and through you Mr. Ken Hughes, who is the chair of the Alberta Health Services Board. He was appointed in May of 2008, when we created the single province-wide health services organization. He has a distinguished public service record, which includes serving as a Member of Parliament for the rural riding of Macleod and as chair of the former Health Services Authority. He's also a certified member of the Institute of Corporate Directors and holds a master of public administration from the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of people in the community know him and respect him as the president of Alpine Insurance & Financial, based in Calgary. He was born in High River into a family that has been in Alberta for more than 100 years. He is the spouse of a very dedicated and understanding wife, believe me, named Denise, and he has three school-aged children in French immersion in the community of Springbank. Please rise, Mr. Ken Hughes, and enjoy the applause of the Assembly for your great work.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 120 visitors in both the members' gallery and public gallery from a community that is growing in leaps and bounds, and that's Spruce Grove. Our guests today are from the Woodhaven middle school, and I must say that they are an extremely excited and very knowledgeable group of youngsters who do represent the future of our province. They are accompanied today by teachers Ms Deb Schellenberger, Mr. David Hardman, Miss Keri Getz, Miss Ashley Lyster, Ms Joanne Fuminger and parent helpers Mrs. Maureen Gunning, Mrs. Stacey Chadwick, and Mrs. Brenda Koch. As I said, they are in both galleries, I believe, in the Assembly, and I would ask that they rise and our members give them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 23 of Alberta's brightest and best students from Linsford Park school in the city of Leduc in my constituency. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Derrick Beach, and parent helpers Mrs. Turner and Mrs. Schiewe. They're in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from two well-known organizations who recently received very prestigious awards of recognition. The Zebra Child Protection Centre was honoured with the gold Laurel award and $3,000 for organizing an exceptional holiday celebration for our most vulnerable children. The Youth Emergency Shelter was honoured with the silver Laurel award and $2,000 for their innovative creation of the Armoury Youth Centre program for at-risk and homeless youth. I would ask that they please rise: Barbara Spencer, executive director; Kim Wheaton, board member of the Zebra Child Protection Centre; Shelly Chamaschuk, president; and Sue Keating, acting executive director of the board of the Youth Emergency Shelter. Please join me in giving them very warm congratulations. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents from my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Charan Khehra and his daughter Nina Khehra. Mr. Khehra is a former senior economist with the Alberta government, and his daughter Nina is a psychologist. Twenty-five years ago Nina was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, and she will be travelling to the United States for treatment later this year for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, a treatment currently unavailable in Alberta. I recently met with Mr. and Ms Khehra. I have a great deal of empathy for what Nina has experienced over the last 25 years. I certainly wish her the very best. I would ask them both to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the House three new Liberal caucus staff members that I have the great pleasure to work with. I'll ask them to stand as I introduce their names: John Santos is my new executive assistant; Jann Lynn-George, our new director of research; and Kenton Betts, our new researcher at large. Our team of staff are among the brightest and most dedicated people I know, and our caucus is truly blessed to have their support and expertise to call on in our role as Official Opposition. I would ask all members to extend the traditional warm welcome to our new staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent whose family and several friends have been ravaged by multiple sclerosis. His name is Warren Stefanuk, and he is a member of the CCSVI, chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, advocacy group in Edmonton. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of representatives from the advocacy group Stand with Fort Chipewyan. They have joined us today to help raise awareness of the health and environmental concerns expressed by Fort Chipewyan residents. They raised money through efforts and wanted to send the Premier to Fort Chip and hope that with their help he will make that visit. They're joining us in the members' gallery. These are the executives of the group. I would ask Richie Assaly, Saima Butt, and Aaron Samuel of the Stand with Fort Chip group to please stand. I would also ask to join them the former chief of the Mikisew Cree First Nation, George Poitras, and residents of that area Agnes Simpson, Evelyn Simpson, and Marie Marten. They are residents who've come to support this group. Thank you very much. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND caucus.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Tom Kehoe, a representative of the Canadian Labour Congress. Many members may recognize Mr. Kehoe as a frequent visitor here. He was for a number of years a cameraman for CTV and covered our Legislature on a regular basis. The Canadian Labour Congress is concerned that most Canadians can't save enough to live with dignity in retirement. The labour movement along with retiree and community groups are calling for a gradual doubling of future Canada pension plan benefits. Mr. Kehoe is here to witness the tabling of a CLC report on pension reform. I want to welcome Tom, who is seated in the members' gallery, back to the Legislature, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my two new staff members in my legislative office – it seems a bit pretentious to call it a caucus office for a caucus of one – here in Edmonton, who have proven already in the brief time that they've been working with me to be a tremendous help to me, and I'm grateful for them both. Jacquie Lycka is my new office and legislative assistant. She is a recent graduate of the U of A's political science honours program, where she completed her honours thesis on voting behaviour here in the province of Alberta. Evan Galbraith is my research assistant. He is from Calgary originally. He's a recent graduate of St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, which pleases the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who has already been down to my office to compare rings, with an honours degree in political science. He wrote his thesis on intergovernmental relations pertaining to the oil sands. I asked them both to put a little something in their bios, something personal, like you like puppies or something like that. Then they found out I was a cat owner, and they didn't want to go there. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish that you would all give them the warm, traditional welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Zebra Child Protection Centre Youth Emergency Shelter

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in recognition of two organizations that help children and youth facing extremely challenging circumstances in their lives, the Zebra Child Protection Centre and the Youth Emergency Shelter Society, both recipients of Laurel awards for their outstanding work. Edmonton's Zebra centre, which opened in 2002, helps over 1,000 children each year. It was the first of its kind in Canada and a pioneer in assisting children who have tragically suffered physical or sexual abuse. Working in partnership with police, Children and Youth Services, and Crown prosecutors, the Zebra centre helps children to share their stories in a nonthreatening setting and begin the healing process.

Since 1982 the Youth Emergency Shelter Society has supported thousands of at-risk youth to achieve success. They help young people to overcome challenges such as drugs, alcohol, and sexual exploitation and successfully transition into adulthood. Through programs such as the new Armoury Youth Centre, youth are provided with a supportive environment where they can access a wide variety of programs and activities such as skills development, health services, counselling, and educational opportunities.

The efforts of both the Zebra centre and the Youth Emergency Shelter are truly appreciated. They are outstanding examples of how community groups made up of caring and dedicated individuals can make a tremendous difference in the lives of our province's greatest resource, our children.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All week Albertans have been hearing about the crisis in hospital emergency departments. Most shocking has been the revelation that the Premier and his health ministers have been sitting on details of hundreds of examples of the problems for 32 months, hidden this from the public, and done nothing. Last week this government took what was supposed to be a feel-good news conference to brag about their vacuous Health Act and meaningless charter to hurriedly talk about new acute-care beds. They knew the latest letter from emergency room doctors was about to become public.

Yesterday they bragged about measures to ensure accountability for wait times. This whole sorry spectacle makes clear the real accountability problem. The Premier of Alberta is unable to provide leadership on this critical issue. In this House he has ignored my direct questions about his personal responsibility. Now, after a couple of days of heat, he's going to get out of the kitchen and hide from NDP questions and an angry public by going on a junket halfway around the world.

There is nothing new to what we are hearing this week. A year ago the NDP revealed plans to reduce long-term care resources and shift to costly private care. This was being kept secret from the public. Months ago the NDP criticized the foolishness of building new facilities and then leaving them vacant. The government does not take responsibility to deliver excellent public health care seriously. Mr. Speaker, people are dying and suffering unnecessarily. Dedicated health care professionals are becoming discouraged and disillusioned. Loving family members are struggling to provide care no longer available from the health care system.

It is time for the Premier to stop ducking and running. It is time for the Premier to look Albertans in the eye, admit he has let them down, and put his job and his health minister's job on the line if he fails again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Canadian Anaphylaxis Readiness Education

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to bring to all the members' attention a very serious situation that affects us all, including a number of my esteemed colleagues, anaphylaxis. As the Assembly learned this week when our colleague the Minister of Infrastructure became ill during a caucus meeting, anaphylaxis is an extreme allergic reaction involving the whole body. After initial exposure to a substance like nuts or a bee sting, a person's immune system becomes overly sensitive to that allergen. On subsequent exposure a severe allergic reaction occurs.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the government of Alberta and Anaphylaxis Canada joined forces to create Canadian anaphylaxis readiness education, or CARE, a web-based training program for teachers and school staff. Increased anaphylaxis knowledge and awareness can save lives and will contribute to safe learning environments for all students. This innovative collaboration can literally mean life or death for some of the estimated 22,000 Alberta students who have potentially life-threatening allergies.

Mr. Speaker, a school cannot guarantee allergens will never enter a school environment; however, they can implement policies and procedures to ensure that the school community knows how to prevent, react to, and treat someone suffering from an anaphylactic reaction. Knowing what to do and how to do it can mean the difference between life and death for these vulnerable students.

The new care module complements the allergy anaphylaxis information response resource kits that were introduced to all Alberta public, separate, charter, private, and francophone schools in 2008.

I believe most would agree that the safety of schoolchildren and youth in our schools across the province is of the utmost importance to everyone involved in the education system, and this government indeed is taking action. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Someone needs to be accountable for the long-standing emergency room crisis in this province, and everyone seems to be dodging the political bullets. The Premier won't take responsibility; the minister of health won't take responsibility. So taxpayers are left wondering why the only people they can hold accountable are ducking for cover. To the Premier: will the Premier and minister of health accept that this is their fault? Six years. No one else. Will you take responsibility?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we'll take responsibility for increasing the budgets for the Alberta Health Services Board. We've increased, as I said, the budget 6 per cent this year, 6 per cent into next year. We paid off the accumulated deficit, and we also topped up to what the board thought would be reasonable, reflecting the ever-increasing demands for health care. We will take responsibility for that. We also take responsibility for dealing with the issues on a day-to-day basis, the increase in population. We're just simply doing more in terms of services in health, and the minister has a plan to alleviate the pressures in emergency.

Dr. Swann: Well, the Premier talks about taking responsibility for everything, except the wait times are not improving, Mr. Premier. People are suffering. The change is not happening.

Yesterday the Premier said that he thought Alberta Health Services has been a success. Is the Premier honestly telling Albertans that 20-plus hours in wait times is a success? Wait times, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've just seen the largest merger in Canadian history of a number of regional health authorities plus the Cancer Board into one authority. This has brought down the cost of administration considerably. All of those dollars are going to go back into service delivery. The minister articulated a plan yesterday in the House. If the same question comes forward, I'll ask the minister to articulate the same plan that he brought forward yesterday.

Dr. Swann: No, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the Premier to answer for this. Clearly, the CEO of Alberta Health Services is being set up to be fired, and we'll move on to another one as the plan continues to fail. Will the Premier put his minister of health on the line and make him accountable for this failure to improve wait times?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous confidence in my minister of health. I think also that for someone sitting in the position of Leader of the Official Opposition, it brings it to an all-time low to start to talk about someone else's future in this particular House and speculate about somebody's future. That is just totally inappropriate.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Talk about empty promises. The minister of health yesterday held a big news conference to tell the world he will be publishing four-hour and eight-hour benchmarks for wait times in emergency rooms. These benchmarks were published early in the year under Alberta Health Services' performance report. To the Premier again: since the four-hour and eight-hour targets have been published since March, how is your announcement yesterday going to produce different results? Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the minister respond to all of the detail in terms of rolling out the plan for emergency room response.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that in some hospitals those particular benchmarks are only being met at the 20, 30, 40 per cent mark. As this member who's asking the question should know, because these are national guideline standards, we're looking at the 90th percentile. We're looking at something being met at a higher rate. That's what the target is all about. It's going to be improved upon immediately.

Dr. Swann: This is not about targets, Mr. Speaker; it's about results. These have been the same results for several years, Mr. Health Minister. When is it going to change?

An Hon. Member: Good theatre.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we had a very good meeting with the emergency docs. The hon. member asking the question might do well to have that same meeting, because what they told me is that they're very happy with what we've arrived at as an action plan. They're very pleased that this government is listening and responding and reacting to the concerns they've expressed. I'm quite sure that Albertans will also follow suit, and they'll be happy once all of this is done and accomplished. We're getting there.

Dr. Swann: For those chirping over there, try sitting in an emergency department for 20 hours if you think this is theatre.

To the Premier: since the Premier is not willing to hold his minister accountable, will the Premier commit that these benchmarks will be posted in every emergency room in Alberta and the minister of health's phone number will be under the sign so Albertans themselves can hold him accountable for these changes?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, in all honesty let's just cool down and apply some common sense to the approach. Nobody wants to wait in the emergency room. Nobody wants to wait for a bed. We do know that we have an ever-increasing number of people that have to be placed in continuing care. We're doing whatever we can. We've already built well beyond our target of 800 beds for this year. I believe AHS says we'll reach about 1,300 new continuing care beds. That's the real issue: moving people that need continuing care out of acute-care beds, and we're doing that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trade Mission to India

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health impacts of oil sands development have long been a concern of the people of Fort Chip. However, even though these concerns have been proven by studies of health care professionals, the Alberta Cancer Board, and independent scientists, they are not a priority of the Premier, but a trip to India mid-session is. To the Premier. Today the Premier was presented with a cheque to buy a flight to Fort Chip. The Premier can find time to travel to India. When will he find time to visit Fort Chip?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are two components here in terms of the answer. One is with respect to the students that are here from the University of Alberta. You know, travelling to Fort Chip: we're waiting for the last signature on an agreement in terms of doing even further research and study into Fort Chip and its residents with respect to all of the health effects the public is saying that they're experiencing.

Secondly, if we were to meet the constant demands of every increase in spending that all opposition members want in this particular House, we have to open up new markets around the world, and we have to do that because that is a priority. We have to pay for whatever they're expecting us to pay for.

Dr. Swann: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, we are expecting you to pay for health investigations for the people of Fort Chip. That is an expectation all Albertans have. Do the research and follow the science.

Mr. Speaker, given that a recent study authored by two UBC professors found that no noticeable increase in trade resulted from Canadian trade missions between 1993 and 2003, why is the Premier spending $84,000 and two weeks away from his duties here in Alberta on such dubious value?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't need anybody from UBC or wherever he's quoting from. I can tell you that constantly today there are people moving here from B.C., from Ontario. They're moving into Edmonton. They're moving into Calgary. You know why? Because there are job opportunities in this province like nowhere else in the country of Canada.

Dr. Swann: Since trade experts believe that a regional presence in foreign markets, shopping, and grocery outlets may be more effective than a splashy trade junket, why isn't the Premier marketing products from the Athabasca River fishery in India?

Mr. Stelmach: I guess that's the best the opposition has to offer, and that's why we have to be ever so diligent not to get caught up in that kind of dialogue, you know. Here we are trying to attract more investment to Canada, to the province of Alberta to increase trade, to build a larger economy, and they're just dragging the whole system down. I don't know how you can live with yourselves every morning when you get up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thought, in light of the fact it's a World Series going on, that Rick Bell, a Calgary columnist, hit a home run in his column today. He described the government as either people who know, people who don't know, or the third, people who don't know what they don't know. My question is to the Premier. Did you know about the letter that went to your office over two and a half years ago about the emergencies? Why did you fail to act on that very letter that was given to you? Will you admit, yes or no, to that letter? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think they've brought this letter up – what? – a couple of days now in the House, and I don't know if it's been tabled. If it has, I'd like to see the tabled letter because I really don't know what exactly they're talking about. It could be any letter. [interjections] Now they're chirping again. It could be any kind of a letter. That's in their question, a letter. Okay?

The other thing is, in all honesty, if it is with respect to emergency room response, as I said before, the minister has met. We've set benchmarks. We're continuing to work. It's not only reducing the waiting times in emergency, but it's also increasing the number of spaces for seniors in continuing care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He refers to the minister. Is that the minister who really wasn't the minister or the minister who wasn't the minister then? We need to know.

Given that and the non-answer that he just provided – and all the folks in emergency rooms watching Access television are watching for the answer – do you know, do you not know, or do you not know what you don't know?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, that will be on YouTube everywhere around Canada.

In all honesty, if it is to the emergency room response and to the letter that was written, we're very clear in terms of the targets that we're meeting: more nurses trained, more doctors, and also more continuing care facilities in the province of Alberta. We're on the path to achieving all of those goals that were written in the letter.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given the non-answer once again, the folks that are watching on television in emergency rooms now can see that it's not column 1, I know, not column 2, I don't know. Clearly, the minister and the Premier don't know what they don't know. To the minister of health. You knew about this. Why didn't you act at that time?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I received the e-mail over the Thanksgiving weekend. I replied immediately, and I took action immediately.

Let me just clarify what's going on here. Let's talk about some of the good things going forward here. Alberta has nearly 8,000 more beds today than a decade ago. Alberta has the fastest-growing physician workforce in Canada. We have the fastest-growing nurse workforce in Canada. We have 37 PCNs here. We have MRIs and CAT scans that outnumber anyone else on a per capita basis. And over here we're dealing with the past. Let's deal with what's going on that's good, that gives people confidence, knowing that we have one of the best health systems in the world right here.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I recognized an hon. member to raise a question, and it was pretty quiet when the question was being delivered. Then I offered an opportunity for the minister to respond, and unfortunately there was a whole bunch of catcalling coming along. Let's just try and lower the temper here now, please.

We'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood so that everybody in the House can hear the question and hear the response.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Instead of staying to accept responsibility for the emergency room crisis, the Premier is running away on a junket to India, something that could have been scheduled when the Assembly was not in session. He's leaving his health minister to attempt to deflect the anger of Albertans with more empty promises. This time it's wait-time targets, another promise waiting to be broken. My question is to the Premier. Why does he believe these wait-time targets will actually be met given the serious shortage of staff and long-term care beds that his government has created?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to an increased number of nurses trained in the province, an increased number of physicians and other allied health care professionals, and together with that also increasing the number of continuing care spaces in the province. We targeted about 800. We may be on track at the end of this fiscal period to reach about 1,300 spaces, which will take away a lot of pressure. That's the kind of long-term planning that we're working on. We always know that we will have an increasing aging population, and we've got to meet those demands. It's about 2,000 seniors a month now. It'll be 3,000 here in the next couple of years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Yesterday the health minister announced that he had today directed the Alberta Health Services to implement wait-time targets, but what he didn't tell people was that the same targets had already been set over a year ago by Alberta Health Services itself and were in place. Will the Premier admit that the government is at it again, still just recycling meaningless promises, and that his minister has failed to be honest with the people of Alberta about that?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, about this time last year we were looking at how to deal with the ever-increasing demands in all ministries. Originally we were looking at having the health budget hold similar to the previous year's expenses. After looking and reviewing all of the ministerial budgets, we did find some year-end savings within other operations of government, which went to health care spending. We also knew that we were going to have more pressures. That's why we paid off the deficit and gave the health board an increase.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the health minister failed to tell people that since the targets were implemented over a year ago, things have gotten steadily worse and given that your own hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's father spent four days recently in an emergency room and given that a doctor was on the radio yesterday talking about a woman who had to undergo a miscarriage in the waiting room of an emergency room, will the Premier admit that without more long-term care beds and more staff the wait-time targets are meaningless?

Mr. Stelmach: The hon. member made one statement that I agree with. We do need more continuing care beds. So we're looking at all options, working with nonprofit organizations, for-profit, looking at additional land and space with municipalities. In fact, part of the discussion today with the two mayors was in terms of how we can use some of the land that the two cities own. This is all working in the right, positive direction. Next year we will work towards increasing even further the number of beds for our seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that we all get that the crisis in our emergency rooms is ultimately caused by insufficient continuing care beds at the discharge end, which backs up the whole system, and we all know that will take some time to solve. But so what? The sick people waiting up to 22 hours in Alberta's ERs need solutions now. Here's the thing. Even after 16 years of mismanaging health care, this government hasn't completely managed to stamp out the collective memory of those who used to run health care when it did work. To the health minister. Here's a thought: will the minister direct the Alberta Health Services Board to bring all staff, current and retired, to available status and to offer full-time shifts to all nurses who want them so that we not only have more health care professionals available, but they're available not at quadruple time but at straight cost, lower cost, straight time?

Mr. Zwoddesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm open to any and all suggestions. In fact, when we met with the emergency docs a couple of nights ago, we heard some other innovative ideas. So we'll be taking a look at anything and everything that can help improve the situation so that we're meeting more than the 20 or 30 or 40 percentile mark. We're aiming at a target of 90 per cent, and that, to my knowledge, is a new percentile for this particular suite of targets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just don't spend too long looking at things.

Again to the minister. Another thought: since several hundred net acute-care beds could be open if only he could find the staff and since I've just given him a clue for how to do that, will the minister order AHS to open those beds and commit to have those beds fully operating and fully funded, all several hundred of them, within the next six weeks?

Mr. Zwoddesky: Mr. Speaker, when we met with the emergency docs a couple of nights ago, we talked about four time frames: immediate actions, things that could be done today, literally today and tomorrow; a short-term time frame, which would be within weeks, before Christmas; a medium-term time frame, which would be within a year; and a long term, which is within the five-year funding framework that we've discussed. Now, as part of that, certainly, they're looking at where and how more acute-care beds can be opened, where and how more continuing care beds can be opened because we recognize where the backlog is. There are too many people in acute care who ought to be in other settings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're still waiting.

Okay. One more try. To the minister: since he's always going to meetings, will he actually start listening and acting on the ideas that he's hearing from physicians and their colleagues at each hospital and take specific advice? One size does not fit all.

Mr. Zwoddesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not only meeting; I'm also listening carefully, and I'm acting as immediately as possible. This morning I visited the emergency room at the Grey Nuns hospital, picked up some ideas there. I've been now to about 26 different emergency rooms, listening carefully to what their solutions are because they're all a little bit different; they're all quite unique. You can't have a simple, one-size-fits-all approach, nor can you have a single, silver-bullet approach. It's a complex issue, and that will be told to you in identical words by the emergency docs as well. Yes, we are working . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Home-schooling

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within Whitecourt-St. Anne my constituents are concerned about the challenges facing home-schooled students as they seek admittance to Alberta's postsecondary institutions. While government approves and even regulates home-schooling, my constituents find that postsecondary institutions are less open to the idea and lack consistent policies for accepting home-schooled students. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Minister, it's easy for every foreign student across the world to come to Alberta; there are policies. When are you going to create a policy for our own Alberta students, for our own home-schooled students?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an important issue that all of the postsecondary institutions across the province are addressing. I wouldn't categorize it as being easy for international students to come from abroad, because every international student comes from a particular institution or some other schooling jurisdiction that has already worked with that institution to get the clearance or to get the entrance requirements done. Each postsecondary handles that on their own, dependent upon the curriculum or the course that that student may be applying for and what he may have taken in the other areas.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I think, Minister, that you've missed my point. You're the big wheel here, and the home-schooled students are watching you. What are you going to do to help them prepare for postsecondary institutions?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, while I may be the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, I do not run every one of the 26 postsecondaries. They are board-governed, autonomous institutions who set their own entry requirements. We have guidelines in place for those things as it relates to the curriculum that is attended to in the K to 12 system. I might add that home-schooled students who are taking the Alberta curriculum don't experience a great deal of difficulty because they are actually taking the same exams that other students are taking. The important factor here is that home-schooled students need to do their homework as well. I would recommend Clicks as a great program to do that with.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I think the minister is passing the buck, so I'm going to move over to another minister, the Minister of Education. How does this minister ensure that those students being home-schooled are adequately prepared for postsecondary schooling and can compete with their public school counterparts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We won't allow the minister of advanced education to pass the buck. We need adequate resources for both education and advanced education.

I want to say that home-schooling is an appropriate choice for many students and their parents if it's done appropriately. If it's done appropriately, they're registered with the school boards for oversight, they need to meet the standards of other Alberta students, and they can challenge exams if they want to have the Alberta diploma, which gives them that ready access to the postsecondary world. There are accountability structures built into our system for home-schooling, as there are for private schools and for public schools. If they do it right, they'll have the accreditation they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are serious problems underlying Alberta's electricity system. The government has served the interests of everyone except consumers, ratepaying Albertans. Bill 50 has not only bypassed the process of government accountability at the Alberta Utilities Commission and raised electricity costs; it has removed landowner rights. To the Minister of Energy. Bill 50 off-loaded the costs of unnecessary infrastructure onto consumers. Does he believe that consumers are willing to pay for increased transmission costs?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, one has to ask the question: in the end, ultimately, who does pay for all of the costs that are associated with upgrading a transmission system? We have a transmission system in this province such that the youngest of the transmission lines is some 37 years old. It needs significant upgrade. We went through an extensive debate in this Legislature, we passed Bill 50, and now the Alberta Utilities Commission will hold public hearings open to all parties in Alberta to determine siting, costs, and all of the other issues. Nothing there has changed.

Dr. Swann: Well, I beg to differ. With all respect, Mr. Speaker, this administration has taken out of the hands of their own commission the right to assess and have a public hearing on a need for these lines. Will you make it mandatory to review the need for these lines? That is the question.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we went through that debate extensively last year, and I'm sure the hon. member had every opportunity to participate. Now, you know, when it comes to need, this government is going to be responsible to ensure that every part of this province has the opportunity to have economic development, that we have electricity where it's needed when it's needed, and that we will not stand by and see the lights go out in this province.

Dr. Swann: More and more Albertans are asking, Mr. Speaker, that this minister and this government rescind Bill 50 and return basic rights to landowners and citizens of Alberta.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. Bill 50 took away no rights. This is a fallacy that seems to be out there, that somehow property rights were taken away. Nothing could be further from the truth. Nothing has changed in Bill 50 relative to property rights. What we have done, though, is identified where the need was, and now the Utilities Commission will hold the appropriate hearings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Oil and Natural Gas Land Sale Revenues

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The province recently set a new record for petroleum and natural gas land sales, earning $1.86 billion. This surpasses the record of $1.83 billion set back in 2005. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Can the minister tell me what land sales mean in terms of our overall budget impact this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, land sales have been the bright spot in our revenue forecast this year. When I tabled the budget in February, we were predicting land sales of $630 million. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow just indicated, as of the last land sale that's now above $1.8 billion, so three times what we anticipated at budget.

There's more good news, Mr. Speaker. Land sales are the best predictor of future exploration development, and drilling rigs in July were 150 per cent greater than they were a year ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister confirm if this increase in land sales revenue was the result of changes to the royalty structure?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what industry has asked for is that we have a regime in place that encourages investment. I think we've found that right balance, and industry is responding accordingly. We had a session over the noon hour with a presentation from a number of the industry groups, and clearly they indicated to us that they have confidence in the Alberta economy. Natural gas prices are a concern, but as was identified, our land sales have been very encouraging.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. A further supplemental to the same minister: what do land sales mean in terms of Alberta's competitiveness?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think that maybe a better way of putting it is that it's confidence in the future in this province, Mr. Speaker. It's industry that makes these decisions of when and where to invest, when and where to purchase. I would suggest that all the indications we're getting from industry are that this will be the highest activity in the drilling sector in some three or four years in this province, and that's despite the fact that natural gas prices are troubling today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's toxic tailings ponds are now the size of the Sea of Galilee. The minister has stated that tailings ponds will be reduced in the long term, but the ERCB has already approved plans that do not meet directive 074's requirements for reducing fine tailings in the ponds, and the timelines for final cleanup are still unknown. To the Minister of Environment: how long is this long term that the minister is talking about? Are we talking one generation? Two generations? Will the grandchildren of today still be looking to deal with tailings ponds?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess my crystal ball isn't quite as clear as hers, and I'm not able to predict the future quite as well as she thinks that I should. This is a technical issue that the answer to will derive over time. But I can assure this member – I can absolutely assure this member – that we're not talking decades. We are, however, talking in the time frame of years. We're looking at full implementation of directive 074 within this decade.

Ms Blakeman: No. Actually, when you look at all the deadlines, I think it's closer to 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, industry is innovative, and they have the resources and the minds to make change happen, but the minister is not requiring this of them. When will the minister bring in targets and standards that push industry to clean up this legacy now?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned in answer to one of the questions yesterday or the day before that we are currently in the process of developing a tailings management program. That's in combination with the whole issue of mine reclamation. I am encouraged by the tremendous amount of progress that has been made on that, and I encourage the member to stay tuned because we should have much more specific answers for her in a very short period of time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this is the second time this fall that the federal government has stepped in and started their own investigation into either dead ducks or other issues around the oil sands, my question to the minister is: why does Alberta keep getting trumped by the feds?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's simply not the case. Alberta Environment and Environment Canada have been partners for quite some time. Any kind of major environmental issue is commonly dealt with from a joint perspective. The member is well aware that the issue that was recently settled with Syncrude from the ducks landing a couple of years ago resulted in a trial where charges from both the province and the federal government were involved. It's not unusual in the least to have joint . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Human Trafficking

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada and North America, unfortunately, there has been a rise in human trafficking and sexual exploitation. This despicable crime has even crept into our province, where it preys on our society's most vulnerable individuals, usually women and children. To the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: what action is your department taking to crack down on human traffickers and those who profit from these despicable activities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. My mandate and the commitment of our Premier and the government is to provide communities where Albertans may live and work and play and pursue their dreams without fear. We take the crimes of sex trade and human trafficking very seriously, hon. member, and we've got local law enforcement teams and ALERT teams, integrated policing teams, working together on prevention programs, on arrests. Certainly, we're enforcing laws against traffickers wherever we can, and we're providing training to police officers to recognize the crimes and to aid in prosecutions. We need the help of the community, though.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. The promotion and advertising of human trafficking is done mostly online, specifically through websites such as Craigslist, who allow advertisements to appear under a thinly veiled cover for human trafficking. Can the minister explain what action her department is taking to shut down these activities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the hon. member is correct, and that is currently happening on Craigslist. At our most recent federal, provincial, and territorial ministers' meeting we were able to share our experiences across the country with respect to investigation and prosecution. We're having some great successes. However, besides the work that we do with the integrated child exploitation team and our working groups on human trafficking and the work that our police do, we do think it's important to begin an effort to ask Craigslist, which is the first step that we have to take, to shut down that service. We've been very clear that we believe that it does involve human trafficking, and we are now beginning that discussion in concert with other provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is also to the same hon. minister. Is your ministry working with any other levels of government to put an end to human trafficking in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've taken a very strong stand on the issue. We're working in conjunction with our prosecutors and our police. We're also working with the federal government and with other provincial governments. I'm also very proud of the leadership role that Alberta has taken with the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers not only with respect to human trafficking in the way we've been talking about publicly in the last couple of weeks but also with the leadership work that we've taken on the task force report with respect to missing women, which we believe is another component of this. There are 52 recommendations in that report for jurisdictions to follow so that they can have the same success as us in prosecuting these.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta Health Services Board

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. History has taught us that central planning and big bureaucracies do not work, and that's precisely what the superboard is. The proof that it is failing continues to mount. The Auditor General said this week that the board can't keep track of its budget. Yesterday even the superboard's CEO confessed that the inefficient AHS has continued to put people in the wrong beds. To the minister: given that patients have no confidence in the superboard, staff have no confidence in or support for the superboard, and now even the CEO is admitting doubts, when will the government dismantle the superboard and return control to our local communities and hospitals?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I've stood in this House and indicated that the centralized, single province-wide board is working very hard as a new entity in bringing information in a more consistent fashion so that we can make important decisions to improve health outcomes such as a five-year funding commitment, such as a five-year action plan, that's coming out very soon, such as performance measures and a host of other things.

Also, having said that, please let's note that the Alberta Health Services Board has actually reduced the number of CEOs and others who are part of that bureaucracy.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, that answer was farcical. It's unbelievable.

Given how ineffective the superboard is, the minister's new ER wait time targets are just empty rhetoric. Given that this government only responded this week because the public were made aware of the crisis by ER doctors, the AHS needs to be open and accountable to Albertans. The only way to do this is to publicly disclose all the ER horror stories like those released last week. Will the minister commit to putting all suboptimal triage reports online immediately?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if the member had been listening yesterday, I directed Alberta Health Services to report on a per-site basis what's going on in the emergency rooms with respect to the protocols that are forthcoming. Albertans want to know how the particular hospital in their area is performing. They have a right to know that. They've told us they want to know that, and that's why I announced yesterday that we will be doing that. What more accountability can you have than to look at each hospital on a per-site basis and be accountable for those results?

Mr. Hinman: That's excellent, Mr. Speaker, so long as it's the full triage reports and not just that the wait-times are four hours.

Given that the ER problem has been escalating for years now – this government has known since March 2008, but it's only getting worse – how much longer will the minister go on defending the superboard while withholding the documents that enable Albertans to see the true state of affairs of our emergency system and why the superboard must go? When will he put the full triage reports online?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I agreed to follow up within two weeks, perhaps even sooner, with the emergency docs regarding a number of their issues. What we're talking about here are the tier 1 performance measures. There will be some tier 2 performance measures, which people on the other side, I'm sure, understand. As part of that, we will be reporting back to Albertans with what it is that Alberta Health Services has in mind and what they have accomplished by way of providing better health services in the emergency rooms and in other parts of the system as well. It is working, it's coming together nicely, and it's all because of the five-year funding commitment that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Bee-Clean Building Maintenance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been reported that 122 former and current employees of Bee-Clean are now being paid $155,000 in overtime accumulated over the past two years for work at the University of Alberta here in Edmonton. My first question is to the Deputy Premier, please. How many of these 122 workers at the University of Alberta are temporary foreign workers who, as we all know, unfortunately, do not have the same rights that Canadian citizens or landed immigrants enjoy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I will take the question under advisement and endeavour to have the appropriate minister respond to the member.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier is the minister responsible for the University of Alberta.

My second question is to the Deputy Premier. Given that this government has helped a former Premier with his problems over plagiarism at an Alberta university in the past, why does this government not now try to help the janitors resolve their differences over fair pay and working conditions at the University of Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, you know, aside from being a rather ridiculously stated question, my understanding is that the minister of the appropriate department is handling the situation with the employees and with the employer. To suggest that the University of Alberta somehow manages contract employees that they have as janitorial staff is like asking how many employees work at the bank branch that they deal with. It's kind of a ridiculous connection.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is not ridiculous that these individuals in this province deserve fair wages and good working conditions, and you know it.

Now, again to the Deputy Premier: given that this government has a contract that over the last four years has paid Bee-Clean $2.4 million, will you make a commitment that employment standards will review all the pay stubs for the employees of Bee-Clean in the Department of Infrastructure, in particular, over the last four years?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to clarify for the hon. member that I wasn't calling the situation ridiculous; I was calling his question ridiculous.

Obviously, we're always monitoring the workforce standards that are in place, and the minister has an obligation to do that for all Alberta workers, including temporary foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Chateau Estates Access Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After two years of lobbying, the Minister of Transportation moved forward with an access road to connect 84th Street N.E. to 100th Street N.E. in Calgary for the residents of Chateau Estates. Minister, construction has started. When will this access road now be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got to say that those constituents in that area should be very, very thankful for having an MLA that just gets out there. I still have the scars from all the lobbying he does. I have to tell you that I have very good news for this member. The road is under construction as we speak, and we are expecting it to be completed by October 31, weather permitting, of course. I think this hon. member can tell his constituents that the wait is over.

Mr. Bhullar: Wonderful news, Mr. Speaker. Wonderful news.

Would the minister mind telling me why the project did take so long to complete?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just told the hon. member that this road is near completion, but for some reason – he must be getting older or something – he wants to go back in time. This member knows very well what the issue was and why this road took so long. It's because we had issues with pipeline companies, and we had to get the crossing agreements in place. This particular member knows that very well. It'll be just mere days before the road is complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you. I did know that, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted him to say it so the pipeline companies had other people to blame, not just me.

Mr. Speaker, my final question to this wonderful minister, who built this one-kilometre stretch of road that we finally have two years later: once the road is complete, Minister, who is responsible for maintaining it?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, Rocky View county will be responsible for the 243A road once it's completed. This is about providing reasonable access for local traffic while maintaining safety and design standards for Stoney Trail N.E. I must say that this project is a wonderful example of our government responding to concerns of local residents.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Justice conceded that law information centres are not an adequate substitute for representation by defence counsel in criminal court. Given this admission I would like to ask the hon. minister if her ministry will quit expecting litigants to use these services and, instead, properly fund legal aid for individuals to be able to access a lawyer and not a pamphlet.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has never been our contention that law information centres were supposed to replace counsel or legal advice for people who are appearing in criminal court. I will say that this government has had a commitment to legal aid, has not cut legal aid funding, has actually doubled legal aid funding continuously over the past four years, and we will continue to ensure that people who need to go to criminal court are getting adequate representation through duty counsel whenever they need it.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat surprised if not shocked at that answer. Just recently Judge Wheatley's decision in Frick has been interpreted differently by this minister than it has been for me. That Assistant Chief Judge believes that underfunding to legal aid has limited services to criminal defendants. Do you disagree with this characterization by the Assistant Chief Judge?

Ms Redford: I couldn't hear the last part of the question, but what I do know is that as the Ministry of Justice we work with the Legal Aid board on a weekly basis to ensure that people in this province are receiving adequate representation not only in criminal court, Mr. Speaker, but in civil court.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, "for an accused without the means to pay for a lawyer, the current situation in Alberta is troublesome." I didn't say that; the Assistant Chief Judge did in Provincial Court. I was wondering: is he right or is he wrong here?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in this province we fund over $58 million a year toward legal aid. We have maintained that commitment through difficult economic times. We have talked to the federal government about increasing their contribution. Unfortunately, they at this time are not prepared to do that. But every year, when federal and provincial ministers get together, we raise this issue, we talk about the importance of this issue, and we renew our commitment to this issue. We care about this issue. We have not cut our funding, and we will ensure that people who go to court are provided with proper representation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The results of the provincial achievement tests and diploma exams were recently released, and in most cases the news is very good. However, there are some results that cause me and the parents in my constituency a great concern. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister tell us why these more troublesome results, particularly for language arts 30, continue to decline? This exam, after all, is the basic entrance requirement for postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An important question, but first of all let's focus on the success of Alberta students. The results on our provincial achievement tests at both the acceptable level and the level of excellence have gone up. The results in our diploma exams have increased. There are some troubling areas. English language arts 30-1 is one of those troubling areas, and we need to be very closely monitoring that and figuring out with teachers and others in the system how we can do better on that because, of course, literacy and communication skills are fundamental. We're working with them. The standardized test will tell us what direction we're going.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental to the same minister. The results for aboriginal learners also remain a subject of concern. What is being done to improve these statistics?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, what's happening with respect to FNMI students is actually quite exciting. Although the results are still way too low, the trend lines are very good, and the increases in each are very strong. We're not there yet by any stretch of the imagination, but we've gone up five points in one particular area. I can tell you that although we have a high rate of students dropping out, we also have an above-average rate of students coming back. So there's good news in the FNMI area: the work we're doing with our partnership council, with our MOU, with the treaty chiefs and the federal government, and the good things that are happening in the school system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: why are students with special needs who may be working on IPP tested on material they have not learned yet?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, all students are taught the same curriculum. What we do expect is that teachers will differentiate their instruction based on the capacity of students to learn, their learning styles, their learning needs. In terms of standardized results we want to know what the system is doing, and therefore it's necessary to be able to include as many students as possible in provincial achievement tests so we know how the system works. That doesn't affect the students' individual marks. Students are working on the same curriculum, just differentiated instruction for their abilities and for their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Protection of Personal Information

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Virtually all government databases are web applications, everything from land titles to corporate records to environmental data to judicial fines, but Service Alberta is slashing its IT budget and laying off hundreds of IT workers even though the Auditor General is saying that information security in government is still alarmingly weak. To the Minister of Service Alberta: will the minister admit that the budget cuts are a higher priority for her department than information security?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated yesterday, the security of the information of Albertans is very important to me and this government, and working with the Auditor General, as I explained yesterday, is important as well. When you talk about the web applications, some of the things that the government is involved in, it's critical that we protect the integrity of that.

With respect to employees that have moved on to other areas, when you can standardize technology and do things with technologies, there are always savings, and those are reflected across government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister didn't answer the question. By cutting $11 million, it's not going to help the security very much.

Since the Auditor General asked for the new timelines two months ago, when will the minister get around to acting on these two-year-old recommendations?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated yesterday, there were 12 recommendations, of which two are done and then nine that we're working on with significant progress, as the Auditor General has reported. The fact that the chief information officers for each department work with the chief information officer with Service Alberta, design their plans and present their information security plan for the year, is absolutely critical. That's something we were not doing two years ago, and we are doing that now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With compliance being the biggest issue with other government departments, will the minister commit to auditing each ministry and make public the ones dragging their feet on IT security?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to what the departments are doing and the good work that all the chief information officers are doing across government, it's really important that, working with us, they do their work so we can communicate to Albertans that their information is secure and their information is protected. That's why, working with the Auditor General, we are certainly on the right track.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Seventeen members were identified and 102 questions and responses.

Statement by the Speaker

Retirement of Clerk Assistant

The Speaker: Just a brief announcement before we move on. Our Clerk Assistant and director of House services, Louise Kamuchik, has announced that she will be retiring at the end of this year after more than 27 years of service to the Assembly, and we'll be recognizing that service at a reception on November 24 of this year, to which you will all be receiving an invitation. [Standing ovation]

On Monday, Dr. Philip Massolin, our committee research coordinator, will commence training as a table officer in addition to his regular duties, and you will see him at the Clerk's table on Monday next.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Pastor Doug Webb

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a dear friend and community leader within my constituency, Pastor Doug Webb of the East Church of the Nazarene. Last year with the help of 98 volunteers Pastor Doug initiated a project in my constituency that connected the community on a grassroots level. This was the first Faith in Action event, a day dedicated to cleaning up the community of Penbrooke Meadows, the community in which I was born. This event was more than just picking up waste. It was about service in the community, about building bridges within a community that often lacks people who step out from their individual institutions and connect.

Mr. Speaker, this year I once again had the privilege of partnering with the Calgary East Church of the Nazarene and the Penbrooke Meadows Community Association for the annual Faith in Action community cleanup. Faith in Action is just one example of the steps Pastor Doug takes to encourage supportive initiatives within our community. He is someone that has found countless opportunities to bridge communities together and bring down the barriers of faith, that far too often in our world divide people.

Unfortunately, Pastor Doug is leaving Penbrooke Meadows and moving to Grande Prairie to look after a new church. Pastor Doug is an inspiration not only to myself but to many residents of Penbrooke Meadows and all who have met him. I extend my best wishes to Pastor Doug as he pursues new challenges, and I have every confidence that he will inspire others in his many future endeavours.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Minister's Workforce Forum

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 27 I had the privilege of attending the Minister of Employment and Immigration's workforce forum here in Edmonton. More than 130 officials were there representing employers, industry associations, labour and professional organizations, educators, and government, who all gathered to discuss how Alberta's labour force can contribute to our province's competitive position in the global economy.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday's minister's workforce forum had its roots in the building and educating tomorrow's workforce initiative that was launched in 2006. It was about recognizing our changing workplaces and the need to plan for the next evolution of Alberta's labour force development strategy. As our Premier has said, competitiveness is about more than just reducing the cost of doing business. Developing our human capital is an important part of increasing our competitiveness.

I had the honour of moderating the first half of the forum, focused on attracting and retaining talent, that featured insightful remarks from Glen Hodgson, the vice-president and chief economist with the Conference Board of Canada. Some of the issues that stuck out in my mind include: approximately 15 per cent of Alberta graduates leave the province to pursue employment opportunities elsewhere and the increasing recognition and support for workplace training. There was also a strong message that government and industry share the responsibility in building and developing an innovative and creative workforce that will maintain our level of prosperity from now into the future.

Mr. Speaker, the forum was incredibly productive. I want to thank all the participants for giving their time and ideas to building a strong workforce in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Canadian Citizenship Week

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. October 18 to 24 marked Canadian Citizenship Week. Last Saturday I had the opportunity to address over 150 Sikh seniors as well as Judge Sonia Bitar, one of Canada's immigration judges and, in fact, an immigrant from Lebanon.

Mr. Speaker, my Canadian citizenship is dear to me, and as an immigrant I know the value the rest of the world places on the freedoms we often take for granted. I remember eagerly waiting the three years needed to apply for Canadian citizenship, and in fact I was ready to apply after only two and a half years. Every day I am reminded of how blessed I am to live in a nation as free and tolerant as Canada.

However, I am also reminded that the rights we enjoy come with responsibilities. Mr. Speaker, it is our duty as Canadian citizens to uphold our rights and take an active role in shaping our communities. I moved to Canada in 1979, and since that time I have been blessed with a home, a family, a dedicated community, good weather, and beautiful nature. On top of that, I moved to a land of opportunity. I remember being asked by a student in my constituency during Read In Week if I would have been an MLA in India if I had stayed. I said no. It was more likely that I would be a soldier or a police officer. I said this because there are few places in the world where a person can achieve success through hard work, and Canada is one of those places.

I ask all members to join with me today and take time out to think about Canada and the rights and responsibilities we have as citizens. Thank you very much. God bless.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Distracted Driving

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whenever anyone gets behind the wheel of a vehicle, their full attention should be on the task at hand: getting from point A to point B without getting into a collision. In the early days of the automobile the task was relatively simple. There were fewer vehicles, fewer gadgets on the dashboard to play with. But today drivers can bombard themselves with a wide variety of dangerous distractions. Chatting with passengers, fiddling with the radio, eating breakfast all take the eyes and ears off the road.

Among the most dangerous distractions is the cellphone, a near universal accessory beloved by entrepreneurs, salespeople, teenagers, and, yes, politicians. Smart phones are even worse, with multiple ways of distracting driving: texting, music, games, social media applications. Despite reams of evidence showing that using cellphones while driving is dangerous, many people persist in doing so.

Alberta loses 400 citizens at least per year and has 20,000 injuries per year at least, many due to distracted driving. As custodians of the public good, how many deaths, how much suffering will Albertans endure if we fail to ban cellphones, including hands-free devices, while driving? We mustn't take another 50 years to wake up to the dangers. I urge this government to move ahead with strict distracted driving legislation, with hefty fines for infractions. A vehicle is a deadly weapon in distracted hands. Let's protect our fellow citizens, our families, our children before another life is lost.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the standing orders I would give notice that under Standing Order 34(3.1) I would advise the House that on Monday, November 1, 2010, written questions 40 and 41 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise to request leave to introduce a bill, that being the Alberta Health Act.

In rising to introduce this historic act, I note that it is our first Alberta Health Act. Bill 17, as it will be known during debate, was promised in our Speech from the Throne earlier this year. It is the product of more than a year-long conversation with Albertans about our publicly funded health system. It began with the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health last year, and it continued with me on behalf of our government accepting all 15 recommendations of the recently authored Putting People First report on October 20, a report, I might add, that I want to sincerely thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for having provided to me a short while ago.

More than 3,000 Albertans were consulted on the Putting People First report. It included 1,300 people in 23 different communities across the province. It included over 1,500 surveys that were completed online and however else. It included more than 80 organizations, representing tens of thousands of Albertans, who provided written submissions or other forms of communication.

This bill demonstrates that we listened to health care professionals and to many others because the advisory committee included leaders of Alberta's doctors, nurses, pharmacists, and numerous others. Those professions and several others, in fact, submitted written input and gave us their views in a stakeholder forum together with the Health Quality Council of Alberta and others. That collective input has given us a greater understanding of what Albertans expect from their publicly funded health care system, and that is reflected in this new act. It also shows us what we as a government can do to make it stronger.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, proposes a set of principles that describe the health system Albertans want. The bill recognizes and states our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act by word and by deed while also respecting and clearly stating an additional set of our own made-in-Alberta principles. These are principles that describe the health system Albertans want now and in the future.

It's important also to note that this bill does not do certain things. For example, this bill does not change any of the existing important health legislation pieces our province already has. This bill does not and is not purporting anything to do with privatization in any way at all. This bill recognizes, on the other hand, what Albertans' aspirations are for our publicly funded health system.

Some of the highlights in Bill 17 and what specifically the Alberta Health Act proposes include these. The minister will establish a health charter that sets out principles and responsibilities within the health system. It also states that we will establish a health advocate office to resolve citizen concerns with the health system as they relate to the health charter, and it will provide for public input in the development of health regulations. Bill 17 is the next phase of our important, ongoing work to build the best performing publicly funded health system in Canada, as mandated by our Premier and as committed to by our government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we committed to Albertans that we will keep them involved in decisions and actions about their publicly funded health system. Therefore, this act will allow us to live up to that commitment. During debate I will offer yet more explanations and comments than I can do at the moment given that we're only in first reading.

I would ask all members to support Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, and allow it to move on to the next stage. Therefore, I'm proud to once again move first reading of Bill 17, our first Alberta Health Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: Yes?

Point of Order

First Reading of Bills

Ms Blakeman: Under Beauchesne 640 it reads: "The purpose of each stage is as follows: (1) First reading – The first reading of a bill is a purely formal stage as it is decided without debate or amendment. This stage is coupled with the order to print the bill." We in this House have a precedence of two fairly brief sentences, perhaps three, to introduce a bill. We have just enjoyed or endured a four-page speech from the minister introducing the bill, which is a rather unfair way to take up time when there's other business to be done today. Perhaps it could be subtracted from his opening speech in second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Sorry. Was that a point of order?

Ms Blakeman: That was the point of order.

The Speaker: Well, okay. I'll refer members to two phrases with respect to first readings. The hon. member chose to reference 640. If the hon. member would look at Beauchesne 645, Beauchesne 645 says:

At this stage it is not permissible to argue the bill. This is dealing with first reading.

Discussion of the bill's merits might take place on the motion for the second reading. The Member is only permitted to explain the provisions of the bill in order that the House will understand its purport.

If the hon. member would go to the House of Commons on page 740, if my memory serves me right, there is a reference at the bottom of the page that basically says: "A minister seldom provides any explanation when requesting leave to introduce a bill, but may do so."

The intent here would be in first reading, in introduction, to highlight the bill. It's very clear to me that the hon. minister did more than highlight the bill; he gave the history for the first couple of minutes. It would have been entirely permissible to provide highlights for the bill because members are asked to concur in first reading. They can actually vote it down if they wanted to. There's no point of order, but four minutes is a bit longer than I would have anticipated would've been appropriate.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Under 13(2) I'm wondering if the Speaker can clarify for this member. He referred to one section in Beauchesne that referred to other members and one that was specific to ministers. So is it only ministers that are allowed this leeway, or may any member introducing a bill enjoy the four-page speech that the minister was able to do?

The Speaker: Well, actually, under the rules a private member is given even more lenience. That's clearly within the rules, always has been. There's nothing new there.

Ms Blakeman: We'll take advantage of that.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Bill 23Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 23, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010.

Two amendments are being proposed, both of which concern authority for parking bylaws and enforcement. The first amendment gives comprehensive academic and research institutions, Campus Alberta's four universities, retroactive authority to collect penalties for the violation of their parking bylaws.

The second amendment gives the baccalaureate and applied study institutions, Mount Royal University and Grant MacEwan, the retroactive authority to create parking bylaws and to collect penalties for the violation of these bylaws.

The proposed amendments will help both types of institutions control parking on their large urban campuses and will help to protect them from potential lawsuits concerning past parking tickets. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 23, Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

This is one of the procedures here now with a private member's bill.

3:00

Bill 206Utilities Consumer Advocate Act

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act.

The objective of this bill is to ensure Albertans are provided with adequate consumer protection and that they are not overcharged for utilities or related services. Bill 206 would also provide greater access to clear, reliable information for utilities consumers and ensure that they are represented at regulatory hearings by an officer who is independent of this government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move first reading of Bill 206.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we now have a situation. I did not interrupt the last member in introducing the bill, but we've now gone beyond the time allocated for the Routine with respect to this. If we're going to go on, we're going to need a request for unanimous consent. If somebody wants to raise that, we'll put it to the vote.

Orders of the DayGovernment Bills and Orders
Second Reading*Bill 26*Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this particular bill deals with an issue that is very complex, deals with an issue that for some is very emotional, so I want to take a few minutes to try and give some history and background on the bill. I hope that we can get all members that feel strongly about this particular bill to participate in the second reading debate.

The amendments in Bill 26 provide coal-bed methane ownership certainty by declaring that coal-bed methane is and always has been natural gas for both Crown and freehold minerals.

Mr. Speaker, what is coal-bed methane? Simply put, it is natural gas found in coal beds. According to the Alberta Geological Survey Alberta's coal-bed resource could contain up to 500 trillion cubic feet of coal-bed methane, which is also commonly known as CBM, although it's not known how much of this 500 trillion cubic feet could be produced. I'd like to put that in perspective. Remaining established reserves of conventional natural gas in Alberta are about 36 trillion cubic feet.

In Alberta the Crown owns about 81 per cent of the province's mineral rights by land area. The remaining 19 per cent is freehold mineral rights held by the federal government, large corporations and organizations, and individuals, who hold about 1 per cent. During the 1800s and early 1900s some mineral rights were split in part between coal and natural gas. For example, railway companies, which were provided land from the Canadian government, might have kept the coal, or coal and petroleum, and new settlers might have received other mineral rights, including the natural gas rights.

When the mineral titles were originally split, CBM ownership was not generally addressed. Both natural gas and coal mineral rights owners claim they are entitled to the CBM in the coal seams. Now, without examining titles individually, rough estimates suggest that there are approximately 70,000 mineral titles separating ownership of coal and natural gas in Alberta. Approximately 500 different coal owners and roughly 30,000 different natural gas owners are affected by this split-title legislation.

The issue of split-title ownership came up in the CBM multi-stakeholder advisory committee process, which concluded in 2006. In response to one of the committee's recommendations the government conducted a consultation process. In 2009 a freehold oil and gas issues consultation was completed that involved various stakeholders representing individual freehold mineral rights owners, oil companies, natural gas companies, coal companies, and associations.

The consultation considered several freehold issues, including split-title mineral ownership. These stakeholders did not reach a consensus on a legislative approach to clarifying the ownership issue. Some companies have initiated court action to clarify ownership; however, these court cases have been in progress for four years and may take several or even many more years to resolve. Also, a court decision, Mr. Speaker, may only apply in certain circumstances. Therefore, clarity is needed now to help development of Alberta's CBM resources.

In fact, back in 2003 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated that Alberta needed to take a lead role in the development of our CBM by removing the uncertainty that surrounds entitlement to coal-bed methane underlying Crown and freehold lands in this province. I'm pleased to say today that we are pretty much doing what the member suggested back in 2003, so despite what he might say from time to time, we do take their words and advice seriously, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, clarifies CBM mineral ownership by indicating that CBM is and always has been a natural gas for both Crown and freehold minerals. CBM is therefore owned by the natural gas mineral owner and not the coal mineral owner.

I want to also be very clear on a couple of other points. Existing agreements that have been entered into by the natural gas mineral owner or their lessee that specifically provided CBM rights to the coal owner or the coal owner's lessee will not be affected by this bill. The bill also states that natural gas owners and their lessees cannot sue coal owners or the coal owner's lessees, the surface owner, or the Crown for compensation for CBM that was extracted, produced, or removed before the legislation came into force.

There have been precedents for this type of legislation in Alberta, previous Alberta declaratory statutes enacted to clarify ownership rights, including declaring that sand and gravel belonged to the surface rights owner in 1951, declaring that clay and a fine-grained carbonate-rich mud known as marl belonged to the surface rights owner in 1961, and declaring that a large list of natural substances belonged to the mineral owner, also in 1961.

Now, an amendment to the Mines and Minerals Act in 2003, which I mentioned earlier, stated that the Crown co-lease did not grant any rights to the natural gas, including CBM, and this indirectly clarified ownership of CBM on Crown land but did not apply to freehold land. In 2003 the British Columbia government passed the Coalbed Gas Act, legislating that CBM must be considered to be and always has been natural gas and is therefore owned by the natural gas owner.

In 2007 the Energy and Utilities Board, or the EUB, which is now the Energy Resources Conservation Board, held a hearing with respect to certain well licences. When determining approval for well licences, they provided the following information but did not make a determination on coal ownership: "Coal is a rock composed mainly of solid carbon materials, in which the CBM is stored," that CBM has a relatively weak molecular bond to coal and is not an intrinsic part of coal, that CBM is a gas in situ, and that CBM development uses similar practices to producing other gases. This in part led the EUB to conclude that the natural gas rights owners were entitled to produce the CBM from the wells in question.

By passing Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, we will be able to remove a potential barrier to the development of CBM on freehold land, which in turn may encourage additional development of Alberta's abundant CBM resources.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank members of the multistakeholder committee led by our colleague, now the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, who helped with the development of the Freehold Oil and Gas Issues: Stakeholder Consultation report. I'm also happy to announce that further to the recommendation in the consultation report we have provided a grant of $250,000 to the Freehold Petroleum & Natural Gas Owners Association, which is to be used to inform and educate individual freehold owners.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time to help clarify this particular bill in second reading, and I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: We will continue consideration of Bill 16, and we are at amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased that I was able to participate in the debate in Committee of the Whole on the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. I understand that what we are currently debating is amendment A2, which was proposed by my colleague from Calgary-McCall. Essentially, he's asking that the act be amended in section 2 by adding the following after a proposed section, 115.5, which would then become 115.6:

The Minister shall

- (a) collect statistics on motor vehicle accidents involving the use of hands-free cellular telephones and hands-free electronic devices, and
- (b) provide a report to the Legislative Assembly on the operation of sections 115.1 to 115.5 within 3 years of the coming into force of these sections, including recommendations on whether this Act should prohibit the use of hands-free cellular telephones and hands-free electronic devices while driving or operating a vehicle on a highway.

You know, Mr. Chairman, I'm trying to think back. I believe it was in the early 2000s that my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar first raised the issue, and in fact, I think, brought forward a motion, if not actually a bill, to ban cellphones while driving. I'll admit that the reception that my colleagues gave him at the time was not vigorous, but he has certainly proven himself right, very much so. He was ahead of the curve on that one. He saw what was coming and what was needed, and he was right. I have learned to respect his intuition on things like that.

I've certainly seen a difference, too, but I'll tell you what my experience in Edmonton-Centre is. I am really blessed in Edmonton-Centre to have 16 seniors' facilities, most of them independent living. They have their own apartments. They're very active seniors. They just live in a building that was built for seniors, and often there are meals that are offered with it as well. Several times a year I go out and talk to them about what we're doing in the Assembly and what advice and guidance they'd like to give me.

One of the things we talked about when I went around in September was distracted driving because we knew that it had been referred to a committee – or, at least, I thought it had been – so I was bringing it up. I was very interested by the responses that I got because most of the seniors that live in Edmonton-Centre don't drive. They make very good use of public transit through the Edmonton Transit service. They walk, some of them have scooters, lots of them have those wheeled walkers, and you see them out on the trails in the river valley just going at a clip there.

What they said to me was: you get that bill passed. They were pretty clear in the instructions that they gave to me. Because they are people who walk a lot, they were very aware, and everybody had a story of how they were waiting at a corner and ready to cross and that somebody came whipping around the corner and that when they looked at the driver to see why the driver hadn't noticed them ready to step off into the street, well, they had that familiar one hand up to their ear pose, which indicates they're holding a cellphone up to their ear. So my seniors were very clear that they wanted hand-held devices banned.

We also talked about the rest of the distracted driving issues, and frankly they were less alarmed about that. I think the number one problem is swatting at a bee or a wasp that gets into your car. You know, to be fair, that happens probably several times in your life, but it certainly doesn't happen every single time you get in your car.

For people who do talk a lot on their cellphones, they do talk on their cellphones every time they get in the car. So cellphones and the frequency with which they are used have really moved up that list of concerns that people have with distractions in a vehicle.

Now, the second part of the argument here. I did say to them: "Okay. Well, you guys are really clear that you want the hand-held cellphones banned. What about the hands-free?" Most people weren't aware that there were these hands-free devices because you can't see them. Frankly, I don't know how the police would be able to enforce this unless somehow they're checking cellphone records after the fact. That familiar position with somebody's hand up beside their ear: you're not going to see that when it's a hands-free device.

I, in fact, bought a second-hand vehicle that has the cellphone built into it, and it will not allow me while the vehicle is in gear to change any of the settings or to dial. So when the car is in gear, I can't dial. Now, if somebody dials in, you've got controls on the steering wheel where you can hit a button and it becomes live. It comes through the radio and through the speakers, and you're talking to someone. Or you can just not answer it, I suppose, and it goes to the regular voice mail. For a police officer looking at me driving down the road, they would have no idea that I was talking on a cellphone. I could be singing along to the radio, the way people do, and they wouldn't be able to tell that.

I think there's an issue with the hands-free version that could be creating some problems for the police. As I said – sorry; you don't say second-hand anymore – the preowned vehicle that I purchased that had this particular feature in it won't allow me to dial or adjust the GPS unit or any of that sort of thing once the car is in gear, but I don't know that that's true on all other vehicles. Maybe it is possible to do it on other ones.

There seems to be a lot of uncertainty around the hands-free version of things, and that's why I'm very supportive of the amendment that's been brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-McCall to collect some statistics on this. We are now able to collect the statistics. You know, clearly, if there's an accident and the police come to the door of the car and look in and there's a cellphone and it's still on and it's been thrown down on the passenger side, it's pretty clear somebody was on the phone. That would not necessarily be the case with a hands-free one.

I think what we need to do is find out whether it's an issue or not. I'm a big proponent of evidence-based decision-making. We can all get anecdotal stuff. Many times you hear the arguments in this House of, "Well, that makes sense to me," and I've said: "It sounds like that could happen. I'm concerned that that could happen." But I always try and step back and go: "Hmm. Well, how many people does it happen to? Are we going to create a whole program for four people in Alberta?" or "You know, how frequently is this an issue?" or "Are we going to be spending money on something that just doesn't happen very often?"

I think this amendment is a really good one because it's saying: "Okay. Let's run this act for three years as it is and empower the police and others" – I'm thinking of the AMA here – "to collect statistics on whether hand-held phones in cars are an issue or not." I can just imagine how the car manufacturers are going to deal with this one when you've got: it's okay in Saskatchewan; it's not okay in Alberta; it's banned in California; it's all right in Montana. Ye gods! You know, what are they supposed to do? Every car that comes off the line has almost got to be tailor-made for where they're going to end up, and that adds to the price of the car, which nobody is happy about.

Obviously, we're looking for safety, but we're also looking for practicality here. I'm a pretty pragmatic gal. If we don't need it and it's not causing accidents, I'm okay with it. If it is and that's costing money – and more than money. I mean, collisions often cause death, but more often they cause injury. As someone that was injured in a car accident a long time ago, I know how you don't get reported, right? You're not a statistic. You're not a fatality. But, boy, those injuries stay with you your whole life. And as you get older, they really start to be a problem. Those broken bones start to get arthritis, and that bothers you when you're older, and you need medication for that. One way or another, traffic collisions cost the individual, their family, and very often society.

You know, I'm fortunate enough to be on a drug plan through the Legislative Assembly, of which the employer, the people of Alberta – thank you very much – pay a share. I'm receiving a benefit here with lower cost drugs that I need because of injuries that were sustained in a traffic accident a long time ago. So this all starts to roll together.

As I say, if we knew that we would save money as well as lives and injury and inconvenience and grief, it would be worth it. But I'm not interested in putting something in place just because we think or we worry that it might be a problem. I'd rather have the proof. I think that what's been proposed by my colleague is reasonable. He's not asking that the statistics get, you know, collected over a year, which just wouldn't give us enough to work with. A three-year time period sounds like something where you'd be allowed to collect enough information to give you a baseline reading on it.

They're also talking about hands-free electronic devices. Sorry; I just want to grab the bill itself and check the definition of electronic devices. That's why they give you the definitions in the bill, so that everybody is straight on exactly what you're talking about. They do talk about a cellular phone or a communication device that's capable of transmitting cellphone communication, electronic data, electronic mail, or text messages. Oh, my God, can you imagine if people could text message on those things that are built into the car? That's insane. I know some people watch movies, which also strikes me as a bit insane, but hopefully that's going to be addressed in here.

I'm just looking to see whether we are getting a definition of – yeah, they've taken the GPS stuff out. I'm not getting something specific to that. I'm just trying to think of the stuff that's in my car. It's giving you the data on the litres that you've used, your mileage, and oil and gas that you've used. It can display a map. It can also give you a GPS. Then the phone function, I think, is about all that I can access through that.

I know that there has been some consideration from my hon. colleagues on the government side to supporting this amendment, and I hope that they do. I think that this is worth while. It's going to help us because if we have constituents asking us next year or the year after or the year after, "What the heck; Why didn't you do hands-free?" we've got a reasonable response in saying: "You know what? We didn't know. We've made a commitment to study it. We can look at it three years from now, and if it's warranted, we'll do it, and if it's not warranted, we won't." I think that's a very reasonable, pragmatic approach to take.

I would urge all of my colleagues here on my side and others to please support amendment A2. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On amendment A2, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I'm also pleased to speak in favour of this particular amendment. I think it advances this issue probably as much as our society is prepared to have it advanced right now. Typically when decisions about things like public safety are made, whether that's seat belts or helmets or whatever, the evidence tends to be years ahead of where public opinion is. I think that in this particular case public opinion has not caught up to the evidence. From what I've seen of the evidence, we should be every bit as concerned about hands-free electronic devices as we are about hand-held electronic devices, but I don't think that the public is there yet. I would argue that it's the job of MLAs sometimes to lead and help the public come to a particular conclusion, but I don't think that's the tendency of this particular Assembly.

I think what's being proposed in this amendment is actually, you know, the next best thing. What the amendment will do, because it says that "the minister shall," is it will require the minister to "collect statistics on motor vehicle accidents involving the use of hands-free cellular telephones and hands-free electronic devices." Then the amendment goes on – I won't read it verbatim – to have the minister provide a report to the Legislative Assembly on the operation of this act within three years and make recommendations on whether the act three years from its passage should then be further amended to prohibit the use of hands-free cellular phones and electronic devices.

What we're doing here is, I guess, being cautious from one perspective. We're not being cautious from the perspective of minimizing risk to public health. We're being cautious about overreacting and overintruding and, certainly, overintruding into how people operate their cars. It's not the position I would hold, but I think that's the position where we'll end up. I have heard it said many times that the evidence on this issue is divided about whether hands-free cellphones are a hazard or not. I'm not convinced that it's divided, and I'll speak to that more when we have voted on this amendment. I know many members of this Assembly are convinced, and they want to have more proof. I guess that being somebody who likes to base decisions on evidence, more proof, up to a reasonable point, is better.

I think it will be interesting to see how this evolves and how the issues of enforcement and incentive might be played out. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre raised the question which many others have: how would you possibly enforce this? As the Member for Edmonton-Centre said, if somebody is driving down the highway and you're beside them and you look over and their mouth is going, how do you know if they're talking on the cellphone or just singing away to their favourite song on the radio? That's a good point. These are complex issues.

On the other hand, I think that with a bit of creativity some of those can be addressed. I suspect the insurance industry will end up thinking hard about this. I could imagine the insurance industry coming up with various ways to help police this issue, perhaps by adjusting deductibles or, frankly, by putting provisions into auto insurance that if you're in an accident and it turns out that you were talking on your cellphone, regardless of hand-held or hands-free, the coverage is restricted, that kind of thing. I wouldn't be surprised if the insurance industry starts getting thoughtful and creative about how to enforce hands-free regulations as well as hand-held.

As it was put to me by a group of very well-spoken, well-informed university students just yesterday, Mr. Chairman, if it isn't the law, it cannot be enforced. So if we don't make this the law, well, it doesn't matter what we think we can enforce; nothing is going to happen. On the other hand, if it becomes the law, then as ideas develop around enforcement, those can actually be implemented.

Given the realities of this Assembly I hope that we can pass this particular amendment, brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-McCall. I know that I will be voting in favour of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to speak to this amendment. Like many amendments that have come forward, I still don't know that it's quite complete. There's no question that those people that aren't paying attention while they're driving create a lot of accidents. We know that accidents are usually something that we could control if we were paying more attention.

My concern with this amendment, though, is that we're narrowing it on a very narrow focus. From the reports that I've read and understand, one-third of all accidents, the highest in any one area, are from fatigue. The problem that we're focusing on – human nature is that if we can see something that we can immediately point our finger at, we grasp at that. As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East talked the other day, I think she said that in 2 out of 3 cars that were passing her the people were actually speaking on their cellphones, which is an incredibly high percentage.

The problem that we have is that we don't know where the accidents are going up. I have not even been able to read reports, that I'm aware, of where they've actually passed hand-held cellphone laws and the accident rates have in fact gone down. In some states in the U.S. they have actually gone up. They feel the reason why the accident rates have gone up is because now people are trying to hide them below the dash while they're driving so that they're not seen, trying to mask what they're doing. It's actually exacerbating the problem, and accidents have gone up.

I have two or three questions. Perhaps what we really need to do is have a report on all accidents and see whether it's fatigue, whether it's someone not paying attention. It seems like in our world there is an ever-increasing amount of diagnoses of children with ADD. I think that it's human nature that we have ADD, which is an attention deficit disorder while we're driving. It just seems like it's a monotonous activity. There are lots of things going on, and if it's not our cellphone, it will be something else that we're engaged in while we're driving.

As much as I want more information gathered – I think that's important so that we could actually look at it – the problem with this amendment and with the bill itself is that in our justice system traditionally we go by innocent until proven guilty. Here we're saying that people are guilty without having done something wrong. I would like to see a lot more latitude in this bill to where if someone is driving erratically or poorly, they're just pulled over and given a ticket rather than saying, "Oh, I see you're holding a hairbrush, so I'm going to give you a ticket," or "Oh, look, that person is eating" or "They have that newspaper in their hand," though they were swatting a bee, but they're saying, "Oh, no; you're not allowed to hold something."

It seems like we're trying to make a narrow-focus law against cellphones when distracted driving is a much broader law. I think that that's what we should really be looking at. If a police officer is driving behind someone who is speeding up and slowing down, swerving left or right, it doesn't matter what's causing their distraction and poor driving. They're going to get pulled over and given a ticket, whether we want to call that distracted driving or poor driving. I think that we should be looking at a much broader bill that actually points to someone doing something wrong and risking other people's lives while they're driving.

Like I say, this is a nice thought, but if we're going to pass it, I feel that it would be far better if we were to actually take statistics on all accidents and look at that and realize that human beings have this ability to become distracted easily while they're driving. Cellphones are just one of many items or pictures or things that are in our vision that cause us to be distracted.

I hope at this point that this amendment will perhaps be amended. I didn't realize it was coming forward; otherwise, I would have had an amendment to increase the latitude of it, that this report would look at all accidents and not just report back on hand-held or hands-free cellphones.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to make a few comments with regard to this amendment. I certainly support the principle behind it, but I do have a number of concerns with regard to the amendment. Firstly, I think this kind of detail probably shouldn't be in the legislation; it should be in regulation form or really just a directive to the minister, perhaps. But I guess my major concern with the amendment, Mr. Chair, is that the amendment talks about "within 3 years." If I remember right, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie yesterday talked about a period of something like two, three, four, or five years.

I think we need a period, at a very minimum, of three years to provide statistics, and I think five is probably more appropriate. But the amendment doesn't say to provide statistics for three years but to provide a report within three years, so that really means that you're only going to be able to gather statistics for about two years in order to provide the report within three years. I think the intent of the amendment is excellent, and I would hope that if this doesn't pass, the minister would take the intent under advisement and compile the statistics in any event.

The way it's written now, I'm afraid I just cannot support it even though I believe in the intent. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays on amendment A2.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I had originally spoken to the Member for Calgary-Varsity last evening and the Member for Calgary-McCall today saying that I could see some good in the amendment and that I could possibly support it if there was an absence of direction in information by the Ministry of Transportation. They already have a number of initiatives that they do related to this. So I can be accused of flip-flopping, but I'll give you the reasons why.

They cannot provide stats for the hands-free. It's not done at this time. Any information that starts to be gathered probably would be towards the middle of next year, so he felt that they would need probably five years. They already produce an annual report on collision statistics, and they have to track the causes. They presently have what they call an A form, or accident form, that the police use, and they're looking at putting another category in there. So that would have to be done. You'd have to use up all the accident reports that are in Alberta, and then the new ones would actually have that area for the statistics. That would be a neutral cost, basically.

So there is no need to put into legislation a review of our collision stats and various causes. It is already done on an annual basis, like I mentioned. Three years is too short a time period. There's an ongoing review regarding the effectiveness of many of the traffic safety initiatives, and that applies to legislation as well. They have formal evaluations also in Transportation.

In summation, there is no need to put this in the legislation. I think it was mentioned earlier that there could be a directive to the minister or in the regulations. Based on that new information, I could not support this amendment.

The Chair: Is there any other member wishing to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We shall go back to the bill, Bill 16. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's the first chance I've had to rise to speak to this bill, and I've been looking forward to it for quite some time. I always pay close attention to issues of highway safety because of a painful experience through my life and the lives of people who I care for as a result of car accidents and fatalities.

Quickly to list, in my case one of my sisters' husbands died in a car crash, my wife's mother was killed in a car crash, my wife's grandfather was killed in a car crash, and one of her uncles was killed in a car crash. As I think about friends and neighbours, some of the fatalities have been absolutely horrendous; you know, a large part of families killed. A couple of years ago there was a terrible crash south of Edmonton. It involved a neighbour family of mine. The grandparents were both killed, the mother was killed, and the daughter, who was in high school at the time, was left permanently paralyzed. This daughter now has made the best of recovery. Her father was left a widower, a single parent, and lost both his parents in this crash. Another neighbour: about three years ago their family was in a terrible collision out towards Radium. The grandparents were both killed, the parents were both killed, and the two children were left as orphans and are now in the care of my neighbour. So I take these issues very seriously, and I think we all should.

Traffic safety is often spoken of in terms of the costs and the lost time and so on, but I think the biggest cost in many ways is the heartache and the emotional pain felt by families and friends who see lives ripped apart in a single instant. These are closely felt issues for me, Mr. Chairman.

I also reflect on my immediate experience: August 2009, so just about 15 months ago, the middle of the day, perfect driving conditions, not a cloud in the sky, nothing that could possibly go wrong. I was in my constituency, stopped at an intersection, and a car plowed into me at full speed. It totalled the car of the woman driving it and did I forget how many thousands of dollars of damage to my car. Now, she admitted at the time that she hadn't even touched the brake. She thought maybe she was going 40 kilometres an hour at the point of impact. That's a lot of impact. I had my foot on the brake because I was at an intersection. Ever since then I've actually been in physiotherapy and other treatment. I had to go to the doctor, get X-rays, all of that kind of thing because of the lingering effects of that impact.

I reflect on a situation from just this last March, which could have been so much worse. I was with a friend. We were driving on a narrow highway north of Calgary, a secondary road that has some hills on it, through that beautiful country just north of Calgary. We came over the crest of a hill, and just as we got there, an oncoming car was in our lane. The shoulders are narrow, and it was a very frightening moment. As the guy wrenched his car back into his lane and went zipping by at high speed, we could see that he was holding onto a wireless device and texting as he was driving. That probably could have cost us our lives and him his life. So I actually think advancing this issue is very important for this Legislature to do.

This is not, in my mind, about intruding into human rights to speak on the phone and to drive. If somebody wants to be stupid enough – and I'll admit to having done it myself many times – to talk on a cellphone while they're driving, if the only person at risk is yourself, well, I wouldn't really care. The problem is all those innocent people who are stopped at that intersection ahead of you or who are in the middle of a crosswalk or who are on the highway and are doing their best to be good, safe drivers and who innocently get caught in a collision. This isn't about the right to talk on the phone while you drive. Those are privileges, Mr. Chairman. They're not rights.

The real right in question here is the right to a safe driving environment. We give people licences to drive because we understand as a society that it's a privilege, and if you violate that privilege by being impaired or getting too many demerits or for other reasons, you actually have that privilege revoked. That's what a privilege is about. So I don't buy the argument that this is big government intruding into the rights of people. This isn't about laws curtailing individual freedoms, and it's not particularly about individual responsibility. It's about protecting innocent people from being maimed and killed through no fault of their own. That's the perspective from which I approach this legislation, Mr. Chairman.

Now, like all of us, I expect, I've had quite a lot of correspondence on this bill, and I just thought I would mention some of it to you. I had a meeting yesterday with a group of students who are in a public health master's program at the University of Alberta. They've done a lot of work on this particular issue and gave me some very helpful information. I've had correspondence from the Alberta Motor Association supporting the idea of restricting the use of cellphones while people are driving. I've had correspondence from the city of Edmonton on it. This dates back to the spring. They also support the whole notion of this legislation, and I think they actually advocate that it go further and include hands-free devices. I've had correspondence from Students for Cellphone-Free Driving, who have put together a really good fact sheet. I'm hoping that all MLAs have had this kind of correspondence because it's, after all, how democracy works.

The students that met with me yesterday brought forward a couple of substantial studies, which I think are pretty interesting. There's one in particular from New Zealand. I'm not sure if it's being tabled during the debate or not, but I'll refer to it carefully so that it's easy for people to track down. It is from, I guess, the journal Accident Analysis & Prevention, volume 41, 2009, pages 160 to 173. The home page for that journal, in case people want to get the electronic copy of this, is www.elsevier.com. The title of the particular article of this research is Driving While Conversing: Cell Phones That Distract and Passengers Who React, and it's authored by Samuel G. Charlton.

I won't read the whole abstract into the record, Mr. Chairman, but it's quite fascinating to read because they actually did a range of studies. They were testing the conversation patterns of people when they've got a passenger in the car beside them or if they're on a cellphone and whether this cellphone is hand-held or hands-free. They did a pretty thorough job of testing in laboratory situations, good mock-ups of real driving situations, what the effect of all this distraction was. What they found – and I'm sure many of us have heard this – is that when there's a passenger in the car in conversation with the driver, the actual pattern of conversation, when it's carefully studied, is quite different from a conversation with somebody who's on the end of a cellphone. What they found in this quite significant research when they tracked the conversation pattern is that something they label as conversation stalling occurs if there's a real live passenger in the seat.

I think that as soon as you think about it, you realize this is true. If you're driving along, talking to your kid on the way to the hockey game or something and suddenly there is a tense moment in the intersection or somebody is coming into your lane or something else happens, the passenger stalls the conversation. The conversation actually stalls, and both the passenger and the driver pause to address the situation, and then the conversation gets picked up again. Even beyond that, the passenger will sometimes point out the risk before the driver sees it.

I know this has happened to me. I'm sure it's happened to many of you. Driving down the highway – say it's a late summer evening, and there are lots of deer out on the road – I'll actually ask the passenger: gee, do you mind keeping an eye out for deer in the ditch? Sure enough, my wife has done this for me many times, or I've done it for her if she's driving and said: oh, watch out ahead. That kind of thing happens all the time.

That is in marked contrast to when you're in a conversation with somebody on a cellphone, because the location of the person you're talking to is entirely remote, is entirely disconnected from the situation the driver faces. So that conversation continues, and it creates something that in this study and elsewhere is called inattention blindness.

Again, I can identify with that. You're driving along, your eyes are open, they're on the road, but your brain is somewhere else completely. Sometimes I marvel; I frighten myself. I'll get to work and sit down in my office, and I can hardly remember how the heck – you know, what route I took to get here. It all happens so automatically. Well, the risks of that happening are even higher if there's somebody on a cellphone because they have no awareness of what's going on for the driver behind the wheel. So they just keep right on chatting. It doesn't matter whether everything is okay or whether there is a deer standing in the middle of the road or a semi-trailer coming head-on or you're in the middle of an intersection; they just keep talking away. And because they're talking away, you as the other end of the conversation are engaged more in that than you are in driving, and that creates something called inattention blindness.

I would urge everybody to have a look at this particular study. It's really quite interesting how they arranged it all. What they found was that cellphones actually are considerably more dangerous, whether they're hands-free or hand-held, than other forms of distraction. They also talk about things like adjusting the stereo. Well, if I'm adjusting the stereo, like I was on my way to work this morning – I was listening to some pretty vigorous rock and roll . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Seventies rock.

Dr. Taft: . . . '70s rock that my son had given me. But if something comes up on the road, I can just stop turning the dial. I was turning up the base, actually, this morning, getting fired up for question period. But if there's something going wrong on the road ahead of me, I can stop doing that. There's nothing about that stereo that forces me to just carry on. I stop. Likewise with many other distractions. Not all, though. The Member for Edmonton-Centre spoke about, you know, a bee or a wasp in the car. They don't stop for anything, so there are some things we cannot legislate against.

I think these things all have to be considered very seriously, Mr. Chairman. I know that there's a reluctance in this Assembly to step into these kinds of issues. I think that philosophically we're nervous about government getting too far into people's lives. But I can tell you that if somebody in this Assembly ends up losing a family member or a loved one to a distracted driver, that's going to be extremely painful.

Mr. Chairman, I did want to make those points. I support this bill. I wish it went further – I really do – but I guess we're going to have to take what we can get. I wish the previous amendment had passed, but it didn't. I would like to have seen this bill brought forward again by law for review within three years, which is what the previous amendment proposed, but that was unsuccessful as well.

I've been cautioned that the politics of this are dangerous, that if we're seen as being too aggressive, being too far ahead of the public, there will be a political backlash. I guess that's a chance I'm prepared to run, Mr. Chairman. I'm reluctant to have this bill proceed out of committee so quickly because I know there are other members in the public who want to wade in.

I know my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is passionate about speaking on this bill, so I will cede the floor to him, but I may have other comments later. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, you said previously about tabling your report. Do you wish to do that on Monday, not today?

Dr. Taft: Yeah. It may well have been tabled previously. I'll check. Thank you for asking, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have been listening to the discussion so far this afternoon on the bill and the proposed amendment, that was unfortunately defeated. I certainly hope that a lot of members on all sides of the Assembly thought: well, we should have a look at this within a three-year period. Hopefully, it will go to a standing committee or one of the policy field committees, and they can have a look at it and hear directly from members of the public. When you consider what some people are suggesting, that this bill does not go far enough at this time, well, this would give those individuals an opportunity to speak.

Now, certainly, there are people who are suggesting that we are not going far enough, that this is an opportunity for the province of Alberta to be a leader in North America by removing the exemption of hands-free cellphone use from this bill, of course, and they have the view that it would certainly prevent even more injuries and save the lives of even more members of the motoring public. In my view, they would be right.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has started something here that probably should have been started a decade ago, when cellphones were larger than a pound of butter. Now they're so much smaller and, of course, a lot cheaper, and everyone uses one. Unfortunately, everyone would include members of the motoring public, particularly drivers, and this bill is a good first step in changing the habits of all Alberta drivers, including this member.

I said in second reading that members of my constituency, the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar, had given me clear direction over the summer that this bill was to be passed. They were satisfied with the direction they were going in. I expressed their gratitude to the hon. member earlier this week, and certainly they appreciate this legislation.

Now, I've heard from a lot of citizens over the course of the summer, Mr. Chairman, but I didn't hear directly from anyone in the automobile insurance industry. I heard from the AMA about Bill 16, and of course the AMA does write some insurance policies for some Alberta drivers, but I didn't hear from the insurance industry. The insurance industry in the past has been very active. Is that the right word, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview?

Dr. Taft: I would say that they probably even lobbied. I hope they're registered.

Mr. MacDonald: They've probably even lobbied for legislation to suit their industry. I'm sure they're registered under the lobbyist registry, whatever that means, but I'm not going to be distracted and get into the Lobbyists Act, which I think is an act that, hopefully, will be reviewed and strengthened.

With Bill 16 I'm surprised. The insurance industry has a lot at stake here. I'm confident that the hon. member is absolutely right. This legislation will start to reduce not only the fatalities but the number of accidents that are occurring on our roads and on our streets in this province. If we can make our roads and streets safer, with fewer collisions, hopefully it will mean our insurance rates will go down as well.

I haven't heard from the industry on this, and I will be watching as this proceeds, just like, Mr. Chairman, I'm watching the province of Quebec and the mandatory use of snow tires in certain months of the year. I could stand corrected, but I believe it's November through April, or it could be December through March. If an hon. member has the right answer for that, I would appreciate it.

Certainly, that's a law. It's been very good for the tire shops in Quebec, yet we should start seeing very soon if it is reducing the number of collisions and vehicle accidents in Quebec. I think this is the third winter since it's been implemented, and it'll be interesting to see how that has changed the accident rate in the province of Quebec. It'll be interesting to see in three or four years in this province our accident rates, our insurance rates. Hopefully, all drivers through cheaper insurance will benefit from this legislation.

Now, some individuals are questioning the exemptions. We'll see how this works out. The hon. member has certainly provided a satisfactory explanation to me regarding questions I've had around the exemptions. This law will be like a lot of others. Hopefully, it will be improved as we go along.

When we look at Bill 16, Mr. Chairman, I do hope that as the regulations come out, there will be an advertising campaign. Now, I don't know whether this would be under the direction of Alberta Transportation or if it would be under Service Alberta. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was thinking about the Public Affairs Bureau in this, but I don't think they are the ones to organize this. They'll spend a lot of money – there's no doubt about that; he's right about that – but whether the job will get done is another question. I know why he would have those concerns.

As this bill proceeds through the Assembly, hopefully we will see this proclaimed and enforced very soon, and Albertans will be alerted. I don't have any problem with money being spent on a program like that to promote public safety. Before anyone can complain about not knowing and getting a fine, we could have a good program available to educate the motoring public as to what is directly going to happen with this bill.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore talked about the county of Strathcona, and certainly it doesn't seem to be an issue there anymore. I drive through there frequently, and I feel safe; I certainly do. I have trouble with that rolling four-way stop they practise in Strathcona county, but certainly their cellphone use, I think, has been controlled. The public that I talk to seem to feel safe, and they seem to feel comfortable with the law, and they seem quite willing to abide by that law.

Mr. Chairman, hopefully, this Bill 16 will proceed through the House, and by springtime, by the time the snow melts, we will have to curtail or control our use of cellphones.

Mr. Liepert: Start now. Get used to it.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'm probably very, very guilty of that, and I have done some rather stupid things while I've been driving and on the cellphone. I won't deny it – I won't deny that – and this will certainly help.

In conclusion, again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to also thank the Minister of Energy for his kind remarks when he was talking about Bill 26 earlier. I appreciate that.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on the bill.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Ironical that I follow my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. I was going to surprise members today by saying that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar a decade ago raised this issue in the House.

Dr. Taft: He's ahead of his time.

Dr. Swann: Very much ahead of his time, and many people thought he was nuts. We know now that he was prescient and very clearly calling for something that would have saved lives – would have saved lives – over this decade if it had been in place for this last decade. One distracted driver can decimate a whole family.

I was a medical officer in Pincher Creek for a number of years. I sadly remember certifying five teens and a mother coming back from a ski hill who were involved in a collision by a distracted driver, not by a cellphone at that time but a distracted driver nonetheless. It's, indeed, so tragic that many of these are so preventable. I certainly want to acknowledge the member opposite for introducing this bill and for pushing us on a very critical public safety issue.

This has the potential to save thousands of lives. I said earlier in my member's statement that over 400 lives and 20,000 injuries a year are happening on our highways. When you think about the suffering and the loss of life and the cost to the health care system, you realize that what we're talking about here is so fundamental, that anything we can do to reduce distractions is going to reduce death and suffering.

As it stands right now, it does not go far enough. My colleague from Calgary-Varsity has proposed solid amendments to the bill that would make driving in Alberta even safer, and I urge the Assembly to pass these amendments. As I say, I'm all too familiar as a physician with the carnage that is wrought by car crashes. We have a chance to greatly reduce such tragedies but only if we heed the scientific evidence. That includes evidence that hands-free devices are just as distracting as traditional hand-held cellphones.

We must not allow ourselves to believe that hands-free cellphones are a safe alternative. The brain cannot safely handle attention-demanding tasks such as driving and talking on the phone at the same time. We're simply not wired that way. Just because you're holding the phone pressed up against your ear doesn't mean you're not just as distracted by the same conversation held over a speaker. According to studies using a cellphone while driving, whether hand-held or hands-free, delays reaction time as much as if the driver was under the influence of alcohol.

Surely, we know in the 21st century that our policy must be grounded in good science and the precautionary principle: where there is reasonable evidence of human risk, choose the policy that assures health and safety. Our duty as legislators and leaders is to encourage drivers to pull over to a safe place if you have to talk, and we need to provide real disincentives for people who fail to follow that common-sense advice.

Alberta's rate of cellphone use while driving happens to be double that of the national average. Clearly, the longer you're on a cellphone, the more the risk of an injury. If people are more likely to listen and talk on a cellphone that is hands free than one that is hand held, they're still increasing the risk of injury and accident.

Clearly, the province is in dire need of more comprehensive distracted drivers legislation and the enforcement to go along with it. We have an opportunity this week to significantly reduce the death toll on the roads. I urge the members of this Assembly to do the right thing and support this bill, including the opposition amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you very much. I did, as I indicated earlier, want to make some more comments on the record on Bill 16, and I will start by tabling, as the chairman suggested, a couple of the studies I referred to.

The Chair: Hon. member, table the report at the Routine time on Monday, not today.

Dr. Taft: Even if I refer to it in debate, I can't do that? Okay. Then I won't table it.

The Chair: You can refer to it in debate today, but you table it on Monday.

Dr. Taft: Okay. It used to be that we could table things as we use them. Far be it from me to question that. I'll handle it on Monday. That's okay. That good old Speaker of ours keeps us on our toes, doesn't he, Mr. Chairman? Then I will table these on Monday.

But I did want to discuss some other issues here. One of the questions that's been put to me – and it's a reasonable question – is: well, if cellphones are so dangerous, why haven't we seen accident rates climb as the use of cellphones has spread? I think that's a very reasonable question that's worth exploring. I've made some inquiries around this. I wish I had absolutely clear evidence on it. The explanation that has been put to me is that accidents have not increased but that the rate of accidents has not declined as much as would be expected from the improvement in the quality of roads and in the performance of motor vehicles. You know, I think that's an interesting way to try to understand that. If you think of a modern car, say a car built in the last two or three years, compared to one from 20 years ago, there's a dramatic improvement in the safety of those vehicles, with airbags, antilock braking systems. In fact, the more recent ones have all kinds of warnings about ice detection on the road ahead, much better tires, all kinds of things that have been improved in cars to make them safer. As well, of course, the interior is designed with safety in mind.

It's kind of interesting to appreciate this. Once or twice a year I end up at one event or another where there are old cars there. It's part of, you know, an antique car day. You get into a car from the 1960s, and you think: "Oh my goodness. How did people drive these?" There are big pointy steel dashboards, and there are no seat belts, and there are no airbags, and they take about half a block to stop because the brakes are so weak.

So we've seen a real improvement in cars, and we've also seen a real improvement in road safety. I think that's evident in the design of the major roads in Alberta, where instead of intersections you have highways being connected through cloverleaves and interchanges, which are much, much safer. Even little things that we may not appreciate.

I mentioned earlier the loss of one of my close relatives in a car accident. I don't need to name who it was, but it was a close relative. She was driving alone down a secondary road early in the evening, fell asleep, drifted into the ditch, slammed into the abutment of an adjoining driveway – this would have been about 25 years ago – broke her neck, and died instantly from the impact. In the ensuing years those road abutments were redesigned and rebuilt so that instead of a solid wall when you hit them, they're actually sloped so that if a car drifting into the ditch hits one of these, it's not just a solid impact into earth or concrete; it's actually a sloped rise. That's had a significant impact on lowering accident rates and fatalities. If that had been the case, the woman I'm speaking of may well still be alive today.

We've seen improvements in road safety, improvements in car safety, but we haven't necessarily seen the reduction in fatalities and injuries that we might expect. That may well be explained by the widespread use of cellphones and other electronic distractions. I thought that was an important point to make, which was made to me by one of the groups I met with.

I also thought I would refer at a little bit greater length to some of the correspondence I've had from others. I need to correct myself, Mr. Chairman. I referred to a letter from April of this year from the city of Edmonton. In fact, it wasn't an official city of Edmonton letter. It was a letter from one of the city councillors, Dave Thiele, who didn't run again in the most recent election, so he's not a councillor now but was then.

Councillor Thiele wrote to me with quite a widely cited study attached by the National Safety Council, a study titled: Understanding the Distracted Brain: Why Driving while Using Hands-free Cell Phones is Risky Behaviour. What Dave Thiele suggests in his letter is that Bill 16 must include a total ban on hands free phones. Not to do so will yield little in the way of meeting those goals.

Those goals are reducing crashes and loss of life. Mr. Thiele goes on to refer to efforts he made in 2006 to research the issue, and he says:

What hands free devices do not eliminate is cognitive distraction (taking your mind off the road). The attention that ought to be focused on the driving responsibilities is elsewhere.

So I wanted to be clear in the record, Mr. Chairman, that that letter was not from the city of Edmonton per se. It was from one specific city councillor. But it is a very good letter, and he did attach, as I said, this well-known study to it, which is one important piece of evidence in this debate.

I also wanted to elaborate a little bit on a very well-put-together handout, I guess, a double-sided handout from Students for Cellphone-Free Driving. It gives various figures in here about the number of Albertans who die or are injured in motor vehicle collisions every week. Roughly speaking, depending on the figures you read, somebody dies every day of the year in Alberta from a car crash, and many, many more, many, many times that, are injured. I would count myself among one of the injured.

This particular handout claims – and it cites a study on it, a study from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in 2006 – that “driver distraction, including the use of cellphones and other electronic devices, is responsible for up to 80% of these collisions.”

Ms Blakeman: How much?

Dr. Taft: Eighty per cent. Not just cellphone but driver distraction overall.

Ms Blakeman: So that includes the bugs and the makeup.

Dr. Taft: That would include all forms of distraction.

It goes on, and I think this is important to read into the record. I quote from this handout from Students for Cellphone-Free Driving.

If you drive while talking on your cellphone:

- You are four to six times more likely to be involved in a collision
- Your reaction time is slowed by 18%
- You double your risk of having a rear-end collision
- You increase your risk of running red lights
- You may be more impaired . . . than a legally intoxicated driver.

I won't read this whole study, Mr. Chairman, but there is one particular note I want to make about this. This handout includes several photographs down one side of it, and one of these is a photograph of a car that's come into obviously extreme collision with a large truck. I recognize that photo because it was circulated to me on the Internet. However, what was circulated to me was a complete series of photos from that accident that include shots not just of the accident, which was from a distracted driver losing track of which lane he was in and colliding head-on with a large truck, but the photos show that the bumper of the truck actually goes right through the driver's compartment, right through into the back seat of the car.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. That's good.

Dr. Taft: Well, it's important to hear this because when I saw these photos, it was quite shocking. It was almost enough to make you sick to your stomach because as the photos unfold – and I guess it was an accident scene investigator who took them – you see them ending up removing the remains of the driver from the collision. It shows a human body in multiple pieces, a human body literally pulled into parts from this collision.

I can tell you it's shocking when you think about those kinds of consequences from distracted driving. I think we need to take this legislation very seriously. So I did notice that particular photograph on this handout, and those images come to me often when I'm driving. I will move on from there, but if anybody would like to see those photos, I will forward them to you.

I want to also cite from the Alberta Motor Association letter that was sent out to me and I believe to all MLAs. I know the hon. Member for . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member. According to Standing Order 4(3), as it's 4:25, the chair shall now call to rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? The motion is carried.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, November 1.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 3rd Session (2010)

Activity to October 28, 2010

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 1, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as Members of the Legislative Assembly. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Manuel Schaerer Kanonnikoff, the ambassador of the Republic of Paraguay. Also accompanying the ambassador is Mr. Branislav Popovic, the honorary consul in Calgary. This is His Excellency's first official visit to Alberta.

As the minister in charge of advanced education I was very pleased to discover that Alberta and Paraguay share a number of relationships based on learning as the Alberta Research Council has partnered with Paraguay's Moisés Bertoni Foundation to apply expertise in land planning. As a result of this partnership they've developed a land management process and a plan to improve the ecological, social, and economic capacity in one of Paraguay's most sensitive areas. We had a delightful lunch this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, where we were able to speak of a number of things, including the agricultural sector, the energy sector, and a number of the things that we are looking forward to working together on.

I would now ask that His Excellency and the honorary consul please rise in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm thrilled today to introduce the members of the EU delegation that are with us. In most of their homelands they would be going to bed about now, but they're coming here to take part in this Legislative Assembly and to observe our processes here. I'm thrilled to introduce the chair for the delegation for relations with Canada, Philip Bradbourn; Elisabeth Jeggle, who is vice-chair for the delegation; as well as Sebastian

Bodu, Ioan Enciu, Antonyia Parvanova, Anna Rosbach, Timo Soini. Accompanying them are Mr. Giovanni di Girolamo, and we have other members of the party that are here today. Mr. Speaker, they've come all this way to answer an invitation to come up and see Canadian oil sands and judge for themselves, and I give them full marks for all their meetings and their initiative today. Please join me in honouring our delegation. If they would please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of introductions today of people here to help build awareness of prostate cancer. I would like all these people to rise in the galleries following the introduction so they may receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

First of all, in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce Mr. Steve Jones, president of Prostate Cancer Canada; Mr. Irv Kipnes, co-chair of the leadership team for the Edmonton Campaign for Prostate Health, supporting the University Hospital Foundation and the Alberta Cancer Foundation. There is also Arni Goodman, chair of the Edmonton Prostate Cancer Canada network, and with them our former colleague and current Edmonton city councillor Ed Gibbons, who has successfully won his battle with prostate cancer.

Mr. Speaker, also in the members' gallery are Craig Macdonald, president of the Alberta Firefighters Association, and Brad Hoekstra, the association secretary, who are here to show their support of Movember, which I will speak about later. Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, these guests are joined by more than 30 prostate cancer victims, survivors, and advocates who are here to add their significant voices to the fight against the disease.

I would ask all our guests to rise in the galleries and receive our traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 45 students from the Almadina ESL charter academy located in my constituency, Calgary-East. Mr. Speaker, the Almadina school is home to students from over 30 countries around the globe. Almadina has come a long way since its creation, producing good results, and was rated in the top 10 by the Fraser Institute. Mr. Speaker, the students are accompanied today by their teachers, Mr. El-Masri, Mr. Elladen, and Mrs. Nagassar. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce some students from Wetaskiwin who are here this week for School at the Legislature. They're here from Centennial school, and they are making a significant investment of time this week to be here and learn about how government operates. I'm really happy that they can be here and see us in action. I think that in doing that, they are going to become leaders of today, not only tomorrow. They're going to go home and apply some of the things that they've learned here, I hope. They are led by their teachers, Mrs. Joann Murphy, Mrs. Dianne Zielke, Mrs. Joan Fitzner, and parent leaders Myrna Peters and Trisha Wildcat. They're in the public gallery. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members a group of 24 grade 9 students from the Ponoka composite high school. I met with them earlier today, and they are a very bright group of kids that ask good questions and tough questions. I would say that they are very well taught. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Brady Teeling and Miss Courtney MacMillan. They're in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 15 students and four teachers from Airdrie's own Airdrie Koinonia Christian school, or AKCS for short. They are led by their teachers Mrs. Beth Griesel, Mrs. Laura Driedger, Mrs. Dorothy Martin, and Mr. Al Strohschein. AKCS is consistently one of this province's highest performing schools, and the calibre of the graduates it produces is second to none. The middle-class Alberta parents of these students sacrifice much of their time and finances so their children can learn in a faith-promoting environment, which helps these students become highly contributing citizens of our province. I'd ask these students and their teachers to now stand, rise, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House another new Liberal caucus member, Tyler Mudrey. He joins our team this fall as administrative assistant. He's been a great help to us already this week, and our staff always do their best to support our caucus in their role as the Official Opposition. I'd ask Tyler to stand and receive the warm greetings of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic caucus.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the NDP caucus sessional researcher, Mr. Dashiell Brasen. Named for famous detective novelist and activist Dashiell Hammett, Dashiell was born in Toronto and raised in Edmonton-Strathcona. He received a bachelor of arts in philosophy from the University of British Columbia in Vancouver this past May. He is interested in global art, culture, food, film, music, social justice, and sustainability. He remains, despite all, a lifelong fan of the Oilers. I want to welcome Dashiell to the NDP caucus and to the Legislature. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Prostate Cancer Awareness

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members may have noticed something a bit different about me today for I have temporarily abandoned the moustache I have had for years. It was shaved off this morning on live television, on Breakfast Television. I have done so for an excellent cause. Today is the beginning of Movember, formerly known as November, when men start with a clean shave and grow moustaches to raise awareness and funds for prostate cancer. I would like to thank hon. members for wearing Prostate Cancer Canada's ties and scarves so that you, too, may show your support. I have to say you look wonderful.

Prostate Cancer Canada funds research and support groups all over the country and is the beneficiary partner of Movember in Canada. Today is also an opportunity to support the Edmonton Campaign for Prostate Health, which is in support of the University Hospital Foundation, the Royal Alexandra Hospital Foundation, and the Alberta Cancer Foundation. They have been working diligently for three years to raise enough money to build a world-class research and clinical facility right here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, prostate cancer affects 1 in 6 men, statistically about eight of us in this Chamber. No one knows that better than the hon. Member for Little Bow, who has been successfully battling this affliction. As he will tell you, it is critical for men to understand the merits of early detection through PSA blood testing and for women who have men in their lives to remind them to do so. In my role as chair of the Cabinet Policy Committee on Health I know that prevention and early detection save lives and save money in our health care system, so I am taking up this challenge today. I am going to grow back my moustache, and I'm taking pledges to do so. On behalf of all the victims, survivors, and advocates gathered here today, I hope you will wear your ties and scarves with purpose.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alessandro Simpatico

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago Albertans gathered to celebrate the remarkable achievements of our young people. The Great Kids awards recognized 16 great kids from ages 5 to 18, passionate and generous young people from all across the province. Today I'd like to give special attention to one of the award recipients, 11-year-old Alessandro Simpatico, who lives in our constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and attends Holyrood elementary school. Alessandro was born with kidney disease and has been taking medication to control the condition all his life. He's been operated on 13 times, with more surgeries to come.

Alessandro has faced his disease with incredible courage. Even more impressive is that at a young age he understands the importance of helping others. Every year Alessandro puts together a team of family and friends, known as Alessandro's Peeps, to participate in the Kidney Foundation's fun run and walk. This young man's team, now close to 60 members, has raised $20,000 for kidney disease so far, an astonishing accomplishment for such a young man.

Alessandro isn't even a teenager yet, but he's already inspired dozens of people to work together in pursuit of a cure for kidney disease. I have no doubt that Alessandro will grow up to become an even more amazing adult. I wish him, his parents, family, and friends all the best in the years to come. I'm sure they'll meet every challenge.

I would like to thank the Premier and the minister of children's services for presenting the awards two weeks ago Saturday. It was a very special occasion for the 16 winners and their families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

One Book, One Calgary Program

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reading is an essential part of our lives. It teaches, guides, encourages, informs, entertains, soothes, and connects us to each other and to the world. Calgary public library is launching One Book, One Calgary, a monthlong city-wide book club to create a shared experience through the celebration of reading, literacy, and civic engagement. To quote Mary McGrory of the Washington Post: “The idea is that the city that opens the same book closes it in greater harmony.”

Starting this Thursday, November 4, Calgary public library and author Aritha van Herk invite Calgarians to read Mavericks: An Incurable History of Alberta and to come together to share their passion, opinions, and civic pride in this city that we all call home. One Book, One Calgary is one of the most ambitious programs ever undertaken at Calgary public library, engaging civic partners, leadership organizations, artists, and entertainers to create city-wide maverick celebrations.

On the 17th of November Cowtown Creativity presents Alberta Ballet, Calgary Opera, One Yellow Rabbit theatre project, and EPCOR Centre for the Performing Arts to show how their creativity fuels original works and to discuss the essential role of creativity in building a great city. Heart of the City will celebrate the importance of Calgary’s nonprofit sector. Maverick Leadership: Framework for Future on November 26 features Volunteer Calgary, the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations, Youth Central, and other individuals. One hundred years of Calgary’s Chinatown, past, present, and future, on November 30 celebrates our city’s cultural diversity. Mavericks in the 21st Century Economy looks forward from three distinct vantage points: Calgary Economic Development, Calgary Chamber of Commerce, and entrepreneurs.

One Book, One Calgary is how we’re going to create a shared experience amongst Calgarians, so come join the conversation this November.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

KidSport Calgary

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured to rise today to share the incredible story of KidSport Calgary, which helps families overcome barriers that prevent some children from getting into the game, gym, or studio. Focusing on economic, social, and educational needs, KidSport Calgary promotes sport as a tool to develop strong and healthy communities.

Since its inception in 1995 KidSport Calgary has never denied support to any qualified applicant. It has distributed well over $3 million to help more than 15,000 young athletes to play in more than 50 organized sports over the past 15 years. Of the 175 chapters across Canada it is the most successful in terms of funds distributed and families assisted. However, since 2007 the number of young athletes supported has doubled while donations have risen by less than 6 per cent. Despite the challenges of balancing services and support with the need to raise more funds, I’m pleased to announce that KidSport Calgary is committed to getting more young athletes off the sidelines, building community and social relationships to make programs more readily available, and reaching new levels of financial stability.

Mr. Speaker, I’m proud and humbled to serve as honorary chair of KidSport Calgary, and I’d like to publicly thank our staff, Mark Kosak and Kaisa Christie, as well as our board chair, Ryan Proce-viat, along with our directors: Bill Hopkins, Melina Dharma-Wardene, Simon Brockett, Beth Gerrard, Chris Protti, Devon Smibert, Joe Tucker, and Amanda Stastook.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly encourage all Albertans to visit to whatever extent they can kidsportcalgary.ca. You never know which contributing citizen, Olympian, professional athlete, or community leader you might be assisting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Additional Beds to Relieve Emergency Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While Albertans wait for 20 hours in emergency rooms to get a hospital bed, there are hundreds of closed beds sitting empty, the result of this government’s mismanagement. Albertans are frustrated because they see new hospitals being built, new additions, but the number of beds does not change, and the wait-lists only get worse. My questions are for the minister of health. Is opening the emergency ward at the East Edmonton health centre included in the minister’s plan to reduce emergency room wait times?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that’s a very good question, and I’m happy to take it under direct advisement and have a look at if things can be accelerated there. At the moment the East Edmonton centre is scheduled for a phased-in approach. That’s always been the case. We know that building today with shelled-in space is a far better way to plan for the future, and we’re looking at that in the medium term of the four different phases I explained last week.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that there were 140 beds boarded up at the Peter Lougheed hospital last year following an expansion, how many of the beds at the Lougheed is the minister going to order opened?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve had that discussion as well with Alberta Health Services. In fact, it goes back a few months now since we started that particular discussion because there were some beds that closed as the same number of beds opened in the east wing, as it’s called, at the Peter Lougheed Centre. What I’ve asked them to do in the immediate and short-term time frames, which are between now and Friday for immediate and going on into the middle of November and up until Christmas, is to take a look at whether or not we could open up more transition beds exactly at that site. I said the same thing about the Royal Alex.

Dr. Swann: Well, I’m not sure about transition beds, Mr. Speaker. We do need in-hospital beds.

Again to the same minister another suggestion. There is space for over a hundred beds at the closed women’s pavilion at the Royal Alex. Will the minister order that these be opened to reduce pressure on the emergency room?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Transition beds are something in the immediate zone. What I mean by immediate time zone is things that can be done within days, where you might be able to recruit faster or you might be able to divert nurses, LPNs, and other types of care to a site. That's exactly what I've asked them to do at the Royal Alex. It's a good thing that the Lois Hole hospital opened, and it's a good thing that we have some beds there that we might be able to work with. AHS is exploring that possibility right now and has been since last week.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Nursing Recruitment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year Alberta Health Services paid out $23.6 million in severance to 448 nurses; $23.6 million to buy out nurses, and now we're short-staffed and hiring again. This is the definition of mismanagement. To the minister: what is the total number of nurses that will have to be hired to staff the mysterious 250 beds that he announced two weeks ago?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's make it clear that things have changed very significantly since last year. Last year Alberta Health Services was looking at a $1.3 billion deficit, so they had to take a look at a number of different areas. Then in January, February, and since my time, I'm happy to tell you, in fact, our government has taken over the full responsibility for that $1.3 billion. We've brought in a five-year funding commitment, and Alberta Health Services has a whole new set of parameters under which to work going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many of these positions will be permanent, full-time positions so that Albertans may know that two years down the road these beds may still be open?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the point. Now that we have a five-year commitment of funding with predictable, stable dollars, better longer range planning is able to occur for the first time ever. Typically it's been on an annual basis. That's no longer the case. We now have a five-year funding plan. We're going to stick to it, and we're going to make sure Alberta Health Services sticks to it. In terms of the specifics you might want to put in a motion for a return, hon. member. I'll be happy to answer it.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, you didn't even answer the question. How shameful. Come on, you guys. Yap, yap, yap, and no answers.

Dr. Swann: That's why it's called question period.

What is going to be the cost of nursing overtime due to this minister's rushing out a plan to open more beds? What is going to be the cost of nursing overtime?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take a look at that and see if we can get the exact dollars and pennies involved. The important thing is that we are responding quickly. Alberta Health Services is reacting and responding equally quickly so that we can help emergency doctors and, in turn, help patients who deserve, require, and will get the immediate care that they need. Let's keep in mind that there are a lot more good things in the health system today than some of those things that are making the press lately.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bitumen Upgrading

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Saskatchewan's potash resource company faces foreign takeover, and Premier Stelmach has publicly opposed the sale. Saskatchewan's potash community thanks the Premier for all his support. Albertans, on the other hand, are still left waiting for this government to support the bitumen industry upgrading in Alberta. According to his own party the Premier has failed to encourage bitumen upgrading in the province of Alberta. To the Minister of Energy: why has the government failed to meet its own targets for bitumen upgrading in the province so far?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know who the Leader of the Opposition is quoting when he makes those statements because that, in fact, is not correct. I haven't seen anywhere where anyone is saying that this government has failed. What people are saying is that we need to ensure that we get maximum value out of our resources. We are currently in the midst of negotiations with North West Upgrading, as most members of this House will know. That, I believe, Mr. Speaker, will set a template to determine what the going-forward process is under our BRIK program.

Dr. Swann: Well, since he didn't answer the question, I'll ask it again. Why have you failed to meet your own targets, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: The reason I didn't answer the question, Mr. Speaker, is because the question was irrelevant because we are meeting our own targets. It's a question of whether we're going to meet our targets 20 and 30 years down the road. As I said in my first answer, the Leader of the Opposition is basing his question on misinformation, so I'll answer the question based on information that's true.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will this government increase the proportion of upgrading done in Alberta this year? Yes or no?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we have to recognize that a significant portion of our bitumen is already being upgraded. It's being upgraded through upgraders that were constructed by the private sector over a number of years. Now, the economics have changed in the last few years. Yes, a number of investments that were going to go into upgraders are not going ahead, but that's a decision made by the private sector. If the hon. leader is suggesting that the government should go in and build upgraders in this province, we philosophically have to disagree.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Health System Governance

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our biggest mistakes in life are often the ones resulting from our failure to admit and correct our first mistakes. Our long, drawn-out royalty fiasco is a prime example. We cannot afford to do this with health care. This government has been focused on centralizing control when it should be focused on outcomes through accountability. Failure to reverse the new royalty framework before its implementation cost Albertans dearly. Failure to give decision-making authority to our hospitals is costing people their lives. To the Deputy Premier: how much more pain and suffering will Albertans endure before you correct the mistake of centralizing health care and return administration to the local level?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you. There have been a number of very positive outcomes from what we have been working on over the last several years in health care, not the least of which is having a living laboratory to increase the results from research and as well to increase the delivery mechanisms that we have for patients in Alberta. So, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Again to the Deputy Premier: will you see that there is one manager in charge of every hospital who has authority and the mandate to make decisions about a true team delivery of health care in their own facilities?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the current structure that we have across this province already has a system in place for that.

I'm sure the hon. minister of health would like to respond with some more of the positive things that are happening in our health care system.

Mr. Hinman: To the Deputy Premier again: will you set some real performance measures for these hospital administrators, that they will be held accountable through publicly available performance reports? Answer the question.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm quite certain that the minister of health would like to answer that question about the performance reports.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've indicated in this House and I'll indicate again that we have the five-year funding commitment. The five-year action plan is coming out very soon, and the companion piece to that will be specific performance measures. Secondly, I've already sent a directive to Alberta Health Services, after speaking with them and so on, to make sure they understood what I was asking for, to get exactly what the hon. member is looking for: some public reporting on a per individual site basis of EIPs and other numbers relative to emergency care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

East Edmonton Health Centre

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The crisis in ER wait times has continued to grow even as the government failed to act on a number of promises it made to improve the situation. One such unkept promise was the establishment of an urgent care centre in east Edmonton, which would take the pressure off the Royal Alex hospital ER, one of the busiest in the province. Given that the urgent care centre would divert up to 34,000 cases from the Royal Alexandra emergency room each year, can the minister tell us why nearly two years later the urgent care centre is still not open?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated at the time that we were there cutting the ribbon – and I know there were a few members from other parties that were there as well – that this was planned as a staged, phased-in approach. The additional services that are required will be coming, but they'll be coming in that medium to longer term basis; in other words, over the next year to maybe two and a half years. In the meantime what we're dealing with are some immediate strategies. That's why we have the four-pronged approach that looks at things like the discharge protocol and increasing home care funding and so on.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it was not planned as a phased-in approach. I was involved with the people that were planning and building this because it's in my constituency. It was supposed to open nearly two years ago. The minister is wrong. He's wrong. What happened is they cut the funding. They didn't open it. In the meantime the Royal Alexandra hospital emergency room is backed up to the gunwales, and you have failed to take action. It was not planned, Mr. Minister. Why don't you tell us the real story?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the real story since Alberta Health Services took over. That's the only plan that I'm aware of, and that's the plan that we're proceeding under. There are a number of projects that had to be staged, phased in, or delayed because of the global economic downturn, the worst to hit this province, I might add, since 1930. But we've survived it thanks to the brilliance of the sustainability fund as brought in by our Premier and this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed frustrating when the minister is not aware of this. Given that it would only cost $9 million to fully staff this urgent care centre, that was designed to take the pressure off the emergency room at the Royal Alex, can the minister commit to coming up with a mere $9 million and get this thing open before the new year? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a facility there today that's valued at well over $43 million. It does provide a number of services. It's approximately 80 per cent occupied today. It's performing great work for the community because that was deemed to be the first priority: provide community-based health-type information services, family clinics, and so on. So that's what's going on there. Now, as part two we'll look at the urgent care needs, the types of things that the hon. member is asking for. That's the commitment, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Manufacturing Outsourcing for Kearn Lake Project

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has failed to protect the competitive advantage of Alberta's steel fabrication industry and the workers in it. They have allowed local jobs to be exported overseas by Imperial Oil to South Korea while we've had idle shops and workers here in this province. To the minister of finance: can Imperial Oil deduct the $250 million cost of this deal and the total cost of transporting the steel modules from South Korea through the U.S. north to Fort McMurray for . . .

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, this is the same question that the hon. member asked a week ago. The answer is the same. When that bid was let, there were not idle shops in Alberta. Everyone was fully employed here. You couldn't find anybody to even give a contract to. As I said last week, apparently he's still opposed to the free trade agreement and free trade in general. This is an exporting province. We supported the free trade agreement, and we do it because it keeps people working in a strong economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is not true.

Again to the same minister: can Imperial Oil deduct the cost of necessary upgrades to roads and bridges in Montana and in Idaho from the royalty bill here in Alberta? Yes or no?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just said, "That is not true." What's not true? That we weren't at full capacity from 2005 to 2008? That the economy of this province hasn't almost doubled since the adoption of the free trade agreement? I recommend the hon. member freshen up on economics.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of finance. At the time that deal was set, unemployment in Alberta in the steel fabrication industry was at an all-time high and our shops were idle, and you know it.

Now, my third question is: when you were running for leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in 2006, did you get any donations from Imperial Oil for your leadership campaign? Yes or no?

Dr. Morton: Those questions shouldn't even be asked, much less answered, but just for the hon. member, the answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Provincial Sales Tax

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every few months or so the issue of a provincial sales tax arises, and this is especially true as budget deliberations are taking place. I've spoken with many constituents over the last two and a half years and again this past weekend at our AGM in Calgary. I spoke with many delegates who have heard time and again that the Premier has said no to the possibility of a provincial sales tax. They do not want it, and I do not want it. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Can you clearly, once and for all tell Albertans now whether you or your ministry is considering the implementation of a provincial sales tax in Alberta?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no, the medium answer is no, and the long answer is no. The Alberta government has no intention whatsoever of introducing this. The Premier has been unequivocal on numerous occasions: there's no such intention or plan. This is just a desperate fundraising trick by the fourth party, or whatever they are, to raise some money. They have to cancel their own fundraising dinner, so they're using tricks.

The good news here, Mr. Speaker, is that the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act ensures no sales tax until a referendum. Albertans will have the final word on whether there will ever be a sales tax in this province.

Mrs. McQueen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, to the President of the Treasury Board. I understand that last year and again this year you met with stakeholders to discuss budgeting and spending plans for the future. Have you been hearing from them about the idea of a sales tax? The folks that I speak to are not in favour of a provincial sales tax in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have in the last couple of years engaged a process of bringing in a diverse groups of stakeholders from across the province to talk about our budget. We talk about more spending. We talk about less spending. We talk about more taxes, less taxes. More importantly, we listen to them, and through that process we brought forward a budget that Albertans overwhelmingly supported. Only two groups, as the finance minister has said, seem to be determined to talk about a provincial sales tax: media that are desperate for a story and a wild Alliance party that's desperate for money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 this government agreed to develop a plan for maintaining its schools, hospitals, roads, and other infrastructure. Five years later the Auditor General reported that the government had not developed any plan. In 2007 the Auditor General recommended developing objectives, timelines, and targets. Three years later the Auditor General is reporting no meaningful progress on this and no objectives, no timelines, no targets, no public reporting. To the President of the Treasury Board. One of the priorities in your mandate letter from the Premier is building tomorrow, but it seems that this government is badly stuck in yesterday. How can Albertans trust this government to build for tomorrow when it cannot get its house in order today?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, one thing that Albertans can be very proud of is one of the few provinces that actually has a long-term capital plan, a fully funded long-term capital plan with input from all over Alberta. The Auditor General has stated that there is more work to do to make sure that our members have all the information needed to make sure that we're getting the best value for our money, but our Premier has committed the ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation, and all the ministers spending capital have committed to a process that recognizes the requirement for long-term sustainability, maintenance, and dependability.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's why we've got long wait lines at the emergency hospital. I'd rather have infrastructure like airport tunnels not being built.

To the minister again: what kind of example are you setting for the rest of the government when there is no meaningful progress to maintaining the infrastructure that drives Alberta's growth?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is not just as simple as build a hospital and open immediately. It takes millions of dollars in staffing and training to do it. If the hon. member would just take two minutes off his fixation about Calgary tunnel and go drive around Calgary or drive anywhere in Alberta and see the hundreds of millions of dollars being invested in health infrastructure, he would have to change his tune.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about the tunnel vision on their side of the House, not with me. That's a very vital project for Calgary and for southern Alberta.

Now to the Minister of Infrastructure: why is this government continuing to neglect recommendations of the Auditor General with regard to its reporting obligations? Do you have some kind of hidden agenda, sir?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, this government and our ministry have a consistent message in tracking the physical condition of schools, health facilities, and postsecondary institutions. Secondly, we agree with the Auditor General's report, and we have taken over the tracking of those facilities in 2009. In a five-year period we do track and monitor the buildings on a consistent basis, and we will continue to do that. It is our job, and we will do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Wetland Policy

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. In 2008, after extensive consultation with almost a thousand stakeholders, the Alberta Water Council submitted recommendations for a wetlands policy that included a nonconsensus goal of no net loss, meaning for every wetland loss one must be replaced. What is this government doing with this wetlands policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, just this past weekend we had an opportunity to talk with a number of the significant stakeholders that will be working with us to fully flesh out this policy. We had a recommendation that came from the Alberta Water Council that provided us with a tremendous amount of detail and advice, and we have accepted all of the consensus recommendations. On one of the nonconsensus recommendations we have asked for some further review and further study.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Is this government developing a wetlands policy that considers economic impact to business over protection of wetlands?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, this is one of those subjects that tends to take on a black-and-white or an either/or focus. Frankly, that's not the case in this instance, nor is it the case in most instances. What we are looking at is a way that we can maintain that kind of balance. How can we continue to have economic growth and protect the environment at the same time? That's why we're focusing on the functionality of wetlands and trying to develop a policy that will protect wetlands based upon function.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Wetlands losses continue. We need consistent provincial direction for effective wetlands management. When will this government take meaningful action to protect Alberta's wetlands?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear to all members of the House that we do now have a wetlands policy. What we're doing is improving and increasing the value of that wetlands policy, so I can assure this member that there is ongoing protection of wetlands. There will be ongoing protection of wetlands. What we're doing is developing a policy that will do it even better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

School Board Governance

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education has created governance confusion regarding appointing school trustees. Over the past decade this government has undermined local school authority by firing the Calgary public board, formerly chaired by the sitting MLA for Calgary-Mackay, which included Danielle Smith, who is hoping for better electoral luck second time out. Most recently the entire board of the Northland school division was fired by this minister. To the minister: what's to stop you or a faction of a closely divided board from tipping the scales in their favour by stacking the board with short-leashed, subservient lapdogs?

Mr. Hancock: The public of Alberta, who looks for openness and accountability and transparency and process and understands the political process and the governance process, obviously, far better than this hon. member.

What we're talking about, really, is transforming education. When we're talking about transforming education, we're talking about what good governance looks like, not good government, not just the election of a board, which is one level of government in education, or the provincial government, which is another level of government in education, but a community governance model which will bring all voices to the table in understanding how we create the best opportunity for our students.

Mr. Chase: More and more we're seeing appointments, Mr. Speaker, as opposed to elections. Electoral process in this province is undermined. Who will decide which groups are sufficiently underrepresented to require an appointed trustee: school boards or the minister?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody has yet decided that there will be any appointed trustees. What we're talking about is: what's the right kind of governance model which involves all those people whose voices should be heard to ensure that our children get the education they need? I would point the hon. member to the fact that right now you can appoint members to a board in certain circumstances. For example, where First Nations students are educated by a provincial board, there's an opportunity for that board to have a First Nation representative on the board if they wish to do so, and there's at least one board in this province that has taken that opportunity to do so.

Mr. Chase: And there's the Northland school division, where 24 First Nations or Métis representatives were fired by this minister.

To the minister: would the government support further undermining the democratic process by appointing people to municipal councils to speak for supposedly underrepresented interests? How is education any different?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely surprised because just before this question from this hon. member questions came from the other hon. members about what the Auditor General said about capital. What the Auditor General said about capital in Education is that he's surprised that a school was built that the school board didn't own. I don't know what the hon. member would have expected me to do to a school board who built schools on property they didn't own and didn't open them for a year. I don't know what kind of accountability that hon. member wants, but if we need to have appropriate representation on boards, we'll have a discussion with the stakeholders, with the public, and with this House before anybody is appointed to a public board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Harmonized Sales Tax Payments by Albertans

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July of this year the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario replaced their provincial sales tax with the harmonized sales tax, or HST. Constituents are suggesting to me that some services purchased in Alberta are actually subject to this tax even though it's not an Alberta tax. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Is this true, and to what extent are Albertans being affected by the HST in Ontario and B.C.?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, it is true, and we're taking steps to remove it. Overall, most Albertans will be largely unaffected by this change in the HST in Ontario and British Columbia, but there are two areas where the HST is potentially being levied on Albertans. The first is when Albertans mail a parcel over $5 to a province in which HST is being collected, such as Ontario or B.C., and the second, even more serious in my view, is that when an Albertan is purchasing a mutual fund or other financial service through a financial institution, the cost of HST to that financial institution may be passed along to the purchaser, including a resident of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Isn't it true that there are federal rules surrounding mutual funds that protect Albertans from having to pay HST?

2:20

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the federal rules allow mutual fund companies the flexibility to avoid passing on HST to residents of non-HST provinces like Alberta, but they do not require it. The fact is most of the brokers, most of the institutions are not doing that. It's important to consider this also in the larger context of retirement savings. Here we are working with the federal government to try to encourage Albertans and other Canadians to save money for retirement, and all of a sudden now they're going to start taxing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister: given that there are situations where Albertans are clearly and unfairly impacted by HST levied in other provinces, what is the minister going to do about it?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I've sent not one, not two, but three letters to the Minister of Finance protesting against this effect on Alberta. I've indicated that it's completely unfair, that it's an accountability issue. You can't have taxation without representation. Many elections are fought on taxation. Is it too high, or is it too low? The principle of our government is that the government, the tax collectors, have to be accountable to the people, the taxpayers. Here we have a situation where one government is collecting taxes from people in another province who can do nothing about it. It's unfair, and I'll continue to work to make sure it doesn't go any further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

No-net-loss Wetland Policy

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The range and frequency of this government's capitulation to big industry's every whim at the expense of long-term community sustainability is awe inspiring. After two years an expert panel came up with the plan aimed at protecting provincial wetlands, but at the eleventh hour reps from mining, oil, and gas balked and resorted to the tried-and-true method of going behind closed doors to their friends in the PC government. To the Minister of Environment: why have you sold out the majority of Albertans by abandoning the wetlands no-net-loss policy that the vast majority of your own panel recommended?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that this is always a difficult situation, to develop a policy that will serve all parts of the province. I think the difficulty that we faced was that we were asked to implement a policy that was, in effect, one size fits all, and one size doesn't fit all. So in that same report they indicated that in the long term they would like to see a function-based management system put into place, and we have agreed. We're now suggesting that we should be working with the stakeholders to determine how we would implement a function-based rather than a simplistic one for all.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that 23 of 25 expert representatives from industry, community, and environmental protection groups endorsed the plan and given that they reached this conclusion after studying the issue for over three years and consulting with over a thousand stakeholders, why won't the minister admit that he has backed down once again to his friends in big oil and mining and that his plan will compromise Alberta's water protection regime for generations to come?

Mr. Renner: Because it's not true, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that we had a report that came from an organization that is asked to try and reach a consensus. A consensus means that all of the affected parties are able to live with it. Some recognized that in some instances it's not everything that they wanted, but in other instances it is. In this particular case there was a nonconsensus. Not all of the parties could live with the results. It's up to us now to try and figure out a system that will allow all of the parties to be involved.

Ms Notley: Given that industry announced that it had successfully lobbied government to allow for continued industrial destruction of Alberta's wetlands last March, seven months before the minister had the courage to go public with this shameful decision, will the minister now admit that regardless of the majority acceptance of scientific evidence citing the need to maintain wetlands for Alberta's water sustainability, when mining and oil say, "Jump," the minister's only response will always be, "How high?"

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there was a total unanimous agreement within the room that I spoke to on Friday – it included industry; it included environmental organizations; it included municipalities – that we need to do something. In the absence of a policy that would be a no-net policy, working towards something that is better than what we have right now is a laudable goal and is something that we can achieve. I think we need to move in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Fort Chipewyan Health Research Agreement

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier was handed an air ticket to personally visit, I think for the first time, Fort Chip. In response the Premier said that he hasn't visited Fort Chip because he's waiting for a local chief to sign an agreement on health research. This is the first time I've heard of the Premier waiting for a local signature before he visits a community in Alberta. What involvement has the Minister of Aboriginal Relations had in developing this agreement, and would he table it in this Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. It's not too often that I get questions from the opposition on aboriginal issues, so thank you for that. I've been up to Fort Chip on a couple of occasions, and I've met with Grand Chief Allan Adam regarding the LOI, the letter of intent, with respect to the health study. It's an ongoing process. There's a lot of debate, a lot of discussions over it, and we are working toward some type of an agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. Some type of an agreement. All right.

Let's try the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that health concerns are the number one issue for the residents of Fort Chip, what role has the Minister of Health and Wellness played in drafting this agreement that we just heard about, and will he table it in the Assembly?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to make that available once it's fully signed, but clearly we're not releasing something – and I'm sure they aren't either – until it has that final signature in place. In response to the first question, because I have the lead role on this file and have had for the past couple of years, I've been up there myself I think six times now. I've met with that leadership on a number of occasions, and a lot of progress has been made. But in fairness they wanted a little bit more time so that the chief could maybe sign off if that's his wish. He wanted to check with some elders. The Minister of Aboriginal Relations was integral to that meeting as well, as were the Minister of Environment and others. So good progress is in the works.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations since he wants some more questions. Reflecting on what we've just heard, it would seem to be that it's this government's position that the ball is in the court of the First Nations to sign this agreement and that they're actually delaying and dawdling and being unco-operative. Are they?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, these are complex issues, and it takes time for us to develop some type of a baseline study. We continue to work with the grand chief and with all the chiefs up in that area. Hopefully, in a short time we'll have something resolved there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Disaster Recovery Program for Flood Damage

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer the province experienced a number of severe weather events that hit residents hard, resulting in seven active disaster recovery programs across Alberta. I'm particularly interested in the largest disaster, across southern Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I can say that emergency management responded immediately, but still my constituents are asking: why does it seem that the government just doesn't seem to understand or care about how they're being impacted by the floods during the emergency?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, southern Alberta was clearly the hardest hit, and we're very, very fortunate and relieved that no lives were lost. The government quickly activated its operations centre to co-ordinate the emergency response during the critical first hours and days after the event. There were a number of ministers that toured the area to see the damage first-hand so that we could get a sense of what needed to be done. Of course, we immediately began work on our disaster recovery program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as it's been over four months since the event and $203 million was announced for southern Alberta, why hasn't all that assistance reached the people hardest hit by the flood?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, residents and farmers and our small businesses are our priority, especially in the hardest hit areas, areas like the community of Irvine. They do come first. To date 85 per cent of the residential applicants have received payments. As with most disasters we'll follow up with the municipal costs that are involved. Recognizing the severity of the situation, again in certain parts, under my direction we opened up an office in Irvine to deal directly with those affected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard from constituents that the disaster recovery program needs to be more responsive to the needs of flood victims and given that the standards and guidelines for recovery were never set up to address this never-before type of flood, will the program be reviewed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we always review our programs and have already made some very positive changes when it comes to the flood and flood damage. We didn't wait for the program to end. As an example, we removed the $300,000 cap for assistance. We've eliminated the 20 per cent income requirement for farming operations. These changes are retroactive to July 1 and apply to all of our current applicants right across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Medical Procedure Wait Times

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wait Time Alliance was created by Canada's leading medical association to address concerns the medical community had about growing wait times. In its most recent report card two provinces received a failing grade, Alberta being one of them. Why? Because this government failed to provide any data to the group. Not only is that an insult to the medical community, but frankly it's an insult to all Albertans. My questions are to the minister of health. Why didn't you provide the data to the Wait Time Alliance when you continually talk about being open and accountable to Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take a look into the details. I'm not sure what period in time is being requested or referred to here, but I will tell the hon. member that I'll have a look into that matter as soon as I leave the House.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I just don't know what to say.

Again to the same minister: when will you table a comprehensive list of wait times in Alberta so Albertans will have the real picture on how their health care system is performing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. That's a good question. Mr. Speaker, as people here would know, we did have a wait-list registry that was up on the website, where people could go and look, for example, to see how quickly they could get in for a hip operation. Unfortunately, there were some computer difficulties, I'm told, that developed about a year ago, so the site had to be taken down, but one of the priorities for Alberta Health Services is to get it back up and functioning.

Secondly, I've also asked for public reporting on, specifically, emergency room wait times from Alberta Health Services on a per-site basis, and that is in motion as we speak.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, again, we knew about the wait times. We knew about the computer glitch. That should be an emergency because it's urgent for Albertans to find out.

To the same minister: will you commit right here and right now to participating in the 2011 Wait Time Alliance report card?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have a chance to read it through and discuss it with the people who are delivering the service, I'll be happy to undertake the proper response to that question. But I want to make it clear that we have just gone through the single largest amalgamation in Canadian history, of 90,000 employees, and there were some bumps and bruises along the way. Those are being sorted out, including the wait-list registry.

Market Access to China

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, in June the federal government announced that Canada had secured an agreement with China on staged market access for beef and tallow. I know Alberta's industry is trying to reduce its dependence on its beef trade with the U.S., and China is considered a priority market in our efforts to diversify. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Could the minister tell us what our provincial government is doing to advance our trade with China?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are right now working with our federal government in negotiating trade protocols with China. We have been working through a trade mission with the New West Partnership with British Columbia and Saskatchewan to advance the interests of our agriculture industry in Asia. A number of meetings with Chinese government officials, meat-purchasing agencies, and retailers have shown that there is an amazing market available for us, and we're there developing it.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the agriculture minister mentioned his New West Partnership Asia mission. Was it just about beef, or did the minister highlight any other products while he was there?

Mr. Hayden: No, Mr. Speaker. There were a number of products that were highlighted, and it was very interesting to see the Asian market's taste for our honey out of northern Alberta, as an example, the huge business that we do with them on canola and a number of other products. Of course, along with our partners there was salmon from British Columbia, the fruit industry. There are all kinds of opportunities.

Mr. Drysdale: Again to the same minister: in addition to advancing the trade of our commodities, are there any other benefits to these international relationships between our industry and the industries in China and Japan?

Mr. Hayden: Absolutely. There are other opportunities, Mr. Speaker. We have industry people from China and Japan that are actually in our research centres in Leduc right now testing Alberta products and building them to the taste preferences of their market. It creates all kinds of opportunities when you meet in communities with people whose cities are as large as our entire population in Canada. The opportunities there are wonderful, and the people really want to do business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

No-net-loss Wetland Policy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've had the interim policy on wetlands in place for approaching three decades, we've had the minister's own Water Council give recommendations two years ago, and here we're hearing the minister today explaining the current stall to a lack of consensus on wetland issues. Well, the opposite of consensus is hostage taking. To the Minister of Environment: why is the minister abdicating his leadership and allowing CAPP and the Alberta Chamber of Resources to be the hostage takers and derail this process?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's be very, very clear. There is a significant amount of consensus already in place. There were a number of recommendations where we are in fact proceeding along the very lines that were outlined. The report that came from the Water Council suggested that there needed to be more emphasis on the functionality of wetlands, and they were almost talking about interim. They said: in the interim no net loss.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Exactly my point: hostage taking.

Given that cumulative effects do not mean protecting one aspect of an ecosystem while neglecting another, why is this administration moving forward with the land-use plan with accelerated development before implementing a wetlands policy?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's just face some realities here. When we're talking about a no-net-loss policy in a region that already is more than 50 per cent wetlands, there could be some instances where someone would be expecting to replace a wetland by eliminating a much more valuable upland. That's why you have to have a policy that talks about functionality, that talks about protecting wetlands of the highest value. Not all wetlands are the same, and that's why we need a policy that recognizes that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. To the same minister. Here's a reality check for you. We've lost 60 per cent of the wetlands in this province while this minister has been dragging his heels on this policy. Why does the Environment minister always default to the Department of Energy when it comes to environmental protection? Why?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the Environment department defaults to the Environment department. I can guarantee the member that that simply is not the case.

As to her assertion that there has been a 60 per cent decrease in wetlands since I have been the minister, it's absolutely ludicrous. Why would she make a ridiculous statement like that?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Canadian Dollar Value

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian currency exchange rate was forecasted back in the first quarter, but ever since the loonie has continued to climb in value, hovering around parity for the past few weeks. Many people consider this a good-news story, but in certain respects this is terrible news. My first question is for the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. How drastically has this affected the Alberta budget? Is it to the point where the minister needs to go back to the drawing board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. The loonie has appreciated vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar, and it does have a significant impact on government of Alberta revenues. A 1-cent change in the exchange rate translates into a $215 million drop in government revenues – 1 cent equals a $215 million drop in revenue – and with the loonie getting towards parity recently, obviously it's a concern. It's on our radar. That's why at first quarter we readjusted our projection from 95 cents to 96.75 cents and projected that that will cost us approximately $375 million in lost revenue.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Some of those numbers are alarming, and it's indeed possible this isn't just a volatile, short-term issue. It may become a long-term trend. What is the minister doing to counteract this?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, on the recent trip I made to New York and Toronto, meeting a lot with many of the banks and banking agencies, we discussed this at length. The general consensus is that the Canadian dollar is going to range between 95 cents and $1.05 over the next number of years. That's the new range. Again, when we do our second-quarter update at the end of this month, we'll be looking at that and making the appropriate adjustments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Albertans deserve some details. What specific actions is the minister taking to offset pressures of the high dollar value on our government's fiscal plan?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I tabled the budget back in February, we're an export-based economy, and what happens in the rest of the world affects what happens here in Alberta. I also pointed out at that time that while we cannot control revenues, we can control expenditures. That's what we're working on right now as we prepare the budget for Budget 2011.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Eighteen members were recognized. There were 106 questions and responses.

We will return to the main Routine with additional members' statements momentarily, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Jason Bedard and his beautiful wife, Leslie Bedard. Leslie ran for alderman in ward 4 in the last civic election in Calgary. The Bedards are very close friends of the family – that is, my family – and they've been a great help to me during my campaigns and elections. I'd like Jason and Leslie to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds we'll revert to Members' Statements.

Grimma-Alberta Flood Damage Fundraising Exchange

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2003 due to a heavy rainfall crisis in the republic of Czechoslovakia and in Poland decisions were made to open floodgates on many dams in order to save their structures and prevent local flooding. As a result water gathered and flowed down the Elbe River and in a short time totally flooded the city of Grimma and the surrounding province of Saxony in Germany. The province of Saxony is twinned with the province of Alberta, and the Elbe River flows right through this 1,000-year-old city.

Mr. Speaker, the German consul, the hon. Bernd Reuscher, along with officials from Leduc were in the Saxony area very shortly after the flood in 2003 and saw the devastation for themselves. Upon returning to Edmonton, Consul Reuscher organized a benefit concert, and over $30,000 was raised. This was then matched by the Alberta government through the Wild Rose Foundation. Alberta was the only province and Albertans were the only people from around the world to come to the aid of the city of Grimma.

As fate would have it, Mr. Speaker, the very same mayor and council of Grimma were in Leduc very shortly after the flood this year in June in Medicine Hat and in Irvine in southeast Alberta. Upon hearing about the flood and seeing the devastation on TV, they immediately set in motion the required process to provide a donation by way of a cheque for €15,000, approximately $21,000, for the victims of the flood here. On October 15 this cheque was presented by Consul Reuscher to the Medicine Hat community foundation to address such things as mid- and long-term financial burdens of victims of the flood.

On behalf of the citizens and, in particular, the flood victims I wish to express our sincere and heartfelt thanks to the city of Grimma in the province of Saxony, Germany, for their very kind generosity. Thank you as well to German Consul Bernd Reuscher for his initiative and work on this. It is so much appreciated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Building Trades of Alberta Courage Centre

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the opening of the Glenrose hospital Courage Centre. The centre is an initiative of the Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital Foundation and the Building Trades Council of Alberta. The Courage Centre has been established to create an environment where new beginnings are born and nurtured using the latest and, I must say, somewhat amazing advances in rehabilitation technology.

Mr. Speaker, since its opening in 1964 the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital has made significant strides towards enhancing rehabilitative care in our province. The province has established itself on an international level as a place for excellence in neurological, orthopaedic, cardiac, geriatric, and pediatric rehabilitation care. Serving over 20,000 families a year, the Glenrose is one of the largest free-standing tertiary rehabilitation centres in North America. The Glenrose hospital is unique to Alberta. Staff at the Glenrose are committed to the provision of complex and specialized rehabilitation care for all ages. They know that rehabilitation helps to restore a person to the way they were prior to their illness or injury.

The foundation has raised close to $10 million towards projects like the Alberta Courage Centre. For two years the foundation focused its efforts on funding this new state-of-the-art facility in the hospital, and on November 4 the Building Trades of Alberta Courage Centre will open its doors. Mr. Speaker, for most people technology makes things easier, but for someone with a disability technology makes things possible.

Thank you to the Glenrose foundation and all the generous donors for making the Alberta Courage Centre a reality. You give people with disabilities a chance, but most of all you give them hope. Your dedication to helping those who deal with the daily challenges of disabilities is truly inspirational.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Lethbridge College and U of Lethbridge Achievements

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As parliamentary assistant to the minister of advanced education and innovation I've had many opportunities over the past several months to tour and meet with people from many of Alberta's excellent postsecondary institutions. Today, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk about a couple of recent milestones from my own neck of the woods, Lethbridge.

First, I'd like to recognize Lethbridge College for receiving a business of the year award from the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce in the innovation category. The college received the award in recognition of its commitment to excellence and innovation. Its recent collaborations with industry have challenged the college to find solutions to real-life problems. The award cited the college's partnership in the living home project, a partnership with Cedar homes in Lethbridge, and its patent application for Simleggings, a medical training innovation. Applied research is an integral part of college programming and often comes with groundbreaking results. This award recognized the advanced efforts of students, faculty, and staff towards building a knowledge-based economy. I'm sure Lethbridge College President Tracy Edwards is very proud of this award.

It's also my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to speak about another event. I was able to join our Premier and a number of our southern MLAs at the grand opening of Markin Hall at the University of Lethbridge on October 21. Markin Hall is a $65 million project that boasts western Canada's first commodity trading laboratory, a nursing skills lab with simulated patients, and an addictions counselling lab with the latest digital recording technology for individual, family, and group sessions. This government invested $50 million of the cost with another $3 million coming from Dr. Allan Markin, the chairman of Canadian Natural Resources and part owner of the Calgary Flames. Markin Hall provides better teaching space for about 550 health sciences students, giving them the opportunity to learn by doing in the simulated health field. Markin is also home to western Canada's first commodity trading lab and provides students with hands-on experience in derivatives trading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

2:50

Bill 20

Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce for first reading Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010.

This legislation will amend the existing Class Proceedings Act. This act facilitates the efficient handling of cases of mass wrong, commonly referred to as class-action lawsuits. It also provides improved access to justice for those whose claims may not otherwise be brought forward and can encourage actual or potential wrongdoers to change their behaviour. These amendments will improve and update current legislation and are consistent with the recommendations made by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada and the courts.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 20 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Bill 21
Wills and Succession Act

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to request leave to introduce for first reading Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act.

This act will amalgamate five pieces of legislation into a single statute that covers wills, intestacy, beneficiary designations, survivorship, and family support, making it easier for Albertans to use and understand. This legislation will also modernize and update the law to reflect the current financial and social realities of Albertans, and it will provide Albertans with clear, easy-to-find, and easy-to-understand rules for estate planning.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 22
Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 will incorporate amendments to three different enactments in the family law area: firstly, the Family Law Act; secondly, the Maintenance Enforcement Act; and thirdly, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Through Bill 22 we will update legislation to ensure that children born using assisted human reproduction have certainty about their legal parents, establish parents as guardians of their children, and abolish the status of illegitimacy, which is no longer relevant in Alberta law.

Bill 22 will also enhance administrative fairness and increase efficiencies and regularity of payment for Alberta's maintenance enforcement program. It will also address contact information requirements for clients and how insufficient funds payments and overpayments are treated at law. Also included in this bill are amendments that will benefit families by making child and spousal support orders between Albertans and parties in other jurisdictions easier to establish, to vary, and to enforce.

Mr. Speaker, these changes increase service, improve efficiencies, provide clarity, and streamline process. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 24
Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes
Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to request leave to introduce Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage

Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, carbon capture and storage, or CCS, technology is fundamental to Alberta's clean-energy pursuits in the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. Passage of this act will clarify poor space ownership, ensure that the province accepts long-term liability for injected carbon dioxide, and creates a stewardship fund, financed by CCS operators, which will be used for remedial and ongoing monitoring costs.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 25
Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I also request leave today to introduce Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, the current act needs to be updated to align with current industry practices, and these proposed amendments will ensure that business practices comply with freehold mineral tax legislation, recognize the electronic transmission of documents, update auditing provisions to be consistent with the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Act, and update appeal provisions to be consistent with other tax legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Bill 208
Recall Act

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 208 for first reading.

I'm very pleased. Bill 208 is a recall act, a true accountability act. Recall is based on a very simple principle. Elected officials are not only accountable to voters on election day but every day. Being elected does not generate an entitlement. It is a privilege that must be revokable if the voters are to be truly empowered. Four or five years is a long time for citizens to have to wait if their MLA suddenly promotes their own hidden agenda or acts in some way that dissolves the trust and respect of the voters. This is even more the case when a politician is not planning to run for office again. When this is the case, the threat of election day becomes meaningless, and an MLA can accordingly misrepresent constituents to an unacceptable degree without fear of any consequences.

Some no doubt have fear of an act like this bringing instability to government. To this I counter that it does not do so in many jurisdictions in North America in which proper recall provisions are in place. The threshold in this act is high enough that there will not be any frivolous attempts that will succeed in triggering an election. In this act 33 per cent of the eligible voters must sign a petition that clearly explains why recalling the member is warranted. Canvassers are required to be residents of Alberta for six months and cannot be paid for their efforts. This helps to ensure that the recall effort will be a grassroots movement and not something paid for by a wealthy minority or interest groups outside of Alberta. The signatures must be collected within 60 days. This is about as short a window as one would expect a campaign like this to work but ensures that the political uncertainty is minimized.

In conclusion, this bill is about ensuring that the people of Alberta are the ones holding the power and that when elected representatives no longer represent the people, they have a process that allows them to remove politicians with hidden agendas who are not putting the interests of the people first. Recall is the only 24/7 way to hold elected people accountable and in check. If we want people to be engaged in politics, then they must be empowered.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition and a letter received in my office over the summer months. This petition states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to inform the Health Minister along with the provincial health . . . board to give Dr. Wardell's pain clinic in Medicine Hat . . . the adequate funds to keep it from closing as of July 1st 2010. Also those funds need to be budgeted for in up coming budgets so he along with his patients do not experience this hardship again [past 2012].

The letter also reflects this opinion and thanks the minister for addressing this with the two-year interim funding.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've now arrived at the point of 3 o'clock. It's been the practice that if we are in a part of the Routine that we've already started, we'll go to the end of it before I come back to the standing order provision.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. All of them, I think, are important and interesting. The first is copies of a ruling written by Judge Wheatley in the case of Frick versus Her Majesty the Queen. I particularly draw members' attention to paragraphs 19, 20, and 21, where, for example, it says: "For an accused without the means to pay for a lawyer, the current situation in Alberta is troublesome." It goes on to elaborate on this. I am doing this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

My second tabling is perhaps for the enlightenment of the Minister of Health and Wellness or for all members and to make sure that it's in the record. The minister announced a couple of weeks ago that he was establishing benchmarks and so on. What I'm tabling today are simply copies of the same benchmarks that have been published by Alberta Health Services going back two years. So his announcement was really something that's been in place for a long time and shows no improvement in that time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a tabling that may reinforce my reputation as an egghead; I'm not sure. Last week I referred to King Canute, and very few members of the Assembly knew who King Canute was, actually, to my dismay. Some members of this Assembly whose heritage might even stem from King Canute didn't know who he was, so I am tabling a brief history of who King Canute was. He was a very important man.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today documents that, in fact, I was prepared to table last Thursday.

This is a copy of the letter that was signed by over 300 individuals in person and an additional 300 people online. It is the letter from the Stand with Fort Chip group directed to the government of Alberta and specifically to the hon. Premier. It lists their concerns and, of course, accompanied the round-trip plane ticket that the students and the Stand with Fort Chip group delivered to the Premier. Later he agreed he would indeed be visiting this area. This is a copy of the letter and the signatures supporting it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a letter from constituent Susan Wright, who has written a letter to the health minister detailing the ordeal that her daughter spent twice in the health care system when she had a gall bladder attack and subsequent complications because of the first ordeal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report by the Canadian Labour Congress titled How It Works (for Everyone). This report refers to the advantages of a modest increase in CPP contributions that would result in extra benefits for workers when they retire.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter received from over 50 parents of special-needs students from across Alberta. The letter outlines their disagreement with the government's plan for students with special needs and the lack of adequate funding they receive. They do not support the initiative of forcing special-needs students to attend the same classrooms as regular students unless it is clearly beneficial to all students involved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my pleasure today to introduce you to the new pages that we have by way of a brochure that we've just recently produced called Page Biographies: Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 27th Legislature, Third Session, Fall 2010. Take a couple of minutes just to go through this to see these remarkable young people.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Sour Gas Well Blowout

Q40. Mr. Taylor asked that the following question be accepted. How much gas has been released as a result of the sour gas blowout near Hythe that occurred on February 24, 2010?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By way of background on the 24th of February of this year a sour gas well belonging to Canadian Natural Resources blew out very near the community of Hythe, about 19 kilometres northwest of Hythe, and it continued to burn for,

I think, some 13 days before the ERCB approved a plan to regain control of the well. The plan, as I understand it, was successful.

This is not a question, Mr. Speaker, that seeks to determine the degree or the level to which the health of nearby residents may have been affected by release of sour gas because it was pretty clear at the time that there was a fairly insignificant amount of sour gas that may actually have been released into the atmosphere. It's more about how much gas went up in smoke, if you will, during those 13 days. The follow-up question is going to relate, as I will discuss at the appropriate time, to what they may have cost the province of Alberta in forgone royalties.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The kind of information that this hon. member is attempting to seek is impossible to provide, and it's for that reason that I would ask the Legislative Assembly to reject the question. As a bit of background this was a flaming gas well that blew while in the drilling stage. Measuring the flow from an uncontrolled gas well at that stage is impossible. The measurement comes after the drilling has been finished and has gone into the test stage. As a result, there is really nothing that I can table to assist the hon. member. What I can say is that the ERCB investigation into this blowout is continuing. I would hope that within the next couple of months we would have that report. That report will become public, and if there is anything that the ERCB during its investigation could add relative to the amount of gas that may have been lost as a result of this blowout, we're more than happy to provide it. But I would have to ask that the Assembly reject the question primarily because the information is not available.

The Speaker: Others to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that perhaps sometimes when we ask a question it opens up another door, and we see the reverse side of the question. Perhaps the other side and why this is a valid question to answer is because of the numerous applications that are sitting in front of the ERCB, where those wells are not allowed to be drilled because we're not processing it in a timely manner. I think to see what happens in the 13 days when a well has run wild and got out of control – what would it be like to see the other side, where a company has waited six months or a year or been denied access just because they don't have their act together or there isn't clarity in it. I mean, I've spoken to companies that have made application up in the Lloydminster area. It has taken a short six weeks in Saskatchewan, and we're waiting up to two years here in Alberta.

I think it's significant to see how much royalty we are actually losing not because of the little bit that is being lost to a blowout like that but because we're not drilling. I think it would also be interesting to show the world the amount of flaring that takes place in other jurisdictions and to show how environmentally responsible we are here in Alberta with restricting the flaring and that it is taking place right now. The amount of flaring that is going on in other nations is incredible. If we want to talk about the CO₂ production and that aspect of it, we should be able to compare Alberta to those other jurisdictions to show what a great job the drillers and the people of Alberta are doing in developing our resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What this question brings to mind is a concern over sour gas release and the types of remediation we have in this province to limit the dangerous effects. In 2005 in a measurable circumstance the Shell plant near Pincher Creek released sour gas when their ignition system twice failed. Now, that's probably an example of a measurable amount of gas because it was from a refined circumstance.

The problem that occurred when Compton proposed having sour gas wells right on the outskirts of Calgary, very close to the soon-to-be-completed, long-awaited east hospital, indicates how we need to be able to hold companies to account and ensure that, whether it's in the drilling stage or somewhere along in the refining stage, sour gas isn't either flared or released. So this question by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie creates a series of questions about the release of sour gas, the effects on both individuals and the flora and the fauna in the surrounding areas. I understand the minister's inability based on the fact that the gas escaped before it was measured, but my concern is that the gas escaped, and what we are doing to ensure that it doesn't continue to go into the air for 13 days after the initial loss.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That sounded, actually, like a plausible explanation from the Minister of Energy, and I'm inclined to accept the explanation. I look forward very much to the ERCB investigation report due in a couple of months, and hopefully we'll have a further conversation with the minister about that at that time.

Thank you.

Sour Gas Well Blowout

Q41. Mr. Taylor asked that the following question be accepted.
What is the total amount of royalty revenue that the province expects to lose because of the sour gas blowout near Hythe that occurred on February 24, 2010?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The same explanation, the same background goes for this question as for the previous question, so without further ado I'll allow the response from the minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, unfortunately, that type of information is not available because, in essence, it wasn't a producing well, and you only pay royalties on a producing well. So the question as it's phrased would be a guesstimate on the part of anybody because the real question would've been phrased: how much did the province lose in royalties during the time when the blowout took place? The answer there would be none because we only collect royalties on a producing well.

Again, as I said in respect to the first question, the ERCB is reviewing this particular blowout. The report should be available within the next couple of months. I'd be more than happy to share with this hon. member any information or hear his suggestions relative to how that process could be improved going forward, but for this particular written question I'm afraid I have to suggest that the Assembly reject this question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again, I understand and appreciate that if something isn't measurable, then how can you, therefore, determine the value of something that wasn't measured in the first place? However, the question does prompt concerns about royalties, and our predecessor to Merwan Saher, Auditor General Fred Dunn, brought up the concerns about how it is that we measure and collect royalties. He pointed out that the government had the potential of losing over a billion dollars in gas royalties because of its measurement system.

One individual at that time when he did his study was the gatekeeper for all the incoming measurements of gas upon which royalties would be determined, and this person was swamped. He was basically receiving input from the various companies involved. As opposed to having an independent accounting, he was totally reliant on the information that he was receiving. What he was basing his royalty measurements on were the highest outflows as opposed to any kind of consistent monitoring of individual production measures. My concern, even with the improved royalty measurements that we have out there, is that to a large extent we're reliant on companies and their reports as opposed to accounting separately and measuring the flows and, therefore, an accurate accounting of the royalties that we're due.

Thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for raising this question. I don't believe the royalty collection has been completed to the new Auditor General's satisfaction, but that will remain to be seen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to comment a little bit. Again, the question is worded such as to say, "Well, how much royalty revenue does the province expect?" or, to me, "Can it calculate how much it actually did lose?" I would venture to say to the minister that, actually, we can fairly accurately measure that because we know the size of the pipe and the pressure at which it blew out. The volume is just a correlation between volume and the pressure. I think that, again, the important thing to realize with this is that we have a smear campaign pointed at the province. I think questions like this need to be answered, but we need to go the next step further.

As I mentioned a little bit earlier on Question 40, on this one here, Question 41, we had some CO₂ production because of it being flared and it being allowed to continue on for 18 days. I think this is an opportunity where we can showcase to the world and show the amount of CO₂ that's being produced per volume of gas in the province. Once again, if this is what the real concern is for many of these environmentalists, then actually look at other jurisdictions, where they don't care about their natural gas, where they flare it all the time and produce the oil. Yet if we were to actually use natural gas to extract our bitumen and upgrade it, we'd be ridiculed.

I think this is a great opportunity for the province and the Energy minister to do some calculations and answer these questions and to go a step further and show the amount of CO₂ production per barrel of oil produced in many of the other countries of the world that just constantly flare and burn their natural gas because they don't want to make the effort of liquifying it or pumping it or whatever else. They just want the oil, and they burn the gas, producing a massive amount of CO₂ per barrel produced.

I think this is an opportunity for the government to look at and report on this and, more importantly, report on other jurisdictions, on how they handle these things, to once again show the expertise of those companies that operate here in Alberta and also to point out that it seems like people don't realize that those companies, that have invested millions of dollars in drilling, absolutely have their best interests at hand in making sure these blowouts don't occur. They probably do the best job of scrutinizing why this has happened to ensure that it doesn't happen again in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Question.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate October 25]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, if you want to proceed, go ahead and then the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Chase: I didn't want to interrupt the person who had adjourned debate or take away their opportunity to continue, but thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak.

A lesson I learned very early on came out of Sunday school. I had an Anglican grandmother living in Meota, Saskatchewan, and a grandmother who followed the Christian Science faith in Saskatoon who taught me a variety of Sunday school lessons, but my favourite lessons always came through stories.

3:20

One of my favourite stories, that relates directly to Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, is the story of Joseph. One of the reasons the story appealed to me to such an extent was that Joseph had a coat of many colors, and that actually attracted the attention of a rather bad element. They not only stole Joseph's coat of many colors, but they dumped him into a pit, and they left him. Fortunately, as the story goes, God provided for Joseph, and Joseph went on to be the financial adviser for another very famous Biblical story individual, and that was David of the slingshot, who later became a very wise King David. Joseph's advice to King David was to set aside in times of good to cover times of famine, so he recommended that in the royal storehouses there be the equivalent of seven years of grain stored. And it came to pass, as the Bible would say, that the king on behalf of his loyal citizens set aside and was able to manage seven very devastating years.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

To bring this Biblical analogy to Alberta reality, the sustainability fund, that the Alberta Liberals put forward as the stability fund, is that tide-over situation. It's very important that while the government operates within its means, it has the ability to tide us over in situations like we're now experiencing with this recession.

I agree with the hon. mover of Bill 204 that the government has a spending problem, but I also am aware of the different attitudes that a Liberal policy would bring to the table versus that being put forward by members of the Wildrose Alliance. The difference between the Liberals and the Wildrose Alliance is that the Liberals see government as having a role in intervening on behalf of the citizens. That's why, for example, governments collect taxes. If this government relies completely, as it unfortunately does, on oil and gas revenue, which makes us slaves to the global economy, seconded only by the revenue from gambling – from slots and lotteries, et cetera – then Alberta is going to continue to be held hostage.

Simply saying that the government must always only spend according to inflation and population means that there are going to be, as I started out in my Biblical reference, years of the equivalent of drought and years of plenty. If the government is not allowed to dip into that buildup, which is being called the sustainability fund, and invest that money – for example, in Children and Youth Services, in Health, in Education – then we're going to see what happened to us in 1993 through 1998 with the Ralph Klein government, where education suffered tremendously. And it hasn't recovered, Mr. Speaker.

In Calgary alone, for example, the infrastructure deficit, because building has not caught up over a period of almost the last 20 years, has risen to a billion dollars. The government has never gotten to the point where the class size initiatives of the Learning Commission of 2003 can actually be put into place because there is not sufficient space. So we see schools cutting up their libraries and turning them into classrooms, using workrooms, using staff rooms, taking the stage away from being a performance area to being an extended classroom.

If Bill 204 tied the government's hands to inflation and population, then these years of recession would be extended, and as I say, the last thing I want to see is a repeat of the Klein administration. In Ralph Klein's time it was convenient to say that we'd never run a deficit. But shortly after, when the Stelmach government came into power, they considered running a deficit a requirement. I understand the need to cover the expenses.

In the case of health care we saw the beginnings of our emergent circumstance that we're facing right now. We had over twice as many operable, staffed beds in '93, with a considerably lower population than we have now. We had three more hospitals operating in Calgary at that time. Unfortunately, Premier Klein decided to blow up the General. He sold off the Holy Cross to friends, basically, for a song, approximately $5 million after $32 million of renovations had taken place. He sold the Grace hospital to the HRC, which has now had their contract taken away. It's well time that was done, but the point is that we had that extra operating room to work with. Now we have the new McCaig centre basically replacing the two operating rooms from the HRC, so we're no farther ahead.

The point I'm making, Mr. Speaker, with regard to Bill 204 is that when Premier Klein made these cuts back in '93 through '98, it had a devastating effect. Through the cuts, and with the help of Messrs. Dinning and West, we lost 10,000 of our civil servants that provided the services, and we have not yet gotten back to the point where we have sufficient front-line child and youth services workers. We have a shortage of legal aid. This famine, this lack of services, that was created in 1993 and going forward, would simply be repeated if the government had no ability to temporarily dip into the stability fund.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government could make much wiser investments than it's currently making. For example, the government basically bailed out the superboard with $1.3 billion, and when the hon. minister of health talks about providing stability for five years, $1.3 billion of that was made to cover up mistakes. In terms of investments, instead of gold watch send-offs like Jack Davis is receiving, $23,000 a month in pensions, the $44 million given out to top officials within the various government departments in terms of bonusing: that is where I share the Wildrose concern.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand today to share some thoughts on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. The main idea of Bill 204 is fiscal restraint. Broadly speaking, I do agree with the member's premise that government should practise fiscal restraint – too often we see governments from all over the world act as if the money is theirs to spend and not the taxpayers' – but limiting yearly spending increases to the rate of inflation plus growth is where I differ from the hon. member. That type of formula is way too simplistic for what is a complex, complex process in allocating resources, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

In certain circumstances the bill would allow for government spending to exceed inflation plus population growth so long as spending per capita is lower than it is in nine other provinces. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that we're already starting to make exceptions. Why stop here? Well, the simple fact is that that's why we elect governments, to have the flexibility to meet the needs and priorities of those that elect them. In fact, this exactly shows that in this respect we would actually not be leaders; we would be followers. What if in this circumstance the situation indicated, you know, that it was appropriate to keep spending to inflation and population growth?

I want to be clear, Mr. Speaker, that the de facto effect of this bill, at least in the short term, would be that the inflation-adjusted government spending per capita would be constant over time, again a noble goal but one that does not necessarily need to be legislated by law. One problem with using inflation to limit government spending is that there is no right measure of inflation to use when it comes to delivering government programs. This is because government spends on different items than does a consumer or producer, and inflation indices do not account for expenditures that are typical for government such as health care and education.

Mr. Speaker, I remember, when I was just elected to the school board in Calgary in 2004, being sent a report or a news article that indicated that education inflation was way over and above the regular inflation rate right across this country. Another example is that this government spends nearly 40 per cent of its budget on health care because it is important to all Albertans. Yes, population growth does have some sort of influence on the health care budget, but I would suggest that some of the biggest drivers in health care have nothing to do with the regular inflation rate or population growth. These drivers are changing demographics, particularly an aging population, as well as the drivers of technology and innovation. Again, this is not reflected in such a simplistic formula.

The result is that inflation in the government sector is not accurately measured by normal inflation indices. To link government spending to an index that does not accurately describe inflationary pressures in such services as health care and education is simply irresponsible. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it's the exact opposite of what fiscal responsibility is. It just does not make sense. It does not make sense to many of my constituents that I have heard from. It may make sense only to those who think that policy must be strictly ideologically based and strictly held to a narrow point of view on how we address our challenges.

Mr. Speaker, proponents of this bill often cite the apparent successes of similar legislation in the U.S. states to bolster the case for this bill, and there are two problems with that. One, state budgets are a poor analogy for the Alberta budget. In particular, states spend a significantly smaller portion of their budget on health care than Alberta does. Most states spend around 30 per cent of their budgets on health care and related expenses, primarily through insurance vouchers and similar provisions rather than by directly providing health care. The budgetary pressures faced by Alberta, therefore, are different than the budgetary pressures faced by many U.S. states.

The second thing is that spending caps implemented in U.S. states have not been as successful as the proponents of this bill claim. Of the states with spending limits, which is a total of 22, all but two of them will face a budget shortfall this year, Mr. Speaker. Furthermore, in Colorado, which in 1992 implemented a spending cap very similar to the one proposed in this bill, the spending cap was suspended in 2005 by referendum. Not only was this suspension supported by teachers and health care providers but also by many business organizations. Among these organizations was the Colorado Association of Commerce and Industry, which is the state chamber of commerce for Colorado, and even the chamber of commerce for Colorado Springs.

Mr. Speaker, it was the chamber of commerce of Colorado Springs which originally proposed this legislation in 1992. Even the governor of the state, a Republican, supported the repeal, citing concerns on the decrease in quality of education, health care, and roads as a result of the legislation. So the efficacy of spending caps in improving the fiscal position of certain states has not even been established, nor have spending caps improved the quality of services provided by these states. Even businesses in Colorado realize that such legislation places a fiscal straitjacket on government, which impairs its ability to improve the services which citizens expect.

Mr. Speaker, my final critique of this bill is that it may weaken the ability of the government to provide better services to Albertans. Okay. I do recognize that, yes, some of my constituents do have some concerns with the amount that government spends, and again those concerns seem to be generalized between all levels of government. But what is regularly identified by my constituents is not so much how much the government spends but their concern about the types of revenue that government spends.

Again, this bill does not address that very, very important and specific issue. I know that the Minister of Finance and Enterprise has promised to bring forward a fiscal framework for this province that will address that very important issue that my constituents are speaking to me about, and that's the amount of the nonrenewable resource revenue that we spend on an annual basis, not so much how much money we're spending on an annual basis. The fact is that other means such as limits on how much in nonrenewable resources we spend or how much of that revenue we need to save actually can act as a mechanism that will help government limit some of its spending while providing the flexibility needed by government to address the needs that Albertans identify as their priorities. Albertans expect their government to respond to their ever-evolving needs, Mr. Speaker, and this bill hinders the ability of government to do exactly that.

Overall, the budgeting process is a complex one, Mr. Speaker, and ultimately the goal of budgeting is to satisfy the priorities of Albertans in a fiscally prudent manner. That's what governance is all about, developing policies and priorities, then following it up with an allocation of scarce resources. In my opinion, this bill reverses that process. If this bill was passed, rather than a budget reflecting the priorities of Albertans, the budget would come first, and then the priorities of Albertans would come second. Our mandate as a government is simply not to spend according to a formula and claim responsibility. Rather, our mandate is to evaluate the priorities of Albertans and then budget according to these priorities in a responsible manner.

In its credit analysis for Alberta released a month ago, Standard & Poor's stated that "the province's budgetary performance has benefited in the past 10 years, not only from the robust performance of its resource revenues, but also from prudent fiscal management and an extremely low debt burden." It is quite clear that Albertans are in an enviable position due to fiscal restraint on the part of this government's fiscal management, and we don't need such simplistic formulas to address this particular issue. The needs of Albertans and the context of our fiscal position and framework are way too complex for such a simplistic formula. Mr. Speaker, this is why I'm standing up to not support this bill, and I urge all members not to do so for the same reasons.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join debate on this interesting piece of legislation. You know, I start somewhat conflicted because I certainly understand that the member moving this motion has some intentions which I share, particularly his intentions with respect to establishing a certain amount of fiscal responsibility and a certain amount of government discipline when it comes to ensuring that we treat taxpayers' dollars or taxpayers' lottery donations or the paltry bit of revenue that we receive from the oil and gas industry with the respect that it deserves and that we ensure that we spend wisely.

Certainly, the measures that the member put forward seem quite reasonable at first glance. Indeed, I have a habit, when I'm looking at a government expenditure or a government budget or something, to use as shorthand the population and inflation numbers to assess what's happening at first glance with whatever government proposal is coming forward with respect to budgetary issues. But the problem, I think, is that if we stop the analysis at that shorthand place, we run the risk of, first of all, being rather naive at best and also, more likely, creating big problems and ultimately reducing the ability of government to meet the needs of citizens, which I think is very important. It's not actually an objective that we are very successful at meeting in the province these days, but I still don't think that just because we're doing such a bad job of it now, we should abandon all hope to ever be good stewards of our environment or good providers of health care or effective educators.

The question then becomes: why is this measure perhaps not the best measure? Well, there are a number of examples. Some people have talked already about the concept of the infrastructure deficit. Quite frankly, I think that when you talk about the infrastructure deficit, what you actually have to recognize is that when you don't spend money on maintaining a building, you are in fact spending money. You're creating a liability to the taxpayer, which is ultimately going to come home to roost sooner or later. So it's not as though you've suddenly saved that money and you've done this great bit of management. It's not the case because, of course, that roof is one year closer to collapsing, for instance.

We've had a situation in Alberta over 10 or 15 years under the leadership of the former Premier where we played this game of language, and we tried to pretend we were balancing the budget when, in fact, we all knew that what we were doing was just moving things into different areas and pretending something was happening that wasn't. So while we didn't spend the money on maintenance or on infrastructure, in fact we created a liability for Albertans. We created a liability that any sound financial manager would have had on their balance sheet at the time that we refused to spend the money on that and something that is now a liability in terms of what we have to spend because, you know, we need roads, and we need our kids to go to schools where the roofs don't fall in on them.

We need to now start spending a certain amount of money on infrastructure. If we'd had good governance for the last 40 years, I might feel more comfortable saying, "Yeah, you know, at this point I think we've got all the pieces in place, and we've been doing a good job up to this point, so now I'm kind of at the point where I could contemplate doing a population/inflation measure of expenditure increase." Unfortunately, I don't have that faith in the governance that has preceded us for the last 20 years. We have huge gaps in what the government has done, so if we're going to address those gaps, we need to in some cases spend more than population versus inflation. That's the problem with the kind of legislation that the member is putting forward. That's one example.

Another example of where it maybe doesn't work is when you look at population increase. That should all be fairly reasonable, but then, of course, you have to look at: what type of population increase? The perfect example, of course, is in the area of seniors' care. Our population is growing in that area, and the needs of that population are growing. We all know and any kind of government planner knows that demographically when your population is a certain age, they tend to invest more or give more back to the community through their economic activity, but there are other times in their lives when they need more back from that very same community. We know that this government anticipates that 10 years from now there are going to be roughly 15,000 more seniors in Alberta who will require some type of supported living arrangement, and we've done almost nothing about it at this point. We are just barely chipping away at that growing liability.

You know, as we talked about earlier in question period today, the government is just fabulous at cutting ribbons and staging and reprofiling and – what was the other one? – phasing in openings so that they get maybe three or four ribbon cuttings at one event and all that kind of fun stuff. We're really good at that, but when you actually add up the numbers, there is a huge infrastructure deficit facing Albertans in terms of seniors' care. If I thought that the government had planned reasonably up to this point, I could see population and inflation being a good measure by which you would limit government expenditure, but because the government has ignored this looming problem for such a period of time, it's not now a measurement of limiting government expenditure which is going to serve the best interests of Alberta seniors or their families or the people who are going to have to take care of them in their homes until such time as we create those 15,000 spaces, which we are not on track to do, by the way. So that's a problem.

Another kind of thing that is not, for instance, covered by population and inflation is the issue of environmental protection. Population and inflation doesn't measure the nature of industrial activity in any given place, and it may well be the case that we embark upon a brand-new or an accelerated level of industrial activity which is going to result in the need for environmental protection which far exceeds an increase on the basis of population plus inflation. The fact of the matter is that we are threatening our environment at a rate which is far greater than the rate that is represented by population plus inflation. If we were to limit our spending to that level, then we would have a problem.

These are just a few examples of why I feel that, on one hand, you know, it's a good shorthand place to start in terms of measuring government expenditure and controlling it, but it is a superficial analysis. It negates other important roles and obligations on the part of government, and it hamstring government to deal with stuff that they should have done all along. Or, God forbid, if we ever have the situation where we get a new government that actually tries to roll up its sleeves and address the issues that have been ignored for so many decades, in those cases there may be some fairly major ticking time bombs of unexpended liability sitting there.

Now, having said that, though, I really want to reinforce that as a member of the NDP caucus I fully commit to and believe in the importance of balanced budgeting. I believe that it is important, as I've said before, to respect the money of the taxpayers and to be very careful in how you expend that money and establish priorities. You know, people often try and suggest that that's not the way it is with the NDP, but I'm sure that at least some of you have heard that the Canadian Parliamentary Budget Officer came out with a report less than a year ago that identified that the most responsibly expending governments in the country over the last 20 years were in fact the NDP and that the NDP was more likely than any other political party to run a government that resulted in a surplus.

So I agree with the principle, but I do believe that we need to be mindful in terms of how we get to that outcome. We need to do it thoughtfully, and we need to do it with reference to the goals that certainly I have with respect to ensuring that we get the best outcome in the public interest: protecting the environment, preserving our health care, developing a quality education system, and taking care of our seniors. These are important things that we need to achieve, and we won't achieve them if we put some sort of thoughtless rule that we bind ourselves with and make it impossible to manoeuvre within.

I do believe, as well, that in some cases there is an obligation to look at issues of revenue, and this is another thing that – you know, certain parties at certain ends of the political spectrum like to essentially negate the role of government, have government have as little to do as possible with building community, helping the more vulnerable, developing our population in a way that would make us continue to be leaders in the world in education and health care and those kinds of things. Those things require government, and some people would rather not have government involved in that. If we put an arbitrary . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and join the debate on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and I would like to thank the hon. member for doing so. Bill 204 is centred on fiscal restraint, using a formula based on inflation plus population growth, as has been said.

Fiscal control is something that this government has been practising for years; however, I do see some challenges with the proposed formula. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that this government's dedication to fiscal control and responsibility has put Alberta in the best fiscal position in Canada and, arguably, in North America. In 1993 the provincial debt was approaching $23 billion, but since that time our government has eliminated the debt and amassed billions of dollars in savings. I'm sure that the majority of other jurisdictions in North America would be all too happy to trade their current financial fiscal position with ours here in Alberta. I'm convinced that they'd appreciate not just words but actions such as those of our Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, who has reduced his budget by 19 per cent for this budget year alone, and he is only one of a number of ministers doing exactly that.

Mr. Speaker, like so many Albertans I'm very proud of our current financial fiscal position, and I'm very proud of how it was achieved as well, without tax increases. It's well known that Albertans pay the lowest taxes in Canada. We have no provincial sales tax, and our government has taken measures to eliminate initiatives that take money out of Albertans' pockets such as health care premiums alone, which has been pivotal.

Alberta's tax advantage is striking when you compare it to other provinces in Canada. As an example, Mr. Speaker, if Alberta had adopted another province's tax system, our citizens and businesses would have paid at least an additional $10.3 billion in taxes last year alone. That's over $2,000 per Albertan put back in their jeans and their bank accounts. Given our competitive tax rates it's clear why Alberta continues to attract investment and remains the best place to live, work, and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 seeks to limit year-over-year spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth, and I'm sure that many Members of this Legislative Assembly and those beyond would agree to this principle as an ideal, but under certain circumstances and democratic shifts that could put this government in a very difficult place, if not an impossible place, if this concept were actually to be legislated.

The everyday person can think of this from a family's perspective. Take, for example, a family that's practised financial responsibility and has been growing their savings for years. Now, let's say that family has to limit its yearly spending increases to a predetermined formula. For a year that might not affect the family at all; they might be able to continue to live comfortably while growing their savings. But in a given year there are numerous instances in which the family may have to spend over the limit for a number of reasons.

Perhaps there are a number of positive reasons. Perhaps construction costs are down, and they choose to undergo home renovations, which will increase the overall value of their home. Perhaps interest rates are so low that they decide it's time to purchase a new home to support their growing family. In cases such as these the family would have to make a decision. It would have to spend above that formula for that year, or if they follow the formula exactly, they'd need to include this in the unforeseen expense category in yearly spending, which might be impossible. The problem with this unforeseen expense or investment, as many of us would choose to see it, would impact the rest of the family's budget, so they'd have to cut. Where do they cut? Do they cut groceries, take the kids out of clubs or sports, or do they simply not make that very wise investment at that time?

Mr. Speaker, when looking at this formula from a family's perspective, it's clear that while Bill 204 provides a good guideline to follow, legislating predetermined spending increases has the potential to cause a host of problems. Our government, like the family in the example, has practised fiscal responsibility and employed a prudent savings plan for years. A part of this fiscal responsibility includes engaging in what we know as smart spending. In any given year when construction costs are low, it would make sense to build necessary infrastructure projects. Albertans demand a government that provides them with the best value for their hard-earned tax dollars. If we put off infrastructure projects during a favourable building climate due to the constraints of a legislative formula that dictates our spending, we're not managing Albertans' tax dollars wisely.

Mr. Speaker, these infrastructure projects are necessary. Just ask

Albertans about their schools, roads, hospitals, and more, especially under current circumstances with our shifting demographics here in this wonderful province. Next year there will be over 400,000 seniors living in Alberta, and in 2020 there will be over 600,000. Therefore, our seniors' population will increase 50 per cent in the next decade alone. The fact is that the population growth factor in Bill 204 does not take into account that Alberta's aging population is growing faster than the overall population. That's just one of the shortcomings.

Our government is committed to providing essential services and facilities to all demographics but especially this ever-important one. A fixed-spending-based formula that does not account for the age of our population means that our government could potentially have to make massive cuts to other vital areas just to provide seniors with the infrastructure and care they deserve, which would be unfair to people of other generations. I really believe that Albertans would agree that this is not in everyone's best interest. [interjections] Thank you for the support, members, on that.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are interested in a favourable business climate fuelled by low taxes, and they're interested in a government that responds to changing needs. I agree with the hon. member that fiscal accountability and restraint are ever important. However, Bill 204 seeks to implement a formula that is not as flexible as it needs to be, especially here and now. I believe that legislating spending increases to population growth plus inflation does not provide Albertans with the fiscal leadership and essential services that they have come to expect from this government.

Mr. Speaker, I'll state again that the intention of the bill is good. But I remain skeptical of the formula based and proposed in this bill as it does not wholly respond to the year-by-year needs of Albertans. Therefore, I am withholding my support for Bill 204 and encourage others to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a pleasure to rise and to address and put my full support behind Bill 204. I must say that I'm quite astounded with the discussion that's going on and the excuses that are being used on why this government doesn't want to be fiscally responsible. You know, it wasn't that long ago, less than a year ago, that I was sitting in this Legislature listening to the so-called PC Fiscal Four. It's obvious that there are no more. There hasn't been one government member who has stood up to speak on fiscal responsibility, but there are four fiscally responsible individuals in the Wildrose caucus.

It's interesting how people's attitudes speak out and want to spend other people's money. This is the case. In today's discussion it appears that they want to spend other people's money and that in no situation should they be restrained in any way, that they should have a free ability to spend as they want.

It's also interesting the amount of I want to say gossip – it's not even gossip – that is being thrown out there by this government about a PST. I think that maybe the confusion is that the finance minister says today that we're not going to have a provincial sales tax. I think that what the PST stands for in the PC caucus is the provincial spending theme. That's what they're continuing to talk about: their spending theme and how much money they want to spend.

It isn't about having the freedom to spend money when all of these so-called emergencies arise. It's about the discipline of being able to prioritize and spend the amount of money that you have. That's why this is so important.

Actually, it really is sad when you look around at the number of jurisdictions in the world, countries and states, that are so-called fiscally responsible, yet they couldn't restrain their spending, and they ran into deficits. So then they voted, just as this government did a few years ago when they paid off the debt. They're going to run their first – what would I say? They want to not save their money. They passed a new law saying that all surplus dollars will no longer have to go into savings all of sudden because their debt was paid off. This again goes back to reflect on the situation.

The most important thing is that if we really want the Alberta advantage, if we want to spur on and have strong economic growth, we have to constrain our spending. We're in a $7 billion plus cash deficit this year alone. For the infrastructure that they talk about wanting to build, the rate that we're spending is not sustainable. In two or three short years – mind you, they won't be here that long, so I guess we won't have to look at that problem – we're going to see this government create another crisis because they're going to have to cut back on the infrastructure spending because it's not sustainable. What you really want to have a strong economy is a sustainable budget, and that's what this is about. You get into that, you prioritize, you spend your money accordingly, and you don't have that problem.

It's also interesting to me that this government continues to speak against this when the biggest problems are growth and population and inflation. This bill would actually help such areas as Fort McMurray and Airdrie address their population and corporate growth, which this government refuses to recognize. It would actually turn the table and address those problems.

The reality is that government is no different from people. It's just that it's not held accountable like people are on a short-term basis. They have this ability to continue to borrow money, spend money. The fact of the matter is that if we look at areas like Greece, France, California, many areas like that have a major deficit, they aren't fiscally responsible, and the number of dollars that they have to spend to service their debt is unacceptable. They can't get out of that hole. That's why you want to restrain that.

The other interesting thing, though, when you actually restrain it to population plus inflation, is that as your economy grows, there is actually more. This government finally learned that with the new royalty framework. If they reduced taxes, they would increase the revenue, not reduce it. It's the same here. If we were to actually reduce the spending, in the next year you'd actually have more because you'd have economic growth.

All of the debate, all of the points they're bringing up are very shallow, short-term excuses, saying: "We don't want to be disciplined. We don't want to be restrained. We want to be able to buy votes on a minute's notice, to be able to just throw out a new project, whether it's spending $2 billion on CO₂ or $15 billion on power lines that we don't need." They don't want any restraint. This bill would upset their plans, their provincial spending theme, or PST, to buy themselves a new mandate from the people. But it's not going to work, Mr. Speaker. It just isn't going to happen.

What we need to do and why this bill is so important is that it's about setting priorities as a family. Every family has to be fiscally responsible. We're a family here in the province of Alberta. We need to be fiscally responsible. Restraining the spending is critical if we want to bring back the Alberta advantage.

I'm very grateful that we had that windfall of revenue from the oil and gas business in 2006, '07, and halfway through '08, but that's gone, and this current spending increase is unbelievable. Just this last year, I believe, it was a 16 per cent increase for health care, yet the results have been . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Abysmal.

Mr. Hinman: Well, abysmal, as my good colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek points out. It's just sad.

To think that spending money is going to solve our problems doesn't do it. You need to have the restraint in there. We need to have the accountability, where we sit down with our budget.

It's always amazing to me, too, how the budget immediately talks about: "We're not going to have health care. We're not going to have education." No, it's other areas that we don't have. We don't need to spend $2 billion to pump plant food into the earth and claim that we don't have any money now for health care. We don't need to spend $15 billion on power lines that, looking back, were necessary, but today we don't need to have big coal power plants or a nuclear facility thousands of miles away and put in a power line.

What we have is a priority problem of where we want to designate the tax dollars. We have a spending problem on where we're going to spend those tax dollars. If we don't acknowledge our problems, we're going to continue to have to pay an extraordinary price that we can't afford when we look back. That's the key to all of this. When are we going to really look at the true facts and realize the problems that we're facing?

We have a huge infrastructure problem. There's no question about that. How are we addressing it? We hear over and over and over again about a 20-year plan, yet that plan has not been tabled. It's not evident to Albertans. It doesn't say highway 63 to Fort McMurray or highway 3 to Medicine Hat. It just says that we have a plan. But there is nothing that has been presented to the people of Alberta. What a real plan would be is if you say: "Here's the Fiscal Responsibility Act. Here's what we're going to spend. Now, here with our infrastructure if we have $6 billion this year, these are the projects that will be addressed first." That's a plan, to actually have the proposal written down where people can see, where people can debate, and it can be changed openly, not tweaked by some minister who wants to change things.

Another problem that we're facing is because this government continues to say: "Oh, we're not running a deficit. Oh, no, we've got the cash in the bank." We do for this year. Nobody debates that. But what about the unfunded liabilities that we have? It wasn't that long ago that this government signed a contract with teachers for five years – I believe it was January '08 – saying: here's the five-year funding. We're hearing this about health now: here's the five-year funding. It wasn't even two years into that when they wouldn't accept their own rules and contracts that they wrote, but they spent an extra $2 billion of taxpayers' money because they failed to pay the original two-thirds that they owed those teachers. So in order to bring them back onside, they say: well, we'll pay the last third. Those are unacceptable. That's where if you were limited to inflation plus population growth, you couldn't make these types of deals and be held unaccountable.

Once again, it's always about using other people's money. This government needs to be personally responsible. We need to balance our budget. We can prioritize and spend properly and address the growth in the areas that we need to. It's about prioritizing properly, not saying that we're limited to the amount of money that we can and will spend. That flexibility is there. It's just whether we have the discipline or not to follow our spending and to prioritize it in a way that best meets the needs of the taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, being brought forward by my learned friend the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and House leader for the Wildrose Alliance Party. Bill 204 proposes to limit these spending increases by the government at the rate of inflation plus population growth. I think as my colleagues have said already, we in the government caucus recognize the need for fiscal responsibility. I guess the difference would be what we define as fiscally responsible and what my colleagues on the other side would.

I can assure colleagues that the reasons that we're opposing this is not because we're not fiscally responsible, but we need some flexibility to allow governments to govern. Governments cannot be tied to a rigid formula. They can't always be expected to be in a straitjacket when it comes to government policy. One of the reasons that we can't be tied in a straitjacket is the ability to adapt to changing economic circumstances. We live in a world, Mr. Speaker, that is constantly changing. Most often those changes are not predictable even by the most skilled economists.

Two years ago our world was rocked by a financial crisis that was precipitated by events beyond our control here in Alberta and here in Canada. There was a mortgage and banking crisis in the United States. There were a lot of investment houses that failed in the United States and became insolvent. Confidence in capital markets was shaken. Many people saw their life savings substantially diminished, and many taxpaying Canadians and Albertans lost their jobs as a result of things which were far beyond our control. There was a loss of investor and buyer confidence reinforcing the economic decline, and some analysts feared, in fact, Mr. Speaker, that we would suffer a complete collapse of the world financial system, which would have led to even greater unemployment and instability and perhaps even a serious and long-lasting event such as the Great Depression of the 1930s.

Though none of this could be predicted with any degree of certainty by even the most competent economists, governments at the national and provincial level took action to ensure that the situation was stabilized. For that reason, all jurisdictions in North America were facing deficits. They undertook stimulus spending in almost every case. The objective of the legislators was very simple. It was to keep people employed, to stabilize the economy, and to ensure that an economic catastrophe like the Great Depression did not happen here.

Here in Alberta we had nonrenewable resource revenues drop from $11.9 billion in 2008-09 to $6 billion in the 2009-10 fiscal year. Personal tax revenues dropped from $8.7 billion in 2008-09 to $7.8 billion in 2010-11. Corporate tax revenues dropped $250 million in one year from '08-09 to '09-10. But, fortunately, due to government foresight here in Alberta we had the sustainability fund to rely upon, so we didn't have to go into debt. The implementation of the spending limit proposed by my learned friend would prohibit the government from using funds set aside from past surpluses such as the sustainability fund or from reinvesting budget surpluses into additional needs such as infrastructure. Fortunately, in Alberta we did not have to make draconian cuts to services that Albertans expect, services like high-quality health care, education, and services like those provided to seniors, the disabled, and children in need.

Had Bill 204 been law two years ago, the consequences would have been grave for Albertans. The proposed spending limit in Bill 204, if it had existed in the 2010-11 budget, would have been calculated using a combined consumer price index change of approximately zero per cent, or 0.1 negative, or at the Alberta population growth of 2.2 per cent for '08-09 to '09-10. That's data for July 1. Therefore, roughly speaking, the spending limit would have been a maximum budget increase of around 2.1 per cent more or less, or an increase of about $770 million.

By contrast, in the government's fiscal plan the total net spending in 2009 to '10-11 increased from $36.58 billion to $38.71 billion, and that excludes the $577 million in disaster and emergency spending in that category. That represented approximately a five-point increase in total expenditures of $2.12 billion. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that that was after the budget cuts in many of those departments, which have been alluded to by some of my friends.

The health care budget increased by $1.966 billion, including $759 million to pay down the health system's accumulated deficits, $96 million in capital grants, and $80 million in amortization, including the consumption of vaccines. Six hundred and twenty-seven million dollars in the Infrastructure budget is related to health capital facilities. These priorities and necessary expenditures would have been impossible under a spending limit like the one proposed in the bill. Therefore, spending on health care alone would put us over the spending limit without looking at other priorities such as roads and infrastructure. So the difference between the actual increases the government of Alberta made of $2.12 billion and what the increase would have been capped at, $770 million, would have equated to approximately $1.35 billion that would have been chopped if Bill 204 had been in place.

Now, although Bill 204 would not set a spending limit on any specific government programs or ministries, there would have been grave implications to major ministries. Under the proposed bill even with the same serious cuts to those departments which were already cut by the government, it would have been necessary to make cuts to those big ministries like health, education, seniors and community supports, and social services. Somewhere the cuts would have had to be made to make up for that $1.35 billion.

It's all very well to say: "Cut, cut. Live within your means. Limit increases to population growth and inflation." But where would you cut? Those cuts would have meant in the case of health care less doctors, less hospital beds, less teachers in classroom, less continuing care beds, less support for seniors. Alternatively, we could have completely cut out the infrastructure spending. But consider what the consequences might have been longer term: less employment for Albertans in a time of economic uncertainty, more people losing their homes, less people paying personal taxes. All of that would have been resulting in a downward economic spiral.

Mr. Speaker, fiscal control and responsibility have been a cornerstone of the government, but this responsibility would be highlighted by such things as paying down $23 billion of debt and by accumulating nearly $25 billion in savings over recent years. In a resource-based economy like ours in Alberta revenue streams are often volatile. The sustainability fund was part of the savings plan, and it was conceived as a way to even out provincial revenue when our cyclic, resource-driven economy causes income declines.

While provincial income may fluctuate, the needs of the people do not change in parallel. For example, when the economy was in decline and people became unemployed, we had a greater need for social services and for education and training. Our government recognizes that fiscal responsibility and controls are laudable goals; however, a government could never lose sight of the commitment it has to the welfare of its citizens.

A formula based on inflation and population growth might be a good target. It might be a good goal for government. It might also serve as a good measure to track and compare overall spending.

However, I would respectfully submit that the proposed formula fails to recognize the need for flexibility and adaptability required of governments in changing economic and social circumstances.

With respect to health care, Mr. Speaker, we all know that health care represents around 40 per cent of our yearly budget, and we all know it's almost every Albertan's greatest priority. Why wouldn't increases to inflation plus population growth work in health care? First of all, we know that our population is aging. Demographics tell us that our population is getting older and the needs are getting greater. [Dr. Brown's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to join the discussion on Bill 204, the Fiscal Responsibility (Spending Limit) Amendment Act, 2010, sponsored by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. The bill proposes measures for limiting year-to-year increases to government spending, an issue that our government has taken a planned and prudent approach towards. Prudent budgeting is a timely topic for families, for businesses, for governments in the midst of a recession that's been global in scope.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to remember the problems that other economies are facing, in particular those of our largest trading partner to the south, the United States of America. They're reeling from the effects of a financial crisis that was brought on by years of irresponsible fiscal behaviour. Although those types of financial practices were not undertaken to such an extent here, our economy still bears some of the consequences.

Alberta is a part of an increasingly interconnected global marketplace. When other economies suffer, so too can Alberta. While we're not able to control the policies and practices of other jurisdictions, we are able to take strides to secure a more sustainable economy by planning effectively against economic volatility here at home. We can plan ahead just as families and businesses do, and that's exactly what this government has done, Mr. Speaker. In fact, due to our prudent planning Alberta entered the recent recession with no debt and over $25 billion saved in order to protect our key programs and great quality of life.

We are now using some of this money to cover revenue shortfalls, keep taxes low, and invest in infrastructure to help grow our economy. We're continuing to build the roads, the schools, the health care facilities that are the foundation for economic growth and important to all Albertans. We're investing over $7 billion in infrastructure just this year alone. This investment will build needed infrastructure, helping to keep Albertans working and setting the stage for economic recovery. We will remain committed to future job creation; that's a priority for our hon. Premier and every member on this side of the House. It's a part of our plan to move our province forward, a plan that will see us live within our means while continuing to invest directly in our province's future.

Due to our government's planning Alberta was prepared for changes in the economy, and we will emerge in better financial shape than any other jurisdiction in North America. Almost all provinces in the federal government are forecasting deficits this fiscal year, and while other jurisdictions grapple to deal with deficits, our government has laid out an attainable plan to balance our budget in three years. It's a plan that works for Alberta. It takes into account the uniqueness of our situation and builds on our greatest assets, our natural resources and our people.

Alberta is ahead of the rest. To cover their deficits, the federal government and the other provinces will have to go deeper into debt while we have provincial savings to draw upon. These savings were built up in the sustainability fund to be used during hard times to protect against deep cuts to priority programs like health care and education. As demonstrated in our budget, we'll continue to support the core programs that strengthen our communities, and we will take measures to limit spending in areas where we can tighten our belts and be more efficient.

In the wake of a recession that's had a significant impact on economies around the world, Alberta is positioned to rise above and once again lead Canada and the world as an economic driver. The foresight and discipline of our government is enabling us to guide Alberta businesses and people through our economic recovery. Albertans can be confident that we'll emerge from this period with a great investment climate and a strong infrastructure.

We know these times have been tough on families and businesses. Our government will continue to support the programs that help them, and we know how to pay for the programs that make our province successful. The recession didn't happen overnight, and the recovery is not going to take place in a single day. We need a forward-thinking approach to strengthen our long-term fiscal picture, and that's what we put in place. That's why I strongly support our government's plan to move Alberta forward. It reflects the principles of the Premier, our government, and Albertans. The plan rests on four priorities that guide our decisions. They will ensure Alberta is in a strong financial position coming out of the recession and that we have advanced infrastructure, an innovative and competitive economy, and a strong health system with supports for all vulnerable Albertans.

With difficult times come tough choices; however, we're in this together with all Albertans. We made a commitment to pay for what we spend and be responsible stewards of their dollars. Our economy and our people will benefit from this approach. We've worked hard over the last year to consult Albertans on ways to address our fiscal challenges, and we will continue to work with them. We've also taken actions internally to address the fiscal challenges with a focus on keeping people working, and our government's management through this recession has protected tens of thousands of jobs.

Mr. Speaker, we've addressed spending, and we've budgeted prudently to ensure Alberta continues to be one of the best places to work, live, invest, and visit. While Bill 204 proposes an interesting budgeting tool, I don't believe it's necessarily . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's bill to close debate, I'd now invite the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to close debate on Bill 204.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to close debate on second reading of Bill 204. This bill is all about stable and predictable spending. It is about fiscal responsibility. We know very well in Alberta that our revenues fluctuate considerably. We cannot base our spending on these cycles any longer. Global oil prices will long determine our revenue. They do not and should not determine our spending.

Alberta used to lead the country in fiscal responsibility. Incredibly, in this decade that reputation has been totally destroyed. Bill 204 will help our government recover from its obvious spending addiction. This legislation will ensure that we restrict spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth. This government should embrace this bill. It is shameful that a party claiming to be fiscally responsible stewards of the public purse refuses to acknowledge the need to live within its means.

The Wildrose is not alone in our belief that the spending constraints in Bill 204 are good for current and future generations of Alberta. In a poll conducted by Crestview research just a few weeks ago, 80 per cent of Albertans expressed support of this spending limitation initiative. Only 14 per cent – 14 per cent – were against it. Albertans understand how tempting it is for government to try and spend its way out of political problems. They know the natural inclination of government bureaucracies to expand themselves and their power.

There is also support for this legislation from respected public policy think tanks like the CFIB, Canadian Taxpayers Federation, Fraser Institute, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and others. In fact, in the most recent OECD survey on Canada, written this last September, there is a substantial section dedicated to Alberta. In the OECD's analysis of what they describe as "the rapid deterioration in public finances in recent years" in Alberta, the OECD report says that our spending is "being squeezed in typical boom-bust fashion."

They add that "the province exhibits a clear pattern of pro-cyclical fiscal policy whereby spending is ramped up . . . in good years followed by spending contraction in bad ones. Instead of stabilising the economy," the report says, "the government has thus frequently exacerbated macroeconomic volatility." In other words, while this government complains that this legislation would be too much of a constraint on them, the OECD says that that's exactly what is needed so that they don't make our already volatile economy even more unstable.

The OECD report goes on to endorse the principle of Bill 204, arguing that "a legislated spending-growth rule, rather than the current in-year spending rule, would help anchor fiscal policy and, if respected, would avoid another acceleration of spending when the budget is finally balanced." Maybe the OECD is too simplistic.

We should not need the OECD to remind us that it's wrong to rob future generations of Albertans just because it's easier to spend more than it is to make priorities and to be disciplined. Not only is this unfair in terms of our future; it's not even good policy for this generation because it destabilizes our economy now. A spending-growth rule is the best step we could take towards ensuring that we are banking the nonrenewable royalties necessary to counteracting our boom-and-bust business cycle instead of amplifying it.

What would our fiscal picture look like if this bill had already been in place? According to figures recently updated by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, if this government had this legislation in place since 2005-06, we would have a $2.67 billion surplus this year instead of a record $7.6 billion cash shortfall. That is fiscal irresponsibility. In other words, instead of raiding our savings and leaving our kids with debt – yes, hon. members, you claim there's no debt, but we just took out $3 billion in debt this year, so we are back into debt – we could actually be adding to our heritage fund. We'd have something to be proud of today instead of the record deficits that we're racking up.

Don't talk about how this kind of restraint would have hurt our infrastructure and social services. This is a tired and socialistic argument. Restraint promotes efficiency. It promotes frugality and thrift. It causes governments to put needs before wants. It causes them to prioritize, to pool money with partnerships and invite private and nonprofit investment into the economy. Frankly, spending restraint facilitates wise choices. Perhaps this kind of fiscal restraint would have resulted in decades too late health care and other reforms that would have saved us from the health crisis that we're having today. Our government spending has grown too fast and too much for far too long, and we risk leaving our children with a mountain of debt.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 205

Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act.

Bill 205 is an important piece of legislation that aims to set specific standards for scrap metal dealers and recyclers when they engage in transactions with private individuals. Currently an individual can exchange metal for money without having to produce any identification, and the details regarding the transaction are not recorded. The ease of selling stolen metals for cash coupled with their accessibility and recent increase in value has led to scrap metal theft emerging as a serious issue in Alberta. This piece of legislation will protect businesses and communities by detecting and deterring metal theft in Alberta.

The theft of metal victimizes businesses, municipalities, and taxpayers all around our province. Law enforcement in the provincial capital district electronically recorded the value of scrap metal stolen in 55 instances over a 21-month period in 2007 and 2008. In 20 of these 55 instances the value of the metal stolen was estimated to be in excess of $5,000. It seems completely unreasonable to me that a thief could sell over $5,000 worth of metal and in many cases drive away with cash in hand and leave law enforcement with nothing but perhaps a vague description to aid in their investigation.

Mr. Speaker, if individuals had to walk into a scrap metal dealer with thousands of dollars of stolen metal and have their identity recorded prior to the sale being completed, this may deter these crimes. In 2008 a theft in Fort McMurray involved over $300,000 worth of copper wire being stolen. If the scrap metal dealer or recycler was required to record this information for their files along with specific information regarding the transaction, I believe many thieves would be deterred from committing these acts of theft.

Bill 205 also places the onus on the scrap metal dealer or recycler to inform law enforcement if they receive scrap metal over a certain weight. This would help discourage large thefts of scrap metal that have been occurring around our province since the prices of scrap metal began to increase.

While the value of the metal being stolen is extremely troublesome, perhaps more troublesome is the amount of damage a thief can inflict on both private and public property in the process of stealing the metal. This victimizes both businesses and government as they incur not only the lost metal but also the costs associated with fixing the damaged infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, in some cases the damaged infrastructure can affect thousands of people. As a case in point, this spring a copper cable was stolen that effectively left municipalities around Big Lake without phone and Internet for a whole day. Phone and Internet services provide Albertans, of course, with access to our emergency services, so potentially, if there had been a medical emergency in a community whose phone access had been disabled, the consequences could have been deadly.

The theft of copper wire can also be detrimental to a company's bottom line. In the 20-month period during 2007-2008 that I referenced earlier, 14 companies in the provincial capital district were repeatedly victimized by 51 separate acts of metal theft. I believe this bill not only aids law enforcement but will also give Alberta's businesses further opportunity to deter theft from their companies. If Bill 205 was in place, perhaps businesses who were repeatedly targeted would take steps to mark their metal, making it more easily identifiable if it was stolen. In this case the metal could be returned to the company, and the individuals who stole the metal could be charged.

Mr. Speaker, in discussions with law enforcement they've indicated that organized crime has been increasingly involved in the lucrative, relatively low-risk act of metal theft. Organized crime is a blemish on our society and one, I am proud to say, that our government has aggressively targeted. I see this bill as another tool to assist law enforcement in their effort to curb illegal activity in Alberta.

Law enforcement has been extremely supportive of this legislation. This government has placed a high emphasis on crime prevention and promoting safe communities. I'm proud to say that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police passed a resolution earlier this year supporting this legislation, that creates standards for scrap metal dealers and recyclers.

Numerous government initiatives have been extremely effective in reducing the amount of funds these groups have access to, and I believe that Bill 205 would certainly be an additional tool for law enforcement to curb scrap metal theft and aid in our government's efforts to ensure that Alberta remains the best place in Canada to live, work, and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day Bill 205 is about protecting our province's infrastructure and businesses and providing additional tools to law enforcement in deterring metal theft. The standards that this bill sets for scrap metal dealers and recyclers are not burdensome; they are very reasonable. I believe this piece of legislation will be a valuable tool for law enforcement and an effective deterrent. In addition, I believe Bill 205 will complement this government's continued efforts to promote safe communities and a thriving business climate in Alberta.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments. I sincerely look forward to the valuable input of my colleagues.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join in the debate on Bill 205, sponsored by the Member for Strathcona. You know, when I look at legislation, I think: is there a problem? Sometimes people imagine there's a problem, or it makes sense to them that there's a problem, but we really don't know if there's a problem or not. We've heard the sponsoring member describe that there is a problem and that it's manifesting itself in many different ways.

The question that always occurs to me next is: does the problem need fixing? Let me explain that. Sometimes we do discover things, but you find out that they affect, you know, 1 per cent of the population. At that point I think it's responsible to say: "What kind of a program are we going to develop?" or "How much money are we going to spend if it's affecting 1 per cent of the population? Is there another way to go about this?"

I would agree that there is a problem, and I would want a bit more investigation about how many people this is affecting, but I think it's reasonable even to give the benefit of the doubt to the sponsoring member and say: "Okay. Yes, it needs fixing." The next question is: would legislation fix it? Possibly. Then, of course, the last question is: would this legislation fix it? I have a problem with what is being proposed as the solution in this act. It's because, essentially, the solution that is being prescribed is to collect personal information from any individual that comes in with scrap metal that is going to be accepted by either a depot or a scrap metal dealer.

I listened to the member describing this. He said that this legislation would detect and deter, but in fact there's nothing in the legislation that does that. What it's doing is, you could argue, a prophylactic action in that it is taking personal information and hanging onto it so that if there does prove to be a problem, they could track down an individual and supposedly turn them over to the authorities to pursue it from there. But there's actually no other action that is prescribed in this legislation except for collecting personal information.

Now, we have three acts in Canada that cover the collection of personal information: the FOIP Act, which covers government and the public bodies; the PIPA act, which is the made-in-Alberta version for those companies and organizations that are not government but operate in the province and do collect in some way personal information; and then you have PIPEDA, which is the federal version of that. Anyone that was operating across provincial boundaries would also fall under PIPEDA, and it is possible for different parts of your business to be subject to different acts, depending on what you're doing.

When I read the legislation that is here – I'm at 3(2) under Requirements – it says, "A scrap metal dealer or recycler who purchases or receives scrap metal shall obtain and record information respecting the transaction prescribed by the regulations." Now, the obvious question is: what kind of information? Well, it's pretty clear as you work it through the rest of it is that they're looking for personal information. Well, personal information is exactly what the law has set out to protect, and there has to be a good reason.

The concept of consent is very important. There are all kinds of business transactions that go on, but it's about an individual saying: "Yes, I'm going to give you my personal information. I agree and I consent to give it to you, and we agree between myself and you how you're going to use it and to whom you're going to disclose it." There are a few exceptions in all three of those acts I described about the circumstances under which it can be used and disclosed without the person's consent, but generally speaking, the intent is: with consent.

Well, there's no consent that's being contemplated by this legislation. It does say that they "shall inform a person entering into a transaction that the information obtained under this section is being collected." So they're informing them, but they're not asking consent. They're just saying: I'm going to take this information, and it may be handed over to the police. But it's not asking for consent, and I think that's a problem here. It may be provided to a peace officer or a law enforcement agency. Further, the recycler or dealer has to hang on to this personal information "for a minimum of one year after the transaction."

It can be quite onerous to set up a system in which you can properly collect people's personal information, hang onto it, because you're now responsible, and everything in the PIPA act says that you're responsible for that personal information. If you're going to put it on a disk and give it to a private company that's supposed to hang on to this for you and they somehow, you know, leave it in the back alley or mail it out to their grandmother or whatever, you're responsible. That scrap metal dealer or recycler is responsible for that personal information. You are asking them to now engage in a whole process they may not have been involved with at all except for if they had employees, I suppose.

Then the rest of the act is really about how law enforcement can come in and take information and go about their business with it. If people won't do it willingly – I'm assuming the scrap metal dealer won't do it willingly – then they can compel them to do it through the use of court orders, and that's all laid out in the legislation as well. I thought: well, you know, maybe there's a way. How do you deal with the situation where consent is sort of implied, but it's not sought, and it's not particularly given? It's not really a choice. You know, if you're going to give or sell this person your scrap metal, you're going to have to give them your personal information. Is that fair?

Well, when I look at the PIPA act, it actually speaks exactly to that point. It says:

An organization shall not, as a condition of supplying a product or service, require an individual to consent to the collection, use or disclosure of personal information about an individual beyond what is necessary to provide the product or service.

With any scrap metal dealer or recycler now, if you went to them, you know, what you're doing is saying: "I can write you a receipt. I received so many tonnes of this from you. There's a receipt. What's your name? Maybe put your name on the receipt." But they're not requiring any more additional personally identifying information at this point.

I think this is a problem for the purposes of this act. I understand what the member is trying to get at. I understand what problem he's trying to fix. I don't think this is the fix because the PIPA act specifically says:

The purpose of this Act is to govern the collection, use and disclosure of personal information by organizations in a manner that recognizes both the right of an individual to have his or her personal information protected and the need of organizations to collect, use or disclose personal information for purposes that are reasonable.

But nothing in Bill 205 is talking about how they are going to work with the collection, use, and disclosure of that. There's nothing in here that spells out how it's to be kept in a secure place or any of the other kinds of rules that you would expect to have when someone was collecting personally identifying information essentially without their consent. I would argue that I don't think it's much of a choice saying: if you're going to sell this to me, the only way I'll take it is if I get all your personally identifying information.

The other relevant parts of the PIPA act that I picked up. Under section 6(1), policies and practices: "An organization must develop and follow policies and practices that are reasonable for the organization to meet its obligations under this Act," in other words the PIPA act. The PIPA act is quite clear to businesses that they have to develop a whole protocol to do with this. All of a sudden we've said to a small businessperson, a scrap collector or recycler: "Okay. Not only are you trying to get on with business now and all the other red tape and licences and such and so on that you have to do as a small businessperson, but you're now going to have to develop this whole other protocol around the collection, use, and disclosure of this personal information that you're now collecting." I really wonder how willing these scrap metal dealers and recyclers are going to be to have to develop this whole protocol. The member and I are still sitting together on the FOIP Act review, and it can be an onerous task.

Thank you for allowing me to speak in second reading.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it is so close to 5 o'clock that I'm going to call it 5 o'clock. The debate on this item of business is adjourned for today.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Promotion of Entrepreneurship

510. Mr. Dallas moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to enhance supports available to community stakeholders who engage in delivering education programs that develop entrepreneurial skills and promote the value of entrepreneurship in our society.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 510, which, of course, urges the government to enhance support to groups delivering education programs that develop entrepreneurial skills. In addition, Motion 510 proposes to support programs that highlight the value of entrepreneurship to our society.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 510 is about recognizing the invaluable role that entrepreneurs play in our economy and in our society and taking steps to develop the entrepreneurs of our future. After all, entrepreneurship and small businesses are the cornerstones of Alberta's economy. I'm proud to say that Alberta has one of the best climates in North America for starting a small business. For example, Alberta has low personal and corporate income taxes, no provincial sales tax, and of course we have world-class infrastructure. All of these advantages have in turn prompted exceptional small-business growth.

Alberta is without a doubt the Canadian leader in small-business development. In 2009 alone it was estimated that for every 1,000 Albertans there were 89 small businesses. To put that into perspective, the national average was only 68 per 1,000. In addition, our businesses tend to outperform their Canadian counterparts. For example, in 2009 the GDP per business in Alberta was $891,000, which is $190,000 more than the national average of $700,000. Mr. Speaker, it is clearly evident that Alberta leads the way in entrepreneurial spirit and development.

The question then becomes: why do we need to support entrepreneurial education programs through Motion 510 if we're already in such an enviable position? The answer to this is quite simple: commitment to improving ourselves. Just because we have the best education system in Canada does not mean that we stop looking for teaching innovations, and just because we have the best entrepreneurial climate does not mean that we stop developing programs that support this important skill. Motion 510 will recognize the success of entrepreneurs in our communities while, at the same time, helping to develop the next generation of business and community leaders.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best way to understand the intent of Motion 510 is to look at an example. In my constituency of Red Deer-South the Chamber of Commerce joined with Red Deer College to put on a 10-day entrepreneurial training course. Throughout the 10 evenings students learned about business management and development as well as receiving a basic understanding of business skills like marketing and accounting.

Perhaps the most influential aspect of this course was not what the students learned but who they were taught by. Using this program as a forum, the Chamber of Commerce, Community Futures, and the Red Deer College were able to attract national and community business leaders. These are people who are entrepreneurs themselves and fully understand the risks and rewards that face a new business venture. In essence, these community stakeholders created a program where up-and-coming entrepreneurs can have a chance to learn from the successes and failures of today's business leaders.

The role of Motion 510 is to prompt the development and continuation of projects like this one, projects not run by the government but, rather, by community stakeholders like businesses, chambers of commerce, and educational institutions. The government's role would be to co-ordinate those stakeholders and help share best practices between groups offering similar programs across the province. In addition, Motion 510 was developed to recognize and encourage community stakeholders to share the programs they offer with the support of the Alberta government.

After all, Mr. Speaker, Alberta boasts several innovative programs designed to encourage entrepreneurial development. One of these programs is the youth 'technopreneurship' program, or YTP, offered by the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology. This program does two things. One, it helps encourage the development of new, marketable technology, and two, it helps train our youth in the skills needed to be an entrepreneur in the technology industry. To accomplish its goals, this program offers cash rewards to high school and postsecondary students who aspire to build innovative technology that can be marketed.

Motion 510 encourages the government to develop more programs like this and, perhaps, look at other business fields beyond technology development. One could argue that a similar program could be set up to help foster tourism development or spur on development in medical sciences. In addition, Motion 510 encourages collaboration between government programs and the ones offered by community stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, the final goal of Motion 510 is to simply draw attention to and promote the value of entrepreneurship to our society. As I've already highlighted, Alberta is a haven of small businesses and people committed to entrepreneurship, but oftentimes we may not fully realize just how big a role entrepreneurs play in our daily lives. Not only are they the drivers of our economy, but they are our innovators and our inventors and the people who provide employment to the majority of our population. That is why Motion 510 also encourages the government to provide supports to groups or stakeholders who promote the value of entrepreneurship to our society. These people play an incredibly important role in our communities and should be recognized for their contributions.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to stress the value and importance that entrepreneurs play in our day-to-day lives. I believe that the measures placed in Motion 510 serve to promote and develop this important skill. If we wish to remain competitive on the world stage, we need to highlight and advance the role of entrepreneurs and small business in Alberta. Motion 510 gives us the opportunity to recognize the programs that already develop the business leaders of tomorrow while at the same time helping us to develop new programs.

With that, I'll conclude my comments and eagerly look forward to the input and ideas of my colleagues. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm going to take sort of a middle-of-the-road approach to this Motion 510, enhance support for entrepreneurial education. It would be dismissive to suggest the government adage of the government not being in the business of being in business, but that doesn't mean that under certain circumstances the government shouldn't promote good business practices.

Now, having taught for 34 years, one of the programs that worked very well in the school systems to promote entrepreneurial skills involved mentorship of individuals within the business community: the Junior Achievement program. With the Junior Achievement program junior high school students and high school students created a product, marketed that product, and then sold the product. Some of Alberta's successful entrepreneurs went through that Junior Achievement program. The Junior Achievement program to a large extent occurred outside of class time. Some class time was devoted to it, but the majority of it came through volunteers and mentors. Mentorship is an extremely important teaching tool. Having somebody that has the knowledge and can deliver that knowledge to students is extremely valuable.

Where some of my conflict comes in is that while Motion 510 is calling for greater government support for entrepreneurial education, what we saw with advanced education was a movement away from supporting a business degree by making it financially impossible for a number of students because tuition was increased, for example, at the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta to such a large extent. So for people that were seeking business degrees going through advanced education – and the ministry is advanced education, innovation, and technology – that particular movement suggested that the government was sort of giving in this motion and in that other actual action, as opposed to direction, taking away. That's where some of my conflict comes from in terms of how we can actually support this.

Something else I have a concern about in terms of entrepreneurial visions and investments is this government's viewing unions as antibusiness or antientrepreneurial. To me, the most successful entrepreneurs are those that involve their staff: as part of their compensation, for example, shares in the company. It provides a direct incentive for the employee to get involved. A case in point: the very successful airline, which basically had its roots in Alberta, WestJet, where employees not only have a direct economic investment, but they also have a direct say in how their business is run. To me, that provision of incentive within the company is a major driver. For example, WestJet has increased its share tremendously in the market. When other companies were trying to sell their planes, WestJet, a good example of entrepreneurial management, was purchasing planes.

Another concern I have, where my conflict comes from, is the remuneration of the individuals who work in small businesses. I realize that there's a tremendous amount of sweat equity. The mom-and-pop shops, where they're the primary workers, have sometimes difficulty attracting further employees. As the vice-chair of the Standing Policy Committee on the Economy I am concerned that just simply moving the minimum wage from where it exists right now and where it's been since April of 2009, $8.80 an hour, to our committee's recommendation of $9.05 will see us as the second-lowest jurisdiction in terms of the minimum wage, yet Alberta has the highest per capita economic benefit.

My concern is that as we advance in our entrepreneurial endeavours, it needs to be with the support of employees as opposed to potentially being on the backs of employees. When New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island increase their minimum wage, we'll be a laggard in terms of providing never mind the idea of a living wage, which would be in the area of $12.00 plus, closer to $13.00 an hour, but in terms of taking the entrepreneurial spirit to a higher level by having employees who are earning above the low-income cut-off, the LICO standard. Let's, by all means, promote the idea of entrepreneurial spirit.

Another concern I have is: what is it that we're willing to sell? I'm very concerned, for example, about this potato farm. I think it's something like 13,600 acres of Albertans' land, Crown land, being turned over. In this Motion 510 we're talking about entrepreneurial spirit. Now, if the government is going to encourage entrepreneurial spirit, fairness, transparency, and accountability are part of entrepreneurial spirit.

We have to decide as Alberta entrepreneurs or future entrepreneurs what is for sale in this province. I've mentioned land. I've mentioned Crown land. Mr. Speaker, under entrepreneurial spirit I would hope that water never becomes commodified and something that would be sold to the highest bidder. We've got first in time, first in right legislation, which is part of our entrepreneurial protective nature in this province. The first in time, historically speaking, had the water licences. In terms of the first in time, first in right, again, an entrepreneurial undertaking, in forestry we see companies because of their historical connection having large shares of forestry development in this province.

If we're going to have successful entrepreneurial relations, we have to have a balance between the value of the product and the sustainability of that product. If we're going to, for example, encourage entrepreneurial spirit, we don't want to have conflicting interests. Unfortunately, that's what we've got, Mr. Speaker, in terms of multi-use. We have the value of, for example, lodgepole pines as they are on the back of a lumber truck versus the entrepreneurial spirit of tourism, parks, and recreation.

When we're talking entrepreneurial, as we are with Motion 510, to enhance support for entrepreneurial education, we have to balance what it is we're selling, what it is we're leaving for a legacy, and the sustainability of the endeavour. Whether it's entrepreneurial activities such as this motion is all about, there has to be balance. Is the price that we're selling too low for the benefit we're getting?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to participate in the discussion on Motion 510.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to offer some additional comments on Motion 510. I first want to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-South – and I hope I got that right because I often confuse the two constituencies – for bringing up this motion.

Entrepreneurship is really one of the backbones of this province, I put to this Assembly. Many people from other provinces, other countries decide to come to Alberta for many reasons, but one of the biggest reasons why, I would say, entrepreneurs decide to set up shop in Alberta is because of our favourable climate towards business. Now, the previous member, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, had indicated that it's about balance, and I would agree with that, but where I think he and I would differ is as to where that balance lies.

I spoke with the sponsor of this motion a while ago, and he clearly indicated to me that the purpose of this is to promote and support programs in Alberta that develop entrepreneurship. Now, a particular distinction between this and other arguments that I've heard in the past is that this doesn't seek to have large subsidies for new business per se. I'm not saying that all subsidies are bad, but one thing that we need to remember in this Chamber is that we're always dealing with taxpayers' dollars here, and whenever we subsidize businesses, we basically increase the tax bill of everybody else. Again, I'm not saying there can be no subsidy, but at the same point in time we have to be very careful about the quantum and the type of subsidies that we do offer. So I'm happy that the mover of this motion has not advocated subsidies but, rather, is talking about education, talking about a proper climate.

Motion 510 proposes that the government work more closely with community groups that offer educational programs to teach entrepreneurial values and skills. I like the fact that he talks about it being a community group because different types of entrepreneurship may be conducive in different areas of the province, and when you have that type of local input, obviously, there are some things that will do better in Calgary or in Red Deer that may not do well up north or in other rural areas. These community groups, of course, can include high schools, postsecondary institutions as well as business groups like the local chamber of commerce. I have to say that, again, it is a good idea to be talking with these groups from the grassroots level up.

I first got involved with Junior Achievement when I was in high school, and I learned a lot about business and about relationship building that I was able to carry later when I founded two businesses: one a communications company and the other a real estate company, the latter of which still operates today. Motion 510 recognizes that entrepreneurship plays a very critical role in our economy and in our programs, and developing this skill set in people and inspiring them at an early age is something that we need to encourage.

Now, entrepreneurship and small businesses are some of the cornerstones of our economy in this province. Developing and recognizing this skill set talks about our future economic growth in this whole province. I have to say as well that Alberta is a leader in small business development.

Mr. Rodney: Agreed.

Mr. Denis: I'm happy the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed agrees with me.

I was able to grab a couple of stats here. For example, in 2009 it was estimated that for every thousand Albertans there were 89.2 small businesses. Now, that doesn't seem like a lot, around 8, 9 per cent, but at the same time when you compare to the national average of 68.1, that gives testament to the importance of small business entrepreneurship to our economy in Alberta.

In addition, it's worth noting that the GDP per business in Alberta was $891,000. Again, the national average was $700,000. Now, between 1988 and 2008, Mr. Speaker, about 22,000 small businesses were created in Alberta. This is an increase of 22 and a half per cent. I think this is something that we need to consider, that these people, whether these businesses succeed or fail, are taking a significant risk with their own capital and their own time throughout this entire province. Contributing with these risks, whether they succeed or whether they fail, does help bolster our economy, particularly in a challenging time.

I have to also indicate, as we mentioned earlier, that Alberta has very low personal and corporate taxes. Alberta has no PST, and as long as the Premier is the Premier, he has indicated that there will be no PST in this province. We also have highly developed infrastructure and transportation networks and a government committed to trade and openness through things like Bill 1 in 2008, which dealt with TILMA. But the most important thing to note here is that we have a very strong climate for wealth creation in this province, and that's where I think the balance is important.

We also have some current programs as well. We offer several programs designed to help people start or expand their own business. Motion 510 would work with and support these programs as well as draw attention to programs offered outside the government. This is important, too, because I often have many people who will call my office, and I'll indicate to them something that we actually do, and they have no idea. Not everybody actually goes and looks at every program like we do under the dome here. So this is important to increase this awareness.

We have things like the Business Link, which is a nonprofit organization funded by our government and the government of Canada. We have things like Employment and Immigration's self-employment program, another joint program with the federal government. We also have our own programs like the youth 'technopreneurship' program, which I wasn't aware of before I started researching this. It's run by the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology, and it aims to develop entrepreneurs dedicated to technological information. This program, again, targets youth in high schools and postsecondary institutions, offering large cash rewards to youth who develop innovative technologies.

Another one that's interesting, Mr. Speaker. We also have the Alberta youth entrepreneurship camp. The Alberta youth entrepreneurship camp is a week-long summer camp that is offered to Alberta youth. At this camp learners learn basic business skills, and campers own and operate their own small business community using real money, interestingly enough. This program is an example of how Motion 510 hopes to promote entrepreneurship in this province. It's an educational entrepreneurship program put on by both the government and community stakeholders.

I do want to respond just briefly to a couple of comments made by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. He talked about tuition, and he talked about how tuition is high. It's true. Education, Mr. Speaker, is expensive, and I paid some of those tuition bills in my youth as well, but at the same time we must understand that there also is a cost to education. It's already subsidized highly by the taxpayer. It's about creating a balance. For those who cannot afford tuition – and I do have some sympathy, being a former student leader myself – many of these people can go and seek assistance on an individual basis through scholarships, bursaries, and loans. We have to strike the balance between the cost of education but also the cost that the taxpayer pays for this education. I recognize that there is an external economy dealing with postsecondary education. We need to educate the leaders of tomorrow, but also they must share in that cost of the tuition with the taxpayer. I think that this government has endeavoured to strike a balance there.

The other thing the Member for Calgary-Varsity mentioned was that many businesses who actually go and share the profits through options, what have you, with their employees are, in fact, successful businesses. I'd have to agree with him there. He cited the example of WestJet. Well, I have to say, Mr. Speaker, for this member's edification and information, WestJet actually doesn't have a union. In fact, I'm not against unions per se, but at the same point in time WestJet provides an example out of my home city of Calgary that you don't need to have a union to have responsible business. They have an association. They share their shares with their individual employees. In fact, several friends of mine work there. They keep on telling me that their slogan is: because owners care. Everybody is a member of that organization. WestJet has been very profitable for our city and for our province, but at the same time just because you don't have a union doesn't mean that you're having irresponsible business practices.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that every member support the Member for Red Deer-South's Motion 510. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was really interested to see this motion brought forward by the Member for Red Deer-South because I think it's a fine idea. I think there are a couple of areas that really drive our province and make it better, and one of them is entrepreneurial skill, including that understanding of risk taking. I mean, that's the deal, right? You venture your capital, you risk it, and if you've got a good business idea and you run it well, you're going to reap the benefits big time. I think that appeals to a number of people, and they may not necessarily have the skills.

Now, according to the previous speaker there is a considerable number of agencies that are available to help teach or mentor individuals who want to pursue that line. I know that the Member for Calgary-Varsity also mentioned a couple of organizations.

I certainly have no hesitation in supporting what the member is recommending here. I've had a little bit of experience with this because one of the schools that I have in Edmonton-Centre – and I don't have a lot of them, so I have the privilege of being able to spend more time in my schools than most MLAs can just because I have fewer of them – got involved in a project called MicroSociety, which was actually a project out of the States. This particular school really went for it. They ended up raising money to redo some of their hallways. They had signage and storefronts and things like that.

It really was a project that was very focused on having kids involved. Every Friday afternoon they did MicroSociety. Their other classes were suspended. This was their learning experience. On the Friday afternoon they were each assigned a task. They might be a member of the government, which would be making decisions and rules about things. They had a police force, or a security force. They had a post office, and they had tax collectors, interestingly enough. Everything else in MicroSociety was about entrepreneurship; it was about making and selling. The hallways were filled with kids that did bookmarks and things to eat and all kinds of opportunities for them to buy and sell.

I was always really interested that there was so much focus on the business side and almost no recognition of how much of our society is and should be involved in the public side of our society. MicroSociety did recognize government, and it did recognize policing – I would put taxation under the government side, so I'm not going to make that a separate one – and the post office. So they really recognized three parts of what is in our public sector, but they didn't recognize all the rest of our public sector.

Government, obviously, is a huge employer of people and a big part of our public sector, but so are schools. The admin staff, teachers, janitorial staff, even the people who built schools until the government started doing P3s would also be involved in that public sector.

People involved in hospitals are involved in the public sector. The nurses, the technicians, the doctors, the administrators, the porters in the hallways: all of those people are employed in the public sector.

In the universities, again, it's a public body; it's public sector. Most people involved in recreation are involved in the public sector. They're working for a not-for-profit generally. People involved in the arts: individually, yes, they are entrepreneurs because they're selling their work or attempting to, but generally they come together in a co-operative agreement and will often be working for a not-for-profit theatre or dance company or art gallery.

5:30

The charities that we have are also huge employers if you look at United Way or all the ones that are involved in the health sector: the Diabetes Foundation, the Kidney Foundation, the Schizophrenia Society, the cancer-supporting agencies, those charities that work with the poor or the homeless or, for example, with HIV research and offering services to people who are living with HIV, all of those organizations involved in child welfare and protection and safety. Those are all in the public sector, as are those that work in the parks sector that aren't government parks, in the environment, in many cases churches, for the most part research and development, philanthropy, all of those involved in the justice system, in the jails, that whole spectrum from policing through the judiciary and to the jails and then on to those not-for-profits that deal with people in resettlement in halfway houses coming out the other side.

There's such an emphasis in our society on the business sector. I mean, it's far more valued to have a bachelor of commerce than it is, for example, to have an arts degree. We already put a lot of emphasis on the business side, the private corporate side of our society, and not very much respect or value on that whole side which employs an equal number of people, which is the public sector. So I have no problem in supporting what the Member for Red Deer-South is suggesting here. I think that's always a good idea. Certainly, education is never going to hurt.

The other area that I would suggest needs a little beefing up these days in the schools and a little bit more help is civics, the whole idea of being a citizen and participating in our society, including participating as a voter. We seem to be struggling with that right now, and a number of people just have no idea of how this whole system works anymore. We touch on it very briefly in grade 6 and grade 9, and that's about it. So anybody that wants to come up with a motion to increase civic participation would certainly get support from me.

As I said, I'm more than willing to support what the member has proposed here. I'm just trying to put forward that there are other parts to our society that do make it a good place to live, to learn, to work, to play. We're looking for a quality of life. That does involve a balance, and the balance is more than just the corporate sector and entrepreneurship. It can certainly bring us great wealth and great ideas in many cases, but all of us could probably name more well-known entrepreneurs than we could name well-known artists, for example.

I think I'll support this, but I want people to also be thinking about the other parts of our society that are just as deserving of attention and support. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to also join the debate today on Motion 510. I've very much enjoyed listening to the comments of other speakers, and I think this is a very important topic for us to debate because it's so essential to Alberta and to what Albertans are.

I have attended a number of events where I've run into people who have come from outside the province and have offered, unsolicited from me, an observation that they find Albertans to be very optimistic people with a can-do attitude. I would submit that that's what you need to be to be an entrepreneur. You know, I think Albertans are optimistic people, and that's what makes them good entrepreneurs. I certainly would acknowledge that small family-owned businesses in Alberta are the cornerstones of our economy and, certainly, the Canadian economy as well.

Some of the other speakers have offered some statistics to support the strength of Alberta entrepreneurship. They have kind of scooped me on some of those, so I won't repeat them, but I do have a few other ones which come from the Alberta Business Family Institute. Family-owned business generates approximately 60 per cent of Canada's GDP. It employs 6 million workers in Canada, full- and part-time, and creates 70 per cent of all new jobs in North America. It also provides – and this I find very interesting – 55 per cent of all charitable contributions. So family businesses, entrepreneurial groups are people with a public conscience, certainly, and a social conscience, too.

I mentioned the Alberta Business Family Institute. That's one of the many organizations supported by the taxpayers of Alberta, this one through the University of Alberta, that does great work in building and supporting entrepreneurship. Attached to the Alberta Business Family Institute is a project called creating pathways for entrepreneurial families. That group actually is based in Camrose, in my constituency, associated with the University of Alberta. Their focus, their initiative is rural development.

Now, even though we have great support for entrepreneurial activities in Alberta, we shouldn't think that there's no work left to be done. There are still great challenges, and that's the reason I think this motion is so important. A couple of sobering statistics also come from the same organization, the Alberta Business Family Institute: 70 per cent of family-owned businesses fail before they're passed on to the second generation, 88 per cent fail before they're passed on to the third generation, and 97 per cent fail before they're passed on to the fourth generation. Obviously, there's still lots for us to learn about how to sustain a good idea over generations.

No community can really be whole without a healthy local economy, and to have that, you need businesses and entrepreneurs, you need a skilled and educated workforce, and you need infrastructure. It's kind of a package deal. Just having people with entrepreneurial spirit does not create a healthy economy. We need all of these things together. That's where I think government support and encouragement can also come in.

We live in a competitive world, where it's very important for us to maintain and even redouble our efforts in supporting business because business creates jobs and wealth. I'll just give an example of where there's great potential for us to do good, and that would be in aboriginal communities, the youngest and fastest growing segment of our population in Alberta. If you think about many aboriginal communities, they have challenges in terms of economic development, and there may be less entrepreneurial activity than they would like. That, certainly, is an area where I would like to suggest that government could devote some resources and support.

We do have, actually, some initiatives such as the aboriginal entrepreneurship certificate program on eCampus Alberta, which assists with marketing, communications, accounting, law, and so on.

The creating pathways project, that I mentioned earlier, also is active in that area. But lots more could be done to help train our young people across the province in all areas. From my perspective, certainly, it's important for rural areas.

I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. I think it's important for us as an Assembly to make a strong statement about our support for this topic. With that, I encourage all members to support the motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Motion 510, sponsored by the Member for Red Deer-South. Enough has been said about small businesses creating good jobs in the economy and that small business is the backbone of any economy. There's no doubt that small and medium enterprises are the engine for growth. Whatever it takes to increase entrepreneurship will be great for Alberta's economy. It will go a long way to setting up more small businesses and improving not only the health of the economy but improving the quality of life for Albertans as a whole.

It will not only create much-needed jobs; if the entrepreneurs are trained at a younger age, then the likelihood of them setting up businesses will be greater than somebody who has no insight into small business, and they will most likely succeed in the small business they set up. I can give you the example of my son. He started working at a Subway because he wanted to do something on his own. He ended up buying a Subway franchise, which he is selling now. He's moving on to something else. He has been employing 10 to 12 people.

I can talk about immigrants coming from India. This gentleman never even walked behind a school, never mind going to school. He came here and worked hard, and then he started building homes. I think I mentioned this before. I called him. I wanted to build a deck on the back of the house. He came and he told me, "We will use teeter wood." I didn't know what he was talking about, and I've been here 40 years. You know, I said: "Yeah. Yeah." I didn't want to look like someone who didn't know what he was talking about. I told him: "Yes. Okay. You come tomorrow, and we will go and get whatever you need." I was wondering what "teeter wood" was. I went to bed that night, and in the middle of the night I woke up, and all of a sudden it came to my mind that he was talking about treated wood. He was talking about treated wood, but he was saying, "teeter wood." Up until today he still calls it "teeter wood." This guy has a small business. He's a businessman. He's building homes. He's a small home builder, and he's been employing 25, 30 workers. This is the spirit of small business, you know. It goes a long way to creating those jobs, which we need.

There are some benefits to entrepreneurship education. The benefit to elementary schools is that it increases attendance. There is a whole list of benefits: fewer discipline problems and an increased sense of self-control, awareness of career and entrepreneurial options. Then it goes on to say that benefits to middle school students continuing on to high school are to improve academic skills; to experience entrepreneurship across the curriculum; to improve economic literacy and understanding of capitalism; to improve financial literacy and develop workplace literacy; to demonstrate conflict resolution, negotiation, sales marketing, and persuasion skills and learn how entrepreneurs give back; and to learn how to make money. All these things will shape a young person's life.

Then the benefits to high school students, it goes on to say: creation of entrepreneurial thinkers who also have the skills and tools to start their own business, write a business plan, and apply economic principles. It further goes on to say: manage risk – risk is a major factor in setting up a small business, and if they can do their business plan, most likely they will know where they want to go with their small business – engage in ethical business practices, demonstrate financial management. Then it goes on further: provides benefits to postsecondary and adult students. So there are lots of benefits in having an education in entrepreneurship.

Entrepreneurship has been a defining feature of Alberta's history and is a cornerstone of our economy today. If Alberta is going to maintain a high standard of living compared to the global economy, we are going to need entrepreneurs and lots of them. Entrepreneurship education needs to focus on young people as well as communities that haven't shared in Alberta's prosperity as much as they should have, such as aboriginal communities.

We can go on to add new immigrants because it's very hard for them to start their new life. You know, some people were doing business, probably, in their respective countries, and when they come here, they are just shocked, you know, about where to go, where to start. If they are trained to set up a small business, I think that will go toward helping our economy as well.

Our higher education institutions and our cities have been doing a good job creating entrepreneurial cultures, but further government support for education would go a long way. I think this motion will, you know, strengthen that argument. For those reasons I'll fully support this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to speak to Motion 510, brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. The motion urges the government to enhance supports to community stakeholders who engage in delivering educational programs that develop entrepreneurial skills and promote the benefit of entrepreneurship to our society. It doesn't get much more positive than that.

Prior to being elected, I was self-employed as a General Motors dealer. I took that business over in 1995, and I pretty much had to learn by trial and error in the first years that I owned that dealership. Mr. Speaker, things have changed since then. From 1988 to 2008 Alberta led this country in small-business creation. In this 20-year period over 22,000 small businesses have been created in this province. Numerous programs have aided Albertans in their business ventures and helped ensure that Albertans are leaders in small business and in entrepreneurial enterprises.

One such program, the Business Link, has supported business development in Alberta since its inception. The Business Link provides services to small-business leaders on a variety of topics, including basic business planning, taxation, and legal planning. I'm proud to say that in my constituency the Strathcona county economic development and tourism branch has done great work in aiding small businesses and entrepreneurs. This branch regularly holds consultations for starting a business in the county and conducts visitations for existing businesses in our county. Mr. Speaker, this branch also works closely with the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce and assists businesses who are expanding or diversifying by providing business opportunities and information and additional resources that are available to them. The Strathcona county economic development branch and the Sherwood Park & District Chamber of Commerce have done a great job in promoting healthy business in our community. I think back to my early days of self-employment, and I really would have appreciated the guidance of groups like this in a number of different areas.

As stated earlier, the number of small-business creations in Alberta is the highest in our country. Our government has a solid record of providing educational tools to small businesses and entrepreneurs. I commend the Member for Red Deer-South for recognizing that the demand for these tools is increasing, as is the value of entrepreneurs in Alberta. I fully support Motion 510 and encourage all members of the Assembly to join me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know my time is short, so I'll shorten up my remarks, but I want you to know that I am a very strong supporter of this Motion 510, urging the government to enhance supports to groups delivering education programs that develop entrepreneurial skills. In fact, I'm very excited about entrepreneurship in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I remember the day 30 years ago when I crossed the border into Alberta with my family and the feeling of freedom that I immediately felt. I came from a manufacturing province with well-established business, industry, and corporations, with a lower percentage of small businesses than Alberta. I soon realized that I had moved to a province that would give me and my family the freedom to create that would match our spirit to achieve. Thanks to the support of entrepreneurship in Alberta my family and I were encouraged to plant our entrepreneurial roots and to grow two very successful small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, 95 per cent of all business in Alberta is small business. While small business is the backbone of our economy, entrepreneurs are the backbone of small business. That's why it's so important to support entrepreneurship in this province. In fact, the city of Grande Prairie was recently named Canada's most entrepreneurial city by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Red Deer has also been identified as one of Canada's top entrepreneurial cities. In fact, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business ranked Red Deer as number 7 in its study Communities in Boom: Canada's Top Entrepreneurial Cities. Thank you for that.

Mr. Speaker, we have a tradition of entrepreneurship in Alberta, one that this government is proud to support. As I promised, I will keep my remarks short because we did talk about some of the programs we already have in place to make entrepreneurship in Alberta successful. Since we've heard about some of the programs that we already have, I won't repeat them. I'll just conclude by saying that it's evident that there's a lot of entrepreneur training offered in Alberta, and as a province we will continue to rely on the drive and innovation of entrepreneurs to advance economic strength in Alberta.

I want to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing forward this motion. I ask this government to continue to support opportunities in this area so that Alberta can continue to offer the freedom to create for those who have the spirit to achieve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? There are two minutes left.

Then I will ask the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to close debate.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it was a pleasure to listen to the comments of all hon. members that weighed in on Motion 510 this afternoon. I really enjoyed the perspectives that were shared, and I think there were some excellent thoughts that came out of this. We started with some discussion around education and the importance of education in our society and, in particular, access. I think it brought to light for me the good work that's being done with Campus Alberta and the laddering opportunities. No matter where you start, where you are in our province, whether you want to achieve a diploma, a certificate, a trade, and you want to continue to progress to a different level of education, those laddering opportunities are provided through access that's created around our province. Our president at Red Deer College often is quoted as saying, "If you're qualified, we'll take you; if you're not qualified, we'll get you qualified," and that access leads to many opportunities for our youth.

We talked a bit about the importance of wealth creation and how it really is a function of our outlook on our society, the encouragement that's provided by mentors, the educational opportunities, the variety of financial instruments that can support a venture in our province, the ease of entry into business – we didn't talk today about BizPaL, which is a great new program supported by Service Alberta throughout the province – and, of course, the importance of mentoring opportunities.

You know, whatever sector of the economy you're in, if you're in the arts sector or you're in agriculture, there are entrepreneurs. In any geography, if you're in Milk River or if you're in Zama Lake, there are opportunities in this province. Any age: we talked about youth, but also we have senior entrepreneurs in our province and some great ones. Finally, whether you're new to Canada or you're a fourth- or fifth-generation Albertan, the opportunities are equal.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of the members of the Assembly to support Motion 510. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is 5:55, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:55 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. Let us ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two people who are very dedicated to making our communities stronger and safer, Chief Mike Boyd and the Edmonton Police Commission chair, Brian Gibson.

Mr. Gibson has been a member of the Edmonton Police Commission since 2005. He's also the current board chair of the Alberta law enforcement response teams. Mr. Gibson has been on the boards of many community organizations. He has an extensive background as an entrepreneur and philanthropist. He's committed to ensuring the safety and security of Edmonton neighbourhoods, and he is a valuable partner with my ministry in that regard.

With him today is somewhat of a guest of honour, Chief Mike Boyd, who has been with the Edmonton Police Service for the past five years of a longer than 40-year career in policing. During that time he's proved himself to be both a leader and a community builder, Mr. Speaker. Chief Boyd has worked hard to enhance the professionalism of the Edmonton Police Service, and he has raised the profile of the EPS and of the city as a result. He has received many accolades in his career, including being invested as a commander of the order of merit of the police forces by the Governor General of Canada. Chief Boyd appears here today on the eve of his retirement. He will step down from his position as chief of the Edmonton Police Service at the end of this year.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that we join and offer our thanks and our traditional warm welcome to our two special guests today.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 47 students from Deer Meadow school that comprise two grade 6 classes there. What could be better on a beautiful fall day than leaving the classroom on a field trip and coming up and visiting their Legislature? As I pointed out, they do own the place. I also ask a question to each of my classes: "Who all wants to be an MLA in the future?" I have to say that out of all the classes I've introduced over the years, there are more aspiring MLAs in this group than any of the others that I've ever introduced before. Not only that, if you look at them seated in the public gallery, you'll notice some very fresh haircuts. These are fantastic students who volunteered to raise funds for cancer. I'd like all the members of the Assembly to welcome them here today and give them the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose it is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you a group of 15 grade 6 and grade 9 students from the Eastside Christian Academy in Calgary. The students are joined today by Mrs. Marie Poulin and principal Frank Moody. I had a chance to meet with them very briefly earlier this afternoon. It is always a rare pleasure to receive students from the Calgary area, so I ask that they all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me today to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly a group of 46 students from Westpark middle school in Red Deer. This is the school that our children attended. In Red Deer we're very proud of the work that's done in preparing our future leaders, and Westpark middle school has an excellent reputation for advancing the ambitions of our future leaders. The students are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Lana Beierbach and Mr. Dave Cozens and parent helpers Mrs. Mariette Williamson and Mrs. Patti Stinson. I'd invite members from the Westpark middle school delegation to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly Mr. Matt McFadyen. He's accompanied today by my wife, Shirley. They're in the members' gallery. Matt is a second cousin to my wife. Although Matt is a born and bred Edmontonian, he cheers for the Stampeders, he tells me. He works for Trans Am pipeline, and I'd like you to give him the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my previous life as a lawyer I had the good fortune to meet a lot of clients who became friends. That's right: clients who became friends. There are two people here today who I count as very good friends although they are no longer clients. They come from northern Germany. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Peter and Evi Schröder. They're from Bremervörde, which is about halfway between Hamburg and Bremen. They are experts in municipal infrastructure. Peter is a civil engineer, and Evi works with him. They are experts in water management and environmental issues. They are here touring the Legislature today, and it was a great pleasure to have lunch with them. They're in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that all members give them the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Edmonton Police Chief Mike Boyd

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security introduced Chief Mike Boyd of the Edmonton Police Service. I am truly honoured to rise today and have the privilege to congratulate Chief Boyd on his achievements during his time with the Edmonton Police Service and to extend best wishes as he will be retiring at the end of this year.

Chief Boyd was officially sworn in as the chief of police on January 1, 2006. This followed 35 years of illustrious and distinguished service with the Toronto Police Service, leading into a short retirement. Our city and our province are very grateful that he was willing to reconsider retirement in favour of an opportunity to provide additional dedicated service and leadership to the one of the finest policing organizations, the Edmonton Police Service.

Initially I invited Chief Boyd to join us at the Alberta Legislature to celebrate receiving the national exemplary service medal bar on April 23, 2010. This award recognizes his 40 years of exemplary police service in our nation, which is characterized by good conduct, industry, and efficiency that serves as a model for others. Mr. Speaker, this recognition is important to acknowledge since to date Chief Boyd is the only member of the Edmonton Police Service to have received this award. Chief Boyd received this award in 1989 for the first time to mark 20 years of exemplary service, and the bars are subsequently awarded at 10-year intervals to honour the service to the community.

Chief Boyd has also been awarded several other honours, including his investiture as commander of the order of merit of the police forces by the Governor General of Canada, the Queen's golden jubilee medal by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, and the medal of merit by the Toronto Police Services Board.

Since his arrival in Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, Chief Boyd did not waver on his commitment to intelligence-led policing, combatting organized crime, and building proactive, safer communities for all to enjoy. He has served on many task forces and committees to promote safe community initiatives, including the Premier's Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force.

*Recently Chief Boyd announced his retirement from the Edmonton Police Service. After 40 years dedicated to policing and service, he will truly be missed by many. On behalf of our province and our city we are grateful for Chief Boyd's strong leadership and exemplary policing service.

Congratulations and heartfelt wishes to Chief Boyd and his wife, Margo, as they continue their life's journey.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our biggest mistakes in life are often the results of refusal to recognize and admit our mistakes. This government continues to jeopardize the lives of Albertans with its centrally controlled health superboard. They started out with a totalitarian gag order, forbidding our health care providers from speaking out. They threatened disciplinary action to any who dared speak out, then claimed to rescind the order a year later, but the reality and perception from our health care providers is that the code of silence hangs over their heads.

Over the past several weeks it has become public and clear that emergency room care in Alberta is in crisis. Several highly respected emergency room doctors have graphically described our ER system as on the brink of collapse. Leaked documents have detailed hundreds of ER horror stories. The Wildrose caucus has listened to and met with many health professionals across the province in order to formulate a series of proposals aimed at immediately addressing the ER crisis in a practical and time-sensitive manner.

The Wildrose Alliance proposes that the government of Alberta implement the following measures. One, ensure a chief medical officer is assigned at all times in every hospital with an emergency room. The CMO should be given unilateral authority to make decisions concerning all units in the hospital. The CMO must be able to open beds in non-ER units, reassign staff, activate additional staff, and if necessary override AHS directives, regulations, and regular staffing ratios in order to alleviate ER blockages that are endangering lives. Two, immediately activate the nurses needed to deal with the ER crisis. Three, immediately increase all necessary support staff. Four, open up additional acute-care beds by moving healthy seniors waiting in hospitals into temporary living accommodations such as senior-friendly apartments and other lodging arrangements. Five, work to greatly accelerate the building of long-term care and assisted living facilities as well as home care.

In closing, I want to thank those health care providers who have bravely spoken out and all front-line workers, without whom the crisis would be worse.

Family Violence Prevention Month

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, as you can see, black, blue, and white pins are being worn by all MLAs today. These pins signify our support to end family violence. Since November has been considered Family Violence Prevention Month, I thank all for that courtesy.

We all know family violence is a complex issue that is present in all our communities and affects more people than many of us realize. That is why Alberta continues to provide strong leadership and supports to help individuals and families facing family violence. The prevention of family violence and bullying initiative has made important strides in increasing our understanding of this issue. Through public awareness campaigns attitudes are changing, and people are learning how they can help someone who is affected by family violence. The toll-free family violence info line is available at 310-1818. This 24-hour resource offers help in more than 170 languages and can also give concerned Albertans information about how to help someone who may be in a difficult family situation.

Alberta also provides other resources like emergency shelters for women like Northern Haven in Slave Lake, safe visitation sites, victim support programs, domestic violence courts, help with establishing new households, treatment for offenders, protection orders, specialized police teams, and services for high-risk situations.

Mr. Speaker, the more we know about family violence, the more we can do what the pins say, and that is: End the Silence, Stop the Violence. Thank you.

School Board Trustee Elections

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to extend the Assembly's congratulations to the school board trustees across Alberta who are newly elected or re-elected to the position. Everyone acknowledges the importance of education to Alberta's future, but these individuals have shown the depth of their commitment to the educational success of Alberta's children.

Trustees have a pivotal role to play in the transformation of the K to 12 education system in Alberta to enable it to meet the educational demands of the 21st century. Their challenge will be to continue to engage Albertans in the discussion of the future of education that was created through Inspiring Education, Setting the

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Direction, and Speak Out and to help shape the response to those initiatives, the results of which are contained in the Inspiring Action report, released in June of this year. The information gathered from these initiatives will be used to help determine just how we begin to build the foundation for a K to 12 education system that will meet the needs of the 21st century.

Government has listened and responded to Albertans' wishes for the future of education. The focus of trustees is likely to change as a result of public engagement and education we have undertaken. Student success, community engagement, and fostering collaboration will be top priorities. Trustees will have the biggest impact by directly engaging their communities in the education of their children and by fostering collaboration with other organizations that have a hand in assuring student success. Parents, relatives, neighbours, mentors, and the general public have a role, too, in making sure our young people take care of themselves and others and contribute back to their community. Trustees can help enable that to happen.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Gifts for Government MLAs and Cabinet Ministers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Politicians and pundits these days spend a lot of time wondering why voters feel increasingly disconnected from democracy. The answer is simple. People don't trust politicians anymore. Why should they? It becomes more and more obvious every day that government MLAs in this province are compromised by a plethora of free gifts they receive from special interests. Everyone knows that gifts come with an expectation of access to power and influence. If these gifts are allowed in the ethics guidelines, then it's time the guidelines were changed.

Free trips, concert tickets, rounds of golf at exclusive resorts, fishing expeditions: government MLAs are really living it up. When the people that create our laws are seen to accept gifts from big donors and big business, it casts a pall over our entire democratic process. The vast majority of Albertans receive no such perks for doing their jobs. They put in a solid day's work for a day's pay and feel rightfully proud of themselves for making a contribution to Alberta.

Government MLAs not only receive a very generous salary and benefits package – the 30 per cent plus raise a couple of years back is more than an average salary in most of Canada – including bonuses for sitting on committees, additional compensation for being ministers, but on top of it all they feel it's okay to accept large gifts. You can afford to pay for your own Lady Gaga tickets. You can afford to play 18 holes on your own dime. You can afford to take a fishing trip to B.C. You can afford your own hotel rooms. What you can't afford is to erode your own integrity and the trust voters have placed in you, when many of them can't afford to care for their developmentally disabled children or their infirm parents, who languish in a continuing care system that your government has allowed to fall apart.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that I'm surprised; instead, all I can do is join my fellow citizens in disgust.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

National Pain Awareness Week

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to draw the attention of the House to National Pain Awareness Week, recognized across Canada each year during the first week of November. Chronic pain is a serious issue affecting approximately 6 million Canadians, 1 in 5 Albertans, and many of my constituents in Edmonton-Rutherford. Generally defined as pain persisting for longer than three to six months, chronic pain often accompanies chronic diseases such as arthritis, diabetes, and various neurological disorders. In addition to the devastating impact on the lives of individuals and their families, recent studies indicate that direct health care costs associated with chronic pain are estimated at more than $6 billion annually and lost productivity costs relating to sick days and job loss are at more than $37 billion nationally.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take the opportunity today to recognize the Canadian Pain Coalition. The coalition is a partnership of patient support groups, health professionals who care for people in pain, and scientists studying better ways of treating pain. The coalition develops educational programs and raises awareness in order to find solutions and treatment for people living with pain. As we commemorate National Pain Awareness Week in this House and in Legislatures across Canada, I would like to thank the members and volunteers of the Canadian Pain Coalition for their hard work and dedication. They have called for a national pain strategy to be developed in accordance with a charter of patient rights and responsibilities with respect to pain. We thank them for their continued efforts to raise awareness of this most important issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, first question.

Gifts for Government MLAs and Cabinet Ministers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier is off on a junket to India with his entourage. We've got ministers accepting gifts of fishing trips in B.C. and rounds of golf in luxury resorts. Other ministers are taking free tickets to concerts: Rod Stewart, Fleetwood Mac, and Lady Gaga. We have a government MLA who didn't pay property taxes until the debt became public . . .

Mr. Oberle: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I recognize a point of order. We'll deal with it after question period.

Dr. Swann: . . . and we see the recent Progressive Conservative conference awash with advertising by corporations that do business with this government. To the Deputy Premier: how can Albertans have any faith that this government is not beholden to special interests?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the Ethics Commissioner is an officer of this Legislature. The Ethics Commissioner is the one that this Legislature has set in place to manage the rules that this Legislature has put in place around gifts, around donations, around all of those things that MLAs go to the Ethics Commissioner to talk about. Despite what the opposition and many pundits claim, there's no scandal here. All MLAs are routinely invited to various functions and various events, where we have the opportunity to build relationships and we have the opportunity to interact with our stakeholders. That's what our job is intended to do.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, how can Albertans have any confidence that this government's decisions are based on good judgment and not on returning favours?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate. The rules that are set are set by this House, including the hon. members across the way. The rules state very clearly that MLAs are allowed to accept gifts as a result of social obligations or protocol up to a limit of $400, and if it's above that, the Ethics Commissioner must approve it. All of the items that have been listed in the report as well as what the hon. member is bringing forward have been discussed with the Ethics Commissioner, and he has not ruled that there's anything unethical or scandalous there. I would suggest that the hon. member might want to take his report to the Ethics Commissioner.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's been argued by this government that there's a connection between taking a golf trip to B.C. and being a public champion for physical activity. Really? Can the Deputy Premier explain how the interests of Albertans are advanced by ministers travelling out of province to play golf and go fishing, specifically?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I didn't advance that argument. I'm not sure where he got it from. But I can tell you what we need to do as MLAs. All MLAs need to build relationships with their constituents and with stakeholders, and we also have to go outside of our borders.

The hon. member mentioned the trip to India. Where does he think Alberta is going to export the massive amounts of productivity that we have? Where does he think we're going to get the customers that are going to allow us to create the tax revenue that's going to generate the type of social programs Albertans have become accustomed to and deserve?

The Deputy Speaker: Second question from the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again my questions are for the Deputy Premier. Over the last couple of years we've seen example after example of this administration's personal greed, from giving themselves huge raises to paying big salaries for committees that do not work to paying political appointees huge bonuses and giving sweet patronage appointments, with all the trimmings, to ex-MLAs. The government seems to ignore any limits to good taste and the bounds of propriety. To the Deputy Premier: today Albertans are once again angry over government ministers and MLAs accepting all kinds of free gifts, gifts that could not be described in any other way except as bonuses, more MLA bonuses. Can you explain why MLAs are still claiming bonuses?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was here during the Members' Services discussions and all those other things that brought that to the House in this Legislature and is obviously grabbing a little bit at straws. I would say that we might want to look to the Ethics Commissioner's comments in the report, including the newspaper article that they love to quote, where the commissioner's office said that the MLAs in Alberta are really very ethical, an ethical bunch of people. So we are fortunate as Albertans that we have the rules in place, that we're as transparent as we are that we're having this discussion today.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Looking at the record of prosecutions and sanctions for breaching the ethics rules, we find that in the 20 years of the existence of the legislation not one breach has been prosecuted – not one. Does this not show, Mr. Deputy Premier, that the legislation is woefully inadequate?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would say that's because of the fact that we're transparent in the sense that we publish these things that we're required to report to the Ethics Commissioner, that every member of this Legislature sits down with the Ethics Commissioner on an annual basis and has discussions about things that have happened and that might happen in the future. The Ethics Commissioner is the one that gives the ruling and says that it's either within the realm of the rules or it's outside of the realm of the rules. If it's outside of the realm of the rules, we cut the cheque.

The Deputy Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ethics Commissioner finds that the government is keeping to the straight and narrow, but normal Albertans are outraged by this trick-or-treating by government MLAs. When will the government give real strength to the ethics rules so that the rules are no longer a joke to average Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's obviously looking for ghouls and goblins under the pumpkin patch. I think that what we have is a discussion around the rules that this Legislature has set, the rules that are set by all members of this Legislature, by all parties. There's been no breach of those rules. One of the reasons why we haven't had those kinds of breaches is because we've had great communication with all of the ethics commissioners in the past, and I believe that this Ethics Commissioner has the true appreciation for Albertans and the true feelings of Albertans in his heart.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services in Red Deer

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next set of questions is for the minister of health. Red Deer regional hospital has the longest wait times of all the regional hospitals in Alberta, three and a half times longer to be admitted than if that patient was in the Medicine Hat hospital, for example. Yet this government is closing 200 long-term care beds in Red Deer and doing nothing to help reduce the wait times in emergency. To the minister: why is the minister ignoring the simple solution of keeping these beds open to help move patients out of acute care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I've asked Alberta Health Services to do is take a look at what they can do in the immediate time frame there. I am aware that there might be a crunch coming in the emergency rooms in Red Deer, and we're looking at alternatives. For example, possibly the Valley Park Manor might come into play here. Residents have been moved from there over to the Extendicare Michener Hill centre, as they have been from the other nursing home. So there are some opportunities there that I've asked them to explore.

Dr. Swann: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, physicians from Red Deer and the surrounding area have said that even temporarily keeping those 200 long-term care beds open would seriously reduce the pressures on acute-care beds and emergency room times. If the minister won't listen to us and won't listen to the health care professionals, who is he listening to on this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago the emergency docs who represented Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat but provincially in a way as well, obviously, because the chair from the AMA was there, brought to my attention what some of the difficulties were, specifically in Edmonton and Calgary. I believe that there's a similar meeting that will be coming up with respect to Red Deer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the people of Red Deer want some action on keeping the Valley Park Manor and the Red Deer nursing home open, do they have to book a game of golf with the minister at a private course in Victoria just to get the minister to listen?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I addressed the issue of Valley Park Manor in the first question. I won't take up the House's time to do that. But I think physical activity is a very good thing, and I stand by helping out junior golfers. I'm president of the Alberta Friends of Golf. We helped start the U of A Golden Bears golf program, and I'm very proud of that for the youth of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Emergency Medical Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Wildrose caucus hand delivered a letter to the health minister and to the Premier's office outlining proposals we've gathered from ER doctors and health care professionals across this province to address the ER crisis and other health care issues. Unlike the minister, who talks about how many ERs he's been to and who he's talked to, we don't talk, Minister; we listen. We're proposing some real ideas from the professionals who work in the trenches. Minister, my question to you, firstly, is: will you immediately . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don't think she quite got to the question. But I did receive the letter that she's referring to. I find it really interesting that in this particular letter they're talking about spending more money, adding more staff. Whereas two months ago they were talking about cutting staff, cutting $1.3 billion to health and education, today they're talking about spending. You know, blowing and sucking is something reserved for other parties.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the minister should read the whole letter. We talk about prioritization.

To the same minister: will you immediately designate chief medical officers for every hospital in Alberta who have the authority to make decisions about care in every hospital ward, including the authority to override Alberta Health Services' directives?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that people would find it quite offensive if the letter they suggested here were to be enacted, where they say, "if necessary, override AHS directives, regulations or regular staffing ratios." Clearly, they don't know what they're talking about because you've got collective agreements, you've got bargaining agreements, you've got protocols that have to be adhered to. I think they should do a little bit more homework before they offend all of the nurses and others that are tied to collective agreements.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, Mr. Speaker, he has a good point on some of the things that he's brought up in regard to the regulations and the ratios.

Again to the same minister: given that the health care professionals have warned us there is a shell game going on in respect to beds – in other words, Mr. Minister, you open two beds; you close two beds – what is the net increase of beds in Calgary since January 1 of this year? The net increase. [interjections]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that today AHS is opening 12 transition unit beds at the Foothills. Twelve new transition beds will be opened at the Rockyview in about 10 days. Fourteen new transition beds will be opened at the U of A within a week. Two new medical observation beds will be opened at the Royal Alex within a week. On November 29 an additional 20 new hospice beds will be opened at the Peter Lougheed. [interjections] Wait; there's lots of good news here. The new Villa Caritas will bring on stream 46 more geriatric psychiatric beds. [interjections]

Could I have permission to continue?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, when there are questions and answers, lower your noise level, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

East Edmonton Health Centre

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of health told this House the provision of services at the East Edmonton health centre was a planned "staged, phased-in approach." The minister is utterly wrong in this claim. I have documents from Alberta Health Services going back to 2006 that show the urgent care centre was planned for the spring of 2009. Will the minister apologize to the House for his incorrect assertions yesterday and admit that it was government cuts that ended the plan to bring in the urgent care centre in 2009?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services did not exist in 2006. What I stated in the House yesterday was that I was not aware of anything other than a staged or phased plan for the East Edmonton health centre as advanced to me by Alberta Health Services. The reason that it had to be staged is because of the economic recession and, secondly, because we had to bring in a staged approach to address how many staff members were needed there. I can tell you right now that there are 136 staff members approximately at that facility providing outstanding community services needed there.

Mr. Mason: I'm sure they are, Mr. Speaker, but the point, really, that we're dealing with now is wait times in emergency rooms. The ER at the Royal Alexandra hospital is one of the most crowded in the entire province. Given that the urgent care centre was intended to handle up to 34,000 cases that would no longer go to that emergency room, will the minister fund the urgent care centre immediately to ease the strain on wait times at the Royal Alexandra emergency room?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the member is doing a very good job of confusing things here. He knows full well that an urgent care centre is coming there and that it's not going to have overnight stays for so-called admitted patients. So let's get that straight. Urgent care is about nonadmitted patients, about helping those people with more minor injuries. Those are not the kinds of people that are blocking beds, as the medics would tell you, over at our acute care centres. So let's get some facts on the table here. That urgent care centre will come in as part of phase 2.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister is trying to clear up confusion by creating even more confusion. This urgent care centre was designed to keep 34,000 people from going to the emergency room at the Royal Alex in the first place. It's only $9 million to fund it, Mr. Minister. Will you please fund it and get it up and running next year as soon as possible?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no confusion whatsoever. We're talking about minor cases, typically a few broken bones that are non life threatening, okay? Those are the kinds of things that urgent care centres tend to be focused around. Now, the $9 million, if that's what the correct number is for current costs, is being looked at as part of phase 2. When we get along to phase 2 – that'll take about a year to two years, perhaps slightly more to build that added capacity into the system, to hire the staff for it – it will be done. It's in the plans to do it. So I don't know what the member is confused about over there. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Again I want to remind hon. members in that corner to please keep the noise down.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

PDD Administrative Review

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people supported by PDD and the service providers who give the needed supports have been unfairly treated by this government over the last year. First, it was the cuts to service providers' budgets. Then this summer the minister had KPMG do a review of the PDD community boards and service providers, and the future of PDD is still hanging in the balance. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: the terms of reference for this review show that the final report was supposed to have been received on September 15, so why hasn't it been released yet?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, on June 16 I announced a PDD administrative review. The review is about a more effective and efficient administration of the PDD program. I'd like to make it clear that the review is not about reducing funding or changing the PDD program. I have received the report, and the report is under review.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Taxpayers' dollars went to pay for this review, so Albertans and the people who rely on PDD services have a right to know what the minister is planning for the program. When will the full report, complete with recommendations, be released?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I know that we all share the same goal of having an effective and efficient PDD program for our people with developmental disabilities. This administrative review focuses on how we administer the services, and everything is on the table. The report is now proceeding through the government process. When I have finished reviewing it, I will be releasing this to the public.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps a couple of questions: could I get a timeline on that, and will the minister commit right now that the PDD community boards will not be centralized, when the example from the health care system leaves much to be desired?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important review. It's about delivering services the best way possible so that we have the best results for our people with disabilities. We've put everything on the table. When the review is ready to go forward, we will bring it forward to everyone in this Legislature.

2:10 Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I and many of my colleagues in the House have been receiving messages from Albertans who are concerned about the proposal to purchase 16,000 acres of public land in Cypress county. The lands under consideration are largely intact parcels of native grasslands which are important to many wildlife species, including most of Alberta's species at risk. Only 14 and a half per cent of Alberta's grasslands are still in their intact state and remain in the public domain. Hunters, conservation groups, farmers, ranchers, and ordinary Albertans are asking questions about the potential loss of this precious resource. My questions are all for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will the minister do the right thing and assure Albertans that there will be no sale of this public land unless . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As has been explained in the House previously, our department has received a proposal to buy a parcel of public land. The department reviewed the proposal for wildlife and conservation values and also for the economic value of the proposal. The question remains of the maximum value for Albertans being received on a direct sale versus an open tender process. That question remains. However, I must point out that the proponent has requested that this application be withdrawn, and this has been done.

Dr. Brown: Well, that's very good news, Minister. Will the minister ensure that any future proposals to purchase public lands in the white area will be subject to a public consultation process to examine the merits of any proposed scheme and to preserve the wildlife?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, it's an important question and needs to be answered. We do not at this point in time and I do not anticipate that the transfer of public land for agricultural purposes would require public consultation.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister and his department develop a policy to ensure future protection of Alberta's remaining publicly owned grasslands?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, you know, the truth of the matter is that what we are talking about here is that there are about 10.4 million acres of native grassland that remain in the province of Alberta. This particular proposal, although it seemed large, was about .15 per cent. We're talking today with groups of people in municipalities in northern Alberta about the transfer of 30,000 to 40,000 acres of public land to put into agricultural production. This province believes that agricultural production is extremely important, and we will continue to deal with it.

Tailings Pond Emergency Response Plans

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, an aluminum tailings pond failure in Hungary, a mercury tailings pond failure in B.C., a copper tailings pond failure in Quebec, a lead and zinc tailings pond failure in Macedonia: things do go wrong with tailings ponds, and when they do, the effects are catastrophic. The oil spill at Wabamun exposed government emergency response plans as pathetically unprepared, and government response plans continue to be shrouded in secrecy. We're expected to take their word and trust them. Well, I, for one, don't trust them. To the Minister of Environment: why aren't Alberta Environment's dam safety emergency response plans publicly available?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member referred to the incident at Wabamun. I was not the minister at the time, but my colleague across the way was, and I think he did a very intelligent thing at that point in time when he formed a rapid-response emergency response team within Alberta Environment. That is ASERT. It's a system that has worked very, very well. It is ASERT in conjunction with the operators of any kinds of these facilities as well as municipalities that are responsible for those emergency plans.

Ms Blakeman: They're not publicly available.

Back to the same minister: given that it is reasonable to keep critical infrastructure and the security around it private but not what the community can expect in case of an emergency, why does the government keep tailings emergency response plans confidential and away from the neighbours that are affected by it? Why? This is no terrorism thing.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the member has identified one of the significant issues. If we are in fact going to have an emergency response team to deal with these kinds of issues, one of the things that we don't want to do is let someone who may want to be subversive, may want to be able to create a situation be aware of all of the plans that we do have in place.

Ms Blakeman: That's phony, and he knows it.

Back to the same minister: given that the oil sands are located in a challenging northern climate and a leak during the winter under the ice may not be discovered until months later, what effort has government put into a concrete, detailed plan on winter breaches of tailings ponds, and would he make it public?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there is a rigid requirement for ongoing monitoring of these dams and dikes that are there. The fact of the matter is that we are confident that there are the necessary checks and balances in place to ensure that the scenario the member describes is remote in the extreme.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Medicine Hat Pain Management Clinic

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I tabled a petition in the House on behalf of my constituents in Cypress-Medicine Hat urging the government to adequately fund the pain management clinic in Medicine Hat, operated by Dr. Wardell, beyond the current two-year contract program. In follow-up to this petition I would like to direct all my questions to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Number one, given that Dr. Wardell's clinic provides reputable and cost-effective pain management services to the citizens of Medicine Hat and area, why did it take so long for Alberta Health Services to commit to the current contract with Dr. Wardell?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, as members here would know, contracts are negotiated instruments, and they can take quite some time to get down to the nitty-gritty details. I think the important thing is that there is now a new contract in place for two years so that the important service for pain management that Dr. Wardell and his staff provide is available to the community. This is very good news. It took a little longer to negotiate perhaps than people had hoped, but the job got done, and the services are continuing on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental: given the fact that the current contract is for two years only, what assurances can this minister give my constituents that funding for this vital clinic will continue beyond the two-year contract period?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that Alberta Health Services did was to immediately create a steering committee that would take a look at the entire south half of the province, roughly from Calgary down. That includes, obviously, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge and other places in between. As part of that, Dr. Wardell will be lending his expertise so that perhaps they will be able to come to a longer term solution. That's what's been requested, and I hope that's what they will deliver.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Will Dr. Wardell's clinic be part of the future pain management program that you're planning, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I would personally hope so. I visited Dr. Wardell's pain management clinic. It looks like an excellent facility, and the services they provide are equally excellent because we've heard from some of the people receiving services through that pain management clinic. I can't predict the future, but I would certainly hope that with Dr. Wardell providing his expertise to this steering committee, those points of view would come forward and be addressed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Child Intervention System Review

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ministry of children's services has finally released recommendations from the Child Intervention Review Panel. The panel made 14 recommendations that point to layers of mismanagement in the ministry. In response the ministry has rejected four central recommendations, some of which I've raised in the past. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: it is clear that the minister is unable to single-handedly solve the numerous problems within the ministry, so why not accept the recommendation to empower the Child and Youth Advocate to provide individual support?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important report that this member is referring to. You've heard here in the Assembly over the past year that we've been looking forward to the report. I can tell you that it has been recently released. There were 14 recommendations, as you know, hon. member, and we did accept 10 of the recommendations and did not accept four, as the member has identified. The one that he is referring to is the Child and Youth Advocate position. But if you look at the next recommendation, recommendation 8, it relates to the child and family service quality council, which will report publicly at arm's length through this ministry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

2:20

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The problem is the shortness of the arm.

Why does the minister refuse to accept the recommendation to improve off-reserve service delivery for aboriginal children and youth, who account for only 9 per cent of Alberta's population but make up over 63 per cent of children in government care?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This recommendation that the member is referring to is recommendation 4. You're correct. There are 64 per cent of aboriginal children in child intervention. We know that through our experience, through our research, and that is trending upward to 70 per cent, which is a very sad situation. The reason I did not accept this recommendation, hon. member, is because I did hear from aboriginal leaders – elders, chiefs – in the community that they would like to be very much a part of the solution that would empower aboriginal people to look after their children and to protect them, and I respect that. I will be meeting with them once again at the end of November. They have said that this is not the right model for them, and I will look to see what is the right model.

Mr. Chase: Seventy per cent of children and youth in care being aboriginal: how long can we tolerate this? How much longer will this minister stand behind the excuse of needing more consultation before actually taking action to improve care of aboriginal children in the system? This panel has already consulted for well over a year. Action.

Mrs. Fritz: You know, Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that I am hearing this member say that aboriginal elders and leaders in the community should not be a part of responding to the needs of their children and how to protect them in care. That's what you have just said. This recommendation is a recommendation of principle, but I can tell you that I will be listening to the aboriginal community in the formation of what is the right model for their children off reserve.

Mr. Chase: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll deal with it at the end of the question period.

The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Highway 21

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to see that the twinning work on highway 21 just east of Sherwood Park has finally wrapped up. More than 10,000 cars a day use this stretch of highway, and my constituents are looking forward to the enhanced access and safety of this new four-lane highway. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. Although this is good news, my constituents continue to raise issues regarding the light wait times. It takes a long time to get through those intersections, Minister. I'm just wondering what you're planning to do about that.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to tell this hon. member and all his constituents that the taxpayers of Alberta have invested $115 million in that stretch of highway, and that's about quality of life for Albertans.

About the lights. Yes, the Transportation department has been monitoring those four new traffic lights since we installed them last December, and there have been some adjustments made during the winter to improve the left turning lane. The department will continue to monitor the operation, and we will do the adjustments as needed . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order. We'll deal with it after.
The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agreed, it is good news, and our constituents, obviously, really appreciate this new highway.

My first supplemental to the same minister. Constituents also do have some concerns, though, Minister, about the noise levels on that section of highway as it passes alongside Sherwood Park. I'm wondering what's happening to address those concerns.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to remind this hon. member once again that the noise levels from that particular section are below our provincial guidelines. The province measured those sound levels along highway 21 in the spring of '07, and those levels were way below the guidelines of 65 decibels over a 24-hour period. Those sound levels are not expected to exceed provincial guidelines till at least 2040. That said, the department will be making sound measurements again now that the twinning is complete.

Mr. Quest: Well, it's good that we're taking another look at it, Minister.

My final supplemental to the same minister: the speed limits on this new stretch of highway are also a concern, so I'm just wondering what the minister is doing to address those.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member should be happy to know that the speed limit has been reduced already to 80 kilometres per hour from north of highway 16 to south of 628. All of the new signals have prewarning flashing lights on them. The reduction in speed is necessary to accommodate the new configuration, that allows for smoother traffic flow. This is a significant project, and we will continue to invest in our highways to keep Alberta moving.

Medical Procedure Wait Times

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House – and I quote – the minister of health said to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek:

I don't have the answer on why I have not been able to provide wait times; however, I will get the answer when I leave this House. To the minister. Today I'd like the answer on what he found out.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm not sure which wait times you're referring to, but I can tell you that in Edmonton and Calgary we have EIP wait times. Are you talking about admitted patients or nonadmitted patients?

Mr. Boutilier: There are so many wait times, how many answers do you want me to give you in terms of wait times? It's happening all over Alberta.

Given that the minister doesn't have an answer today, as he committed to this House, does the minister of health realize that he could jeopardize the millions of dollars from the federal government because of his failure to report wait times in Alberta hospitals as a benchmark?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are many different types of wait times. If the member would just tell me exactly what he's looking for, I'd be happy to oblige. I'll get Alberta Health Services on it right away. We keep track of and we report wait times at various facilities. I mean, there are 400 different facilities in the province. If you could just sharpen up your question, hon. member, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health, to all Albertans who are watching in emergency rooms, is failing to answer the question. He's not aware of the Wait Time Alliance relative to the question yesterday, so clearly he's not actually listening, again, to the question. You're jeopardizing millions of dollars from the federal government. You talked tough at the PC convention about: we're going to fight Ottawa. Yet your failure to report wait times federally is costing Albertans millions of dollars. Explain this, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the member is clearly off on some other tangent in some field of his own because we do report. That information is available. If he's talking about wait times in emergency rooms, that information is available on a per-site basis, and there is going to be more of it coming forward. In fact, I'm going to be doing more of it with the docs when I chat with them on Friday. That information is already there. It's already being reported. Perhaps the member could tell me exactly which site he's interested in. I'd be happy to give him the specific details. There's no problem whatsoever. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Again, hon. members, we need to hear the answer. Please, when the answer is given, don't make too much noise.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, due to the reductions in legal aid eligibility guidelines Albertans who receive assured income for the severely handicapped, the poorest of the poor here in Alberta, now have to make a down payment or pay monthly for assistance in court. Albertans who receive AISH already live beneath the poverty line, and now they have to pay extra for help in court. Does the minister really call that access to justice?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If people come within the financial eligibility guidelines, then they will certainly be eligible for legal aid. Based on the circumstances the member has just described, I see no reason why that wouldn't be the case.

Mr. Hehr: Well, the CTLA believes your pilot project has created a two-tier legal system, one where the wealthy get first-class legal services and the poor get denied access to justice. What is your response to this?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm very aware of the CTLA's view. I'm not quite sure what the member's view is. He may have an independent view, or he may simply be quoting other people. We have not cut legal aid in this province. We have doubled our commitment to legal aid over the past four years. People that require legal representation in criminal court and civil court, family law in this province get it.

2:30

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not what I'm hearing.

How can the minister say that she's meeting commitments when Legal Aid Alberta is clawing back money from Alberta's most vulnerable people to provide services that she concedes are both a legal right and a natural right?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if the member should really be characterizing any action of the Legal Aid board. We're in touch on a weekly basis with Legal Aid. We manage legal aid in conjunction with the Legal Aid board. We're fully aware of what Legal Aid is doing. Legal Aid is continuing to do what we as Albertans want them to do, which is to ensure that people who are going to court are getting legal advice and legal representation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

CCSVI Clinical Trials

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Multiple sclerosis patients have experienced some relief from their conditions by the so-called liberation treatment invented by Italian Dr. Zamboni by going out of the country for treatment. In Canada an MS patient cannot even get a scan to determine if there is a blockage in the veins leading to the brain. The provinces of Saskatchewan and Newfoundland have recently agreed to go ahead with clinical trials to study the effectiveness of the liberation treatment. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Are you proposing to join these other two provinces in conducting clinical trials? If not, why not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, just for clarification, I believe Saskatchewan is exploring the possibility of clinical trials once they have received ethical approval, whereas Newfoundland is doing observational studies. Last week I met with a number of neurologists here in Alberta as well as patients who have had the Zamboni treatment and with advocates for MS research in general.

With respect to the question, however, specifically, please know that we are looking at some strategies that would help move this along to fill what the Canadian Institutes of Health Research called a void or a shortage of clinical evidence that would support the safety and efficacy of proceeding. Once safety and efficacy have been addressed, at that point we can consider the next steps, including possible clinical trials if that's what's warranted.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that the test is commonly administered for other blockages of the veins, what can possibly be the downside of allowing the test to determine if there is a blockage in the veins of an MS patient?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the Doppler test is that it's noninvasive, that it's an ultrasonic diagnostic test. I did speak with some people who actually had it done in Vancouver I believe it was. I also understood that some had something similar done in Ontario, but I don't know that that practice is still continuing there. The point here is that the particular test being referred to is not typically conducted for possible blockages of veins leading from the brain. At least that's my understanding. We'll find out more for you, hon. member, or your constituents on whose behalf you're asking in terms of the technical medical descriptions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A further question, that again is somewhat technical, to the same minister: given that a blockage exists in a person's veins, does it not seem like common sense that the relief of that blockage would improve one's health?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is part of the thesis advanced by some. I want to indicate, however, that the Zamboni research only came to light, the preliminary research in that respect, in 2009. Again I have to stress that safety and efficacy have to first be satisfied before doctors will endorse it, embrace it and before the world-renowned experts who met in Ottawa at the end of August would also endorse it. But work is progressing, and we are doing our part through the Hotchkiss Brain Institute study, which is being undertaken by Dr. Costello, and as soon as we have that information plus some other information that we're actively working on, I think we'll see some good progress in this regard.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shoddy workmanship continues to put homes and condos at risk of rotting from moisture penetration and mould. Two years ago a municipal study warned that if the government did not do a better job of protecting Albertans from shoddy builders, the results could be, quote, disastrous. This report was the latest in a series that goes back almost a decade, but the Minister of Municipal Affairs thinks we need more studies. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is the government of the richest province in Canada powerless to protect homeowners from high repair costs and the health risks caused by mould and moisture?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ministry and our staff are looking at a range of solutions to address the individual concerns that are out there. I need to point out to the Legislature here that we are the ones that initiated the reports following the complaints that we were getting from citizens right across the province of Alberta, and we're the ones that are following up on it. Nobody else had initiated those particular reports. We're spending time now to analyze the reports and look at the various solutions that might be available to us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been 10 years, Mr. Minister, and Albertans are still waiting for some action.

How can the minister claim that poorly built outer walls affect only a small number of homes and condos when we know that the government does not collect any data on rotting buildings?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we have done some surveys, and we've got an indication of how extensive the damage is. Certainly, in the late summer of 2008, for instance, the parliamentary assistant led the first broad review in consultation with various stakeholders on various construction practices to address the particular issues.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: will the minister take some responsibility and actually investigate complaints that municipal inspections are not finding shoddy workmanship before it's passed on to the buyers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are looking at potential solutions, and we are working with industry. We're working with our inspection services to try to find solutions that will satisfy individuals. We recognize that the purchase of a home or a condo is probably one of the biggest investments that individuals will do in their lifetime, and we want to ensure that that investment is protected.

Grande Prairie Hospital Construction

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, Grande Prairie is one of Canada's fastest growing cities. Its population has nearly doubled in 20 years. The people need another hospital. In July the Premier announced that a new health facility would finally be built in Grande Prairie, which is great news for my constituents, but they want to see signs that the project is really happening. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure. How do we know that the project is actually moving ahead?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are making excellent progress on the Grande Prairie hospital. I'm very happy to report that soil testing is complete. We have completed the request for qualification process, that closed on October 19. We did have 29 submissions, which really showed a strong industry interest, and I'm very confident that the consultants will be selected in December.

Mr. Drysdale: To the same minister: when will we actually see construction happening?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the zoning of the land acquisition is moving ahead. Health along with the college officials and the municipal officials are working together to include a postsecondary component at the hospital. I am very confident that next summer we will see the initial construction under way, that we'll see some earth being moved. By fall I expect that the concrete and steel will begin to be part of the project.

Mr. Drysdale: To the same minister: what will happen with the existing facilities at the Queen E II hospital?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. I want to say that the existing Queen E II has served the Grande Prairie area and will continue to serve the people of Grande Prairie. The existing hospital will be renovated, and we will expand the ambulatory care. I also say that the needed renovations for the emergency room will be completed so that emergency services can continue while we build the new hospital. I think it's very important for the people of Grande Prairie to know that the hospital that is being built is a hospital that is going to include acute care . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Riverview.

2:40 Medical Procedure Wait Times

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. On page 79 of the 2009-10 annual report from that minister's department it itemizes under transfers from the government of Canada the wait times reduction. It itemizes about $27 million in funding coming from the federal government to reduce wait times. The Wait Time Alliance, that's being discussed here, is telling us that your government is not reporting information to them that they require, the only province not to do so. Why aren't you?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Wait Time Alliance is a group of physician specialty associations who publish their own monitoring of wait times. As such, they do this by looking at publicly available wait times on websites. Unfortunately, as I indicated yesterday, our wait-list registry, the public site, is down right now. We hope to have it up fairly soon. It's not a question of us wanting to or not wanting to; it's a question of that site simply being not available. However, basically the same information is available through Alberta Health Services in their quarterly reports.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's apparently news to this minister, but his department committed to file information on one wait time. Each province took on one. Alberta took on cancer wait times and has failed to report to the federal government. Is this because cancer treatment wait times are chronically and continuously getting worse in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. I would hope not. In fact, we have a very aggressive cancer strategy, and the people that I've met with and spoken with have requested that we accelerate some of our plans in that regard. That's why we opened the radiation therapy corridor a couple of months ago in Lethbridge. That's why the new Grande Prairie hospital will have another radiation therapy corridor. That's why Red Deer is also going to have one. And that's why we're stepping up our recruitment processes for more GI oncologists, which has now yielded two more people in that field.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. My last question, Mr. Speaker, will be to the minister of finance, who has raised concerns in this Assembly about unfair federal transfers to the provincial government. How can this government complain about federal transfers from Health when its own department of health is failing to report on current federal programs? Where's the accountability?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we can complain about federal transfers to health. If you take out the Alberta portion, which is a couple of billion, the total value of that program, the Canada health transfer, is $23 billion; $21 billion is, in effect, paid by Alberta. We pay $21 billion out of the $23 billion, yet we get less than any other province in Canada. No equal treatment.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes our question period this afternoon.

We have a note from the Minister of Health and Wellness that he would like to clarify an answer he gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've just given the clarification in answer to the question from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It was simply to point out that the Wait Time Alliance is a group of physician specialty associations who get most of their information from publicly available websites. So I won't need to clarify anything any further.

The Deputy Speaker: That entitles the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to a question.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister has clarified now that he knows what the Wait Time Alliance is. I would like to know why he's willing to jeopardize $27 million from the federal government because he won't comply with an agreement that was signed by your government in 2007.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, nobody is putting anything at risk or in jeopardy. If there is a compliance that needs to be adhered to, I can assure the hon. member and all members of this House that it will be adhered to. End of story.

The Deputy Speaker: This concludes our question period. According to my count we had 105 questions and answers.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have something to table?

Mr. Mason: Oh, I sure do, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of several documents which show clearly that the minister was incorrect yesterday when he asserted that the plan had always been to phase in the urgent care centre at the East Edmonton health clinic. They are comprised of two documents from Alberta Health Services . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just briefly table.

Mr. Mason: Okay.

. . . and a photograph of the sign outside the East Edmonton health centre clearly showing at the top of the list that urgent medical care is part of the package. This was taken some years ago.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do you have some material to table?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings that follow along the lines of Motion 510, encouraging entrepreneurial education. The first is Thrive: Advancing Community Economic Development for Calgary, Calgary's Community Economic Development Network.

Also, Thriving: Critical, Calgary's VitalSigns 2009 Citizens' Report Card, Taking the Pulse of Calgary, from the Calgary Foundation for Calgary Forever.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have something to table?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I certainly do, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton. The first one is from Sandra Glor, the second one is from Heather Macri, and the third one would be from Matthew Cuvilier. They're all constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They have given me permission to table these documents. They're concerned about the government's plans regarding psychiatric care at Alberta Hospital.

My final tabling. I do enjoy and anxiously await correspondence from the President of the Treasury Board, and this is a letter that I received from him on July 22, 2010, regarding the cabinet policy committees and whether or not the chairs are paid correctly. I appreciate that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other tablings?

Well, the chair has some material to table here. Hon. members, in accordance with the amendment to the Government Motion 18, approved Tuesday, October 26, 2010, regarding the 2009-10 Electoral Boundaries Commission report, the chair is pleased to table five copies of the revised DVD prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer which incorporates those amendments and which is entitled Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, As Approved by the Legislative Assembly on October 26, 2010.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2009, and the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the Safety Codes Council 2009 annual report; pursuant to the Special Areas Act the special areas trust account financial statements dated December 31, 2009; pursuant to the Capital Region Board regulation the Capital Region Board 2009 annual report. Pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2009; the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Ride Safety Association annual report, April 1, 2009, to March 31, 2010; the authorized accredited agencies summary 2008-2009; and the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: Let's deal with the points of order now. The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has withdrawn?

Mr. Oberle: I withdraw. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to refer first to our standing orders, Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 23(h), which states: "makes allegations against another Member." I asked the question – and hopefully you have the Blues to provide the answer that was given – "How much longer will this minister stand behind the excuse of needing more consultation before actually taking action to improve care of aboriginal children in the system? This panel has already consulted for well over a year." The minister in her reply stated, implied, alleged that I didn't value input from First Nations elders.

I would also like to reference Beauchesne 409(7), wherein it states, "Imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." I'll also refer to House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 618, under the section entitled Unparliamentary Language: the use of "personal attacks, insults and obscenities." Well, obviously the minister did not swear, but she alleged that I did not take into account the interests of First Nations elders. How she came across that information I do not know. But instead of answering the question, Mr. Speaker, an allegation was tossed back. Hopefully you have the Blues and you can read them and share what the minister stated and clarify this matter for the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that the member is really trying to explain the comment more than bring forward a point of order. He suggests that allegations were made by the minister in answering the question. The minister was simply pointing out that the aboriginal community had requested additional time for further consultation that would be specific to the child care issues related to the aboriginal community. The member made a rather – I won't call it rhetorical, but there were inferences in his question that somehow the minister was avoiding dealing with an issue under the guise of further consultation when, in fact, the minister had indicated that she had heard very clearly from the aboriginal community that they wished to have an opportunity to have more input into designing a system that would better meet their needs.

There is no point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have to echo the comments of the last speaker. The member quoted the Blues and indicated in his question that somehow the minister is hiding behind things. Somehow that is absolutely fine to say in this House, but for any similar comment back – and I don't even believe it was anywhere near as egregious – this member takes offence to that.

Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order here. If the member can't handle the heat, he should get out of the question period.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, I ask that you share the precise comments that the Minister of Children and Youth Services provided in the Blues where an allegation was made that I did not value the opinions and the recommendations of elders. Would you please read the direct information so that a decision can be made as opposed to what we thought we heard or what we might have heard?

The Deputy Speaker: Is any other hon. member wishing to join in? Seeing none, in fact, in contemplating a bit and trying to recall the situation at that time, there are two things in here. I have a sense that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wants to clear the record, and he has had that opportunity. He has explained now about the situation. My judgment is that there is no allegation of any sort of point of order. The member has had an opportunity to clear the record on his statement, and there's no need for further debate on this as a point of order.

Thank you.

Another point of order.

Point of Order

Oral Question Period Time Limits

Mr. Anderson: I'm sure the members opposite will be very excited about this point of order. In 2010, last session, Mr. Speaker, the House leaders met to discuss how question period was going to be dealt with. In a ruling in 2010 that is in Hansard, this is what the Speaker at the time said: "The chair will continue to undertake a vigilant watch of the clock to ensure that questions and answers do not exceed 35 seconds."

I personally love when questions and answers go a little longer than 35 seconds. I like to hear the long – even if it's 40, 45 seconds, I like that. However, there's got to be some consistency, Mr. Speaker, between the questions and the answers with regard to the time that those answers and questions are cut off. Clearly, throughout the question period today if you look at the answers given from the members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, from Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the health minister, certainly the member's statement from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, that time constraint, at least in our opinion, was not enforced by the chair.

Our questions. If you look to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, in their members' statements and in their questions clearly they were cut off immediately at that time. Now, that's fine. They can be cut off at that time. However, it needs to go both ways. It's very unfair, and we felt that throughout the question period they were given flexibility and were able to finish their members' statements and questions and answers, and we were not.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I know that it's not parliamentary tradition to do a point of order on a point of order, necessarily. However, there is an agreement that was made, and it should and it ought to be lived up to. I think that the Speaker made it very clear to these members that we're trying to stay within the 30 seconds. Occasionally you might have to go over by five seconds, as they do with some of their questions, so this knife cuts both ways. Nonetheless, the point has been made. We will ensure that our members try a little harder to stick within the 30 seconds that we're allowed to answer a question, and I would hope that the people asking the questions would give the same abidance.

Secondly, I think it should also be made clear that if we had a little more co-operation and tolerance from the other side of the House during the questions, it would make it clearer and easier to understand what they are. That would help in terms of preserving decorum in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although I appreciate that what the health minister was saying is absolutely true – it should be on both sides 35 seconds, 35 seconds – we're not arguing that you're not doing what you're supposed to do. We're arguing that the chair did not enforce both sides. According to the standing orders, chapter 2, section 13(2), it says, "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I just would ask the Speaker to please explain the reasons why those were cut off. If you look back at the tape, it will be clear. You were cutting off members on this side at the time limit, as you should, but you were not doing so for the government side.

The Deputy Speaker: First of all, your point of order about the 35 seconds in responses and answers over the time limit. I received notes here from both sides of the House saying that I cut them off, okay? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said that I favour one side or the other. That is factually not true, so I want to clarify that.

Also, I try to enforce the rule of timing, okay? Within that, we need to have co-operation, less noise so that we can hear the question and the answer. The time is kept strictly by the table officer here, so I just follow their indication, and I enforce the rule.

Thank you. I rule that there is no point of order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20

Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010.

Passed in 2004, the Class Proceedings Act established procedural rules enabling one or more persons to advance an action on behalf of a group of people who have suffered the same or a similar wrong. The existing act serves three important purposes: increasing efficiency, improving access to justice, and modifying behaviours. While the act is procedural in nature, it is a powerful tool in accomplishing these three purposes. Efficiency is gained by joining together a number of lawsuits that might otherwise be brought separately. Access to justice is created by grouping together many small claims in a larger proceeding in which the legal costs will be shared. Behavioural modification is obtained as claims that might otherwise go unprosecuted will be brought. The prospect of these class actions removes the comfort zone for those who might assume that minor wrongs would not result in litigation. It is also important to remember that while accomplishing these purposes, the Class Proceedings Act does not create any new causes of action.

Since Alberta's Class Proceedings Act was passed, three changes have been recommended by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada and the court. The first is that nonresidents should be treated in the same manner as residents for the purpose of participation in a class proceeding. The second is that criteria should be adopted to assist the court in determining whether Alberta or another province is the most appropriate jurisdiction for a class action to proceed. Third, their recommendation is to expand the requirement for the court approval of settlement, abandonment, and discontinuance of proceedings to include a situation in which a certificate application has been brought but has not yet been decided.

These amendments seek to reflect these recommendations in the existing legislation. The first proposed change will align Alberta with the majority of other provinces by shifting from an opt-in to an opt-out regime for nonresidents. Currently residents of Alberta who meet the requirements of the class are automatically participants in a class proceeding brought in Alberta. Nonresidents may participate only if they take the steps to opt in. The amendments proposed in Bill 20 would allow nonresidents to participate in class proceedings in the same manner as residents. Both residents and nonresidents who meet the requirements of the class would automatically be participants in that class proceeding unless they opt out.

Many times the same or similar class proceedings are brought in more than one province. The proposed amendments in this bill would resolve issues around jurisdiction by establishing criteria to guide the courts in determining whether Alberta is the most appropriate venue for the class action to proceed and requiring notice to be given by those bringing a class proceeding in Alberta to individuals who have brought similar proceedings in other provinces. These individuals will then have the ability to make submissions to court.

In instances where class proceedings brought forward in Alberta overlap with class proceedings in other Canadian jurisdictions, the court will decide whether it is appropriate for the lawsuit to proceed as a multijurisdictional class proceeding in Alberta or whether it is more appropriate for the court to defer to the jurisdiction of another court. Several objectives will be considered when making these decisions. These include but are not limited to ensuring that interests of all parties are given due consideration, ensuring that justice is served, avoiding the possibility of irreconcilable judgments, and promoting judicial economy.

The third proposed amendment to this bill will expand the requirement for court approval for settlement of actions. Currently court approval of settlement is required in two situations. The first situation is when proceedings have been certified as a class proceeding. Court approval is also required in order to abandon or discontinue a class proceeding. The second situation is when certification is sought as a condition of settlement for the purpose of imposing the settlement on persons who will be class members.

The proposed amendments would expand the requirement of court approval for settlement, abandonment, and discontinuance to include situations in which an application to certify a proceeding has been brought but has not yet been decided. This change will allow the court to protect the interests of prospective class members.

In conclusion, shifting from an opt-in to an opt-out regime for nonresidents will align Alberta's Class Proceedings Act with legislation in other Canadian jurisdictions. Expanding the requirement for court approval for settlement will increase the protection for plaintiffs in class proceedings. These changes together with adoption of criteria to guide the court strengthen the existing act to better reach the goals of increased efficiency, improved access to justice, and behaviour modification.

I urge all my colleagues to support Bill 20, and I look forward to hearing feedback from the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 Wills and Succession Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act.

Our family and property interests are considerably different today than in the 1920s, which was the last time there was a general review of Alberta's succession laws. We're living longer, we're seeing more nontraditional family forms, and over our lifespans we are holding many different jobs. We become involved in many different financial interactions, whether personal, family, or business-related. Alberta needs a modernized law to reflect the changing social realities for Albertans. This is the purpose of Bill 21.

Bill 21 does not change the underlying principles of our succession law. Succession law continues to be about balancing property, family, and contractual rights and responsibilities. The traditional principle of succession law will continue, and that principle is, with certain exceptions, that a person should be free to dispose of one's own property as one wishes. This is the principle of testamentary freedom, or freedom of disposition. The exceptions include that one's legal and contractual obligations must be met and one's family should be looked after. A related principle also remains constant. If a person dies without a will, after legal obligations are met, it's reasonable to assume that he or she wants family to inherit the estate. However, the purpose of the new legislation is to allow these principles to operate in the evolving family and economic context of Alberta.

The new legislation refocuses succession law. To be clear, there's no evidence that Albertans care less or will in the future care less about their families. Family comes first when Albertans think about what happens to their property when they die, but there is a change in the possible ways that Albertans carry out this intent. This legislation attempts to do this in several ways. The statute is intended to allow development of succession law in a modern and evolving family context. For example, recent Supreme Court of Canada cases established presumptions about gratuitous transfers of property from parent to child. These cases are based on current family values and practices. This modern common law should continue, and evolution of the law should be fostered.

In recognition that a family business deal and a disposition in a will may intersect, the statute allows for application of basic business or property law, including limitations rules, the law of gifts, or contract law, to the circumstances of a family transfer. For example, if a court finds a deal between a deceased and an heir is a valid loan agreement, it can direct an appropriate remedy.

The statute is designed with settlement of disputes and efficient use in mind. This is demonstrated in three ways. Firstly, there was a conscious attempt to harmonize with existing law both in succession law and in relation to other areas such as trusts, pensions, adult guardianship, contracts, and general property. Secondly, the bill removes hurdles to finding the law. Outdated terminology is removed, and five statutes are consolidated into one and modernized. Those five statutes are the Wills Act, the Intestate Succession Act, the Survivorship Act, the Dependents Relief Act, and section 47 of the Trustee Act. Thirdly, although the legislation is drafted in terms of what courts can and cannot do – for example, it directs how a court must interpret a will – this is not to suggest that Albertans will take all their wills or estate matters to court. Most people do not do this, and there's no reason to believe that that will change.

Some have referred to succession law as family law for the deceased, and in some cases conflict is inevitable where property and family issues mix. With the new statute Albertans and their advisers can look to the act to see what a court may do and use this information to predict court outcomes, thereby resolving disputes. As you can see, clear rules found in a single statute will make resolution of estate matters more efficient and less costly.

All of this said, the courts remain integral to the operation of succession law. The legal principles we are working with can be traced back two centuries. If history is a predictor, the fundamental principles of this law will not change for a long time. The statute is a principle framework. The court applies it over time and as Alberta society changes.

Take, for example, family support on death, formerly called dependant relief. It's important to note the name change, which signals a modern trend away from describing people as dependants. In future family support cases it will be for the court to apply cases such as the Stang case, which sets out how the principles currently operate to the new and evolving community and legal standards.

I've just provided a general overview. I'd like to now provide you with the specifics of this legislation. The content of the changes was strongly supported in public and technical consultation. I'll begin with modernizing the definition of child. The new act defines child as all children of a person as defined in the Family Law Act and including children in the womb at the time of death. This harmonizes with Alberta's family law, including the changes proposed to the Family Law Act in Bill 20.

Regarding survivorship, this is an example of a reform designed to match modern values and create efficiency. It eliminates the need for double probate and creates consistency with insurance law. Current law is that if two people die at the same time or in circumstances where it's unknown who died first, all the property interests flow as if the youngest person survived. The new act will provide that for the purposes of property each person is deemed to have died first. If they owned property jointly, the property is deemed to be split among them.

Regarding wills, the current Wills Act is repealed, but certain basics such as formalities for making wills are continued. New provisions modernize the way wills are interpreted and validated. Recognizing current social realities, Bill 21 removes the rule that marriage revokes a will. It adds a rule that a gift to an ex-partner or ex-spouse is void unless the will says otherwise. The bill provides for minors' wills. We recognize that some minors may have considerable estates and may have the maturity to decide about its disposition. Focusing on determining testamentary intent, the principle that a person is free to dispose of his or her property as he or she wishes, in addition to codifying common law for interpreting wills, the bill allows extrinsic evidence of a deceased's intent to aid in the interpretation of a will. The courts will have new powers to validate a will, and the court will be able to rectify mistakes by adding or correcting words if it is clear that there was a mistake. Witnesses who are disqualified from inheriting can qualify if they prove there is no undue influence.

The new act will also help resolve uncertainties in a will. Now if a named beneficiary is unable to inherit, there is a clear list of default beneficiaries. In addition, the act defines certain words such as "kin" or "child" if they are not defined in the will.

Regarding intestate estates there are two significant amendments in the legislation that reflect current values and will increase efficiency when there is no will. If a deceased person leaves a spouse and the children of the relationship with that spouse, everything goes to the spouse or partner instead of being shared between the spouse and children. This allows the surviving spouse to decide how to look after the children. Secondly, if a person leaves no living descendants or parents, the estate will be split between the maternal and paternal side of his family rather than just going to the closest living relative.

Regarding beneficiary designations, the beneficiary designation rules allow properties such as pensions or RRSPs to be disposed of on death by a written designation rather than by will. The law will be moved from the Trustee Act and will be easier to find. Otherwise, there is no legal change here.

Regarding family maintenance and support, this part of the act maintains the current law, allowing certain family members to apply for support from the estate. There are two major changes. The first is a new provision. An adult interdependent partner or a spouse of a deceased person will have an automatic right to stay in their shared home for three months after death. This provides a temporary right of shelter for spouses or partners who are not registered on the title of their home or named on the lease. This reflects the fact that a home is required for compassionate reasons and prevents individuals from changing the locks on a grieving spouse.

In addition to cleaning up some wording and updating procedure, we are also adding to the list of family members who can claim support from the estate to include minor grandchildren and great-grandchildren as well as adult children under the age 22 who are in school full-time. These changes reflect the strong support we received during our public consultation, which was in favour of broadening the group of family members who can apply for support from the estate.

Regarding advancement and appeal in aid of modernization a number of outdated presumptions and doctrines are repealed. To replace some of these ancient rules, if there is a dispute about whether property transfers made during life impact inheritance, the court can decide what the party's intention was and make a direction. Again, this is intended to better reflect modern realities and to ensure that individuals settle their legal obligations.

Regarding the Matrimonial Property Act amendments, the new Wills and Succession Act will amend the Matrimonial Property Act to entitle a spouse to matrimonial property whether the marriage ends due to death or due to divorce. As the law now stands, married people who divorce are entitled to more or less half the property acquired during marriage. However, couples who lose a spouse to death do not have this same entitlement. It's worth noting that Albertans leave most if not all of their estates to their spouse in most cases. Similar to the other changes made by the bill, this was well supported in public consultation and is consistent with the law in other provinces.

In conclusion, the work through this bill will not be entirely done. In the coming years, further reforms are planned for the rules for estate administration; that is, the role of executors or others who administer property on death.

Mr. Speaker, family comes first, and Bill 21 affects all Albertans. For the future this law provides modernized means to achieve the accepted principles, freedom of disposition, support of family, and fulfillment of legal obligations. The amendments I discussed today will result in a relevant and accessible law that will better serve Albertans, providing for a more prompt resolution to issues concerning family and property matters so essential during times of bereavement.

I urge all my colleagues to support Bill 21.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now move to adjourn debate.

Bill 22

Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs on behalf of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to amend three family law acts: the Family Law Act, the Maintenance Enforcement Act, and the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Changes to these pieces of legislation reflect the needs of Alberta's changing families and will help increase service, improve efficiencies, provide clarity, and streamline processes.

The first piece of legislation that Bill 22 purports to amend is the Family Law Act. This is the legislation that contains the core of family law in this province. It deals with parent-child relationships and the rights and obligations of guardians. When the Family Law Act was proclaimed on October 1, 2005, it consolidated, harmonized, and updated provisions from many provincial family law acts and contained substantial changes to government policy. The act has been well received; however, some amendments are needed to ensure that it provides answers to the legal issues relevant to Alberta families today.

Amendments to the Family Law Act will complete the groundwork with regard to the parentage of children being born using assisted human reproduction, it will clarify certain aspects of law relating to parents' guardianship of their children, it will eradicate the status of illegitimacy, which I will touch on later, and it will clarify some matters of core jurisdiction and procedure as well as tend to housekeeping matters.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the assisted human reproduction issues and solutions that were identified, there's been extensive work done by the federal, provincial, and territorial deputy ministers of Justice and the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. The work was conducted by a national committee of senior family law officials upon which Alberta has played a significant role. We also consulted with the bench, the bar, and service providers and explored case law at all levels of the court. As well, independent evaluation of the Family Law Act was performed by the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family.

Infertility is a real barrier to many Albertans who wish to create a family, Mr. Speaker. There's an estimated infertility rate of 7 to 8 and a half per cent in Canada. This could translate to 25,000 couples in this province alone. Advances in assisted human reproduction technologies have created new opportunities for infertile couples to become parents. The demand for this technology may increase as more couples seek infertility services as costs of these said services decrease and fewer children are available for adoption. The medical aspects of assisted human reproduction such as what technologies can be practised are within the jurisdiction of the federal government. However, the legal role for provinces and territories is to establish parentage status when children are born as a result of this technology.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta currently has the most advanced law in Canada with respect to these children. Our parentage law has not kept up with the advances in this technology. Not all the combinations of parents and children are covered. There are a number of consequences to this, including Charter deficiencies in the current law, the need for some couples to resort to adoption to be recognized as parents, and judges being required to make decisions without clear policy and law in place. Adoption law is important, but it does not fill the need identified in assisted human reproduction situations. The changes we are looking at are aimed at facilitating parentage at the birth in situations when the intended parents cannot produce a child by natural means. We must of all things remember that in this province the interests of the child are paramount.

For their protection and best interests the parentage of children born through this technology needs to be certain at the first possible moment subsequent to their birth. In Alberta unless a statute or a court says otherwise, the legal parents must both have a biological connection to the child. Our current assisted human reproduction provisions are built in on this idea with a small exception allowing for a person to be a parent if they consent to their spouse or their partner's use of artificial insemination or surrogacy. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this quickly become very complex. But this alone does not cover all the possibilities.

In developing these amendments, we are working on the basic policy premise that for any couple using any form of this technology, a biological connection to at least one of the intended parents and the consent of their spouse or partner will substitute for the traditional requirement of biological connections to both parents. This allows expansion of parentage law to assisted human reproduction situations, including those where surrogates may be involved.

The law will continue that a birth mother can only lose her status as the parent if she consents after the birth of the child, and surrogacy agreements will continue to be unenforceable. This is in order to encourage surrogacy for altruistic and not economic reasons. The law will continue to provide that a person who donates reproductive material – that is, who provides it purely for someone else's use – would not be a legal parent of the child by reason of donation alone. These amendments would provide the same level of legal certainty for parents and children regardless of the method of conception.

Pursuant to the proposed amendments the child's legal parents must fall under one of the following categories, the first one, where assisted reproduction is not used, the birth mother and the biological father; the second, where assisted reproduction is used but does not involve a surrogate, the parents are the birth mother and the spouse or common law partner of the birth mother who at the time that the pregnancy was started consented to be a parent of the child; or where a surrogate is involved, the parents will be the person who provided the genetic material and their spouse or partner, as long as the surrogate consents after the birth to relinquish the child, confirmed by a special order of the court. Of course, if the child is adopted, the parents are the persons specified as parents in an adoption order.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta legislation will continue to be based on the principles that a child can have a maximum of two parents and that a child may have multiple guardians. Dealing with guardianship, under Alberta law the power and responsibility to look after a child is attached to the guardianship status, not the parenthood status. In Alberta both parents are guardians of their children although exceptions need to be made for this role such as when a parent cannot be located or when the pregnancy was the result of a sexual assault.

Mr. Speaker, we currently base guardianship partly on the residence of the child, and this has created some uncertainty. Bill 22 will make the standard for determining a parent's guardianship the parent's willingness to be a guardian. If there is a dispute about a parent's guardianship, the court will have the ability to make a determination on individual circumstances. Where it is in the best interests of the child, the court will continue to be able to appoint other individuals as guardians.

Dealing with the matter of illegitimacy, Mr. Speaker, amendments to this bill will also abolish any distinction between the status of a child born within marriage and a child born outside of marriage. Most of these distinctions have already disappeared from the law. Consequential amendments to a number of statutes are required, including the repeal of the Legitimacy Act.

There are some other amendments, Mr. Speaker. Other amendments to the Family Law Act contained in Bill 22 include providing for applications to vary the support orders and support agreements that bind the estate of a payer parent after that parent's death so that the estate could be wound up; also, changing the reference from "primary home" to "family home" to coincide with proposals in the Wills and Succession Act that are also before the House, as referenced before the House by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose; clarifying that the obligation to provide spousal or adult interdependent partner support is not absolute and depends on a variety of factors; and clarifying that the court's jurisdiction to grant a guardianship order, a parenting order, or contact order pursuant to the Family Law Act continues unless and until a court makes an order with respect to custody or access in divorce proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, I will now turn my comments to amendments to the Maintenance Enforcement Act, which are already included under Bill 22. Alberta's maintenance enforcement program, or MEP, enforces child and spousal support orders and certain agreements to take action in a fair and unbiased manner. The program continually examines its policies and procedures to ensure it is providing the best possible service to all clients as well as monitoring trends in family law cases and legislation. The MEP has identified areas that require amendments to increase efficiency, fairness, and service to its clients.

One area we're looking at is contact information. Currently, there's no legislative requirement for debtors or those who owe support to keep their contact or employment information current. The MEP is currently not able to require creditors or those who receive support payments to provide their contact or financial information. It is important for the MEP to be able to contact clients for a variety of reasons, including, without limitation, advising clients of changes to the program, verifying the eligibility status of the dependents, and collecting fees and penalties that may be owing. Mr. Speaker, the MEP uses a great deal of resources to gather this information, and the delay in having up-to-date information impacts certain collection activities.

Amendments in Bill 22 require debtors to keep their employment information current as well as requiring both creditors and debtors to keep their personal addresses and contact information up to date. Mr. Speaker, amendments will also require that persons, businesses, and government entities release the information in their possession regarding the location of creditors, allowing the MEP to communicate with creditors in a timely manner pursuant to the information in their files. This will also put Alberta's legislation in line with Manitoba's and Ontario's maintenance enforcement legislation in those two respective provinces.

Bill 22 also seeks to update the definition of business organization to ensure that the MEP will be able to communicate and gather information from new and emerging corporations and entities. By ensuring that these entities are covered pursuant to the act's definitions, it will allow the MEP to demand enforcement-related information from an expanded group of business organizations. It will also ensure that the MEP is able to locate and place the appropriate enforcement tools, allowing them to collect maintenance payments on a timely basis and, ultimately, getting these payments to the vulnerable Albertans who count on them.

Confidentiality is also addressed in this bill, Mr. Speaker. The Maintenance Enforcement Act places tighter constraints on the release of information than the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Bill 22 proposes a shift towards aligning the release of the client information with the principles contained in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This will ensure that the maintenance enforcement program is providing transparency while still maintaining a high level of confidentiality for client information.

Mr. Speaker, the Maintenance Enforcement Act would then be able to release information in a number of important situations that were previously considered confidential, including releasing information to a reciprocal jurisdiction to enforce a maintenance order, releasing information to any law enforcement agency in Canada to assist in an investigation, releasing information in certain situations if the director of maintenance enforcement considers it appropriate and the individual has so consented, disclosing the necessary information to understand changes added to a file pursuant to a court order to both parties to the court order, releasing necessary information to the surviving spouse or adult interdependent partner or relative of a deceased individual if the disclosure is not an unreasonable invasion of the deceased's personal privacy, and releasing information if the director reasonably believes that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger with respect to the health or safety of any person. These changes will increase intergovernmental co-operation and allow the MEP to better meet the needs of more Albertans.

I'd also like to comment about administrative fairness, Mr. Speaker. Right now the MEP is not able to charge a nonsufficient funds penalty to creditors who remit payments that do not clear their bank accounts. In the interest of promoting fairness in the treatment of all clients Bill 22 contains a specific provision that will allow the MEP to charge creditors the same penalty charged to debtors when their payments do not clear their bank accounts. In the further interest of fairness, Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 will also allow the MEP to enforce the collection of money owed by creditors.

The overpayment of maintenance to creditors such as when the parties fail to advise the MEP that the dependants are no longer eligible to receive maintenance continues to be an ongoing issue. The proposed amendment would allow the MEP in very specific circumstances set out in the legislation to collect these repayable amounts from creditors rather than force debtors to take their creditors to court. This would allow the MEP to take enforcement action against creditors when there is money owed to the MEP as a result of fees, penalties, or overpayments or when there is money owing as a result of fees pursuant to the child support recalculation program. This amendment will help keep both clients from being needed to go to court and treat all clients in the system fairly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 also provides more clarity with respect to dealing with stays of enforcement. The Court of Queen's Bench may issue an order suspending enforcement proceedings for a maximum of nine months unless otherwise stated by the court. Collections actions granted pursuant to federal enactments such as the denial of passports or the attachment of federal funds or driver's licence suspensions or restrictions remain unaffected. The previous wording used the word "suspension" while the court generally uses the word "stay," which can cause confusion as to whether or not the stay is granted under the Maintenance Enforcement Act or the Alberta Rules of Court. A change in wording will ensure clarity in interpreting the court's rulings.

A change will also be made to the requirement for debtors to attempt to make a payment arrangement with the maintenance enforcement program prior to a court application being granted for a stay of enforcement. This change will encourage debtors to first try to work out a payment arrangement with the maintenance enforcement program such as by setting out legislative requirements that the court may consider to grant a stay of enforcement, placing the onus upon the debtor to establish their attempts to make a payment arrangement and establish why they cannot pay their arrears for the period of the stay, and clarifying the maximum time necessary for relief from enforcement as well as the monthly amount payable during the time of the stay.

Mr. Rodney: Go faster.

Mr. Denis: I take it that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed would like me to speak a little faster, and I'll do my best.

It is anticipated that this will reduce the number of court applications and avoid breaks in maintenance programs.

Mr. Speaker, the maintenance enforcement program works hard to ensure vulnerable Albertans are getting the support payments that are due to them.

Mr. Hehr: Hear, hear.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo also supports this initiative.

Changes in Bill 22 will help them do this more effectively and efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, the remaining piece of legislation Bill 22 addresses is the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Amendments to the act included in Bill 22 are housekeeping changes that will facilitate better access to justice for Alberta families who are dealing with interjurisdictional family support orders. The Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act is a model statute that all Canadian provinces and territories except Quebec use in order to facilitate the transfer of child and spousal support orders across provincial borders. This act allows parties residing in different jurisdictions to obtain and vary maintenance orders pursuant to provincial legislation more quickly and easily. This benefits families by increasing the likelihood of entitlement to maintenance and facilitates speedier enforcement of Canadian maintenance orders.

Mr. Speaker, the amended legislation will clarify the existing sections of the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act to allow for further client service, to increase efficiencies, highlight due process, and simplify questions about the applicable law for Alberta courts. Specifically, the amendments will recognize more categories of support orders, require faster provision of information, offer uniformity of language, and clarify which law applies to orders involving more than one jurisdiction.

I will briefly address each of these changes. Alberta's child support recalculation program has the authority to annually recalculate child support amounts. There are a number of jurisdictions that have reciprocal agreements with Alberta who have established administrative child support recalculation services that generate family support orders, which are in turn sent to Alberta for enforcement. The recognition of more categories of support orders will ensure that the administratively recalculated orders made in other jurisdictions can be enforced in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, these changes will also reduce court costs for Albertans. Recalculation programs help parents keep child support levels in line with incomes so that families can avoid the time and expense of asking the courts to review their child support orders. The amended legislation will allow Alberta to enforce on these recalculated child support orders.

Mr. Speaker, currently in Alberta if the Alberta court requires further information or documents from the claimant to make the support order, the information must be received within 18 months. This is a long period and can cause undue delay. Amendments in this bill will reduce the time period to 12 months, benefiting families as earlier intervention leads to timely establishment and enforcement of child support.

These amendments also change the phrase "ordinarily resident" to "habitually resident" and amend the phrase "ordinarily resides" to "habitually resides." The legal meaning of the terms is similar. However, these proposals conform to the language used in the Hague convention on the international recovery of child support and other forms of family maintenance. [interjections] Although Canada has not yet signed this convention, a number of jurisdictions – okay. Apparently, the minister's speech has been a little long, so I'll just wind up here.

The courts would only apply foreign law if there is no entitlement that can be found under its own law. This would remove ambiguity.

The legislation would also clarify which law, Alberta or the foreign jurisdiction, governs the duration and the amount of child support. As such, when deciding the amount of support to be paid for the child, the Alberta court must apply the law of Alberta, the onus being on the reciprocating jurisdiction to provide proof of the duration of child support. This encourages collaboration among jurisdictions and promotes compliance with support obligations in interjurisdictional cases. This legislation will also help the courts and the maintenance enforcement programs identify the duration of a support obligation granted in another jurisdiction where the duration is not specified in the order.

Mr. Speaker, these changes will result in effectiveness and efficiency increases in our government and also will ensure our legislation is up to date.

I never thought my rapid manner of speech in my life would ever be an asset.

Thank you. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 23

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to be a little briefer than the previous speaker on my introduction. It's my pleasure to rise today and request leave to move second reading of Bill 23, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill is largely housekeeping and clarifies the roles and legal authority for on-campus parking at some of Alberta's postsecondary institutions and the creation of parking bylaws and enforcement.

The first amendment gives comprehensive academic and research institutions, also known as the universities of Alberta, Calgary, Lethbridge, and Athabasca, retroactive authority to collect penalties for the violation of their parking bylaws. Universities in Alberta have had specific powers to create parking bylaws on their properties since 1968. The amended legislation would grant retroactive legal authority to universities to collect penalties for violations of their parking bylaws, something we always intended for them to have.

The second amendment gives baccalaureate and applied studies institutions, specifically Mount Royal University and Grant MacEwan University, the retroactive authority to create parking bylaws and to collect penalties for the violation of these bylaws. As baccalaureate and applied studies institutions, Mount Royal and MacEwan are governed under a different section of the act, and they currently do not have parking authority. However, giving them this authority is a natural extension under the act as both institutions also have large urban campuses with significant parking areas, and they are viewed by the public as being similar types of institutions.

Currently several universities and one baccalaureate and applied studies institution, MacEwan, already issue their own tickets for violations of their parking bylaws or policies. This leaves these institutions at risk of lawsuits as they do not have the legal authority to issue their own tickets and, in the case of MacEwan, to have parking bylaws or policies at all. The proposed changes would retroactively allow these six institutions to impose and collect penalties such as fines for the violation of their bylaws and thus provide more legal protection against potential lawsuits.

In B.C. the provincial government made similar types of changes, which protected institutions from lawsuits by giving them retroactive powers to collect penalties for the violation of their parking bylaws. It was the B.C. legislation that actually led to our review. However, in the B.C. case the government was already responding to a legal challenge against one of their institutions and the ruling of the courts that found their parking fines were beyond the powers given to institutions under their legislation. We want to make these changes prior to a lawsuit as they are reasonable authorities for these institutions to have in order to control parking on their campuses.

This is a very important clarification and amendment to the act because if Alberta institutions were subject to a lawsuit, they might approach the government of Alberta for financial assistance to repay fines. The financial impact on institutions could be significant if they were subject to a lawsuit in order to repay fines, which is why we could expect requests to the government to assist them should they end up in this type of position. Particularly, given the extended period of time that universities have had parking bylaws, this proposed bill will help both types of institutions gain clarity and formalize the authority of their parking while protecting them from potential lawsuits concerning past parking tickets.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would adjourn debate at this time. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: We have a motion on the floor.

Mr. Weadick: I'll withdraw that motion to adjourn. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much first to the hon. mover of Bill 23 for putting forward this legislation and again to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West for withdrawing the motion to adjourn so that we could have an opportunity to speak.

The reason for Bill 23, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010, is basically that Alberta's postsecondary institutions were caught, metaphorically speaking, with their parking pants down and their illegal fines up. Therefore, we have to correct this error. Under normal circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would not support retroactive whiteout or wipeout legislation which rewrites history. But as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West pointed out, if we do not rewrite this particular piece of history, individuals' class actions going back to 1968, both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta and, by extension, MacEwan and Mount Royal could be facing millions of dollars of liability for the placement of illegal tickets.

Now, this government has not been overly kind to postsecondary institutions, particularly of late when they haven't kept up funding for operating costs, where staff members have basically taken unpaid leave to give back to their universities and where students have been forced to make up the difference in terms of a $450 utilization fee for nothing. So this is the absolute least the government can do in terms of waving its magic wand and retroactively providing parking power to the universities going back to 1968.

Now, the universities have not unfortunately just been victims in this circumstance. For example, when it comes to boards of governors of both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, they have made some very poor decisions in terms of gambling their endowment funds on risky asset-backed commercial paper. Having said that, the government provided them with that example of investing in asset-backed commercial paper and allowing the Treasury Branches to make similarly bad investments. So the universities weren't alone in being suckered on asset-backed commercial paper.

The universities have tried a number of desperate measures, which the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has approved, in terms of dramatic increases in professional faculties' tuition along with, as I say, the allowance of that $450 fee for nothing that was imposed upon students in an effort to bail out their institutions because the government has not been keeping pace with grants to our postsecondary institutions. However, the government has come up with this whiteout bill, which does provide forgiveness. As I indicated earlier, I do believe in forgiveness in this particular case.

Alberta has the lowest postsecondary enrolment of any province in the country, and the dramatic effects of the loss of revenues dating back over the past 42 years would be sufficient to basically close those institutions. Obviously, that would be a terrible circumstance. So the Member for Lethbridge-West, where the wonderful University of Lethbridge is located, has provided a bailout option in the form of Bill 23. It's an unusual circumstance, Mr. Speaker, but in this case it's a small step in terms of forgiveness, and hopefully we will see other examples of government support and forgiveness for postsecondary institutions in this fine province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Yes, on Bill 23, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to it, and I'll speak in favour of it. It's one of those sort of loopholes, I guess, that we're having to close, something that crept up on the universities and the government and needs to be addressed and needs to be plugged. It is a little bit unnerving to speak in favour of the university parking police when I represent the University of Alberta. This one may cost me a few votes if word gets out that I'm supporting maybe the scariest people on campus, the parking officials, but I'll run that risk.

I think that it's one little bit of funding that we can bring some stability to because I expect that year after year after year there is a pretty predictable amount of money collected through parking tickets. Any of us who has encountered the university's parking force knows that they're quite ruthless. They're actually the toughest parking police I've had to encounter. I do suspect there may be some of us in this Assembly who have children who have maybe borrowed dad's or mom's car and driven to university and then driven home and just given the keys back, the tank a little emptier. Then a couple of weeks later this little treat arrives in the mail addressed not to our children but to us as car owners with an unexpected fine in it. Maybe there's a shrug of the shoulders: "Oh, I forgot about that." Anyway, I think this bill will help the university address an issue. It keeps a small issue from getting large.

I also want to make one other note, which is that it may help the universities discourage driving. Certainly, at the University of Alberta the university works hard, on its main campus at least, to keep people using public transit and to encourage them to use public transit. One of the ways they do that is through strict controls on parking. I hope this helps stabilize a tiny little slice of the university's revenues.

I only wish that we had brought in some kind of legislation that offered the same sort of support for electricity deregulation when we brought that in. That cost the universities tens and tens and tens of millions of dollars over several years, but that's a different story.

I'm glad the Member for Lethbridge-West has brought this in, and I look forward to it being passed. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be speaking in favour of this bill. I thank the MLA for Lethbridge-West for bringing this forward at this time to straighten out what was a pretty big loophole, where parking that had been administered by universities for some time – they had fines going out on cars and trucks and what have you on campuses since 1968 – could have been exposed to lawsuits like we saw in British Columbia in their Queen's Bench jurisdiction, and legislation was brought in to rectify the problem before it went to their Court of Appeal.

As was noted by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, this is a challenging time for Alberta universities. It was brought up that we have the lowest enrolment in our postsecondary institutions, at that level, something that I think can be worked on and that, in my view, we have to look at seriously as a Legislature to try and correct to allow individuals the opportunity to go to school at home, to stay here, and to become better students, better learners, more equipped to deal with the challenges of a quick-paced world which recognizes that learning and the ability to think and to react and to change job positions is the new currency of finding jobs. You get those skills by going to school.

I guess we're talking about parking here. If this would have happened, if we didn't correct this, it could have – hey, life would have gone on, but it would have been another minor detail that universities would have had to deal with that would have taken some precious funds, that would not have gone, then, to keeping the postsecondary institute alive and running and providing education to many of the young minds who are going to our universities, both now Grant MacEwan and Mount Royal University.

I do note on the story of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that at the time I went to Mount Royal College, it was 1990. I was somewhat recalcitrant and lackadaisical back then and often running late for class and a dollar short and a day late on having any money in my pocket because it might have got spent at the pub or somewhere else the night before and I couldn't fill the meter or whatever it was and received one of those tickets. Now, if allowed to sign up for that class-action suit, I may very well have done that, but now that this has been rectified, I won't have to bother doing that to try and get some of my money back. I think Alberta citizens will be better off for not having that lawsuit go forward.

Nevertheless, after that trip down memory lane and a brief discussion of parking and universities in general, I'm glad we brought this Bill 23 forward. I support it wholeheartedly and support the betterment of education everywhere in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 23. It's called the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, but it should be the postsecondary parking amendment act, I think. It really leaves me kind of torn because, of course, when I attended the university, they were able to collect their parking fines by threatening to withhold my marks. They never really have had that hammer on me ever since.

With some reluctance I can see the point of the legislation. I think that ultimately a strong regime for parking at the university is the right thing to do because they have a huge population that comes and goes every day that they have to manage, and if, in fact, there was a class-action suit similar to the one in British Columbia against UBC, it could be very, very expensive. I think the university and the city worked well together in order to make sure that there are transportation options other than driving a car, and the extension of the LRT has certainly been very helpful in that regard.

I think that giving the university the authority to levy fines and to collect fines is probably in the best interest of everyone, so for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall call on the hon. member to close the debate.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a pleasure to hear the comments of the opposition members and their support for this. It is a great move for our universities. We'll ask for the question at this time.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am, indeed, very pleased to rise on this great afternoon to move second reading of Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act.

Bill 17, as described, is the product of more than a year-long conversation with Albertans about our health system, a dialogue, I would like to add, that told us what Albertans expect from their publicly funded health care system, a dialogue that told us what we as a government can do to help make the system more cohesive and more focused on them, our Albertans. I want to thank once again the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for leading that consultative dialogue. I think he did an outstanding job with his advisory committee, and I want to applaud his efforts right now for doing a great job. [some applause] Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, consistent with the Putting People First report, which I just referenced, Bill 17 is principles based as well. It recognizes Alberta's commitment both to the Canada Health Act and to the aspirations Albertans have for their health system. Bill 17 includes overarching principles that will provide ongoing guidance for the operation of the health system and the development of future health legislation. The purpose of having principles-based legislation is, of course, to help guide policies, organization, operations, and decisions throughout the health system.

Bill 17 also introduces the concept of a health charter that will set out principles, expectations, and responsibilities that apply across the entire health system. The minister will be required under the proposed act to establish such a health charter and to specify basic elements that must be addressed in the health charter. Bill 17 directs that the charter must recognize that health is a partnership, acknowledges the impact of a person's health status on their capacity to interact with the system, specifies that the charter will not be used to limit access to health services, and further specifies that the charter not be subject to or be the basis of litigation within the court system. It is important to note that the principles, the expectations, and the responsibilities set out in the charter will apply throughout the health system, from doctors' offices to dental clinics and from hospitals to home care.

The charter will be about building and reinforcing trust and respect across the health system. Work to develop the health charter will begin once the proposed act has been passed by this Assembly, I hope. The charter will apply to everyone, and it will guide the actions of Alberta Health Services, of health facility operators, of health providers, and of professional colleges.

Now, to enable the charter to apply across the spectrum of the health system, there is a proposed regulation-making power that enables the definition of health provider to be expanded. This may be done to include people who are not part of the so-called regulated health professions. This may include, for example, health care aides or massage therapists, who play a very important role in keeping Albertans healthy, but they are not at this stage regulated professions.

The proposed act will require the minister to review the health charter at least every five years.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to another important area of this Bill 17, that being the health advocate, Albertans told us that once a health charter is created, they want meaningful ways of raising concerns about how the charter is applied. They do not want their concerns to be bogged down in litigation. Costly court challenges take energy and resources away from health service delivery. However, it's important to note that Albertans have and will continue to have the right to sue if they wish.

Bill 17 provides for the appointment of a health advocate, who will be accessible to the public, responsible for receiving complaints relating to the charter, and who will have the ability to address these complaints. If the health advocate finds that a person has not honoured the charter, the advocate will have the authority to make recommendations as required to address the issue. The health advocate may also report to the minister on any further action that should be taken. In fact, the health advocate must report annually to the minister, and the minister is required to table this report in the Assembly, similar to the current reporting structure of the Mental Health Patient Advocate.

Now, in order to avoid duplication in the health system, one obligation of the health advocate is to refer complaints to another body that has authority to more appropriately address the matter. In this way the advocate will play an important navigation role. For example, this would mean that a complaint about the conduct of a particular health professional would be directed to the appropriate health profession college so that they could address the issue directly. The specific scope of the health advocate will be developed in regulations so that as the role of the office of the advocate evolves, the regulations can be updated in a timely and just manner.

For example, regulations could be made that will enable the health advocate to access information and require health services providers to co-operate with the advocate. In these respects, Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 and the health advocate specifically in this case are based on the model currently in place for the Mental Health Patient Advocate, a very successful model, I might add. As well, the health advocate will work at arm's length from government in the same way that the Mental Health Patient Advocate does today.

Now, in order to reinforce the importance of the health charter, Bill 17 also makes provision for the minister to act on recommendations of the health advocate. The proposed act enables the minister to direct Alberta Health Services, hospital operators, and other health providers to comply with the health charter. The minister may also direct a health professions college to modify its bylaws, its codes of conduct, or its policies in order to make them consistent with the charter so that their members will better understand its application.

With respect to reporting, Mr. Speaker, Bill 17, the proposed Alberta Health Act, will enable the minister to require operators of health facilities and health providers to publicly report on health system issues such as charter compliance, health service outcomes, and health system performance. Through the development of regulations the minister may require further reporting on such things as wait times or patient safety. This provision provides for accountability across the entire system. Currently the existing reporting provisions in legislation apply only to specific areas, such as to Alberta Health Services, for example. This new provision will enable more comprehensive reporting.

Now, with respect to roles and responsibilities the proposed new act provides a high-level reference to the roles of Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness, the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and the professional colleges. Provision is also made for the health minister to clarify and co-ordinate the roles and responsibilities of these major players in the system if required. There are regulation-making powers to support this. Mr. Speaker, through this provision we will enable steps to be taken as may be required to better co-ordinate and integrate the health system.

The proposed act has also been based on and benefited from extensive public input, as I indicated earlier. We want this public participation to continue because that's what Albertans have asked for, so we have included a role for ongoing public input into the development of regulations. The proposed act includes regulation-making powers related to such things as the establishment and review of the health charter, the powers and duties of the health advocate, the use of confidential information, and clarifying roles and responsibilities of the key entities in the health system.

These regulations, however, will not be made in isolation. Before a regulation can be made under the proposed act, a notice must be published on the public website of the Health and Wellness department. That notice, Mr. Speaker, must contain a summary of the proposed regulation and the wording of the text. A minimum of 30 days must be provided for the public to comment on the proposal. The minister must report on any feedback that is received to cabinet. Exceptions may be made to the 30-day notification period in the case where the proposed regulation addresses a matter that is urgent or if it is simply a technical or what we call a housekeeping matter such as if the minister is simply clarifying a provision of the act. If the notification period is shortened, the minister must advise the public about that decision.

I look forward to receiving more input and to ongoing dialogue and great conversation with respect to how the public can be involved in the regulations aforementioned.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 is fundamental – absolutely fundamental – to building greater public confidence in our wonderful publicly funded health system. Albertans need to trust their health system and have confidence in how the health system is governed and administered. Establishing a new Alberta Health Act is an important part of our ongoing work to build the best-performing publicly funded health system in Canada.

I want to thank all members for their anticipated support of Bill 17 as it moves through the various stages of discussion, debate, and, I hope, final passage in this House.

With that, I'll look forward to additional comments from other members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the minister. Unfortunately, the more I listened, the more I found I disagreed with the positions he was staking out. He concluded by describing the Alberta Health Act as fundamental. I actually think it misses the target quite completely. I find myself wondering: what's the point of this bill? This bill is going to take up hours of time for this Assembly. I think there is too much theory here and not enough reality. I think we are looking at a piece of legislation that tries to pretend issues away or simply misses the mark completely.

A lot of effort and a lot of noise and a lot of money is being spent on preparing this piece of legislation. It's being trumpeted as historic and fundamental and all kinds of things. I think we should look at this as a doctor might look at a medical condition. We should ask ourselves if this is the right treatment for the particular problems that Alberta's health care system has, and to do that, I think we need a diagnosis. My feeling is that this government has for 16 or 17 years now, actually, had a whole series of misdiagnoses about what's up with the health care system.

You base a diagnosis on symptoms, Mr. Speaker, so let's talk for a moment about some of the symptoms that the Alberta health system is showing that things are wrong. Well, one of those symptoms, that's had a lot of attention in the last few days in this Assembly, is long waiting lists. In fact, that may be one of the top two or three most obvious symptoms that something is wrong in the health care system. Those waiting lists have been debated in the last few days in terms of emergency rooms. As the minister has said – and I would agree with him on this point when he said it at other times – emergency rooms are kind of an indicator of how the health system, at least the hospital side of the health system, is running generally. We do know from both anecdotes and genuine data that emergency rooms are plugged up, and there are very serious waiting list issues in emergency rooms.

Of course, it's not limited to emergency rooms. If you need cancer treatment, it can be not only a terrifying and frustrating time; it can also be deeply troubling when you have to wait weeks and then months to get proper treatment. I will tell the minister that I had to work with a constituent this summer on treatment. He was diagnosed with a particular kind of cancer. He went without getting any calls back from the Cross Cancer Institute and ended up seeking treatment and receiving treatment in a timely fashion in, of all places, Prince Edward Island. In other words, Prince Edward Island could deliver more timely cancer care than Alberta.

Of course, if you need knee surgery or orthopaedic surgery, there's been some improvement, but wait times there can be frustrating as well. In fact, I could consume all the time I'm allocated for this particular stage of debate just on waiting lists, so let's look to some other symptoms that things are not right in the Alberta health system.

An obvious one – and it relates to wait times – is shortages of staff. This is an issue that's been building for 15 years. In 1994 and '95 over 10,000 health professionals in this province either lost their jobs completely or had their jobs downgraded. As well, we saw the training programs cut dramatically. The predictable thing happened. As the years went by, we ran into more and more severe shortages of staff. That contributes to problems with wait-lists, but it brings in other issues as well. I'm sure many of us have heard the figures put out by the government itself that in Calgary, for example, over 200,000 people can't get a family doctor. So there's a symptom there, shortages of staff.

There are overcrowded facilities. We've heard about that as well. Certainly, the big cities – Calgary and Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Red Deer – have some of the most overcrowded hospitals in the country. I don't know about other MLAs, but I know I get quite a lot of correspondence from people who end up the third person wheeled into a two-bed ward because there are no beds available. We've seen beds open – fair enough – but it seems that for every bed that's opened, another one is mothballed, so we are short of facilities. Of course, that goes back. The most dramatic examples are in Calgary, where the Calgary General, one of the proudest hospitals in this province, was destroyed, the Grace was sold, the Holy Cross was sold, and it's just led to one debacle after another. So another symptom, overcrowded facilities.

Related to that, insufficient long-term care. We've simply failed to build enough long-term care facilities, and we've failed to staff the ones we have to an adequate standard. People might be out there thinking, "Well, we can't afford to build long-term care facilities and staff them," but the thing is that if we don't build those sufficiently, then the people who should be living in those end up in our acute-care hospitals. As we're speaking today, it's pretty reasonable to think that if today is like every other day, there are somewhere between 300 and 500 people at this moment in acute-care hospitals waiting for long-term care. The average cost of each one of those beds: let's say $1,000 a day. It just doesn't make sense. We could actually save money and improve efficiency.

Behind those kinds of symptoms is turbulent management, something I've tried to bring attention to. In the 16 or 17 years since the regional health authorities were created, the last count I had – and I've kept track – is that there have been 13 deputy ministers of health. I've got the list on my computer in my office. Think about that for a minute: in 16 years 13 deputy ministers. That's not unlike a $10 billion corporation changing CEOs every 15 months for 16 years. Anybody looking at that would say: well, that organization is in crisis. Well, surprise. This organization is in crisis. Who is to be accountable for that? Well, the board of directors; in other words, the cabinet of this government.

It doesn't just stop with the deputy ministers. We've seen regional health authorities created. We've seen them merge. We saw one or two suspended. We've seen elections, and then we saw the elected officials suspended, even, I think, within 18 months of being duly elected. Now, in the most recent devastation, I think a genuinely – genuinely – poorly handled process, we've seen all the regional health authorities plus the Cancer Board, which had been a jewel of the system, plus AADAC all wiped out and consolidated in a process that has been a mess, I think, by anybody's assessment.

There are cost pressures. Well, is it any surprise that the system is inefficient when there are not enough staff, there's not enough space, the management is on a revolving door, and the organizational structure is in constant turmoil? There are cost pressures. These have to be understood a little bit, and they have to be penetrated a bit.

I did some work last spring looking at Statistics Canada figures over the last 20 years on health spending, and they tell an interesting story. I'm interested in the facts as they stand, and one of the things that surprised me is that on a per capita basis, once you adjust for inflation, spending in Alberta is not up particularly much at all over the last 20 years. Now, there are lots of ways to measure this. Some people, like the Parkland Institute, will say that it's actually down because the economy has grown so much. Others will say that it's higher once you adjust for age. There are a lot of ways to cut these costs, but I don't think any legitimate measure tells us that health spending is out of control.

But there are cost pressures. Interestingly, when you go further into the Stats Canada data, the cost pressures aren't from hospitals, and they aren't particularly from doctors, and they're certainly not from prevention. They're from that curious category called "other," which includes lab services, pharmaceuticals, contracting out. If any member is interested, I'd be happy to go through that data with you.

Finally, I think one of the signs that our health system in the broadest sense is really struggling is the broader health of the population. I would love to see more emphasis on things like health promotion and prevention. We need to address issues of diet, hunger. How many times do I have to raise this in the Assembly? It's a good health policy to feed our hungry kids because they're going to grow up to be healthier. You think I can get that through to this government? No, but the evidence is overwhelming.

Mr. Speaker, there's a list of symptoms if we were diagnosing this patient, if we think of the Alberta health system as a patient: long waiting lists, shortages of staff, overcrowded facilities, inadequate long-term care, not enough investment in health promotion, complete turmoil in the management system, and cost pressures. If you look at those symptoms, then what's the diagnosis? Before we bring in a treatment like Bill 17 or some other treatment, some other bill, what's the diagnosis?

Well, my particular view is that from about 1985 till about 1993 Alberta probably had about as good a health care system as you're going to ever be able to achieve. It wasn't perfect. I suspect it was the best in the country and was probably one of the best run in the world. Interestingly, if you follow the cost trends on that, through that period costs were actually quite flat.

We had a very healthy system, and then it began to get sick. My view is that it began to get sick because of 16 or 17 years of poor political decision-making, rash decision-making based not on any understanding of how a health care system works or what the real issues are but on the political posturing of the given moment, and that has carried on without relent for 17 years. There were some utterly foolish cuts in the 1990s. Beds were cut; training programs were cut. There has been, as I said, the constant turnover at the top.

One footnote I want to make to this is that we often say: well, the health system should be run in a more businesslike fashion. I haven't actually done this, but I would wager that it's a safe bet. If you were to go around to the major energy companies in Calgary, let's say Suncor and Nexen and Encana and so on, and you looked at the qualifications of the CEOs of each of those companies – I don't need to name names – you would find that those people running those outfits were experts in the energy sector. They've worked their way up through the industry, typically have spent their careers there. Many of them are engineers or MBAs or both.

Let me ask you: what have been the qualifications of the people in charge of Alberta's health care system in the last 16 years, aside from the one completely fraudulent one? Who will remember the woman who applied and was hired from the U.S.? Go through and look at the qualifications of the deputy ministers of health. How many of them have a background in running a health care system? Precious few. While we have a health economist there running Alberta Health Services right now, what's the biggest organization he's ever run? What are his real qualifications? How well does he know the intimate detail of how an emergency room works? Has he ever actually spent a year or two getting into the depths of that sort of operation? You can raise that question with him next time you see him.

I also think part of the problem has been budgeting by the quarter. Every quarter for most of the last 17 years the health care budget has been jiggered around, and I sat here as an MLA while that happened a lot. That led to a whole series, an unending series it seems, of stupid decisions where, when the times were good, we had money to build the East Edmonton health clinic, the Sheldon Chumir health centre, and on and on. We put a kidney dialysis facility into I think it was Lac La Biche, and it goes on and on. Then the doors open. "Whoops, the budget is tighter. We can't staff it." So it sits there empty. That's happened a lot, and it happens because we got into what I think was a very poor process of budgeting.

My diagnosis is that there have been 16 years of poor political decision-making. That's the real disease we have here. Is this the treatment for that? No. I don't think it is. I think it's amazing that the health care system is still running as well as it does. I don't think that bringing in this particular piece of legislation is going to fix anything very much. In fact, I'm concerned that with Bill 17 this government is prescribing a multivitamin for what's really a raging fever.

We can now talk for a moment about the bill. I do want to pause for a minute, Mr. Speaker, and give this government credit for one significant good move. This is important, and I'll give you credit for this. I just hope you stick with it. The five years of predictable funding: don't give up on that. Let these guys, these men and women, who are running the system right now have five years to know where they're going and what they can do. That's a significant step forward. But that, of course, doesn't have anything to do with this piece of legislation, and I think that speaks volumes.

If I look through this bill carefully, I see an unusually long preamble, and I rather like the preamble. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford might have had a hand in drafting it – I don't know – or the minister did. It's long, but it does state some broad, good positions, some of which I'm glad to see in legislation although I'm skeptical of any real follow-through.

For example, the fourth paragraph, as it were, in the preamble says, "Healthy policy across Alberta Government ministries should recognize the social determinants of health." Well, you should read and see what you're agreeing to there because there's a very substantial body on the social determinants of health that addresses things like inequality. Are we going to see a return to a progressive income tax? Believe it or not, that's probably important health policy. Are we going to see feeding of hungry children? That would be really good health policy. I won't go on like that, but I'm glad to see some of that stuff in here. It's been in Alberta Liberal health policy for many years now.

The preamble is pretty good. Actually, I was quite excited, and I'm not just saying this as rhetoric. I was quite excited when I read the preamble.

Then when I get to the charter, I see a piece of legislation that's really asking for a blank cheque. I know there's a draft charter in one of the documents that the government has developed in the last few months. This bill doesn't commit to that specific charter. It leaves lots of wiggle room, and I think it does raise the question, which others have raised, that since the charter is going to be in the regulations, the way it's worded in this legislation, the health charter will have no legal effect. So then you have to wonder: well, what's the point of it? As one person has said, it's more like a mission statement or a wish than a charter. I'm disappointed that we're not putting the charter in here.

4:30

Because I'm running out of time, Mr. Speaker, I need to keep my comments brief on the health advocate. I will have more comments on that position in the future. This feels like a complaints office. Well, we don't need a piece of legislation to set up a complaints office for the health care system. Goodness knows, in the last couple of years we amended the legislative framework for the Ombudsman to include regional health authorities, we've got the Health Facilities Review Committee – and I'm not sure what they're up to these days – and, lo and behold, we have the minister here. This feels actually like an insurance policy or a protection office so the minister has somewhere to punt the tough questions that come to him or her. I'm pretty disappointed in that as well.

We'll be bringing forward some amendments. Who knows? Maybe we can convince government members to improve this legislation through our amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise and speak to Bill 17. First, I want to commend the hon. minister for bringing this forward. I also want to commend my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford for his work on this act and his work on health-related issues. While I'm talking and commending people, I want to commend the many doctors and nurses and professional health care workers that work in our hospitals. This past Sunday I took my father to the hospital, to emergency, in Lacombe. It was a very busy morning, yet they were able to see him very quickly. I spent a few hours there and observed what was going on inside the hospital, and I just want to say thank you, and I want to commend the nurses and the doctors that work there. He got excellent care in very good time.

There have been many questions raised about the proposed Alberta Health Act and how it will benefit Albertans and improve our health system. The one key question is: how will the health charter principles be maintained? I will touch on this one question and add some clarity and support to these principles.

Albertans have said that for the health charter to be meaningful, there must be a way for people to raise concerns when their experience in the health system does not align with the charter. The effectiveness of the health charter will depend on how it is implemented and lived up to. Albertans do not want valuable health resources tied up in legal battles, but they do want to know that they have somewhere to go for assistance if the health charter is being ignored. I'm glad to see that the Alberta Health Act strikes a balance between liability and transparency by establishing a health advocate.

I'm also pleased to note that the health advocate's role is not intended to duplicate resolution processes that are already in place. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there are already many regulatory bodies charged with addressing concerns in our health system, and these include the 28 regulatory health profession colleges, other entities such as the Health Facilities Review Committee, the Public Health Appeal Board, patient concerns resolution officers, the Mental Health Patient Advocate, and the Alberta Ombudsman, just to name a few. Despite these resources, there may be issues with the health charter that fall outside the mandate of these organizations. In that case, the health advocate will be able to respond.

The health advocate will address health charter complaints directly or will forward their complaints to other responsible bodies, depending on what is most appropriate. The scope and powers of the health advocate will be defined in regulations. This will best enable the advocate's role to evolve over time. A public notice requirement will give all Albertans the opportunity to comment on the health advocate's role as it develops.

I want to discuss the powers of the health advocate. I see some real potential for the health advocate's role. Let me briefly discuss some examples. According to the Putting People First report, part 1, page 17, many Albertans may not know how to access these mechanisms, or which mechanism would be most appropriate for their concern. Albertans would benefit from a resource to help them navigate the resolution system.

In this case the health advocate could raise awareness about the health charter and help Albertans better understand where they should go to have complaints resolved.

To avoid duplication in the health system, the health advocate will refer complaints to another body such as the professional college or the Health Facilities Review Committee that has the authority to more appropriately address the matter. In this way the advocate will play an important navigation role to resolve concerns. Often people that need an advocate simply need a little help to find their way to the appropriate body or desk or person that can help. For example, this means that a complaint about the conduct of a health professional could be directed to the right or appropriate health profession college to be addressed.

If there is no appropriate authority to address a health charter-related complaint, the advocate will review the concern and will have the authority to make recommendations to address this issue. If the issue is not addressed, the advocate can report the matter to the minister along with the health advocate's recommendations for action.

The minister is authorized under the proposed act to direct health providers and organizations to comply with the health charter or require them to develop and adopt their own charter that is consistent with the health charter.

Albertans have asked for greater accountability and transparency in how well the health system operates. The health advocate will promote greater accountability by submitting an annual report to Albertans. The annual report will set out the activities of the health advocate related to the health charter and will be submitted to the minister for tabling in the Legislative Assembly.

I also want to briefly discuss some limitations around the health advocate. The advocate is not a duplication of existing complaint resolution processes. The health advocate will not supersede the roles of professional colleges and others under current legislation in terms of resolving concerns. The health advocate will not be responsible for assessing system-level issues, and the health advocate is not a litigation system. Albertans say that they do not want their concerns to be bogged down in litigation. Costly court challenges take energy and resources away from health service delivery.

The health advocate provides an important resource for charter concerns, and because the advocate's powers and duties will be more fully developed in regulations, the advocate will be able to respond to emerging issues effectively. This means that regulations could be made that will enable the health advocate to access information and require health service providers to co-operate with the advocate. In these respects Bill 17 proposes that the health advocate will be similar to the current Mental Health Patient Advocate model. The health advocate will work at arm's length from government in the same way that the Mental Health Patient Advocate works to address mental health concerns.

In conclusion, the health advocate is about making our health charter real. Bill 17 proposes that the health advocate will be the most effective way to address Albertans' health charter concerns. I ask all members to support Bill 17 and move it to the next stage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, in fact, I have a list that people send to me.

Dr. Taft: What about 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, yes. Sorry. Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes for comments or questions. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, five minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that, and I won't need five minutes. I listened to the hon. member discuss the merits of this legislation, and particularly I was interested in his remarks regarding the health advocate. Given that we have an Ombudsman who as recently as two years ago, I believe, made some recommendations or some comments regarding out-of-province medical payments in this ministry and that we already have the Health Quality Council of Alberta – in fact, the CEO of the Health Quality Council was one of the very few people that I can find in government that had an increase in salary between 2009 and 2010; the total compensation package would have increased by 10 per cent to $482,000 – my question to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is this. Do you think the health advocate is a duplication and a waste of our really precious and valuable resources, that could be used, for instance, to ensure that everyone has access to emergency care?

Mr. Prins: Well, Mr. Speaker, he asked me if it's a duplication, and that's exactly what my speech was about, that this is not a duplication. It's just another angle. I'll also tell him that during committee we can go through the entire act clause by clause and have those discussions.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

4:40

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) to the same member. I'm trying to think of a kind of complaint that this advocate might take on. Let's say that you go to an emergency room and you're unhappy with the way a nurse or a physician treats you. If you make that kind of complaint, well, that's going to be directed to the professional association. If you're treated incorrectly, the wrong surgery or something goes wrong, well, that'll be taken up in the law courts. Let's say that the food is bad. Is that the kind of complaint that the patient advocate will do? In the nitty-gritty, real-world life of people experiencing the health system, what kind of complaint is a health advocate going to address that isn't already being addressed? I need an example.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. That is a question that I believe is reasonable. I would think that if anybody was a client of the health services and had a complaint, the first person that it would go to is the local person or the local hospital, wherever they have the complaint. So you talk to the people there, and if that's not being resolved, then you go to the advocate. If the advocate can't get you to the right body, like the right professional body, and actually get an answer for you from the professional body that's providing the service, then you would go back to the advocate, and the advocate would enforce the charter. If that doesn't help, then they go right to the minister, and the minister will order these people to provide the services that are within the charter.

If somebody's complaining about food, then I think the reasonable thing to do would be to go to where the complaint originates, talk to the people that are cooking the food and ask the right questions and ask them what the problem is. They should be able to answer the question long before they ever go to an advocate or to the minister or any other professional body.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. If I can put a similar question to the hon. member, in the example of someone who found that the waiting times didn't meet the requirements of the charter in an emergency room, could he then ask the advocate to direct the minister to change the long-term care policy of the government or, for example, to staff the urgent care centre at the East Edmonton hospital? I mean, could this advocate actually get at the root of the problems we're facing today?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you're talking about waiting times, I'm not sure if the waiting times are in the charter or in the regulations. I don't know that. I think, once again, that if there's a problem with waiting times, you need to talk to the doctors or the nurses that are providing the service in that place to find out what the problem is. I'm just going to refer, once again, exactly to what I said at the beginning of my speech. I was in a hospital this Sunday for many hours. It was very busy. It was being operated very professionally, and the service was, I would consider, very good – reasonable to very, very good.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have a list here, and the next speaker would be the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the comments by the colleague across the way. I know his family. One of them is a doctor, a very good doctor, and certainly I appreciate his work and also some of the good work that he performed in my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I know that he will be successful.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, and I do speak with a heavy heart. Albertans had high expectations for a change in our health care system, and I can actually empathize with the minister of health in terms of this mammoth task that is required. Needless to say, as was referenced earlier by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the fact that there have been something like 13 deputy ministers, one has to really ask the question: who are the administrative experts dealing with this massive undertaking in terms of the number of employees?

I think that the preamble, as was mentioned earlier, would clearly indicate that the intent in the preamble talks in very general terms but overall talks about motherhood and apple pie, that I think we all can agree with, that we would like in terms of the best care for our grandparents, the best care for our moms and dads and our children.

Yet it is somewhat, shall I say, disappointing because I do believe, as was mentioned earlier, that it does miss the mark, and let me say why I believe that. The government, I believe, really has failed to deliver health care for this fine province of ours. This government over the past many, many years really has not delivered change, inasmuch as in reading a newspaper about a week ago, the headline in the Edmonton Journal said: historic – historic – health charter. I can only comment as I went through the detail of the story – and I know the reporter, who actually tried to do a very good job, also says: "I don't make the headlines. I just write the story. It's editors who write the headlines." Clearly, it was historic, but historic in rhetorical comment. Historic in rhetoric. Historic in rhetoric that really is saying a lot of absolutely nothing. That's what concerns me because it isn't a real discussion.

Mr. Anderson: It's a Seinfeld law.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. In fact, it truly is a Seinfeld law.

That is what's disappointing when I go through Bill 17, which I've spent a considerable amount of time going through because I was willing to give the minister of health the benefit of the doubt. In fact, as we look at this historic charter of rhetoric, I believe that it is really demonstrating the gap that exists between this ministry of health and Albertans, and that is very unfortunate. In fact, at one point I even thought that maybe we should bring back the former minister of health, but I can clearly see the scared looks of colleagues from all sides of the House if that were to happen. It would be something that could be remarkably even more scary than what is taking place today.

Now, I believe that Alberta was promised a health charter – I gave the minister of health the benefit of the doubt – but they won't be getting one any time soon. It'll be in the future. When? We don't know. We will do it perhaps, based on the comments I've seen, over the next five years, over the next 10 years, over the next 15 years – who knows? – maybe over the next 20 years. That simply is not good enough for Albertans. It has no power. It's a guarantee that really can't be guaranteed. I do believe that it is another example of the government talking the talk and not walking the walk. I believe that it is truly an entirely empty promise.

This government said it needs to make small changes to health legislation: if only the legislation was consolidated, health care would be delivered more efficiently. Well, under the superboard that is in place today, with the over 85 vice-presidents – 85 vice-presidents – that are under this organization today, with the change of 13 deputy ministers I believe that it does scare Albertans in terms of the state of flux. Even though there are excellent people on the front lines – doctors such as the hon. member's son, nurses – so many people that are on the front line, that truly are seeing what's happening, are talking about what is happening in lunchrooms each and every day, yet their message is not getting through. I would encourage the minister of health to truly sit down and listen, not actually talk but listen, to people on the front line, our doctors and our nurses and so many people that are committed to the very best health care that is possible.

Over this past period of time we truly have seen some very scary revelations come forward, revelations about the wait times. I believe the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had brought up the fact that over this past year the increase has now gone up by 54 per cent. Those numbers are not good enough. The question. Can you in fact go and complain to the health advocate relative to the fact that: hey, did you know that our wait times now are 54 per cent longer?

The question would be: what would even be the role of going to complain to a health advocate about that? We can hear that in this Legislature each and every day because constituents, who are ultimately our bosses, go to their MLAs. All of those MLAs who are listening to those complaints, I know, are equally frustrated with what is going on, and ultimately they bring those concerns forward. The questions that are being asked of the minister of health are being asked in this House. This, I believe, is a direct connection back to democracy and to our bosses.

Now there is going to be a barrier: this health advocate, someone so the minister can be protected. In fact, MLAs perhaps in the future may not be able to talk to the minister of health. They may have to go to the health advocate. So one would begin to question what the roles of MLAs are. Are they not allowed any longer to bring forward health issues based on MLA constituency work that we do each and every day? Would we not be allowed to be able to bring forward those issues? No, let's go ahead and take it over to the health advocate, which really is another level of red tape and another level of regulation and bureaucracy.

Actually, I believe that it really is regulating Albertans to death, perhaps even literally. Regulating. We don't need another level of bureaucracy. We have 85 – right now 85 – vice-presidents within the superboard. Perhaps they should have made it 88, one for every new MLA after this next election . . .

Mr. Anderson: Eighty-seven.

Mr. Boutilier: Eighty-seven. Sorry. It's 87, as was mentioned.

I have to ask this question. This superboard under the purview of this government and the minister of health has lost community capital. What I mean by community capital is that people in our constituencies know how the hospital is being run better than some centrally controlled bureaucracy and monopoly here in Edmonton. What I mean by what has been lost in terms of community capital, I speak to people often within the hospital, and they have answers, but they have to go through literally 10 if not 20 examples of red tape and bureaucracy. That's what really has to be streamlined. That's what Albertans are telling us. I find that this, quote, unquote, historic health charter has missed the boat because it is not historic. It is historic in rhetoric, but it is not historic in terms of outcomes.

From now on does it mean, "Don't complain to your MLA; go and complain to the health advocate"? Then one has to ask the question: what is the role of an MLA? I personally believe that we have to remain rooted in our bosses. Our bosses are the people within our constituency. I compliment MLAs from all sides in terms of MLAs who bring to the minister of health actions and concerns that need to be dealt with. Unfortunately, the question is: will that role be taken away? That would be a question that I would have for the minister of health: what about the role of an MLA in launching concerns on health care issues brought forward?

For instance, yesterday I had some people that were watching question period on television. They were aware of this Bill 17, the new act that was coming forward, but they still wanted to have questions relative to the minister of health's responses when it came to wait times, wanting to know why the wait time lines, why they were in an emergency room for almost 18 hours. Now, I want to commend the minister of health when he said he's going to reduce that time to four hours. I think that is quite noble. But as the person who was watching on television yesterday said: I didn't fall off a turnip truck yesterday. They said that with the utmost of respect toward democracy, but they had some real concerns, saying: what are you going to do tomorrow in this new health act that is going to help me reduce times from 18 hours down to four?

Clearly, we have not received answers to those questions. This bill, I believe, which I thought would be about getting the transparency and accountability that patients deserve, does not provide this. This has provided another level of bureaucracy added to the 85 vice-presidents that are in there now.

We continue to lose the community capital that we have in each and every one of our communities. That's the strength of Alberta, the community capital of people who know what is going on, not controlled by a monopoly in Edmonton. That is what has been lost. It has been an approach just like this bill, from the sky down as opposed to from the roots up. For anyone who is in agriculture I can say that I think we can all trust that from the roots up builds a solid foundation as opposed to the superboard's sky-down approach.

Let's never forget that our bosses are not up there. Our bosses are with us on the ground each and every day. I commend MLAs who are listening to their constituents. I'm convinced that they'll be rewarded in the next provincial election in March of 2012. However, I do say that for those who will not listen, for those who are following the direction from the sky down as opposed to from the roots up, if you forget who your bosses are, I do believe that you will pay the price in the next provincial election. We will be judged on our actions today and yesterday and tomorrow relative to this important piece.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I believe that this bill, basically, has indicated that – the preamble, I think, is fine, but unfortunately when it comes to the meat, there is no meat on the bones of what this health charter is all about, and that's where it has missed the boat.

I must interpret from all of this that as emergency room waits get longer and longer – from last year to this year they're 54 per cent longer. Those people watching today on television, those people in waiting rooms today as they watch questions being respectfully asked of the minister of health are not getting answers.

I can say that, clearly, democracy is in jeopardy when the MLAs' roles and responsibilities are going to be replaced by a health advocate. Is that intended, quite simply, to insulate the minister of health? He loses that community capital that is there, that we see truly having answers relative to doctors, nurses, and so many health professionals.

Rather than getting it from the sky down, from the 85 vice-presidents that ultimately appear to be controlling what's going on here, I applauded the minister of health when he said: "I'll pick up my phone, and I'll call Stephen Duckett. I'll call the head of the superboard." But when I asked him to do it outside of the Legislature, he didn't. That concerns me as well. I even offered him new batteries for his cellphone. I know that just a week or two before, when he was in an editorial board in Calgary and in an editorial board in Edmonton, he was able to pick up the phone and call the health superboard CEO czar in a second. But when I asked him in this Legislature, deeply rooted in the trenches of that community capital, he said he couldn't do it in the Legislature. I waited for him outside. He still couldn't do it outside. Why?

Mr. Mason: His batteries were run down.

Mr. Boutilier: His batteries were not run down. He didn't do it because of the actual bureaucracy and red tape that is going on.

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a) do you want to use the five minutes? Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for that contribution, I think one of his first major speeches as a new caucus member here on our side of the House.

I guess I want to ask the question of him about the whole approach of picking up the phone, you know, and calling the CEO of Alberta Health Services. It doesn't seem to happen anymore, even though the problems are, if anything, getting worse, or at least we're becoming more aware of the problems that exist. He's ruled out the possibility that the minister's batteries had just run down. Would he, then, offer an alternative explanation, perhaps that what it was was a stunt in order to try and show some accessibility and hands on and going to change things, and whether or not he also thinks that it's been replaced of late with the more typical approach of this minister, dithering and not really doing anything and just fiddling while the system burns? That was, frankly, what I expected. I'm beginning to see this now as a much more predictable behaviour.

Thank you.

5:00

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, a very good question. I must admit that I had given the new minister of health at the time the benefit of the doubt because the minister of health, actually, is a pretty likeable guy. He usually picks up the phone and gives you a call, in comparison to the previous minister of health. But as we heard in question period, he really wasn't the previous minister of health. We're not really quite sure who was the minister of health at that time. Someone, obviously, must have been. Actually, I think it might have been the member on the front bench right across the way.

Having said that, you brought up some important words. How come the minister of health in his original start as a minister of health could stand up in an editorial board at the Calgary Herald and the Edmonton Journal and pick up the phone and call Stephen Duckett from the superboard and just get to the bottom of it and make some changes? Yet when we asked him about the issue of bonuses, "Oh, no, that's an independent board; that's off to the side." which really, quite frankly, contradicts his picking up the phone and calling in front of reporters. So it appears to me that he'll do it not in front of MLAs; he'll do it in front of reporters. The term that was used was "stunt." The question is the word "dither." Not only that, but he doesn't even pull that stunt on MLAs anymore, and he certainly doesn't do it to the editorial boards of the Calgary Herald or the Edmonton Journal.

I would like to go with him and have other MLAs go with him so we can see what he actually would do. I'm not even quite sure today if he's speaking with the CEO of the superboard. He knows so well that the superboard has failed. It has failed because the community capital of our constituencies, the 83 constituencies that we bring democratically to this House, has been overruled from the sky down, not from the roots up. We are from the roots up. We are not from the Stephen Duckett superboard top down.

I think the words are very appropriate to the hon. member when he says "dither." I don't see the minister picking up his phone anymore. I don't see him going to editorial boards. Quite simply, he appears to have lost his superman status and, in losing his superman status, really wonders that he can't fly anymore. He can't fly anymore, and he can't phone anymore. His batteries are dead.

I think it really speaks of Bill 17 that this truly, if anything, is about dithering. It is about a stunt. I would ask that the editorial boards who first embraced the minister of health, as we all did, as a refreshing change from the previous minister of health – I can say that the previous minister of health would go into a garden, and rather than coming in with some kid gloves, like the now minister of health, he would come in with a bulldozer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 17. Albertans have been very clear about what they want from their health care system. They want to be engaged in important decisions about their health care system. They want to know the basis for those decisions, and they also want to know what they can expect from their system.

As this Assembly knows, more than 3,000 Albertans expressed their views about our health care system and health care legislation during the recent Alberta Health Act consultation. The quote from the Putting People First consultation report, part 1, page 14, says:

Albertans want deliberate, transparent decisions made about the health system, its future direction, and policies to support that direction . . . Albertans also want to know where the system is headed. They know the health [care] system is continuously evolving and will never reach a "final" static point, but they want reference to desired outcomes clearly spelled out.

I'm pleased to see that the fundamental guiding principles set out in Bill 17 reflect the needs and desires of Albertans. I'm even more pleased to see that the proposed act will require the minister to establish a health charter. A health charter is a series of statements that clearly spell out responsibilities and expectations for our health care system. There's also a commitment to review the health charter at least every five years to ensure that it will be a living document that can evolve with time and technology.

Bill 17 requires that the health charter will recognize that health is a partnership amongst individuals, families, communities, health professionals, organizations that deliver health care and services, and the Alberta government. It also will acknowledge the impact of a person's health status and other circumstances on their capacity to interact with the health care system, not be used to limit access to services, and not be subject to or be the basis of litigation within the court system.

Albertans said that they expect a health charter to reflect a broad outlook on health. We all have a part to play in the charter. This includes everyone who relies on our health care system, including the health professionals, organizations and individuals who deliver health care and services, and the government of Alberta.

Albertans recommend that the charter be called the health charter and not a patient charter, as was originally proposed by the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. I support this recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, health is about more than patients and acute-care services. Health is about promoting wellness, caring for the vulnerable, and monitoring the health status of our citizens. The health charter needs to be broad enough to address all of these concepts.

For the health charter to be meaningful, there must be ways for people to raise concerns about their experience in the health system. Bill 17 proposes a health charter that will define principles, expectations, and responsibilities that apply across the health system. I'm pleased to see that the health advocate will also be established to receive complaints related to the health charter.

The advisory committee made specific recommendations about what the health charter would include. These recommendations included a commitment that all Albertans will have access to primary care services through primary care teams. The advisory committee reflected what they heard during the many weeks of public consultation. Albertans said that they supported that the following statements be included in the charter.

When I interact with the health [care] system, I expect that I will:

- Have my health status, social and economic circumstances and personal beliefs and values acknowledged;
- Be treated with respect and dignity . . .
- Receive information on the health system and education about healthy living and wellness.

Albertans also supported including a set or responsibilities in the charter. Some of the statements that were consulted on included:

Taking my circumstances into account and to the best of my abilities, when I interact with the health system, I understand I will be asked to:

- Respect the rights of other patients and health providers;
- Ask questions and work with providers to understand the information I am being [given]; and
- Make healthy choices in my life.

I note that the act indicates that no Albertan shall be denied health services because of a failure to comply with the charter, and that principle is entrenched in the act.

I'm pleased that the charter will focus on a broad spectrum of health and wellness issues. I'm concerned that we don't focus enough attention on factors that promote wellness. Albertans want to make healthy choices, and I believe the charter and the discussion that will be generated as the charter is being developed will help Albertans understand the choices available to them and respond accordingly. This discussion should encourage Albertans to consider their own responsibilities in using the health system appropriately and looking after their own health.

I understand the general public and stakeholders will be asked to validate a draft health charter. I look forward to this discussion. I'm also pleased to note that government has accepted the recommendation to have the Health Quality Council of Alberta play an important role in the health charter. The council will monitor and report regularly to Albertans through the minister on whether the health system is performing in accordance with the principles of the Canada Health Act and the health charter. This is the type of transparency that Albertans are looking for.

In conclusion, the health charter is about building accountability across the health system and describing how Alberta Health Act principles will be realized. I ask all members to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 17 at second reading. This is an interesting piece of legislation. I've had the opportunity to read it through carefully, and I have a number of comments.

First, I want to set the stage a little bit for the development of this piece of legislation. I'm going to go back to something that our caucus did late last year. In November and October we conducted some public hearings around the province, and that was in the face of a government that was introducing major changes to the health care system that were causing havoc, causing chaos. There didn't seem to be a clear plan, and we had repeatedly challenged the government to go out and ask people. Tell people what you want to do; ask their opinion; find out what they want you to do before you continue in this direction. The government under the previous minister rejected that approach because, of course, the previous minister knew exactly what to do, and he was going to do it no matter what anyone said.

We went to a number of cities, and of course we listened carefully to what people said. We produced a report which is called What People Want. It had, I think, a number of very, very practical recommendations that were quite specific.

Now, the government then decided that they would consult after all. The minister's advisory committee on the health system conducted a much more extensive program of public consultation than we were able to achieve with our much more limited resources. They went to a lot more places, and they heard from a lot more people, but of course they were a lot more structured as well in terms of how they wanted this all to happen. I was at a couple of them. You know, it was interesting because not everybody really felt that they were really getting the kind of consultation that they wanted to have. It was fairly structured.

That committee then produced a report, and I'll just read some of the recommendations. The charter will "acknowledge the impact of a person's health status and other circumstances and their capacity to interact with the health system" — I'm not sure what that means — "provide assistance to Albertans in accessing appropriate resolution mechanisms in the health system through the use of education, guidance and referral . . . [and] pursue policy opportunities in primary care, continuing care and mental health." Mr. Speaker, I was amazed that, having listened to so many people, these were the kinds of things that they think people wanted because we heard something very, very different indeed.

I know that the chair of this committee, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, said that what people wanted was a high-level document that sets out roles and responsibilities in the health system. Mr. Speaker, if most people in Alberta had that for their first priority, then I'll eat the report. What people really want is better access to health care. They want wait times reduced for cancer surgery. We heard, you know, that six months before you can get the treatment that you need is too long if you've got cancer, that 20 hours average time in a big emergency room in Edmonton or Calgary is too long. They want a family doctor. They want to have seniors' care for their aging parents, where they get the care that they need and they're taken care of respectfully and that there is enough staff to make sure that they get bathed on time and that they eat their meals at regular times and that they're well treated.

These are the kinds of things that we found people wanted. They didn't want a health charter or a health advocate. These are things that were inserted into this process by the government, by the chair. These are not things that sprung up spontaneously from the people of this province.

We have this bill that comes out of it. One of the things: it sets up a health charter. It sets up a health advocate. You know, I read the bill quite quickly, and I can summarize it as follows. There's a charter that's going to be set by the government. The draft that they have has a number of nice-sounding sentiments in it but doesn't commit to specific waiting times or commit to having a family doctor or commit to being able to afford the drugs that people need, things like that. It's not about that. So there's a charter, and it's not enforceable in the courts. Then there's an advocate. Now, the advocate can look into complaints, and if he or she wants to, they can conduct an investigation. If they want, they can submit a report to the minister. If the minister wants, he can do something about it or not. That is, in fact, the summary of this little piece of legislation.

You know, maybe that's not a bad thing, but it really shows me that the government has missed an opportunity in a major way. This government has had a chance to listen to people and has a chance to address their real concerns in the health system. Instead, they've come up with something that is almost superfluous to the real needs of Albertans with respect to their health care.

Some who might be uncharitable might think that this is to provide additional cover for the minister, as if he doesn't have enough. He's got his health superboard. He's got a Stephen Duckett that can catch all kinds of flak. If he doesn't want to answer a question in the House or from the public, he can always say: well, that's the jurisdiction of the health authority. He can bring in a budget to this Legislature that is about one-sixth of the total budget of the province, billions of dollars, to fund Alberta Health Services, you know, and it's one line in the budget. You can't ask detailed questions about that budget, and that's a sixth of the entire budget of the province of Alberta, billions of dollars.

He's already got all of these structures in place in order to deflect any serious demand for accountability, and now he's got a health advocate. So if you've got a problem, maybe it fits the charter; maybe it doesn't. You know, maybe the advocate can do something about it. What it's going to do is just divert more attention, more energy away from the government. It's not going to really make sure that people are well taken care of.

I've looked at the draft of the health charter. I asked the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka about this, and he said that he didn't think the draft charter really dealt with the whole question of whether or not you have a right to be seen in an emergency room within a period of time. So the real measures that people want have not appeared in the draft charter, and I have no expectation that they will.

If we were putting forward a draft charter, one, we'd make it enforceable; two, we'd make it deal with real issues facing people as they confront the health care system so that you've got a guarantee in an emergency room of being seen and getting a bed if you need a bed within a reasonable time. These guidelines right now are already in place and have been for over a year as part of Dr. Duckett's accountability package for his compensation. Those are part of his objectives for the health system and have been for over a year, when the minister announced them as some new initiative just the other day after meeting with the emergency room doctors.

It's not getting us anywhere fast, Mr. Speaker. We're going backwards because the government continues to fiddle and dither and spin and not deal with the real issues. I say that if we're really going to have a health charter, let's make it enforceable. Let's put things in like: you have the right to a family doctor. Let's put things in like: you have a fixed amount of time in emergency rooms. If you've got cancer, you get treatment within a fixed period of time. If you've got an relative that's chronically ill, they won't be shuffled off to something called continuing care by the government when what they really need is nursing care and medical care. And if you've got multiple illnesses and you require a lot of medications, for example, the charter should say that you're not going to have to pay through the nose in order to get the drugs that you need in order to get better. Those are the kinds of things that we would like to see.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say really, really clearly that this piece of legislation is not significant. It's far from historic. It won't deal with the real issues. This piece of legislation is more smoke from the government, which is failing to address the basic health concerns of Albertans. The real tragedy of it is that it's a tremendous lost opportunity. The government spent so much time and so many resources getting out and actually talking to Albertans, yet it forced their input into predetermined moulds to come out with a charter and an advocate instead of letting them have freer rein in order to describe for themselves what they needed.

The recommendations don't follow from the comments. I looked at the comments carefully in the second part of the report called Putting People First. I found that when you really sift through it, you'll find that they did hear the same things we heard. They did say that you've got to improve the performance of the health system. They didn't talk about high-level documents. They didn't talk about, you know, the kinds of things that we've heard are supposed to be here. "Align decisions and policies with principles-based legislation and monitor and report on how well the system is doing." That didn't come from the people; that came from the committee. That came from a predetermined direction, as far as I can tell.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that the government just doesn't get it. It doesn't get it. We presented to the minister yesterday and today that for a very small amount, considering how much we put into health care, they could substantially reduce the waiting times at the Royal Alexandra hospital simply by funding an urgent care centre at the East Edmonton health clinic. The minister finally blurted out today at the end of question period that it will be one or two years before this goes online. So the question I ask is: what is the government actually going to do differently, something that they do that they weren't going to do all along, in order to address this ER crisis? The answer, I think, quite simply, is nothing.

You know, the guidelines, the timelines for emergency room care, that the minister so proudly announced after meeting with the emergency room doctors, have in fact been in place for over a year and have yet to produce any significant impact. You've got empty spaces, not just at the East Edmonton clinic, and you've got a serious problem that is only compounding this issue in the government's secret plan to build continuing care. They're very careful to avoid talking about long-term care.

But I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if someone is blocking an acute-care bed and you need to move them to someplace else, they need a medical bed. They're in a hospital in an acute-care bed because their doctor knows they need a high level of medical care, so you can't put them into a lodge. You have to move them into a medical bed. That's what a long-term care bed is, but the government will not admit that. They still want to have private delivery of continuing care. They still want to avoid the whole question of long-term care, and it's time that they changed their direction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for some excellent points. One of the key points that he had raised is the issue of long-term care and our seniors. Our seniors have truly been the architects of building this great province of ours. I do know that on numerous occasions in here and again today under this bill he's made reference to the issue of long-term care in terms of what is taking place. In fact, at one point I believe the hon. member had referenced the point that there actually are fewer long-term care beds today, under the new administration of this government. My question, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member is in terms of long-term care. Do you feel that this act today in any way, shape, or form will help when it comes to the issue of long-term care for our seniors, the very architects of this great province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. No. I don't think that this deals with it. I looked at the charter. There's no guarantee in the charter that if you need long-term care, you get it. Of course, we all know that in the last election the Premier promised 600 new long-term care beds and 200 replacement long-term care beds, when, in fact, what they did right after the election was change the direction and start reducing the number of long-term care beds.

We released a document earlier this year that showed clearly that a committee of senior bureaucrats in the government was working to a strategy of cutting the number of long-term care beds substantially, potentially up to half, that had never been disclosed to the public. It had never been reported here in this Legislature. It was directly contrary to the Premier's commitment in the last election, yet they were working to a strategy of reducing long-term care beds, which are medical beds, where your drugs are covered and you get nursing care and you get a higher level of care because you need it, because you've been medically assessed as requiring that. This will only compound the waiting time problem in emergency rooms because many doctors are keeping patients who need long-term care in acute-care beds because they know they need the drugs and they know they need the nursing care, so they block the beds from emergency room patients.

The Premier says, "Well, you want to split up couples," and, you know, all of these kinds of things when he tries to dissemble and distract from the real issue. But, no, you can't move somebody who needs nursing care and needs drugs from an acute-care bed into a lodge, into some continuing care bed, where you have to pay for your drugs and you have to pay extra for nursing care. If you need help to go to the washroom or to get your meal, then that's extra, too. It's all delivered on a profit basis, so they have to double the price of the accommodation fees in order to make it profitable for their friends in the private sector to build.

None of this – none of this – is in fact going to solve the problem. It's in fact going to be worse. It's outrageous that the government should have a secret plan to reduce long-term care beds and mislead the public about it, keep it secret, and keep blathering on about continuing care and trying to confuse the definition so that nobody really knows what they're doing, and they deny the connection to that strategy. The worsening position in our emergency rooms is doubly unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

I thank the hon. member for the question. I want to say that the broken promise in Fort McMurray about long-term care beds, which led to your departure from the government, is just one example of multiple broken promises about our health care system since the last election. I think that the government will pay a price for that.

Thank you.

5:30

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the hon. member is referring to when he talks about a broken promise because there's about $40 million or so going into Fort McMurray. So I think we should maybe just correct that for the record. In fact, there's going to be a 48-bed continuing care facility built there.* The $3 million has already been advanced for purchasing the land.

I mean, I would like the debate to stay at a high level and pertain to the act specifically; however, they keep talking about certain things that they've done. I don't want to discount the 64 people that the hon. member met with. I'm sure they had valuable input, and we'll look forward to hearing more about that, but at this time let's stay at the high level if we could.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to join in this debate regarding Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. Health care is a complex system of partners who all must work together to meet the health needs of Albertans. Albertans have told us that they find it difficult to understand the leadership and accountability in the health system. It's important for Albertans to understand who the key health players are, what their roles and responsibilities in the health system are, and what recourse Albertans have to resolve health care concerns.

Albertans want clarity in how their health system works and in who's responsible for doing what. We need better understanding of the relationship of the major players in the health system such as the relationship between the government of Alberta, as represented by Alberta Health and Wellness, and Alberta Health Services. The Alberta Health Act provides a high-level reference to the roles of Alberta Health Services, the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and the professional colleges. I'm pleased to see that the act does not try to duplicate the mandates of these entities, which are already established in other legislation.

The Alberta Health Act recognizes that because roles and responsibilities of key health organizations are addressed in various pieces of legislation, there is a need for the minister to be able to clarify and co-ordinate these roles and responsibilities from time to time. Albertans want their health system to work in a co-ordinated and integrated manner. Bill 17 proposes a provision that will enable the health minister to clarify and co-ordinate the roles and responsibilities of the major players in the system if required. There are regulation-making powers to support this. This provision will help to remove confusion about roles in the system where required.

I'd like to now provide a brief overview of the roles of the major players in our health system. Alberta Health and Wellness. The Ministry of Health and Wellness under the direction of the minister develops strategic direction and leadership that guides the provincial health system through its accountability of health services and its fiscal responsibilities, in other words, policy.

Alberta Health Services. The mandate of Alberta Health Services is established in the Regional Health Authorities Act. Alberta Health Services is the province's single health authority, that is legislatively mandated by and accountable to Alberta Health and Wellness. Alberta Health Services manages and delivers health care services and programs that are consistent with policy and program direction provided by Alberta Health and Wellness. Alberta Health Services assesses health care delivery needs, sets priorities for the delivery of service and the allocation of resources, and monitors health system performance. In other words, it actually provides the services.

The Health Quality Council of Alberta. Now, the mandate for the Health Quality Council of Alberta is established in the Health Quality Council of Alberta regulation. The Health Quality Council of Alberta is a provincial health board that works to identify and develop improvements to the quality of health services delivered to Albertans and to patients' safety. To accomplish this, the council works with Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness, health professions, and other relevant stakeholders on an ongoing basis. The Health Quality Council of Alberta develops health service quality indicators and conducts patient experience surveys, patient safety reviews and assessments, and other quality assessments. The council is accountable to the Minister of Health and Wellness, and members of the council are appointed by the minister.

Professional colleges. Most professional colleges get their authority from the Health Professions Act, and they are responsible for regulating the activities of their membership. The legislation governing the colleges requires that they carry out their activities in a manner that protects and serves the public interest. This includes establishing, maintaining, and enforcing standards of practice and codes of ethics that govern their members. Colleges are responsible for ensuring that their members have the appropriate educational training and meet the requirements to practise in Alberta. Most importantly, colleges receive and address complaints from the public about their members. Examples of colleges in Alberta include the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Alberta College of Pharmacists, and the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta.

A college is required to submit an annual report to the minister, who will table the report in the Legislature. Each college's annual report provides information about such things as complaints and their disposition, registration, continuing competence programs, committees and tribunals established under the Health Professions Act, and audited financial information.

According to the Putting People First report, Albertans want to know that there is sufficient oversight to ensure that Alberta Health Services is administering public resources in a way that is consistent with established policy direction and which achieves desired outcomes. Albertans also said they want to see clearly established policy directions and outcomes. The public consultation indicated that government needs to set out broad policy directions and health outcomes in ways that Albertans, Alberta Health Services, and other health providers can understand.

To conclude, our citizens want more clarity on how well our system is working and who is responsible for leading us down the path of continual improvement. Bill 17 will help to define the roles and responsibilities of the key players in the health system.

I ask all members to support Bill 17. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening with a great deal of interest to the debate this afternoon and, certainly, the initial remarks by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Dr. Taft: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster just arrived to listen as well.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'm sure the hon. President of the Treasury Board is very concerned about how the consolidation of the regional health authorities has derailed his budget plans. But I will not be distracted, sir.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness in his initial remarks spoke about the year-long conversation with Albertans, that preceded this legislation, and the need for extensive public consultation. I listened with interest, of course, Mr. Speaker, and I have this question for the hon. minister. Why did the government have this extensive public consultation, or this year-long conversation, to come up with this bill, which is simply political distraction, and not have any public consultation when there was this internal discussion within the government to consolidate the regional health authorities and the Cancer Board and the Mental Health Board into the Alberta Health Services Board? Why the contradiction here?

Why have this elaborate public relations exercise for this legislation, yet take an $8 billion plus portion of the Alberta Health and Wellness budget and have no public consultation whatsoever? And not only have no public consultation, but also, Mr. Speaker, there was no cost-benefit analysis done to determine if this Alberta Health Services organization would at least control health care costs and improve service. Nothing was done, yet the minister makes this statement this afternoon about how important conversations and consultations are. When we think about what has happened since 2008, when we consolidated into Alberta Health Services – and I know the President of the Treasury Board doesn't sleep at night worried about the budget and where they're going to get the money to pay for all the mistakes that they have made.

This is what this bill is essentially about. It's to try to distract the public from the real issues in health care. The minister of health and the government certainly hope that the public focuses on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, but what the public should be focusing on is the annual report of the department for 2009-10. If you look at some of the performance measures – we look at what the government wanted to do and what is actually going on with wait times. Whether it's wait times for surgery or wait times for an emergency room visit, we look at the urgency, the level.

Now, there are wait times for urgency level 1, level 2, and level 3. In level 1 – and I'm not going to in the time that I have describe these urgency levels – the current actual is two weeks and the target is two weeks. In level 2 the target is six weeks, but the actual reality for the government is that there is a wait time of 21 weeks. In urgency level 3 the target is 26 weeks, and the government has an actual wait time of 17 weeks. With hip replacements, unfortunately, Albertans have to wait an additional, on average, nine weeks longer. For knee replacement surgeries it goes from 26 weeks, Mr. Speaker, to 49 weeks, which is a considerable wait. That's 23 additional weeks.

These are some of the wait times that the government doesn't want Albertans to think about or to talk about in the coffee shops across the province. The government wants to get the public to talk about this bill. This bill is just legislation that has come about as a result of this government's incompetence in dealing with the real issues in health care. They have failed. They have completely failed with their changes from regional health authorities, where some, not all but some, got national and international awards for their management and their administration. We just wiped them all out and went to this superboard, and our priorities – and I'm going to talk about that in a minute – have changed completely.

Not only have our priorities changed but how we account or report – there's nothing in this bill that suggests that the minister is going to change how we report where the money, the $8 billion plus, is being spent in this province. Now, before, of course, we could have a look, and we could see, for instance with emergency services, how much was being spent in the Edmonton region through Capital health, how much was being spent in Calgary, how much was being spent in Peace River, how much was being spent in East Central or the David Thompson region. I could go on. There was a breakdown of where the government was spending taxpayers' money to provide public health care. But now with Alberta Health Services, of course, it's just a global amount. This is not in the spirit of this bill. It certainly isn't.

Now, there has been a lot of discussion in the last couple of weeks about emergency services. In 2007 the provincial government spent – and I could give you a breakdown, Mr. Speaker – close to $880 million in facility-based emergency and outpatient services. In 2009 the budget increased to over $970 million. The entire health care budget has gone up and up.

It is interesting to note that now we are spending $270 million more in facility-based emergency and outpatient services. We're spending $270 million more than we did four years ago. How can that be? Why is it necessary? Are there that many more visits because we don't have family physicians? Is it an aging population? Is it an increase in population? Certainly, these are some factors, but they're not all of the factors.

One of the main factors, in my view, is the mismanagement of our health care budget by this government, the mismanagement of health care policy by this government, and they're trying to divert public attention with Bill 17. Now, also in 2007 and 2008, before we had this consolidation, there would be a breakdown. We could see how much money was being spent on emergency and outpatient services across different communities. We can't do that anymore.

I'm not confident that this health advocate is going to have anything to say about that. The health advocate will be at the pleasure of the minister and of the government. If this health advocate is appointed – I don't think it's necessary to appoint this person, but this is a government that likes to spend money, in my view, very, very unwisely – will this health advocate release, give us a detailed breakdown of what money is being spent in what regions of the province? I'm not confident that that will happen, but maybe it will.

Now, certainly, we do need more beds. If I could go back to one of the measures that the government talked about discreetly in their annual report which they do not want to talk about publicly, their target is to have 505 people waiting in acute-care hospital beds for continuing care placement. At the time this annual report was written, there were 200 more people waiting, 707. Why could we not have more beds? The minister said earlier in question period that he's been forced into opening more beds. There is this issue that, well, we don't have any money. Certainly, there was a budget surplus in the overall budget of the ministry, over $200 million last year. I realize there was a deficit within Alberta Health Services of $340 million. Today the minister gave a list of 10 beds here, 14 beds here, and that's welcome news, but why did they wait so long, and why are their priorities so different?

Now, whose priorities is this government meeting, Mr. Speaker? Well, one only has to look at the fine print of Alberta Health Services to see the supplementary executive retirement pension plan, or the SERP pension as it's called by some people. In 2009 the government was quick to find over $21 million to top up that executive retirement pension plan, and this is for a select group of individuals that were hired, hand-picked by this government, maybe not by this minister but certainly by his predecessors. These are hand-picked folks. This $21 million certainly wouldn't include the $22 million that was paid in 2009 in severance.

When you look through this report, you can see why this minister and this government don't want taxpayers to read this. This was, again, at a time when Alberta Health Services had an accumulated deficit of $343 million. Taxpayers ask me all the time: how come there's no money for any more beds? Well, this is one reason. Last year this government and this minister – and the minister is certainly in charge – found an additional $21 million to top up not the employees' contribution but the actual employer contribution. This is taxpayer money. This is an additional $24.9 million going to top up the supplementary pensions of 119 people, 64 of whom are active within the government and 55 of whom have been retired or terminated. So there's $45 million.

This is why I say that the priorities of this government are completely out of perspective and out of order from what the taxpayers and those who want a good public health care system in this province demand. We can be quick to find $45 million in two years to top up this executive retirement pension plan, where a lot of the employees if not all of them don't have to make a contribution. It's all from the government. We've got to always be mindful that these individuals are also probably eligible for a local authorities pension plan.

This is an example, yet again, of this government failing the interests of those who want a well-funded and a well-managed public health care system. The focus seems to be on these lavish perks for a few select individuals.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the due diligence of the good MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He chairs Public Accounts, and you know that he goes through these numbers in great detail. I'm just wondering if the hon. member had a few more points of government waste that he's found as he scrutinizes those books that he could share with us on how this government isn't focused and prioritizing its spending, especially when it comes to health care.

It's just fascinating – or maybe I should say discouraging – to see the number of contracts that this government enters into and says: "Oh, there's nothing that we could do about that. The previous minister signed this contract." These lucrative contracts, these golden parachutes continue to be signed, yet when they sign contracts with the teachers or if they sign contracts with oil and gas companies, they see no problem in saying: "Well, we can't honour those ones. We'll tear them up." Yet with all of these other ones that they've appointed, they seem to honour and have great delight in writing those cheques on behalf of Alberta taxpayers. Perhaps you could share a few more numbers with us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Bill 17.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, certainly, I appreciate those comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, but I would urge him to have a look at page 150 of the Alberta Health and Wellness annual report and also on page 138 of the annual report. The hon. member can see for himself where we quickly had $45 million for a select group of people whose track record in operating this $8 billion plus enterprise is not good. If they were a hockey team, they certainly wouldn't have made the playoffs.

Now, if we also look at Alberta Health Services' annual report – and this is directly related to Bill 17 – you can see where the fees and the charges are outlined. You can see where there is quite a difference or quite an increase between the private health service providers and the voluntary health service providers between 2009 and 2010. I don't know how this is going to work.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, point of order, Beauchesne 459. We've put up with this off the track, off the beat, nothing to do with the bill business now for much of the afternoon. I don't mind a little bit of that. There has got to be some leeway, but come on. We're talking about the Alberta Health Act, Bill 17, not about certain specific pages of certain accounts. I wonder if they could save those things for question period or for motions for returns or written reports or something else. Let's get on with the debate of Bill 17, please.

The Deputy Speaker: For the expediency of the debate on the bill, I already said: on Bill 17. Stay on the health care bill, Bill 17. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That point of order that the hon. minister suggested certainly confirms to me that the hon. minister wants the people to look at this bill and see it as a public relations exercise. The hon. minister is embarrassed by what's in the financial statements. The financial statements, hon. minister, are directly related to what's in this bill. You're talking about having the health advocate. You're talking about having the health charter.

Well, what's going to be in that health charter? Are people going to have access to this information? Are they going to know? Of course, they're not going to know if you have your way. They're not going to have any idea.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, address the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Now, with the health advocate. The health advocate perhaps should report – and it should be mandated; it shouldn't be in regulations – why there has been an increase of 9 per cent in fees and charges from private health service providers between 2009 and 2010. Who knows what it'll be after this minister is there for another year? The voluntary health service providers – these are the public ones – had an increase in their fees and charges of .6 per cent. Perhaps that's where the health advocate could, if it is going to be appointed, this office, start to work because certainly the Friends of Medicare would be interested in knowing why there is, Mr. Speaker, such an increase in private fees and charges and not in the publicly delivered system.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to note that all this is related. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given the time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate and have the opportunity to continue in first place tomorrow.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the time, which has nearly run out for today, I would move that we recess until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 3, 2010

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Before we sit, we need to honour the Assembly and all people with a prayer. Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated now.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege and an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 48 students from Westpark middle school in Red Deer. We had a group here yesterday from Westpark middle, and another outstanding group of young citizens is joining us here today for a tour. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Laurie Shapka-Thiel, Miss Kim Toth, and Mr. Norm Howes. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of students from Neil M Ross school in St. Albert. We have a total of 80 visitors in the gallery today. They are accompanied by seven teachers and parent helpers: Mr. Brett Arlinghaus, Mrs. Kelly McConkey, Mr. Jamie Robertson, Mrs. Arlene Wagner, Mrs. Elza McCartney, Mrs. Kristin Klatchuk, and Mrs. Lori Walklin. I'd ask them if they would please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwoddesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today some very special guests who are seated in your Speaker's gallery. They are representatives of the Campaign to Control Cancer organization. Today is the second annual Cancer Day of Action. A number of us MLAs were pleased to meet with them earlier today during the lunch hour. I would ask them to rise as I call their names and to remain standing until all have been introduced. Then perhaps we could greet them with the accolades that they are so due.

Dr. Glenn Hundley, chair of the new Wellspring Edmonton, whose mission is to provide a comprehensive range of cancer supports; Mr. Harley Ast, board member of the Canadian Prostate Cancer Network; Jill Zaparyniuk, who is a nurse in oncology at the Cross Cancer Institute; Mr. Bill Holt, who's the treasurer of the multiple myeloma society in Calgary; and, finally, I'd like to introduce Ms Carol Westberg, a mother of three, a grandmother of seven, who was diagnosed with multiple myeloma in September of 2004 and whose cancer drug is now covered by Alberta health care due to the efforts of this campaign to control cancer in 2008.

God bless you all for being here and for the outstanding work you're doing for so many people in our province and elsewhere. Thank you, all.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Bailey Jason. Bailey has come to the Legislature today to participate in take our kids to work day, an annual program where students are hosted by parents, relatives, and volunteers at workplaces across the country. Bailey is accompanied by his mother, my constituency assistant, Josie Jason. Josie has been my constituency assistant since 2008. I know that my office would not be running smoothly if I didn't have her there. I would like to take this opportunity to thank her for all of her hard work. I would now ask Josie and Bailey to rise and receive thunderous applause from the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Adriana Gentles and Kate Wightmore. They are both grade 9 students spending the day here for, as noted, take your kid to work day. Adriana attends Father Michael Troy junior high school in Edmonton and plays on the senior girls' volleyball and senior girls' basketball teams while maintaining honours. She also played basketball in the Alberta Summer Games in Peace River, and their team brought home the bronze. Adriana is the youngest of four daughters of one of my staff, Lisa Gentles, who is also accompanying them.

Kate Wightmore is a constituent of mine who attends Sainte Marguerite d'Youville junior high school in St. Albert. She's involved in musical theatre and performs at the Citadel, is an avid softball player during the summer, and has a keen interest in politics, which led her to ask her uncle if she could spend the day at the Legislature today. Kate is the niece of my executive assistant, Tim Schultz. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that they rise and that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special guest who joins us in the gallery today. I'd like to ask Sarah Ellis to please rise. Sarah is a grade 9 student at St. Rose junior high. She's participating in the take our kids to work program, where grade 9 students spend a day job shadowing a parent, relative, friend, or volunteer host. Please extend a warm welcome to Sarah.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am most fortunate as the MLA for the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre to be able to gain advice and, I hope, wisdom from some of the constituents that live in my riding. Today three of them are joining me in the public gallery, and I'd like to introduce these wonderful people through you to all of my colleagues in the Assembly. John Zyp is an artist and an activist with very firm opinions on health care, on seniors, on the environment. He is very ably assisted in all of his activities by his wife, Bettie. Also here is Danielle Zyp, who is an artist in her own right – I'm most blessed – a mental health advocate who has been very helpful to me in understanding some of the issues that affect people, and a very proud downtown dweller, I might add. I would ask John, Bettie, and Danielle to please stand and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of great people from Lethbridge called Team Lethbridge. They're up here this week representing 15 different organizations and meeting with government ministries, departments, and MLAs to talk about some of the issues in southern Alberta. I'm going to introduce some of them now, and then the Member for Lethbridge-East is going to introduce the rest later. If they could rise in the gallery as I call their names: Wayne Brewer, Jean Greer McCarthy, Peter Portlock, Brad Cook, Don Young, Blayne Janssens, Colin Ward, Don Lussier, Suzanne Lint, Rick Braden, Sarah Amies, Rudy Friesen, John Machielse, Rob Miyashiro, Brooke Culley, Randy Tremel, Dr. Mike Mahon, Richard Westlund, Dr. Daniel Weeks, Bruce Primeau, Mayor Rajko Dodic, Alderman Faron Ellis, Alderman Ryan Parker, Jody Nilsson, Jan Foster, Chief Tom McKenzie, Stan Coxson, and Lenze Kuiper. We'll give them our warm welcome.

1:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour for me to be able to introduce two friends from my constituency. Mr. Rick Wierzbza from Ponoka is the incoming president of the Ponoka Stampede association. The Ponoka Stampede is celebrating their 75th anniversary this year, and we would invite all members and all Albertans, of course, to attend the stampede. Also, Mr. Dave Douglas of Lacombe is the area manager of the southern prairie region of Ritchie Bros. Auctioneers. They have been in the House this afternoon to meet with a couple of ministers and myself. I would like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

National 4-H Month

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and wish all of you a happy Show Your 4-H Colours day. Today I want to acknowledge this incredibly valuable organization. November is National 4-H Month, and 4-H unites people: rural and urban, professional and student, young and young at heart. All are positively impacted by the Alberta 4-H organization.

The 4-H has been shaping the lives of youth and adults for 93 years and is one of the longest running youth organizations in Alberta. Many 4-H members and leaders have gone on to become successful and accomplished members of society. Because of this, 4-H is also one of the most respected and admired youth programs in Canada, with over 250,000 alumni.

Since 1917 Alberta 4-H has been building communities by developing leadership, interpersonal, and technical skills in its members and volunteers, giving youth the skills they need to succeed in life and helping them build a network of friends across the entire country.

Mr. Speaker, 4-H plays an important role in developing tomorrow's leaders for our agriculture industry and for our rural communities. The 4-H motto is Learn to Do by Doing, and members take part in activities that meet their interests, increase their knowledge, and develop their life skills. Through these opportunities they develop professionalism, strong leadership qualities, and build the confidence they need to succeed. Our youth want to be involved, accepted, valued, and heard, and 4-H provides that opportunity. In 4-H youth are handed the reins, and they run the show.

In honour of National 4-H Month I want to acknowledge the outstanding work of the Alberta 4-H clubs and extend a warm thank you to all the volunteers, the people who tirelessly volunteer their time, energy, and talents to help these young people succeed.

Now I ask you to join me in showing your 4-H colours.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know there's a reason why it's called question period and not answer period, and I know that if ever in history it did have a higher purpose in holding government to account, over the last 30 years or so it's evolved into theatre. The opposition's only goal is to make the government look evil or stupid or preferably both, and the government's only goal is to make the opposition look ill-informed and un-Albertan.

Mostly, the public seems to think it's all pretty childish, but both sides keep doing it because, well, that's what we do: opposition, anger; government, indignation and obfuscation. All heat, no light, which might be good enough in most cases, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that in times of crisis the last thing the people of Alberta want from us is more hot air and smoke. They need some light. They want solutions.

Make no mistake. Alberta's ER crisis is real. Sick and injured Albertans are sitting in ER waiting rooms for 10, 20 hours, sometimes days. What's more, Albertans wait months, sometimes years for tests and surgeries, and many do not have family doctors.

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I stood up in question period and asked Alberta's minister of health: "Will the minister direct the Alberta Health Services Board to bring all staff, current and retired, to available status and to offer full-time shifts to all nurses who want them?" A solution proposed in question period? Quelle surprise. Perhaps I've started a trend.

On Monday my team and I watched as similar propositions were put forward by one opposition party, and yesterday we listened as my exact proposal was suggested by another party. And it's about time, Mr. Speaker, because I suggest that anyone following question period beforehand would have been hard-pressed to believe that either side cared as much about solving the problem as about using other people's pain to score political points on each other.

Now, I don't care where the good ideas come from. I would suggest that neither my constituents nor yours do. They just want us to do what they're paying us to do: work together to solve the problem.

Yesterday in question period we were promised 51 new beds by the end of the month. I challenge the minister to double that, and I challenge every one of us here in this House to propose practical, workable solutions to the ER crisis that put Albertans first. Like the bumper sticker says, "Wag more, bark less."

Opposition Comments on Ethics of Government MLAs

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. Leader of the Opposition made a member's statement in this House which was clearly unparliamentary and which cast aspersions on the ethics of me and every one of my colleagues in government caucus. The hon. leader stated that "government MLAs in this province are compromised by a plethora of free gifts they receive from special interests" and that those gifts came "with an expectation of access to power and influence."

Such statements are untrue and are unbecoming of a gentleman whom we have come to believe respected the decorum of the House and the privileges of members. I and many of my colleagues were inclined to raise a point of order. However, the chair has ruled on previous occasions that members may not raise these points of order on speeches made in members' statements. This leaves members' statements open to abuse and to flaunting our long-standing rights to have the chair temper the speech of members when points of order arise.

As the Deputy Premier stated yesterday, we have strict rules regarding the acceptance of gifts, which are contained in the Conflicts of Interest Act. These rules were formulated and agreed to by members of all parties in this House. There was no dissent on recommendations regarding acceptance of gifts as an incidence of protocol when they were adopted several years ago. The hon. leader was silent on that issue when the new conflict rules were adopted.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. leader has evidence of impropriety or believes that any one of us in this House has breached the provisions of the Conflicts of Interest Act, then he should and must bring those to the attention of the Ethics Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition should apologize to members of this House for his actions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Adoption Awareness Month

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in recognition of national Adoption Awareness Month. This is an opportunity to celebrate the many dedicated families who open their hearts and homes to children and youth and welcome them into their families. November is a time to raise awareness of the children and youth in government care who are waiting to be placed in a permanent home with a loving family.

At any given time Alberta has 200 children and youth ready to be adopted by families who will ensure they have the support they need to reach their full potential. Last year Children and Youth Services had tremendous success finding 579 permanent homes for children and youth in care through adoptive and private guardianship agreements, but there are still many children and youth across our province who need our help. The area of greatest need is for children seven years of age and older.

There is no better time or better place to adopt a child than right now in Alberta. Many families who have adopted say that the experience has made a positive difference in their own lives. To all of those families who have opened their homes and their hearts to a child, we say thank you. I encourage all families interested in adopting to first consider the children in our province and visit our adoption website at www.adoption.alberta.gov.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to congratulate the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations in celebrating their 10th anniversary this year. This is a council I am honoured to chair. It was founded in 2000 thanks to the leadership of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who was its first chair and is currently my co-chair, to advise the government of Alberta on its relations with Ukraine. Since its inception the council was also chaired or co-chaired by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and the late Dave Broda, former MLA for Redwater.

The important projects the council has provided influential advice on include things like former Premier Ralph Klein's historic 2002 and 2006 missions to Ukraine, the Alberta-Lviv memorandum of understanding signed in 2005, the Alberta-Ivano-Frankivsk memorandum of understanding signed in 2004 and renewed in 2010, and the enhanced K to 12 educational linkages between Alberta and Lviv schools, including twinning.

For over 100 years the bonds of history, culture, and friendship between Alberta and Ukraine have only grown stronger. We have enjoyed a long, warm relationship with Ukraine. Through the council we have worked to strengthen and grow our relationship through ties in agriculture, education, culture, and business. The council has been essential in helping us better understand and manage the issues and opportunities related to Alberta-Ukraine relations and to work with Alberta's Ukrainian community on these matters.

To start our next 10 years, the council will be working more closely with our Saskatchewan and federal counterparts. Our first joint meeting with Saskatchewan's council will be held tomorrow evening at Government House. Being of Ukrainian descent, I am especially proud of the work this council has done and continues to do. I am very proud of the cultural, political, and economic ties between Alberta and Ukraine. I look forward to many more years of friendship in the years to come.

[Remarks in Ukrainian] Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: Before we go on to Oral Question Period, I just want to emphasize that we have 35 seconds for questions and 35 seconds for answers, so stay within that limit, please.

First opposition question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Foreign Investments in Alberta

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The list of Canadian-owned resource companies taken over by foreign companies includes many icons of corporate Canada: Inco, Falconbridge, Alcan, and now, if the announcement comes as expected, Potash Corporation. This trend is inevitably going to sweep into Calgary, where many companies make inviting targets for foreign takeovers. If Canada can lose its largest nickel, aluminum, and potash companies, there's no reason to assume it won't also lose its largest oil and gas companies. To the minister of finance: is this government monitoring the situation, and if so, what is it finding?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, a very timely question from the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, we are monitoring it. In fact, I happen to have a file here, that's about half an inch thick, of documents concerning exactly this. I would indicate that our leader, the Premier, has stood up very publicly and very vocally and defended the interests and the rights of the people of Saskatchewan, and we're proud of him for doing that.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like the minister to focus on Alberta for just a minute if he would. Has the government done any assessment of the impact that foreign takeover of major energy companies would have on Calgary and Alberta such as the relocation of head offices, exodus of critical knowledge, and loss of jobs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have the happy circumstance of sharing the international piece with the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, who looks after a good part of the same file. We have on every instance and every example of all the companies, like the Korean oil and gas company, done due diligence, been in consultation with Ottawa, made sure that the appropriate rules were being followed for progress and process. We have done those kinds of assessments. In one of the recent acquisitions there was considerable dialogue with the company as well.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the government actually have a position on the ownership of Alberta's resource companies by foreign corporations or, indeed, foreign governments like China?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we try to maintain a barrier-free trading environment. Alberta has had that in place for decades. We don't intend to move from that. We're very interested when, for example, one of the companies may sell off a piece of its company to a foreign interest, and in our experience so far the sales have not been materially sufficient to raise any concern.

The Deputy Speaker: Second question by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

AltaLink Electricity Transmission Line

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, from helicopter rides to free concert tickets the perks just keep on rolling in. AltaLink, which owns half the electricity transmission lines in the province, gave more than $16,000 to this Progressive Conservative Party in 2009, Rod Stewart tickets to the Minister of Education. AltaLink, on the other hand, got paid for a transmission line never built, and consumers were forced to pay the $35 million tab, this payment highly inappropriate with the prospect of a second attempt at building the line from Wabamun to Calgary. To the Minister of Energy: was the payout to AltaLink on December 31, 2009, appropriate? Yes or no?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows full well that the transmission business in this province is a regulated entity, and if a proponent wants to build transmission lines, they apply to the Alberta Utilities Commission, which is a quasi-judicial, arm's-length body. Those hearings take place. There's ample opportunity for public input, and then a decision is rendered.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, whose interests is the government serving here, the consumers' or AltaLink's, when there's no open bidding process?

Mr. Liepert: The government is serving all Albertans' interests, Mr. Speaker, by establishing a quasi-judicial, independent body that looks at these proponents and these proposals. I don't know if the hon. leader is suggesting that we should change that structure and maybe have cabinet ministers independently approve these transmission lines. I don't think that's the right way to go. I think the structure we have in place has worked well.

Dr. Swann: Well, back to the minister. Why is there no open bidding process for these transmission lines?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the unique things that Bill 50 actually did was that it is proposing that on several of the lines there will be an open bidding process. That will be outlined as time progresses. But, you know, the reality of it is that we have determined through Bill 50 that there is a need to upgrade our transmission system. We have put in place the process that is to be followed, and we intend to follow through on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Third question of the Official Opposition. The hon. leader.

Cancer Services in Calgary

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the minister of health. Will the people of Calgary receive the urgently needed new cancer facility to relieve some of the pressure on the Tom Baker centre? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, cancer, as evidenced by today's guests and by the hon. leader's attendance at the luncheon, is a very important subject for us to address. We do have a provincial-wide cancer strategy that will be coming out very soon, and as part of that, we're looking at all parts of Alberta, not just Calgary. The short answer is that we are looking at that need in Calgary as we speak.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we have needed cancer care capacity in Alberta for at least five years and in Calgary more specifically. How can the minister claim that improving cancer care is a priority? He can't even say whether a cancer facility for Calgary is in the works.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I'm in a position to provide the details with respect to what we're doing for cancer care in Calgary or in Edmonton or in Medicine Hat or with the radiation therapy corridors that are planned for Grande Prairie and Red Deer and the one we just opened in Lethbridge, more of those details will be coming out soon.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we've been waiting seven months for the capital plan for Calgary and Edmonton. How can the minister deny that he's been lurching from failure to disaster and that this is the reason why this important long-term planning has been put on the back burner?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no shortage of important issues in health, I can assure you. This is one of them, and it's one that we're committed to discussing, looking at thoroughly, reviewing, and coming forward with a plan as part of the overall approach for the whole province. We'll be doing that, and we are in the middle of it right now.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Anderson: Yesterday the Wildrose proposed reducing ER waits by designating a chief medical officer for every hospital with authority to override superboard regulations, when necessary, to reduce dangerous ER blockage. In response the minister pooh-poohed the suggestion, saying that "people would find it quite offensive" to suggest overriding "AHS directives, regulations or regular staffing ratios.” Wow. That’s putting patients first there, Minister. Is this minister so married to the superboard bureaucracy that he is willing to put AHS regulations ahead of patient health?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that just in the last few weeks and going forward for the next few weeks, more than 71 new beds will be opened in acute-care hospitals in Edmonton and more than 70 beds will be opened or have already been opened within the same time frame in Calgary acute-care hospitals. Over and above that, we’re adding 1,300 continuing care spaces outside the acute-care hospitals. That’s just one part of the strategy.

Mr. Anderson: That wasn’t the question.

Given all the horrific revelations – patients dying in hallways waiting for care, pregnant women having their cervix examined in open triage, people puking up blood in the emergency room for seven hours before even getting assessed, people calling 911 from the emergency room, 54 per cent longer waits in just one year – is this minister going to stand there and defend his precious AHS regulations and bureaucratic decisions? How do you justify that, Minister?

2:00

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it’s a very complex area, and we’re definitely serious about this. That’s why we’ve sped up things. That’s why I gave the directives that I gave. Included in those directives were things like accelerating the need for more care beds, and they’re doing that. I have to tell you that overall the numbers are starting to come down, not in large numbers, but they are starting to improve. Let’s give this a chance. I’ve indicated that opening more beds is one part of the strategy, but so, too, is increasing home-care funding. So, too, is a new discharge protocol to pre-empt those beds.

Mr. Anderson: Given that this minister keeps saying that he’s listening to ER doctors and given that every line in the Wildrose proposal yesterday stems directly from the mouths of multiple senior, high-ranking, and very respected ER doctors who have grown tired of waiting for this minister to actually stand up to his AHS bureaucrats and make our ERs safe again, why would this minister simply dismiss their proposals? I mean, I know you don’t listen to the ER doc in your own caucus, but will you at least listen to others?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, such a bunch of ‘balderbunk.’ I mean, no wonder they’re having trouble attracting people to their fundraisers with nonsense like that, having to cancel fundraisers because you can’t enunciate anything that makes any sense.

If there are people out there that have good common-sense suggestions, I’ve always listened to them. I’ve responded. I’ve acted immediately to help patients who need the care. That’s what we’re talking about. [interjections] They can sit there and talk about privatization all they want. We’re talking about five-year funding. We’re talking about action to help right now.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to remind the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to please be less loud.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Premier’s Mission to Abu Dhabi

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Premier was hosted and entertained lavishly by the Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi. A few weeks ago the Premier went to bat for the prince when he supported the United Arab Emirates’ demands for more flights into Canada for Emirates airline. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Can you explain the connection between the Premier’s acceptance of the lavish hospitality of the Prince of Abu Dhabi and his public advocacy on behalf of the prince’s airline?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no connection between the hosting and the policy decision. The province of Alberta does business around the globe, and we look forward to having businessmen from around the globe come to our province. It’s an International and Intergovernmental Affairs issue, and I’ll have the minister respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the open-skies policy signed in 2006 has seen over 90 agreements signed in the U.S. and only 11 in Alberta. We’re pursuing and the Premier is aggressively pursuing on behalf of China, India. The Middle East is obviously a part of it, the kind of open skies, we believe, that’ll open trade.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier had a friendly get-together and a smiley photo op with the ambassador of the United Arab Emirates. Given that just a few weeks ago the United Arab Emirates unilaterally closed the Canadian base used to support our troops in Afghanistan, can the Deputy Premier tell us why the Premier of Alberta is giving support to a dictatorship that puts Canadian lives at risk?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think that, one, that’s an irresponsible question. There is no Premier in this country that supports our Canadian troops more than this Premier. If he needs proof of that, as the minister liaison to the Canadian Forces in this province I challenge him to go and ask them himself.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. United Arab Emirates has been demanding additional deep discount flights to Canada. These are the equivalent of trade dumping tactics specifically designed to eliminate Air Canada’s business to the Middle East and Asia. The government of Canada has rightly refused to bow to the extortion tactics of the government of the UAE, but our Premier has supported the dictatorship in Abu Dhabi. Could the Deputy Premier please tell the Assembly why he wants to help the government hurt Air Canada’s business?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that’s a total distortion of the facts. A study published in July out of Winnipeg suggested that on average-haul flights over 3,300 miles the UAE flight costs were about 16 cents a mile, the American flight costs were about 28 cents a mile, and ours were over 40 cents. We have been pursuing an active open-skies policy that does not compromise us, and we are asking for fair and reasonable negotiations between the Canadian government and UAE so they sit back at the table and do the best they can for Canadian troops and for Canadian tourists.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Green TRIP Incentives Program

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation continues to brag that this government is serious about cutting greenhouse gas emissions, yet transit and traffic woes remain a dominant issue for Albertans. The Green TRIP money expected to boost public transit still remains in government coffers. To the Minister of Transportation. Buses and LRTs are the priorities for Albertans but clearly not for this administration. When will the Green TRIP money be sent to Edmonton, Calgary, and other cities in Alberta for public transit expansion?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got to make one thing clear to the hon. member over there. The Alberta government is not in the transit business; we're in the transportation business. With that said, we're here to help municipalities do everything they can to get people riding transit. As we speak, we are taking applications right now. I think the deadline for our first round of applications for Green TRIP monies is the end of November, and at that time you'll see some money go out.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired of the delays. It has been over two years already, Mr. Minister. Why hasn't the minister sped up this process already?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, needless to say, this hon. member hasn't been listening to what I just told him. I'm telling the hon. member that there will be stuff flowing out. We're waiting for applications right now. I don't know what Albertans he's talking about because the municipalities are happy to hear that we're open to applications right now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are we talking about the airport tunnel here, too? Is there money for the airport tunnel in this? How can Albertans trust this government to build for tomorrow when it cannot follow through with commitments made years ago?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to give this hon. member accolades for how strong he is on the Calgary airport tunnel. But I have to say that the Calgary airport tunnel is – is – a responsibility of the municipality of Calgary. We do everything in our power to get them all of the necessities to be able to go ahead with their infrastructure. There's not another jurisdiction in Canada that gives municipalities . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mid-term American Election

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday millions of Americans went to the polls. I know that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, as many others in this House, has been doing a lot of advocacy work in the United States. I would like to know from the minister what impact the election results might have on Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to many representatives in our government we've had a combination of ways we look after American relationships: through PNWER, through the Border Trade Alliance, through the Western Governors' Association. We don't expect relationships to change much. However, I will say that immediately our Washington office will be very busy contacting the new representatives and looking at strategies for informing new people. We actually have 15, 16, perhaps, new Republicans that will not have been informed, and it would be wrong to just make any assumptions that any partisanship would lead to any particular trade policies.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for those comforting comments because I know that the energy industry particularly has a major concern with what might happen in the U.S. I'm wondering if they particularly have something to worry about.

2:10

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this morning I met with one of our major oil companies, who noted with considerable pleasure the fact that both Ohio and Michigan as well as Pennsylvania had elected governors who were Republican, who had been openly stating support for the kinds of products that we ship south, which is good news in our export market.

I will also say that the meetings on behalf of the Premier with the West Virginia governor who is now a member of the Senate, a Democrat, who is very strongly and robustly supportive of the oil sands – we'll build on those relationships. We'll keep in touch with old friends.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I know that in California there were a couple of propositions that were voted on. One that was of primary interest to Alberta, I would think, would be the one on the climate change. I'm curious. What happened to that proposition, and what effect might that have on Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. California has a piece of legislation on climate change. The effect of this proposition, if passed, would have directed the state Legislature to suspend the climate change legislation until unemployment figures were less than 5 and a half per cent. Because that proposition failed by about a 6 to 4 ratio, we assume that those climate change provisions are in effect. With a Democratic governor we can make an assumption that most of them will be in place. We'll still have a lot of work to do on low-carbon fuel standards.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has one set of emission targets. The feds have a different target. The idea this administration is fixated on is carbon capture and storage, the most expensive method for reducing emissions ever at $200 to $500 per tonne of CO₂ that even the most optimistic agree will not come close to reaching either of these targets. So to the Minister of Environment: since the government is rapidly approving oil sands development again, so clearly no reduction coming from there, which other . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's just clarify this whole issue of carbon capture and storage and whether or not the economics are in play. Clearly, when you involve new technology, there is at the outset a significantly higher cost that tends to come down over time. If someone doesn't take the initial impetus to get these projects under way, to prove up the technology, then we'll never get to the point where we can actually rely on this kind of technology to dramatically bring the kind of reductions we need in place.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, back to the same minister, then. What is this ministry's plan B if carbon capture and storage doesn't pull through in achieving 70 per cent, because that's the target, of our emission reductions?

Mr. Renner: Well, the fact of the matter is that Alberta is not an island. It will be extremely difficult for Alberta to achieve targets if the rest of North America, indeed the rest of the world, is not on the same page. It doesn't do any good to Alberta to impose the kinds of restrictions that would be necessary if we simply drive the emissions offshore. So, Mr. Speaker, the plan is very clear. We need to continue our efforts to get . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I don't think you can claim leadership and then blame everybody else if it doesn't work.

Back to the same minister. Another minister mentioned deadlines to apply for Green TRIP, but I'm wondering around what the government's drop-dead dates are for making decisions on the progress of carbon capture and storage. In other words, at what point does the government decide it's not working or not economical?

Mr. Liepert: Storage falls under my ministry. You know, this particular member of the House likes to ask the question: what if? What if the sky falls? Are we supposed to have a plan for: what if the sky falls? Mr. Speaker, we believe very seriously that carbon capture and storage will be an integral environmental and economic benefit to this province. I'm going to speak in second reading on our bill today, and I encourage the member to be here to hear it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Electricity Costs for Large Industrial Users

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. West Fraser mill operates nine wholly owned forest products manufacturing facilities in Alberta and has a 50 per cent joint ownership in Alberta Newsprint in the constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne. Their operations spend 12 and a half million dollars on transmission costs per year. My question is to the Minister of Energy. West Fraser claims that their transmission bill will double if the Alberta Electric System Operator's current plan to overbuild transmission occurs because of Bill 50. Is that true?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is no overbuild. What we are doing is that we are putting in place a transmission policy: go to the landowner once. It will have the provision to expand as the economy of the province expands, but when that expansion is needed and that extra expense is about to be incurred, we won't have to go back and renegotiate with landowners to put more towers on. That infrastructure will be in place.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Again, West Fraser claims that without changes to the province's transmission plans or policies, their facilities will be forced to close or build on-site generation. What will you do to continue to champion this industry so it can remain competitive, sir?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that this government continues to provide improved competitiveness for our forest industry, especially with respect to the energy part of their business. We provide funding that encourages companies to become involved in bioenergy production opportunities. This will decrease their electricity costs, of course, and their heat costs as well. The member's own riding provides a number of very good examples of bioenergy production.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Given that transmission expansion is needed for the future – and no one will argue that – will you find a way for the province to put some major dollars up for this expansion to ensure that we don't drive Alberta's business leaders away from our province?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government on this matter is pretty clear. Users pay for transmission. Industrial, commercial, residential, and agricultural users pay for that. Under this policy electricity costs in the province of Alberta remain competitive. In fact, they've dropped a bit in the last couple of years. We've certainly heard the concerns of large industrial users, indicated by my colleague here, and we're taking steps to make sure that Alberta remains competitive not just for residential and commercial but also large industrial.

Aboriginal Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I questioned why the government rejected recommendations from the child intervention report that would improve services for aboriginal families, the response was rather defensive. When it comes to their record on aboriginal children in care, this stalling government has much to be defensive about. To the minister: given that aboriginal children made up 50 per cent of children in care 16 years ago, a number that has risen to over two-thirds today, why hasn't this government already delivered a collaborative plan to bring these numbers down?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to address this question with this member. We all know the historical situation with the aboriginal community. Much of that relates to the socioeconomic conditions that are in the community, and it has grown. As I said, the trending has grown for aboriginal people on reserve and off reserve in child intervention for the care of their children and youth. I go back to that it relates to poverty; it relates to housing issues. There are a number of issues on reserve that are historical and socioeconomic.

Mr. Chase: Some of those historical issues go back to residential schools, and those issues three generations later have not been resolved.

Given that Albertans waited for over a year for the release of the last review, how much longer is the minister going to take before she delivers this new model for aboriginal children in care that she vaguely alluded to yesterday?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to address that question as well. As I indicated to you yesterday, there are 18 delegated First Nations agencies on reserve delivering child protection services for the province. There are 10 child and family services authorities off reserve, who are co-chaired by a board, one aboriginal person and one nonaboriginal. The model this member would like to see put in place is one that mirrors our child and family services authorities in the middle, and I can tell you that aboriginal people would like to be involved in that solution as what I've heard from them is that that is not the right model.

2:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's time historically that we stopped taking Alberta's aboriginal children into custody. Why does the ministry continue reacting to the crisis of the day instead of investing in sustainable measures that will keep aboriginal families intact rather than placing their children in custody?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I'm almost hesitant to answer that question in this Assembly. To say that we should not be involved as a Children and Youth Services ministry with assisting in the protection of children that are at risk in families, whether they be aboriginal or nonaboriginal: this department works very hard with staff that are eminently qualified to assist families. They either keep families together in their homes when their children are at risk by offering resources and funding or they take children into care and place them in placements that will benefit the child and, ultimately, the family overall – and I go back to it – whether they're aboriginal or nonaboriginal.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Heartland Transmission Project

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are very concerned about the proposed heartland transmission line, a 500 kV line with 20-storey towers potentially being routed through the east TUC in Strathcona county. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is the current status of the heartland project?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that this is very much an issue that this hon. member and others in that part of the province are dealing with. The heartland transmission line was one of the four projects that was identified in Bill 50 as one of the needs. The proponents have made application to the Alberta Utilities Commission. The Utilities Commission has done extensive publication of the hearings process, that I believe is due to take place early in the new year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. Last year a detailed study concluded that it's technically feasible to bury the heartland line. As a businessperson I couldn't make decisions without knowing what the costs would be. Can the minister confirm that accurate cost estimates are available for undergrounding this project?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that as part of the application process the proponents will offer some options there, and it will be up to the Utilities Commission to make a decision. We have to remember that what is being proposed by the proponents – there are two separate options. Certainly, one of them is in the transportation utility corridor, which the member is quite familiar with. There is another option. One of the options could be the burial of the line, but there are significant cost factors associated with that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: No supplement.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January the respected Journal of the American Medical Association warned of health risks from CCS. They said that "inadvertent release of carbon dioxide (as must be considered in a . . . full-scale CCS program) would pose significant risks for asphyxiation to humans," and that "widespread use of geologic formations as storage for [CO₂] could compromise . . . aquifers on which future generations may depend for drinking water." My question is this. Why is the Minister of Energy making Albertans bankroll this liability only to ensure that Albertans are the ones put at risk?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, like any subject matter, I guess you can find a varied view of opinions out there. Certainly, the sequestration of carbon has taken place across the world for many years. We believe, as I will outline in second reading of the bill today – and I hope the member stays and listens – that Alberta has the appropriate geological formations to ensure safe capture and storage of carbon.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that government has already put taxpayers on the hook for up to $15 billion by failing to collect adequate reclamation security from industry and given the scientific consensus that we do not have enough information to predict the likelihood of a CCS breach or its damage over time and given that insurance companies world-wide are refusing to underwrite CCS liabilities as a result, why is this minister so set on making our children's children pay the price for his recklessness?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I lost her about halfway through that preamble. What I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that that particular member has demonstrated on numerous occasions that we in this province and elsewhere need to ensure that our industry is cleaner and that we do something about emissions, and that is exactly what we're doing.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd really like to see that happen, but it's not.

Now, given that the minister admitted publicly last month that, quote, there are real questions about whether it will ever be economically feasible, will the minister admit today that this government is gambling with taxpayers' dollars and jobs to promote an unproven technology doomed to failure as long as this government refuses to establish aggressive hard caps for CO₂?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always interesting how the members of the opposition like to take what you allegedly quote. What I said is that today it is not economically feasible, and that's no revelation. We all know that. I can tell you that the members who sat in this Assembly 50 years ago did not believe the oil sands were economically developable, but look what we've got a resource of today.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Fort Chipewyan Health Research Agreement

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On Monday when asked about delay after delay for the health study in Fort Chip, the minister of health said he was giving one of the chiefs more time to sign a letter of intent, but the chief has made it clear that until there is a proposal from this government with a firm research plan and funding, the letter of intent will go nowhere. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that he has been personally working on this file for years without any substantial progress, will he just admit the obvious, that this government is deliberately stalling?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We've made great progress. Both chiefs from that area as well as the president of the Métis local would tell you that we did have verbal agreements, and two of the verbal agreements crystalized into written agreements. They're asking for an outline, first of all, of what they want addressed. They don't want things done to them or without them. They want things done together with them, which is why the Minister of Environment and I have travelled up there and met with them here as well in order to deliver on what they want done. That's what we're doing.

Dr. Taft: It's taking way too long, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: is it the role of this minister to be an advocate on issues like health and safe drinking water for the First Nations and Métis people of the Fort Chip area, and if not, why not?

Mr. Webber: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've worked quite diligently with the First Nations community up in that area. I've met with Chief Allan Adam, both up there and down here at the Legislature, on numerous occasions along with the Minister of Environment and, of course, the Minister of Health and Wellness. We're working together to provide advice to the chief regarding the letter of intent and to indicate to him that we are willing to work with him to get this health study going.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, so far we have the Premier working on this, the Minister of Environment, the Minister of Health and Wellness, and the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, and nothing is happening. It's stalled. Serious issues are getting dragged out for years. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: when is he going to start taking the lead for the people he's responsible for and advocate aggressively and, if need be, publicly on this issue?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know how many times I have to tell the hon. member here that I have been working hard and diligently with all the chiefs up there along with my colleagues, and we are making progress.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Southern Alberta Transmission Reinforcement

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several constituents in industries in Lethbridge have raised concerns over the proposed transmission plans in southern Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister assure residents in southern Alberta and all Albertans that there is, in fact, an urgent need to invest in transmission reinforcement?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, that was the whole essence of Bill 50. The reality is that there has not been major investment in our transmission upgrades for almost 40 years now. The southern Alberta portion of that line, however, is very important for two reasons. Primarily, as we need to on almost a daily basis bring power in from British Columbia, we need the ability to bring likely more power in the future. But, most importantly, that's a source of great renewable energy in southern Alberta, and we need to move it to where the market is.

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What's the current status of the southern Alberta transmission reinforcement project, and when will it be completed?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm going from memory, but I believe that the hearing process has been completed for several stages of this project. I think that the first stage is due for completion in about two years, and stage 2 is somewhere another two years beyond that. I think what this does is that it shows that you cannot build these transmission projects overnight. It's a long-term project, and that's why the urgency is there to get moving.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. The proposed costs for this project have increased significantly in just the last year. Do we know how much higher this could go and what impact it will have on rates for customers in the area?

Mr. Liepert: Well, there are some misconceptions out there, Mr. Speaker, relative to cost escalations. You know, when proponents go before the Alberta Utilities Commission, they are asked within a 30 per cent range one way or the other what the cost would be. So you've got a lot of fluctuation there. It allows for things like increase in material costs and others. Very few industrial projects, whether they're public or private, at that part of the process can be accurate on their cost predictions, but there's one statistic that we need to remember. Residential consumers will pay $1 per month for every billion dollars invested.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I called for an empowered chief medical officer in every hospital as part of the Wildrose plan to address a temporary ER crisis. It is critical that local hospitals have local decision-makers with the authority to deal with these issues quickly and efficiently. To the minister of health: will you commit in this House to designate someone truly in charge at every hospital, who can open extra beds, move patients between wards and out of the ERs, and call in extra staff when these crises occur?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. The answer is that that's already happening now. Every hospital has what we call a site administrative lead, or words to that effect, or a site medical lead, or words to that effect. At each spot along the spectrum there is that local authority to work with certain situations such as some of the ones that have been described.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, is the minister actually saying that there is someone in our hospitals who can move ER patients out and into other wards that are more appropriate, call in extra staff, and stop these unacceptable backlogs? If there is, why aren't they doing it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, they are doing that, and as I indicated earlier, there are a number of beds that have been opened or will be opened over the next short while, and a lot of those were made by some of the people that they're talking about.

Mr. Hinman: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll recognize the point of order.
Hon. minister, continue.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Before I was so rudely interrupted by the member asking the question, if he wants some specifics about which hospitals are opening how many beds, I'd be happy to provide that to him. I have it with me, and I'd be happy to read it into Hansard.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they're allowing bureaucratic protocols and ridiculous regulations to sentence people to 12- and 24-hour terms. Again to the minister. [interjections] We have 35 seconds. Will you take this simple first step in our health care and dismantle your complex superboard and its stifling bureaucracy and regulations and allow decision-making in our hospitals to be accountable to patients instead of bureaucrats and ridiculous rules?

Mr. Zwozdesky: You know, Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that a party over there that calls itself so fiscally responsible wants to go back to a system where health care expenditures were growing by 10, 11, 12, 15, 20 per cent in some cases, and we're talking about capping the delivery system at 6 per cent increases. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, slow down.

Mr. Zwozdesky: If they could just not be so rude, that would be helpful.

The Deputy Speaker: The minister has the floor.

Mr. Zwozdesky: So we're talking about a guaranteed funding plan of five years with specific targets in place, and those will be adhered to.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Heartland Transmission Project (continued)

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Some of my constituents remain very skeptical over the need for the heartland transmission project. Given that there has been a global economic slowdown and given that many potential upgrader projects are put on hold or even cancelled, can the minister tell my constituents why this project is still necessary?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I know the member has heard from some of his constituents that somehow the only rationale for the heartland transmission project was because there were going to be 10 upgraders built in the Industrial Heartland. That was never the reasoning behind the heartland transmission project. It is a very critical node between both the north-south lines and the line to Fort McMurray. We have significant cogeneration that is either on or coming on the system, and it's stranded as we speak here today, so it's a critical node for moving power around the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is for the Minister of Infrastructure. With respect to the same heartland transmission line project, self-proclaimed land experts have told my constituents that Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, will allow the government to take their land to construct this project. Can the minister tell us what Bill 19's role is in regard to this project? Is it going to be used to take land for the heartland transmission line?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The heartland transmission project does not involve the Land Assembly Project Area Act. Let's be clear. There are two separate processes in place here: the process for the new transmission lines through the Alberta Utilities Commission and the process for large-scale transportation projects through the Land Assembly Project Area Act. Our law cannot be used for utility transportation projects. Please let it be clear.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the same minister: can he respond to concerns I hear from some of my constituents that Bill 19 overrules the Expropriation Act and will eliminate landowners' abilities to go to expropriation, making the compensation principles laid out in the Expropriation Act no longer available to my landowners?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, our province continues to grow, and there are competing demands on the land. Our legislation does not take away from landowner rights. Landowners continue to have fair compensation, and if I can say, the difference is that now government must purchase land as soon as the landowner wants to sell it. Most importantly, however, if landowners want to go through the expropriation process, they can. The expropriation right is there for all landowners.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

PDD Administrative Review

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports said that she has received the final KPMG report of the persons with developmental disabilities administration and service provider review. The minister said that it will be released when she has reviewed it. Albertans are aware of the slow process that this government can come up with. It could well be over a year before it's released, and vulnerable people and their caregivers are left in anxiety while they wait. To the minister of seniors: will the minister commit that the unedited final report by KPMG will be released before the House ends this fall?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD program is a very important program to this government. Our Premier has said over and over again that vulnerable people are one of his greatest concerns. I'm very proud of the PDD program that we have. I've been to Lethbridge. I've been around to many locations in this province to hear what the stakeholders have had to say. Yes, they're the ones that directed me towards having an administrative review. We had that report. We're going through that report now. When we're ready to respond to the recommendations, we will release that in due course.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'm hoping that that meant that it will be the unedited version that will be released as well.

Given that the blue books show that KPMG has received over $340,000 from the ministry of seniors in the first quarter of this year, will the minister tell this House specifically how much this particular report cost?

2:40

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have 9,300 vulnerable Albertans accessing the PDD program at a cost of $600 million. In that $600 million 20 per cent of the cost goes to the administration of the program. One of the things that I think is very important is to ensure that we're always having an efficient and effective program. The price that we're paying for this report from KPMG is $185,000.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that answer. The minister and I are certainly on the same page about why this review was so necessary.

Will the minister confirm in this House that the persons with developmental disabilities system will not be put through chaos by centralizing the community boards?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I have great concern for people in the PDD program. It is of paramount interest that we ensure that we don't disturb or upset the people in the program because of their vulnerabilities. I have said over and over again that this review is not about taking anything away from the program or taking anything away from our people in this program, but it's about improving the program. That's what this administrative review will do, and that's what we will aim for.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we go further, I just want to remind the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo that when you have a conversation, there's a hall out there.

Hon. members, may we revert to a brief introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this esteemed House on behalf of myself and my colleague from Lethbridge-West the remainder of the esteemed Team Lethbridge members. They are the leaders of our community. They are our aboriginal community, our vibrant and talented arts community, our entrepreneurial business community, social programs, and our college educational community. I will ask them to rise as I say their names: Jacinda Weiss, Robin Little Bear, Treena Tallow, Ian Randell, Christopher Babits, Melody Garner, Steve Baines, Del Allen, Larry Lux, Dianne Kotkas, Dr. Tracy Edwards, Peter LeClaire, Simon Griffiths, Cheryl Dick, and Shilpa Stocker. Thank you, and will you welcome them to the House.

The Deputy Speaker: We shall now continue with our members' statements. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Care for Seniors

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We hear horror stories about our emergency departments. They are not made up but come from experiences that our dedicated, caring health professionals face on a daily basis. They are incidents that emergency doctors have documented. They are real stories, and they are real people.

Why do I say "real people"? Because I was one of them. My mum is 86 years old, and she fell, so our journey began. After spending hours – and I mean hours – in the emergency, we were finally admitted. Now, we already knew my mum's elbow was fractured, and we already knew that she would have to have surgery. What we didn't know was the length of time it would take to get there. Not only did we wait hours in emergency, but we waited days to have the surgery. You have a vibrant, active senior who is now confined to bed for days, not eating and on an IV, and guess what happens? You get other complications: heart problems, fevers, and a senior that ends up in a hospital for six weeks. Now, we hear about our seniors and how they're tying up the acute-care beds. Well, it's no wonder why some of them are doing that.

I do want to commend the wonderful doctors, the nurses, the LPNs, the NAs, the pharm techs, and all the unbelievable other people that touched our lives when she was in the hospital. There is good news and there is bad news in these stories. On the good side are the dedicated, compassionate health care workers that work hard under unbelievable conditions. On the bad side is Alberta Health Services and the government who just doesn't get it.

Ten months ago I stood in front of reporters explaining why I was crossing the floor. There were numerous reasons, Mr. Speaker, health care being a major one. A broken system can be fixed. It can be fixed by providing the right care at the right time at the right place by the right health provider in the right period of time.

Mr. Speaker, no one could have quoted it better than my mum when I asked her about our health care system and she said: it's the pits.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Bill 27

Police Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Police Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this act will modernize and streamline the existing police complaint and discipline process, which has been largely unchanged since 1973. The proposed changes come about as a result of considerable consultation, and their implementation will improve our processes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 28

Electoral Divisions Act

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act.

Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, will update Alberta's electoral boundaries to reflect recommendations made by the arm's-length and independent Electoral Boundaries Commission.

In June 2010 the Electoral Boundaries Commission's report was presented to this Assembly. The commission was tasked with reviewing the existing electoral map and making recommendations for placement of new electoral boundaries in the province. The commission was directed to incorporate this increase of four electoral divisions for Alberta. The four new electoral divisions were necessary to reflect the fact that Alberta's population has increased by more than 1 million people since 2002, the last time that the electoral divisions were changed.*

On October 26, 2010, the recommendations were debated, amended, and approved with changes to the recommended names of four electoral divisions. Bill 28 reflects the commission's report as amended by this Legislature.

The new Electoral Divisions Act will repeal and replace the existing act of the same name. Mr. Speaker, Bill 28 will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with its population and current needs.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with the Gaming and Liquor Act and the Government Accountability Act I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of the 2009-10 Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to table five copies of an article that came to me from somebody I introduced last week, Mr. Warren Stefanuk. They are from Sociology of Health & Illness, by Malcolm Nicolson and Cathleen McLaughlin, and the title is Social Constructionism and Medical Sociology: A Study of the Vascular Theory of Multiple Sclerosis. I should note that Mr. Stefanuk is with the CCSVI group in Edmonton. It looks like an interesting article, actually.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. My first tabling is a letter from Shirley and Nick Mushey to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation which says that they believe that "the focus of TPR should be on committing resources to completing the province's protected areas network, and fulfilling existing commitments" and that information provided for the parks consultation does not provide "enough information to participate fully and meaningfully." They ask the minister to take their comments seriously and "do what is right for Albertans, the environment, wildlife and for future generations."

My second tabling is also to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, this time from Jacob Herrero of Canmore outlining his opposition to redesignating ecological reserves, wilderness areas, and wildland parks because he feels "the term 'provincial park' . . . implies a recreation bias." He makes a number of other suggestions, ending by stating his support for the exemption of Siffleur, the White Goat, the Ghost River, and the Willmore wilderness areas as they are each unique and deserving of special protection. He adds that protection of species at risk and their habitat must be protected. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do the tabling.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Can you deal with the heckling, please?

My third tabling today is a letter to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation from Robert Smith of Canmore, who says, "In a world with steadily disappearing wild lands, species, declining air quality . . . we should be doing everything possible to preserve what we have left."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, something to table?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article from the Journal of the American Medical Association entitled Health and Safety Risks of Carbon Capture and Storage. I referred to this article in my questions to the Energy minister today.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you have a point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Hinman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). It is very clear that the minister of health was trying to excite the Assembly. But what's most disheartening is the misleading in that he was specifically being asked if he has a chief medical officer who is in charge. He says that there is, and there just is not one. There isn't one that's in charge of the whole hospital that can actually move and say that we need to open up some beds here or there. It's a process that isn't working. It's crippling. People are being sentenced to stay in the emergency room because there is nobody in charge. He is misleading to continue after three days to say that there is someone in charge, yet nothing is happening, and that would not happen. He needs to apologize and not mislead the House with his answers.

Mr. Renner: There is clearly no point of order here. The member refers to our Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Mr. Speaker, (h) says that a member shall be called to order if he "makes allegations against another Member." I heard no such allegations by the minister of health. Standing Order 23(i) says "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I heard the minister of health do no such thing. There was no allegation of imputing motives on behalf of the member. Standing Order 23(j) is "uses abusive or insulting language," and again I heard no abusive or insulting language.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Currie in his member's statement quite eloquently talked about some of the realities that we all face around this place with respect to question period. Historically, the Speaker has on many occasions, as I have been a member of this House, reminded members that the purpose of question period is to give the opposition and in fact give private members an opportunity to hold the government to account. There is not an obligation on the part of the minister to supply an answer that is to the satisfaction of the member. I would suggest that it is up to all of the members in the House to come to their own conclusion with respect to the adequacy or lack thereof of the answers that are given by the ministers.

So, Mr. Speaker, clearly there is no point of order here.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to call a point of order at the conclusion of this matter.

The Deputy Speaker: This is not a debate, so I shall make a ruling now. I have the Blues here, and these are the words of the Minister of Health and Wellness. "Mr. Speaker, they are doing that, and as I indicated earlier, there are a number of beds that have been opened or will be opened over the next short while, and a lot of those were made by some of the people that they're talking about." That was when the point of order was raised. I don't see any point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, interesting that the hon. member would rise and quote 23(h), (i), and (j) as citations when under 23(h) it clearly says that a member shall be called to order if he "makes allegations against another Member." Then, in presenting his point of order, he accused the minister of health of misleading this House, which is unparliamentary language and an inappropriate allegation in this House. I ask that you call that member to order.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on this point of order? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I don't think the hon. Member for Peace River was listening to the discussion the last three days in question period. The point of all this is on (j). It says, "language of a nature likely to create disorder." The minister very much has given an answer that is inappropriate and misleading. The question is, "Is there a chief medical officer?" not whether or not there are beds that are open. Those beds aren't open; those people aren't being moved. If it was, Mr. Speaker, they would have been moved out 24 hours earlier.

They're totally missing, not answering the question, and they're exciting the House because of the misleading answer.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. I have some references here. First of all, I let the hon. member raise a point of order, and I let the other hon. member have some input. But my ruling is this: you can't call a point of order on a point of order, Beauchesne 318(1). Period.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 24

Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am so happy that the Member for Edmonton-Centre has found time to stay and hear some of the facts and also the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona because we're going to have a little fun here for the next 10 or 15 minutes.

I do want to first of all move second reading of Bill 24 before we get too far into having fun. This is the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, this act proposes three main amendments to facilitate large-scale carbon capture and storage technology. First, the legislation clarifies that the province owns all pore space in Alberta. Pore space is those tiny holes in porous rock, but in particular the ownership of pore space has never been defined in any legislation in the province. This amendment does not in any way change ownership of mines and mineral resources, nor does it affect activities such as enhanced oil recovery. Mineral ownership is still maintained by the current mineral owners, and nothing will change in that regard.

Secondly, this legislation enables the province to accept the long-term liability for injected carbon dioxide. Mr. Speaker, I need to be very clear on this, and this is important for the questions that were raised today. The province only accepts long-term liability once an operator has scientifically demonstrated that the CO₂ has been properly injected and long-term monitoring shows it is completely stable. As a prudent measure the government will ensure a fund is created and financed by CCS operators. The money will be managed by the province and used for ongoing monitoring costs and any required remediation, so it'll be similar in many ways to the orphan well fund, which has been operational for decades, and it ensures that wells that are abandoned by defunct companies are fully remediated.

Thirdly, this act creates a new fund which will be financed by CCS operators and used for ongoing monitoring costs and any required remediation.

These amendments are necessary to establish the regulatory groundwork which is required to facilitate large-scale carbon capture and storage projects. These amendments were the result of recommendations made by the provincial-federal EcoEnergy Carbon Capture and Storage Task Force and Alberta's Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council. These people, Mr. Speaker, are experts; many of us in here are not. They have spoken, and we have listened.

Alberta is just one of the many jurisdictions around the world that is reviewing the legal and regulatory requirements for CCS. In October the International Energy Agency, the IEA, released a review showing that 16 countries around the world are making significant progress towards developing legal and regulatory frameworks. Alberta is the only jurisdiction and the first one in Canada to move forward with legislative amendments, so while others are talking about tackling climate change, we are acting.

CCS is a new technology, and quite simply it is a game-changing technology in the fight to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Without regulatory clarity companies cannot pursue this technology. Let's be clear. The government is not doing this alone. It is both government money and industry's money that will move the technology forward, and it will reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Large-scale carbon capture and storage projects are ideally suited for our geology. They are ideally suited for our very experienced industry players, who have been honing and refining their technological expertise for decades.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, these amendments are required for Alberta's continued leadership in CCS. Energy demand continues to rise. We know it's not a question of whether energy will continue to be developed. Rather, it's a question of how energy can be developed in cleaner ways. Carbon capture and storage is one of the solutions. This is an initiative all Albertans can and will be proud of. As a safe and secure supplier of energy with a growing presence on the global stage, our focus on CCS is not only good for Alberta and our investors; it's essential to our future.

Industry, government, and consumers need to tackle this problem together. We need to invest in clean energy technologies and new and greener sources of energy. We need to reduce emissions and reduce energy use. We expect our $2 billion commitment to these four projects to be reducing emissions by 5 million tonnes annually beginning in 2015. That's just the beginning. Alberta's economy and much of Canada's, in fact, is largely reliant on energy development. This act will give Alberta a powerful tool with which to meet the unique set of challenges that we face and further cement Alberta's leadership in this area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've spent a few minutes talking about the environmental benefits of carbon capture and storage, but Alberta is fortunate. As I said, we not only have the geological formation to store the carbon under CCS, but there are also verified data that can tell us that some estimated $20 billion in royalties may be derived over time by using CCS to extract oil from hard-to-get-at conventional reserves. This is one potential economic benefit from our investment in this technology.

I know there are some elected officials in this House, Mr. Speaker, who scoff at our CCS initiative. They say, and I quote: we're pumping $2 billion into a hole in the ground. Now, I say that this is a narrow-minded view, and it's a narrow way of looking at this investment. Let me correct some of those comments. First of all, the $2 billion is an investment over some 15 years. In fact, I would state here today that by the time the last quarter of these funds is being expended, government will likely be receiving more money than those annual expenditures on new royalties from enhanced oil recovery.

If government of the day took that same Neanderthal view some 40 or 50 years ago, as I said in question period today, development of the oil sands that is taking place today would not be anywhere near as developed as it is. We would not have the billions in royalty revenues that are accruing annually to this province through the oil sands. We would not have the tens of thousands of jobs in the oil sands, Mr. Speaker, that we have today. Canada would not be in as strong an economic position as it is today if it were not for the oil sands. If we listened to these individuals, who actually call themselves a party, we wouldn't have an industry today in the oil sands.

If we listen to them today, we run the risk of depriving Albertans of some $20 billion in future royalties, not to mention a much cleaner environment and, in all likelihood, an ability to market a technology.

Part of our development of this technology is through the legislation that is being introduced in this House through Bill 24. Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members to support this bill.

I adjourn debate on Bill 24.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 25

Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move and begin second reading on Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

This act will ensure that business practices used by industry comply with freehold mineral tax legislation. First, it will do this by recognizing the electronic transmission of documents. It will also update auditing provisions to be consistent with the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Act. This includes increasing the penalty provisions to ensure industry complies with requests for audit information of $200,000.

The act will also update appeal provisions to be consistent with other tax legislation. In the event that there is a disagreement, Mr. Speaker, regarding the amount owed, appeals by industry are currently referred to an appeal board. The appeal board was made up of members knowledgeable about the freehold oil and gas sector and appointed by the minister. There were three members in total. Members of the appeal board cannot be in conflict of interest with appellant, and as a result selecting qualified individuals to serve is difficult. Significant appeals that warrant a hearing have only occurred twice in the past 20 years. The use of an appeal board is not consistent with other Alberta tax programs. Under this amendment act industry partners can appeal directly to the Minister of Energy with a further ability to appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench.

To be clear, there are no changes to the overall program itself. Alberta Energy and industry engaged in a four-year project to streamline business practices between industry partners and Alberta Energy. Tax statement distribution was automated in 2008, and over 90 per cent of the FMT is assessed to freehold mineral rights owned by oil and gas corporations. All FMT reporting is done by industry. This also includes remittances on behalf of individual freeholders, and it does not change the act. The tax revenue averages $300 million annually. It is recorded in the general revenue fund and contributes to the programs and services that benefit Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this act is outdated. It needs to be updated to align with current industry practices, and passing Bill 25 will provide this.

I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 25.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 20

Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 2: Mr. Drysdale]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege to speak here today in favour of Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010. I would like to thank my hon. friend the hon. MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for bringing this bill forward and bringing it forward for the people of Alberta in their pursuit of justice in streamlining the justice system. To look at what benefits Bill 20 brings, we're going to look at establishing procedural rules that enable one or more persons to advance an action on behalf of a group of people who have suffered the same or similar wrong.

The existing act serves three important purposes: increasing efficiency, improving access to justice, and modifying behaviours. While the act is procedural in nature, it is a powerful tool in accomplishing these three purposes. Efficiency is gained by joining together a number of lawsuits that might otherwise be brought separately. Access to justice is created by grouping together many small claims in larger proceedings in which the legal costs will be shared. Behavioural modification is obtained as claims that might otherwise go unprosecuted will be brought.

The purpose of these class actions removes the comfort zone for those who might assume that minor wrongs would not result in litigation. It is also important to remember that while accomplishing these purposes, the Class Proceedings Act does not create any single new causes of action.

If we look at that and extrapolate it, it enables more people to access our courts and seek justice. It really is a tool that allows for individuals who have had seemingly minor injuries or harms against them to join together and possibly pursue a larger claim against a government or a large corporation and, in some instances, when it would not be feasible to otherwise. Further, it's a case where individuals who have all suffered the same wrong can bind together and go get justice at a court and seek similar damages.

This will also save time for courts. Instead of hearing 500, 600 cases separately, they can hear all the actions at once and give a judgment in a case that would take less court time. It'll be an advantage for people using the legal system, and for the legal system itself it will save time. This will be definitely a help to our legal system.

There are also going to be situations with applications for a certificate to bring a class action suit where certification has been sought and the settlement will need the approval of the courts even if the application has not been completely addressed. At the moment the approval of the settlement by the courts is required, and the proceeding has to be certified a class action, where certification is pursued as a condition of settlement, to impose that settlement on individuals who would be members of the class. In simple terms, the change is aimed at protecting the interests of individuals who become members of a class or have joined a suit and are taking part in a class action.

The proposed amendments are simply an attempt to harmonize Alberta's legislation and the court system. The outcome of these changes will be greater efficiency, both provincially and nationally, and greater protection of potential members of class proceedings.

These are good changes to our court system, and it will enable Alberta's citizens both to participate in lawsuits here in Alberta and in other jurisdictions more easily. They are good amendments, and it was good to speak in favour of them here today, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't repeat what my hon. colleague has already said. One of the things that I think about class action suits – and it may be off on a tangent – is that when the average citizen feels that they really haven't got a hope going up against large corporations, this will give them some sense that they can actually partake in the justice system. I'm trying to perhaps think of the fact that cars in recent years have been recalled because of problems with brakes or acceleration pedals, and people could well be killed or have very serious car accidents, so I believe that sometimes the ability to have a class action suit can be proactive in terms of having large corporations recall and fix the problems before someone has lost their life or just has very serious injuries that would follow them for the rest of their life.

As has been said, this is sort of housekeeping, trying to put together the harmonizing of the legislation and the court system, so I would support this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a), allowing for five minutes of comments and questions.

Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that there are a couple other members who would like to participate in debate on this bill, so at this time I would move that we adjourn debate until a future opportunity arises for those speakers to participate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 Wills and Succession Act

[Adjourned debate November 2: Mr. Olson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and again speak in favour of this act, Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act. It was actually very interesting to listen to the mover of the bill, who is a lawyer, go into great detail about the changes to the Wills and Succession Act that we're bringing forward and give us a history of what in fact has occurred and some of the changes that this legislation brings forward. He noted that much has changed since the last time we did an update of the Wills and Succession Act.

We can see that the history of the Wills and Succession Act goes back a long way, almost to when our courts were invented, and they've been dealing with wills and succession and what happens to people's property, its intersection with the law, its intersection with contract. These rules and what happens to people who write a will, who have children, who have legal obligations and how they all intersect is really a bit of a commentary on our legal system as it has evolved as well as our family relationships as both individuals and the state are deemed to supercede or have the most importance. It was really neat to hear some of those things yesterday.

It also took me back to law school a bit, where in second year I had the privilege of taking a wills and estates course. Although I haven't always been the greatest student, I will say that I did receive a very good mark in that wills and estates class. Very good, very good. You know, I just sort of remembered that. I point that out. My mother was very happy about it anyway, needless to say.

Back to the merits of the bill. If we look at some of the changes that have occurred to this bill, it's really a pretty good piece of legislation. The Wills and Succession Act, as I indicated, seeks to update the law. Really, when this bill passes, it will consolidate five other acts: the Wills Act, the Intestate Succession Act, the Survivorship Act, the Dependents Relief Act, and then section 47 of the Trustee Act. Really, this is doing a favour to family law practitioners, people who use the courts themselves independently, and for judges and clerks and the like, who have to go to use all these acts and bring them before the court of law to find people the truth, justice, and the Canadian way. They're trying to find out ways to get assistance, and it just makes it easier to do.

These are essentially the fundamental principles that were employed during the development of these proposed reforms. I stated some of them earlier. An individual is free to transfer their property to others upon their death, and any interference with a person's wishes must be justified. A couple of those reasons would be public policy or other family obligations.

When a person dies without formally indicating how their property is distributed, it will be presumed that they wanted it to be divested to their family members. That's simply the way the law has evolved. I think common sense dictates that if somebody dies without a will, they would want it to go to their families, and that is representative. Common sense is the way that law has evolved and, hopefully, will continue to evolve.

A person's freedom to transfer their property at their death is subject to the fulfillment of legal and family support obligations. That also shows that the court is cognizant of some of the deals and debts outstanding and support obligations that are out there. All these changes that have been made and proposed and publicly consulted upon were supported by stakeholders.

I'd also like to note that some of the language in the act has been updated to try and look at situations that have been modernized. One particular way is that the definition of child has been changed to update the numerous ways society has evolved and moved on and now deals with things. I think that's a positive change that we see in the act.

Also, a neat little thing. I, too, remember this. The hon. minister of housing might remember this. I'm not sure if he took wills and estates when he was in law school. In the survivorship laws when two people were deemed to have died at the same time, it was the younger one who was deemed to die last. That was always one of those little tricks that you had to employ in the law school thing, and I always thought that that was a little bit strange. Nevertheless, it was how the law had evolved. Now they've looked at that rule. Obviously, people had been asking that question, not only me, and they've now changed that rule.

If two or more people die at approximately the same time in a car accident, plane crash, in the same accident, for example, their property will be distributed as if each of the parties died before the other. In cases where property is jointly owned, it will be deemed to be split amongst the owners equally. This is consistent with public opinion on the matter as established by the government through this public consultation, and it harmonizes the principles regarding testamentary dispositions with those contained in the Insurance Act. So we're getting some consistency across different acts and bringing some more common sense into the legal system instead of harsh rules that may or may not reflect what exactly people wish, what is in the best interests of society.

The bill also, in my view positively, allows courts to rely on outside evidence, corroborate the intentions of a testator. So they can look at the situation and interpret wills more easily. Other rules have been brought in that appear to do the same thing.

The bill also breaks down things into other distinct parts that allow for a designation of beneficiaries under plans, a part that deals with family maintenance and support, and another part that just deals with any questions or concerns like gifts between couples or gifts between members of a family. And the bill has I guess gotten rid of several outdated common law doctrines that have been around for a long time, which is a good thing.

All in all, this has been a good bill. The changes here reflect a laudable effort by the people involved. It was good stuff. I'm hoping it passes. It harmonizes existing legislation and brings Alberta's testamentary laws into the 21st century, and it's a good bill. There we go.

It was a pleasure to speak on it, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the sections in this bill is family maintenance and support. The changes would be that now a spouse or an adult independent partner of the deceased person will be automatically provided as a right the ability to continue inhabiting the home that the parties shared for a period of up to three months.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

I personally would like to see that increased, and I'll explain why in a moment. It's a compassionate change made to reflect the emotional strain that death has on the surviving partner and ensures that they are adequately sheltered and they can't be forced out of the marital home by the children's wishes to sell it. The reason I'm thinking that three months isn't long enough is that sometimes you can't even get the house of the person who has passed cleaned out of their personal belongings. It's very, very traumatic.

But, more importantly, what I think that this will help do. We know that seniors' abuse is mainly because of financial reasons. Because of my previous occupation as an RN in geriatrics I really did see some very, very ugly situations where the elder parent was basically just steamrolled in this exact situation, that has been quoted as: they moved them into a nursing home or into some sort of care centre and then sold the house long before that elder person was ready to move. They never ever really settled down to the new place that they had been moved to, often knowing full well that they didn't have the money that would have come out of that house.

In fact, I've seen people moved, and they'll cry almost every single day because they know that their family has really not treated them well. There was one instance, in fact, where the woman didn't even have enough money to have $4 haircuts. It was really quite pathetic. So I'm glad to see that this now will help protect, and there'll be some breathing room for these people that are left behind.

One of the others is consequential and related amendments, repeals, and coming into force. The proposed changes would require amendments to the Matrimonial Property Act in order to provide for the division and distribution of matrimonial property. Unfortunately, sometimes people die at very inconvenient moments, and they sometimes are changing partners. This is the sort of thing that perhaps that second partner is going to fight over when, in fact, it really should go to the first partner. So I'm glad to see these new ways. I think that they're using a new — I think the words were: reflecting the changing social values. Certainly, we realize that in Alberta there are changing values. The changes are consistent with the property rights that arise when the marriage is ended by divorce.

Finally, the bill would allow for a coming into force date that would permit the ministry, the courts, estate planners, legal practitioners, and the public to educate and prepare for this new approach. On the death of their spouse the survivor may make a claim for the value of their share of the matrimonial property. This claim on the matrimonial property is to be paid from the assets of the estate, and only a living spouse may commence claims with regard to matrimonial property. The claims mentioned above will have no direct effect on the right to inherit from the estate of the deceased. The act, if passed, will come into force upon proclamation, which will be approximately one year following its passage, likely on January 1, 2012.

The applications that are proposed in this bill are an attempt to modernize existing practices, as I've mentioned, to reflect Alberta's changing social values. Another very unfortunate incident that happened was the death of a partner in a same-sex relationship, and the family had never really recognized that relationship. The person, who had actually been a partner for over 20 years, received nothing because the family, I guess, challenged, and they lost that. So it will reflect our changing values.

Mr. Speaker, just one more comment. The changes here reflect the laudable effort by the sponsor of the bill, the ministry lawyers, and various law reform institutes to harmonize existing legislation and bring Alberta's testament laws into the 21st century. I think that this bill is very important.

One of the other things that I'm sure lawyers would remember to talk about with people when they are making out their wills is that they actually have the personal directive that would go along with that. Often personal directives can protect the person in terms of where they're going to live, and it also would protect the spouse, where they want to live. So it all becomes part and parcel of the law.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 22

Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 2: Mr. Denis]

The Acting Speaker: Is there anyone that wishes to speak on this? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to get up and again speak in favour of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I was here yesterday during the presentation of this bill on behalf of the hon. Justice minister, and there was a very detailed account of what is happening with the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act. From that review as well as from what has been put forward before me, it is a bill that is heading in the right direction in that it has modernized government policy regarding three distinct areas: the parentage and guardianship of children, the maintenance enforcement program, and interjurisdictional support orders.

All three of these areas are obviously of great concern to Albertans, families and people who are sometimes going through some strife. If there's one thing that our court system needs to try and address and to keep in front of, it's relationships. In any type of relationship, whether they're going great or they are having difficulties or the relationship has ended and there are children involved, there has to be a way for people to get help and direction and an ability to have the best interests of the child and some fairness and equity brought into those situations. Bill 22 is an attempt to make it easier for individuals who are going through some of these situations, to at least have the rules and regulations clear or as clear as they can be so that they can go into situations with their eyes wide open.

Let's just talk about some of the things under the parentage and guardianship of children. As it stands right now, the current Alberta law states that the parentage of a child is shared between two legal parents. We know that in most cases there's a biological father and mother. At the moment there is a somewhat limited recognition of exceptions for individuals to be recognized as legal parents in situations where parties are a same-sex couple or where nonbiological parents have relied upon assisted human reproduction. So in order to address the growing reliance on this and the recognition of children who are the products of a same-sex couple, the ministry has proposed through this bill the following policies in order to provide greater clarity regarding issues of parentage.

Where assisted human reproduction is used and there is a proper combination of biology and consent, couples using AHR can become the legal parents without any added need to begin adoption proceedings as long as one partner or spouse can show a biological connection to the child and the other individual consents to be a parent. In the case of a single individual using assisted human reproduction, that person may become the legal parent without another legal parent being recorded. As a result of these changes, same-sex couples who use assisted human reproduction will receive more complete recognition as single parents in close accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights.

I believe my colleague from Edmonton-Centre will give a much more detailed account of this as I received a look from her that I may not be getting this 100 per cent correct. Nevertheless, I look forward to her adding some comments to this bill when I am done.

This policy change will result, hopefully, in a paradigm shift here in Alberta, where we can look forward to more people focusing on parents as just being people who love and care for children rather than being reliant on what their sex is or whether they've used AHR. Hopefully, we can continue moving in that direction and get there in due course.

The maintenance enforcement program has also been enhanced in this bill. It allows that for maintenance recipients that owe money as a result of fees, overpayments, and penalties, the money can be collected more frequently and with greater speed. It means the enforcement program would have the increased ability to demand information from government, businesses, and other organizations about creditors. The maintenance enforcement program can hopefully assist individuals in receiving their monetary orders in a much more speedy and expeditious fashion.

Also, a debtor will be required to have sought the negotiation of a payment arrangement with maintenance enforcement before an application to suspend an enforcement action can be brought to the courts. The maintenance enforcement program will have greater scope for information-seeking practices when attempting to locate debtors and their assets.

This is all good stuff for people who are involved in disputes. We all know that relationships break down; it's not a perfect world out there. People believe they have been aggrieved in one fashion or another or don't believe their responsibilities go as deep as they actually do, and people need to access and have the ability to get a hold of finances when they are just and deserving. These are good changes to allow individuals to access some justice, access some money, and to keep both themselves and their families afloat in situations where it's just and deserving.

We can also look at a positive in this bill: interjurisdictional support orders. Interjurisdictional support orders refer to the model statute currently enforced in all provinces and territories, except Quebec, that allows parties residing in different jurisdictions to obtain and vary family maintenance orders quickly and easily. This seems like a reasonable thing, where individuals, if they are living here or were living here and go to other areas and need to get the help and assistance of courts, can bring applications there and get application changes made more quickly, where we can look at the applicable law that has been established by Alberta courts and simplify the processes for all parties who are involved in these difficult situations. I think this is a good thing.

In conclusion, sir, really, on all of these acts they've been positive changes to the way Alberta law will be organized and structured, allowing for more people, I believe, to get legal assistance in a more sound way and, hopefully, in a way that makes their lives better and to assist people in a more just fashion than may have been accorded to people prior to this legislation being implemented.

I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak today, and I look forward to hearing other people and, in particular, the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, staff in the Department of Justice have been working hard over the last while, and we're seeing the product of their work in a number of bills being brought forward this fall session, including class proceedings, wills, and this bill, Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

This is an important act, and it's an important act because it helps to legislate and regulate the most intimate relationships in our life; that is, those relationships of family, of parents to children, of spouses to each other. I spent an awful lot of time on this bill when it was first brought forward and, indeed, passed in 2003. That was the sort of huge reshaping of all of family law in Alberta. It was pulled together under this new Family Law Act. In fact, I spent one very, very long afternoon on November 27, 2003, as we worked our way through the government amendments – and they had a lot of them; I can't even remember how many, but it was dozens and dozens – to their own act and then my subamendments to the government amendments.

The situation that I was trying to address then is even more relevant today, and that is the situation when we look at families and who is in families today. We have a couple of different combinations and permutations. We can have married heterosexual couples, we can have common-law heterosexual couples, we can have married homosexual couples, and we can have common-law homosexual couples. We can have single people with children or single people without children. What's happening in the first section of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, is that there are some adjustments being made, but they do not capture all of the categories that should be captured.

I suspect that we are going to see this bill back in front of us again because if we continue with this, it remains Charter challengeable. You cannot make distinctions between, essentially, the same groups of people or people that are performing the same functions, and that's what we have here. The courts have been very clear in the way that that is being set out, yet with this government's personal philosophy – and I don't doubt that anyone here would deny it – there's a squeamishness there about addressing this issue head-on, and they won't do it.

For example, we talk about the best interests of the child, which was a very good philosophy to apply in this case and very helpful to the courts and anyone else that was making these decisions, but the government's view of the interpretation of best interests of the child does not include that child being in a same-sex parents household, so they don't include that under the definition of best interests of the child. They must, and they should.

Those amendments that I was bringing forward on that November 27 afternoon in 2003 were all about trying to make sure that we were not assigning a gender to the roles that were involved under these family law statutes, yet the government insists on doing that. They insist on using genderized language like "mother" or "father" rather than "parent" or "husband and wife" instead of "spouse."

As I said, we have legalized same-sex marriage here. What do you do? You don't have a husband and a wife in those situations. You could have a husband and a husband or a wife and a wife, but you don't have what my hon. colleagues on the other side feel more comfortable with, which is that traditional heterosexual marriage. You're fixing a little bit of it, but you're not fixing the whole thing, so it's going to be back in front of us again.

The amendments that I was bringing forward back on that November day were trying to help that. You can't set up a situation – but the government has set up a situation – where you're dealing with surrogacy, where you have a biological connection from one person but not from another. The idea then and now: I maintain it has to be available to both same-sex and heterosexual couples, and the government maintains it doesn't. If you're going to say, "Okay; we recognize a birth mother as being biologically important in this combination, and then the other person we're going to presume is the father, and we're going to make it through these changes possible for them to just be assigned that father role and not have to go through court and literally apply through the courts to be designated as the father," good. That's exactly what you should have done and what I tried to make you do back in November of 2003.

The problem with this is that you're not making that applicable to same-sex couples, and you have to because you cannot distinguish that stuff, and the law has said that. We have married couples that are both orientations in this province, and you cannot say that it's okay for these ones but not for these ones because the law recognizes both of them. It is discrimination, and this is now making it institutional discrimination against a group of people who by law are perfectly entitled to be what they are and should be able to have the same rights and responsibilities and privileges.

There are things in here. At one point it talks about: a child can have a maximum of two parents. Well, an interesting way of dealing with a legal argument, but the fact of the matter is that you can easily have more than two parents. In the case of, as I've said, same-sex parents, you're going to have to deal with the fact that you've got more than two parents here, but once again the government refuses to recognize that. Again, you know, you may not like it, and I understand that. I know that lots of people are not comfortable with this concept and don't want to see it and don't want to see it for anybody else. I understand that. You still as legislators have to write the right law, and this is not what's happening here. We're writing bad law, we're writing challengeable law, we're writing law that can be brought before the courts, and we will lose.

Guess what? The taxpayers are going to pay for this, too. I maintain it's not responsible for us to knowingly pass bad law that can and will be challenged in the courts and forcing our taxpayers to have to pay the bill for somebody being intransigent in the government's philosophy. You may not like it, but it is the law.

I've talked a little bit about that concept of the best interests of the child, and I'll come back to that as we get into Committee of the Whole.

I'm delighted to see that there is a formal abolishment of the concept of illegitimacy. I can remember years and years and years ago, when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, having those women from many different backgrounds – and, frankly, most of them reflected the government's political philosophy – being adamant that no child was illegitimate. How offensive to be able to label a child illegitimate because of the marital status of their parents. We recognize that now, and we've moved far beyond it, and finally the law is catching up here. That's very welcome and appropriate, but I cannot say timely because I think we're way behind the times.

But, you know, it's happened in our lifetimes. I remember my father, who grew up in a small town in southern Alberta, telling me about kids that he knew, and literally "illegitimate" was stamped right on their birth certificate. Can you imagine that? Some of those people, unless they've changed their birth certificates, could still be going and applying for passports and all such with that stamped on their birth certificate. Good Lord. What does that matter when you're trying to get, you know, a passport or a driver's licence or insurance or even get on a plane. Honestly, how could we possibly be judging someone and their character based on whether or not their parents were married. It's just a shameful time in our past. Glad to see that's happening.

I at one time was the expert on MEP, and I can't tell you how glad I am that I no longer am. For years and years, including when I was elected in here and the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was the Justice minister and I was the critic for it, we had long, drawn-out battles about maintenance enforcement. All credit to this government for continuing to strengthen the maintenance enforcement laws that we have and to give more tools into the hands of the director. We finally did get enough work space for them, we managed to get the computers to talk to each other, and we managed to get to the point where we could actually calculate and the government could report on how much money was being collected on each account at any given time. It used to be that when you asked for that, they could say: well, you know, 40 per cent of our accounts were active. Well, that meant somebody could have paid a dollar, but the account was active.

We had no idea of how much money was out there to be collected. Remember, folks, that this money, maintenance enforcement money, is not spousal money. It's money for the kids. Every time we get drawn into those accounts about that gold-digging witch and that jobless good-for-nothing and all of the various nasty names that parents would call each other, it wasn't about them. It's about the child. This is maintenance money for the child. It pays for their school fees. It pays for their clothing. It pays for the family to live in a place that's big enough that children would have their own bedrooms, or at least differently-sexed children would have their own bedrooms. It was very appropriate money. It was important that this money was collected.

We had a society, and we still do, where it's considered okay to shirk from those responsibilities, and we had to keep finding more and more tools, actually bigger and bigger sticks, to use against nonpaying, usually noncustodial parents to fork over the money to pay for their kids. Anything that strengthens that Maintenance Enforcement Act is good in my books. We did go a little over at one point. It was a bit like every time they got a person, usually him, they turned him upside down and shook him until all the money came out of his pockets, and then they were trying to pry out the gold teeth and everything else. We did manage to come through that. The pendulum has swung to the centre, as appropriate, and I don't think we're quite so abusive as we could have been accused of being some time ago.

There are shifts in definition around the maintenance to enable reciprocal agreements. Oh, my goodness, thank you so much for that. Trying to help someone get a reciprocal payment from another province or, worse, another country was a nightmare. The province's staff did tend to take those files and put them on the bottom of the pile because they were just so difficult to work. That doesn't matter. It's still a child in Alberta that is not getting something because a parent somewhere is not paying, and we should have every possible tool to be able to gather that money on behalf of that child who's living in Alberta. Glad to see that one.

The wording around "suspension" versus "stay" and "stay of enforcement" is fine. You know, part of what I was talking about earlier is reflected exactly in this, Mr. Speaker, because it talks about debtors and creditors. It does not make distinctions between mothers and fathers, male parent/female parent. It says: debtor and creditor. They could be either, and that's the point. It's about what this legislation is there to cover, yet we can't seem to move that understanding to the earlier part of this act and look at parent and spouse rather than mother/father, husband/wife. We still need to do that, and I will look at bringing forward that same series of amendments when we come back to this bill in Committee of the Whole.

Interjurisdictional orders, to be able to obtain and change them quickly and easily: again, really important because we're trying to get money to look after our kids. That's the point of this.

I'm very happy with two out of three sections in this bill; that is, the maintenance enforcement changes, the interjurisdictional order changes. I am not happy with the stage at which the work was left rather than taking it to its legal completion. That has not happened in the first section, which is around – I can't remember the name they're calling it now – the assisted human reproduction. We do have to deal with the issues around surrogacy. We do have to deal with the issues around parents and that definition.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, section 29(2)(a) is available.

Ms Pastoor: I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre how we might be able to handle the children of donated sperm and how that may come forward in terms of what we're considering new families in the 21st century. To take it further, should there be some way for children of donated sperm to actually know who their father is? It is becoming more and more and more important in society today and certainly controversial to people, who really want to know where they come from.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you, Lethbridge-East. That was opening a whole other chapter, but she's right. We are starting to understand some of the consequences of decisions that were made some time ago, particularly in the States, where this has been a more common procedure, more readily available for a longer period of time. We're now finding out that there are groupings or clusters of offspring of sperm donors, and they number in the hundreds from one donor. [interjections] I know. They had a different way of doing things. In Canada I'm very proud that we've always approached donation as a charitable act. [interjections] Hang on. Oh, the minds in this House. Truly, the minds in this House.

There is no payment. There is no exchange of payment. That certainly was the case in the States. Gentlemen were paid for the donation or, rather, sale of their sperm, so there was great encouragement for them to do it often, and as a result we now have hundreds of people that are related as a result of sperm donation.

This is an issue. To be perfectly honest, I had not looked through this legislation with that issue in mind, and I will undertake to do it before we are in Committee of the Whole.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26
Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane)
Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate October 28: Mr. Liepert]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for my first opportunity to speak to Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. I appreciate this opportunity as it's been one of the issues that has certainly exercised us and other Albertans over the last five or six years since coal-bed methane became so prominent on the Alberta scene and has contributed significantly to our energy mix and also created challenges, I think, for this government around environmental protection and other aspects related to water management, potential impacts of fracking, and some of the questions of reclamation in this unique new technology around gas in coal.

This bill classifies coal-bed methane as a natural gas subject to all statutory requirements. It clarifies ownership of coal-bed methane in split mineral rights situations, and I think that's important and significant.

As I indicated earlier, there are serious concerns around the environment which this bill, of course, does not address. At some point we certainly need to come to grips with, in particular, I guess I would have to say, the December 2008 scientific review panel that submitted their final report on the Alberta environmental standard for baseline water testing, giving 16 recommendations regarding processes of testing and recording, including the following, that "the ERCB and [Alberta Environment] need to develop an audit process to ensure all tests committed to in [directive 035] are conducted and the results submitted" and, secondly, that "the accuracy and precision of gas sample concentration analyses . . . need to be assessed." We have yet to hear further about that and certainly would be interested in hearing from the Energy minister or the Environment minister on those recommendations.

To the point, it's Alberta Energy's current position that where there is a split title, natural gas and coal, ownership is a matter to be determined by the parties involved. Where the parties are unable to reach an agreement, the matter is to be ruled on by the courts. There is currently no formal process to resolve this kind of an issue, so the conflicting owners' negotiator ultimately looked to the courts to resolve the issue.

I think, on our side, that this is progress. Since we raised the issue in 2003, when the bill was initially debated, we've tried to amend the legislation to address this issue. I guess this legislation is consistent with our expressed wishes back in 2003, and it is consistent with the legislation in British Columbia, so it is consistent with what we think needs to be done to clarify some of the uncertainty around this issue for those who have the freehold ownership.

Indeed, the issue is the question of: who owns the coal-bed methane? Under the split title question it clarifies three situations: one, where the coal rights are with the Crown and the petroleum and natural gas rights are freehold; secondly, where coal rights are freehold and the petroleum and natural gas rights are the Crown's; and the third situation, where coal rights are freehold, with petroleum and natural gas rights being freehold, held by a different party than the coal rights.

Coal-bed methane is governed by the same royalty system as all other natural gas production on provincial Crown land, and energy companies producing on Crown land must pay a royalty to the province for oil and gas, the overall objective being to ensure that the Crown retains a fair share of oil and gas production as royalty for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, given some of the concerns that we've raised, I think it's fair to say that we have no serious concerns about this bill and will generally be supporting it. There are still some questions around, especially, southeast Alberta and some of the central coal-bed methane deposits, about who is responsible for the large volume of water that's produced. That's still unresolved. The legislation still does little to rectify the current issues surrounding well density, which is a big issue for some of the landowners as there are significant numbers permitted under the existing act that have raised real concerns with some landowners.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker. I think that, in general, we'll be taking these issues under advisement and will likely be supporting the intent and the content of this bill.

Thank you.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in second reading on Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. I did approach the concept of this particular act with some trepidation because when I realized that what it was trying to do was settle the issue of who owns the coal-bed methane, I thought: well, gee, if I was a landowner somewhere and I had mineral rights, I'd be a little PO'd if all of a sudden I found out that the government had sort of scooped any coal-bed methane that might lie in that by just passing an act. I'm sure we'll be hearing from some people who feel exactly that way.

I felt like I had some personal interest in this. I no longer do, but when I first bought my property, not that far from the Legislature, it actually had original title from Donald Ross on it, and I had mineral rights when I bought the property. It was actually right on the title. Here I had a piece of property in the middle of downtown Edmonton with mineral rights. Well, gosh, that was fun. There was a whole bunch of reorganization in that particular area, and it was – what's the word they use for it now? – revitalized or rehabilitated or something, infill. I ended up purchasing a small slice of land that got added to my lot. Of course, because we had to go right back and do a new linen – it actually was changing, and I had a new piece of property – as happens, as soon as I changed it, I lost the mineral rights under it. So even if we did find coal-bed methane under my little 33-and-a-third foot lot, I wouldn't obviously own it anymore.

The more I thought about this, I thought: "You know what? This is a nonrenewable natural resource in this province. Even though it lies under some particular person's property, it actually probably doesn't stay underneath that one piece of property." No matter where you stick that pipe in and get at the particular product, it probably actually lies under many more properties, so in the end it is appropriate that it's owned by the people of Alberta and administered by the government of Alberta.

What I would like to see come out of this is that maybe we could just start small, just a little pilot project, just a little test run for the government, and take the royalties that would be earned or any money that would be earned off this coal-bed methane, as the government now would own it, take that money and put it into endowment funds for the future because anything we pull out of the ground now and sell or use is gone except for the money that it turns into. It's that old phrase from your physics class that, you know, matter never ends; it just turns into something else. Well, in this case it turns into money.

I still really believe in the concept that my colleagues and I brought forward, many years ago now, about taking nonrenewable resource revenue, a significant percentage of it – at that time I think we were saying between 30 and 50 per cent – and directing that revenue into several endowment funds. We had one endowment fund that was to help us catch up with needed infrastructure in the province. When that was done, then that money would flow directly into the heritage fund.

We had another one for postsecondary education. My dream was to be able to have that endowment fund reach the point where students in Alberta didn't have to pay for university or college, that we would be able to fund our universities and colleges from that postsecondary fund.

There was a fund for the arts – well, no surprise if I was in that caucus – again, to help fund new and forward-looking needs of our artists and arts groups, and then the heritage savings trust fund. Money would go into that fund as well.

I really still believe that that is an excellent idea. I know it's been pooh-poohed and that everybody said: oh, you know, it's not going to happen. I still believe in it, and I would still like to see it happen. Here's an opportunity for the government to take the revenue derived specifically from the coal-bed methane that they are now taking ownership of and to direct any profit, let's call it, whether that be in the form of a royalty or whatever else, into some endowment funds for the future.

It's just not right of us to be taking so much nonrenewable resource, that belongs to all Albertans, and spending it. Whether we're spending it on, you know, wonderful operational things like the provision of doctors in hospitals, for example, or new environmental provisions or whether we're spending it on infrastructure, which, in fact, is an asset, we're still spending the future's money. They have a right to be very critical of us by the time it passes on to the people that are pages, for example, working with us. They have a right to be really, really – well, let me pick a nice word – irritated with us if that wealth, that immense wealth, is gone because not only did we take it out of the ground, but we spent the money that it turned into. They have a right to be supremely irritated with us.

Here's what I'm hoping we can look forward to. I have wrestled with the idea that this is assigning the government, the Crown, the people of Alberta as the owner of coal-bed methane, a new, essentially, natural gas. Here is an opportunity for us to take a step along that road of endowment funds and start to look at that.

The other issue I had around this bill – again, I need a bit more time to read up on an absolute mountain of material – is the connections between the production of coal-bed methane and related environmental concerns. I'm not that interested in saying that the sky is falling – it's not productive – but I am interested in saying, "Look, if we know that there is a likelihood" – now, you'd want to be defining that likelihood. Is it 3 per cent, 10 per cent, or 25 per cent? In pulling this coal-bed methane out by whatever process – and I think that in some cases you're using fracking, aren't you, to get it out; you're fracturing the coal bed in order to release the coal-bed methane – that does have a repercussion on aquifers, on underground waterways, on well systems.

I think it's irresponsible for us to go: oh, whoever is complaining about that is imagining it. No, they're not. I mean, honestly, the effort you have to go to to try and bring something to the attention of government or any politician is enough to make anybody wilt. If any landowner, you know, gets as far as coming to someone in this Legislature and saying, "I've got a problem with my well; you can light the water on fire," we need to be paying serious attention to that. [interjection] Yeah, if anybody didn't hear the thing about lighting on fire, it happened in Rosebud. They were here, actually. They brought a sample and lit it on fire for anyone that wanted to go to the rotunda and look at it.

I have concerns that the bill does not deal with the repercussions of the development and harvesting of that coal-bed methane. It may not be appropriate to put it in the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010 – fair enough – but it has to go somewhere. I think many times that you leave your colleague the Minister of Environment in a very bad situation by not paying more attention to what can go wrong. You cannot fool around with Mother Nature or any other way you want to designate that equilibrium that we have in the world.

What we're doing here is not a natural process, and therefore you are going to be creating unnatural results from it. We have to recognize that and have ways of working with it going in, not just pretending that it's not happening and trying to trivialize and defeat people that bring those issues to our attention. I think we need to treat them as legitimate and give fair investigation and, frankly, give the tools to the Minister of Environment to be able to investigate that. Give him enough money to monitor. Quit taking money away from him every darn year so that he has to cut more and more monitoring staff. I mean, unless you guys want to get on your overalls and get out there and do it, you've got to be paying for some professional to be able to do it, and I'd rather have a professional, thank you very much.

Those are the two issues that I wanted to bring up in second reading. In principle, clearly, I do support what is being suggested here, but I also clearly have reservations about that environmental side, and I'd like to hear a bit more. Oh, good. Then it's the Member for Calgary-West, the Minister of Energy. I'm so looking forward to how he's going to respond to the issues I brought up. But I think it is something we need to address. It might not be appropriate in this legislation, but it is appropriate to be dealing with it somewhere.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 18 Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yesterday I read and watched the robust debate over Bill 18. There were some concerns raised from the other side of the aisle, and we had support and agreement that breaking down barriers within Canada is a positive step in the right direction. As outlined yesterday, these amendments are required for two reasons: first, to bring monetary enforcement provisions into the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade and, second, to extend the existing provisions of TILMA to the New West Partnership trade agreement, that includes the province of Saskatchewan.

The enforcement mechanism under the AIT gives us the teeth that Alberta has been asking for. Like the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said yesterday, one of the reasons the AIT did not work was because there wasn't any enforcement. That has changed and changed for the better. Also, by bringing Saskatchewan into the fold of the New West Partnership trade agreement, we are supporting the role of the west as Canada's economic powerhouse. Collaboration is key in the 21st century, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Now, yesterday there were some concerns raised, and they stem back to previous debates that we've had in this House over the TILMA agreement, so I'd quickly just like to touch on a couple of those. First, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood questioned how these types of agreements would limit municipalities. Specifically, he questioned the procurement thresholds. It is important to note that since 1999 municipalities have had to operate under the AIT and have open procurement policies. The thresholds were $100,000 for goods and services and $250,000 for construction projects. For the last year and a half under TILMA municipalities have been operating with slightly lower thresholds, $75,000 for goods and services and $200,000 for construction. Nothing is going to change with respect to procurement thresholds because of this bill. They will remain the same.

We also have to remember the real advantage of this agreement. It represents an expanded market for Alberta businesses, especially small businesses. Mr. Chairman, let me also assure all members that the New West Partnership trade agreement does not affect a municipality's ability to make decisions that they believe are in the best interests of their residents.

Another concern that was raised yesterday was over the fact that the trade agreements in general supersede the work that we do in this House. That is not the case. The AIT actually states, "Nothing in this Agreement alters the . . . authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures," and provincial governments are still able to pass laws that are in their best interests. These agreements just say that we have to be fair and nondiscriminatory in our trade practices with other provinces.

Mr. Chairman, I think we had some productive debate yesterday, and I hope that we've been able to add a little bit more clarity this afternoon. Passing this bill will improve interprovincial trade, investment, and labour mobility in the west and provide seamless access for businesses and workers with a range of opportunities. It will also increase our competitiveness in the global economy. The New West Partnership trade agreement creates the largest free trade and investment market in Canada, representing over 9 million people and a combined GDP of approximately $555 billion. The enforcement mechanisms in the AIT will increase this agreement's effectiveness. I encourage all hon. members to support the bill in committee.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've already spoken to this bill, but I'd just like to add maybe a couple of more things. It really is bringing Alberta into line with recently established monetary enforcement provisions contained in the newly established dispute resolution chapter of the agreement on internal trade, and I think that we know that Alberta was successful in the recent past in terms of winning their dispute with Ontario in terms of being able to sell canola products in Ontario.

I think that probably the problem with TILMA – and we will hear it again – was that it was actually done before anybody even knew that it was going on. At least, this time it's come to the House before. I'm sure everything is in place automatically, but at least it's out here before. I do support it for a number of reasons. I would like to see and have always seen, even under the AIT, that a lot of our trade can go east-west within our own country as opposed to going north-south and going out of our country. In fact, some of our products leave Alberta, go to the States, and then come back into Ontario as a finished product. I'm not sure that we couldn't finish it somewhere along the line between Manitoba and Ontario before it becomes a product in Ontario. Of course, I'm basically referring to meat products.

The New West Partnership trade agreement could well precipitate other agreements between central Canada and then perhaps Atlantic Canada. I would be able to support that sort of an idea when, in fact, the Atlantic provinces can trade with different people. We are closer to the Pacific side, and of course we'll be looking at China and India. But where I would hesitate is that we cannot divide our country up into regional areas. If these regions are going to be separate in terms of trading partners, I want to see that there are some kinds of standardized rules, that the regions would then come together so that we still go forward as a country. I think I've already mentioned that; I'm sorry.

I guess I would just quickly sum up by saying that I think it is a good bill. I think that we must get together if we are going to be competitive in the global market. I think we all know that our Premier at this point in time is on a junket to India. I'm not sure what will come out of that. But the point is that I'm assuming he isn't just representing Alberta. He may well be representing this New West Partnership or at least being able to explain the principles behind it and who, in fact, they would be dealing with if they wanted to do business with this country and this province and this partnership. My understanding is that there is another province also interested in coming in under this partnership, which again would add some more strength and more products to be able to compete in that international market.

With that, Mr. Chair, thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. There's just one thing that's occurred to me around this. Maybe someone could explain this to me or put on the record what the answer to the question is. I was recently made aware that with the harmonized sales tax, the HST, coming into effect in additional provinces in Canada, that was having some effect in Alberta. I think the original news story that was heard was that an Albertan ended up paying HST because of a Canada Post or express post package, which is their commercialized division, I think. But then I, in fact, saw our very own provincial finance minister in the news also talking about HST issues affecting Albertans.

Here we have, basically, a trade agreement that is meant to harmonize and liberalize exchange of goods and – I don't know; there's a phrase that you guys always use there – labour mobility and a few other things. I thought: hmm, I wonder if by expanding this now to include Saskatchewan, because that's essentially what's happened, somehow we will end up with Albertans now paying an HST from B.C. or Saskatchewan because we now have this agreement in place.

I thought, well, maybe it's just me that has this question. But then

I had a couple of other people raise it, and I thought: “No. If other people are questioning this and trying to figure out how this all works in, it’s worthwhile raising it in the House and seeing if we can get an answer from the sponsoring member – we’ve got the Deputy Premier here today – and just explain whether we think this is going to affect us.” According to the information that the minister of finance was talking about, it seemed to be also affecting financial services, which, I’m assuming, would be covered as well under these TILMA acts. I can remember having some acts in here that were around credit unions, I think, that had to do with how TILMA was going to work.

It seems thus far that TILMA has worked pretty well. I’ll be honest. I mean, I’m on record. I was not incredibly keen when the government tried to do it, but, again, mostly not because of the product but the process in that this was already organized and signed on before it ever came to this House. I just think it’s an incredible affront to Albertans to have a government go and negotiate and sign such an important agreement, never consulted or talked to Albertans about it at all. B.C. did, so it’s not as though it couldn’t be done. They definitely did. The only say that Albertans had was through their MLAs as we negotiated a couple of peripheral bills here in the House. As I say, I think one of them was around the credit unions and how they were going to operate between the two or insurance companies or something.

An Hon. Member: Insurance.

Ms Blakeman: Insurance companies. Yeah.

That’s the only issue that I can see. I’m just trying to figure out how that goes together. We’ve got the – I’m sorry, is it director of the Treasury Board? God of the Treasury Board? Minister of the Treasury Board? – President of the Treasury Board here. I knew it was close to God. Maybe he can answer my question about whether this is going to put us more in line to have Albertans end up being hit with HST because of this. I can’t see why it would, but I’ll ask the question.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to give some clarity to some of the comments that were made, first of all, I wanted to kind of take a little bit of issue with some of the phraseology around a junket to Asia or India, as it was described. The reason I want to do that as it relates to this particular piece of legislation is that it is about trade, and Alberta and Saskatchewan and British Columbia are dependent on trade. We’re dependent currently on a market to the south of us of some 250 million, 300 million people. But the reality is that that marketplace is not going to be large enough to sustain the kinds of markets in the next generation economies that we want to have in our province.

I know from discussions in the New West Partnership that that’s a similar issue for them, which is why the three Premiers went to China together to investigate areas and market opportunities in trade, which is why eventually down the road I’m sure the three Premiers will probably investigate the opportunity to take a trip to India as a joint area that represents, you know, close to a $600 billion GDP.

This province is dependent upon trade. The Premier is actually helping us develop that trade market in an area that is one of the fastest growing markets in the world. It would be folly and irresponsible for this government not to have representation at senior levels in the nation of India, and I can tell you and tell all members of the House that the Premier’s agenda has been extremely packed. Senior leaders of India’s states and the national government are coming out to meet with him, so they see it as very important, too, and those connections are building.

As it relates to the hon. member’s question around federally imposed taxes or other jurisdictional taxes that are related to the federal harmonization, really that comes under more of a tax jurisdiction nationally than it would under this three western premiers’ agreement. Obviously, we’re going to look to those Premiers for assistance in our efforts to recover those kinds of taxes in our discussion with the federal Minister of Finance. But in terms of whether or not that’s going to have a factor in this agreement, I believe that it does not. We can verify that, but I’m pretty sure that it isn’t.

The hon. member mentioned some credit union issues. They weren’t necessarily tax issues. They were around delivery of service and delivery of other products that some jurisdictions would allow, other jurisdictions didn’t. We’re working to some harmonization under this agreement as well on that.

I would also like to applaud the hon. member for recognizing that what we did was the right thing to do and that it’s working. I appreciate that. I think it’s a recognition that trade is important to this province, and trade is going to be more important to our next generation economies.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It’s a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to this bill at Committee of the Whole. Interesting points have been made up until now but still not ultimately changing our caucus’s concerns around this piece of legislation. Generally speaking, our objection to it is relatively simple in that it represents an extension of the application of TILMA, and that remains a regime with which we have some significant concern.

I guess just to start out, you know, we’ve had this conversation about how markets are good and expanding markets are good and trade is good for the economy. You know what? I don’t object to or disagree with any of those statements. I do, however, believe that as members of a democratic society we should always ensure that trade is seen as a vehicle for promotion of the public good and that we’re not, instead, looking at the public as being a vehicle for trade. That’s, I think, something that sometimes gets overlooked when people get lost in the sort of uncritical pursuit of trade agreements.

I do believe that there are occasions when government has a role to play to temper trade arrangements and/or to redirect them or to do the kind of thing that is necessary to ensure that the public represented within a particular trade jurisdiction get the best deal and have the best outcome collectively. I don’t buy that the free market is ultimately always going to be the best adjudicator of the public interests.

There have been, of course, a couple of points: “Oh, well, we’ve had TILMA now for a couple of years. It doesn’t seem to be a big problem. Therefore, let’s carry on and expand it to another full province.” Of course, the problem with these kinds of agreements is that if there are going to be problems with them, you’re not going to find them out right away. They need to wind their way through the adjudicative process and the negotiating process and the legal process and all that kind of stuff. There’s absolutely no reason to believe at this point, after two years, that because we’ve seen nothing, we won’t see anything, particularly given the two provinces that have currently been administering TILMA, the very right-wing Liberal government of Gordon Campbell in B.C. and this government. No one here will be surprised to hear me characterize them as right-wing. I'm sure you'd like that in terms of, you know, helping to win back support from the third party at this point.

Nonetheless, with those two governments in play – these are not governments that are particularly active in terms of initiating legislative moves to, as I say, temper trade for the benefit of the public interest. Were there to be challenges of government action through TILMA – we would not be likely to see it in terms of the legislative history that we have seen through the Alberta government under the Premier and the B.C. government under Gordon Campbell. As a result, I am not prepared to say that the jury is in and the decision is made, and TILMA is not a problem.

I raise the same concerns that I had before, that TILMA is crafted in a way that is much more concerning than NAFTA, that it has a language that includes and grows its application rather than limiting its application, which is very different from how NAFTA is constructed. From a legal perspective down the road it could become more of an impediment to government action.

The other concern I have, of course, as has been acknowledged by the Deputy Premier, is that this action will definitely exclude local procurement policies and ensure that there is a very low ceiling over which municipal governments are unwilling or unable to engage in local procurement policies. It's interesting. Just as an aside, you know, I had an acquaintance who moved to Alberta a couple of years ago from another province and bought himself a plot of land out southeast of the city. Rather than hire a local contractor to build his house, he discovered that it was much, much cheaper to just buy a prefab house in Saskatchewan, throw it on the back of a truck, drive it over the border, and plop it onto his new land because things were just that much cheaper in Saskatchewan. I think we have to be concerned about what the implications are going to be to the jobs that you maintain we're going to be able to create through this process.

Ultimately, though, that's sort of the overarching concern that I have with this act and that we will continue to have. Thus, we will not support it. I believe my caucus colleague already made this positive comment, but I'd like, again, to echo it in that I am pleased to see that this legislation removes the Henry VIII clause. It was quite astounding to see that the government had made the decision to include it in the first round, and I'm certainly pleased to see that they have seen fit to remove that clause. That is certainly an improvement.

Ending on that positive note, those are my comments on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would just like to take a very quick moment and point out to the House that I happen to have the Random House dictionary in my hand. The definition for junket is a trip by an official made at public expense. I don't consider the definition to be derogatory.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I spoke in favour of Bill 18. You know, it's just a good bill.

Since we are talking about the junket here, our Premier, I think we are coming out of the tunnel vision, and instead of looking just south of the border for business, we are going to make trade deals with other countries such as India, China. I mean, Southeast Asia has the fastest growing economies. The Premier's trip is costing $84,000, and I hope he comes back with $84 billion worth of deals. My concern is only about the timing of the Premier's trip because this is the festival season in India, and it's the festival of lights, so I hope our Premier comes back enlightened and with all those trade deals.

On this here this is a good bill. It will break down the barriers between the provinces. I hope that this will increase our trade between the provinces and with other countries.

Thanks very much.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to make a few comments, if I might, on Bill 18. I certainly support this bill. I think it's another example of Alberta showing leadership in this country, firstly, with TILMA, with the agreement with British Columbia now expanding to Saskatchewan. Over the last 10 years, I think, in this country we've made remarkable progress with some of the mobility agreements, and we've started to break down some of these many trade-related barriers that we have.

The fact is, though, that we have freer trade with our neighbour to the south than we do between some of our provinces. Mr. Chair, I would suggest that this protectionist attitude is really a deplorable situation in this country. To have 14 jurisdictions – being the 10 provinces, three territories, and the feds – all with different rules and regulations on many issues but especially trade-related issues I think is a real problem in this country that causes more big government, more bureaucracy, and more expense at the expense of fairness and efficiency. Sometimes it reminds me of some of the silos that we have within our own departments, which, again, is a problem that we're trying our darndest to break down, but there's always this problem with turf protection. Everybody wants to do their own rules.

We're moving in this world to a more global economy, and again Alberta is a leader. The Premier is now in India trying to get some trade agreements with India. We have a lot of our private corporations that do deal with India, and that's good, but we need to continue to break down these barriers and start working together, whether it's within our own government or between provinces or on the international scene. Alberta has shown leadership, firstly, with TILMA, as I said, and now Saskatchewan, but we need to keep expanding, and hopefully we'll get the whole country working together for everybody's benefit.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a privilege to speak in favour of this bill at the committee stage and talk about the bill in a little more depth. I've had an opportunity to think about it a little more and how we've sort of been in line now here. This is going to extend our trade agreement not only to include B.C., as it did in TILMA, but to try and get things lined up with Saskatchewan.

I do note today from question period that it was kind of strange. When we asked today the minister of finance what his position was in regard to the sale of PotashCorp, I noted with great interest that the finance minister sort of stated he stood with Saskatchewan and their right to protect what is considered a crown jewel of the people of Saskatchewan and how PotashCorp came together by government funds and was started as a government-run enterprise and was then sold off to private interests now possibly selling PotashCorp to foreign interests.

I'm glad the hon. finance minister came back in because I was talking about the sale of PotashCorp. I was going through that. I was surprised at his answer when he said that he stood with Saskatchewan in agreeing that this sale to foreign conglomerates and other things was sort of against what principles he believed in or that our province believed in or whatever would be the case. I was expecting that he would say something like that he understood the free flow of capital and that markets are really the only thing that should dictate a company's price, not foreign ownership, and all this sort of stuff. So I was surprised at that answer.

I wonder if this agreement that we're going into is going to affect our stance on things like the sale of the Potash Corporation and other Alberta assets to foreign countries or possible foreign takeovers as the finance minister indicated that he was in support of Premier Brad Wall's stance against the sale of PotashCorp. Anyway, it surprised me. I'm not sure if this act will have any bearing on that; nevertheless, as we're talking about the relationship between British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, I thought it was sort of neat to go through that.

Mr. Chair, I speak in favour of this bill, and we'll go from there. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 18 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 23

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 23 and introduce it at Committee of the Whole. We've had good discussion around Bill 23 over the past few days. Members of the opposition were very supportive of this bill, and we had a great discussion. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview told us that even in spite of the fact that this will probably have a personal impact on him, he still feels it's the right thing to do to benefit our universities across the province. So far I very much appreciate the support we've had from our opposition members, from our government members. This truly is a piece of legislation that will deal with a problem within some existing legislation around parking on the campuses for our universities.

I would propose a House amendment to amend Bill 23, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act. I'd ask if the pages could pass that out for me, please.

The Acting Chair: We'll mark that amendment as A1.

Mr. Weadick: Section 5 is amended in the proposed section 129.1(3) by striking out "section 3" and substituting "section 4." Currently section 129.1(3) contains the transition provisions of the bill that retroactively confer parking authority to baccalaureate and applied studies institutions. This makes references to section 3 of the bill. This is not the correct section as that section refers to our comprehensive academic research institutions. This is simply to line up section 4, referring to the baccalaureates, to match up with the existing part of that piece, to put the appropriate section in place. It's strictly a typo. I would ask the House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I thank the hon. member for bringing this change to our attention because without this change things can unnecessarily get mixed up, messed up, and the like.

It reminds me a bit of a situation on how these things sort of happen. My sister Kristie Smith, who is a lawyer, articulated with a firm called Blake, Cassels & Graydon. She was putting together a legal brief similar probably to one that we see on this bill, where numbering, in fact, occurs. I know the chair is a lawyer, so he knows the numbering of different bills and passages and sections and all that sort of stuff and how you bring it to the court's attention.

Well, anyway, my sister went over to Blake, Cassels & Graydon. She was working away at this stuff and thought she had done an amazing job. When she sent it over to her principal, they took him to court. Needless to say, the numbering and the paragraphs were all mixed up, and the partner who took it to court was not very happy. He came back, slammed it down, and said: "Yes. For all intents and purposes, that was a decent legal brief, but the devil is in the detail. Get your numbering right so you don't make me look like a jerk in court."

Needless to say, we didn't want that to happen in a situation like this, like happened to my sister when she was an articling student at Blake, Cassels & Graydon. This will no doubt save people time, frustration, and inclination. I'm glad for the hon. member straightening out this bill. I, too, am happy to support this amendment on that basis.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on the amendment?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Chair: We'll return to debate on Bill 23 as amended. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Continuing on, I'd like to again sort of speak on this bill and again thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West for bringing this forward, just noting that our universities and now our expanded universities with Mount Royal University and Grant MacEwan University are being incorporated into this act. They have many people who park there on a regular basis who are facing fines and the like when they park illegally or when they stay over time. This could add up to significant fine revenue, and if we did not change this bill in the manner that we have, the province and the universities could have been susceptible to a court challenge. This would have no doubt been a costly venture that would have cost the universities money to hire lawyers to go out and defend this lawsuit, and by all accounts they very much could have lost. So it is important for us to do this.

We all know that university funding here in Alberta is arguably not as solid as it should be. You can point to the fact that Alberta has some of the fewest university spaces per capita of any province, and this is a concern. If we were going to add to the financial difficulties that our universities have by making them defend lawsuits of this nature, it would have been a shame. So I'm very glad that we caught this, that we have updated our legislation to protect our universities in this way and can go forward in that fashion.

I would also like to say that I know the University of Calgary and word on the street is the University of Alberta are very proactive in getting their students to try to take public transportation. One of the ways they do that is by sort of increasing the price of parking so that people are encouraged through the supply-demand curve to take transportation. Also factoring in there are the high fines you get for parking on university parking lots. Where you don't feed the meter or get your credit card out and get the proper thing, you are accorded a substantial fine, and if you do it again, you get your car towed. This inevitably leads to another financially punitive measure that also encourages citizens to say: "Hey. Well, I don't have money to pay the meter or for the $20 for parking. I'm going to take public transportation." This helps alleviate the use of our roads; it helps eliminate CO₂ emissions, all that sort of stuff. So there's good reason why the universities have such a tenacious parking authority that goes after violators in such a fashion because it's with a public purpose at hand.

This bill, speaking on the bill, ensures that those people not only continue to monitor the parking that is going on at the universities but keep on going on with their public policy purpose of trying to encourage young students and people who are coming to the university to get to the university on some form of public transportation.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak again on the bill and previously on the amendment. I look forward to hearing more comments and questions on this bill going forward.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I don't want to take up a lot of time in debating this bill; I just have one little concern. As you know, I don't drive very much, but being a downtown MLA, when I do have to drive, everywhere I go I have to use a parking meter because that's the way parking is downtown. There are these little creatures that exist in my world and probably in yours called parking fairies. As you're driving up to a meeting late and desperately praying that there will be an open parking spot right in front of the building that you need to go into, you look through your front windshield and start praying to the parking fairy that that spot will open up and, better yet, that it'll be plugged; there'll be time left on the meter. You can't do it every time, and you can't count that the parking fairy is going to come through for you, but it's always worth praying to the parking fairy.

So I just want to reassure any parking fairies that are out there, particularly the BASI fairy godmother parking fairy, that we don't mean any disrespect by this, but it has to be done. We're going to retire the BASI fairy godmother, who was looking over all of those postsecondary institutions and enabling them to not be able to legally collect the fees. She can retire now because with the passage of this, they will be able to collect the fees and assign them and have dispute resolution and all the rest of it. But whenever I next drive a vehicle and I'm desperately praying to the parking fairies that that spot opens up right in front of the building that I need to be at, it doesn't mean that I've shown any disrespect by supporting this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Are there any others? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: I, too, will be brief. I rise to tentatively support this bill and just raise a couple of concerns beforehand. Essentially, this whole notion of giving the universities the opportunity and the ability to collect their parking fees is important. And do you know what? It's possible that in saying this, I could actually sort of get myself in trouble because I, of course, have probably had various marks and things withheld from me for not necessarily having paid my parking fees in the most timely of manners.

Ms Blakeman: Library fines.

Ms Notley: Library fines. Absolutely. That was embarrassing. I still recall my mother being so irritated at me for not getting my diploma the day I was supposed to.

Anyway, all that being said, I do actually think that, I mean, this is a resource that universities have. Many universities are in central areas. I, frankly, think parking is something people should have to pay for. I think most of the people that are using parking in universities are people that can afford a vehicle, you know, when most of the students are actually relying on public transportation. Frankly, the more we can get people to rely on public transportation to get to universities the better. So as much as parking fees are desperately annoying, and I will undoubtedly fall victim to this repeatedly in the future, I think that it's an important thing to give universities the ability to collect these fees.

I raise some concern about the fact that this is a piece of legislation that seeks to retroactively create different legal rights. I will acknowledge that I've been unable to listen to all of the debate on this issue up to this point, so I'm not sure of the degree to which this has been fully canvassed by members of the Assembly up to this point. But I raise concerns about this because, you know, this seems like something fairly minor.

Mr. Hehr: I'm interested in this, how you're going to pull this off.

Ms Notley: How I'm going to make this all work?

Right now we're retroactively creating a right that did not exist up to this point. Right now it's parking fees, and we can all agree in principle on the public policy objective of that. You know, a decade ago it was the retroactive elimination of legal rights with respect to sterilization. You just never want to be going back in time to create or eliminate legal rights at a different time.

As I say, I'm raising the concern. That's where I will leave it at this point, but I certainly put the Legislature on notice that in future we'll take a look at this sort of retroactive application process with a great deal of scrutiny.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on the bill?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 16
Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I know the Minister of Transportation, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, is astutely listening to my comments this afternoon with interest. With that in mind, I would like to say that I realize that my good friend Luc, who happens to be a constituent of mine, provided me with some interesting comments. He mentioned the comment: I realize that it is harder to fight tickets when there is no question of judgment. That's why many want the list of offences so that it reduces the burden of proof.

Now, let me articulate on that. As my good friend Luc, my constituent, had said: whenever you make penalties easier to levy, there is always a trade-off. And, particular to this issue, while in many ways we want to do things that make the jobs of law enforcement officials easier, we should also be vigorous in balancing out the rights and the freedoms of individuals and all Albertans.

In particular, I do have a real concern about pulling people over, as my good friend Luc said, and basically giving them tickets when they're not obviously putting anyone in danger. It made me pause for a moment as I listened to my constituent. We were having a coffee at the doughnut shop last weekend, actually, and in doing so, we paused to think: will this Bill 16 be a good bill? Will it help? Will it help families and drivers? Or is there a good reason to have the judgment of police officers involved in these things? I certainly value the judgment of police officers, especially when they've stopped someone else and are giving them a ticket as I drive by. But if the driver was not driving in a way that raises any suspicion, I'm reluctant to criminalize their behaviour because the issue of judgment does play a role there.

In many ways the Minister of Transportation perhaps should be considering a more prescriptive area to assist our law enforcement officers in, ultimately, the destination I think we all want to get to. That destination is safer highways, safer driving, and for those who have the privilege of having a driver's licence in Alberta – because it truly is a privilege to have a driver's licence and to use the roads and the highways and transportation devices that are provided.

Mr. Anderson: Unless you're the Transportation minister. Then it's a right.

Mr. Boutilier: So the question is: is this a privilege, or is it a right? Some may have a variety of views on this point, but if citizens are driving in a way that shows they are not being attentive enough, I'd like to have a ticket with demerits attached because that's a driving infraction that should be penalized.

Now, it's important to recognize that I'd like to provide some general qualified support. I recognize that there are people out there who are driving dangerously because they are too distracted by things they are doing in their cars. I think we've all seen examples of text messaging. It is, certainly in my judgment, absolutely the most extreme example. I'm mostly in favour of this law for that reason because we've had a personal experience, that I would like to share with you, and citizens have talked to me about this issue in my great constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – you may not be aware, but it is the oil sands capital of the world – and I hope that any proposed law or bill will drastically reduce the frequency of that happening.

I want to use the example of the heavy equipment that travels through the oil sands capital. In the situation that we experienced, both my wife and I and also our three-year-old son, who was travelling in his car seat, properly secured, were almost killed by a driver who had been texting. In fact, we were in the intersection, and the vehicle basically did not see the red light and was coming through the intersection at quite an intense speed. I think all of us in this Assembly can agree that the safety of our families and our loved ones and the safety of all Albertans is foremost.

I would like to say today that I recognize that there are people out there who are driving dangerously. I'll even go so far as to say that my wife actually slapped me on the side of the head. Yes, she did. I was backing out of my driveway, and she hit me on the side of the head because I dared to pick up my cellphone at the time. I had to stop and put the car in park as the rear end of the car was over the sidewalk. I can only apologize to my wife and my son because it was fundamentally wrong. Actually, for anyone who has never seen the movie Seven Pounds, I think it is a wonderful example of scaring the living daylights out of anyone who does believe that it's okay to be doing certain things in terms of what took place in that movie, that I thought was really quite educational.

I want to thank my wife for slapping me on the side of the head and reminding me that I should not have been picking up my phone to hold the phone to my ear at the time when I was backing out of our driveway. It made me pause. I am once again learning from Gail and what she did, and I can only say that I hope others, if they are ever in the same situation, will learn quickly.

I would like to offer my general qualified support for the bill and also on behalf of my constituent Luc. He clearly indicates that he believes this is important because of situations that have taken place in the past.

Having said that, it was for me a teachable moment, and I will say and commit here that if this does become a law and is approved – and I encourage members to support this. I do believe in individual rights, but I also believe that we need to learn. I would ask all members of this Assembly here today: who, in fact, has felt distracted because they were texting or has used their cellphone and it distracted them from driving? I'm going to look now and ask: who will put up their hand and admit that they were distracted by texting? And to my good constituent – Luc is his name; that happens to be similar to the name of the Minister of Transportation. I think he spells it with a C not K-E. Having said that, who in here was ever distracted by a cellphone? Put up your hand now. I see other members putting up their hand.

When my wife hit me on the side of the head, it really was a teachable moment for me that I had to do better. I think this law, in fact, needs to be approved by this Assembly. We need to do this not only by the law, but the spirit of the law, which I do believe the Minister of Transportation is attempting to create. I tell that story as much as it is a personal story. I don't like getting hit on the side of my ear by my wife, but I tell the story because of the fact that she said: Guy, stop. I had to put my car in park. Consequently, I do believe in natural law, and that was truly natural law. As much as this may be legislative law, natural law truly does work, and it trumps everything else.

I believe that the burden of proof – the more prescriptive we could be I think would be helpful. Overall, I do believe that we will have to examine very closely over the next few years, if this bill is approved, to see if it does improve road safety because there really is a trade-off in personal freedom, which, of course, we all enjoy. I also want to feel comfortable. Perhaps this law is just simply too blunt. I'm willing to give it the benefit of the doubt. If it turns out to be ineffective, which is one option, I'll certainly be looking to the Minister of Transportation to look for other alternatives to it, that he will not hesitate to revoke it and replace it with something that better addresses the problem in terms of the destination we all want to reach.

Now, at this point only time will tell if, in fact, we will reach that destination. To use transportation philosophy, you know, sometimes the journey itself is the destination. I do believe that the journey of not being allowed to text, not being allowed to be distracted because of the potential new law that comes forward is something that I will look at very closely.

I would ask that the Minister of Transportation, if this bill is supported in this Assembly, review the situation in a year's time to see the evidence. I hope he can come back and offer to the members of this Assembly concrete evidence. I actually sat in the PC caucus when this very discussion came up. I sat in the caucus when the Minister of Transportation was there. Clearly, in a question and answer I really wonder if, in fact, he believes that this bill will achieve the destination that we all hope will be the outcome in terms of the trade-offs of giving up personal freedom for something that will protect Albertans. Only time will tell, but I'm willing to give the Minister of Transportation and this Assembly my qualified support for this bill at this time.

When I go back and talk to Luc in my constituency – that's L-u-c – I'm going to be sharing with him that the Minister of Transportation was listening intently to my comments this afternoon. I see that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is nodding in agreement. I am going to say to him that qualified support is something that I offer. I would ask that the minister a year from now report back with the statistics so that we can be even more convinced that this bill was the right bill to make Alberta's highways safer.

Now, in making Alberta's highways safer, I do have other friendly advice, and that is, perhaps, to put some pavement on highway 63 going to the oil sands capital of the world since we did not get any pavement in the last two years.

Mr. Anderson: Highway safety. You can be distracted by the bumps on the road.

Mr. Boutilier: Highway safety. Well, one has to ask the question, you know, the detours, the incredible amount of – there is some work going on there, but we haven't seen any pavement in the last two years.

I see the member from – I think he's the Solicitor General. He wants to offer some comments. I would welcome them, but I'm only going to respond to intelligent comments at this point, so consequently I would only say that I will provide general qualified support at this time.

To the good folks up in Peace River country, I can only say a beautiful part of the country, I would strongly suggest that the member get out and start door-knocking because he's going to require that when it comes to the next election.

Having said all of those things, I believe that I want to say that the Minister of Transportation is trying to reach a destination that is good for all Albertans and for my three-year-old son and for his sons, and I think that is to be applauded. As an opposition member, having served as an independent and served for 13 years with the PC government, I know the Minister of Transportation will do his level best, and I look forward to him reporting back to this Assembly in a year. Now, in a year's time, hopefully, he is still the Minister of Transportation and hasn't moved on to become the Premier. Having said that, I will say that I will look forward to his findings on trying to reach that destination of making Alberta's highways safer.

I can only apologize to my wife and my three-year-old son for being distracted on our driveway and not, I'm proud to say, on the highway to avoid any potential danger taking place. That's why this afternoon I offer my general qualified support, recognizing that there are people out there who are driving dangerously because they are too distracted by things they are doing in their cars. They are text messaging, which is absolutely the most extreme example of this. I'm pleased to say that many members of the House recognize that they, like me, have made mistakes when it comes to this. Fortunately for me it was only in my driveway, and thank God for my wife reminding me of what is safe versus what is not safe. I hope it will drastically reduce the frequency of what is taking place.

Mr. Chairman, I know my time is coming to a close.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, no. You've got lots of time.

Mr. Boutilier: As it turns out, I have a bit more time, so I will share with you, having said that, that maybe there should be a law about distracted seatmates in the Legislature. That would also be very helpful.

Some Hon. Members: Relevance.

Mr. Boutilier: The relevance of that is that it's important to keep your mind on the focus of the issue, and that is Bill 16.

Having said that, I give qualified support, and I thank the university students and others who also are very engaged in this. I want to say that earlier we were talking about the previous bill on parking, there being one or two members here who teach at the University of Alberta, and the issue of transportation is something that is so important. I'm giving the Minister of Transportation, one of the few ministers of the government I will give it to, the benefit of the doubt. There are a few others I would.

I hope that this bill will serve Albertans well if it's approved by this House. Only time will tell. Consequently, I look forward to him reporting back, and I'm sure the minister will commit to reporting back on statistics indicating that this will be a good bill if, in fact it is proclaimed. Only time will tell.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

5:30

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I made a couple of comments in second reading on this Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. Now, I realize that there's a clause in there about distracted driving, but I'm really concerned that maybe in some areas this bill doesn't go far enough. I know it's trying to deal with the distractions, but there are some other things that I think are going to yield probably even better results.

The one big thing is the attitude of drivers. Now, I'm just not sure how we would get at that when you see the way people will dodge in and out of traffic travelling faster than the speed limit. They cut you off; they seem to often think that if they put their signal light on, that gives them the right-of-way, those kinds of things. There's no defensive driving, and I believe that that should be a major part of the driver training that is provided by a number of different venues.

We had an interesting situation down at the Sundre high school about five years ago. There were three young people in the high school killed in a very short period of time, and the community got together trying to figure out: what can we do? Every one of them was a situation with speed, in one case alcohol. But the fact was that the kids, when they got behind the wheel, didn't realize the power of the weapon that they had in their hands at the time and abused that right of being able to drive.

I think that it is real interesting to take a close look at driver training. When you look at it, the organizations do a good job of teaching the rules of the road. They do a reasonable job of teaching an individual how to handle a vehicle, but unfortunately the cost of going to a simulator, for example, would be prohibitive. If we could do something like that, that certainly would give people the opportunity to realize how a vehicle reacts on ice, for example, or taking corners too fast, all of those sorts of activities that do lead to a lot of accidents. So the training side is the one area that I think we need to spend more time on.

The other areas that I mentioned earlier. We're getting an ever-increasing number of these real bright headlights. Now, if you drive on a two-lane highway as much as I do, they are a problem, and they're getting worse. To make matters worse, there are a lot of people with four-wheel drive vehicles that are jacking them way up. There's one in Rocky that I pulled up beside the other day just to see where those headlights are. The fact is that they were up higher than where we sit, so even if they had their dims on – well, actually, it's probably better if they didn't have their dims on because that's going to shine right into your face.

To make matters worse, they put those real bright lights in. I guess people call them fog lights. They're the ones below the headlights. Those you cannot adjust, so they're shining straight out into your face. Just the other evening I met one of those vehicles. You go through an area, then, where your eyes just simply cannot focus. You don't see anything. You hit a blind spot, and I think that is absolutely ridiculous.

Those vehicles that are pumped up like that: actually, what they're doing is lifting their centre of gravity. So they're probably even more difficult to control, particularly if you ever start to swerve or are going around a corner, because that centre of gravity is up very high. The interesting thing of it is that in most cases they did not put higher tires on the vehicle. The fact is that if they are trying to do it so that they can go through softer ground, it doesn't make any sense because their differential and the axles are still at the same height as the vehicle. The only way they could lift it higher would be to put higher rims on them, and that would get them up even worse.

I think we need to take a hard look at particularly the lights – actually, I think we should be passing some legislation to ban those fog lights, especially when they put the real bright lights in there – and, of course, like I mentioned earlier, the driver training.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand up and actually make a few comments on Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. I had the honour of speaking in favour of the bill when the Member for Calgary-Hays first brought this forward in the Legislature. I think it was probably about a year and a half ago. I spoke in favour of it because of the fact that when he brought the bill forward, I supported it then, and I support it now.

At that time when I was debating, I spoke about some of the things that I had encountered as I drive highway 2 every week to fulfill my role as the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek. I was also at that particular time a member of the Progressive Conservative government and went through all the debate on this particular piece of legislation and the government not supporting this piece of legislation. So I am actually going to give them some credit by coming now and bringing this piece of legislation forward and recognizing the severity of the problem and the seriousness of it. You know, it disheartens me when I think about all of the accidents that have occurred and the time wasted not bringing this piece of legislation forward.

What I want to talk about, where I have some concerns, Mr. Chairman, is under section 115.4 when they talk about:

Subject to this section and the regulations made under section 115.5, no individual shall drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while engaged in an activity that distracts the individual from the operation of the vehicle, including but not limited to . . .

And then they talk about:

- (a) reading or viewing printed material,
- (b) writing, printing or sketching, which makes perfect sense to me,

- (c) engaging in personal grooming or hygiene.

My spidey senses start going off when I read something like that. You know, you talk about clarity in legislation. For me one wonders what personal grooming or hygiene is. Hygiene can go any way. I mean, is it blowing your nose if you have to while driving down the highway? Is it putting some lip balm on while driving? To me it's just, you know, not clear enough.

Then they go on to say:

- (d) any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations.

I have a big question mark by that. You know, what are they talking about? Any other activity? It could be a host of other things.

What I would like to have seen in this particular legislation, Mr. Chair, is letting our wonderful law enforcement agencies make those decisions without having all of these, one, two, three, four. I had the great privilege of being the Solicitor General several years ago and have a huge amount of respect for the law enforcement agencies – the police, the RCMP, the sheriffs – that work in this province on a daily basis under at times very, very life-threatening situations. You know, I think it's more important, as far as I'm concerned, when we start listing these, to let the law enforcement agencies make the decisions. Heather is driving down the highway. She decides to grab her lip balm and put it on her lips. Is that distracted driving?

I can tell you that, speaking on this particular piece of legislation, that the Member for Calgary-Hays brought forward, I can remember one time driving down the highway, and I passed a driver who had a coffee in one hand, had a cigarette in another hand, had a cell-phone, and still somehow managed to give me the birdie as I was driving. I thought: well, you know, you talk about octopuses; that definitely was an octopus when you can do all of those things at once.

Since this legislation was brought forward, I have paid particular attention to some of the things I watch and I see as people are driving. Quite frankly, that is distracted driving when I'm watching what other people are doing to try and get an idea of what distracted driving is. I thought: "Geez, Heather. You know, you're looking at what other people are doing as distracted drivers, and you're watching to make sure so that you have some points in regard to what other people are doing to be driving distracted."

Mr. Chair, I've seen a host of things over the last few weeks when I've been driving down highway 2. I'm sure everybody in this Assembly can share what they consider a story. I mean, I'm sure my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore will elaborate about how he was driving and wished he had a video camera when he saw a colleague, not one of us but a colleague, driving down highway 2 – and I'll let him elaborate – with a cellphone in one hand, a pop in the other hand, and driving with their knees. I still have trouble actually trying to even visualize that concept.

Mr. Danyluk: If you were watching that closely, you must have been distracted yourself.

Mrs. Forsyth: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul had some comments to make on the distracted driving, so I'll look forward to him making his comments during this debate in the Legislature.

You know, social media is a wonderful tool. We saw what happened recently with the mayoral campaign and how he utilized the social media. I'm old, Mr. Chair, and I'm trying to get used to all this social media, this Facebook, this Twitter. So I thought: well, why don't we just engage the public on Bill 16? You put the message out on your Facebook saying: "Debating Bill 16. Give me your comments." I tweeted that, and I was overwhelmed at the comments that I got back from people. It's just an example that people are paying attention to what's happening in this Legislature. We provided a link, and I have comments that were posted on my Facebook. I had comments that were posted to me directly, and people say and ask all sorts of things. Here's one from one of the Facebook messages: "Truth is drivers are distracted just by driving, too many times looking at the scenery and not enough attention to what is going on on the road. The fewer distractions the better, especially on high-speed roadways like QE II." And that's where I see all of these distracted drivers when I'm driving.

We and I'm sure everybody in the House have received an e-mail from the students at the School of Public Health at the University of Alberta. They were doing a paper in regard to this particular piece of legislation. You know, they e-mailed, and they wanted to know, first of all, if we supported Bill 16, which we do. Then they went as far as to say: well, do you support hands-free cellphones? Well, Mr. Chair, one of the things that I've noticed when I've been driving is the people that are talking on their hands-free cell. It's quite amazing how all of a sudden when people are on hands-free, their hands are going, and they're talking like crazy on the phone. They've got this hands-free; they're pointing, and they're gesturing, and there are no hands on the wheel.

You know, I guess what I'm trying to say here is that we support this particular piece of legislation. I'm just speaking for myself on behalf of Calgary-Fish Creek because the constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek have overwhelmingly told me that they want me to support Bill 16.

The section that I refer to is under the prohibited activities, 115.4, where we talk about, as I explained earlier, reading or viewing printed material, writing, printing, engaging in personal grooming or hygiene, and any other activities that may be prescribed in the regulations. My questions, then, go to the minister about what is going to be included in the regulations. How does he determine what should be in there? Is it someone stopping at Tim Hortons, like

I do when I drive every week? I stop at Tim Hortons, and I get my coffee. I usually get my breakfast sandwich, or I get my bagel, and if I need to be in Edmonton for some event, I start driving. Now, am I distracted when I'm chomping on my bagel as I'm driving because I have one hand and I might be eating my bagel?

Again, Mr. Chair, who determines what a distracted driver is? In my mind, let's let the law enforcement agencies, the police in this province, that do an incredible job, determine what exactly a distracted driver is instead of having this in the legislation and saying: well, we believe that Heather is engaging in personal grooming or hygiene because she's driving down the highway trying to wipe her nose, maybe putting some lip balm on. Or, for example, I have a headache and I've decided that I'm going to drive, and I'm going to take two Tylenol.

I mean, you know, these are all things that we've done, Mr. Chair, and I'm not innocent. I'm one of those people that had to get everything done, talk on my cellphone when I had three hours of driving time. I'm sure there are not very many members in the Legislature that haven't done that, and I'll be one of the first to admit that I have done that and have now ordered my Bluetooth. If something happens where I have to take a call on an emergency, at least I'm reaching for the Bluetooth. I am conscientiously now driving up to Edmonton having the cellphone in my purse, leaving my cellphone in the purse, and really trying to break that particular habit.

To finish, Mr. Chair, I would like to hear what the Minister of Transportation is going to say when he talks about the prohibited activities. I know that we have an amendment that was received, which was about sections, I believe, that didn't have anything to do with 115.4, and maybe he can correct me. He put in an amendment to Bill 16, and it deals with the proposed section 115.1. It's all 115.1 and some of 115.2, and he's made some changes there.

You know, I always shake my head that when the government has staff and more staff and more staff and wonderful staff, I must say, that work for the government, far more staff than we would ever hope and dream for with our two little researchers, they can't bring a bill forward and get it right the first time.

I really have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Transportation, and I'm wondering why he has brought forward the amendments to Bill 16 that are dealing with 115.1 and why they haven't even looked at 115.4 because, quite frankly, Minister, this is the section that we're getting all the calls on, all the comments on.

I would love to have the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security maybe speak on behalf of the police, that he represents, to see what they have to say about this. I can tell you that the police officers that I've spoken to have said that this is far too restrictive. They would like the ability to make the determination in regard to what is a distracted driver and what isn't a distracted driver. It's something where I would like to hear, quite frankly, what the government has to say.

I will be supporting Bill 16. Hopefully, we'll be able to bring an amendment forward to maybe talk about the prohibited activities. My colleague from Calgary-Glenmore, I hope, is going to bring something forward, and we can look at that.

Mr. Speaker, with those few words I want to thank you.

5:50

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] I am enthused, very enthused.

This bill is a bit of a funny one. This is like a classic example of doing something for the purposes of looking like you're doing something useful. I don't understand it, too. The Minister of Transportation has, I think, a good reputation for being someone who doesn't like government interference very much – let's put it that way – who doesn't like government ruling every aspect of our lives. That's why I was very surprised to see him in the end introduce this piece of legislation because it just doesn't seem like him at all. I'm just curious as to the reasons why he would do that.

You know, it's kind of like that vest. What was that bulletproof vest act that was passed by the Solicitor General and the Justice minister a while back on the vest registry? I'm trying to figure out, you know, why these more, I guess you could say, libertarian, don't-get-in-my-way types of people have all of a sudden decided that they want registries. They don't like gun registries, but they like bulletproof vest registries. They'd like protective vest registries. They now want officers on the street running around looking for people on cellphones, running around looking for people – who knows? – changing the dial, putting on whatever certain people put on in the car, eating, whatever.

It just seems like kind of a big-government bill. I mean, this is just common sense. We talk a lot about legislating common sense and how you just can't legislate common sense. You either have it or you don't. That's just the way it is. But you can't legislate it. You can't force people not to, you know, have one arm on a cellphone, one arm eating a hamburger, one leg trying to steer the stick shift, and one trying to steer the steering wheel. Have you ever tried that? I've never tried that. I mean, it's just so obvious.

One of the things, too, as we've talked with police officers about this, is that there is a little bit of a burden of evidence problem. For example, it's very difficult to prove that somebody is on a cellphone. It almost becomes a he-said-she-said thing. A police officer is actually going to probably need not just himself but his partner to see this. In other words, in order to really do this, unless there's an actual accident, you're probably going to need more than one person to see it happening.

I know this because it's like the seat belt law. I don't know if the hon. Housing and Urban Affairs minister has ever fought a seat belt ticket or been involved in a seat belt ticket case, but if he has, because I have, he'll know that it's very difficult for police to prove that, very difficult.

An Hon. Member: If it's not on camera.

Mr. Anderson: It is very difficult unless there are cameras – that's right – unless they get the camera out, unless they get the camera and they film. Then, of course, you're putting somebody out on the street for the purpose of filming seat belts or not using seat belts, whatever. I mean, it just seems like a complete waste of taxpayer resources and policing resources to be running around, "Oh, look, that person has a seat belt; that person doesn't have a seat belt," et cetera, et cetera. Unless you're going to bring . . .

The Acting Chair: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the Committee of the Whole shall now rise and report.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 18. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 23. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today I would like to introduce guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. There's one individual that I am absolutely, totally fascinated with. This man was born in 1923 in Saint John, New Brunswick. His name is Don Murphy, and I'd ask him to rise, please.

Don joined the Royal Canadian Navy volunteer reserve as a boy seaman before the onset of the Second World War. From 1942 till 1945 he was assigned to combined operations with the Royal Marines. His wartime record includes the fighting withdrawal from Burma in the Pacific, amphibious landings in North Africa and Sicily, a submarine raid on Norway, and the D-Day landings in Normandy. His decorations include the star for service from 1939 to 1945, the France and Germany Star, the Africa Star, the Pacific Star, the Canadian volunteer service medal with clasp, and the War Medal for service from 1939 to 1945. Upon demobilization in 1945 he studied hotel management and catering before embarking on a 30-year career in this field in Canada, particularly in the north during this period.

In 1975 Don joined the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires here in Edmonton and has held a variety of field and headquarters positions ever since. From 1993 until 2008 he worked here at the Legislature, usually the night shift, arriving at 11 or 12 and working until the morning. Then he would drive to his home in Morinville, where he and his wife live. Don is now 87 and still works full shifts at the Edmonton Garrison and attributes his longevity to the fact that he has never retired but, rather, has kept active, continuing to serve his country and his fellow countrymen. He plans to work until he turns a minimum of 90 or when his wife, Toni, says: enough is enough.

Joining Mr. Murphy, a man who absolutely fascinates me, is his spouse, Toni Murphy – I'd ask her to rise – and Colonel John Slater, chief executive officer of the Commissionaires of northern Alberta, Northwest Territories, and Nunavut; and Adriana Cavaliere, the executive assistant to Colonel Slater. Please welcome our guests, in particular our hero. [Standing ovation]

And all those who think retirement is an option, please see Mr. Murphy.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 students who are attending Norquest College. Of course, that is located in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and every one of those students lives up to that moniker of fabulous. They are joined today by their group leaders, Mrs. Carol Spence and Ms Brenda Chwyl. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 45 students from Bow Valley College, which is located in my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo. They are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Susan Jolliffe and Ms Erin Holmes. I'm pleased to say that I've been in the Bow Valley College numerous times, where these individuals are taking social studies, and they're from all walks of life, all parts of the earth. I can tell you that it's an honour and a privilege to represent them and to go into their school. It's great to have them here. If we could have the traditional warm welcome of this House for our honoured guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this House 91 friends of mine from the beautiful city of Airdrie: three teachers, seven parents, and 81 grade 9 students from my old school, George McDougall high school. I'd like to introduce their teachers really quickly: Mr. Scott Sharun and Mrs. Devon Sawby, who I went to school with. Her mother is now the trustee of Rocky View, and she was the former vice-principal. I was in her office all the time. Surprise, surprise.

Constable David Henry is also with them and parent helpers Mrs. Shannon Mauro, Mrs. Stacey Henn, Mrs. Danelle Richards, Mrs. Anna-Jane Warren, Mrs. Michelle Pirzek, Mr. Darren Buell, and Mrs. Sherri Koenig. I'd ask all of them and all of the students to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four very special guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask them to stand as I introduce them. Mr. Paul Grod is national president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress. Mr. Grod has led several election observer missions to Ukraine over the past five years. He recently travelled to Ukraine with Prime Minister Harper and was a member of the Governor General's delegation to Ukraine. The second one is Taras Pidzamecky, national president of the Ukrainian National Federation. Mr. Pidzamecky is also the chief executive officer and general counsel for the Ukrainian Credit Union. The third person is Olya Sheweli, president of the Council of Ukrainian Credit Unions of Canada. And the fourth is Daria Luciwi, national vice-president and president of the Alberta branch of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress and chair of the Congress of Ukrainian Canadians, which is taking place, for the first time in 70 years, in Edmonton this weekend. I will be saying more about this in my member's statement later on. I would ask all my colleagues at the Legislature to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the president of the Edmonton Social Planning Council, Ken Stickland; the council's executive director, Susan Morrissey; and also John Kolkman, their director of research. Many of you may remember John from when he was the research director for the Alberta NDP caucus. On behalf of our caucus and the Legislative Assembly of Alberta I'd like to take this opportunity to extend to all of them and everyone at the social planning council my sincere congratulations on the council's 70th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton Social Planning Council is an independent nonprofit social research organization. The council is an integral aspect of progressive social research in Edmonton and has done a great deal of great work for many people in our city. This is truly a landmark occasion for the ESPC and one well deserving of the acknowledgement and praise it has been receiving. I wish the Edmonton Social Planning Council, the board, and staff all the best.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly John Buterman. John is here today as my guest and is representing the Trans Equality Society of Alberta. The Trans Equality Society of Alberta, also known as TESA, was formed in the wake of Alberta Health Services' decision to delist funding for gender reassignment surgery, or sex reassignment surgery, in 2009. TESA's mission is to be a witness to and a voice for matters concerning transidentified Albertans. My guest was waiting right outside the gallery on my way in here and was to be seated in the public gallery. I would now ask John to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Remembrance Day

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time stands still for no man. These words we know to be true. One exception surely must be Remembrance Day. On that day and for those who observe, a minute of silence seems like an eternity. The quiet of the moment and the dignity that it gives to great and good sacrifices only gives a greater measure of effect.

On Remembrance Day we celebrate the unwavering will and commitment to humanity so freely given by the men and women of this nation in times of war. This includes the gallant men and women currently serving in our Canadian armed forces and, of course, our cherished veterans, to whom we pay even greater homage at this time of year. The peace and prosperity that our province and our country enjoys today is possible because of their sacrifices. Remembering their sacrifices, tremendous bravery, and commitment to duty helps us to better understand and appreciate our place in the world and how we can continue to build a better future.

Across the province Alberta schools will be honouring Veterans' Week and Remembrance Day with assemblies, poetry competitions, art displays, and guest speakers. Students will learn about Canadians who sacrificed and served their country in unimaginable circumstances so that we would have the opportunity to live full, secure, and peaceful lives. They will hear the stories of lives lived and lost and will be reminded that duty often comes with the highest price.

This is one of the great ways that we can live up to protect the freedoms that they have worked so tirelessly to protect. Mr. Speaker, we can give the highest honour to all of our veterans by continuing to value the freedom that they gave us, but we can also continue their work to secure a better future for our province and country.

To all members of our military, to their families past, present, and future: we thank you for all that you have given in the name of your country and in the name of duty. Their valour forged our country's identity. Their lives bought our freedom. Their sacrifices humble us and make us proud. We will remember them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Coach Don Phelps

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to reflect a little bit on the word "coach." As a former hockey player the word conjures up a pile of pleasant memories. To be a coach is a synonym for mentor and friend. It signifies trust, sacrifice, education, fair play, and the pursuit of excellence.

My coach, my mentor, my friend is Don Phelps. I had the honour and the privilege of playing for Don in the 1989-90 hockey season for the Alberta Junior Hockey League champion Calgary Canucks. Don has spent 60 years in hockey as a player, as a parent, as an executive, and, most importantly to me, as a coach. Don is both an exceptional strategist and knows how to motivate young athletes to do their best. Undoubtedly, Don could have coached in the Western Hockey League or the National Hockey League, but his commitment to both his community and his family was too important to him. He stayed for the sake of young, often misguided athletes like me, who benefited so tremendously from his support and guidance.

Don has coached over 2,000 hockey games in the course of his career, winning more than half of them. He has coached over a thousand boys, was named Calgary sportsman of the year, has travelled over 500,000 miles on buses, and has the most wins of any junior A coach in Canada. As if that weren't enough, he's running in the 2011 Boston Marathon. Don is the kind of community leader that inspires everyone around him to do more, to be more, to reach their own potential, and to help others to do the same.

Today I'd like to offer Don my personal thanks for the lessons he taught me. I'd also like to thank all the coaches all over this wonderful province who spend countless hours with kids helping them grow into responsible men and women.

For those who don't know it, this is Don's last season coaching the Calgary Canucks in the Alberta Junior Hockey League. However, as the season is still in its early stages, you can catch Don in hockey rinks from Fort McMurray to Lloydminster, from Sherwood Park to Canmore, from Brooks to Bonnyville.

Thanks, Don, and thanks to all the coaches and mentors out there. You're all champs in my book.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Ukrainian Canadian Triennial Congress

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the 23rd Triennial Congress of Ukrainian Canadians, that will be held this coming weekend in Edmonton. This is only the second time this conference will be held outside of Winnipeg in the 70 years since it began.

The Ukrainian Canadian Congress was founded by fraternal organizations established by early settlers, including the Ukrainian Catholic Brotherhood and the Ukrainian Self-Reliance League. The congress is a national organization representing the Ukrainian-Canadian community. The UCC has evolved into a leadership position representing the Ukrainian community to people and the government in Canada.

Ukrainian organizations in Canada realized long ago the importance of the concept of multiculturalism. Perhaps one of the most outstanding contributions Ukrainian-Canadians have made to the wider culture of Canada is the concept of multiculturalism, which was promoted as early as 1964 by Senator Paul Yuzyk. Ukrainian-Canadians have developed their own culture in Canada showcasing world-class Ukrainian dancers, singers, and cultural groups, including performing and fine arts.

The Ukrainian community has traditionally regarded the retention of the native language as key to the preservation of its heritage and identity. For a number of years Ukrainian was kept out of the school curriculum, until the 1960s, when the Ukrainian language returned to the public schools in the prairie provinces and later in Ontario.

The conference is entitled Honouring the Past, Inspiring the Future and will feature dignitaries such as the Canadian ambassador to Ukraine, Daniel Caron, and the Ukrainian ambassador to Canada, Dr. Ihor Ostash. The congress will celebrate both the 70th anniversary of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress in addition to the 120th anniversary of Ukrainians in Canada. It will also serve as a forum to develop the vision and mandate for the Ukrainian-Canadian community in the near future. There will be three full days for delegates and participants to connect with other members of the Ukrainian-Canadian community. The Shevchenko medal, the highest form of recognition granted by the congress, will also be presented.

Many members of the House are Ukrainian, and this event is undoubtedly an important one as it strengthens the ties many Albertans have with their heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. members of this Assembly to join me in welcoming the Ukrainian Canadian Congress for the first time to Edmonton. Thank you. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Calgary-North Hill Fundraiser

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last June the Calgary-North Hill PC Association held a fundraiser at the Calgary Vipers baseball game. In conjunction, I decided it would be a great opportunity to raise funds for two charities, KidSport Calgary and the Art Smith amateur sports legacy endowment fund.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the generosity of community members and organizations, hon. members of this House, and the Calgary Vipers, all of whom either donated silent auction items, bid on them, or made cash donations, we raised $3,326. I'm sure this money will be appropriately and effectively used by these two charities to enhance amateur sport opportunities for all Calgarians.

I want to thank the Calgary Vipers' president, John Conrad, for his willingness to be involved in this event. Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Vipers provide families in southern Alberta with affordable and quality entertainment throughout the spring and summer months. I would encourage all members of this House and all Albertans to pick out a day next summer and head down to the ballpark to catch a game either with the Calgary Vipers or the Edmonton Capitals.

I would also be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I didn't take this opportunity to congratulate Vipers pitcher Brant Stickel, who hails from Veteran, Alberta. Brant is a great success story for the Alberta baseball community, having played four years for the University of Calgary Dinos baseball program. This past spring he was invited to try out for the Calgary Vipers, and Brant took full advantage of this opportunity and parlayed it into having his contract purchased just a couple of weeks ago by one of the most storied professional sports franchises, the Los Angeles Dodgers.

I want to recognize all that the Calgary Vipers and the University of Calgary Dinos baseball program do for young Albertans who are passionate about baseball and who aspire to pursue their passion at the interscholastic or professional level. Without their existence the story of Brant Stickel would be nearly impossible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. ministers of Tourism, Parks and Recreation and Culture and Community Spirit for their presence at the event. Although he was not there, I also would like to thank the Minister of Environment for such great weather that evening.

Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services Response Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's emergency room crisis is also an EMS crisis, and we're hearing from paramedics. A paramedic that takes a patient to the emergency room must stay with their patient until he finally gets admitted. That means that for every paramedic that's tied up in an overcrowded emergency room, there's one less EMS unit on the road to respond to life-and-death emergencies. To the health minister: given that the time paramedics in Edmonton are spending in emergency rooms has increased to an hour and a half in the last 12 weeks, how much longer are the people of Edmonton now waiting in their lodges or homes for an ambulance?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the issues related to EMS providers are symptomatic of larger issues that we've discussed in this House and that I discussed with doctors a week or so ago. However, I am happy to tell people that whereas the September average for people admitted into emergency waiting for an overnight bed was 63, last week it came down to 56, and today it's down to 49 over five hospitals in Calgary alone.

Dr. Swann: An hour and a half of EMS time waiting in emergency is not efficient use of our health care resources. Surely, you can do something about that. The problem is not limited to Edmonton; it's throughout the province. We're backed up because of a bed and nursing shortage, with growing red alerts, meaning that at certain times no ambulance is available to respond to a 911 call. How many red alerts in the last six months, Mr. Health Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the confirmed number, but I believe there was something like 10 hours' worth of red alerts since the beginning of this year. I'll have to verify that number because I probably got it from the same source the hon. member did.

But what's important to know here is that we have opened at least 70 new beds in acute-care facilities in Calgary and approximately 70 new beds in acute-care facilities in Edmonton just in the last few months, not including continuing care in the community.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the minister is so confident that he's making progress with the crisis, why are the EMS response times not reported to the public?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is a list that's available on the AHS website. It reports information related to this issue, and I would encourage the hon. member to please have a look at it.

Secondly, I'll be talking with the emergency room docs again tomorrow. We're having a little telephone chat, and I'll get some fresher information from them. I think the strategy is in place. There is a plan, and it is working.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cancer Services in Calgary

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health minister is frantically running from crisis to crisis, forgetting that he also needs to plan for the future. Yesterday the minister said that he's looking at Calgary's need for cancer care. Well, the minister has been looking for years. To the same minister: the need for this expansion has been clear for five years, so what more does the minister need to know to act?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I haven't been looking for years. I've only been in the position for nine months. It might be fair to say that I've been looking at it for months – that would be true – but certainly not years, so please let's not exaggerate with a lot of falsehood here.

The important thing is that there is a plan that is being developed right now. Alberta Health Services is working with Alberta Health and Wellness on a good, provincial-wide strategy to ensure timely care and faster access to cancer care. That discussion and those meetings are going on right now, Mr. Speaker, and it will culminate with a very good plan.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services gave the minister their capital submission seven months ago. What is the minister's excuse for not yet having an Edmonton and Calgary capital plan finalized?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday and I'll indicate again today that we're working on the province-wide cancer strategy, and as part of that province-wide cancer strategy it's important to not only announce that new facilities will be built but to also ensure that we have the financial resources to staff them, to recruit for them, to pay for the operating. That's a fundamental part of our government's accountability.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it looks like it's going to be 2011 before we have the 2010 capital plan, or will the minister commit to providing that plan while the House is sitting?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's put this in perspective. We have over 1,000 health facility capital infrastructure projects on the books right now, totalling over $5 billion, so please don't tell me that we're not doing anything because we are.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Foreign Investments in Alberta

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the finance minister. Yesterday the federal government made an unexpected decision. It did not approve the takeover bid for Saskatchewan's Potash Corporation. As the finance minister said yesterday, Alberta's Premier came out publicly and vocally in support of Saskatchewan's Premier in opposing the takeover. On the other hand, the minister of international relations talked about Alberta's long-standing commitment to a barrier-free trading environment. This administration is sending mixed messages. To the minister: who are Alberta businesses and foreign investors supposed to be listening to? The Premier, the minister of finance, or the minister of international relations?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd repeat again today that I congratulate our leader, the Premier, for standing up for provincial rights, standing up for resource ownership by the people of every province, including Quebec. Quebec defended Saskatchewan as well. So let's hear it for Alberta standing side by side with Saskatchewan.

Dr. Swann: The Premier has taken the position that the resources of Saskatchewan have to be protected. Could the minister explain where this government stands on protecting Alberta's resources? Where does this government draw the line between being open for business and giving away the store?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition says that they're mixed messages. The reason there are several different tiers of the message, sir, is that the Alberta petroleum and gas economy is completely different than the Saskatchewan resource. There's one source of potash there, dominated by one company. In Alberta you have an open oil and gas economy with multiple ownership by Canadian-based firms with U.S. investment. Direct foreign investment is an important part of the success of this province's economy.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, foreign governments are investing in Alberta: South Korea, United Arab Emirates, China. Foreign governments are not businesses. They are not subject to disclosure. They sometimes hoard resources, as in the case of China and the rare earth minerals. China also ranks quite highly on the corruption perception index. Could the minister tell the Assembly in what circumstances Alberta would oppose investment by foreign governments?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, he passed it off. Look at that. You didn't want to take that one, did you?

Mr. Horner: Well, contrary to what the chirping is over there, Mr. Speaker, there was no pass-off of the question.

In fact, what the hon. member is talking about is what the Premier's position is on this. On behalf of the Premier I'd like to reiterate that we stood up for our fellow partners in the New West Partnership. We stood up for fellow partners across this province about the ownership of these resources. In Alberta we have a very diversified resource; we have a very diversified investment in that resource. Some of them are Crown corporations invested in our province. I'm sure the hon. member would probably like to have the debate about whether or not we should be investing in them as well. Perhaps we'll have that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health has become the Minister of No Answers. His statements have gone from meaningless to downright confusing. Today he tells the Calgary Herald that he doesn't see a lot of new things in our Wildrose health plan. To the minister of health: given that it's quite obvious your government doesn't have an independent health ombudsman like the Wildrose, medical savings accounts and publicly disclosed wait times like the Wildrose, a kinship palliative care program and decentralized service like the Wildrose, how can you say, Mr. Minister, that there is nothing new?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is: because there isn't anything new, other than some musings about privatization. They want public funding to follow patients. We already are doing activity-based funding models in continuing care. At least, they're being looked at. They talked about hiring more front-line staff. I can tell you that our physician head count grew by 23.1 per cent just within the last few years. I can tell you that we're hiring 1,100 new nurses, and I could go on with that, so that's not new. They call it a health ombudsman; our act calls it a health advocate. That's nothing new.

Mr. Boutilier: Once a Liberal, Gene, always a Liberal. He gives us no answer.

To the minister: when you say that there is nothing new in our Wildrose health plan, is it because your government has seen and ignored these proposals in the Mazankowski report, the Graydon report, the Kirby report, all of which are collecting dust on this minister's desk?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

2:00

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I could hardly understand a word being said because the member himself was trying to shut down his own colleagues, and that's unfortunate. I'm very proud to be a member of the PC caucus. I've run three times as a PC member, and I have the full support of my constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the nonanswer, I'll ask the Minister of Infrastructure, who may actually give a straight answer. In your press release, which I have here and which I'll table, on June 15 you confirmed a hundred-bed long-term care facility for my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and I thank you, sir. Yesterday the minister of health in this House contradicted you, bragging about only a 48-bed. To the minister: can you clarify this confusion? Has the minister of health cut the number of beds in half, or is he still just simply confused?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, hon. member. I do want to say to you that it is a hundred spaces in Fort McMurray. Mr. Speaker, this government has invested $13.8 million in Fort McMurray, ensuring that we do have a hundred beds, which include long-term care beds and affordable supportive beds. The process now is in the RFP. We have it down to three consultants, and we hope that that consultant will be chosen by the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It was very interesting to hear the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo criticize the minister of health for being a floor crosser.

Telus Consumer Health Platform

Mr. Mason: Telus has announced plans to market a new high-tech electronic medical records system. Presumably, Alberta Health will be an important target market. Can the minister of health tell us whether or not he has had any discussion with Telus about this new electronic medical records system or any other product or service marketed by Telus to Alberta Health or to Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister feel that his acceptance of Telus's generous gift to him, specifically a weekend at a golf resort, should disqualify him from considering Telus for future contracts with his department?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, I flew in on a Sunday night. I spent a few hours there on Monday morning. I flew straight back. I spoke about possibly getting somebody to come out here and help talk about physical activity because the night before I had spoken with Gary Player and he, unfortunately, wasn't available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In order to avoid the perception of a conflict of interest on future contracts between his department and Telus, will the minister agree to pay Telus back the entire cost of this generous gift, and if not, why not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's get this into perspective here. There was a hotel room, valued at something like 200 bucks or 2 and a quarter or something, and nine holes of golf, which was valued at about 140 bucks or 150 bucks. It's within that $400 range or very close to it. I just felt that it was important to report it in the openness and transparency mode.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We continue to hear about an overburdened health care system, and now we hear that Alberta has the third-highest high school dropout rate in the country. It's well documented that those individuals unfortunate enough to be living in poverty are more likely to visit our hospitals and more likely to drop out of high school. Last month when the Standing Committee on the Economy met, I proposed that along with increasing the minimum wage, the province should recognize the need for a poverty reduction strategy, which was unanimously agreed to by the committee members. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: has the minister had a chance to review those recommendations yet?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, yes, I have had a chance to look at the documents. I will be reporting in due course. I appreciate the member raising this particular issue; it is an important issue. I will be reporting not only to the member but to the House in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that individuals who break the poverty cycle are less likely to get sick, to drop out of school, to rely on government services such as employment insurance and given that these same individuals are more likely to pursue a postsecondary education, find long-term employment, and invest their time in community involvement, not to mention contribute taxes whereas before they were a destination for tax dollars, is the minister aware that financially it is actually less expensive to make an initial investment to bring an individual out of poverty than it is to leave them in poverty?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very similar question to those before to my colleague in Health. The fact of the matter is that this province has a poverty reduction strategy. We simply don't call it that. In a nutshell our poverty reduction strategy is employment. We have many programs that lead Albertans towards employment. Frankly, that member would be very hard-pressed to find Albertans who want to remain on government programs and who don't want to be employed. Do we have a strategy? Yes, we do. We have 59 offices that provide support to Albertans. That all leads towards employment. If this member insinuates that we should be providing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, employment is a key part of any good poverty reduction strategy, but it is just one key factor out of perhaps 10 or 12. Will the minister commit to engaging in broad-based public consultations involving all sectors of Alberta's society – business, the not-for-profit sector, the faith community, and on and on, especially people experiencing poverty – to create a poverty reduction strategy, much the same as was done in creating the various 10-year plans to end homelessness in and around this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again, the member is behind the eight ball. I'm the one who reviewed the low-income benefits and literally met with thousands of recipients of low-income benefits. Very recently I met with municipal leaders who are engaging in addressing low-income issues in their municipalities. The fact of the matter is that I will be reviewing the report of the legislative committee. I will be making an announcement on minimum wage. If the member is only interested in my announcing a name of a strategy that already exists, I find that pointless. We have strategies in place under a different name.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Wait Times for Cancer Treatment

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week in question period some opposition members alleged that $27 million in federal funding tied to cancer wait times is at risk of being lost. This accusation alarmed me, and quite frankly it scared some of my constituents because we've all been touched by cancer, and we know how important every single dollar is in going to fight cancer. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why are we not providing Ottawa with the information they require regarding wait times for cancer treatment?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely false to think that we're not. I know that opposition members tried to make an issue out of this. They were absolutely, completely wrong. There has been no lapse and no failure on the part of the Alberta government or on the part of Alberta Health and Wellness or Health Services, for that matter, regarding any required reporting of cancer wait times. That's all there. The official monitor of wait times is CIHI, the Canadian Institute for Health Information, and we have supplied them with the data required.

Mr. Griffiths: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that the $27 million provided in federal funding is not at risk, then, that we're meeting any contractual agreement.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you with great assurance that the $27 million referred to is not at any risk. It was actually a part of a larger sum of money, $62 million, that was received as part of an agreement we have with the federal government. We are in full compliance with the cancer piece. There is absolutely no risk of us losing that $27 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then I'm wondering if the minister can explain what our wait times look like right now. What measures is the department undertaking to improve cancer wait times?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there will be a province-wide strategy coming forward, which I referred to earlier. But let's not lose sight of what has already happened here. We have already opened the radiation therapy corridor in Lethbridge. We broke ground on the one that's coming forward in Red Deer, and we have another commitment as part of the 500-plus million dollar project up in Grande Prairie, where that new hospital will have a radiation therapy corridor there as well. So there is a lot that's going on to help address the situation.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has jeopardized the section 10 Charter rights of Albertans through cuts to legal aid funding. The president of Alberta's Criminal Trial Lawyers Association believes that changes to legal aid have created, and I quote, two-tiered justice where the disadvantaged cannot protect their rights when others can; this is a disgrace. End of quote. Don't you agree that this situation is disgraceful?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that the question does sound a little familiar. I think perhaps we had this discussion last week in the House. I want to make it perfectly clear that the provincial government has not cut legal aid funding. We've maintained our commitment to legal aid. We ensure that everyone who needs to have legal representation in court has that. Courts are fully aware of what our obligation is. Courts are certainly able to direct us to do something differently. They have not done that. We are completely confident that we're providing the support that we need to provide in this province.

2:10

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not what I'm hearing. In this 2009 review Legal Aid Alberta reported that the judiciary, the Crown, community service agencies, and the private bar all felt that further funding reductions to legal aid result in higher costs to the justice system. Are all these people wrong?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, that may very well be the case, but as I have said in this House six or seven times in the past two weeks, we have not reduced funding to legal aid.

Mr. Hehr: To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Albertans receiving aid already live beneath the poverty line, and now they have to pay extra for courtroom assistance. Does this not shock the conscience of the minister?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that we do have a legal aid program that many of my aged clients can access. I'm not aware of a situation that when an aged client is in need of supports, those supports are not available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electricity Transmission Line Compensation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Land values vary greatly from one end of this province to the other, and many landowners don't feel that one price fits all situations regarding compensation for electricity transmission installations on their property. To the Minister of Energy: is there going to be recognition of the varying market values for land taken into account when determining compensation for these proposed transmission lines?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's very important to point out to the House that the government of Alberta is not involved in the negotiations relative to the siting of lines. It's a negotiation between the transmission line proponents and the landowner. I've had the opportunity in the last couple of weeks to have discussions on the two north-south projects with both ATCO and AltaLink, and it's my understanding that those negotiations are going very well.
