You know, this year again as I questioned, the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit and I got a little snippy with each other because I said, "Where's this money going to come from that you're going to find somewhere to finance this thing that you don't have enough money for?" He said, "I'm not going to talk about that." "Excuse me? It's a budget debate. You're supposed to be able to defend to me what you're spending the money on." "Well, I'm not going to talk about that." "Really? Where are you going to get the money from? What programs are you going to take it from?" "Oh, uh, we'll see." That's what the budget is for. It's a plan of how you're going to do it, and if you can't tell me how you're going to do that as we go through the budget debates, that's telling me the government doesn't know, and that is going to put us in much deeper problems down the road.

The third observation I want to make is the amount of information that's actually contained in the supplementary supply estimates booklet that we get. Usually the requests that are coming forward under supplementary supply tend to break into a couple of different categories. We're not talking, you know, 15 different ways that that money is going to be spent. Even when you look at the health budget, which is one of the larger ones, as the President of the Treasury Board observed, it essentially breaks into four categories. I'm quoting here from page 24: "$343,000,000 to fund Alberta Health Services' accumulated deficit as of March 31, 2009." It gives you four lines of description there, so it's breaking into not very many categories. We're not getting a heck of a lot of information here.

Let me use one of my critic portfolios as an example as to how little information is given here and how easy it is to give more information. On page 16, under the supplementary supply estimates requested for Culture and Community Spirit, one line: "This supplementary amount of $2,888,000 is requested to provide for site reclamation costs incurred at various historic sites related to environmental liabilities that were expensed in prior years." When I questioned – and the President of the Treasury Board was kind enough to stand and give an answer – that actually covers three locations. What was the problem with listing the three locations in this booklet? It's another line of ink. Was it going to break you to just be able to say this much for this facility, this much for this facility, and this much for this facility? I'm not quite sure what all the secrecy is about, the need to sort of, you know, open the book for a quick little glimpse and then shut it again. If you want us to co-operate with this stuff, what is the problem in actually giving us the information on what this is about?

Even with the Health and Wellness budget: okay, it's the costs of responding to an H1N1 pandemic. What exactly was that? Could we get a better description of how that breaks down? Again, you've got a full page. You could fill up the whole page without it costing you more money for the booklet. It's blank. You could fill it with information; it wouldn't kill you. It contributes to the idea that this government is fixated on secrecy and keeping information to itself. I'm just trying to help you out, just trying to make you more popular than you already are and win over some more friends to your side. But, honestly, you could give us some more information there.

Housing and Urban Affairs, two lines. Look at all the page you could have filled up, telling me what you were up to with that money. That's just a wee little suggestion for you to follow up on. I think it would be helpful.

As we encourage people to become more interested in what we're doing in this Assembly, they do follow along online. They do watch the podcasts. They watch the live audio and video streaming. Some of them are getting very well educated in following us. They're interested in that kind of thing, too. So I think that just one person, one little opposition MLA standing up and saying, "You could give us more information" is going to give way to a lot more people saying: "Hey, what is this? We want to be able to see what this is about in a more reasonable way." Again, I don't want a volume. I don't need tens of pages on this. But surely you can give me more than a sentence, especially when you know what it is. It looks to me like you don't know what you were doing. You needed money to cover some kind of reclamation area in culture, but you didn't know quite what it was. So that's that little bit.

The other issues that I wanted to raise are some things that aren't in here and probably shouldn't be in here but should probably be considered in the long run.

I'm sorry. There was one more thing that came under the helpful hints section. That is the number of times that I'm seeing the government slyly present federal money as part of a provincial budget. To be honest, you're fessing up a bit more in this supplementary supply document than you have in the budget. You actually fess up someplace that this is including transfer payments from the feds. You know where it was? Employment and Immigration, I'll bet you. No, it wasn't. I've read through it recently. Sorry.

Mr. Snelgrove: Advanced ed.

Ms Blakeman: You think it's advanced ed? Yes. That's exactly right. They do fess up on page 12 for Advanced Education and Technology, right in the little documentation – good on them, little brownie points, yay, check mark – that "$97,681,000 is offset by a transfer from the federal government under the Knowledge Infrastructure Program." Good on you. Thanks for that. But that's not always the case.

It's very interesting doing the supplementary supply budget at the same time as you're doing the following year's estimates, budgets. You might want to think about that the next time you schedule these things together because I get a lot of comparison opportunities.

Increasingly, as I say, is the number of times that the government is not admitting that something has happened which is, in fact, federal government transfers. Again, I'll go to the one that I know well, which is Culture and Community Spirit. The way the government press release read, that department officially admitted that it was cut by 1.8 per cent, yet when you looked at it, it was cut by closer to 20 per cent in most of those areas, $35 million, but it was offset by $30 million of capital spending. You think: oh, well, that's okay; all right. When you look at that – and I actually went through, and I dug out the federal government press releases, and there are all the dates – that $30 million is federal money. It's not provincial money, but it's showing up in the budget for this department as though it is operating expenditure money.

I know why it's there. Because the provincial government doesn't actually own those facilities, they cannot claim any money they put into them as a capital asset or a capital expense. It gets expensed out in the year that it's in. I understand that. But to actually try to pretend that this is money that the government was putting into this: no. That requires a closer acquaintance with the truth.

Sorry. That was the final bit of observation I wanted to make about the process and the reporting structure that we're dealing with.

Now, a couple of issues that I wanted to raise as part of what I'm seeing here. I'm sorry. Would pensions come up under Employment and Immigration or under Treasury Board?

Mr. Snelgrove: Finance.

Ms Blakeman: Finance. Oh boy. I was way off. Okay.

I think that one of the things we need to look at and that I am quite concerned about is protection of Albertans' investments in private-sector pension plans. Who of us ever imagined that Nortel would go down? Never. Nobody would have thought that that one was going to happen, yet it did. The pensions that Albertans have through that company are imperilled or have been reduced or lost.

I think it is incumbent upon us to look to legislation that would better protect Albertans' money that is part of a corporate or a private-sector pension plan. In some cases, like with GM, those pension plans are invested with the unions. They're safer there, frankly. But for those that are being held by private-sector corporations, I think we have a good argument that we need to step up and protect Albertans. If it doesn't, it's going to end up in a supplementary supply document somewhere down the road because we're now having to add money to a number of assistance programs, like we're seeing in the Employment and Immigration budget, to help out Albertans.

Staying with the Employment and Immigration budget, I am frustrated with what I'm seeing here. It is important, where we have programs that are structured to assist Albertans, that we do it, that we make use of those programs, that we spend that money as appropriate. My frustration is that we are essentially in year 2 of the recession. It started in year 1. For us to have to be looking at a supplementary supply budget for training programs and higher caseloads in health benefits and a higher caseload in income support: I would have expected the government to be more on top of that.

This recession didn't start, you know, this year. It started last year. Why were we not able to better anticipate the number of people? I mean, computer modelling makes everything possible now. They can computer model how to put somebody on Mars, but we can't computer model how many Albertans are going to require the various assistance programs that exist so that we're able to budget at the beginning of a fiscal year what the uptake will be on the cases? I would have expected better.

I am surprised to see the number of programs. We've got here $4.6 million for employment program planning and delivery. We've got $28 million for employment and training programs for skill development and to maintain employment, $25.9 million for health benefits due to higher caseloads and costs per case, and $129.7 million for income supports due to higher caseloads and costs per case. That's a whack of money and a lot of people, clearly. I'm surprised that the projections were not closer to the mark. Maybe somebody is able to tell me why that happened and why we're not able to get a little closer to the mark.

The other issue – sorry. I tend to keep all these things in a file. I'll deal with that another time.

Okay. That's a great opportunity. Thank you very much for allowing me to put those observations on the record. Maybe I'll be able to hear back from somebody, which would be helpful. I appreciate the opportunity to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate how difficult it is preparing a budget, especially during a recessionary time period. I understand the need for having a supplementary supply budget. I do believe that certain forecasting is available, and as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned, there are programs that could give us a degree of insight or forecast.

One of the things that is missing from the supplementary budget is the $23 million, the 1 per cent difference, in the arbitrator's agreement for teachers. Now, I understand that the budgets have to be prepared well in advance, but my understanding is that the supplemental supply budget's purpose is to add on those missing factors so that the province can run smoothly. Right off the top $23 million is missing from Education as well as any kind of increased funding to recognize special needs, school infrastructure, and so on. It's the second-largest investment this province has after health, but there's nothing additional to it, so it's basically more cuts.

Under Advanced Education and Technology while there was increased funding for student loans, there was no increased funding for grants, for bursaries, or for operational funding. As a result, the universities, most likely, at least the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, are going to be asking the government, the minister of advanced education, to allow them to increase professional faculty tuitions up to 60 per cent, which will have a dramatic door-closing effect on those faculties.

Under Culture and Community Spirit during a time of recession is a time more than any other for both our mental and physical well-being that we need the arts supported. We need to enjoy the arts. Some might call it a distraction. Others might call it an inventive celebratory spirit.

Under Employment and Immigration the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned what's happened with failing companies such as Nortel. I attended a meeting earlier in the month at the Varsity Community Association where a number of Nortel employees, many of whom had their LTD cancelled and have no idea what small percentage of their pension they'll get back, were extremely concerned. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, these people will find themselves on the dole in some form in Alberta because their company pension plans fell apart. The federal government hasn't enacted any legislation to cover these individuals; therefore, it's going to fall on the province to pick up their financial pieces, and there are quite a few of those pieces to be picked up.

In a time of recession, when we need to get people working – and a number of people have gone back or tried to get into postsecondary institutions to get upgrading – the government has cancelled funding for the Alberta Works programs. I think it was mentioned that 78,000 people were unemployed. Trying to get them upgraded and re-employed should be a focus. Unfortunately, it's not.

Under Health and Wellness I'm concerned about the amount of money that's going into private, for-profit clinic contracting versus operations performed within public facilities. Part of that problem in Calgary is that we lost half of our public facilities.

This falls under Advanced Education as well as Health and Wellness and, I guess, under Employment as well. This government did the right thing in creating a number of postsecondary spaces at the universities and at the colleges, Grant MacEwan and Mount Royal now having joined the universities, for registered nurse training. We've put out those significant subsidies to encourage nurses to train in this province, yet there had been a freeze on hiring. Now the new minister is speculating about reopening 300 beds. We have the rooms, we have the space, but we don't have the nurses to make those beds operational. That money isn't specifically tagged in this budget, so I don't know where it's going to come from.

Under Housing and Urban Affairs my concern is the reduction in rental subsidies and the fact that there's nothing left in the homeless and eviction prevention fund. We're far from being through the recession. The minimum wage has been frozen, and I don't see a whole lot of help for individuals who are at the poverty end of the scale.

When it comes to Sustainable Resource Development, I was pleased to see that there was supplemental investment, for example, in fighting pine beetles, which was positive, but the elimination of the junior warden program, a program that gave students an opportunity to have a wilderness experience, to consider a potential education towards forestry, towards conservation, towards sustainable resource development careers – that's been cut short. These young people would have been the eyes and the ears in the parks at a very low investment cost.

Last night, of course, we had the Tourism, Parks and Recreation budget. That budget took a $30 million hit. There's very little increase in the supplementary supply budget. What was discussed was that rather than provincial parks being expanded, there will actually be a reduction in park operations. There will be a reduction in seasonal personnel. That's a concern for me. Also, while more money is being spent promoting tourism, the actual product is being reduced because the quality of the experience is being reduced through lack of infrastructure maintenance, lack of trail maintenance, and so on. Last week we had a good discussion about the need to keep our parks vibrant.

I'm also concerned when it comes to Transportation. When I had the former responsibility of being the opposition critic for Infrastructure and Transportation, I frequently brought up the concern I had about highway 63. It's taking forever to get that key economic route twinned. In the meantime we continue to have significant loss of life on that particular highway. It also concerns me that there seems to be no plan for our east-west corridor, the twinning of highway 3. While supplementary alone can't possibly solve the problem, almost half of our highways in this province are in fair to poor condition, and that's obviously a concern.

This supplementary supply budget is part of the carry-over until April, at which time more financial announcements will probably be made. Maybe some of the concerns that I've indicated such as where we go with advanced education tuition increases or subsidized support from the government will be revealed. In the meantime there are an awful lot of Albertans living on the edge, wondering to what extent they can count on this government for support as they seek employment, as they seek further education and, in some cases, struggle just to keep a roof over their heads.

The backdrop for this play is a $17 billion sustainability fund, and I hope that in future supplementary budgets and budgets to follow we'll see that $17 billion invested in a sustainable, predictable, supportive way for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to start off with the usual mantra that I think you probably hear from this side, and I'm quite sure that other members in the House have probably said this to themselves as well: how on earth can a budget be balanced if you always have to come back to the trough for extra money? Certainly, I know that if families ran their budgets like that, the personal debt in Canada would be a great deal higher than what it already is, and it already is at an alarming rate.

I certainly can understand the need for supplemental funds for emergencies. But my question is that in my budget I have money put aside for, quote, emergencies. I don't understand why we don't have an emergency budget or some dollars put aside, I would suspect, in addition to the sustainability fund and in addition to the heritage trust fund because I think we can guarantee that in a province this busy, in a province that has not only the labour side in terms of high-risk labour costs – we never know what's going to go on, and usually there is some kind of an emergency. We have no idea what it may be, but to put money aside to be able to meet it when it does come I think would be wise planning.

In Housing and Urban Affairs there was $3,488,000 in unspent funds – $3,488,000 in unspent funds. Now, which programs did not spend their total budget? I find that amazing. I believe the same thing happened in the department for the PDD funds. I think there was $10 million that wasn't spent. I can understand, perhaps, taking that money back. But who suffered as a result of not spending these dollars? They were budgeted to be spent in a particular way, and the question I think is quite clear: why weren't they spent? If that money was clawed back and put back into the budget, then it certainly should look better for the next year, and they wouldn't have to necessarily require all of these supplementary accounts that they've been asking for, all of these extra dollars.

Under Municipal Affairs they were asking for more supplemental funds. Again unspent funds and not necessarily explained where that money went when they found out that it wasn't spent. Some of that money was for H1N1. Absolutely. Totally necessary. But why didn't we have emergency fund money put aside?

One of the questions that I would ask under Municipal Affairs – there was a report that came out. I think it was called the heat intensity residential fire report, and it was as of 2007. There were some recommendations in there, some of which I think should be under further discussion. I also believe that developers should be at the table when this discussion takes place because most of it has to do with the construction side.

In fact, some of the statistics were that many of these fires, a goodly portion of these fires, were based on carelessness: smoking in your homes, barbecues on your back porches, or arson on construction sites. I think that is what I've heard from the other side many times: education, education, education. I'm not altogether sure that those kinds of preventive things actually should be legislated, but it would appear that the recommendations coming out of that particular report are.

As I've mentioned, I think one of the most important things is that the developers be at the table because they are the ones who are going to incur the extra cost as a result of what I think upon reading that report was just a little bit, perhaps, over the top in terms of regulations. I know this government often speaks about not having a lot of regulations, having the freedom to go forward, having the entrepreneurial spirit that they always speak about, and now we're going to have a competitiveness bill to talk about. Well, I don't think that when you have all of these regulations made by people who aren't in the industry that is actually going to suffer the consequences of them, these recommendations shouldn't be – in my mind, go back to the table and have the developers there with them. One of the recommendations was to have the municipalities and the developers involved, but that was a recommendation going ahead. I would like to see that particular discussion happen before the recommendations go forward for any kind of legislation to be made around them.

Mr. Chair, I believe that my colleague from Calgary-Varsity spoke very well to Education.

Again, nonbudgetary disbursements. I know that you talk about the sustainability fund a lot, and I know it's always nice to have that little cushion behind you, but I think that when you look at family budgets, there is not only the cushion for saving; there's also the cushion for maintenance of the homes, if they happen to have a home, and there's always that little bit extra put aside for emergencies. This is what I would like to see this government do because we always will have something that is over and above what we could possibly imagine when we're putting that budget together.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join in debate on Bill 5. This is a bill where the government is seeking from this Legislature permission to spend roughly another billion dollars. I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood made the point, when he was talking about this issue a couple of days ago, that it seems that we have a real problem with our budgeting process in that it really doesn't seem to be a real thing anymore. We have a budget presented to us, and we have a bunch of sort of pretend cuts made in that budget or pretend savings or whatever they are, and then we herald to all corners of the province our ability to either balance the budget or come closer to balancing the budget than we'd expected, whatever the case may be. Then we come back here eight months later, and we ask for more money because, in fact, we never really meant it. We never really meant that we were only going to spend that much money.

Now, of course, as you know, I'm not a big advocate of cuts. That's not what I'm here for, but I do think that we need to be able to have an honest conversation with Albertans about what it is that we're spending and what it is that we're going to have to spend. It seems to me that we have gotten into the habit of strategically underestimating certain expenditures throughout the budget in order to try and paint a better picture at a time when the government feels its under a great deal of political pressure to bring in a more balanced budget. It seems to me that we've done this in a number of different areas.

Of course, just to state at the outset, there are some areas that are less predictable, and that's what we should be here for. We should be spending this time coming back to talk about those expenditures which arose which were simply not predictable. The H1N1 is a perfect example of that kind of thing. That had a number of additional costs attached to it, and no one could have necessarily predicted that. That's what supplemental estimates should be about.

We shouldn't be coming here to talk about things that anybody could have seen coming 12 or 13 months ago. Of course, the perfect example of that is the Employment and Immigration budget. Last year the government suggested that it was going to be able to maintain the level of funding that it had had previously in place for income support, and everybody knew that the unemployment rate was increasing dramatically. Everyone knew that we were going into a recession. Everyone knew that there were going to be significant changes. So, no big surprise, here we are, you know, 10 months later from when the budget was passed asking for an additional $130 million for income supports, or $150 million when you include the health benefits. We all knew that that was going to happen.

Of course, now we're going into this current budget, and we're pretending that that number is going to actually come down. We have no reason to believe that because what we've seen is that caseloads are going up very, very dramatically. There's no reason to believe that they will stop going up, and there's certainly no reason to believe that they're going to come down. Yet the government is very intentionally underbudgeting in that area. So it's very frustrating for us to be here having to deal with these because these are not unpredictable expenditures.

Now, another thing that I wanted to sort of put on the record is: why do we have this unpredictable form of budgeting? Because the government wants to be able to say: "Oh, look at us. Look at us. We've come relatively close to balancing the budget." My position on this is that, you know, if you want to do that, instead of making up fantasy budgets where we have fantasy line items and fantasy cost-reduction plans, why don't we look at the revenue side of the formula? Why don't we acknowledge the fact that by going to the flat tax eight or nine years ago, we are effectively shortchanging this budget this year by roughly $5 billion? Why don't we look at that?

There are ways to bring this budget into balance. There were ways for this government last year to make this budget balanced, but they refused to look at them. We leave billions and billions of dollars on the table in this province primarily for high-income Albertans. It is a myth that low- and middle-income Albertans pay the least amount of tax in the country, a complete myth, but it is true that high-income Albertans pay the least amount of tax.

At a time when we're all collectively coming together and acknowledging that we're in a recession and we all need to chip in and pull up our socks and help out and roll up our sleeves and all those great things, it would seem to me that maybe what we might start doing is saying to those higher income Albertans that it might be more helpful for them to start paying just a portion of that $5 billion that we've been leaving on the table year after year after year. I would suggest that that's a much better way to balance the budget rather than underestimating chronically, repeatedly, predictably, systemically the expenditures that we need to make.

Now, the other key area in these supplemental expenditures that the government is seeking, of course, relates to health. The government has done quite a grand job of patting itself on the back over the course of the last two or three weeks because they've increased spending in health both going forward as well as in the current year in relation to both the Alberta Health Services deficit for the year '09-10 and also for their so-called surge funding.

I think a number of people, of course, raised the concern that I will mirror, that I'm very concerned about this money being thrown out the window at private deliverers of health care because I believe without qualification that that is the more expensive route to take to addressing that problem and, again, not wise money management.

There's another piece about the money management discussion that I think needs to be addressed. We're throwing money at the health care system, not that much ultimately because if you factor in inflation, population increase, the predictable increases of an aging population, in fact we are probably even with the five-year plan, underfunding health care, but at least we're not grabbing a whole bunch of money and pulling it out. Unfortunately, what we are doing is that we're grabbing a whole bunch of money and pulling it out of other areas: family and children services, income supports for people with low income, training for people with low incomes who are on income support, housing. We're cutting back on our housing expenditures. We're cutting back in all these areas.

If anyone spends even a little bit of time talking about health care, you know full well that the research is pretty unequivocal, that what you need to do is look at that issue more globally, and you need to look at the whole social determinants of health. You need to understand that until you ensure every Albertan has a roof over their head and enough money to put food on the table for themselves and for their children, you are going to have more expense in the health care system. You're going to have expense in the health care system that's going to come back year over year over year over year as people who are unable to access secure housing and unable to access any kind of consistent nutritional support will repeatedly end up going to the health care system, where ultimately the care for them costs the taxpayer much, much more than it would have otherwise.

Again, we're being asked to approve additional money for the health care system, yet unfortunately we're doing this in the context of a budget that goes forward where we're going to cut from those other areas which would ensure on a preventative basis that we're having fewer people enter into the health care system. It's that kind of silo-based budgeting and that failure to look at the bigger picture and that failure to understand the importance of prevention that is resulting, ultimately, in the need for us to spend more money in this area, more than we need to. That's a real concern for us with respect to that issue.

Finally, of course, we've mentioned before that this request for extra money also deals with the increase in students seeking student loan assistance in order to frantically try and access our postsecondary education. Again, what this really is is an opportunity for the government to shift debt load onto individual Alberta citizens. As I've said many other times in the House, we are looking at moving Alberta back to a place where we become the most expensive place in the country for our citizens to access postsecondary education, and our answer to that problem is to simply invite those students to take on more debt. Again, this is not a big picture analysis. This is not a long-term analysis. This is not any kind of planning that is anything other than reactive to the most recent poll and the six-month planning cycle.

I have to say that I understand that it is frustrating sometimes for governments who have to get re-elected to make hard decisions in advance of challenges that won't be resolved for two or three years down the road. But, good Lord, you know, a government like this, that's been in power for this long: instead of the way in which we see arrogance demonstrated in other ways, we'd think that they would be able to actually plan outside of a polling cycle or an election cycle and actually have some good institutional sort of infrastructures in place. Instead, we're right back in a situation where this government is managing our budget as though they're six months away from an election and they're on the verge of losing, which they may be this time. But it's very frustrating to see the lack of foresight which this bill demonstrates to the rest of us in the Assembly.

With those comments, I will complete my commentary on this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I very much appreciate the committee format and the opportunity to speak more than once. Under the what's missing category I want to bring up Children and Youth Services. Children and Youth Services received a $27 million cut in their operational programming under the protection for children in care and custody area, and that's a major concern of mine. We're seeing jobs frozen, we're seeing caseloads increasing, and there was nothing in supplementary supply to ease that circumstance.

This past year we saw three children being charged for murder. We saw three children being killed while in custody. Unless there is oversight and support, more children are going to either go astray or be harmed within the custody of the province. The numbers of children that are being taken into custody in this province considerably outweigh those of other provinces, so if we're going to take them into care, then the least we can do is provide care for them.

It concerns me that the number of hours of in-home support are part of that $27 million cut, that trying to keep kids within their homes rather than putting them into foster care or fast-tracking foster care to adopt is not being supported within the budget. The business, as the hon. Member from Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, of being proactive in your investments is extremely important. Whether it's children or disabled individuals in PDD, the support we provide up front saves considerable support in terms of hospitalization, in terms of institutionalization. Most families, with a degree of support, can manage their loved ones, but they need that extra support.

Going back to Culture and Community Spirit, I had the privilege of attending with my wife Theatre Calgary's production of Beyond Eden, which is part of the Cultural Olympiad. The funding for that type of production, which was absolutely incredible, is extremely important. Also, the funding, for example, for M. Grand-Maître, who is the artistic director for the ballet, whose talent we've seen with the opening of the Olympic Games: those kinds of projects need ongoing funding. This was a special Alberta showcase not only for athletic talent, but Grand-Maître, witnessed by millions around the world, indicated to the world the kinds of artistic talent that this province possesses. We need to be promoting that.

This supplementary supply budget, after a fashion, is a Band-Aid. There's no doubt about it. Greater planning and the potential for recognizing liabilities and the need for increased care as the population ages and experiences greater need has to be built into the main budgets. But when, for whatever reason, it escapes the main budget preparation, then the sup supply is kind of the backup parachute, and unfortunately this parachute will not get us safely down and through this recession.

Mr. Chair, I appreciate the opportunity to speak again. The money that we invest up front produces terrific return.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that I take her constructive criticism very seriously. I don't know why we won't ask for more information on questions. I can assure you that when there are supplementary estimates coming back in, if I can't understand what it means in there, then we'll send it back and get the information there. I agree. It could have been better explained. I will commit to her that we'll do that.

The Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the bill?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

[Adjourned debate February 23: Mrs. Jablonski]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My initial reaction to this bill was not very kind towards the government because . . . [interjections] Well, I'm always struck by how this government feels that it needs to pass legislation to provide conditions that many would expect they would do as a matter of course. So when I have a government that needs to pass a Fiscal Responsibility Act to keep itself from going into debt, I have to shake my head and laugh. Well, duh. Governments are supposed to manage their resources responsibly. Why did this government feel that it needed to pass an act of legislation to keep itself in line? That always struck me as really odd. Well, I guess history proved them right and me wrong. They did need a piece of legislation to try and keep them under control. It didn't work very well.

I remember when the — surely he's not the federal Finance minister, but maybe he is — former Member for Red Deer-North, who was then our Treasurer, brought in . . .

Mr. Chase: Stockwell Day.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah.

It was called something around fiscal administration or responsibility. I mean, that's what it was supposed to do, keep them from running up a deficit. Yet that bill came back every single year for an amendment to adjust everything so whatever they decided to do that year would still be legal, but they'd already done it, so this was being passed, you know, after the fact. I thought: well, that makes a mockery of the whole process. You say you need this legislation to keep yourself in line, and then you're going to go outside of the lines of it, and then you've got to hurriedly change the boundaries of it so that after the fact you can say that you didn't actually contravene your own act. It's a level of public spin that I think brings all of us into question by the population. They look at us and go: "What the heck are you guys doing? It doesn't make any sense." Frankly, I agree.

When I heard that the government had brought forward an act called the Competitiveness Act, I had exactly the same reaction. I rolled my eyes heavenward and went: oh, here we go again. Then I read through the act and thought: you have got to be kidding me. This is the Premier's flagship bill? This is what we're going to put forward as the big news from the 2010 legislative sitting? That's it? Guys, it's three pages long. It's just the tiniest bit short on substance if you know what I mean. And is it actually going to, you know, do anything? Well, no. They're going to form a committee.

Dr. Brown: Big things come in small packages.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but there's some substance and some value to the small packages, and that's not what I'm seeing in here.

It actually establishes a board or a committee to go and look at this stuff. So all this talk, all this hype about, you know, how competitive we are, and what are we going to do? We're going to establish a board or something to come up with whatever this is.

I've had a couple of weeks since this was introduced to actually think about this, and I have two reactions to it. I was reading the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, and he has brought forward a really interesting perspective that in its most basic elements I agree with. I think the basis of the disagreements that I often end up having with members of the government is that I don't think that the only role of government is to enable the private sector to make money.

I think there are roles for the government around protection, whether that's protection of the vulnerable or protection of Albertans in a consumer protection way, which is why I brought forward things like the concerns I was raising about Ticketmaster. It's why I brought forward concerns around payday loans. It's why I brought forward concerns around heat metering. Those were all consumer protection issues, in essence, so obviously that's deeply important to me.

I am concerned that we continue to think of our constituents, of our citizens as clients, as taxpayers, and that's the only role that this government seems to be willing to assign people. You're either a client, i.e. a recipient of services, or you're a taxpayer. But this government doesn't seem to be willing to look upon the people who live in our province as constituents, as citizens, people who have more in their lives than the agenda that the government puts forward. So I want to say that I do agree with the intent of what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has said.

The other thing that occurred to me as I thought about this act was: what competitiveness? What competitiveness are you talking about? We focus so much on the oil and gas sector in this province. I've never worked in the oil and gas sector, and I've never worked in support services for the oil and gas sector. I have spent my working career in public service and in the NGO sector, which is a significant sector in Alberta, but we all tend to not want to think about that for some reason.

I was struck by a couple of things I've been looking into recently in which Alberta has an opportunity. It's laid in front of them how they could be more competitive – in other words, get more business for the benefit of Alberta citizens – and they choose not to take advantage of it. That perplexes me. I'm going to focus in on one and give you a really specific example to think about because Alberta is more than oil and gas. Let me say right off: don't bother bashing me that I'm not appreciative of the oil and gas sector because I am. I like that money. I like that money because it builds things like art galleries. It funds our schools. It makes a lot of things possible for us. It makes us a wealthy, wealthy province. I'm not going to bash them. I understand where that money is coming from. I want a better balance with environmental protection, and I also won't back off on saying that stuff. But that's not the only thing that can be used in this province to be competitive.

I want to talk about the film sector. Now, this is low-hanging fruit, guys. This is easy. We have a film sector in Alberta. It's easy to sell Alberta's natural beauty. You may not be aware, but we have very unique light in Alberta that shows up on film stock. It's why people like to come and shoot films here. Our big sky country and literally the quality of the light makes films look really good. So it's low-hanging fruit. To get people to come here is not hard, right? We have a certain amount of natural resource that they want to take advantage of. We have trained people. Both SAIT and NAIT train people to work in film and television production. We have unions who willingly take those students from SAIT and NAIT and work with them and have programs that work those students into the actual production in film and television. Then we have a regulatory regime which is so ass-backwards that we are losing competition. [interjections] I apologize for the use of that language, but it was the most descriptive in two short words that I could come up with. Asinine, okay? All right, I'll change the language.

So what have we done here in Alberta? We used to have the Alberta Motion Picture Development Corporation, which actually developed scripts and worked with our producers and our screenwriters and our technical people to move our film industry along. This government in all of its wisdom disbanded that in 1994. Then we had nothing, and our film production dropped like a rock. Everybody went to B.C., Saskatchewan, anywhere but here because we had nothing, no incentives to offer them.

Then with much lobbying from the film industry, we got the then Treasurer to come up with the three streams scheme, that is actually still in use now, in which stream 1 offered a 25 per cent credit or payback on money that was spent in Alberta as long as you met certain criteria. This stream 1 is basically Alberta production. It has to have key individuals and a lot of key individuals involved in the production, so it was really meant to be Alberta centred and use a lot of Alberta technicians and artisans and craftspeople and artistic people in the production.

Then we had stream 2. It was meant to attract big Hollywood films in from other places, but we still wanted them to train our people. You can see how old this is, right? We don't really need to train our people anymore; we've got lots of trained people. We're still running with that old system of: well, we need other people to come in so we can train our people so they can be good enough to, you know, have their own film industry. But the truth of the matter is that we are going to have a hybrid film industry here. We are going to have smaller, low-budget local productions that have a lot of people involved. We also want to attract the honking big Hollywood films to come here and shoot because in order to get credits, they are also part of this streaming, but the credits that they're being offered are significantly lower than what they can get in other places.

So we are losing out to B.C., to Saskatchewan, to New Mexico, even to the Maritimes. I am so frustrated with that, Mr. Speaker. This is so easy to be competitive if that's what is important. And you know who gets the work? Albertans, citizens, constituents. They get to work at home. And for those of you in the oil sector, you understand all too well what it means to not be able to work at home. It's the same thing in the film sector. How do you think our artisans and technicians, our directors, our writers, our actors feel about always having to go somewhere else to work? To be able to come home, to be able to earn a paycheque here in Alberta, to be able to work here at home, and to be able to contribute – these are good people. They volunteer in their communities. They coach baseball teams. They're involved in their communities.

So it's about the citizens that are here, and that money stays here. This is not about making megabucks for some corporation that has its headquarters in Houston or Chicago or New York. This is about Albertans and our ability to be able to be good citizens and to earn a decent living here through a sector that we know well.

The stream 3 that I was talking about. The first stream was all Alberta, the second stream was kind of a hybrid, and stream 3 was a brokerage stream. It was meant to address a problem that cropped up in which a big Hollywood film could come in, and if they had certain people and they were willing to kind of give up half of their control of the film, then they could get a better percentage back. But you know what? That just doesn't work anymore. You're not going to end up with Disney or Pixar coming in here and going, "Oh, yeah, sure. I'll give up half of my points in a film or half of my ownership of a film so that I can get a couple of percentage points more on a film credit system that they have in Alberta." It's not going to happen. I mean, guys, be realistic here. It's not working, and there are way better deals to be had elsewhere.

Let me talk to you about B.C. B.C. just raised its tax credit – it works on a tax credit program – from 25 per cent of a tax credit to 33 per cent of a tax credit. You think that doesn't matter? If you were going to do a film, would you be in Alberta, where you were getting at best somewhere in the 20 to 25 per cent range, or would you go to B.C. for 33 per cent? Again, the answer is: well, duh. Where are our Albertans going to get work? They're not going to get that work that they could have had here.

We need to have stream 2 and stream 3 combined, and that could be done by the minister tomorrow if he wanted to. The other thing is that, really, you need to consider moving to a tax credit model. For the minister to be talking to producers and to the head of the CBC, based in Ontario, does not help us here. Frankly, those people are not producing here in a lot of cases, or they're making demands that just don't work for us. We should be able to be competitive here. B.C. right now is the third largest production centre in America. We used to be right behind them, and now we're way behind them.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm very interested in the film possibilities. As the hon. member mentioned, not only do we have terrific backdrops – mountains, prairies – we produce more than westerns in Alberta. I'm just wondering if the hon. member could talk about some of the homegrown talent and the education opportunities for theatre and the arts in this province, some of the potential that we're not necessarily realizing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Thank you. I do have something for that. I guess it was last week I actually tabled this letter, so it's in the sessional papers. This was someone that contacted me, and they were very frustrated with what's happening. Here's their story. This is Dean Goodine, and he started working in the Alberta industry in 1986 after attending SAIT. He worked on Unforgiven, Legends of the Fall, and was the property master on Jesse James, all films shot here in Alberta which you would all be familiar with. His wife is an Alberta-born Academy Award nominee for Unforgiven as a set decorator, Janice Blackie-Goodine. Now, Janice also won a Genie award for set decorating Passchendaele, again partly filmed here in Alberta.

They have trained 75 per cent of the props and set people in Alberta. They've been tireless spokespeople for the industry. Here's the twist. Where do they live? They now live in Vancouver, and that's where he was writing to me from. He is working with another ex-Edmontonian, Grace Gilroy, and their crew is mostly Albertans living there. So here we have people we've trained, given experience to, and they can't work here in Alberta.

Here's another bit that I want to add to that about benefits to Alberta. When Janice was working on Unforgiven, she went to Nanton to look for some set decoration. They were in an antique store, and she and her crew were piling all of this stuff they wanted to buy in the middle of the store, and the owner said, "What are you doing?" She explained that she needed all of these antiques for a movie. He said, "Well, how are you going to pay?" And she said, "Cash." That's how they work. The owner started to cry because that was the day he was going to go out of business. By walking in there and buying all of the sets and the antiques that she needed to dress the set, she was able – at 11 o'clock that Tuesday morning they paid over $20,000 in cash to that antique business owner, and he stayed in business until he finally retired many, many years later. So there's a direct benefit. A true story of how the big film industry can very much benefit Alberta artists and Alberta businesses.

Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. You mentioned the natural light, the geographic splendour of this province. Could you comment a little bit about the need for sound studios and production facilities in this province and why we should be encouraging that homegrown production?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. That's a tougher issue. We do have a sound studio that was built here by the late Charles Allard, and it's now being privately run. This is a business that moves ahead fast. If any of you could have thought 20 years ago that you'd be watching a feature film like Up, that was entirely animated, you can see how fast this industry moves forward on technology. In fact, a number of people say that that space in Edmonton as a sound stage will only do small commercials, and it's not big enough to shoot films. In Calgary we actually don't have a big enough sound studio at all, which is part of what the minister was working on and why I was interested in how that is progressing because it's been something that we've needed.

We could get more postproduction work done and more of the actual big Hollywood films shot here with all the extra work that comes with it: the catering and the wranglers and the scene shops and the carpenters and the businesses, the lighting shops that sell equipment to them. All of that money that comes from the big Hollywood productions can stay here in Alberta, and more of it could stay in Alberta if we had a sound studio that they could work with. We don't, so they pack up, and they go back to L.A., or they go back to the other cities that actually have those large sound stages. It's certainly something that's an investment for us. It would certainly generate a lot more money to stay here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get to say a few words today about Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I want to just comment on the discussion that's just happened regarding the film industry. Having a son who's in the film industry, now living and learning in Toronto but is intent on moving back, I want to say that he'll probably not appreciate my talking about his life. He also has a great foundation in Alberta, learning film in Alberta and being a recipient of support from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. So our government is doing a lot of good things to support these people, but we sure like to get them back.

I've listened with great interest to the many and diverse perspectives that have been presented in terms of Bill 1. It's interesting how we can have such a variety of views about this bill. You know, some have spoken about the traditional significance of a Bill 1, how it signals government's intentions. Others have been critical about the bill being shallow or too focused on negative things like competition and so on. So I want to offer my own perspective here.

First of all, the question of: is it even desirable to be so focused on competition? It is kind of appropriate, maybe, to talk about that at a time when the Olympics are on in the context of the Olympics. Any competition requires at least two participants, and essentially what it is is a comparison of how you're doing measured against somebody else. You know, some who have commented feel as though that maybe could be a negative thing, but I'd point out that very often those who comment on how our government is doing, what we're up to, do point out how we compare, I suppose how we are competing with what's happening in other jurisdictions. I welcome those comparisons. I think it's healthy, and I think it's a good idea. One has to be somewhat careful, though, about comparisons because there are always many variables, and those have to be taken into account so that we are comparing apples to apples.

Another good thing about comparisons is that it forces us to look at ourselves, to self-assess. Even in the Olympics context people try to achieve their personal best, so it's a good thing for us to look at how we're doing, assess ourselves, see if we are achieving our personal best. Imagine an Olympics where that's all people did, tried to achieve their personal best and didn't ever compare how they were doing against what others are doing.

Now, Alberta hasn't been immune to the downturn in the global economy. We've been bruised a little bit, and as has been mentioned many times in this Assembly, we're vulnerable to big swings in revenues and so on, but as we recover from what many say is the worst recession since the 1930s, I think we're in pretty good shape compared to other jurisdictions. In fact, I would suggest that, probably, most jurisdictions in North America would be very happy to trade places with us in terms of where we sit financially. We've got $17 billion in a sustainability fund, a savings account which we can use to protect programs because of these swings. I would suggest that that demonstrates some good foresight and some good planning.

Another thing I just want to comment on a little bit, again in terms of interpretation of what this act is about, is the scope of the act. I think there is a danger in taking a very narrow focus, focusing only on a narrow type of competition and thinking that it relates only to industry or even to specific industries such as the oil and gas industry. When you look at the wording of this legislation, I think it's much broader than that, and I think the intention is that it be much broader than that. I just picked out a few words and a few phrases from the bill, and I just want to read them, things like "quality of life," "innovation," "technology," "environment," "alignment of activities across government," "strengthening partnerships." Those things speak to me of a much broader approach than just a narrow focus on competition in that negative sense.

We have to recognize that coming out of this recession, the global economy isn't going to be the same. We're going to have to be adaptable. We need to pursue different strategies, and there are all kinds of ways we can do that, but just to throw out a couple, and it's been mentioned a number of times in this House: regulatory burden. Now that's something that certainly touches industry, and we want to reduce regulatory burden wherever we can. Some steps have been taken to achieve some efficiencies. I think of something like BizPaL, which is a single portal for industry to access government agencies and programs and so on.

But, again, it's not just about industry. I think about my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. If you were to talk to my staff there, they would talk about all of the phone calls they get relating to employment issues, housing issues, long-term care issues, health care issues, and so on. Sometimes just manoeuvring through that system and dealing with the system can be very intimidating. There are efficiencies that we should be trying to achieve so that it's more user-friendly. So we're not just talking about user-friendliness for industry; we're talking about user-friendliness for all Albertans.

Now, the notion of a competitive provincial economy is centred on our ability to attract new people, new businesses, new innovation and technology, the next generation of entrepreneurs, and generally to make Alberta user-friendly for all of those. As we would all know in here, we can sometimes get a little bit preoccupied with the issue of the day, the pressure of the moment, and maybe we don't always have the kind of time that we would like to have to take the long view, to get our eyes off the ground and look to the horizon. That's why I really appreciate this bill, and that's why I would say that the Premier has shown great foresight, vision, and leadership in presenting this bill as Bill 1, because it sends that message that we have to look ahead.

I think it's been mentioned here in earlier debate that doing this kind of thing is not a one-off. It's a work in progress. It's the type of thing that has to be continually worked on, an ongoing process in order to stay ahead of the curve. We have to be adaptable to changes that are coming.

For all of those reasons I very much support this bill, and I encourage all of my colleagues to support it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I sincerely appreciate your reflections and also the personal connection to the arts and film industry. Being a father as well as a grandfather, I can relate very directly. You mentioned, and I agree, that Alberta is much better prepared to weather the recessionary effects, and you referenced the $17 billion sustainability fund. I'm just wondering if you have any insight or knowledge of how much of the 17 billion original dollars remain, if you have any sense of what's left so that we can hopefully continue to use it as a buffer over the next two years.

Mr. Olson: Well, I will try to answer that question. But first I'd like to say that regarding the arts, you've given me a great opportunity to promote a film festival in Camrose this weekend. Check out www.nordlysfestival.com. Nordlys is Norwegian for northern lights.

The sustainability fund. You know, obviously that fund has been talked about a lot. In a perfect world we'd never have to use it, but it's not a perfect world. It's there to protect us in downturns. There is no desire within our caucus to blow that wad in one year or even two or three years.

I'm going on memory here now, and I'm standing straight across from the minister of finance. I think the number was in the $3 billion range. You know, that's a moving number, too, just as revenues change. I can remember my first summer in government: we were talking about an $8 billion surplus, and within eight months we were talking about deficits. So that's an example of the volatility. It's a moving number, but it's there, and there would be few, if any, other jurisdictions that have that kind of protection.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate that qualification, and I'm very glad the minister of finance is here to echo that number. For any Albertans interested, if my math is correct, then we have approximately $14 billion left in the sustainability fund so that we continue to provide a buffer.

The other question I have – and I'm not getting into wordsmithing or semantics, but one of the things you mentioned in the Alberta Competitiveness Act was that when we compete against someone else, we also have an opportunity for self-reflection, for trying to achieve our personal best. I wondered about the notion of, instead of an Alberta competitive act, if we had an Alberta collaboration act, where we worked to accomplish the best from within the province with the talents we have, with interministerial co-operativeness, consultation with Albertans, and using that same sort of collaboration aspect such as the TILMA agreement, if we then branched out to the other western provinces. So instead of the competitive, so to speak, where it suggests win and loss, we should be looking more at a collaborative process. Or is that collaboration built into this competition act as you see it?

Mr. Olson: Well, I would say that, I suppose, there can be some subjective interpretations of what some of these words mean, but for me competitiveness does not preclude collaboration. I think there are words such as partnership embodied in the legislation: partnership, government working together, and so on. So I don't think that the two have to be mutually exclusive.

The Deputy Speaker: We're back to the bill. Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, your turn.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak on the bill. When it was first introduced, I saw the value of an act that would cut through red tape, but I was concerned about the manner in which this cutting was proposed. In essence, what this bill allows for is the establishment of a board or a committee with a rather loose mandate of increasing competitiveness. The underlying principle behind the bill is to increase collaboration between government, business, and industry, but there are very few specifics, and therefore it's difficult to determine what, if any, impact there may be. I talked about the need for rules of the game, so to speak, so that we could head in the direction we wish to go and then have some sort of system of evaluation to know if we got there.

The government's news release on this bill states that throughout the next year benchmarks and goals will be established. Again, this is part of my concern: sort of putting the cart before the horse. Why don't we have the benchmarks? Why don't we have the goals pre-established? As a teacher I always had objectives for my students. When we went into a lesson, I had behavioural objectives where I could say that after this particular lesson is completed, this individual will be able to demonstrate their knowledge by doing this, this, and this in a very practical sense. Then I had overall general objectives, where I expected a larger learning than just specific skills to take place.

There's no reference to when completion or action on these benchmarks and goals will take place nor is there any reference to specific action that will be taken now. I'd like to think that every student I had was self-motivated, and they were an empty vessel waiting for me to introduce information to them that they would just automatically take in. But without goals or expectations, without report cards, if I never marked their assignments and just came up with a grade at the end of the year, they wouldn't have kept on doing their assignments. What would the grade mean if there was no feedback during the process?

The only reference to anything specific both in the bill and in the news release is to the government's oil and gas competitiveness review and the western economic partnership between B.C., Alberta, and Saskatchewan. We're still waiting for that oil and gas competitiveness review, and possibly that'll spell out the types of benchmarks that could be applied to other areas of our economic well-being.

Establishing benchmarks, reporting explicitly through annual reports, collaborating across ministries and with key players in industry are all important and positive steps towards improving Alberta's competitiveness. But this bill does not take any real action towards making these things happen. There are no details, no time frame, no end goal other than elusive phrases: increase competitiveness.

We have a concept, we have a destination, but we don't have a map. We don't have a plan for arriving at that destination. All this bill does is legislate an idea. Here we have a philosophy; let's turn it into a piece of legislation.

Also, there is a little bit of overlap in the sense that the government already has a Regulatory Review Secretariat with the following mandate:

The goal of regulatory reform is to identify opportunities to reduce and simplify the regulatory burden of government on the people and businesses of Alberta. Supporting the development of good regulation creates the conditions for business to thrive and enhance productivity towards sustainable prosperity. Alberta's regulatory reform places stakeholders at the center of its regulatory activity to uphold . . .

I'm not going to go on, but the point is that that's already there. If we're going to take it beyond sort of motherhood-type statements, then we have to create the rules. We have to create the evaluatory instruments to let us know: are we getting closer to achieving the type of competitiveness that we're looking for? Are we eliminating red tape? Can we say that we've accomplished this, this, and that, and therefore it's easier to get a permit to do whatever it is, whether it's building, exploration for oil and gas, and so on?

The Regulatory Review Secretariat seems to be more concentrated on the, quotes, red tape burden of compliance requirements and regulations whereas the guiding principle behind Bill 1 is more about collaboration. I talked a little bit about this in terms of co-operation, competition, and collaboration, yet both have very similar mandates and ultimately have the same end goal of allowing for productivity, competitiveness, and sustainable prosperity.

Eliminating red tape is not the only step necessary to increase competitiveness. It is an important first step. Other provinces such as B.C. and Newfoundland have set percentage reduction goals and have produced results. In other words, they have said: "By such and such a time we'll have achieved this. We can check it off. We can say we've been successful." We don't have those benchmarks in this bill. Alberta has been reviewing regulatory burdens for over 10 years now and has yet to produce the reductions in red tape that other provinces have. The CFIB argues that Alberta has actually increased its regulatory burden in that time frame. In terms of the regulatory burden I believe we're on our sixth attempt at getting the royalty regime correct.

Also, the government already has a Premier's economic advisory committee, a Regulatory Review Secretariat, an oil and gas competitiveness review that we're still waiting to see, a western economic partnership with B.C. and Saskatchewan, and a Canada-Alberta western partnership. How many more committees and partnerships do we need? Why can't the goals of Bill 1 be carried out by one of these other arrangements? Why is the government seemingly afraid to take definitive action as opposed to creating endless committees with endless discussions and, unfortunately, no resolution?

This is the kind of initiative that the premise of this bill is intended to eliminate. The government is actually creating more legislation and more regulations with this bill. This makes me flash back to the ministry affectionately known as RAGE, restructuring and government efficiency, that was the first platform to stardom for the hon.

Minister of Transportation. Fortunately, he survived the elimination of that questionable ministry, but this bill sort of suggests that we're trying to bring back to life the idea of restructuring and government efficiency. It didn't work within the ministry, and it has yet to demonstrate any workability in this bill.

Ultimately, this bill is meaningless. The intention behind the bill is something that is laudable and necessary, but the bill itself is hollow. There are absolutely no specifics in the bill, and it seems unusual that this act is being done through legislation. Why are we mandating another committee to do the role of government? Why, for example, doesn't the Premier set up a specific task force with a particular budget, with a particular timeline? He's been great at providing individual ministries with assignments. Why couldn't this have been dealt with under a particular ministry with a particular mandate?

Some of the questions that arise. Which industries is this bill targeting? How exactly will this bill improve competitiveness? What kind of competitiveness are we talking about here? What's the red tape that's getting in the way, so that we can eliminate it? Are we primarily dealing with the oil and gas industry, a key industry to our prosperity, beyond a doubt? If we could solve the oil and gas dilemma, then possibly we could apply the same logic to the other ministries, but we don't have that structurally strong foundation with regulations and rules to achieve that competitiveness that we're trying for. By creating a competitive environment for small business, by reducing red tape – I would assume that's one of the goals. Diversifying the economy in general: we have been fortunate by the God-given nonrenewable resources in this province, but unless we diversify our economy and get off our dependence on this globally determined nonrenewable resource value, we're going to continue to ride the roller coaster of bust and boom. What is our end goal? What is the time frame for us to reach this goal?

There are more questions than there are answers. I'm hoping that the government will be able to provide examples of how we're going to get there because at this point everything is set out that at some point in the future we'll somehow come up with benchmarks, we'll somehow have a report card, we'll somehow be able to evaluate how far we've come, but other than the goal of improving our competitiveness, which is a very broad-based goal, it's not spelled out, as I say, how we're going to get there.

I will take my seat, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the people who designed the bill and have a sense of where they want to arrive at can assure me and Albertans that there is a direction, there is a focus, there is a set of regulations, there is an evaluation so that we know that we'll have gone so far down the line towards improving our competitiveness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you. It was pretty nice to hear this hon. member sound very positive about this bill. I take it that he's supporting the bill. I just thought I'd ask him: is that an outright support of the bill?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Possibly, like the UN, we need to set up a translation system here. I don't know. What I said is that I'm supportive of the intent of the bill, but unless you have the mechanics to accomplish the intent, unless you spell out the rules, unless you set out how you're going to evaluate – evaluation has been a big part of my life for 34 years as a teacher. I'm very proud of that background. On a daily basis I evaluated my kids, and as such they evaluated me. I marked their papers. I created exams. I reported on their progress in a variety of ways. I don't see those interim measures or long-term measures built into this particular competitiveness bill. If you don't know what the rules of the game are and what standards you have to achieve, then how do you progress? That was the concern that I was expressing, not with the intent, but how do we get there?

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 1 today. I thought that I might take just a slightly different approach in the discussion on this bill. I want to accomplish two things in the time that I have. One, to have a look at the preamble that's in this bill. Oftentimes we overlook the preamble, and admittedly in some cases preambles are not designed to be an integral part of the bill. But I would suggest to you that in this particular case it would do us all a lot of good to have a look at the preamble and spend a little bit of time discussing it because the preamble, really, is the essence of this bill. The rest is really the operationalization. But I think that there's much to be gained by discussing the preamble.

The other thing that I want to spend a little bit of time talking about is the whole concept of regulatory streamlining and the reduction and avoidance of duplication. As the minister of a department that is one of the most recognizable regulators in the House, I think it's appropriate that I spend some time discussing how this bill may or may not affect the environment in particular and the way we do business in Alberta Environment specifically.

Mr. Speaker, let's just for a moment have a look at the preamble that's in the bill because I think it's worth spending a little bit of time. First of all: "Whereas Alberta's success is founded on the competitiveness and the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans." What more can be said? Every time that I have an opportunity to speak inside and outside of Alberta, particularly outside of Alberta, I make particular note of the fact that Alberta has a wealth of resources. Much of the reason that others look to Alberta as being a success is attributed to our natural resources, but the fact of the matter is that while we have abundant resources in this province, they have been developed not by the government, not by the federal government but, in fact, by the people, by Albertans, by the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans, by that spirit that all of us are so proud of here in Alberta.

The next preamble says, "Whereas competitiveness is core to the Government of Alberta's plan to position Alberta for sustained prosperity to provide a high quality of life for Albertans." Again, we're talking about how we frame competitiveness in the context of creating the base, creating the opportunities for us to have economic activity in this province, to have wealth creation in this province, but recognizing that while we have abundant resources, it takes more than just abundant resources to be successful.

Now, this is a critical one, Mr. Speaker, the next one: "Whereas global competition for access to markets and for investment capital, people and skills is ever increasing." That is critical. We're not just talking about the things that often get reflected upon when we talk about a competitiveness review. When we talk about reducing the amount of regulatory burden or when we talk about other kinds of barriers that are put in place, the key here is that not only are we competing in a global market for investment; frankly, we're competing for skilled people. If we don't have an opportunity for those skilled people to come to Alberta, to bring their knowledge, to bring their entrepreneurial spirit, we are not going to be successful. A lot of that has to do with competitiveness, competitiveness from the perspective of ensuring that we do have a vibrant arts and cultural community to attract people here, ensuring that we have a school system that will continue to attract people here. That, too, is part of the competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, I could not talk about what brings people here and not mention the environment. Certainly, people are attracted to Alberta because of the beauty that we have, the environment that all of us are so proud of and spend so much time and effort protecting and ensuring that it is here for our children and our grandchildren.

The next whereas clause says: "Whereas the Government of Alberta believes that the role of government is to create the conditions for competitiveness so that entrepreneurship, innovation and investment will generate benefits for Albertans." I won't spend a lot of time on that one. As a Conservative that one is almost self-evident. How many times have we heard people ask, you know: what is the government doing to create jobs? What is the government doing to do this or that? Mr. Speaker, I don't have to remind you, I'm sure, that it's not the government that creates jobs. It's entrepreneurs, it's small businesses, it's large businesses, it's people who have the faith to invest in our province that create the jobs. It's the role of government to create a level playing field, to create the opportunity for that investment to be successful. Let's never forget that it's not the responsibility of government to create the jobs. As soon as we try to convince ourselves that we the politicians, we the government create the jobs, the faster we'll defeat our intent to do just that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the last whereas clause says, "Whereas better alignment of activities across Government to strengthen partnerships among Albertans, business, industry and Government will support the development of a shared strategy to increase Alberta's competitiveness." This is all about how are we going to not deal with issues in isolation but ensure that any kind of a plan that comes forward, an initiative that comes forward out of this bill takes into account the fact that there needs to be integration. There needs to be a reflection that an action taken on one front may have a negative or perhaps an unwarranted or unwanted reaction on another front. It's imperative that when we develop policies, we do so in the context of keeping that reality in mind. We can't make changes in isolation in one part of government and not expect that there won't be any unintended consequences, perhaps, in other areas of government or other parts of the economy.

Now, if I can, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just spend a few moments talking about what this means from the point of view of some of the comments that were in the Speech from the Throne and, I think, are by extension included in Bill 1. That is: how are we going to address the issue of protecting our precious environment but doing so at the same time as we remove unnecessary duplication, as we remove unnecessary burden on industry, on investment, on Albertans so that they can do what it is we want them to do, and that's create wealth and create jobs?

I want to give just a couple of quick examples of the kinds of things that we need to be aware of. When we do approvals in Alberta Environment, it's a very prolonged process where we have an industrial approval that is before our staff, and our staff are very diligent, do an outstanding job, in my opinion, of ensuring that they cover off all of the possible concerns that might be in a particular industrial application.

It tends to be focused very much on the type of technology that's employed, on the emissions that may or may not be created as a result of the approval, Mr. Speaker, but frankly I think that there is a lot of duplication. In fact, I've had some discussion with some of the approval writers in the department, and even they will admit that for many approvals the first 50 to 60 pages could almost be photocopied from one to the next because they are virtually the same. The last 40 or 50 pages or in some cases maybe only 10 pages are critical because they deal with what is different about this particular application as opposed to a number of others. When we talk about eliminating unnecessary duplication, it's about ensuring that we don't spin our wheels, that we don't spend a lot of unnecessary talent and resources within Environment writing and rewriting our approvals in areas that are duplicative of many others in that same office.

The other side, I think, is equally important, and that's ensuring as a government, as the government of Alberta, not just Alberta Environment, that we're working together, that we're communicating, because many of the areas that Alberta Environment is responsible for regulating have overlap. We have overlap with the Energy Resources Conservation Board, the ERCB, and we have overlap with Sustainable Resource Development, SRD. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, there may be a very real probability that on any given day we might have three trucks – one from Alberta Environment, one from SRD, and one from the ERCB – all at the same site at the same time, yes, each doing something slightly different, but is it really necessary that all three be there? Are there ways that we can work together so that if there are issues that need to be dealt with by the ERCB and an Environment person is on-site, they can pass that information on?

Is there, Mr. Speaker, unnecessary duplication of reports to each of those organizations? Are we even sharing the information internally, or are we requiring the approval holder to send individual reports – one to ERCB, one to Environment, and one to SRD – when, in fact, it's all the government of Alberta? How are we expecting folks to do business here, recognizing that it's one government and at the same time ensuring that we're not in any way denigrating the very important role that each of those organizations plays?

So that's what this is all about, Mr. Speaker. It's not a simple matter of putting it in a bill and it will happen. What this bill accomplishes is that it creates the opportunity. In fact, I would suggest that it doesn't just create an opportunity. It creates a requirement for us in government to have a look at the way we regulate, how we protect the environment, at a myriad of other ways that we have organizations that are protecting the environment, protecting Albertans, and doing so very, very well, I might add. But have we actually taken the time to ensure that we do so from a co-ordinated approach? That from the head of a regulator is critical to this.

I know that there are other ministers, there are other members that will comment more on some of the fiscal and financial side of things, but I felt it was important that I commented from the perspective of a regulator because I think that there are huge opportunities in this bill for us to in fact do a better job at what Albertans expect us to do, to protect the environment, but to do so in a much more streamlined, effective way that will encourage investment in Alberta and will in fact address this whole issue of competitiveness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Five minutes for comment or question. The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for those comments. I was very encouraged to hear you talk about, basically, a one-window approach. Quite frankly, I think you're very accurate when you talk about different parts of government that have some jurisdiction and all the reports that have to be written, the regulations that pertain to different things.

I guess I'm wondering how far we can go down this road. I would envision a time when rather than being prescriptive as to how industry does something, we set out and have very specific targets that industry must meet at the end of the pipe or in the stack and let them figure out how they do it as opposed to us prescribing how they would get there. I think that that would cut down considerably on the regulations.

Really, I don't believe for a minute that within government we've got all of the answers. There's so much expertise out in the field, so much new technology that can be used, so many different ways that you could get to the same end result. I think it's critical that we be very prescriptive as to the standards that they must – must – meet, but let's let industry figure out how they get there and allow that kind of an exercise to work its way through.

Mr. Renner: Well, I think it was more a comment than a question, but I couldn't agree more. The member is absolutely right. There needs to be a transition from a regulatory mindset that is very prescriptive on what the inputs will be, the technology that will be employed, that then creates expectations on what the outcome is going to be rather than having a regulatory regime that is very prescriptive on what the outcome is that we expect and giving some flexibility to industry, to the approval holder, on how they achieve those outcomes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that being said, it then becomes imperative that we have a rigorous system in place to ensure that we are in fact holding the approval holders and industry accountable for those outcomes. It may not be that we save a whole lot of time and effort at the back end. In fact, we'd probably end up spending more time and effort on the part of government on ensuring that we achieve those outcomes, but we've given a great degree of flexibility on how we achieve those outcomes.

I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in achieving those outcomes, it would have to be, really, twofold. One is from an individual operator's perspective, but that all has to be within an overall global context of cumulative effects. It's one thing to achieve outcomes for individual operators. But if we don't take into account the cumulative effect of multiple operators all achieving their outcomes but at the end of the day perhaps not achieving our outcome as Albertans on air quality or water quality or the like – that is why we put so much emphasis on the development of a cumulative effects regulatory regime as well.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My favourite of the five preambles is the fifth, and it's suggesting: get your own house in order; proceed from a secure base. It's a great philosophy, but there's no mention of how we're going to get there or when we're going to get there.

With regard to the environmental balancing act I believe that future project approvals should be based on past reclamation. Demonstrate your responsibility.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, there may be a mistake. I think I'm triumphant on this one. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and speak to Bill 1 this afternoon. Having listened intently to a number of my colleagues in the Legislature, I think it's very evident that all of us agree that competitiveness is very important for our province as we move forward. Certainly, as entrepreneurs and pioneers of what is, you know, a fairly young jurisdiction, we view this idea of competitiveness and being able to compete in the global environment as number one.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to refer to the throne speech, and I'm going to pick a couple of passages out of the throne speech that I think are pertinent here. The first: "Our world may have changed, but our people have not. They remain hard working and innovative, entrepreneurial and compassionate, and, most of all, confident about our province and its future."

Mr. Speaker, that confidence is well placed in the sense that we have made excellent investments in where we're going. We have certainly the lowest tax regime in the country. We have dollars on hand to do the things that we need to do. As the throne speech continues, it says: "That confidence is well placed. Our province has substantial cash reserves and low taxes, providing a solid foundation from which we can make a strong recovery." That is really, really true of our province, and certainly I think we can build upon that.

Another quote from the throne speech:

The global economy is undergoing profound changes, with significant impacts on the lives of Albertans. Our people are naturally entrepreneurial, and government has supported their drive to succeed with training, information, services, and counselling.

But, Mr. Speaker, the throne speech also says, "We can do better." I think that Bill 1 is one of the things where we're talking about doing it better.

Again to the throne speech:

We must succeed in maintaining and growing our markets and attracting and developing people and innovation. This is the route to the strong communities, healthy environment, quality of life, and prosperity that we want to pass on to future generations.

Bill 1 of this legislative session, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, will signal our government's resolve to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in North America. To do this, we must minimize the cost of doing business here, including the cost of regulation, while at the same time providing the world-class services that are the hallmark of competitive jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, a little over a hundred years ago you can well imagine pioneers crossing the border of Alberta – well, there was no border for Alberta at that time – a very difficult thing to imagine. If you can imagine them trying to eke a life out of what to them would have been a very inhospitable climate, what would have been a very difficult situation, you have to admire the strength and the courage of those pioneers. You also have to admire the fact that they were competitive, that they were innovative, that they knew how to get their products to market. Then their market might have been the neighbour. Their market was the closest town. Perhaps that was what built that entrepreneurial spirit which carries on to this day in the population of Alberta. As the markets expanded and as communication expanded and as production expanded, we had to reach more customers because we were creating more product than we could consume in our own jurisdiction.

That is certainly true today. Today we, obviously, produce way more energy than we can consume in a population of 3 and a half million people, we produce way more food than our population can consume, we are the number one cattle industry in the country, we are the number one energy industry in the country, we have a very, very strong forestry industry, but all of those industries are dependent upon trade, Mr. Speaker. All of those industries are dependent upon being globally competitive so that we can compete with others who are catching up to us and very quickly.

I think that really comes to the crux of the comment that I wanted to make, and that is: what does being competitive mean in today's environment? In today's environment it means working together. It means not competing within our own jurisdiction because, frankly, that's not our customer base. Our customer base is outside of our jurisdiction. It means that we have to work together to sell our own brand.

Mr. Speaker, prior to getting into this august Legislative Assembly, I was in international trade. I spent 20 some-odd years running around the world trying to sell product from our province, and what I learned in that situation is that you always have to be one step ahead of your competition. That means you have to move down the value chain. That means you have to be innovative. That's where Alberta has to move, and we have to signal that in whatever ways we possibly can. One of those ways, obviously, is by putting legislation in place that says that Alberta will be the most competitive jurisdiction in Canada and, hopefully, in the world in the areas that we work to. It says that we're going to respond to the province's needs but also to our customers' needs. We're going to seize on new opportunities.

Many of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly have said that Albertans have told us that they want us to get rid of the red tape. They want us to get rid of the bureaucratic walls that may be stopping them from doing the things that they need to do to be competitive. We need to be in touch with those markets that we're going to serve. We need to find out what our customers want, so we need to travel. We need to be out and in the face of our customers so that we can show them what we're doing but also recognize if we're doing it right or wrong.

In that sense it's working together with all levels of government. I know that the legislation contemplates a committee or a group that's going to look at how we can benchmark, how we can measure, and I think that's absolutely important. We had today an announcement from one of our universities in southern Alberta and one of the professors there that came up with his competitiveness report. I think it's important we take all of these things, Mr. Speaker, from all sectors of our economy, put them together, bring them together, work together in different levels of government, different departments of government, use that information to change how we do it and what we do.

We need to show the world like we did with Alberta Innovates, something we did in our department this past year, Mr. Speaker. We brought together all of the research entities in the province. We brought together all of the players, if you will, the stakeholders in research and innovation and commercialization of the province. We brought them together and said: "How can we be the best at what we do in the world? How can we make sure that we're commercializing things here in the province and creating wealth in the province?" They created Alberta Innovates, which is very similar to what the legislation contemplates, working together for a common goal, and that is to have the jurisdiction of Alberta be the place to commercialize new technologies and new innovations.

We couldn't have done that, Mr. Speaker, if we hadn't done Campus Alberta first. Campus Alberta is another example of what happens when partnership and working together come together and you create a system and a framework where everybody can pull together for the common objective of the students, the taxpayers, society, and the economy. That, again, is predicated on being able to compete in a global market.

The Premier's mandate letters have also been driving this change and vision. It's a vision to be in a position to capitalize on that next generation economy. It's a vision to be able to capitalize on the resources and the partnerships that we've placed and we've created. The province, of course, is also blessed with another resource, and that's the talented and highly skilled researchers and entrepreneurs that we have within Campus Alberta and within Alberta Innovates. Thanks to their work we've been able to identify research and technology commercializations – in life sciences, in energy and environment, in nanotechnology, in ICT sectors – and strategic priorities of equal importance.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that these initiatives – Campus Alberta, bringing technology to market, and Alberta Innovates – aren't disparate or arbitrary initiatives. Each works in collaboration with the next, building on alignment among our postsecondary institutions, research organizations, and our innovation support services in business and entrepreneurs. It is all about working together.

Now, with each of these essential pieces in place, we have another solid foundation that we need to take the next step with, and that next step is Bill 1. Bill 1 clearly states in the second part of the bill, the mandate of the bill, that the goal is to increase Alberta's competitiveness by accelerating the implementation of current government of Alberta initiatives to increase competitiveness. It's important, Mr. Speaker, that when we travel abroad or when we're telling Albertans what we're doing, there is the message from this government that says: "Yes, we will do this. Yes, we will move forward with being competitive." Current initiatives like those I've just outlined.

Section 2 goes on to state that we're going to increase Alberta's competitiveness by developing a shared strategy to increase Alberta's competitiveness through strengthened collaboration with industry, business, and Albertans. Again, Mr. Speaker, very, very important to where we're headed in the future. My ministry has been strengthening collaboration among the stakeholders, as I've said, toward that very purpose as we've done Campus Alberta and Alberta Innovates. I can tell you that the staff within my ministry are ready and able to take all that we've developed through those collaborative processes and apply it to that next level.

Bill 1 does that very thing. It focuses on alignment of effort at the very next level, not just among our ministry's key stakeholders but right across government and among all of the government of Alberta ministries, working to improve Alberta's global competitiveness. I see this kind of government-wide support for initiatives already under way within the ministry as a very positive thing towards working with Bill 1. By aligning the various efforts of government and increasing co-ordination and collaboration among us all, we'll be able to make Alberta more competitive more quickly. Albertans have told us that as a province and as Albertans we must be competitive in that global economy.

Still in section 2 the bill states that we'll develop strategies and initiatives to encourage innovation and develop and adopt technology. Right up the ministry's alley, Mr. Speaker, and we're very, very pleased to see that in the bill. Again, it provides strength of purpose. It puts that signal there for us. It really boils down to the old adage: the whole is greater than the sum of the parts. Working together, we can make Alberta's economy competitive on a global stage more than any of us could do individually.

I believe that Bill 1 is that next logical step towards achieving Premier Stelmach's vision for Alberta. He envisions a knowledge-based economy, one where we're known around the world as the preferred global destination for turning ideas into products and services that can benefit people all around the world. He knows – and I think this is key to his strength as the Premier – that a strong, competitive economy is not an end unto itself. Instead, a strong economy is the means to achieve the things we want as part of a larger global society, like a strong health care system, like a world-class education system. We're ready to take that next step in the form of the Alberta Competitiveness Act because of the long-range planning that has characterized this Premier's leadership. It is the right way to go, and it's a signal to the world.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What I'm hearing from this minister adds to the confusion that I see in this bill. We're not sure whether we're competing or we're co-operating.

When it comes to the claim that Alberta has the lowest taxes, tell that to the middle class, that is unfairly burdened by the flat tax. We forgive a few people at the poverty end of the scale, and we reward the people at the upper end of the scale on the backs of the middle class. I have trouble with that concept.

Now, the Premier made such a boast about not increasing taxes. In fact, he went so far as to rescind the $180 million of liquor taxes. Think what that would have paid for. It would have provided $23 million for the teachers' settlement. It would have meant that there wouldn't have been a $27 million cut to Children and Youth Services. It means that there wouldn't have been a cut to PDD. There are a whole bunch of areas where tax has a value. The Premier in stating that there would be no tax increases, I gather wasn't referring to the fact that the educational portion of the property tax is going up in municipalities across Alberta. So much for a tax freeze. The unfortunate part of that educational portion of the property tax is that it's not going to education; it's going into general revenue.

Now, in somewhat of a mixed revisionist history model the hon. minister of advanced education talked about competition being how the west was won. He put forward two notions in Alberta, that of the gunslinger, who succeeds in spite of everyone else, versus that of the barn raiser or the quilting bee. To me it's that co-operative spirit that's absolutely essential if we're going to be successful.

I agree with the minister about the whole being larger than the sum of its parts, and that's what the fifth premise in the preamble is about.

Whereas better alignment of activities across Government, so first we get our own act together, to strengthen partnerships among Albertans, and then we build up that collaborative collective, business, industry and Government will support the development of a shared strategy to increase Alberta's competitiveness.

My vision of Alberta is a co-operative version, but how are we going to get there, I keep saying, and when will we know we have arrived?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

Mr. Chase: Yes. How will we get there, and when will we know we've arrived?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, obviously, he worked real hard to find a question in that rant. It was interesting that first he talked about that we don't have the lowest taxes and that we're trying to hit the middle and lower incomes, and then he suggested that we should raise taxes on liquor. I'm assuming he doesn't assume that they buy liquor.

You know, we don't have a sales tax. Overall, Mr. Speaker, it is a true statement to say that Albertans are under the lowest tax regime of any province in Canada because we don't have a sales tax. We don't have a payroll tax. We have the highest personal income deduction level of any province in the country.

Mr. Speaker, it's nice to have a negative view of the world when that's what you want to have. I think the pioneers that came here weren't gunslingers, nor did I use that term; the hon. member did. They were very positive people, not negative. They viewed this province as having hope and prosperity for them and generations to come. And you know what? They were absolutely right because that's what's happened in this province. We have created an economy that still has hope, prosperity, and draws people from around the globe. And that's because of the competitive environment that we've created.

This bill signals to the world that we're going to continue with that competitive environment, that we're going to continue to create that kind of environment, because that's what Albertans want us to do, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and respond to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Our Premier's strategy for economic recovery includes continuing to strengthen infrastructure in all regions of this province. In fact, his vision is to ensure that we can continue to have the most advanced public infrastructure in North America. This includes the roads, schools, hospitals, and other public infrastructure needed to support our growing economy and population.

Continuously improving our infrastructure will give us an edge in the global economy. This keeps us competitive and supports Bill 1. By building for tomorrow today, we are supporting the growth of our current and future generations. Our strong infrastructure will provide the environment needed to create new business opportunities, existing careers, and high-paying jobs.

Through careful planning Alberta is in the best financial position of all provinces, with the most innovative and competitive economy in North America. We are looking far ahead and planning for the long term.

When the recession hit, jurisdictions throughout Canada were rushing to find shovel-ready capital projects to invest in, even at the cost of going into debt. Here in Alberta we already had a long-term, 20-year strategic capital plan, hon. Speaker. A 20-year strategic capital plan. Unlike most jurisdictions we were and are in a position to invest in our infrastructure, and we have the money in the bank to pay for it. It only makes sense to buy what we need now, when the prices are low and the materials and the labour are available.

Our sustainability fund is providing us with cash reserves, so we can use them now. Due to careful planning this province has saved billions of dollars from surpluses in good years. We are using those cash reserves strategically to position Alberta to come out of this recession stronger and faster than any other jurisdiction in North America.

Alberta's investment in infrastructure is nearly double the per capita average of other provinces. In total, the 2010-2013 capital plan supports more than $20 billion in capital projects, over $7 billion this fiscal year alone.

We are continuing work on the federal building, on the new remand centre, and the Edmonton clinic. We are delivering 18 new schools this September, two years sooner under the P3 partnership than would have been possible using traditional delivery models. These will all be top-quality, energy efficient buildings that all Albertans can be proud of.

When building modern infrastructure to meet Alberta's needs, it is vital to look beyond the bricks and mortar. It is what happens inside our buildings that is critical. Albertans and the services we deliver to them are our first priority, and we are always striving for the best way to deliver what Albertans need. By successfully meeting the needs of Albertans, we are also showing our best face to the world. Safe, modern, and efficient infrastructure is essential to the growing economy to create the wealth and prosperity needed to sustain social programs and services. This is why infrastructure is an economic enabler, a force that will enhance Alberta's competitiveness on the global scale.

Strong infrastructure will help Alberta continue to attract investment, to provide jobs and prosperity. While we do need to be careful with our dollars, cutting back on infrastructure during a downturn is not a smart long-term move. Investment in infrastructure keeps Albertans working. This year's infrastructure investment will support about 70,000 jobs.

Mr. Rodney: How many?

Mr. Danyluk: Seventy thousand.

That means 70,000 more Albertans will have security, and those 70,000 Albertans will continue to spend money and spur growth in other parts of the economy.

Bill 1 will enhance the conditions for competitiveness in this province by enabling better alignment of activities across government. This will strengthen partnerships among Albertans, business, industry, and government.

Striving for the best public services and the most competitive economic environment will attract the best and brightest to help build our province. We can no longer use our neighbours in B.C. and Saskatchewan to measure our successes. Instead, we need to work with those neighbours to be competitive in much bigger markets.

We must position our province so that we come out of this recession bigger, stronger, and smarter than ever before. We must build innovative, reliable public infrastructure to ensure our industries are competitive. We must establish this province as an economic leader in the postrecession world. Alberta needs to and will compete and win on the global economic stage. We need to aim high because aiming high is the Alberta way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for that very inspiring speech on how we're going to do so much in the competitive field and how this bill allows that to happen.

I'm curious. You mentioned a lot of buildings, and I imagine you're thinking of schools and hospitals and those kinds of things. You mentioned roads and investing in those kinds of things. I wonder if you would expound on how it is that this is going to help make us competitive and how this bill encourages that kind of thing. You did mention: competitive in the world. That's what is so critical. Of course, I think that you could validly bring in TILMA and how working with the other provinces is going to help us in the world market. If you could elaborate with those comments on the infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me talk about Alberta and the need to ensure that competitiveness is in place and alive and well and that the investors and the people that are in other parts of this great country in North America and in other parts of the world see Alberta as an opportunity, see Alberta as having an advantage of where they want to raise their children, where they want to work, and where they have opportunity.

If I can just go back a little bit, Mr. Speaker, and talk a little bit about history. What happened is that when this government eliminated the machinery and equipment tax to encourage investment, encourage development in this province, that is what has made this province what it is today. The hon. member was part of that decision, and it was a decision of foresight. It was a decision that enabled this province to be at the competitive level where it is today.

I want to say to you that when we talk about the competitiveness and the importance of having a sustainability fund, our Premier and this government have had the foresight to bring forward a sustainability fund. What does the sustainability fund do? It does two things: it takes off some of the hills, and it fills some of the valleys. It gives opportunity for people who have come to this province to make a living over the long term, not that they would make a living today and starve tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, that advantage of having a continuum of funding, having a continuum of $20 billion over three years, $7 billion a year, provides that opportunity. What it does is that it brings people to this province. It makes and has people come into this province to invest.

What exactly does that mean? That means that we have to be ready for the next growth spurt. It means that we cannot forget about business and the people of this province. We have to build the schools, and we have to build the hospitals, and we have to ensure that this economy does a couple of things, that this economy provides the opportunity when the growth spurt comes back but also provides the jobs.

Now, when it provides those jobs, it provides stability. What does it do with the discussion, if I can say, of stability? It makes this province, as I said before, a place that people want to come to. It is a province where there is opportunity. It is a province of hope. It is a province of the future.

Mr. Speaker, if I can say, when we talk about those types of opportunities and the opportunities into the future of our children because of the education system that we have, because of the postsecondary education system that we have, as well as having the infrastructure in place in regard to hospitals, to making sure that we are ready, I think that is the most important part.

When we look at the Minister of Transportation – and he left. He escaped, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's going to be hard to follow, but I'll give it a go.

More than obviously, I'm pleased to rise today and join all of my colleagues speaking in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. It's no secret. We are extremely fortunate to live in the province of Alberta, free to pursue our dreams, our ambitions, to be presented with opportunities that, quite simply, are not afforded to people in many other places around the world. Even with this global economic recession, we find ourselves as Albertans in a much better economic situation than most. But this province's success didn't happen by coincidence. It happened because of the vision, the foresight, and the entrepreneurship that have been cultivated in a long history of successful Albertans working to better their province and to better the lot of their family.

I support Bill 1 because it, I think, will work closely with our industry, with our business leaders, in fact with all Albertans towards a shared goal of making the province one of the most competitive jurisdictions in the world. Bill 1 will enhance Alberta's competitiveness in that global economic market that we live in today. It's about helping Alberta business so that we can continue to maintain and improve on an excellent standard of living that we currently enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, there are several factors that affect that economic competitiveness in our province. For example, we could talk about taxation rates, we could talk about regulatory burden, and we certainly need to talk about trade access. Alberta is already a leader in many of these areas. We have the lowest personal and corporate tax rates in the country, we have no provincial sales tax, and we have the highest tax exemption for families.

Alberta is also competitive because of the trading relationships which it has established. We already have a free trade relationship with the United States through NAFTA and a groundbreaking economic relationship, TILMA, with our neighbour to the west, British Columbia. I'm also pleased that we're making progress on a western economic partnership that includes both Saskatchewan and British Columbia, which ultimately will create Canada's largest free trade zone.

Now, it's true that many will view competitiveness solely in terms of royalty rates, our Alberta energy industry. While I think it's critically important that this industry remain strong, I would argue that competitiveness must extend to all sectors of our economy.

Specifically, I'd like to talk about competitiveness from the standpoint of small business. Small business and entrepreneurs are a significant driving force in our economy. In addition, they are often the sources of the technological innovation and development that blossoms into outcomes that benefit all Albertans. Small businesses in my constituency of Red Deer-South not only help to shape our community, but they also contribute to the prosperity of the entire province.

Therefore, when we talk about competitiveness, we're also talking about the steps that we can take to enhance and promote small business. One such step is promoting the reduction of regulatory burdens. Regulations are never created with the intent of placing an undue burden on our small business community. As a government and a member of the Regulatory Review Secretariat I believe that it falls upon us to look at these regulations and adjust them to make them workable for our business community. Now, that is not to say that we should cut regulations simply for the sake of cutting regulation. Rather, we need to tailor our regulations to suit specific industries while ensuring that we do not compromise our commitment to environmental standards, health standards, and public safety. I believe that by doing this, we can improve the competitiveness of our small business community.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would again like to applaud the government for the foresight required to draft the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This action demonstrates that even though we are the most competitiveness jurisdiction in Canada, we must always be looking to the future to ensure that we retain our competitive edge.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my comments and voice my support for Bill 1. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to express my appreciation to the Member for Red Deer-South for his comments with regard to Bill 1 and share his sentiment with regard to the opportunity that is provided through the spirit of Bill 1 and, I think, the direction that it takes, that is well indicated within the preamble of the bill and the specifics that it speaks about. I think that the direction of this bill is something that will very closely resonate with the average Albertan.

Given your experience with the competitiveness review commission and your experience in small business and your reference to the small business community – and I share your concern and your belief that this will resonate with small business because the cost of the regulatory burden to small business in this country and in this province is significant in the time that it takes from small business owners. One of the things I've done in my constituency is talked with some constituents about: what are the things that hamper competitiveness or that get in the way of competitiveness, whether it's regulatory concerns or other things that we can do to be more competitive?

My question for the Member for Red Deer-South: does the Member for Red Deer-South have some instances or some particular areas that he can identify that we need to address, specific situations that Albertans will connect with? I think at the end of the day that's something that this bill will address. I'm wondering if the Member for Red Deer-South could comment on that.

Mr. Dallas: I'd be delighted to, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, we can have a broader discussion than the burden of regulation, but I think small business is particularly impacted by regulation by virtue that larger enterprises have the capacity to develop a compliance unit within their enterprise to be constantly on the lookout for the kinds of activities that their company is engaged in and the responsibilities that they have in complying with legislation.

Small business, on the other hand, often single owner-operator enterprises, family-based enterprise units, or two or three employees: much more significant challenges with respect to managing that. Those entrepreneurs work long days often actually delivering the services related to the business; evenings are spent doing books, filling out forms, complying with all of the requirements that we provide to them. Often they really don't have a problem with the issues around environmental compliance, public safety, health. These are things that business understands and knows that they need to do well. The issue is really not about: what are the requirements of the regulations? It's the requirements of the reporting, I think, that are significant to business.

I think that what we have in front of us is a great opportunity to work with all Albertans to look at compliance requirements not to say, "How can we take down the requirements that are necessary, that have been debated in this Assembly in terms of what we need to do to ensure that environmental standards are met, that public health is not at risk, that safety is there?" but to say, "What are the processes that we've surrounded those requirements with, and are there some things that we can do that ultimately would streamline that process, that would reduce the time that it takes business to effectively complete the requirement that they have, and in the course of that would we positively affect the productivity, which is so important to our competitiveness, as a result of potentially removing some of that underbrush that's requiring time, that's really unnecessary, and again, most importantly, ensuring the compliance to the requirements that we've established in this province that are so important?"

The Deputy Speaker: You have eight seconds.

Ms Blakeman: So what you're talking about is not so much the compliance but the reporting on the compliance. Is that correct?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I would like to start by thanking our hon. Premier for bringing forward this inspired piece of legislation that would see government and industry come together to create a more competitive and prosperous Alberta. Despite tough times Albertans can remain optimistic when looking forward because in times like these Albertans roll up their sleeves and work together to ensure a bright future. Bill 1 recognizes this and moves Alberta to adapt to the change in the world economy.

Mr. Speaker, this innovative piece of legislation will examine ways to further improve Alberta's competitiveness position. For instance, it will increase collaboration between government, industry, and business. This will allow development of Alberta's competitiveness and provide long-term benefits for Alberta families and the entire province. This government will use this legislation to build upon and strengthen current initiatives such as Alberta Innovates, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, and the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA. These programs already give Alberta a competitive edge, which will be bolstered by the Alberta Competitiveness Act. There will also be recommendations to enhance Alberta's competitiveness in the global marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, ministers and stakeholders will review all economic sectors and determine whether Alberta can strengthen its competitiveness advantage. Through Bill 1 Albertans can create a more prosperous economy, which will benefit all citizens, including our most vulnerable. In addition, the Alberta Competitiveness Act will enable Albertans to construct a better future while utilizing the initiatives this province has already put in place, initiatives like the sustainability fund, which cushions Alberta from the full brunt of any economic downswings. Due to this excellent fiscal planning and a commitment to savings for a rainy day, this government has put itself in a fortunate position. In addition, Bill 1 will let this province continue to build on our strengths and result in an outstanding quality of life for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of our individual affiliations I think we can all agree that Alberta is already a leader in many fields. Our trade programs, for example, are second to none in Canada. As a journeyman mechanic in my former life I understand the importance of training Albertans to work in the trades. I believe very strongly that as Albertans we're lucky to have the incredible opportunities to learn and develop our skills in our province.

For example, when I was a teacher, I served as a registered apprenticeship program co-ordinator at one of the Edmonton public schools. For those who don't know the RAP program, it allows high school students to work in a field they are interested in while allowing them to earn credits towards a high school diploma. It also qualifies up to 500 students for scholarships in Alberta in order to continue training in the trade of their choice, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to programs available, there's also great infrastructure support to help learn trades in Alberta. Recently I attended an open house at Amiskwaciy Academy, which is run by Edmonton public schools for their skills centre, which was built to help students gain real-world experience with hands-on courses. The visit really opened my eyes on how committed our schools are to helping students learn the trades by building world-class facilities and developing world-class programs.

Mr. Speaker, these are just two examples. There are many, many programs out there for all Albertans right across the province. From the better known trades like carpentry, plumbing, automotives, and welding to trades like toolmaker, baker, cosmetologist, hairstylist, ironworker – I could go on and on – the options that today's Albertan has are truly incredible. My point is that as a province we are already doing really innovative things, and this is all part of increasing our competitive edge. By training Albertans in all these different trades and committing to programs that allow them to pursue their future, it is easy to see why Alberta truly is the best place to live, work, and invest.

Tradespeople are benefiting from learning skills and becoming more competitive in the labour marketplace. Companies are benefiting from a homegrown, talented, and skilled workforce, and all Albertans benefit from our products becoming superior to our competitors' and becoming increasingly relied upon thanks to the skills of our workers trained right here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, these types of innovative programs should be continually examined and strengthened. I see that as part of what Bill 1 will do. Because of this I strongly support this bill and would once again like to thank our hon. Premier for showing incredible vision in doing what is best for all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I would like to move to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate members for a good afternoon of lively debate and remind all that we have another lively contest on in Vancouver tonight, and we may want to find out how the Canadians are doing against the Russians. For that reason I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:45 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, today is the fifth anniversary of the four fallen RCMP members who lost their lives in Mayerthorpe March 3, 2005, and our prayer today will include a moment of silence.

We give thanks for the lives of Your faithful servants who defend the freedoms and values that are a true expression of Your divine intent. We humbly ask Your blessings and grace upon the lives of Canadian police officers and military personnel lost in service to their countrymen.

I would ask you now to observe a moment of silence.

May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured today to introduce the Hon. Michael de Jong, the Attorney General of the province of British Columbia, who also represents the constituency of Abbotsford West. Over the noon hour, which has been my third opportunity to meet with the minister, I had the opportunity to talk to him about the work that we are doing together across western provinces and particularly in B.C. and Alberta on ways to make our communities safer and to ensure that people in our provinces feel more secure. I am pleased today to ask the minister to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 32 of Alberta's brightest and best students. They're visiting us from the East elementary school in Leduc, which is my hometown. They are accompanied by four staff: teachers Roxanne Brayford and Tanya Dukeshire and educational assistants Shelley Hanson and Nikki Lafreniere. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 current participants from the municipal internship program. I had a chance to meet with them earlier, and I'm very confident that we have a great group of future municipal administrators. The municipal internship program encourages recent postsecondary graduates to pursue a career in municipal government. The program provides an opportunity to gain first-hand municipal experience. Since 2002, 86 interns have completed the program. This increases the pool of trained, skilled professionals who manage our municipalities.

The municipal interns with us today are Charlotte Nesbit, the city of Camrose; Sean Lee, the town of Beaumont; Darren Reedy, the town of Didsbury; Jared Milne, the town of Morinville; Arlos Crofts, the town of Ponoka; Keith Davis, the town of Raymond; Michelle Neilson, the town of Sylvan Lake; Ian Phillips, municipal district of Foothills and the town of High River; Matthew Kreke, the county of Newell; Meredith Seeton, Vulcan county; Kristen Tuff, county of Wetaskiwin. Mr. Speaker, joining the interns today are four program staff from Municipal Affairs: Wendy Peters, the manager of the internship program; Val Hope, internship adviser; Kristine Jonah, internship adviser; and the other internship adviser, Melanie Wood. These individuals are all seated in the members' gallery today, and I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Lori Simon. Ms Simon has had a long interest in the workings of government and also in learning more about the processes and proceedings undertaken during question period in the Legislative Assembly. As her MLA I'm pleased to have her attend today. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three outstanding social workers who have joined us as we recognize the first week of March as National Social Work Week. We thank all social workers across the province, who work hard to support our children, youth, and families in our communities.

Our guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that each of you rise as I introduce you to the members of the Assembly. We have the executive director and registrar of the Alberta College of Social Workers, Rod Adachi. We also have Line Brunelle, who has her diploma and is currently completing her bachelor of social work. Also, we have Connie Zacharias, who has worked in our department for almost 25 years and is the recipient of the award of excellence from the Alberta College of Social Workers. Well done, Connie. She is joined by her husband, Richard, and her son Shane, who, as he said to me earlier, is very proud of his mom. I'd ask that everyone here please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Shahid Hassan, seated today in the members' gallery. Mr. Hassan is president of the Bangladesh Canada Association of Edmonton. This past weekend I was honoured to join the association in celebrating International Mother Language Day at the Pleasantview community hall along with 400 other Albertans. For those who do not know, International Mother Language Day was declared by UNESCO in 1999 to promote linguistic and cultural diversity as well as multilingualism. I think we can all appreciate the importance of our own mother languages in shaping ourselves, our families, and our communities. I would like to thank Shahid Hassan for continuing to champion this important work. At this time I ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly seven members from the Harmony Dialogue Group in the constituency of Edmonton-Calder. They're a hard-working nonprofit organization that focuses on intercultural understanding through volunteer-powered events. They were here today to distribute Noah's pudding in the lower rotunda. I'll discuss a little more about this group in a member's statement later this afternoon. For now I would like the members to rise as I introduce them: Mr. Ibrahim Cin, the executive director; Dr. Fatih Dogan and Mr. Taner Tunali, board members; and the four other members of the Harmony Dialogue Group that are here with them as well. I'd ask you to receive the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is a new and unique facility in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. This facility has provided services since November and opened its doors officially in January. I met some of the staff and asked them to please come down and be introduced. I'll be doing a member's statement later to talk about the facility, but what we're talking about is the new Today Family Violence Help Centre. With us we have Patrick Dillon, who is the executive director. Please rise, Patrick. As well, Megan Davies has joined us. She is a resource worker at this wonderful new centre. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Fallen Four in Memoriam

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to mark a tragic anniversary and a dark day in the history of our province, the day we lost four RCMP members near the town of Mayerthorpe. Peter Schiemann, Brock Myrol, Anthony Gordon, and Leo Johnston tragically lost their lives in the line of duty on March 3, 2005. I think we all remember the moment when we heard of the shocking events on that day. Their deaths and those of all police and peace officers who perished in the line of duty are a national tragedy. Albertans, indeed all Canadians, continue to mourn their loss.

Mr. Speaker, police and peace officers play an important role in our daily lives here in Alberta and across Canada. They uphold the laws of our land, protect our families, keep our communities and neighbourhoods safe. Every day they leave for work never knowing what they will encounter in the line of duty. The deaths of these four officers remind us of the risks that all police officers face while carrying out their duties.

So many people were touched by this senseless tragedy, Mr. Speaker. Five years later the pain and grief are still with us. These four members deserve our deepest gratitude for their sacrifice. Today I hope we all honour the memories of Peter, Brock, Anthony, and Leo. On behalf of a grateful province I extend our deepest sympathies to their families, friends, and colleagues, who continue to live with the loss. They will forever be remembered for their courage and bravery.

I ask all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, to remember these four men and all of the peace and police officers who gave the ultimate sacrifice in service to their communities, their province, and their fellow citizens. May God grant them all eternal rest.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has spoken with eloquence and sincerity on an issue that deeply touches Albertans. I want to thank him for honouring the four fallen officers and the men and women who risk their lives on behalf of each of us every day. Well said, hon. Minister.

As a person whose life has been directly affected by crime and violence, I have the deepest appreciation and respect for police officers. I understand the risks they face every day, the sacrifices they make to protect our lives and our values. Canadians value law and order very highly. It's part of our national culture. Whereas the opening up of the American frontier has been characterized as a chaotic Wild West, we took a different route, sending out the North West Mounted Police first to ensure that the law and peace were upheld and respected even before European settlers made their way across the prairies.

Peter Schiemann, Brock Myrol, Anthony Gordon, and Leo Johnston were following that proud tradition when they were senselessly murdered. There are no words that can ever heal the pain of this tragedy, but I hope that their loved ones can take some solace in the deeply felt regrets and compassion that all Albertans felt and continue to feel surrounding this terrible incident.

In many ways the men and women of the RCMP and our other police and peace services are ordinary people – husbands, wives, sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, parents – but in one particular way they are truly extraordinary. For the sake of the safety of their fellow Canadians they risk everything every day. Sometimes, as in Mayerthorpe five years ago, they pay a terrible price for their altruism.

Thank you, Peter. Thank you, Brock. Thank you, Anthony. Thank you, Leo. For your sacrifice we are eternally grateful. May your friends, families, in fact all Albertans take comfort in the knowledge that your sacrifice was not in vain, but it was in order to uphold the highest ideals of our civilization.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that additional members would want to make comment today with respect to this very tragic anniversary. I'll ask one question: does any member object to additional members participating? If you do object, just simply say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many Albertans and Canadians March 3, 2005, will always be remembered as a dark day in our history. The shocking news immediately made headlines around the world and would go down in history as Canada's worst police killing. Constables Brock Myrol, 29; Anthony Gordon, 28; Leo Johnston, 32; and Peter Schiemann, 25, were doing what they loved and what they were sworn to do when joining the RCMP, which was to ensure the safety and security of the people who lived in their community. These brave men will always be remembered for their dedication, their determination, their valour, their gallantry, and the sacrifice they made to protect the citizens that they were sworn to protect. As a former Solicitor General I had the opportunity to travel the province and meet many of these brave men and women of the RCMP. They are truly among Alberta's and Canada's finest.

Today we honour the lives of the Fallen Four RCMP constables and extend our thoughts and our prayers to their loved ones as the fifth anniversary of their deaths approaches.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to take this opportunity to again express my condolences to the family of Leo Johnston, Anthony Gordon, Peter Schiemann, and Brock Myrol on the fifth anniversary of their deaths near Mayerthorpe. March 3, 2005, is a painful memory for the loved ones of those four RCMP constables, the people of Mayerthorpe and its area, and all Albertans. It serves as a reminder of the dangers that people in uniform face. They accept a duty to uphold the law and protect all of us, and sometimes the price they pay is extremely high. Law enforcement in Alberta had never experienced a tragedy of this scale, and we are all united in the hope that we will never see anything like it again.

The Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe is evidence of the community's dedication to preserving the memory of these individuals. It also shows the determination of the people of Mayerthorpe to move beyond their grief and celebrate the lives of these four men, something many Albertans will be reflecting on in the coming days.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for this opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank all those that have so caringly expressed their condolences to the families. Not just the families but the communities of Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt suffered a sincere loss. Next week in Mayerthorpe on March 3 at 7 o'clock at the Fallen Four memorial site there will be a ceremony. I wish to extend an invitation to any one of you that would like to attend on behalf of their constituencies to attend this event with me.

Thank you, sir.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Harmony Dialogue Group

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk a little more about the Harmony Dialogue Group, that I just introduced. They came to the Legislature today to distribute Noah's pudding for Ashurah, an important day of observance for many Muslims, Christians, and Jews. Ashurah falls on the 10th day of the month of Muharram in the Islamic lunar calendar. Noah's pudding is a healthy dessert filled with nuts and fruits, and I hope that many of my colleagues had a chance to taste this pudding first-hand today because it was very good.

In the Turkish culture this pudding commemorates the Biblical story of the landing of Noah's ark. They believe that towards the end Noah was running low on rations and cooked this dish from whatever happened to be left over. They distribute this dish each year to members of their community through churches, schools, and other organizations to raise awareness about harmony within the community.

The Harmony Dialogue Group has sister organizations in major cities like Calgary, Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, New York, Los Angeles, Paris, Melbourne, as well as in many other countries around the world. The motto for this group is From Dialogue through Hospitality to Friendship. They believe that we can all exist together despite our differences in backgrounds and cultures. By sharing their pudding, the Harmony Dialogue Group encourages involvement, participation, understanding, acceptance, and co-operation in and amongst communities and organizations. It is their hope that together we can find a dialogue that helps to make the connections between communities stronger.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PDD Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the Premier was asked questions that came directly from guests in the gallery. The Premier was dismissive and perhaps disrespectful of the guests by not answering their questions. Today we ask the Premier to do the right thing and provide real answers, that the guests were seeking. To the Premier. The Seniors budget shows $119 million allocated to supports for the delivery system. What does this money pay for, and why is there such a large difference in how this is allocated across six PDD regions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have provision for discussion of estimates. All departments are bringing their estimates forward. I believe the opposition has close to two hours on each department to ask these questions. The ministers are able to provide specifics to every line item in that budget.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, another question from yesterday: why is $915,000 going to board governance when the board members are typically volunteers? Why is there such a large difference in this spending between the six regions?

Mr. Stelmach: A very good question. We'll find out during the estimates why the discrepancy, and if there are some boards that are charging more for their input as board members than others, then we want to know about it. If some are doing that on a volunteer basis, we certainly commend them and will try and find out why other boards aren't doing it.

Dr. Swann: Well, since Seniors is already done, Mr. Speaker, I guess I would ask a third question to the Premier. The minister of seniors stated that the PDD budget will not be increased but that any efficiency savings that come from her department would be directed to front-line staff. How much will need to be found in efficiencies to accommodate PDD caseloads, that are increasing by 50 to 100 per year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the overall support for the vulnerable has increased in the budget, but the question I would have to the hon. member is: why is it that the good questions have now come from those that offered those questions and not from members across the House? Now he's saying that we've already done the estimates and that we can't ask those questions. I would say: put those questions all in writing, and the minister will give detail to every question.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Municipal Sustainability Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government likes to talk up its municipal sustainability funding. In fact, in press releases it's claiming that the municipal sustainability initiative will be maintained over time, but this program is now being stretched out far beyond the original number of years. Again to the Premier: given that the government is providing less each year than was agreed upon when the MSI was signed three years ago, why is the government claiming in press releases that funding has actually increased?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to $11.3 billion over 10 years. Given this economic downturn I spoke very honestly in open dialogue with municipalities and said: "Look, we can't dip even further into savings than we have already to date to sustain municipal funding. Would you be open to stretching that 10-year period another year or two?" All municipalities agree that that's the way to go. They appreciate the funding. Notwithstanding the fact that it isn't as much as what they thought they were going to receive in the original plan, it is still much more than any other province supports their municipalities anywhere in the country of Canada.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the question was: why is the government claiming to be increasing the funding?

Mr. Stelmach: Municipalities are receiving today more for infrastructure than back in 2007. That's very clear.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the original deal promised to stretch out over 10 years, but now the money is going to be stretched over more, so less money each year. Does the Premier accept that his government broke its word again to municipalities in the province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're working in partnership with municipalities.

The other thing is that we are receiving some very, very, very good tenders on infrastructure in the province, whether it be the building of roads, replacement of water or sewer, improvements to infrastructure no matter where we are in the province of Alberta, sometimes with as much as 40 per cent savings. So there may be less going this year in terms of some very specific grants, but on the other hand we're getting a very good buy for the money that we're investing in infrastructure. I would say that most municipalities said that it more than equals what they've seen in reduction in their municipal funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with the third Official Opposition main question.

Cabinet Policy Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When asked about appointments to cabinet policy committees on Tuesday, it was stated that members were paid according to order in council, but that wasn't the question. The question was: how are Conservative members appointed? The Legislative Assembly Act states that to be paid for committee work, members must be appointed by order in council, by regulation, or ministerial order. To the Premier: since we know the appointments were not made by order in council, how did the Premier appoint all 69 Conservative members to the cabinet policy committees without violating the Legislative Assembly Act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the other day the member asked for a copy of the order in council. Unfortunately, I didn't bring it with me here today, but I believe that order in council was issued close to two years ago. It's public. For all orders in council, as soon as they're signed, copies are left with all members of the media. I know the media has them, and we'll make sure that a copy is given to the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the Premier is confused and does not understand. We're not after the order in council that set up the fee schedule for the committee work. We are after the order in council, if it does exist, for the appointments to the five cabinet policy committees that you set up so that each and every Conservative MLA last year received $1.4 million. Show us that order in council, or you're in violation of the act.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. Each member did not receive $1.4 million. You know, one day we don't have an order in council, and today we do have an order in council. All members were appointed to CPC through ministerial order. The order in council gave, very publicly, the rate of pay to those members.

Mr. MacDonald: He's digging himself in deeper, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the Premier. If what the Premier stated on Tuesday is true, that the cabinet policy committees are "not committees of the Legislature," why does the order in council or the ministerial order that sets out the fee schedule for these committees fall under the authority of the Legislative Assembly Act, specifically section 37? Are you not violating that section?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this is almost a point of privilege at this stage.

An Hon. Member: He needs a lawyer.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member is not entitled to ask for legal advice, but he probably should get legal advice if he can't even read section 37 of the Legislative Assembly Act, which allows for the payment of members in a number of different circumstances. One of the ways that Members of the Legislative Assembly are paid is pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the allocations under the Members' Services Committee. Another way that Members of the Legislative Assembly are paid is if they take on other responsibilities. Some serve as members of Executive Council, some serve as members of cabinet policy committees, as an example, and some in the past have served as members of agencies, boards, and commissions, and the Legislative Assembly Act specifically allows and provides for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Royalty Framework

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under previous leadership the government could actually brag that Alberta was the best place to do business. We had low taxes, an economy that was firing on all cylinders, and we had a balanced budget. Today that has been eroded by this government and this Premier. We condemned this government's decision to increase royalties and undermine the confidence of people wanting to invest in Alberta. To the Premier: what compelled him to destroy investors' confidence in Alberta and make our oil and gas industry the most uncompetitive in Canada?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have seen record investments in the oil sands over the last couple of years.

With respect to the issue on natural gas there has been a significant play now in shale gas not only in British Columbia and Saskatchewan but in various states in the United States. In fact, indeed, according to the latest The Economist thousands of trillions of cubic feet of shale gas could be found in countries around the world. There are significant pressures, and that's why we introduced Bill 1, the Competitiveness Act, and I encourage all members to actively participate in the debate.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has a predictable pattern. They make bad decisions and then refuse to recognize that they are responsible for the consequences. When this government plowed ahead with changes to the royalty, it ignored industry concerns, dismissed opinions from the investment community, ignored pleas from small communities across Alberta, and refused to change course even when its own members and our party pointed out the problems. To the Premier: why did he want to tax our oil and gas industry out of Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the royalty and all of the other issues related to competitiveness are overarching in terms of the oil and gas industry, agriculture, forestry, and also tourism. That's why we're looking at competitiveness in all the fields, coming forward with measurements to make sure that we're the most innovative and competitive economy in North America. We are going to get there. We'll have to make adjustments. There's a huge global economic shift, and there's huge competition amongst countries for not only investment but for people as well.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Premier, your decision for the new royalty framework will go down in history as the most draconian and worst decision ever made by a Premier of this province. Albertans have never forgiven Trudeau and the Liberals for the national energy program, and they'll never forgive you for your new royalty framework.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Alberta's Showcase at 2010 Winter Olympics

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Olympics have been going on for some time now in Vancouver and have generated a lot of excitement and interest in winter sports. We want to wish all our Canadian athletes the very best. The world's attention has been on Canada, and this has created a perfect opportunity for Albertans to promote our province and our products.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that Monday was an important day for Alberta food products at the Olympics. My question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: what was involved in that day, and how were you able to promote Alberta's food products?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, Monday was Alberta food day at the Olympics in Vancouver. We have over 20 producers and processors of Alberta food products in the province that provided food for the Olympic experience, and food writers from around the globe were invited to sample Alberta's offerings on Monday along with members of the public at Alberta House. It was an unbelievable experience, and there was nothing left on the plates. I'm sure they enjoyed the experience.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can speak from experience. I was there a couple of weeks ago, and the food was good at Alberta House.

An Hon. Member: Who paid for it?

Mr. Prins: I paid for it.

My second question is to the same minister. What other efforts are being made to showcase our agricultural products in Vancouver?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a great opportunity for Albertans to showcase how proud they are not only of their province but of their country because many people, of course, don't speak that way. Over the Olympic experience 18,000 to 20,000 people from around the world will taste what Alberta has to offer. That's our future for our second-largest industry and our largest sustainable industry and renewable industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: has our presence at the Olympics opened any doors for expanding our markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we've had opportunities to meet with a number of people in the food industry that are already exporting products into other countries and want to locate in Alberta and want to add employment and want to further export products and increase our market share.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know how I'm going to follow that, but I'll try.

Today we learned of another move by oil sands companies to limit the amount of bitumen being upgraded here in the province of Alberta. We need this value-added industry. We need the jobs and the taxes that it brings, and we need the industrial by-products that it makes. To the Minister of Energy: does the minister accept that this cutback and others like it are a serious blow to maintaining a substantial upgrading industry in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as I've stated in the House before, Mr. Speaker, these are business decisions, and they're made on the basis of whether or not they're economically profitable. Ideally, obviously, Alberta would like to have more upgrader capacity in Alberta, but when the margin is very narrow, you're not likely to encourage private-sector investment in that business.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government keeps talking about bitumen royalties in kind, but these kinds of shifts indicate that that's not going to keep a very large proportion of bitumen here in Alberta, so I'd like to know from the minister what's next. What else does the minister have to use because the bitumen royalty in kind program seems clearly not to be enough?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I don't agree with the member, Mr. Speaker. The bitumen royalty in kind is a very important program that's been introduced by our government. We believe over time that that will be a very wise decision. As production ramps up, there are opportunities for increased bitumen for the people of Alberta. As you know, we have a proposal out there right now for an upgrader to upgrade the Alberta portion of the BRIK program, and I think that's going to be, if we look back 10 years from now, a very important decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we wait for the government to act, long-term decisions are getting finalized by industry. I understand the proposal is out there. We need some time, but time matters. So how long do Albertans have to wait before the minister starts to push other means of adding value here in the province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, I don't agree with the preamble, Mr. Speaker. The impression was left that somehow Alberta is not coming forward with initiatives. The BRIK initiative is a clear indication of what we're prepared to do to ensure that Albertans going forward have the opportunity to benefit from upgraded bitumen in this province, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Cabinet Travel to the 2010 Winter Olympics

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a very large Alberta presence at the Vancouver Olympic Games, and I'm not just talking about curlers like Kevin Martin or Cheryl Bernard or a hockey player like Jarome Iginla. We've got the Alberta express, we've got Alberta House, and of course attendance by a number of cabinet ministers. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Mr. Minister, are there some real benefits that I can tell my constituents about, or are we just being good neighbours?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much for the question. I was one of the cabinet ministers that attended the Olympic Games in my capacity as minister responsible for the Francophone Secretariat. While I was there, I met many francophone leaders across the country, including the secretary general of the international francophonie organization, the Premier of Quebec, my colleagues from the Ministerial Conference on the Canadian Francophonie.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents from the town of Beaumont would be quite interested to find out why the minister is working so hard on francophone issues at the Olympics.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the bilingual nature of the games makes it an ideal opportunity to promote Alberta's francophone culture internationally. We were joined by other provinces and territories to participate in initiatives like the Canadian Francophonie Day and the Cultural Olympiad. In fact, Prime Minister Harper's personal envoy on official languages at the games praised Alberta's presence there, and he recognized the participation of Franco-Albertan artists at Alberta House.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Mr. Minister, I understand that one of your meetings included the Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General for B.C. Could you expand on those meetings?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware . . . [interjections] Thank you. Thank you. As you are aware, Alberta and B.C. co-operate very, very closely during times of crisis or emergencies. As an example, Alberta is the primary source for co-ordinating a response to major earthquakes in B.C. I took advantage of the time there to discuss other issues, the best practices that we have when it comes to law enforcement, forest firefighting.

Energy Efficiency

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. I didn't know that it was puffball day. [interjections] I didn't know. I didn't get the memo.

Energy efficiency is an essential step towards achieving Alberta's emission targets and the most effective means of reducing greenhouse gas emissions from a cost perspective. Guys, it's low-hanging fruit. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister include a minimum standard of EnerGuide 80 for all new home construction going forward into the energy efficiency legislation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the words of the member opposite, it's puffball day. I'll hit one out of the park for her. The issue is not for the Minister of Environment to make that decision. I advise the minister responsible, who is the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Blakeman: You're supposed to be guiding this government in environmental policy.

Question 2 to the same minister: given that energy efficiency in homes increases property values while significantly benefiting our environment, will the minister include mandatory third-party energy efficiency labelling of new homes in the energy efficiency legislation or talk to his friend about it?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a myriad of opportunities that we have to incent and enhance the degree of energy efficiency. That is the responsibility and the role of the Minister of Environment, to point those opportunities out; in fact, to urge caucus to adopt those. But I think it would be presumptuous in the extreme for me to tell this member that I can promise something that is not within my jurisdiction to implement.

Ms Blakeman: Well, why doesn't the minister share with us exactly what he is doing to get his colleague to implement this legislation? There's a puffball for you. Go ahead. Hit it out of the park.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we have initiated an interdepartmental committee that is responsible for reviewing all things related to the building code and other matters with respect to energy efficiency. That will then drive towards a recommendation that comes forward not only from Environment but from Municipal Affairs, from other ministries, not the least of which is Treasury Board because some of this will involve public dollars. At that point in time we will make a decision, and I'll be more than happy to advise the member what it is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Children and Youth Services Workforce

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we heard during the introduction of guests this afternoon, next week is National Social Work Week. Social workers are extremely important members of our communities. Many of them work to help keep children and youth safe and to ensure that families have access to the supports and services that they need to build on their strengths and overcome their challenges. My first question is to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. I know that government currently has a hiring restraint in place. What assurances can you provide that your ministry is making sure there continue to be the social workers that are needed to serve vulnerable children and families in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know this is a concern of this member. She has spoken with me directly about it, and the member is correct. We have hundreds of social workers that work within our department. They are providing excellent service. I want to assure you, hon. member, that any hiring restraint that you're referring to, the critical front-line positions are going to be filled. My expectation, as I've told you earlier as well, is that any front-line position that becomes vacant will be filled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second question to the same minister: what initiatives does your ministry have under way to ensure that front-line workers, as you mentioned, including social workers, are able to manage their workloads in a way that allows them to give each child and family they work with the attention that they do need?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say once again that we have great respect for the good work that's being done by our staff on the front line. Staff have brought a very real concern to our attention that relates to workload. That's the extra, it seems like, huge volume of paperwork that they're needing to fill out. How we've addressed that is that we've had staff work with management. They've developed a new software system so that they can manage not only the paperwork but their workload. That's known as the new Intervention Services Information System – you'll be hearing more about that – that's called ISIS.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's very good news.

My final question to the same minister. According to documents released when the budget was announced, there will be a reduction of more than 50 full-time positions at the Ministry of Children and Youth Services. Could the minister please tell which staff are being laid off and how many of these staff are front-line workers?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I have had this discussion with the hon. member as well, and I've made it very clear that we are not laying off any staff as a result of the budget. Any reduction that was reported in the budget will be achieved through attrition, and front-line positions that are critical to supporting vulnerable children and families, hon. member, will continue to be filled.

Number of Provincial Constituencies

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes to Alberta's electoral boundaries provide further evidence that the growing pains that we are experiencing in this great province are very real and very evident. The current provincial budget frequently incorporates the term "finding efficiencies." How about this efficiency: keep Alberta's Legislature at 83 seats and save millions. Will the minister consent to doing this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the boundaries commission has provided a report reflecting the current state of the legislation in Alberta. There's much time for public comment, and I'll look forward to what the result might be in the future.

Mr. Hehr: Well, regarding public comment much of that has already been made to the commission. It was noted in the report that many Albertans really don't want another four MLAs. So how about following the first rule of democracy, listening to these people and not incorporating these four MLAs?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Legislation

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, the first rule of democracy is to uphold the laws of the province of Alberta. This Assembly has passed a piece of legislation mandating 87 electoral divisions. Is the hon. member asking the Minister of Justice to not observe the law, to break the law?

I'm sorry. You're going on to your third question, please.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Here's my third question, then. If that is in fact true, can we put forward some new legislation, then, to keep it at 83 seats so that we don't have another four?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Legislature is open for public business, and if the member wants to introduce legislation, he's certainly entitled to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Sour Gas Well Safety

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it certainly is Thursday.

As we speak, a gas well in northern Alberta is on fire, threatening the health and safety of people who live nearby. A 1982 fire at another site killed two people and created a toxic cloud so thick that it hung over Edmonton for weeks. Sour gas wells are a constant threat to those who live around them, and this government is ignoring the threat. My question is for the Minister of Energy. Why is your government putting Albertans' health at risk by ignoring the threats posed by sour gas?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, this particular member in raising the question the way he did is, I would say, irresponsible at best. We have got one of the world-renowned agencies, the Energy Resources Conservation Board, on-site with seven monitoring units which say that there is zero odour. Zero. It is not sour gas. There is no sour gas being detected in the area. So I would suggest that the member might want to tone down his rhetoric and ask a responsible question, and I'll try and give him a responsible answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, deflecting responsibility onto the ERCB is a cop-out. That body is an industry lapdog designed to approve and expedite requests from the oil and gas industry. The fact is that this well could have been a sour gas well, and technically it was expected to be. [interjections] Laugh all you want, but there are sour gas wells affecting thousands and thousands of Albertans all around this province. They're dangerous to their health, and the government is doing nothing about it. Why doesn't the minister simply admit that they don't care about the health and safety of those Albertans because they just keep putting . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't admit it because it's absolutely false.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, all over the province sour gas wells cause fear and anxiety among families who live nearby. They have sour gas wells in both Edmonton and Calgary in residential areas. People are bombarded with the smell of hydrogen sulphide every day. Even small levels over time can lead to major health problems. Albertans should not be forced to live with these fears because the government will not stand up to industry. Why won't this government end the approval of sour gas wells that are in close proximity to the homes where Albertans raise their families?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this member in raising his first question said that it must be Thursday, and he's right. It absolutely is Thursday. I think that is best exemplified by the absolute baloney in the preamble to his question.

Integrated Traffic Units

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, my questions today are to the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, who didn't get to go to the Olympics. Recently the minister announced that Alberta traffic sheriffs and RCMP traffic services would be integrated into new traffic units in 19 locations throughout the province. This new model is based on pilot projects held in 2009 in Whitecourt, Airdrie, Wetaskiwin, and Olds. I'm somewhat puzzled to see that the units are being established in Innisfail when right next door in Red Deer another unit is stationed and the next one located south in Airdrie. My question to the Solicitor General is: would it not be more feasible to have a more central location between Red Deer and Airdrie such as Didsbury or Olds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I did not get to go to the Olympics.

Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to 19 integrated sheriff and RCMP traffic units that are going to be deployed across our province. Of particular note, four of those units, based in Leduc, Ponoka, Innisfail, and Airdrie, are dedicated to freeway traffic in the QE II corridor, and they are reasonably spaced along that corridor.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister: who made the decision on where to locate these traffic units?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, that was and is a decision best left to the people that plan such things, the operational officers involved, in this case the integrated planning team between the RCMP and the sheriffs.

Mr. Marz: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that a more central location could save on things like fuel costs as well as improve the response times to accidents on the QE II between those locations. Were these issues not considered in this decision?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I believe all factors were looked at in the decision-making process. We had to consider traffic volumes, collision data, and areas with the greatest number of highways and roadways. If I could refer the hon. member to my first answer, those four traffic divisions dedicated to the freeway corridor are reasonably well spaced along it.

Thank you.

Nortel Pension Protection

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, world-wide economic conditions have impacted all Canadians, but they've had dire consequences for a group of former Nortel employees living in Alberta whose LTD and pension benefits were cut off when Nortel collapsed. To add insult to injury, the federal government permitted the sale of Nortel's assets without guaranteeing employee compensation as a precondition. To our EI minister. Ontario is the only province with a pension benefits guarantee fund that's funded entirely by corporate contributions. Will the minister commit to similar measures in this province to protect vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always horrible when a situation like this occurs and workers and their families are left without income.

I have to say two things. Number one, it's very rare for it to occur in Alberta. I must say that my provincial counterparts as early as the beginning of this week have raised this issue at our federal-provincial-territorial meeting to the federal minister. It is squarely a federal matter, so if there is any provincial overlay, I would suggest the member direct his subsequent two questions to our minister of finance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To whoever wishes to answer, I am pleased to hear that these discussions are occurring. The effect is going to be felt in Alberta because we'll be picking up the pieces. Since Nortel's bankruptcy proceedings began, what efforts has the ministry made to ensure that the federal government amends the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act to provide protection for employees affected by corporate bankruptcy? The hon. minister of finance would be fine.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I would have assumed the hon. member would know, both of Nortel's pension plans are registered in Ontario and regulated by the Ontario superintendent of pensions. That's because of their location of Ontario. There is a federal dimension as well. We have been in touch, as the other minister has indicated, with the feds, but this is largely outside of our jurisdiction.

Mr. Chase: What I'm hoping is that this government will stand up for Alberta's former Nortel employees who are being directly affected by the bankruptcy. It's our problem now, and working with the feds is part of the solution, but we have to come up with a made-in-Alberta solution as well.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government has promised former Nortel employees that the first $1,000 of their monthly pension payments will be guaranteed, and Quebec offered some pension protection to Nortel retirees in October of 2009 . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Dr. Morton: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's not surprising that Ontario has done this since both of the Nortel pension plans are registered in Ontario and regulated by Ontario. I would tell the hon. member and the House that the Alberta superintendent is consulting with Alberta Justice currently as to whether or not we would have the opportunity to intervene in the March 3 hearing about the Nortel settlement and, if we can, to possibly object to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Inner-city Urban Renewal

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increased density; increased diversity, including a growing immigrant population and an urban aboriginal population; increased crime levels; decreased home ownership; aging infrastructure; closure of schools; increased commuter traffic; increased property taxes; and a congregation of social facilities are all problems that are facing the urban inner-city communities in my constituency. Does the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs have a strategy in place to address the need for urban renewal and revitalization as a result of these changes in our inner-city communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question. I particularly appreciate it given the fact that I also represent an inner-city community. One such strategy that we employ is the capital grant program. This creates partnerships with nonprofits, municipalities, and the private sector as well as other levels of government and also stakeholder engagement. Both of these types of plans ensure that there is always local input in any decisions that we make. They also cost less money than if the government would simply do it alone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Urban areas may very well benefit from a program similar to the rural development fund, which focuses on both physical capital and building a sense of community. As well, the state of Idaho has an urban renewal law, which assigns powers to urban renewal agencies. My next question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Do you see any potential for allocating issue-based funding and decision-making powers to collaborative partnerships, that include certain municipalities such as Calgary and Edmonton, various provincial ministries, and community-based organizations, for urban renewal?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the responsibility for urban renewal rests with the individual municipalities. These municipalities are required to give notice of intention to prepare plans and provide opportunities for input. The level of involvement between the municipality and the community group is virtually at the discretion of that individual municipality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. The second part of his ministry's mission is to assist urban communities in addressing their unique needs. My question is: will he commit to this Assembly to advocating amongst his cabinet colleagues for greater awareness about the challenges of urban inner-city communities before these communities lose hope?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member raises an important point, the fact that there is not a one-size-fits-all approach. What may work for his inner-city community may not work for mine. That's why, again, we are going through these partnerships with the local areas here.

A couple of weeks ago I attended phase 1 of the Boyle Street renaissance in Edmonton. That's a great example of partnerships that revitalize the community. We look at neighbourhood renewal, but again it's on an individual, case-by-case basis, realizing that one size does not fit all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Food Production Land Use

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I didn't get a chance to go to the Olympics either.

This week the Edmonton city council passed their municipal development plan, which included a section on food and urban agriculture. The local food industry has a significant impact on the economy, environment, social, and cultural growth in urban areas. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Sustainable food systems will be a defining aspect of our urban areas in the future. Has the minister incorporated this into long . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you can proceed.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am indeed pleased that the member opposite is such a supporter of the local food industry because, of course, it's hugely important to our province's economy.

It is one area of agriculture that we've seen the greatest increase, 30 per cent, in our farmers' markets over the past couple of years. The products and the variety that they're producing and that they're showcasing around the world now are available right here in Alberta, and I hope people take advantage.

Ms Pastoor: The expansion of urban areas has led to dramatic losses of prime agricultural land, yet this is not the focus in the land-use framework. What is the minister doing to address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I recall rightly, I believe about 4 to 5 per cent of the provincial land base is urban settings. Unfortunately, one of the problems with that is that around these centres is some of the best soil that we have in our entire province. But the markets continue to increase around our urban centres for products and things that are being brought in, so people can do that shopping within a hundred kilometres.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. That's the urban side of it, but I still think we have to protect our agricultural land. Will the minister introduce initiatives to encourage municipalities to include food and urban agriculture as a central aspect of the development plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a past municipal politician I would expect that the member opposite would understand that land-use issues are issues that are at the local level. It's their responsibility. I expect that they do very much consider at their tables the highest and best use for land and try to make their decisions based on good information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mr. Minister, funding for the immigration program has dropped substantially this year. Is this government abandoning its commitment to bringing new immigrants to this province and to programs like AINP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it is true that funding in that line item has dropped in my budget from $74 million to $65 million but mostly because of the fact that there was one-time federal funding of $6 million in that budget line, which is no longer available. Let me be clear to the member: immigrants have played a vital role in not only the social but the economic development of this province since 1905, and they will continue to play an important role.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. Even with one-time funding it still looks like there's a budget reduction. What are you cutting, and how will it impact our ability to get the people we need?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, naturally in this economic climate there is a lowered requirement for foreign workers, be it trained, skilled, or unskilled, so our department will not be as active on the foreign markets assisting employers in attracting workers to this province. However, having said that, we will continue Alberta's presence in foreign markets because I and my colleagues in cabinet are optimistic. We know that the economy will recover, and we will continue to need immigrants in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what about programs for immigrants who are already here? Can they be confident that they will continue to be supported?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, they can be very confident. We will continue to focus our efforts on the settlement of immigrants who are already here. For instance, programs like English as a second language will continue to be offered in various modes. Some 17,000 clients, immigrants, will be receiving those programs in Edmonton and Calgary alone. The settlement of immigrants right now will become one of our focuses while we still keep active in foreign markets but at a reduced level.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In estimates last week I asked the Minister of Energy whether he thought a recent survey of businesses which found Alberta to be the least competitive place in Canada for oil and gas development was fair. The minister replied that because the report was from the small "c" conservative Fraser Institute, it was likely skewed. Well, yesterday the University of Calgary released their report stating that Alberta is, indeed, the least competitive place in Canada to produce oil and gas. To the Energy minister: will he now admit that the new royalty framework has been a disastrous policy for this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I did read the report by Dr. Mintz. We accept advice wherever we can get advice. Dr. Mintz has made some observations, and as part of our competitiveness review strategy in compiling information, we will certainly use that analysis. What we're doing is much more comprehensive than what the report was yesterday, but we will take that information.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that this government always wants to move forward; they don't want to look to the past. Well, the past is useful for learning what mistakes to avoid in the future, which is why I find it distressing that the government didn't learn from Pierre Elliott Trudeau's national energy program. They don't understand that when they attack the energy business, regular Albertans suffer. To the minister: why is it taking this government so long to reverse its made-in-Alberta national energy policy? Let's move forward.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to move forward, and we are moving forward. You know, as I pointed out in this House one time – and the member may not have been here because it might have been before he was elected. You know, there's a country music song, No Future in the Past. I think that's where the member might be living. We are moving forward and look forward to the report.

Mr. Anderson: Well, he can tell that to my family and friends who are still looking for work in the energy sector thanks to this government's ridiculous energy decision.

One of the bewildering things I can't get my head around to this day is why on earth this government would call a competitiveness review and consult with industry after announcing the royalty framework overhaul. To the minister: why didn't this government ask the energy industry for input first, before making such an extreme policy decision involving our most important industry? How could it be so incompetent?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the member is trying to leave the impression that somehow this is Saskatchewan in the '70s. As the Premier pointed out earlier in a response to a question from his equally ill-informed colleague sitting next to him there, there is large investment going on in this province today, lots of it in the oil sands. You know, in the last month we have had literally record land sales. That is confidence in this economy, in conventional oil and gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of the past, in 1974 my father stood in this House and raised concerns that wildfowl were dying on the tailings ponds. Thirty-six years later these tailings lakes have grown to 50 times their original size. The minister's answer for the existing ponds is: this will take some time. Will the minister admit that the time for politely asking for cleanup has long passed and it's time to use your full authority to actually make it happen?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we're doing. We've issued directives, that will be enforced, that will require significant reductions in the use of tailings ponds and eventually will lead to their elimination.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the existing projects are not complying with the government's performance criteria at this point. Now, next week is the start of the trial against Syncrude for their role in the death of over 1,600 ducks on their tailings lake, and of course we know this is only a fraction of the devastation experienced by wildlife as a result of these toxic lakes. How can the minister stand by while companies continue to lakefill dangerous chemical waste without imposing any consequences?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we do not stand by. I just advised the member that we have in fact issued directives that will lead to the elimination of tailings ponds. But this member seems to live in a world where you can suddenly make a decision today and change 25 years of history by tomorrow. It takes time.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would have been really nice if they'd made a decision 36 years ago because that's when they were first warned. Now when asked to do the right thing, all they say is: eventually it will happen. I'm going to ask a clear question asking for a clear timeline, and I hope I can get a clear answer because I really don't want my kids to be having to ask this question 36 years from now. Will this government commit to eliminating the existing lakes of poison sludge within 20 years and to exercising all authority necessary to make sure it happens?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, when someone frames a question with such broad parameters and then wants a yes or no answer, it's about impossible to do so. The fact of the matter is that we have directives in place. There will be significant changes. In fact, I would suggest that within 20 years there will be in place technology that no longer requires tailings ponds. Will the existing ponds be eliminated by then? I cannot predict the future. I guess this member has some kind of power that is beyond me.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today and until March 8, I believe. There were 107 questions and answers today raised by 18 different members, 12 on the Official Opposition and opposition side and six by the private government members' caucus.

We will continue the Routine in 30 seconds from now, but just let me leave you one thought – okay? – please, as you depart in the next 30 seconds. Vancouver is one hour and 10 minutes from the Edmonton International Airport. There is no greater show going on in the world: the Canadian Olympics in Vancouver.

Mr. Boutilier: It's $69 on WestJet.

The Speaker: The hon. member points out that it's a $69 airfare. Anybody can go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to my guests for staying until I could do my member's statement.

Today Violence Help Centre

Ms Blakeman: A collaborative help centre for people impacted by family violence: this short description is on the letterhead of the Today centre, a concise and apt description of the vision and mandate of this new centre in downtown Edmonton. I first heard of this idea when it was a twinkle in the eye of some established NGOs, the Edmonton Police Service, and three levels of government who wanted to take the next step in service delivery in this critical area of family violence. Along with many others I attended the partnership celebration event in January, which let us see what they had been up to since doing a soft opening in November 2009.

This is a community-based centre dedicated to changing the cycle of family violence through co-located staff and linked community services. Their vision is of a healthy community safe and free from family violence. This collaborative community includes the John Howard Society, the Edmonton Police Service, Catholic Social Services, Aboriginal Consulting Services of Alberta, the RCMP, the city of Edmonton community services, and Alberta Children and Youth Services.

These organizations recognize the obstacles of long waiting lists for assistance and financial constraints. They have organized to be easily accessible and to work together to meet the needs of those seeking help regarding domestic violence. I was particularly struck by the space provided for smaller NGOs to come in and work with clients so that a small immigrant women's organization could come and meet their clients there or bring them and, literally, walk them from room to room to connect with the many organizations and services offered there.

The Today centre is striving to increase accountability from those who perpetrate violence, reduce repeat victimization, increase the level of reporting of family violence, enable the active participation of clients in their movement to a safer, healthier life, and reduce the harm caused by violence.

Congratulations to Patrick Dillon and to all of the staff and the agencies who brought this idea to a reality. We welcome you and thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

First Nations Education Agreement

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of us know that a significant academic achievement gap exists between First Nations students and all other students in the province. This is unacceptable. However, yesterday was a great day, a day for celebration because it marked a new beginning for aboriginal education in this province.

Under the leadership of the Minister of Education, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the previous Minister of Aboriginal Relations, and three grand chiefs of Alberta a memorandum of understanding on First Nations education was signed which has as its goal strengthening, learning, and educational success for First Nations students. This was done at a signing ceremony at the Tsuu T'ina First Nation junior and senior high school west of Calgary.

Perhaps most importantly, Mr. Speaker, this memorandum of understanding signifies that all parties recognize the importance of education to all our children, our families, our community, and the greater society. Every student in Alberta deserves to receive the best possible education regardless of where she or he lives and regardless of his or her background.

This MOU will provide a framework for collaboration and will support a range of education-related initiatives, including parental and community engagement, treaty and cultural awareness, and ongoing work on tuition and education service agreements. It provides a framework to guide the transformation of First Nations education in Alberta.

The key highlights include the establishment of an indigenous knowledge and wisdom centre, which for the first time will create a centre of education expertise for all the First Nations and the three treaty organizations; a commitment to develop a long-term strategic plan for First Nations education in Alberta to improve First Nations student outcomes; and a creation of the Alberta First Nations education circle comprised of senior officials from all parties to oversee the implementation of the MOU. It was a profoundly moving event incorporating the finest of First Nations traditions such as music, dance, oratory, and, of course, food.

The chiefs who were all involved thank you for being leaders. Chief Keenooshayo said: I hope this marks the beginning of a true treaty partnership that, among other things, provides us the opportunity to ensure ever-increasing knowledge for our children. Let's realize his vision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and recognize March 1 to 7 as National Social Work Week. Established by the Canadian Association of Social Workers, this special week honours the valuable contributions of social work professionals and the positive difference they make in the lives of others.

Albertans are aware of and support the critical role social workers have in our province, and they recognize that much of their good work happens behind the scenes. Social workers are heroes in our communities, much like firefighters, police officers, and paramedics. They often deal with complex situations involving vulnerable Albertans, ensuring that children and youth are safe, that people with disabilities receive assistance, and that families get the support they need to stay strong and together.

Each and every day social workers help create a brighter future for the people of this province. They embody the Alberta spirit of compassion, courage, and commitment as well as the Premier's vision of making this province the best place to live, work, and raise a family. Our government is privileged to have many of these skilled and dedicated professionals as employees and as partners.

During National Social Work Week I encourage all Albertans to take the time to show their appreciation and say thanks to social workers in their community. The small effort of saying thank you can have benefits far beyond the value of the moments involved. A thank you can motivate, validate, and give positive reinforcement. We cannot afford to not say thank you frequently and graciously to those who do so much for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Inner-city Communities

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-North Hill includes a number of established inner-city communities. These communities have a very diverse composition, from new infill owners, renters, and long-term residents to a high proportion of seniors and new families. To say that these communities aren't homogenous is an understatement, and that's what makes them unique. However, many of these communities are struggling to develop an identity as they go through the natural changes of mature communities.

Many of my constituents believe that the identity of their community is changing but not in a positive way. A number of concerns have been sent to my office regarding the siting and development of social facilities such as group homes, rehabilitation and recovery facilities, affordable housing complexes, and shelters. Overwhelmingly my constituents are concerned that their communities are being used as dumping grounds for these facilities without substantial and prior consultation. They're concerned that both the government of Alberta and the city of Calgary are too focused on sacrificing the livability of their communities to address the very real challenges of a growing metropolitan centre.

Mr. Speaker, residents have invested their entire lives in these communities as well as a portion of their savings through paying higher property taxes and deserve a say in how their communities evolve. My communities are committed to supporting our most vulnerable, and we all share in that responsibility equally. We also have the responsibility towards municipalities and communities to ensure that funded projects do not disrupt the established and evolving identity of communities and that funding approvals include consultation requirements with the communities' elected representatives, officials, and community groups.

Mr. Speaker, these projects will only be successful if the communities that they reside in buy into them. This must be a clear objective of siting these facilities. We strive to have strong communities in this province, and communities are strongest when their residents feel like they have a say and ownership of how the community evolves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

School Closures

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Chronic underfunding of schools is once more leading to plans for school closures in Alberta for the fall of 2010. Some of these are in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Instead of school jurisdictions being able to make decisions on the basis of educational value, they're pushed to make decisions for financial reasons that are bad for the education of our children and youth.

Excellent facilities have been built in communities like Eastwood, Parkdale, and McCauley here in Edmonton. Excellent, dedicated staff have chosen to work at these schools to assist children to achieve educational success. Formulas imposed by the province make it especially difficult for schools with small enrolments. Yet often these schools are located in mature communities and have more students with higher needs, including children from new immigrant families. These schools often have a strong community atmosphere and provide innovative and effective places where children achieve success. When a nearby school closes and more travel is necessary, students and parents face more obstacles. In more distant, larger schools children face larger classes and a more impersonal environment, adding to their learning challenges.

School closures are mostly happening in old neighbourhoods, which makes municipal revitalization efforts more difficult. One of the most important criteria for a young family in deciding where to live is the proximity of schools. Neighbourhoods that are mature will continue to deteriorate if they do not have schools to attract the next generation to make their homes there.

Two days ago the annual implementation plan from the superintendent of Edmonton public schools was released. It includes a sectoral review which puts 76 schools in established neighbourhoods at risk of closure. Mr. Speaker, this has to stop. Funding education that reduces the chance for lower income children is wrong. Forcing the closure of inner-city schools contributes to urban decay. The Alberta NDP will keep demanding a commitment to education that puts children first.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, March 8, 2010, we will deal with Motion for a Return 9.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be here today to speak to the introduction of Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

The amendments were developed in co-operation with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and in response to the recommendations for improvement made by that office. Bill 7 will update and streamline how provincial elections are prepared for and held. We wanted to ensure that changes would improve the elections process while maintaining the integrity of the elections system, and Bill 7 does that.

Under Bill 7, Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer will appoint returning officers instead of asking government to appoint them, making the appointment process less time consuming and eliminating any perception of political involvement.

Bill 7 would also change the process for hiring enumerators. Under Bill 7 returning officers would personally hire enumerators under the direction of the Chief Electoral Officer, eliminating the need to get recommendations from constituency associations.

Bill 7 also includes amendments that broaden investigative powers of the Chief Electoral Officer and open advance polls to those who for any reason want or need to vote early. The amendments also give Albertans who are prisoners the right to vote. This amendment is necessary due to a Supreme Court of Canada ruling.

Third-party advertising legislation will also be improved through Bill 7, ensuring that Albertans who wish to engage in political advertising are able to while ensuring that the public can see who is sponsoring the advertising.

In addition, this legislation increases safeguards for the list of electors and updates the type of information voters can present at polling stations.

To keep Alberta up to date with the latest technological advances, Bill 7 provides a mechanism for the Chief Electoral Officer to explore the use of new voting technologies.

Bill 7 does not address fixed election dates or allowing Albertans to vote at any polling place in any electoral division because of the logistical challenges with that.

Leadership campaign financing rules are also not included in Bill 7, Mr. Speaker. I will be asking the chair of the policy field committee on Public Safety and Services and request the committee to initiate a review and make recommendations regarding financial disclosure rules for leadership contestants for political parties.

This legislation deals with fundamental democratic principles, Mr. Speaker. With Bill 7 we have achieved a balance between updated and streamlined processes and maintaining the integrity of the democratic system.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010.

The objective of this bill is to improve transparency of local access fees and franchise fees by creating a standardized methodology for their calculation using a formula that's easy to compare across jurisdictions. Bill 203 will not impose restrictions on the amount of money that municipalities can generate from these fees nor require them to even impose these fees at all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a memorandum that I have sent to the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services. This memo is indicating that pursuant to Standing Order 52.07 I am requesting that this particular standing committee inquire into and report on the issue of financial disclosure rules for leadership contestants and thus make recommendations for consideration of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table two separate documents, and I have the requisite copies here. One is a good neighbour agreement between the Fresh Start Addictions Centre and the Highland Park Community Association and the Thorncliffe Greenview Community Association regarding a facility that has received provincial funding that will be in place in that community.

The second one is also a good neighbour agreement between the McMan Youth, Family and Community Services Association and the Triwood Community Association for a 24-unit apartment building offering affordable housing options for young adults which resides in the Triwood community in my constituency of Calgary-North Hill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the cover page of an online petition created by an Albertan named Teresa Woo, who is passionate and who is watching us from home right now, as far as I know. When Teresa heard about a possible treatment for multiple sclerosis, she started this petition, and it gained over 10,000 signatures in just a few months. Teresa says: "The people signing this petition are angry and frustrated because our government is not approving this treatment. Those of us with MS are desperate to have this procedure available because if it's a cure or even close, it would be worth it. If we got only half of our mobility back, it is worth a try." The petition can be found by going online at www.gopetition.com and searching for the Zamboni procedure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today on behalf of constituents, and I have received permission from both to do this. The first is from Diane Brouwer, who lives on 82 Street in our constituency. She would like to see funding maintained to our education programs and system.

And also Rosa Bruno, who lives on 86 Street. She would also like to see education funding be maintained and that there be no cuts whatsoever.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of documents showing how the tailings ponds in northeastern Alberta have grown since the 1970s. The first document is an excerpt from a report published in the Open Conservation Biology Journal in 2009, which includes figures on the size of the tailings ponds. The other is a series of satellite images from Environmental Defence Canada. This information relates to the questions of my colleague the representative of Edmonton-Strathcona today.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Edmonton public school board's annual implementation plan for 2010-11, which was made public this week. It shows that many schools in the inner city are in danger of being forced to close as the number of schools in Edmonton's suburbs expand.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it being 3 p.m., I must now advise under Standing Order 7(7) that it is 3 p.m., and the daily Routine is deemed to be concluded.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 5 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's going to be interesting. Last night we had a good, frank discussion on this year's budget on the fourth floor in the Annex with the hon. minister of finance. Now we're back here this afternoon with Bill 5 for this current fiscal year, which is ending, and it's sort of the hon. President of the Treasury Board's annual allowance.

Certainly, there are valid reasons for some of these expenditures. The details of those expenditures have been debated and discussed as this bill has gone through the Assembly. Whenever we look at supplementary supply estimates over the last number of years – and this goes back to, certainly, a time when the hon. President of the Treasury Board was occupied at other things – it's startling to realize that in the last 11 years, going back to 1999-2000, the total additional money requested through supplementary supply is $15 billion. That averages well over $1 billion, about $1.3 billion a year over the last 11 years. Ironically, that's the same amount of money, that we know about, that Alberta Health Services has racked up in budget deficits since they were created on the fly.

Now, if one was to look at this province's and this government's budgeting capabilities from a distance and you were to see this $15 billion number, I think there would be reasons for concern. Those reasons could be, Mr. Speaker, any number of things. People could ask: "How come they can't budget? How come they can't stick to a budget? Why is it that every year they seem to have to go back and on average request an additional $1.3 billion in expenditures?"

Now, we're looking at advanced education. It's the first item, Mr. Speaker. We're looking at $178 million here. We open today's paper and we see where there is concern over at NAIT that there could be a tuition increase. Many members of this Assembly met with various student groups and student leaders in the past couple of weeks to hear their issues, their concerns. Whether a student is at NAIT or Grant MacEwan or at the University of Alberta or the University of Lethbridge or the University of Calgary, they all have concerns about the cost of postsecondary education. These concerns are valid. They're certainly not going away.

We discussed this in a small amount of detail, Mr. Speaker, during the debate that was previously held on Bill 1, on this competitiveness review or whatever is going to be initiated through that mysterious little unnecessary bill. We don't have, when you compare us to other jurisdictions across the country, a large number of students attending our postsecondary institutions. I don't know whether cost is a factor in this. I'm sure the hon. minister of advanced education is thinking: oh, well, we just went through a large economic expansion and boom, and there were jobs for all regardless of whether they attended a postsecondary institution or not, and that would be the reason for our attendance rates being so much lower than other parts of the country.

Regardless of whether it's tuition or capital maintenance and renewal, higher deferred maintenance costs than expected, the changes in student loans and how we're going to apply those changes, there are certainly some concerns around the Advanced Education and Technology budget. Now, there are a lot of things that we could do to ensure that core government services are protected. We had a discussion on this last night in the finance estimates debate, and I would encourage all hon. members to have a look at that debate. It was certainly interesting, to say the least.

Now we go through Culture and Community Spirit, and we look at Employment and Immigration. With this amount of $176 million coming forward, with each respective quarterly update that this government issued, whether it was the second quarter or the third quarter, you could see as the recession lasted that there was certainly a need for money to support those whose EI benefits had exhausted or whose savings had exhausted because, unfortunately – and some members talked about it earlier in question period – the recession was deeper and longer in this province than the government had anticipated. Those amounts in Employment and Immigration certainly are not unexpected if you were looking at the quarterly updates because it seemed to be going up and up and up.

We look at Health and Wellness, and this is always an interesting budget. There doesn't seem to be any attempt at trying to control spending. We are spending more and more money and getting less and less from this government. It's clear that this government cannot manage health care, Mr. Speaker. They're grasping now at the private delivery of health care services. They're hoping that will work. Certainly, whenever you compare us to other jurisdictions, it doesn't seem to have helped. It helps people with very thick, fat wallets and lots of money in their bank accounts, but for the majority of citizens it certainly does not.

We look at some of the moves that have been made by Alberta Health and Wellness, and here we are asking for in this fiscal year an additional $243 million. If you go back to the annual report last year – you can pick volume 1 or volume 2 – you can go through it and can see where some of this money has been spent, not all of it. When we consider how quickly Alberta Health Services was set up and the regional health authorities were disbanded and we look at the role that the former Capital health authority had played in health care delivery in this province and how that role was recognized not only nationally but internationally, it was recognized as a leader in not only health management but also in the delivery of programs and services.

Now, Capital health had very little difficulty balancing their budget, or if they were over budget, it was by a very, very modest amount. But for many of the officials that were working so hard for Capital health, I don't know what role, if any, they are playing in the new Alberta Health Services Board. I was surprised at how silent so many of the government MLAs were when all this happened and Alberta Health Services was set up and the officials at Capital health were told thanks but no thanks. Many of the accounts that were – they weren't full of money, Mr. Speaker, but certainly there was money available as a result of the prudent management. That money was used, at least part of it, to operate Alberta Health Services across the province.

The Official Opposition asked a lot of questions about where that money went, but we didn't receive any answers. I must say that I was so disappointed in the government members when they failed, in my view, to come to the defence of the Capital health region when it was at the mercy of this new board and this new direction that was initiated as a result of a memorandum that was signed between the former minister of health, the board of Alberta Health Services, as it was at that time, and the deputy minister of health at that time as well. I think there were three signatures on that if my memory is correct.

There certainly are a lot of questions around the budgeting and the expenditures at Alberta Health and Wellness, and that's why I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Leader of the Official Opposition, was right on when he suggested on budget day that we have to have a close examination, an independent examination of the books of Alberta Health Services. I would encourage, particularly, the fiscal hawks over on that side of the House, if there are any left, to please give some consideration to the suggestion from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Now, certainly, also with this additional allocation of $243 million, Mr. Speaker, the government, before this bill is passed, should provide the details as to how this money is going to be reported in the next annual report, for the fiscal year that's going to end March 31, 2010.

I know we're going to have a lot of consolidated line items in the budget, when in the past, Mr. Speaker, we could clearly see what was spent on information technology in the Edmonton region, what was spent in Calgary on information technology, what, for instance, was spent for registered nurses in Calgary, what was spent in the capital region for registered nurses, what was spent in Northern Lights on registered nurses or in the David Thompson region. An individual could get a breakdown of all these expenditures, and I don't know how this is going to work with the one new superboard, that just seems to be able to devour billions and billions of dollars in cash without improving any services whatsoever.

When we're asking for this allocation – and it's a significant sum – exactly how is the spending of this money going to be reported when we've made such significant changes with Alberta Health Services? Taxpayers are going to have no idea which part of the province this money is going to go to and why, and I think they deserve an explanation as to how this money is being spent. Whether you liked it or not, if you wanted to go through in detail volume 2 of Alberta Health and Wellness's annual report, you could see how individual regional health authorities were spending the money that was provided to them. You could also see where the bonuses went, where the termination benefits went, who got them and why, what kind of pensions were given out. You could see all that, but you had to sort of look at the fine print to see it. I know the President of the Treasury Board is going to resolve those issues. At least, I hope he is. There were millions and millions of dollars wasted there, and I have no idea who was watching whenever those contracts were signed.

Now, Housing and Urban Affairs. I believe my colleague from Calgary-Currie had some comments on that earlier. On Municipal Affairs as well I believe the hon. member had a lot to say. At least, he certainly did whenever we had a discussion on Bill 5 in caucus, and I'm sure he had the same remarks here in the Assembly.

Now, Tourism, Parks and Recreation, we're having inventory purchases here of $8.5 million and a capital investment of $4.7 million.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I heard a couple of questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Centre called them puffballs.

Ms Blakeman: Uh-uh.

Mr. MacDonald: Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah.

Mr. MacDonald: Edmonton-Centre. How could I have made that mistake?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre referred to them as puffballs. They were questions concerning the activities in Vancouver.

I agree with the Speaker that it's quite an event. It's a significant event. I was watching it last night. Actually, after budget debates I thought I would watch Sweden and Slovakia play hockey. It was a good game. I was surprised that the Slovaks won. But after it was over, I thought: this is the second time in essentially a generation that western Canada has hosted the Winter Olympics, 1988 in Calgary and now 22 years later in Vancouver. I thought to myself: this is symbolic of the gradual transition of economic and political power to the west. [interjection] And of opportunities as well. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka is absolutely right.

I thought: this is a significant event. In a generation or two historians in this country will mark these events as a sign of the increasing influence in our Canadian Confederation of the western provinces.

Certainly, that was my view after – I would rather think out loud than listen to some of the analysis of the hockey game, actually. I enjoyed the game, but the analysis afterwards was something, Mr. Speaker, to be improved on.

Now, with that being said – I'm sorry I got off topic – I did see in the public accounts under Tourism, Parks and Recreation last year, for the year ended March 31, 2008, a $120,000 allocation from Sierra Systems, which is a big outfit in Vancouver. I think they're a consulting outfit. They had a contract with Tourism, Parks and Recreation for $120,000. A year later, for the year ending March 31, 2009, they had, I think, a $4.4 million contract. In the discussion of this allocation here for Tourism, Parks and Recreation for an additional $13 million plus, I'm wondering if in the course of debate someone from across the way can tell me if any of this allocation would be going to an outfit like Sierra Systems. I have no idea what they do, but I do know that we're going to be faced with quite a tab in these puffball questions, as my hon. colleague described them today.

Actually, I don't think they were puffballs; they were softballs. This government is trying to soften up the taxpayers so that whenever the final bill comes in for these Winter Olympics and our socializing and our hosting, the taxpayers will not be too irate. I think we can be, you know, good neighbours and we can be gracious hosts without breaking the backs of the taxpayers here in this province.

What role, if any, did Sierra Systems have in this allocation for Tourism, Parks and Recreation? I certainly would be interested in finding out. I can look forward, I think, to receiving the details from the President of the Treasury Board straightaway, I'm sure.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. Transportation, I'm told, has been addressed by other members as well. I just appreciate the time that has been provided to me to get my remarks regarding Bill 5 on the record, and I would certainly encourage the President of the Treasury Board and the minister of finance to look in a lot of different areas that they have not already done so to see if they can get control or, at least, attempt to get control of the wasteful spending that has gone on in this government. I think that if they can control the wasteful spending, we'll go a long way towards balancing our books in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I was speaking to this bill in Committee of the Whole, I knew there were a few things that I couldn't find in my notes, and I have located them. I'm aware, now, that in third reading we're speaking to the anticipated effect of the implementation of the bill, and I will try to focus my remarks in that way.

Specifically, one of the ones that I wanted to talk about was what was happening to postsecondary students in this province. It has always puzzled me, right from when I was first elected, this government's sort of schizophrenic relationship with people who are attending postsecondary institutions. I would argue that the effect of the government policy and funding has resulted in less money available for the institutions and higher tuition fees for the students, not only in universities but also in colleges and technical institutes.

Now I hear the government arguing: well, that's okay if tuition goes up because we're going to have lots more bursaries and things available for them. Yet as I look, I don't particularly see that. More specifically, I notice that with the funding amounts available in these various bursaries, largely connected to the fact that we've had a downturn in the stock market and their investment return income was not as flush as they expected, that, in fact, there has not been an inflationary increase in most of these bursaries and grants that are available to students in postsecondary institutions. The effect that I see of what is rolling through from both the '09-10 budget, of which, of course, we're looking at the supplementary supplies today, and also the budget that the government is going forward with is that there are cuts and corresponding tuition increases. In fact, I don't see the corollary, which is the increase in the value of the bursaries and grants.

I noticed as I was reading through some things that there's actually a resolution from the Alberta Teachers' Association to urge the government to increase annually the monetary value of Rutherford scholarships to reflect both increases in student tuition fees and the cost of living as per the Alberta consumer price index. Of course, the Rutherford is the one that's directly connected to high school marks, I think.

Mr. MacDonald: Was he a Liberal, that fellow?

Ms Blakeman: Rutherford? Yes, he was.

Mr. MacDonald: Was he an Education minister?

Ms Blakeman: No. He was Premier.

Mr. MacDonald: Premier and Education minister.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, was he? Oh, okay.

So there is a recognition from an educational association that the Rutherford scholarships have not kept pace with inflation and a request for the government to look to that, but I'm not aware of corresponding increases in any of the other ones.

I think that the anticipated effect of what we're looking at in these supplementary supplies and the choices in policy direction that the government has been working in is that we actually have a double hit on students. We know that the effect of the cuts from the previous administration of Conservative government in the early '90s was that it took students much longer to graduate. Instead of coming out of a three-year arts degree in three years, it's four years or four and a half or even five years, and therefore we didn't get those people into the workforce as quickly. You know, there's an argument that they didn't have the same quality of experience in university or any postsecondary institution because they spent so much more time working.

Certainly, when I went to university, yes, a number of my fellow students worked but not out of desperation, and that's certainly what I'm seeing now. They have to. It has flipped. Instead of, "How much time outside of my school do I have to go and work and supplement the money that I have?" it's now determined the other way around: "How much time do I have left after working to earn enough money to invest in education this year?" The whole focus of a student's life has switched around from education to work with a little education on the side. I'll be very interested to see what the effect is of the policies that the government is instituting now, with even further tuition increases, decreases in funding directly to the universities so that they're looking for additional funding through a number of sources, and this corresponding lack of increase, inflation-proofing, or indexing in some way of the various bursary and grant programs. That's one observation.

The second one I want to talk about is connected to the introduction and the member's statement that I did today with the Today Family Violence Help Centre that has just opened in Edmonton. For those of you in Calgary that are a little jealous of this wonderful new centre that has opened in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, not to worry, because they are working in Calgary to start one there. Actually, some people from Calgary have come up to tour through the centre that is opened in Edmonton.

The interesting part of this is that I hear the government talk a lot about administrative efficiencies and finding administrative efficiencies. I hear a lot of people talking about the need to reduce the duplication in the not-for-profit sector. We have too many groups, they say, providing services in certain areas. Here is an initiative that is all about, you know, finding administrative efficiencies and housing themselves together in a very accessible place. I've talked to the group about, you know: can you start to keep records of recidivism? If you're able to show that having all of those services grouped together and that somebody coming to you is less likely to go back into a cycle of violence because of the way the services are bundled together, that's a very good thing.

They're doing exactly what the government talks about. The interesting thing is that the organizations are all having to slice off a piece of their operating funding to devote towards the running of that particular facility because there is no direct funding to the facility itself. Here you have all those agencies I talked about: the RCMP, the city police, Alberta family and youth services. There was an aboriginal consulting organization, John Howard, and Catholic Social Services. You have all of those organizations that are each contributing towards this particular service delivery model, but they're all having to give up some of their operating money in order to fund the actual facility.

I'm concerned about the long-term sustainability of this particular organization. One of the effects that I see from the government's particular policy changes that they have been pursuing under this administration is – well, actually, it's not a change – a continuing lack of understanding about how the not-for-profit sector operates. While the not-for-profit sector has been trying to work in the way the government says they want them to work, there is a lack of corresponding funding models coming from the government to help these organizations do exactly what the government asked them to do. So it doesn't help us if they try these innovative new service delivery systems and can't be successful at it when it was saving money overall because we have a funding model that doesn't understand that one of the pieces needs to be funded differently, and that is the facility model.

I don't think that was too complicated. Do you understand what I'm talking about? [interjection] Great. Okay. Well, the President of the Treasury Board was with me, and if he got it, then I'm happy. Good. I think this may well be where we want to go. I often push back when people say: oh, there are too many not-for-profits, and they're all delivering the same services. I tend to push back and go: well, not necessarily. Bundling everybody together and ending up with larger and larger organizations to deliver this kind of service isn't necessarily a good thing.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think what the government is experiencing, particularly with the move they've made with Alberta Health Services, is a perfect example of that. I don't know that in the end we're going to be incredibly happy with taking the control away from local decision-making and moving it up the ladder and making that organization huge. I think there's going to turn out to be a longer term effect on how that whole system gets administered. And I would argue in defence of the not-for-profits that they need to guard against that.

But I am very interested that organizations have taken the government seriously and have sought ways to deliver their services better. They're willing to innovate, they're willing to think outside of the box, and they're willing to take into consideration what the government is telling them about a weariness from the government with spending money on the same issue, if I can put it that way, to a number of different organizations. Here we have a bunch of them coming together to try something innovative, so I hope there is support from the government to at least give them long enough to see if the model works because if we end up with funding cut off in the next fiscal year, we'll never know if this worked, and we will have spent a bunch of money to get here. It's got to run for long enough to see if we actually get the stats back that tell us it's a good model. So that's the second thing I wanted to talk about, the choices that I see being made here.

The third piece is – and I heard this come up in question period today – what is happening around, well, temporary foreign workers, the issue of the government's assistance to businesses to bring people in to fill particular kinds of jobs that businesses in Alberta, interestingly enough smaller businesses, usually seem to have a hard time getting Albertans or people who are already here to fill, so we end up going outside of the country. The Philippines is a good example.

I've had a letter – and I'm sure others have had a letter – from a group that's actually operating out of B.C. that offers cleaning services. They can't hire cleaners locally, so they're trying to bring in people from the Philippines, I think. Their issue is that they're puzzled about the pilot project through the – and these are initials; I apologize for that – AINP program, which allows room attendants who are working in hotels to be considered for permanent residency visas. The national occupation code that relates to these room attendants is the same one for light duty cleaners, which is what this group is recruiting, but the program doesn't extend to the cleaners. So they're not eligible for that residency visa under the program, which is a head-scratcher. What's the difference between, you know, cleaning an office and cleaning a hotel room?

I'm finding that it's very difficult to work your way through a logical through-line of how we actually work with temporary foreign workers and inviting people to move to Alberta permanently. Now, I've always believed and my caucus has always believed that if we're going to ask people to come from other countries to work here, to fill jobs that Albertans can't or won't fill, then we should be extending immigration rights to them. I just think, you know, that if we want them here, then give them those rights and privileges. I personally really struggle with the concept of temporary foreign workers because I think it's a form of 21st century slavery, frankly, but it seems to work for a lot of small businesspeople. I represent a lot of small businesspeople. This is the concern they've raised with me, and I'll put it on the record and maybe follow up with a letter to the minister specific to this as to why we end up with these inconsistencies.

Thank you for the opportunity to put those questions on the record, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre: could you provide more details to the House regarding the temporary foreign workers and their plight in this country and the fact that we have a two-tiered system for workers? They do not have the same rights as landed immigrants or Canadian citizens. Do you think we should be ensuring that they have the same rights in the workplace as Canadian citizens or landed immigrants?

Ms Blakeman: I'm responding to this from a human rights perspective, but I am puzzled by what I see as, as I said, an illogical through-line from the government policy on these workers. I do see what we're doing as two-tiered. It is to me a form of 21st century slavery in that they are not offered the same rights and protections that are offered to other classes of people; that is, full citizens and people with landed immigrant status here. I'm very uncomfortable as a citizen of this country to not be treating a particular group of people in what I think is a fair way, particularly when things go wrong. When things go right, everybody's happy, right? It's not a problem. It's when things go wrong.

What happens – and this whole issue of agents who bring people in for a certain amount of money, I cannot find a way to think that that's a particularly good idea. Frankly, I think it's preying off of desperate people. I don't know why we allow it, but this is an entrepreneurial society, and we seem to allow that.

I'm more concerned about what kind of protection we offer for people when things go wrong, and we do not offer the same level of protection and service for when things go wrong. It's complicated, I agree, because you're dealing often with languages that are not English. You're dealing with people that may not be aware of the cultural norms or even what's available. But this just strikes me as very un-Canadian.

Mr. MacDonald: Not fair.

Ms Blakeman: Not fair. I've never been comfortable with this concept.

Now, clearly, my family are in the trades. They're all working hard. The trades are really struggling with that idea, too, because they want to work. They don't understand if there's an ironworker out of work in Winnipeg, why can't that ironworker come and fill a job in Alberta? Why isn't there an attempt to do that? At the same time none of my family would say that we should treat somebody from another country that's brought in to do a job as badly as we're treating the people that are coming under temporary foreign workers when things go wrong.

I don't know if that answers your question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is making vague allegations about misconduct against foreign workers, why don't you come forward and bring to my office actual complaints? My job is to make sure that these occurrences don't occur. Standing in the House and talking vaguely about things apparently occurring but not actually bringing forward to my office cases where you can identify to me where these breaches occur – because my role and my commitment is to make sure exactly to fulfill what you're asking for: that workers are treated fairly, that they're on an even playing ground with all other hard-working Albertans, that there is no abuse of foreign workers.

Unfortunately, if there are instances that aren't reported, I would suggest to you it is your role as a member of this Legislature, as much as it is mine or any citizen's, to report these occurrences. You seem to indicate that you know of them. You seem to be telling me about instances that you know of occurring. If you know that they occur, if you know where they are, why won't you send a letter to the minister and advise us of it so that we can investigate and prosecute and punish any wrongdoers who may be causing harm to any workers?

After all, we're all Albertans. We want to make sure that no one is abused in this province. We want to make sure that when these workers leave, they tell good stories about the province of Alberta and perhaps encourage others to come over here if such is required. But to be rising in the House and talking about hypothetical cases – and I believe they are hypothetical until you show me who they are and where they are or at least give me enough grounds to investigate – is not doing anybody any good.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to join the debate?

Seeing none, then I call on the President of the Treasury Board to close the debate.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to the dialogue, particularly when it was actually relevant to the estimates, and I will respond accordingly to those suggestions that are appropriate.

I want to thank members of the Liberal Party and members of the New Democratic Party who chose to participate in the discussion here. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Wildrose chose to be totally absent from the debate or chose to not participate. I would presume that means they support the supplementary supply.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the question.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate February 16: Mr. Hehr]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Bill 3.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I see this bill as one of stubbornness and archaic concepts. To me it's also a bit of an I told you so. What we are seeing is the government having to come forward and correct archaic language but, mind you, language that they have insisted and persisted in putting into legislation all the way along and up to very recently. The world has moved on. As much as this government likes to talk about moving on, the world moved on. They now are stuck with some language in their legislation that has hindered the actual delivery of the purpose of the legislation.

So here we have two particular ones that are around the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act in that it's using very specific language. One of them, shockingly, is that we still have references – and this does shock us now, but you know in my parents' generation or before that it wouldn't have shocked them at all. There's language that is still in our legislation and in this that talks about illegitimate children. I can't believe that any child would be considered illegitimate. All children are legitimate. But, in fact, this act and the history of where it came from does contain that kind of language, and of course we've got to get rid of it. So there's the archaic language that we would have had in legislation, at one time quite legitimately, that talked about illegitimate children. We're no longer willing to do that. It has to be removed from the legislation. So the obvious thing is that you're going to end up with an amending act like you have in front of you that removes that language.

The second piece of this is a persistence in this government of upholding, I would argue, a fairly archaic concept. Our constitution makes it clear – in fact, Mr. Speaker, our Alberta human rights act also makes it clear – that service is to be delivered with a prohibition against discrimination based on family status or on marital status. That's the other thing that was in this bill in which it talks about very gender-specific roles and assignments like wife, husband, et cetera. It did not take into consideration where the law has moved and where society has moved around what we consider and how we define households, families, and legal unions in our society.

You can no longer say that you'll only offer a service to a man and wife who are married in a legal ceremony. That just doesn't cut it anymore because we also recognize, and all services are now offered to, common-law couples and also to same-sex couples. Now, speaking of archaic language, the government went to some effort to come up with “adult interdependent relationships.” That was the way they wanted to get around actually talking about same-sex relationships. That's the other thing that they're having to correct in this legislation to allow for the fact that this process cannot be limited to people that are narrowly defined as a traditional husband and wife relationship. So it's adding in the language that allows for present-day reality, frankly.

My colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who is our critic for Justice and the Attorney General, has already spoken to the bill and has indicated that our caucus is willing to support it. Of course, I will vote in favour of it because I approve of what's happening here. I do just get a little frustrated that we could have corrected a lot more of this way back when if this government hadn't fought with its little fingernails scraping the rug in between us as it got dragged into the 21st century in its refusal to acknowledge what was actually going on in our society and its insistence on trying to stick to an old definition of things.

As we went through the Family Law Act, it insisted on defining the same way and making the same mistakes. Again, we're slowly having to go through and change that language as well.

So I'm willing to support the bill. To me it is one of stubbornness, archaic concepts, and an I told you so, but I'm happy to see that we're in fact moving forward.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I support second reading of Bill 3.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Adjourned debate February 24: Mr. Bhardwaj]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand today in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Premier for bringing forward this innovative piece of legislation that would see government and industry come together to create a more competitive and prosperous Alberta.

Alberta, like the rest of the world, has been affected by the recent downturn in the economic climate. All governments have had to change strategies when dealing with such economic turbulence. The difference between Alberta and other jurisdictions is that our fiscal savings have allowed our government to adapt to global economic changes as they occur.

This important piece of legislation will examine ways to further enhance Alberta's competitive advantage and help us promote a more competitive provincial economy. This act will increase collaboration between government, industry, and business. This, in turn, Mr. Speaker, will enhance the ability of all industry sectors to adapt to the evolving new global economic order. The Alberta Competitiveness Act will also increase collaboration between government, industry, and businesses. This will allow an enhancement of Alberta's competitiveness and provide long-term benefits for Alberta families and business.

This government will build on current initiatives that will improve our overall competitiveness. Examples of these initiatives include the Alberta Innovates program, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, and TILMA, the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement that was passed last year. All of these programs give Alberta an edge. Through Bill 1 a strategic approach to competitiveness will be developed, including implementation to measure competitiveness and an operational plan to improve economic procedures. This collaboration will be led by partnerships under the direction of our esteemed Premier. Mr. Speaker, key ministers and stakeholders will access all areas where Alberta can strengthen its competitive edge.

I believe that Bill 1 will lay the groundwork for a more prosperous economy and benefit all Albertans. The Alberta Competitiveness Act will allow Albertans to construct a greater future while utilizing the initiatives this province already has in place, initiatives like the sustainability fund, which cushions Alberta from the full brunt of any economic downswings. The sustainability fund has allowed Alberta to be in one of the best financial positions compared to anywhere else, any other jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 will let this province continue to build on our strengths and will result in a better quality of life for all Albertans. Albertans have always embraced the challenge to make this province a better place, and Bill 1 is a conduit which will enable this. My constituents and all Albertans will benefit from this innovative legislation. Because of this, I strongly support this bill.

In closing, I would like to again thank the Premier for bringing this bill forward. His leadership and extraordinary commitment to improving the quality of life of Albertans has been remarkable, and it is a privilege to stand behind him and be part of his team.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to stand today in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This is certainly an important piece of legislation for Alberta today and moving into the future. Much of what we do in this Legislature has more of an impact on future generations of Albertans than it sometimes does currently. I think this is one of them.

Obviously, this legislation is a result of, certainly, the changing circumstances we've seen right across the globe as far as economic prosperity and development. It has been a tough time for many Albertans, whether they be business owners, workers, investors, and families because I really do believe that families do feel the stress of some of the unfortunate situations that have happened in today's marketplace. But we have to be realistic. These aren't things that have happened just to Albertans. Many people right across the world are certainly feeling the squeeze of the global recession.

What this has created is a situation where we as a province can emerge with a clear vision and some goals of where we're going as an economy into the future. Certainly, we've enjoyed a very, very prosperous history in this province, and certainly I'm much more aware of the recent prosperity that we've enjoyed, particularly over, let's say, the last decade. So we need to be able to have a clear vision and some goals for the future prosperity of this province. I think at times it's unfortunate, but times like these allow us to step back and assess that and put in place those visions and those goals moving forward. But we must not forget some of the lessons that we have learned over our history.

I really believe that as the world starts to come out of this economic recession, it's going to be a new global economy out there. The competitiveness of the global economy is certainly shifting. We knew that before going into the recession. The recession has only strengthened our knowledge that it is going to be different. There are going to be new opportunities for business and new opportunities for Albertans to prosper in that new economic order.

Fortunately for our great province we're in a position that's probably not comparable to many right across the world. We've got substantial savings in the sustainability fund to cover our temporary budget shortfalls, that we're incurring right now, and I can tell you that that's unique as compared to many other jurisdictions, particularly in North America, Mr. Speaker.

We also have a heritage savings trust fund that is going to remain intact and untouched throughout this whole time. I know that our Premier has committed to that; the hon. minister of finance has committed to that. I think that's substantial because that is, again, an opportunity for Albertans to take the fortunate prosperity that we have, that is in place, as far as our geological formations in oil and gas plays and to be able to use that not just for Albertans' benefit today but for future generations.

We know that, you know, those are finite resources. We know that the world is changing as far as its carbon plans and that sort of thing, and we know that there could be a possibility sometime in the future that there's going to be less reliance on those traditional carbon sources for energy. We need to make sure that as those revenues could potentially diminish, we have the opportunity to utilize those revenues so that we don't have to raise taxes on Albertans to provide the same services that we're delivering today. So that's very, very important to note that we do have that heritage savings trust fund and, again, that the minister of finance is committed to looking at how we can build that up as we move into more prosperous times.

As well, by having the sustainability fund to cover our temporary budget shortfalls, it allows us to continue to support Albertans in a way that improves their quality of life, that makes Alberta a great place to live and raise a family, Mr. Speaker. This is very, very important, I believe, and it's very much linked and correlated to our competitiveness as it allows us to attract the best people and capital not just because they want to invest here but because they want to live here as well.

The result is that what we're doing right now and what we have done to set us up for right now is that we're facilitating future economic prosperity, again, by supporting quality of life for all Albertans today and for years to come. Bill 1 complements the actions that the government has taken up to this point. It focuses on developing new opportunities for Albertans and their businesses. Alberta already is a safe place to invest, but if we can help businesses to open more doors and to be more competitive as the global economy emerges from this recession, then I think that's a very, very important step to securing the prosperity of future generations of Albertans.

Bill 1 will increase collaboration between government, industry, businesses, and Albertans, and it's going to enhance our understanding of our place in the global economy. I wouldn't hesitate to suggest that our place in the new, emerging global economy is going to be one of a leader, one where people are going to be looking at investing here in Alberta. I know in just hearing some of the stories and the evidence coming back from some of our ministers that have visited Vancouver and met with some very, very key, important global leaders that they are looking at Alberta as a significant place to invest their money as the global economy starts to recover.

Bill 1 will also embrace opportunities led by industry. I think that what is missing in this is that this is a great opportunity to insist that government alone can't just fix the economy. In fact, government probably has very little to do with fixing the economy. A lot of what's going to drive our future growth is going to be industry and business led. This bill allows the government to be able to do that and work in collaboration and allows the government to support industry through various strategic initiatives.

The end goal, Mr. Speaker, is to be more competitive in the global economy, and there are all sorts of different challenges and opportunities when it comes to that. The first thing that needs to be accomplished and that this bill does set out to accomplish is facilitating a competitive business environment. Simply, this means maintaining a low tax base and removing barriers to investment in business operations: two things.

This is not industry specific. It's just very basic, fundamental principles to a prosperous economy. Low taxes, which are a cost to business and not only a cost to business but a cost to productivity and a cost to investment, are the first piece of this, to make sure that Alberta is in a position to maintain its position as being a low-tax jurisdiction. Then the second piece is, again, removing the barriers to invest and removing red tape for businesses operating in this province. Again, I think it was pretty obvious from the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, that that's something that this government is committed to, and I believe that Bill 1 is a great example of what our government is going to do, working with industry, to address those issues.

Mr. Speaker, let's not kid ourselves. You know, as much as government getting out of the way by keeping the tax burden low and by reducing regulations and red tape is important, what is also important is that government becomes very strategic in its investments and initiatives when it comes to its industry and economy. Yes, I am going to say this, and there are probably some people that, you know, might raise their eyebrows, but sometimes there is a role for government to play in facilitating new investments in new industries and technologies. Now, I think that government, in doing so, needs to be very, very careful. This is a very fine line, and I'm hoping that Bill 1 is going to address that and sort of set out some parameters and barriers as to where and what and how the government should be involved in partnering with industry. It, hopefully, will determine priorities in collaboration with industry and support them in ways that the government can support them.

An example. If you look at Alberta, Alberta has got a great history. Everybody thinks of Alberta as very, you know, government hands-off business. Yes, we've created that environment, but we've got a great history. The Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority in the 1970s. Okay? Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the exact numbers are, but could you imagine where we would be as a province right now if the government hadn't invested in that? I'm not sure we would be in the enviable position that we are in. The reinvestment of revenues from this conventional industry into unconventional will certainly prolong our economic prosperity and has brought in a whole new opportunity for Albertans to find work and create revenue for the government.

Certainly, I think there are numerous examples. I believe the government was very much involved in the Alberta Energy Company. I can't remember what the exact dates were, but it was very instrumental in creating the Alberta Gas Trunk Line, again a very strategic investment for Albertans, again an investment that Albertans continually will in the future reap the rewards from: greater jobs, more prosperity, higher quality of life.

Bill 1 is going to need to look at where those strategic opportunities are for Alberta. Certainly, there's a lot of work, and it will go and build upon the initiatives that have already been undertaken by this government. Alberta Innovates, Productivity Alberta, and the western economic partnership are all great examples of ideas and strategies that can be fine-tuned and thought of as part of Bill 1. It will exemplify Alberta as one of the most competitive and driven places in the world to do business and will facilitate a common understanding that Alberta is and will continue to be the best place to live, work, play, invest, and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's what we're all here for, to make sure Alberta remains a place for all of those things to happen, that Alberta is a balanced place. At the foundation of that is an economy with a huge amount of opportunities for everybody, no matter what their skill or background is. In order to do that, we need to continue to attract the next generation of entrepreneurs and skilled workers, and they will only come here if Alberta is the best place to live, work, play, invest, and raise a family. We cannot merely react to changing circumstances in the economy as they come up. We need to be proactive, and that is exactly what Bill 1 does.

We are at a pinnacle point in our great province's advancement, with endless opportunities as we emerge from the global economic recession, Mr. Speaker. I am very confident that this bill along with the many other initiatives that this government has undertaken, that have been laid out in the throne speech, is going to lead Alberta into an economy that's brighter and exciting for our kids and their kids. The world is going to be looking at Alberta as a great place, again, like I said, to live, work, play, raise a family, and invest.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to stand in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Premier for bringing forward this timely piece of legislation. Since 2008 the global economy has been in a state of uncertainty. The global recession was caused by factors outside of our province but, of course, is still felt by all Albertans.

A large part of our provincial economy is centred on natural gas and oil prices. Fluctuations in the price of these commodities cause fluctuations in our provincial revenue stream during both good and bad periods. To protect against these fluctuations, our government has practised prudent fiscal planning, recognizing that the prosperity that's experienced during the boom periods will not last forever. Under the leadership of our Premier our government has saved during economic peaks, knowing these savings will prove to be of value during our economic valleys.

Over the past few months the global economy has shown signs of recovery. However, the economy is also undergoing profound changes. We want to ensure Alberta is in the best position to respond and adapt to these changes. Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, recognizes that the global economy is changing and our government must take appropriate measures to ensure that we keep pace with these changes and continue to attract investment to our province.

Mr. Speaker, favourable business conditions in Alberta have been instrumental in attracting investment in our province. Bill 1 will continue to enhance these favourable conditions, attracting new businesses and innovation.

One way that we can continue to attract business and investment is by evaluating our regulatory framework. By improving this framework, we'll continue to attract investment, new business, and innovation, that play such a large part in our province's success. With an efficient regulation system we'll continue to send a strong message to prospective investors, innovators, and entrepreneurs that Alberta is one of the best places in North America to do business.

Attracting investment and promoting competitiveness in Alberta are vital to both our economy and our quality of life. As a government we should continue to support regulations that enhance economic, environmental, and social aspects of Albertans' lives. Competitiveness breeds a healthy economy. A healthy economy will grow faster. It leads to lower prices. It leads to higher wages. Essentially, a competitive economy ensures that Albertans will continue to enjoy the high standards of living that have characterized our province for decades. Bill 1 will increase collaboration between government, industry, businesses, and Albertans in order to enhance our province's competitive edge. By allowing businesses to operate more efficiently, we are strengthening the bond between government and industry. This leads to enhanced investment and creates a more competitive and affluent Alberta.

Alberta is in one of the best fiscal positions in North America coming out of the economic downturn. Moving forward, it's vital that the Alberta government finds ways to enhance our competitiveness and create a thriving and more diversified economy. This is exactly what Bill 1 proposes to do. The Alberta Competitiveness Act displays the foresight and planning that has characterized the work of our government for years. We were prepared for the global downturn, and with the recommendations that come forward from the partnership formed under Bill 1, Alberta is poised to emerge from these challenging economic times with a stronger, more competitive economy.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I am pleased to stand before this Assembly in support of Bill 1. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: We do, Mr. Speaker. I would like to exercise my right to that.

I was listening to the comments from the Member for Strathcona. He had a line in there, I think, that was exactly to the effect that competitiveness breeds a healthy economy. My concern with the whole approach to this legislation is that the emphasis is so heavily on competitiveness that we forget some of the other things that also breed a healthy economy. Sometimes – and, actually, the Member for Calgary-North Hill, I think, sort of alluded to this – co-operation breeds a healthy economy, and sometimes competitiveness actually destroys a healthy economy. You've seen that play out on Wall Street. Even people like Alan Greenspan have admitted that unbridled competitiveness has destroyed aspects of the American economy.

My question to the Member for Strathcona would be: wouldn't it be sensible to have, instead of an Alberta Competitiveness Act, an Alberta productivity act? Because, really, sometimes competitiveness leads to productivity. Sometimes co-operation leads to productivity. Productivity is actually easily measured in economic terms. If this act is really about encouraging productivity, then maybe we should amend the act and call it the Alberta productivity act and then build it around the concept of productivity.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that we want to rename the act, but when we talk about competitiveness and co-operation and collaboration, these things are not all independent of each other. These are interconnected.

Just the reference to Wall Street. I think, you know, what happened with the meltdown and all that sort of unbridled activity, possibly underregulated, another topic, certainly not something that could happen here in Alberta.

I look at competitiveness, obviously, as an environment. It's healthy. We're not talking about cutthroat competitiveness here. I think we're talking about something that's gone on in the world of trade and commerce since the beginning of time. I think of sort of co-operation between competitors in certain things, certainly with respect to research and development and so on. So I don't see one being exclusive of the other. I think we can have a competitive economy or a competitive environment for business and still have co-operation and collaboration all going on at the same time. What we're doing here, again, is trying to continue to create and nurture an environment in this province where all of this competitive economic activity can take place.

Again, for all of those other things, I think that as Albertans, by our very nature, our competition is healthy. I think we work together. I think we work collaboratively. I think we work co-operatively. That's the spirit that built this province, and that's the spirit that will continue to allow us to prosper and grow in the future as a people, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Mr. Benito: I understand, hon. member, that in the past three months five new oil sands projects have been announced, I think over $5 billion in new investment. When we say competitiveness, I always relate this idea to job creation. Can you be more specific on how the competitiveness of this province will relate to a job creation program?

Mr. Quest: Well, if I understood the question, I think the answer is relatively straightforward. Again, we talked about this competitiveness. A province attracts investment to the province because it's a good place to do business. When it's a good place to do business, investment dollars come here. You mentioned oil sands, and of course investment in oil sands comes from all over the world now. This attracts the dollars to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move that we adjourn debate.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we do adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on March 8 pursuant to our standing order.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:18 p.m. to Monday, March 8, at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, welcome back.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Mr. Richard (Dick) Gruenwald
January 22, 1917, to February 24, 2010

Ms Heather MacDonald-Webber
July 5, 1962, to March 3, 2010

The Speaker: Hon. members, Mr. Richard (Dick) Gruenwald, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, 483rd member to be sworn in as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, passed away on February 24, 2010, at the age of 93 years. Mr. Gruenwald was first elected in the election held August 30, 1971, and served one term until March 25, 1975. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Lethbridge-West for the Social Credit Party. During his term of office Richard Gruenwald served on the standing committees on Private Bills; Private Bills, Standing Orders and Printing; Privileges and Elections; Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education; and the Special Committee of the Legislature on Professions and Occupations.

On March 3, 2010, Heather MacDonald-Webber passed away at the age of 47 years after a courageous battle with breast cancer. Heather was the wife of Alberta's Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the MLA for Calgary-Foothills, and the mother of Lauren, Jaime, and Kelly. As the spouse of a member of this Assembly she very ably participated with her husband in his many ministerial duties and in service to their constituents. Heather leaves a legacy of strength, love, and inspiration.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them. Family members of Mr. Gruenwald are here with us today in the Speaker's gallery. In a moment of silent prayer I would ask you to remember hon. member Richard (Dick) Gruenwald and Heather MacDonald-Webber as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

I would now like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would invite all here to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These guests are family members of our former colleague Mr. Richard Gruenwald. Today with us are two of Mr. Gruenwald's children and their families. As I mention their names, I would ask them to rise: son Mr. Gerry Gruenwald and his spouse, Joyce; daughter Lois Weeks and her spouse, Al; granddaughter Tanna Toliver and her friend, Lynn Weinberger. If all would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

I would also like to advise all members that on their desk is a special message from Her Majesty the Queen, the head of the Commonwealth, on this day known as Commonwealth Day.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce four students from my constituency from l'école Ste. Marguerite Bourgeoys. They are here today with Mrs. Lynn Fisher, their teacher. The four students' names are Luke Di Danieli, Geneviève Lévesque, Audrey Labrie, and Racha El-Dib. It's a pleasure for me to have students come from Calgary. They're only here for the day. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group from the Home Educators of St. Albert and Area, who are accompanying us this afternoon. We have three parent-teachers and eight students. The parent-teachers are Mrs. Katherine Seddon, Mrs. Fiona Lang-Sharpe, and Ms Tamara Westran. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 27 students from the Eleanor Hall school located in Clyde who are participating in the School at the Legislature program this week. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Amy McConnell, parent helpers Tori Ward, Susan Ringuette, and Karen Potts as well. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding Albertan who has made all Canadians very proud. Shannon Szabados is truly the best in the world, and she proved it at the Vancouver 2010 games. Together with her teammates on the Canadian women's hockey team she showed the world how good Canada's athletes really are. Along with teammates like Meaghan Mikkelson, Hayley Wickenheiser, and the rest of Team Canada they brought home the gold medal for the third time in a row. I'm sure all of Canada was watching when Team Canada faced off against Team U.S.A. in the final game of the tournament. With Shannon in goal Canada's women skated to a 2-0 shutout of the U.S. and raised the Canadian flag at the gold medal ceremony. [Standing ovation] I guess there's no reason to ask all members to issue a warm welcome because we already did. Shannon, thank you, and all the very best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is more Olympic hardware yet to be displayed. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a gentleman who is well known to all of us in this House and throughout Alberta, Dr. Bob Steadward, founder of the Steadward Centre at the University of Alberta. Dr. Steadward was on February 28 awarded the Olympic Order, the highest distinction conferred by the International Olympic Committee, in recognition of exemplary service. Dr. Steadward's order comes in no small part due to his role as the international founder of the Paralympic Games. I would ask Dr. Steadward to please rise and receive the very warm welcome and congratulations of this House.

The Speaker: We're fortunate today to have had three school groups in the Assembly to recognize their new heroes. Wonderful. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly one of my constituents, Milan Sorenson, and her grandfather, Wayne Sorenson. This is Milan's first visit to the Alberta Legislature. Milan is the proud recipient of a laptop computer that was awarded to her from the ATCO celebrating excellence program, which was partnered with the government of Alberta. This is also not the first time that I've met this extraordinary young woman of nine years of age. I was privileged to meet with her and her parents, Kevin and Lisa, at their home on Saturday, February 27, for a short visit. I would also like to commend Milan's grandfather for taking the time to come to the Alberta Legislature and bring her for this extraordinary opportunity today. I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mrs. Janet Ryan-Newell and her husband, Gordon Ryan-Newell, seated today in the members' gallery. Janet is an executive director of Crossroads Family Services, who recently hosted a foster parent recognition award evening, that I will be speaking about later on. I would like to thank Mr. and Mrs. Ryan-Newell for their contribution to our city and our province, especially towards our children and youth. At this time I would like to ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of the province of Alberta. Mr. Don Johnson is the president of the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Mr. Johnson spends many, many hours working for the betterment of all of our municipalities in the province of Alberta. Just recently, in meetings that I've had with them, he has indicated the times and the hours that he has spent even in Ottawa representing the better interests of our municipalities. With that, I'd like Mr. Johnson to rise and receive the warm appreciation of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guest from the Alberta Federation of Labour Women's Committee, Carisa David. Today is International Women's Day, a global day for celebrating the economic, political, and social achievements of women. The AFL Women's Committee encourages the involvement of women in the Alberta labour movement and works to ensure that issues affecting women remain at the top of labour's agenda. Women make up almost half of Canada's workforce yet are still a long way from equality. The labour movement is working to close the gap. My guest is seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of the Coalition des femmes de l'Alberta, Isabelle Déchène Guay, board president, and board member Jacqueline Bégin. The Coalition des femmes de l'Alberta is a nonprofit organization which provides a voice for francophone women in Alberta. Their aim is to motivate women from all regions of the province to work together on common interests and to support greater visibility for women of all ages. The coalition works in partnership with various francophone organizations such as Réseau santé albertain to support women as natural caregivers. I've asked my guests to join us here today in recognition of International Women's Day and also to pay tribute to the contributions of francophones in Alberta during Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie week. Je vous souhaite la bienvenue, en particulier aujourd'hui, pour célébrer la Journée internationale des femmes. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to speak on the success of Alberta's involvement in the 2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics. These Olympics will long be remembered as the games that sparked Canadians' sense of national pride in perhaps a way that we had never experienced before.

Mr. Speaker, before I go any further, I'd also like to recognize Shannon and say: welcome, Shannon, and great job. Great job.

For 17 days in February thousands of visitors descended on Vancouver and 3 billion people around the world turned their focus to the Winter Olympics. Some called it the ultimate reality show. Alberta called it the ultimate opportunity. Unlike Nagano, Beijing, or Torino, Vancouver is next door, and this was a rare opportunity to promote our beautiful province and do business on a world stage.

Plus, Mr. Speaker, having hosted the Winter Olympics in 1988, many Albertans, including the some 70 volunteers who stepped up to assist the Olympic and Paralympic Secretariat, had first-hand Olympic experience, and they hit the ground running.

As the head of our Olympic Secretariat, Russ Tynan, once said: if you've never done the Olympic Games, you'll never understand the opportunity of the Olympic Games. So when Vancouver spent billions setting the Olympic table, we were there to serve up a taste of Alberta, literally, with a side of business savvy.

Two years ago we committed to an outstanding location for Alberta House and Plaza. Even before the games opened and before construction was finished, kudos started. In this beautiful prime space we served an innovative selection of Alberta foods such as prairie chowder, elk, boar, bison, cheeses, and Alberta beef. We rocked the house every night with free performances by talented Alberta musicians.

I'd like to commend my colleague the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit and the staff in the arts branch for ensuring that so many talented Albertans could travel to Vancouver and Whistler to participate in the Cultural Olympiad and entertain thousands at our venues.

Alberta House was the place to be. Canadian Olympic medalists and celebrities like Wayne Gretzky dropped by to celebrate with us and the crowd, and for Alberta businesses it was the place to meet and host events, a place to develop new opportunities and relationships.

I'd also like to make mention of the 166 lucky young Albertans we hosted at Alberta House. Thanks to our Olympic Secretariat and ATCO's celebrating excellence program, two kids in grades 4 to 12 from each Alberta constituency and their parents won a flight to Vancouver, attended an Olympic event, and had dinner at Alberta House. Mr. Speaker, I'll never forget their smiles as they sat in Alberta House wearing red hockey jerseys and enjoying a meal prepared by executive chef Brad Smoliak. I know that every one of these young Albertans carried that Olympic spirit back into their schools and to their classmates. The further north we went, we had kids who'd never been out of their communities and never been on a plane. It was really wonderful to hear their stories.

We also sponsored 26 young Alberta athletes, future Olympians, and a parent to see their winter sports event first-hand courtesy of Alberta sports and rec and the secretariat in something called Pathways to Excellence. It was an inspirational experience for them but also for us. We got to see the next generation of Olympians.

These athletes also had the opportunity to ride the Alberta train. This was the Olympic venue that attracted more media attention around the world than we could have ever imagined and was dubbed one of the hottest tickets at the Olympics.

About 18 months ago we agreed to and signed a lease with the Rocky Mountaineer, voted the world's leading travel experience by train for the past four years, and wrapped it in Alberta's brand and colours. I'm delighted to say that the Rocky Mountaineer proudly announced that they'll keep that train wrapped for the entire 2010 vacation season. Wonderful news, and it goes to show the value of creating great business relationships.

Mr. Speaker, anyone could buy a ticket on the train during the Olympics, but we targeted decision-makers in the global tourism industry, the business world, and the media, the kind of people who don't always answer our e-mails or our phone calls, and they went on that six-hour round trip up to Whistler. They talked with Alberta tourism operators and business leaders, and it was the ultimate networking opportunity.

The Vancouver media joked that we had hijacked their train, but they were also the first to give us kudos. Alberta's Olympic vision is as clear as it is down to earth, they said; it's to drum up business for Alberta. Even Premier Campbell publicly said that he was happy for the success of Alberta, B.C.'s good and supportive neighbour. We want to thank B.C. for graciously allowing all of us to participate in these games. They truly made them Canada's games and were great hosts.

Mr. Speaker, Travel Alberta estimates that just from the 17 days of the Olympics Alberta will gain more than $70 million in media exposure in important markets around the world. Just last week I saw a German newspaper featuring the Rocky Mountaineer and skiing at Lake Louise. I couldn't read the language, but I could read the pictures.

Another special group that had an opportunity to travel on the Alberta train was the Children's Wish Foundation. I'd like to read for you an excerpt from their e-mail.

We were the family with three young girls sent to the Olympics from the Children's Wish Foundation. We were so lucky to get a ticket on the Rocky Mountaineer train trip. What a time we had.

We just want to thank you. It was the most fantastic adventure.

We'd like to say: "You're welcome. We're glad that you could travel with us, and we wish you continued strength through the challenges that you face every day."

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the greatest story and success story of the Olympics is the pride that Canadians felt in their country and in their athletes. I can't recall ever hearing so many spontaneous outbursts of O Canada. From Alex winning the first gold medal, to our men's hockey team winning the last, to our women's hockey team, to our curlers, skaters, skiers, snowboarders, and sliders, whether they won medals or represented our country to the best of their ability, we're fiercely proud of all of our athletes and the sacrifices they made to represent this country. These Olympics will be remembered as a turning point for Canada not only for our medal count but for recognition.

It's a great point of pride for Alberta that more than half of these Canadian athletes live, work, or train in Alberta. It's because government has made the investment necessary to maintain and upgrade legacy facilities. I don't know that we can ever thank our athletes, our volunteers, or our artists enough, but on behalf of this Assembly I'd like to extend our deep gratitude and congratulations to everyone who committed their time, energy, talent, and heart to proudly represent Alberta and Canada at one of the world's most recognizable events.

Just over a week ago the Olympic men's gold medal hockey game was shared by 22 million Canadians, and the second that goal crossed the line to win gold, we felt it echo across this nation. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud and I know that we were all proud to represent the province of Alberta, but the one thing that I will take away from these games was how proud I felt to be a Canadian.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, the normal length for ministerial statements traditionally in this Assembly is four minutes or less. You went over seven.

We are now up against the daily Routine, Standing Order 7(1.1). We're now going to the question period.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Calgary Cancer Services

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Since the nationally respected Alberta Cancer Board was dissolved by this government, a major voice for cancer care in this province has been silenced. This government has been told there is not enough capacity for cancer care in Calgary since at least 2003, yet it fails to act. Even if work began now on a new facility, it would still be several more years before it would be up and running. My question is to the Premier. How many more years are the people of Calgary going to have to wait before they get a full-fledged cancer hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, cancer care is a priority for my government. Alberta Health Services is looking at improving access to cancer treatment and not concentrating always on the bricks and mortar.

Any further questions the minister of health can give more information on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll try the Premier on this. Is the Premier aware that the site in which cancer services are being delivered at the Holy Cross, which is rented on behalf of the Tom Baker centre, is the subject of a very serious class-action suit concerning deadly asbestos poisoning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think I've made it clear in this House on a number of occasions that the health infrastructure capital plan will be unveiled on or about March 31, and that will include looking at cancer facilities in Calgary.

Dr. Taft: Well, I'll repeat the question to the minister. The Tom Baker centre is so crowded, Mr. Speaker, it has to deliver services in rented spaces. One of these spaces is the former Holy Cross Centre. So again to the minister: is the minister aware that the site in which cancer services are being delivered at the Holy Cross is the subject of a very serious class-action suit concerning deadly asbestos poisoning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no, I am not aware of the asbestos issue that has just been raised, but I can assure this member that I'll look into it right away. In the meantime I would like to assure all Albertans who are listening and watching and those who are participating in this debate that we are going to be adding more capacity for cancer care in Calgary. I believe it's the McCaig centre that will be opening relatively soon, and that will take some stress off the system. But let's wait for the capital plan to come out in its formal sense in a couple of weeks.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children and Youth Services is a ministry in crisis, a broken system that puts children's lives at risk. It is a system where qualifications aren't valued, where monitoring is not a priority, and where screening of foster and kinship homes is insufficient. There is something systemic and fundamentally wrong with this ministry which will not be resolved by simply changing ministers. To the Premier. The current system is costing children their lives. What specific actions is the Premier taking now to fix the system to ensure that we don't see another life lost?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's always a tragedy when a child dies no matter what the circumstances. Certainly, you know, as a father and a grandfather – and many of us are parents and grandparents – this is a serious situation, and our hearts go out to the families involved. The minister has ordered an investigation, and she may have further detail in this particular case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: when will this government introduce legislation to ensure that all individuals who care for our most vulnerable population are properly qualified?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, foster parents do exceptional work in this province. There are many, many untold stories of children's lives that have been turned around through the exceptional care of foster parents. As I said before, the minister is undertaking an investigation in this particular matter. Once the results are provided to the minister, she will take action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Front-line workers are facing enormous caseloads. They cannot provide the help because the government has not helped them. Will the Premier require that the children's advocate report directly to the Legislature as a first step to improving transparency and accountability within the ministry? This is the case in all other provinces.

Mr. Stelmach: As I said, Mr. Speaker, this matter is under investigation. The minister will review the results of that investigation and make the appropriate decisions.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One-third of homicides committed in Alberta are a result of domestic violence. Every year over 12,000 women are forced to live in shelters while more than 14,000 are turned away because of lack of space. Yes, Mr. Speaker, you heard that correctly: 14,000 women fleeing from abuse are turned away every year. To the Premier: when will this government take action to help the 14,000 women who are unable to be accommodated in shelters?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not only has the budget increased for housing and accommodation; there are dollars put into a number of areas. One is to get the message across to many Albertans in terms of the physical and verbal abuse within families, especially towards women and their children. There are many not-for-profit agencies that have undertaken the education process in this province. But we will continue to keep ensuring that we work with agencies, that there is appropriate housing, and provide comfort for those that have been abused by their families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the message is getting out there, but it is awful slowly. We need to do something for those 14,000 women who are fleeing violence right now. In that regard, why aren't we increasing our operational funding right now to improve more shelter space to help these 14,000 women fleeing these horrible, horrible situations today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, having attended many of the fundraising events that raise funds to supplement those that are provided by government to the various agencies providing housing, counselling, and protection and in speaking to the president, she was quite satisfied in terms of the direction the government is taking and the increase in funding. We'll continue to do that in spite of the fact that, you know, our resources are constrained. But this is a serious matter. We take it very seriously. Yes, education will help, but there are other ways of intervening to ensure that women are protected in their own homes.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know money is tight right now, but if this government is looking for money, we can always look to the $50 million that is ready and able to help people in the victims of crime fund. Why isn't this money being put to use right now to help these 14,000 women who are fleeing domestic violence situations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not responsible for the fund, but the minister that is responsible can certainly answer the question.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the member will know that we have allocated millions of dollars to help victims of crime. The surplus in the fund is required to achieve stabilization. Nonetheless, my department is looking at it, and we'll report in due time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's tragic death of a Morinville area foster child is the latest in an unfortunate list of incidents that have continued to cause grief for all Albertans. After each of these tragedies the NDP made recommendations that would better protect children in government care, but each time our suggestions have fallen on dead ears. To the Premier. It's not enough just to say that you care when you are the one in charge. Why has the Premier failed to take action to better protect the children in this government's care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister has undertaken an investigation in this matter. Once the results of that investigation are known, then she will make the appropriate decisions based on the evidence that's brought forward by the agency that is doing the review.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, children in care have suffered, their families have grieved, and this government's response has simply been to cut funding and staffing levels in this ministry. Child intervention services have been cut by $26 million. Countless positions have been left vacant due to a hiring freeze. Again to the Premier: how can the Premier claim that he is working to protect vulnerable children while at the same time stripping the ministry of support and resources that are needed to do the job?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to reach conclusions in terms of what the issue was in this particular tragic case, but I would ask the House to wait until the minister completes the investigation. Then we will have more information to reach a conclusion.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this House is still waiting for the results of an investigation that we were promised over a year ago, so waiting isn't going to do it. This government's own reports show that there are 79 confirmed instances of abuse against 150 children in care between January and June of '09 alone. This is a clear indication that the ministry was not in a position to sustain further funding cuts. Again to the Premier: how can you possibly think that this ministry, with its tragic record over the last two years, can protect the children in its care with fewer resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This member knows full well that the budget for child intervention is substantive. We have over $525 million in this budget. We are going to be discussing this during estimates on March 17, and I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker: I am monitoring this budget very closely. I've discussed this with staff, the overall budget. They've assured me that the foster care review report that was conducted two years ago has made a significant difference in the area of foster care. It's about the screening, and it's also that we have good people that are applying for foster care and with the right intentions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Long-term Care in Fort McMurray

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was speaking with some schoolchildren as well as some voters in Fort McMurray, and they asked the question on question period on why we cannot get answers from government ministers or the Premier, so I'm going to provide an opportunity for the Premier on my questions that I asked just a week and a half ago. My question was pertaining to a commitment to long-term care in our community of Fort McMurray as well as 15 others and why new money is being spent, yet the old commitments that were made have still not been lived up to. Could the Premier please answer the question: why haven't you lived up to the old commitments while you are out spending new money?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is no new money being spent. We are working within our capital budget, and decisions with respect to continuing care facilities will be made very shortly. We just completed the sale of our capital bonds. We are looking at other areas to ensure that we provide the appropriate facilities for our seniors, and as I said before, we want to have seniors retire in the very same community that they helped build.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, our seniors, who have built this very province – again, pertaining to the question, new money has been listed in the budget. It has been announced in Fort McMurray, but the previous commitments that were made to communities across Alberta, in fact, appear to have been forgotten. My question is: will you honour the previous commitments that have been made to seniors across this province, not just in my constituency, as opposed to new money that is going out and being spent in new initiatives as opposed to, in fact, responding to the old commitments that have been made?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are going to continue on our plan to build the appropriate number of seniors' accommodations in the province. I will say that the attitude towards seniors and the way we provide that housing has to change. We're not going to continue to build facilities where we keep dividing couples after 60 years of marriage and move one into perhaps a lodge here and move the other one into long-term care. That won't happen. We can keep seniors together, and we can get better quality of life and better service. That's the direction this government is taking.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, to the seniors I've spoken to in my community and across Alberta, there have been over 15 commitments made to MLAs' constituencies in taking care of seniors, who have built this province. To the Premier. There are billions of dollars being spent today, new money, on carbon capture and storage, yet the previous commitments that were made have not been honoured. Will you honour these commitments, Mr. Premier, and assure this House that you will honour those commitments before any new money is being spent?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to remind the hon. Member for Fort McMurray of a few certain facts. In the last decade over $1 billion was spent on highway 63. On education there's $40 million being spent on a new junior high school, $53 million being spent on a new high school. Total government support: $1.4 billion. He says that there's nothing new on the capital plan. Of course, there's nothing new on the capital plan. The point is that with revenues down, we're still building it. If he doesn't want it in Fort McMurray, I think there's a mayor down in Calgary that might like it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By ramming through Bill 50 last year, this government took away a landowner's right to be consulted in the construction of high-voltage power lines. Now that projects are being planned, landowners are frustrated that they're being left out of decisions that are severely affecting the value of their property. For example, a 40-acre strip by Crossfield is virtually unsellable because of uncertainty on where those transmission lines are going to go up. To the Minister of Energy: how are Albertans supposed to invest in this province when they're kept in the dark and they aren't given any power to protect their interests?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there are a whole bunch of accusations made in that preamble that are completely false. What Bill 50 did was ensure that we not have hearings around the need. The need is evident, and Bill 50 passed the House last fall. What are taking place right now are negotiations with the various proponents of the transmission lines, with the landowners, and it'll be going before a hearing shortly.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, instead of consultations this government prefers information sessions so that people can find out what this government has already decided. With this Big Brother mentality what process is left for Albertans to make their concerns known to this government, Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, any Albertan has the opportunity through any elected official to make their views known relative to any issue. I would suggest that if there's a particular situation that this member has that he would like to draw to my attention as a minister of the Crown, I would also be open to those suggestions. Then on the official side of it, as I said, the hearings will begin. There's ample opportunity there as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we've heard reports that the so-called experts sent to these sessions not only lack knowledge, but they also met Albertans' concerns with contempt. Given this government's track record for silencing Albertans or attempting to silence them, how can Albertans have any confidence that this government will finally hear and act on their concerns?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure where the member is getting his information. He prefaced his question by: we hear. I'm not sure where he hears. But, certainly, in the process of going forward with the negotiations with landowners, I'm informed by many of those who are involved that negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Beef Industry

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several constituents that are cow-calf beef producers, and as you know, due to a number of factors their viability is in question. Many are exiting the business, Alberta's herd is shrinking, and of course this would have dramatic impacts on rural Alberta. My question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. What can he do or what will he do to ensure these important primary producers remain viable and strong in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, that industry as part of the agriculture industry is hugely important to us as it's our second-largest and largest renewable industry in the province. In 2008 this government committed close to $360 million to a long-range plan to spur innovation in technology, strengthen and stabilize the industry into the future. We face a great number of challenges right now with the new global economic situation, but that industry remains important, and we remain investing more than any other province in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. These same constituents are telling me that one of the big problems they see is that there isn't enough competition among purchasers in Alberta. They often point to the fact that we only have two major packing plants in our province, which they feel keeps prices depressed. What's the minister's response to that, and what can he do to ensure that there's more competition amongst purchasers?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, it's true there are only two major packing plants in the province, but there are over 50 smaller processing facilities in Alberta. I understand the hon. member's concern. We need to open more markets, and we need to work closely with our neighbours throughout Canada and with the federal government to ensure that we can open more markets through those other processing facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. My primary producers continue to be frustrated by the regulatory burdens that they feel they have in this province, particularly in light of the fact that beef being imported to Alberta does not have to comply with the same standards that Alberta beef does. Is this true, and can the minister tell us what he can do to eliminate this unfair disadvantage?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, the quality and safety standards for meat that's brought into the province are the same whether those are processed here in the province or whether they're brought in from outside. Some of the competitive disadvantage that I hear about and some of the things we need to address are the extra funding that we spend on SRMs in our country compared to some of our competitors. We need to take a look through Bill 1 to make ourselves more competitive and create a better environment for the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Syphilis Caseload

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The way the government has handled the growing syphilis rates in Alberta is embarrassing. Firing three top public health officers and proceeding to do virtually nothing for three years has seen infection rates soar. Syphilis is entirely treatable, and for Alberta to have twice the national average for infection rates shows this government has ignored their own advice and allowed this situation to get out of hand. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. The former minister of health apparently ignored this issue. Will the minister finally act on the recommendations made in 2007 and have a province-wide campaign?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The spreading of an infectious disease is a great concern to all of us. I thank the member, actually, for raising the issue because we do have a plan in place now, and there is a little bit more of an addition to that plan coming soon that will see, among other things, targeted interventions with certain population areas and certain population groups. That plan will also include establishing a 14-member group that will look further into the prevention aspects of this particular issue, and there are other enhanced clinical screenings being done as well.

Ms Pastoor: A proper health care system should have enough capacity to shift resources when needed and not completely drop everything else. This appears to have been the case under the H1N1. What is the minister doing to make sure that we have very balanced public health?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the chief medical officer for health, who is one of many advisers to me as minister, has the additional parts to that plan. That'll be coming out very soon, hon. member, and I'll be sharing that with the public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I wonder if the minister could tell me just on what basis the projection was made by the public health officer. You've talked about the plan coming forward. Is there a specific timeline?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're already establishing the new 14-member team as we speak. But there will be more specific actions very soon that we'll be rolling out that will address exactly that issue. It's a cause for concern to be sure, and we're targeting to get back to zero within five years, which is a very realistic projection at this stage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Regulatory Reform

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. We all want Alberta to be greener. We all want Alberta to be safer. Thus, government creates regulations. Often the government overregulates when trying to achieve these goals. Unfortunately, each added regulation increases administrative costs to Alberta businesses, Alberta businesses that have to compete internationally with others not burdened with unnecessary regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate the hon. member's concern with overregulation. In fact, this government has been reviewing regulation on a regular basis since the mid-90s. That's not surprising given the economic growth that has taken place in the province. Particularly with our resource-based economy, concern with environmental protection and worker safety is paramount. To ensure that the regulations are appropriate, my department works collaboratively with other ministries in the development of regulations. In particular, we've had since the mid-90s the Regulatory Review Secretariat, currently chaired by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the regulatory load upon business, and is overregulation hurting our competitiveness?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, overregulation, of course, poses a threat of hurting our competitiveness, but again thanks to the good work done by the Regulatory Review Secretariat and the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, we scrutinize all new regulation, and any change to existing regulation is scrutinized to make sure that the results that we want are achieved in the least burdensome way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What are the government's plans to rein in and reduce our regulatory load on Alberta businesses and enhance our competitiveness?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we think we have a system that's working well now, and we'll continue to use the Regulatory Review Secretariat. The hon. Minister of Energy is just completing a competitiveness review that looks at a broad sector of factors that affect the competitiveness of the energy industry. One of those is regulation, and you'll be seeing action on that front shortly. Of course, Bill 1, the Competitiveness Act, will be looking at all the factors that affect Alberta's competitiveness, one of which is regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is at a crisis point in the battle against impaired driving, and Mothers Against Drunk Driving have called repeatedly for the government to step up to the plate. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Will you commit to lowering the acceptable blood-alcohol content for operating a vehicle to 0.5?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, impaired driving is a crime, and it's treated as such in this province. Our message has always been clear: don't drink and drive, or sooner or later we're going to get you. We're going to keep our policemen on the roads. We're going to keep doing everything we possibly can to catch the people that drink and drive and keep them off the roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, your message is not working. In 2007 there was a 19 per cent increase in the rate of impaired driving, and 2008 brought a 40 per cent increase. That's pitiful. Will the Minister of Transportation be forecasting double-digit increases to the rate of impaired driving again in 2009?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we've been expanding our program. We brought in last year as part of our program a regulation that now we also convict people that are driving under any type of drugs, whether it's prescription drugs or anything else. Under our graduated driver's licence for all new drivers there's absolutely zero tolerance; they can't have any type of alcohol in their system. We plan on keeping the pressure on.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking about GDL drivers; we are talking about drivers who already have the licences.

Twenty two per cent of drivers who suffered a fatal crash in 2008 had consumed alcohol prior to the accident. The government's inaction is killing people. Why doesn't the minister amend the Traffic Safety Act to increase the current 24-hour suspension to a week-long penalty?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we look at the whole system. We're going to make sure that Justice does their part of it, that the Solicitor General does their part of it, and we're doing our utmost to keep drivers safe in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Private Registry Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many years ago the government made the decision to get out of running government registries and allow community-based entrepreneurs to step in.

While the oversight of the important registry function remains with the government, these entrepreneurs have built strong, credible, and important community-based businesses. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why is your department threatening to ruin hundreds of businesses across Alberta by opening up the registry business to banks, financial institutions, and others?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first want to say that registry agents do excellent work across Alberta, the over 200 offices that we have doing the front-line counter service that needs to be done on a daily basis. It's really important here: over these last couple of years just meeting with the registry agents, talking to them about the partnership they can continue to have with the government, and moving forward in a number of new areas like online services, areas like that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, that wasn't the question I asked you.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans have invested huge amounts of time and money to build a livelihood and a private business for their family. Sadly, this government faction once again is undermining the ability of businesses to invest with confidence and certainty. The provincial government is now moving forward with a plan to allow banks, financial institutions, and others to get into the private registry business. My question is again to the same minister. If you're going to allow banks and financial institutions to get into the registry business, will you ensure that the playing field is truly level and require them to operate as stand-alone businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to some of the comments that the hon. member has made, at any time we are discussing ongoing things. Nothing has been set in stone. We are discussing and having good feedback on a number of issues. Just last year we signed a phenomenal registry agent agreement. It took one year to sign that agreement. I was very proud of that work, very proud of the partnership we have with the agents on this. Moving forward, anything we do will be discussed openly, and that's what's really important.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it was your document that was leaked to the association, not mine.

My final question is to the same minister. Why are you allowing your department to undermine the confidence and security of the investment that thousands of Albertans have made in their own registry business by not stopping this ill-conceived plan in its tracks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very good to clear this up. Any time internal documents are shared with the public, that's something we have to look at. It's really important to note that it's an internal discussion document. Nothing has been decided. We are moving forward and will be consulting with registry agents as well as with Albertans. I think what's really important here is being competitive, more online services, and giving registry agents a chance to succeed and do more good business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Women's Issues

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People around the world are proudly acknowledging and reaffirming their commitment to the equality, freedom, and advancement of women on this International Women's Day. Today's theme is Strong Women, Strong Canada, Strong World, and I truly hope we're making strides towards this. My first question is to the minister responsible for women's issues, the hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services. In the past I've had constituents question whether the public service has done enough with respect to women's issues. What is the minister's department doing with the other levels of government to ensure that women's issues are given the proper attention they deserve in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important day for women in Alberta and across the country. As provincial ministers we do meet, hon. member, with our federal counterpart. We work as partners through the Status of Women, through the ministerial forum. The meeting, I understand, will be taking place this June. On the agenda we have issues such as economic security for women, issues of violence against women, aboriginal women's issues. As the member said, we very much remain committed in this province to the equality, freedom, and advancement of women.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Canadians may well be celebrating certain progress towards equality for women, but barriers do remain. My first supplemental question is for the Minister of Justice. What is her department doing to address the serious challenges faced by Alberta women and girls, and are these efforts truly meeting the needs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a woman in Alberta and the mother of a seven-year-old it's very important to me that we take this time today to talk about what our successes have been but also where we as government and as society still need to do more work.

Under the safe communities initiative, Mr. Speaker, we have put tremendous resources into investing into community-based projects that will ensure that women can feel safe and comfortable discussing issues that have to do with how they need to realize their lives.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I truly do appreciate the candid answer, but I do have one more question for the same minister, who has spoken about supplying women and families with the tools they do need to live better lives. Can the minister give us some tangible evidence as to whether these efforts are actually making a positive difference for these really important Albertans?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to justice matters we believe that while there are a number of issues that government programs may support that address concerns and needs that women in our communities have, there's no doubt that we need to deal with where some of the issues are. We need to spend some time, we believe, particularly on domestic violence issues. We're very concerned about women who are vulnerable in their homes and about the children who are vulnerable in those homes with them. So under the safe communities innovation fund we've invested in over five projects that encourage dialogue, debate, and support to people and families to deal with domestic violence.

Aboriginal Learning Outcomes

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the government announced a memorandum of understanding on aboriginal education with treaty chiefs and the federal government. Motion, however, should not be confused with progress. On aboriginal education this government is standing still and in some areas is actually going backwards. To the Minister of Education. The partnership memorandum seems to be an agreement to come up with a strategy later, an IOU rather than an MOU. Will this MOU require the provincial government to actually come forward with any new resources to improve aboriginal learning outcomes?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the memorandum of agreement that was signed a week ago last Wednesday together with the partnership agreement which we signed last fall are two very, very important steps forward. First of all, the partnership agreement that we signed last fall with the grand chiefs of treaties 6, 7, and 8 and the president of the Métis Settlements General Council and the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta set up a partnership with Advanced Education, Education, and Aboriginal Relations, working with those groups to really focus on how we can move aboriginal education, First Nations and Métis education, forward in this province. This new partnership, that includes the federal ministry: I'll be able to elaborate further, Mr. Speaker, on the good work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a tremendous difference between smoking a ceremonial pipe and blowing smoke. Provincial per-student funding for First Nations learners has been frozen at last year's level and only increased by $12 the year before that. How are school districts supposed to improve aboriginal learning outcomes when their ministry is standing still?

Mr. Hancock: Far from standing still, we've made the most progress in this area that has been made in ages. First of all, the progress really is the leadership of the communities themselves, the leadership together with the province and now the federal government signing on, making it the highest priority.

Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't be in that member's position of making light of very important ceremonies that people undertake in terms of the pipe ceremonies at the start. We take very, very seriously our partnership with treaties 6, 7, and 8, our partnership with the Métis Settlements General Council, and the work of all of us to make sure that, first, the achievement gap is eliminated between First Nations and Métis students and other students of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I certainly don't take First Nations' ceremonies for granted. I'm a big fan of the Black Elk sacred pipe, as one example.

High school completion rates for First Nations students are at 52 per cent compared to 79 per cent for all other students. But Budget 2010 eliminates grants intended to boost high school completion rates. Why is this minister backtracking on raising completion rates for aboriginal learners?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not backtracking on that. In fact, it's still one of the most important things we can do; that is, to ensure that each and every one of the students in this province regardless of their background, regardless of whether they live on a First Nation or in a city or a town or in a rural area—every single student matters. Every student, every day. No exceptions.

2:30 Calgary Road and Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are hearing that the city of Calgary is not receiving adequate funding for its road and infrastructure projects. I've heard that some of the projects may be in jeopardy due to lack of funds. My question is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Can the minister explain why his department is not providing enough funds to help Calgary complete these projects?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'd like this member and all members to know that my department supplied $1.6 billion to the city of Calgary in the last five years. That's $1.6 billion, with a "b." What the city spends these grants on is up to the city; it's their choice. The city sets its own priorities because the city is in the best position to know what its citizens need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I'm very glad to hear the city is getting transportation grants, many of my constituents in south Calgary are concerned with the progress made on the Stoney Trail ring road. My second question is to the same hon. minister. Can the minister tell us when we will see some activity on the southeastern section of the Stoney Trail?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're not going to be waiting very long. By the end of March we expect to announce the successful bidder on the project, and I'm sure that they will be out there moving dirt later on this spring. We're going to extend Stoney Trail from 17th Avenue SE to Macleod Trail, and it will open to traffic in the fall of 2013. That will complete roughly 70 per cent of the ring road in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Calgarians have different views on which projects should go first with municipal sustainability funding, MSI. Can the minister explain how it is determined which projects proceed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true that municipalities receive substantial support through MSI. In the last four years—and that's including this year—Calgary has received $639.9 million in funding. We are still committed to Calgary for the full amount of $3.3 billion. But the beauty of MSI is that it gives the municipalities the autonomy to pursue projects that are right for their local residents. The local decisions are best made locally, and then it's up to the municipal leaders to do what they feel is right for their citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Support for the Film Industry

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The film industry in Alberta is in a very grave situation, but the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit is being divisive rather than constructive. The minister has recently described film unions as selfish and acting like children, which isn't very helpful. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why did the minister claim during budget debates that the head of IATSE, Damian Petti, was in a November meeting with the minister and the president of CFTPA, Norm Bolen, and somehow refused to co-operate, when Mr. Petti and Mr. Bolen have never met?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no smoking gun here. What I did say at estimates was that I had met with Mr. Bolen, who is the head of the CFTPA, and I had met with Mr. Petti on the same day. I didn't say that they were in the same room.

With respect to the fact that I said that they were acting like children, I said that in our film industry there are many reasons why we have to be competitive in Alberta. That's because we have a film development program that has a labour rate that's competitive with Ontario, with British Columbia, but we need co-operation from our film producers and our unions and guilds. British Columbia and Ontario have an agreement . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, back to the same minister. Given that IATSE has signed a binding agreement with 250 producers for a North American low-budget agreement, which helps Alberta producers, why does the minister ignore that in favour of advocating a nonbinding contract with Canadian producers? How does that help Alberta film workers?

Mr. Blackett: I said it again in estimates, Mr. Speaker. That's great that they have a binding agreement with low-budget films. The question was: why do we not have larger productions that employ more Albertans? I said that if we want to get more large productions into Alberta, then we need those agreements similar to the ones that we have with the small producers to attract those people from the States and from other countries and across Canada to our province.

Ms Blakeman: It needs to be a binding agreement, Minister.

Back to the same minister: why did the minister dismiss as grandstanding a gathering of almost 300 concerned film actors, stage workers, directors, set dressers, makeup artists, DOPs, and other film workers? Why did you dismiss them as grandstanding rather than taking their concerns seriously and working with them, not against them?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, if they were really interested in talking to me, they wouldn't have given me less than 48 hours to respond to their invitation knowing full well that I was in Vancouver and I wouldn't be back in Calgary until late in the day last Monday. They can call whenever they want. If they want a chance to talk to me – I've talked to hundreds of them in the past; I will continue to do so in the future – my door is always open, and we're available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

School Transportation Grants

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards in Whitecourt-St. Anne are concerned about education funding, not just the dollars that go into the schoolrooms but dollars that are scarce and that are needed for their transportation departments to get the students to and from their homes and schools. My questions are to the Minister of Education. With the price of oil on its rise, last year you reduced the subsidy for fuel. You eliminated that program, and that program offered lots of stability. Why did you do that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, last summer, when we were doing our value reviews and looking to see areas where we could actually save money, it became apparent that we were continuing with a grant to top up diesel prices over 60 cents per litre at a time when the price of diesel had actually fallen below the level that it was at in 2005, when the program was instituted, so we determined that that top-up grant was no longer necessary. I would point out that although that saved $6 million, the transportation grants have actually increased by $53 million, or 26 per cent, over that period of time.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, the transportation grants may have increased, Mr. Speaker, but not equally to all school divisions, and that's part of the problem. With the subsidy leaving, we leave our school bus drivers and those contractors very, very vulnerable. I think that you've made a big mistake, and I'd like you to relook at that issue. Will the minister reconsider?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a budget, and we have a finite amount of money to allocate to school boards. We have to put together formulas that can distribute those monies in the most effective way. What I can say is this. If the price of oil goes up and if there are more resources available to the province and that creates an increase in the price of gasoline and the price of diesel in particular, then of course we'll have to look at it and say: there's more revenue coming to the province, and there are more costs at the price, so we'll have to have a look at it. I would have to go back and get more resources from Treasury Board to be able to do that.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, has the minister made that commitment to the school boards and to our bus contractors across this province directly, or is this your first chance at this?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm not in a position to make a commitment to school boards and to school bus drivers that we will reinstate that program, but I am in a position to say that if resources are there – this particular grant is tied precisely to the price of fuel, and our revenue stream is very much tied to the price of fuel. So it makes sense that if the revenue stream goes up because prices go up, perhaps we can revisit the question of whether a subsidy grant needs to be put back in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Northeast Edmonton Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Four years ago the then minister of health announced plans for a primary health centre for northeast Edmonton. Four years later the building sits only half occupied by the public health clinic that was relocated from its previous location. In an area chronically short of doctors and health care services generally this health centre is badly needed. My question is to the minister of health. When will the acute-care facility promised four years ago be fully staffed and operational?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we'll be rolling out a plan in a couple of weeks that will include approximately $2.5 billion worth of health and health-related facilities, and this project that he's referring to is on the radar screen for consideration as part of that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Six primary care physicians were promised to communities which are chronically short of doctors. When will the six primary care doctors so badly needed by northeast Edmonton communities be hired?

2:40

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, primary care networks are working extremely well in this province. They're a relatively new concept. We have about 17 of them up and running now. I've met with some of these folks; I'll be meeting with some of them again in the very near future. I'll be happy to have this question passed on to the folks who are putting those specific PCNs in place right now in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a $44 million facility, and it sits half empty. The lights are on, but nobody is home. Can the minister tell the Assembly whether or not an investment of $44 million for a half-empty building is a good use of taxpayers' money?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, any project that commits money to help improve services for Albertans, to help access those services, and to help put the right people in the right place to deliver those services is a good investment. In case the hon. member missed it, we have been suffering through a very, very dramatic global economic downturn. Now we're starting to see a coming out of that, as it were. As soon as we're a little further along the way, I hope we'll be able to look at a number of projects that have been deferred and get as many of them moving as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

PDD Funding

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I met with constituents and service providers this last week, a common concern was this government's lack of trust as families and service providers struggle to provide services for those in need. After hearing their stories, I have to agree. This government is implementing a program to reassess the 9,000 clients of PDD. What is really needed is a complete audit of the value and quality of services that are being provided for those clients. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will you cancel the reassessment program and focus on providing adequate care and services for those people on PDD?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it's very important to us that we get the services and supports for those who are eligible for PDD supports right, and one of the ways we can get that right is by assessing their individual needs. The new program that we have put in place, which is called the supports intensity program, will reassess the 9,200 individuals to ensure that they are receiving the right supports, and if they're not, we will put the right supports in place.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, audits have shown that those assessments are accurate. This minister needs to ask her department if it's more concerned about repeated assessments or helping PDD agencies deliver on their mandate. Agencies are telling me that they are spending so much time dealing with these new repeated assessments that new clients are not able to be assessed and get the services they need. My question to the minister of community supports again: is this waste of taxpayers' dollars and PDD agency resources simply a make-work project for department staff?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you there is plenty of work in the PDD program to go around. This is a very important part of the priority action plan that we have in place to ensure that we are providing the right supports for all of our PDD clients. The thing that's most important is that we'll have consistent supports throughout the province for all the clients so that we have the same sort of services provided in Grande Prairie as in Lethbridge and east to west as well.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the audits have been done. The assessments are accurate. They're wasting taxpayers' money, their time. It just isn't good. This government has a predictable pattern. They make rash decisions and then refuse to recognize that they are responsible for the consequences. I'll ask the minister again: will you cancel this PDD reassessment and get the proper support for those families and agencies that need to provide the actual services, not reassessments?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that our PDD clients are receiving the best supports and services that can be provided in the country of Canada. We need to ensure, because we have a budget that we have to look after, that people are receiving the right amount of supports, the right amount from north to south, east to west. We have to make sure it's consistent throughout the province, and we have to make sure that the right supports are in place. That's what the supports intensity scale will do. It's a proven program. It's used in 25 other locations around North America, and this will bring better results for our PDD clients.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 108 questions and responses today, made up of the recognition of 13 opposition members and five government members.

When we went to the question period, we were in the Routine with respect to Ministerial Statements. We had recognized a ministerial statement from the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, and as is our custom, we'll now recognize a spokesman from the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Olympic athletes, volume 2, the under-four-minutes version.

Mr. Speaker, like the hon. minister, I agree that the Vancouver Olympics were a spectacular success story for the nation. Our athletes truly shone, delivering the most gold medals ever won by a host country at a Winter Olympics and giving us a solid third place in the overall medal count. Medals aside, every competitor put her or his heart into these games, performing to the very best of their ability as well as helping play host to the world.

This was a signature moment for Canada alongside events such as Expo 67 and our own Winter Games in Calgary in 1988. No matter where in Canada we hail from, we should all be very proud of these Olympics and the men and women from coast to coast to coast who made the games such a rousing success story. That includes Alberta's tremendous contributions to the games. The majority of the Canadian athletes participating at the Olympics trained in my hometown, Calgary, thanks to the legacy left behind by the '88 Olympics.

I'll certainly join the minister in welcoming, or I would have, Shannon Szabados to this House. Our Olympic women were amazing at these Olympics, individually and collectively. Congratulations and thank you for making Canada proud.

The minister also mentioned that many volunteers from Alberta used their Olympic experiences in Calgary to help the Vancouver games go even more smoothly. These folks, too, made contributions of truly Olympic proportions.

I'm pleased to give this administration credit for the success of the Alberta pavilion and the Alberta-branded Rocky Mountaineer. These were logical investments that have without question helped promote Alberta as a destination for business, for tourism, and for living.

I think the many artists who participated in the Cultural Olympiad at the pavilion and across the lower mainland deserve the gratitude of all Albertans for putting on such a spectacular show. These talented men and women helped the world catch a glimpse of the true Alberta in all its spectacular diversity.

I hope this administration will recognize, however, that advertising requires the advertiser to live up to its promises. The budget for Tourism, Parks and Recreation is of course facing some pretty drastic cuts: over $26 million in cuts from sports, recreation, and physical activity. Cuts this deep cannot help but have a dramatically negative impact on health, fitness, and future Olympic prospects for Alberta-based Canadian athletes. Community agencies across the province are saying that it's very difficult to do the work that they need to do in the face of these cuts. Certainly, we could cut down some of the costs to our health care system if we did more to encourage active lifestyles. In the wake of these highly successful Olympics many young Albertans are going to be looking for opportunities to participate in sport. This administration, showing characteristic lack of foresight, has cut many of those opportunities short.

The many people who were exposed to Alberta at the Olympics would expect to visit a province that puts a high priority on wildlife habitat preservation, but that budget has been cut by $13.5 million. Such a decrease will certainly have a negative impact on aging park infrastructure as well as information, distribution, and enforcement activities. If Alberta's Olympic showcase brings as many visitors as the administration hopes, we need to be sure that the rising expectations of tourists and business travelers are matched by the reality of their Alberta experience.

These concerns aside, I am truly proud of Alberta's contributions to the Vancouver Olympics.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to request unanimous consent from the House to respond to the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has requested unanimous consent to participate with respect to this ministerial statement. I'll ask only one question. Is any hon. member opposed? If so, simply say no.

Crossroads Family Services

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Foster homes and foster families in this province care for some of the most vulnerable children during what can often be the most difficult time in their lives. This past Friday I was joined by the hon. members for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, Edmonton-Calder, and Edmonton-McClung in participating in the Crossroads Family Services foster parent recognition event, highlighted by awards recognizing five, 10, and 15 years of dedication to foster parenting. The awards night was organized by Ms Janet Ryan-Newell, whom I introduced earlier, along with her hard-working team at Crossroads.

Currently supporting 139 children in 74 foster homes within the Edmonton area, I am honoured to say that Crossroads Family Services has its head office in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. In fact, last summer I teamed up with Crossroads to host a foster parent barbecue in Mill Woods park, an experience that was tremendously rewarding.

Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that foster parenting is one of the most important jobs in the world, and they deserve our support for their dedication, generosity, patience, compassion, and strength. I want to express my heartfelt gratitude to all of Alberta's foster parents and the agencies, like Crossroads, that support them. Without a doubt your kindness, skill, and commitment are making a difference in the lives of young people and helping to create a stronger, more vibrant Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Heather MacDonald-Webber

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, International Women's Day, I am honoured to pay tribute to an inspirational Albertan who was taken from this Earth far too young, at the age of 47, after her third battle with cancer, leaving three daughters and her husband, the MLA for Calgary-Foothills.

Heather Webber was a hero, not just for what she did in her life but how she did it. She was an incredible daughter, sister, wife, mother, mentor, and leader. After graduating from St. Mary's high school in Calgary in 1980, Heather took a volleyball scholarship at the University of Idaho, was captain of the Red Deer College Queens volleyball team, was awarded athlete of the year, and finished with the University of Lethbridge Pronghorns. In 1987 Heather married her best friend, the hon. member, who stated that she motivated others to be their best, to stay positive no matter what, and she stayed that way until the end.

After decades in the corporate health and wellness industry while running a busy household, Heather was diagnosed with breast cancer and fought it valiantly for a decade. During that time she coached, captained, competed, and served as president of the Sistership Dragon Boat Association, codirected the CIBC Run for the Cure twice, was named a Warrior for Cancer twice, received the Alberta centennial medal for community volunteerism, and was awarded outstanding CIBC Run for the Cure volunteer just last year. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, less than two months ago she led 20 Honolulu Hopefuls in successfully completing the Honolulu Marathon.

I'm so proud of and inspired by her husband, our dear friend and intrepid colleague, as well as by his brave, intelligent, and beautiful daughters – Lauren, Jaime, and Kelly – for their amazing grace under the most difficult of circumstances. Countless hearts are broken at the loss of Heather, but we may be consoled that a treasured angel has truly earned her wings.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

International Women's Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and recognize March 8 as International Women's Day. Each year around the world hundreds of events are happening, not just on this day but throughout March, to mark the economic, political, and social achievements of women. Our province proudly acknowledges this day and our commitment to the equality, freedom, and advancement of women.

Women play leadership roles in the health and education of our families, in our fields, our classrooms, and our boardrooms. They are also great politicians, businesswomen, top athletes, celebrities, and are also serving in our military in great numbers as well. Women have taught us about hope, about courage, and about opportunity.

Alberta stands proud as a province where women have made advancements and taken advantage of the numerous opportunities available. Whether it is in the growing numbers of women in business or completing graduate school, women are making a strong imprint on the history of Alberta.

Alberta's Famous Five fought hard for equality and the rights that women in Canada enjoy today. My religion, Sikhism, also teaches that it is important to honour women. In the 15th century the first Sri Guru Nanak Dev Ji raised the profile of women in society. He said [remarks in Punjabi]. This means: why condemn women, who give birth to kings and saints?

As we celebrate International Women's Day, we must stop and give thanks to the amazing women both past and present. It is a time to remember and honour the sacrifices, talents, and leadership of women around the world. Mr. Speaker, I believe we should offer a round of applause to all the women who have played an important part in our lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Lethbridge Family Services

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1905 this province was born. In 1910 many service organizations were born. In 2010 I want to recognize the hundredth anniversary that was celebrated on February 15 in Lethbridge, and I refer to Lethbridge Family Services. Their mission statement in part is: "We believe that the family, more than any other institution, shapes the personality and the character of every person. We also believe that the nature of life in society is, in a large part, determined by the quality of family life."

Lethbridge Family Services provides in-home support services to individuals and/or families in order that they can live independently for as long as possible. There are three specific programs – home support, tenant support, and homemaking – in addition to counselling, outreach, therapy groups, presentations, workshops, personal growth groups, and a resource library. The DaCapo program supports those affected with brain injury, fetal alcohol spectrum, and those with developmental disabilities. Immigrant services provide settlement support for newcomers to Canada.

LFS makes an average of 27,000 home visits per month in an area stretching from the Crowsnest Pass to Taber, north to Picture Butte, Granum, and Nobleford. Their dedicated staff number 350 and operate three different sites and have an annual operating budget of $12.1 million. The agency will develop and manage a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder diagnostic and assessment clinic in the very near future. Imagine the ripple effect from the many people who've been helped and moved to other parts of our province and our country.

Thank you, Lethbridge Family Services. Please join me in congratulating them on their hundredth anniversary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Dr. Bob Steadward

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, Dr. Bob Steadward was recently awarded the Olympic Order, the highest distinction conferred by the International Olympic Committee, in recognition of exemplary service. Bob is perhaps best known to Albertans as the founder of the Steadward Centre, a multidisability fitness, research, and lifestyle facility located at the University of Alberta. The centre has made an immeasurable difference in the lives of Albertans living with disabilities.

Today, however, is an opportunity for this House to recognize Dr. Steadward's work on the international stage. As the founding president of the International Paralympic Committee and recognized around the world as the visionary behind the global Paralympic movement, Dr. Steadward successfully proposed and negotiated a formal structure in the Olympics to include athletes with disabilities, a movement we know today as the International Paralympic Games. The road to this incredible achievement, Mr. Speaker, began over 27 years ago, when Bob brought together 41 nations in the Netherlands to discuss his proposal to include Paralympic competition in the Olympics. By the year 2000 175 countries had committed to Dr. Steadward's Paralympics movement, and the Olympics and Paralympics were permanently joined, a remarkable feat by any measure.

Mr. Speaker, to what do we attribute the achievements of this exceptional Albertan? Calvin Coolidge once said:

Nothing in the world can take the place of persistence. Talent will not; nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not; unrewarded genius is almost a proverb. Education will not; the world is full of educated derelicts. Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent. The slogan Press On has solved and always will solve the problems of the human race.

Mr. Speaker, as 1,350 athletes and officials from over 40 countries make their way to Vancouver for next week's games, I know all members of this House will want to join me in thanking Bob for his persistence and in congratulating him for this recognition so richly deserved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Bighorn Sheep

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February of this year the Wild Sheep Foundation Convention and International Sporting Expo, known as the Sheep Show, honoured a number of nationally and internationally acclaimed conservationists during the event. One of the award recipients is a constituent of mine, Ms Beth MacCallum of Bighorn technologies in Hinton, Alberta, who was recognized with the outstanding achievement award for research that led to the population growth of some of Alberta's biggest bighorn sheep herds. These are no ordinary sheep herds as these herds are on the Gregg River and the Cardinal River Coals active mine sites, and these sheep are being transported to other projects throughout the western United States.

These awards and others were presented by the Wild Sheep Foundation during their annual convention and expo in Reno, Nevada. Mr. Speaker, the Wild Sheep Foundation, formerly the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep, was founded in 1977 by sheep and mountain hunting enthusiasts and conservationists. With a membership of more than 10,000 world-wide and a chapter network in North America, the WSF is the premier advocate for wild sheep, wild goats, and other wildlife and their habitat. Since forming in 1977, the Wild Sheep Foundation has raised and expended more than $74 million on conservation and education programs in North America, Europe, and Asia.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) reads, "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are still items to be concluded under the Orders of the Day, I'd like to seek unanimous consent of the House to extend Orders of the Day to the end of the normal list for today.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and request leave to introduce Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

The Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act is generally amended every single year to ensure that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime. While most of the amendments in this year's bill are of a housekeeping nature, I'll address a few specific measures during second reading, which will include a clarification of the rules which allow corporations to file returns in currencies like the U.S. dollar or the British pound in response to changes that the federal legislation made as well as changes to the regulation-making authority in the act that ensure that new refund interest rates can be made applicable to prior periods.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 8 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, chair of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table five copies of the 2009-2010 third-quarter update on the fund. Copies were distributed to members on February 26.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings. My first tabling is from Calgarian Michael McAra. He's deeply disappointed that the government has not stepped up to fund a portion of the airport tunnel in Calgary. He believes that we can find a way to make it work.

My second tabling is correspondence from Calgary-Varsity constituent Donna Tetarenko, who grew up in Edmonton but lived in B.C. for 20 years. She doesn't understand what happened in Alberta while she was gone and expresses her concerns about several issues, including postsecondary costs, the health care premium being cut, and lack of forward thinking.

I'm also tabling correspondence from John McMechan, who is a student at the University of Calgary. He is greatly distressed at the idea of tuition increases that he feels are being used to pay for the costs of poor administration at the university.

I'm tabling correspondence received from my constituent Isabelle Emery, who urges me to convey her opposition to cuts in public services, particularly to education and health care, as she feels this is a short-sighted approach that will cost more down the road. She's concerned about future cuts and how that will affect taxpayers.

My final tabling is from constituent Bill Wakefield, who, with his wife, was shocked to learn that a group of nurses were holding a potluck dinner at their own expense to raise money to purchase new baby scales for the hospital because there was no funding in the budget to buy them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table, first, the appropriate number of copies of 18 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds.

In addition, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 605 signatures which calls on the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government to keep the current 14,500 long-term care beds in Alberta fully operational and to follow through on their 2008 election commitment to open an additional 600 long-term care beds."

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today, first, to offer my humble apology to you, and second, to table a report entitled Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2008 Annual Report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I'm going to now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for an introduction.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lorelei Kuchera. Lorelei has joined us in the public gallery. She is very active in the film community here in Alberta in two different roles. One is vice-president of film for IATSE local 210. Of course, IATSE is the international alliance of theatrical stage employees and moving picture technicians of the United States and Canada. She is also a member of the Alberta Association of Motion Picture and Television Unions. I would ask Lorelei to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to Orders of the Day, on March 5, 1982, 18 years ago, the hon. Member for Little Bow was elected to this Assembly for the first time. His election was very important to him. It was also very important to me and remains one of the highlights of my life. Congratulations to the hon. member.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary Airport Access Tunnel

M9. Mr. Kang moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for Alberta Transportation regarding the construction of the proposed Calgary airport tunnel.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I submitted this motion for a return in order to determine why this government has failed to take a lead on the construction of a Calgary airport tunnel. I would like to see what studies, research, and other documents the government has collected in hopes that this information might help all parties better understand where they stand relative to the completion of this project.

I had hoped that after hearing the arguments from the city of Calgary, from the Airport Trail Access Committee, and from myself on why the Calgary airport tunnel is essential to Calgary, the Minister of Transportation would reconsider his position and support its construction. However, this has not yet happened. I have said many times that the Calgary airport tunnel is essential infrastructure to my constituency, to Calgary, and to all of Alberta.

Calgary is growing into an international hub not only for business leaders but also for visitors from around the globe. The Calgary International Airport is set to expand to reflect this fact. While the airport expansion is great for all Alberta, it will soon leave thousands of commuters in Calgary-McCall disconnected from the rest of Calgary. It will also increase traffic congestion on Deerfoot Trail, which is a major problem, since without the airport tunnel it will be the only route to the airport. Many businesses will be directly harmed if an airport tunnel is not built, and the quality of life of Calgarians will be seriously compromised.

The construction of this Calgary airport tunnel is essential to avoid these problems, and to achieve this, this government only needs to show leadership and commit $98 million toward these problems, something that could have been easily done if they'd stopped spending money on frills such as horse racing.

I submitted this motion for a return to determine the government's level of support for the Calgary airport tunnel. I also wanted to check on their progress. With the requested information I will be able to report back to my constituents and to Calgarians on the likelihood of this tunnel being built. These are the reasons we have requested reports, studies, and financial forecasts that the Transportation department has prepared on the construction of this project.

Before taking my seat and awaiting their response, I want to thank the members of this Assembly and anyone who has been an ally in this battle for the airport tunnel.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation to respond.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to this hon. member and to the House. The member has asked for "a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for Alberta Transportation regarding the construction of the proposed Calgary airport trail tunnel." This proposed project falls under the jurisdiction of the city of Calgary and not the province of Alberta. Alberta Transportation gives the city municipal grants to put towards their priority projects as they see fit. In 2009 the city of Calgary received through my department and through Alberta Municipal Affairs more than $459 million in capital grants for infrastructure. If the tunnel was a priority for the city, they could have simply allocated this money to the tunnel.

Mr. Speaker, since this is a municipal, not provincial, jurisdiction, my department does not have any reports, any studies, financial forecasts, or other materials related to the construction of the proposed Calgary airport tunnel. Therefore, it isn't possible to provide these documents.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to reject this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to conclude the debate.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really disappointed to hear the minister say that he doesn't have any documentation because consultations were going on. ATAC met with the minister, and Mr. Stevenson met with the minister so many times.

I feel it's kind of a sad day not only for northeast Calgary but for the whole of Calgary. I'm really disappointed in the Calgary government caucus, the MLAs, for not showing support for this very valuable project for the city of Calgary, especially the MLAs from the east side because, you know, it will be affecting northeast Calgary more than any other part of Calgary. It will not only affect northeast Calgary, but it will affect the whole of Calgary and the province as a whole. As I said before, the only access to the airport will be the Deerfoot Trail and Country Hills Boulevard.

We have been talking about reducing greenhouse gas emissions. This is going to increase greenhouse gas emissions because the cars will be stuck in traffic jams. They will be just sitting, idling. For those poor workers who are working for $10 an hour at the airport, it's going to add $150 a year to their gas bill. And the hotels in Calgary northeast: it's going to cost an extra $2 million a year to the 20 hotels, never mind the lost revenues they're going to have if we don't build the airport tunnel. And 18,000-plus workers are working at the airport. If we don't have the airport tunnel, we may not have the LRT going to the airport for the next 25 years, maybe.

So it's going to impact not only northeast Calgary, but it's going to impact the whole of Calgary and the province because the Calgary International Airport – we are bragging about being the gateway to the world, to southeast Asia, to the middle east. If this tunnel doesn't happen, it's just going to affect the quality of life for people. It may affect the property values in the northeast because the northeast will be boxed in.

With those comments, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, the debate is concluded on this question. If you have something else, a point of order or something, we'll hear it.

Mr. Bhullar: I'm not quite sure if what I was looking at is quite significantly a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the member said he's disappointed in east Calgary MLAs. Well, I would say the member needs to do a little bit of reading on jurisdictional boundaries within the Canadian Confederation.

I'm not quite sure if he went far enough for something that warrants a point of order, but I would make the point that this government supports its cities and gives our cities the ability to make decisions within their borders themselves. They have $254 million this year, Mr. Speaker, that they can allocate towards the airport tunnel, should they choose.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to call the question, and then I'm going to make a comment.

Speaker's Ruling Motions for Returns

The Speaker: I'm going to give this advice freely to my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. This is a motion for a return. The request is for "a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for Alberta Transportation regarding the construction of the proposed Calgary airport trail tunnel." Quite legit. A good question. Well written. It may have been edited but well written. It's on the Order Paper.

The minister stands up and says that he doesn't have any. Then the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall gets up and gives a 10-minute debate on why the tunnel is important. It has nothing to do with the question. It's not this part of the Order Paper to have debates. This is having to do with a question: do you have the documentation? Yes or no. An individual's view with respect to the Calgary airport trail tunnel could find a different place on the Order Paper so it would become more efficient. Then to suggest that some hon. member, which prompts a point of order – I'm telling you that when we get away from dealing with policy issues and start getting into personal things, we get into nothing but terrible pavement and rough water, and a lot of people have drowned in this Assembly by doing that in the past.

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, join me in saying happy birthday to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Actually, her anniversary was yesterday, so she's one day older today than she was yesterday.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise in this House to begin second reading of Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I am sad that this is an issue that even requires a piece of legislation or that Albertans would have to worry about it, but wishing that the issue of child pornography was not a problem does not make it go away. As a former Solicitor General and a former minister of children's services for the government of Alberta I had the opportunity to work very closely with law enforcement officials. As the Solicitor General I witnessed hardened police officers break down in tears as they described the images that were forever seared into their minds, I listened to them outline ways to help reduce the number of children who had been exploited to satisfy a sexually deviant pleasure, and I heard that we needed to give them more tools to go after criminals. That is the purpose behind the private member's bill and why I hope that every member of this House will support it.

The goal of Bill 202 is simple and straightforward: to mandate the reporting of child pornography. It does not intend to mandate seeking out child pornography. Rather, it would require that if an individual believed that a particular material is or may be child pornography, then it's mandatory to report the incident to the police or other reporting entities. This bill would also provide important protection for those who report this vile material and ensure that no repercussions for reporting are experienced. In addition, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 will establish actions that a reporting entity must take following a report. This includes but is not limited to ensuring that the entity performs an inspection, and where it is believed that child pornography is occurring, a report is made to the child and family services agency or law enforcement agency so as to both protect the child and apprehend the offender or offenders.

When I first began to serve in this House, the Internet was in its infancy. E-mail was relatively limited. Personal computers were starting to take off. Our world has changed, and our laws must keep up, Mr. Speaker. Each of us knows the unspeakable evil that child pornography represents. Because I was the Solicitor General, I saw some of the material that investigators came across in their efforts to put these sexual deviants behind bars.

As we try to focus on what Bill 202 is truly about, let me paint a picture for you and members of the Assembly and Albertans. Imagine a small house in a community. It could be anywhere. Imagine walking up to that house and walking up the stairs to the second floor. Imagine a door that is closed. You hear some noises coming from behind that door, and you open that door. Then imagine stumbling upon something no one should ever see: a small child – and we'll call her Jennifer – being sexually violated and this abuse being broadcast through a camera onto the Internet as orders are taken by sexual deviants about acts to be committed on that child.

Imagine stumbling across these images on the Internet and calling your Internet service provider and reporting what you've seen but the company cannot give the police some of the information that they need to stop the crime and track down those who are paying for these acts to be committed against Jennifer.

Jennifer is the face of one child. There are thousands more like her that face complete degradation at the hands of pedophiles and sexual deviants. It is these kinds of images that will never leave my mind. The impact of these crimes will forever scar children like Jennifer who are abused and who are violated.

Mr. Speaker, this Assembly has the opportunity to help prevent child pornography from winding its web in our communities. This Assembly has the opportunity to turn people and companies who become aware of child pornography into good Samaritans who can give law enforcement the information they need to stop the crime in progress. This Assembly has the chance to prevent other Janes or Jennifers from being victimized and forever hurt by child pornography.

The intent of this bill is simple. It is clear; it is straightforward. Law enforcement supports it, many Albertans support it, and I hope all members of this Assembly will support it also.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to Bill 202, Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this forward. I support what the hon. member is trying to accomplish. Having been a father for 38 years, a teacher for 34, and a grandfather for six, I understand the vulnerability of young people and the need to protect them.

Where problems occur is in the interpretation, to a degree, of what is child pornography. Some examples are obvious; others are not. Examples being the situation with the Calgary Transit authority when they refused to run the poster of the statue of a naked newborn boy on the sides of their bus because they felt that some individuals might view that sculpture, that piece of artwork, as an example of pornography. Other types of pornography, when a child is in an abusive situation, are more obvious, and I agree with the hon. member that the reporting of these acts is extremely important.

While I trust the intelligence of a number of people who use the Internet, I can imagine situations whereby a simple family photo of a newborn child or a situation that would appear in a family album of mine that was entitled three men in a tub, with appropriately placed face cloths, my father and myself and my brother when we were little: this is part of family heritage. The thoughts, you know, of my grandchildren sort of frolicking around doing what they would call the naked dance: I hope that would not get onto the Internet on a large scale. The point is that it's part of our family album, and it's part of our family experience. I would hate to think that my children would be potentially targeted by this family circumstance, that if somehow the computer wasn't wiped clean, somebody could suggest in a rather tainted fact that this might constitute pornography.

As an art major I'm wondering to what extent we would take whitewash to the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel. There are images of nude children throughout art history, and they're not of a pornographic nature unless some perverted individual sees them in such a light.

I appreciate what the member is attempting to accomplish. I am also somewhat concerned about the mandatory reporting. If it's beyond a doubt an exploitation, if a child is being hurt or harmed or there is any kind of evidence of a child being targeted, then I certainly would want that type of pornography to be reported. I am not sure, though, how we would force individuals who have access to the Internet or the computer companies that are charged with erasing files, how we would know that they were the recipients of this type of pornography and then go after them should they fail to reveal the source or that they were, in fact, the recipients of this pornography.

The number of ads that pop up unsolicited on our computers in terms of various enhancements and so on to an extent fall into this situation. You could be a completely innocent recipient of vile images without having any ability to potentially prevent those. Yes, I myself, if I ever received such images, would report them immediately to the best of my knowledge.

Again, I'm not sure that this bill, while its intention is absolutely terrific in terms of protecting young children, can achieve its goals. I do, however, wish the member well. I support what she is attempting to do with Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I'm hoping that in discussion with other members this afternoon they can put forward suggestions on how to have this bill, the mechanics of it, realized so that we can eliminate the abuse that, as the hon. member pointed out, so many children throughout this world are subject to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The purpose of Bill 202 is to mandate the reporting of child pornography. Under Bill 202 an individual who encounters child pornographic materials would be obligated to report the incident to the police or other reporting entity. Further, Bill 202 would establish the actions that a reporting entity must take following a report.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that child pornography is a very serious issue. It often affects some of our most vulnerable citizens, which negatively impacts their life and that of their loved ones as well. It may be found in books and photographs as well as a variety of audio and visual material, but perhaps its most pervasive and offensive form takes shape online. Individuals can now hide behind their computers and easily produce, consume, or distribute materials involving children. Access to such materials has been made easier by the Internet.

Mr. Speaker, as a mother of four great young ladies and a grandmother of one amazing boy, as a society who cares deeply about its most vulnerable citizens, we must consider any sensible response to this problem. Bill 202 is a reasonable reaction to this issue, and its scope and timing are appropriate for the task at hand. The premise behind Bill 202 is laudable, and its objectives are in line with our government's vision for safe communities. Bill 202 would provide the additional tools that agencies need to act against these child abusers. It will also complete the work of existing task forces such as the Alberta integrated child exploitation unit, the ICE unit, which has largely been successful in its work.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the federal government is looking at similar legislation, but debate has yet to be completed on the subject in the House of Commons. Although it is likely that this federal bill will be reintroduced, there is no way of knowing when. Nor can we know whether, or even if, it will pass. This is yet another reason why Bill 202 is a welcome piece of legislation. Provinces can act on their own when warranted, and this is a good opportunity to help lead the way on such a serious issue.

Three other provinces have already taken action. In fact, Manitoba, Ontario, and Nova Scotia have all moved forward in recent months and have enacted mandatory reporting of child pornography.

In April 2009 Manitoba became the first province to enact mandatory reporting of child pornography by amending the Child and Family Services Act. Under the new law if a person in Manitoba sees something they believe to be child pornography, they are required to report it to the Canadian Centre for Child Protection, Cybertip, which is Canada's national tip line for the reporting of online sexual exploitation of our children.

In Ontario private member's Bill 37 amended the province's Child and Family Services Act. Under the new legislation, which is not yet proclaimed, persons are required to report if they suspect a child is being exploited by this means.

Nova Scotia passed similar legislation. However, unlike Ontario and Manitoba, where the bill amended the existing child protection law, Nova Scotia created a stand-alone bill.

In watching the actions of these provinces, this suggests there is a need and a value in provincial initiatives such as Bill 202. It is also helpful to observe and learn from how they brought forward their own initiatives and how their regulations were drafted as this can guide us in our own work regarding this serious issue.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to predict when action may be taken on this issue at the federal level. A federal initiative would likely be more effective as it would ensure a national, streamlined approach to this serious issue. However, this should not deter us from taking action to protect our youth in the meantime. We should therefore continue to encourage the federal government to bring forward nation-wide legislation. I believe we must act now to ensure that our own provincial bill becomes law.

Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 202, and I believe it to be the most effective mechanism by which to accomplish our goal at this time. Bill 202 is both a timely and effective step in dealing with this issue and those it hurts. Ultimately, our children and their families will stand to benefit from it. I again thank the member for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I look forward to the rest of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise in this House today to begin review of Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I cannot praise enough the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for taking initiative and leadership on this important and vital issue. She, more than any other member in this House here today, has consistently fought for the safety of our children with multiple private member's bills and during her time as Solicitor General of this province, and I thank her for that on behalf of the children of Alberta and on behalf of all Albertans. Her experience as Solicitor General was pivotal in crafting this crucial piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this issue could not be more important to this province. Twenty-five years ago child pornography had been virtually eliminated as a threat to our children. The predators were on the run, and they were nearly extinct. With new technologies came new life to this disgusting problem. They are organized, and they are stronger than they have ever been in the history of the world. Child pornography is a sophisticated, international industry with revenues of over $30 billion annually. Sophisticated fraudulent financial techniques involving credit cards and shell corporations are used to perpetuate this filth. The innocence of children is being bartered to satisfy the greed of criminals and the lust of sexual predators.

As evil as this content is, the industry has taken on an even more brutal and savage nature. The victims are increasingly younger, the content ever more graphic. Over 80 per cent of the content involves children younger than the age of 12. There are over a million pictures of child exploitation on the Internet every day. The victims are primarily very young girls, our future mothers and wives. This problem is only growing with time, Mr. Speaker. It must be stopped. Brutal images depicting abuse of children increase exponentially with each passing year.

Sadly, this is an issue that could not be closer to home. Canada is the second-largest commercial distributor of child pornography in the world. We must fight the tide of this filth at all costs. Law enforcement needs every available resource to combat this affliction, and Alberta, sadly, is not immune. In December a man from Camrose was arrested for distributing child pornography. In February a Calgary man was convicted for luring minors into child pornography. Last week in Calgary a man was convicted for distribution. He had over 5,000 images of child pornography.

This bill is but another step in a long journey. It will require the reporting of child pornography to police and protection for those who step forward for the greater good of humanity. Any material believed to be child pornography must be reported to the proper authorities for analysis under this bill. Offensive material will be investigated, and those responsible will be brought to justice. Police and child and family services will step in to protect the child and pursue the predator.

Action will be mandatory, Mr. Speaker. No excuses. There's no excuse for it not to be mandatory. Investigations will be performed. Child and family services will be called in, securing children from danger. Police will pursue the predators, who will become the prey. There is no artistic grey area with this issue. There is no place where one can agree to disagree. This is a clear case of black and white, right and wrong morality. The vast majority of people arrested for child pornography have also molested a child.

Barriers have been created in the name of other principles, Mr. Speaker. For example, privacy and freedom of expression are vital, as we all know, to any democratic culture such as ours, but the souls and innocence of children cannot be sacrificed for anonymity and entertainment. They must be challenged in the name of our children. Those who wish to make the world a better, safer place must not be stifled and must not be frustrated. This bill will save lives. It will save childhood innocence. Step by step we can make the world a safer place for our children.

This bill has the support of law enforcement and all law-abiding Albertans. With the support of this Assembly we can make a difference in this war.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I'd first like to thank the hon. member for initiating debate on this important subject. Child pornography is a heinous and despicable issue that affects some of the most vulnerable citizens in our society, namely our children. It is incredibly important to this government, as it is to society as a whole, to protect our most vulnerable members. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek along with every other member in this Assembly has made this an absolute priority.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 will contribute to the accomplishment of this goal. While we all want to protect children of Alberta from falling victim to child pornography and sexual abuse, we must also ensure that we continue to take a comprehensive approach to accomplishing this task. In addition to provincial initiatives and legislation, we should continue to promote awareness and to encourage our federal counterparts to bring forward similar nation-wide initiatives.

I would like to highlight a particular organization and their dedication to keeping children from falling into this type of exploitation. Mr. Speaker, Cybertip.ca is Canada's national tipline for reporting of online sexual exploitation of children. The tipline is owned and operated by the Canadian Centre for Child Protection, which is a charitable organization dedicated to the safety of all children. Cybertip accepts and addresses online and telephone reports from the public regarding a variety of issues that affect children, including child pornography, online luring, child exploitation through prostitution, travelling to sexually exploit children, and child trafficking. The triages who work at the tipline assess the reports from the public and forward those that are potentially illegal to law enforcement in the appropriate jurisdictions.

While Cybertip provides citizens with the ability to report instances of child exploitation and luring, it also has a role in collecting and reporting statistics. These statistics facilitate the public understanding and discussion, the severity of the issues, and reports to this organization. On average Cybertip receives about one million page views and over 8,000 reports of child abuse throughout the year. In fact, Cybertip has received over 35,000 reports from the public pertaining to child pornography since their inception. Of the over 35,000 reports received by Cybertip, 37 per cent have been confirmed as child pornography. These figures suggest that people are not only aware of this organization but that they are also committed to reducing child exploitation. This would suggest that the public is already engaged in reporting these instances.

Mr. Speaker, Internet safety is one of the largest issues pertaining to both the parent and the child. In fact, over 78 per cent of child pornography incidents are now based on websites. This is why Cybertip has launched numerous public awareness campaigns designed to educate and inform parents and citizens on a wide variety of topics, specifically child exploitation of youths and the relatedness of the Internet. Examples of these campaigns include encouraging the public to become familiar with identifying the signs of child sexual abuse, increasing awareness regarding the risks associated with communicating with strangers over instant messaging, and a public alert regarding adolescents using webcams to send inappropriate pictures over the Internet.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the public awareness campaigns are an integral part of reducing instances of child exploitation. Given the prevalence of the Internet, cell phones, and gaming consoles, children of all ages use one or more of these tools on a daily basis. Cybertip recognizes that simply educating the parents on the importance of Internet and mobile safety with a single set of tips may not be the most effective way to inform parents of the potentially dangerous situations that their children face. This is why they have taken a comprehensive approach and focused on age-specific education starting at age five up to about age 15. There is also the recommendation to be made to parents to be centred on the issues that are facing their children during that specific time in their life.

Regardless of age one recommendation remains constant throughout all age categories, supervision. Given the age gap between parents and children and the rapid rate at which technology has advanced, many parents are not fully aware of the potential risks associated with things like cell phones, webcams, and the Internet, tools that children use on a daily basis. Cybertip urges parents to take an active role in monitoring and supervising their children's Internet and mobile activities. Essentially, the public awareness campaigns and information provided to parents by Cybertip is shifting parents away from the this-would-never-happen-to-my-child type of mentality.

Mr. Speaker, these awareness campaigns are another mechanism that permits us to effectively decrease instances of child exploitation, and as I had stated previously, we must ensure that we continue to protect our vulnerable citizens in the most effective way possible. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I support Bill 202 as I believe it will effectively reduce the amount and accessibility of child pornography.

However, in addition to organizations like Cybertip, the federal government has been taking steps to drastically reduce the amount and accessibility of child pornography, oftentimes amending our criminal laws. So while I support this bill, I also believe that it would be prudent to continue to encourage the federal government to bring forward nation-wide legislation.

Child pornography, luring, and pornography are a plague upon our society, Mr. Speaker. These issues affect children and families on a daily basis. Every member of this Assembly wants to ensure that no child is subject to these abuses. I believe that Bill 202 is certainly well intentioned and can reduce the amount and accessibility of child pornography in the province of Alberta.

I'd once again like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward this piece of legislation and look forward to the remainder of the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a very heavy heart – and certainly, as eloquently and emotionally portrayed by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, this is a huge problem. I can't believe that there is even any hesitation at the federal, provincial, or municipal levels that these kinds of laws aren't instantly put into place. Unfortunately, I think what has happened is that with television and computers and the busy lifestyles that we have, people have become desensitized. People think that this is something that happens on television, that it doesn't happen to their neighbours and certainly would never happen to their children.

I thank very much the member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the body of work that she has created towards this very important Bill 202. That would be in addition to all of the work that she's done campaigning against child prostitution. The protection of children involved in the protection act is an example of that. She continues to be a champion of children, launching the high-risk offender website and Canada's first Amber Alert program during her tenure when she was the minister. It is a very important piece of work, and I know that as history will be reckoned, it will be recognized for the importance that it really has.

In terms of the degradation that happens to innocent children, the perpetrators of these crimes are the ones that should be tracked down like the criminals that they are. I know that it's difficult to prove things from the Internet, but what happens now is that, yes, we find them, but these people are almost getting less time. The time that they get in jail certainly does not reflect the purpose that they have done and that they have totally ruined young children's lives.

Talk to sex trade workers, and you'll find out how many of them have been sexually abused as children. They have become so desensitized that almost nothing is wrong or right, certainly not within any sort of sexual contact or behaviours, and they actually have no idea of the psychological damage that has taken place as a result of this kind of behaviour. It's almost impossible to reverse the damage that has been done because one of the things that never happens again is that these people, these young children that are exploited, are never able to trust again because more often than not the people who perpetrate these crimes against them are actually the people that should be protecting them.

It's a sick society that we live in, Mr. Speaker, that we should even have to be discussing this in the Legislature, but I believe that if we could get more of the perpetrators – and I believe that I would like to see more funding. I know that we're always accused of asking for more money on this side of the House, but I believe that this is the kind of money that would be well spent. It is very difficult to track down people on the Internet. It's hugely time consuming; therefore it becomes expensive.

But by having this law in place, where people must report what they suspect as being any kind of child abuse, particularly in the child pornography side of things – and they must report it. Section 8 says:

- (1) Any person who contravenes section 2(1), 6 or 7 is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000 or to imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or to both the fine and imprisonment.
- (2) Any person who falsely and maliciously reports to a reporting entity that a representation or material is child pornography is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000 or to imprisonment [again] for not more than 2 years, or to both the fine and the imprisonment.

This is for the people that would not report.

Sometimes there is a fear factor out there that you are not understanding, perhaps, what you're seeing. I think that that's a very bogus kind of argument. I would say that 90 per cent of our society, if not 95 per cent – let's go to 99 per cent of the people in our society – know what is right and what is wrong. My colleague from Calgary-Varsity had said that people's rights may be in jeopardy because of an interpretation of what some pictures may look like. But I think we're all pretty clear on what child pornography is and what child abuse is.

I find it interesting that even in this province but certainly in this country, because, I suppose, it's our right, we tolerate full flights, 737s, of men who are considered pillars of our community to fly to Thailand, to fly to the Philippines to engage in absolute child abuse and engage in sexual activities with, certainly, children that are underage. I watched a program on CPAC where the fellow that has been valiantly trying to fight against that kind of behaviour and trying to identify people, in fact, said that men from Canada have actually paid $10,000 for what they consider to be a virgin at the age of 2. I mean, that should make all of us almost throw up. It is absolutely beyond disgusting.

I couldn't imagine what I would do if something had happened to certainly my children when they were younger but my grandchildren at this point, when they're young. I don't know what I would do. I'm sure that it wouldn't be pleasant, and I could probably end up in jail because I think that I would just be so beyond control that something like that would happen.

I think the other thing that happens is that sometimes people are aware and can't sort of prove things. Then when it is proven, that person lives with a tremendous amount of guilt, and many times they need psychological counselling to get them over the fact that perhaps they hadn't done enough to protect that child.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we support this bill. I don't think there's one that I've come across in my five years in this House that is as important as this one. We are trying to valiantly have a society that we can be proud of and that we go forward. We have just come out of the Olympics and are very proud of all of our athletes. How many of these children have been abused and used for strictly commercial interests? Often it isn't just the sexual appetite of people who are truly sick, but it is strictly a commodity. These young children are simply commodities in criminal organizations. This is how they make their money.

I believe that we should support this, and I would like to, clearly, see tougher laws. I want to see them go faster, and I want to see much, much stronger and longer sentencing for people who are actually convicted of this abhorrent behaviour.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been some very good and impassioned speeches on Bill 202. I also rise to support this bill. I wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her work on this.

Even though I have a background as a trial lawyer, I don't have a background in privacy legislation, so when I was looking through this, I actually consulted three individuals. I'd like to say thank you to them just on the record. Ivan Bernardo was one of them, Kristine Robidoux, both lawyers in Calgary, and Rachel Hayward-Shymko, who's a privacy consultant in Edmonton.

Going through this more from a legal angle, I found that the purpose of PIPA is to ensure the right of any individual to be protected when it comes to a collection, use, or disclosure of their information. In that angle I have to advance that we must always consider the privacy of an individual when drafting legislation that could potentially require them to disclose personal materials. It is, in fact, a balance.

Mr. Speaker, as it was mentioned, our government has taken strides to ensure that we, in fact, do have protections in place to prevent a breach of privacy rights of individuals, and this is something that we must continue. This legislation also has ramifications on that. Now, some of these strides that have been taken include the implementation of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, or FOIP, which has developed a privacy interest with Albertans in mind. Mr. Speaker, protecting the privacy interests of Albertans and Alberta businesses, again, is of the utmost importance, and we must always consider this.

While I am going to strongly support Bill 202 and encourage other people to do the same, it's important that these reporting measures proposed continue to respect the privacy rights of individuals. Our government will continue to be addressing the root causes of criminal issues, but we must ensure that our efforts respect the privacy rights of citizens and the judicial framework that has been developed over time to protect such rights. We need a balanced approach and not a knee-jerk reaction.

Mr. Speaker, our laws work to protect the victims of crime as well as the individual in society. While we do not want to implement mandatory reporting that would violate the privacy rights of individuals, at the same time this is a bill that is worth consideration, the most vulnerable people in our society, of course, being our children. I support the intent of this bill, but I also believe that it's important that we ensure that it does not infringe on an individual's privacy rights. If this legislation appropriately addresses the issue of privacy, then I believe it will provide a useful tool to reduce these crimes in our province.

Mr. Speaker, the sexual exploitation of children and youth is a disturbing issue that crosses all social and economic boundaries and, indeed, it is one that many individuals of many different parties of this House are passionate about. Our government is committed to protecting the most vulnerable and ensuring that our communities are safe and caring environments. I believe Bill 202 continues along this vision.

The creation, proliferation, and dissemination of child pornography is a global issue, as has been pointed out, in regard to the global communications village that has come up over the past couple of decades. But it's also important that we do what we can here at home in Alberta and make sure that this is a place that is known to protect our children as opposed to a haven, which, of course, it is not. At the same time, this is not a road that we want to go down, and that requires a proactive measure such as Bill 202 to protect our children from these predators.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank, again, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this legislation forward. I'm pleased to support it, and I encourage all members to support it regardless of partisan stripe.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure in one sense to be able to be in the House to speak about this important bill, but it's a sad day that we have such a problem here in Canada that we need to be acting here in the province. But it's important, and I'm happy to be able to stand up and support Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act.

I can only applaud the hon. member representing Calgary-Fish Creek for taking on such a crucial issue. The legislation should have been acted on before now, Mr. Speaker. Her previous experience was essential in crafting this fundamental work of legislation, and I have a great deal of gratitude and respect for the work that she did as a Solicitor General and also that followed as the minister of children's services. She has dedicated many hours of her life in protecting our vulnerable children.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is close to the heart of Albertans. Children are our most precious and vulnerable among us. They must be sheltered from harm. They are our future, and their future must be protected.

Child pornography is a global menace lining the pockets of immoral and corrupt individuals. These monsters are as wicked as they are organized. It is a global industry worth billions of dollars. They are monsters without borders, and they must be stopped. As extreme and as bad as this continent is, it is getting worse: 20 per cent of the tender victims are under the age of 3, 40 per cent between the ages of 3 and 5. Thousands of pictures are added daily. This represents an attack on the children from the moment they enter the world.

This is an issue that strikes right at our heart. The second-biggest dealer of child pornography in the world is Canada. A call to arms is at hand, and we must stand up and speak out. We'll be judged on how we respond. Recently a Calgary resident was convicted of trading this material by e-mail. He was brought to justice through an amazing teamwork that spanned all of North America from Victoria to New York involving Calgary police and the Department of Homeland Security.

This bill is a first step in a long journey. It will require the reporting of child pornography to police and protect those who step forward for the welfare of children. This legislation will require the reporting of child pornography. The first step is rooting out the problem. Any material believed to be pornographic must be reported to the proper authorities and investigated. Offensive material will be investigated, and then those responsible will be brought to justice. If the material is in fact child pornography, the police and child and family services will step in to protect the child and pursue the predator.

Action must be taken. This will be a building block for teamwork. This is a global problem that will require global co-operation. The mandatory reporting of child pornography is a step in the right direction. The immorality is clear, Mr. Speaker. We are all in agreement. We must do all we can to protect our children. There is a clear link between those arrested for child pornography and those who have molested a child.

Obstacles in protection of the perpetrator are in place in the name of various freedoms, including artistic. This is a false freedom. They do not have the freedom, Mr. Speaker, to abuse our little ones and to torture them. We are not talking about art. We are talking about captured and tortured. We must all work together in concert for a single goal, protecting our children. This bill will serve and protect. It will rescue those in harm's way. A long journey begins with one small step. This bill has the support of those who work with and protect children. All decent-minded Albertans agree. With the support of this Assembly we can protect and nourish the future of our children.

Canada has a terrible reputation in the world. As the Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, Canada is used as a conduit for people to travel to the Philippines and Thailand. I disagree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont in saying that this is a knee-jerk reaction. This is a long overdue reaction, Mr. Speaker. Canada is a haven. We need to acknowledge that, and then we need to act on that as Legislatures. To think that we're going to protect the information and the privacy of travelling people is a false protection. We need to protect those that are being abused, not the abusers.

If we are going to enjoy a safe and prosperous community, we must pass laws that protect the innocent and the victims of crime and abuse. Too often we pass legislation that does more to protect the perpetrator than the victim. I ask this Assembly: are we doing all that we can to protect our children and their future? I don't think so. We need to prevent the exploitation that is going on, and I'd ask all the members to vote in support of this bill that we might protect the future of our young children here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to rise today and speak to this well-intentioned piece of legislation. Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, is being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I would like to thank her for doing so. Child pornography is a blight in our society. It's a heinous crime whose victims are some of the most vulnerable people not just in Alberta but in the world. As a government, as community members, and as citizens we need to be actively engaged in protecting our children and ending this intolerable behaviour.

To the credit of the member Bill 202 proposes a method to attack child pornography. Specifically, Bill 202 proposes to require that an individual who believes that they have come into contact with child pornography be mandated to report the finding to a designated authority such as the police. To be clear, Bill 202 would not require people to seek out child pornography. Instead, people would only be required to report if they stumble across it or accidentally find a case of child pornography.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the intention of Bill 202 is noble and works toward the best interest of our society. However, I have some reservation about the effectiveness of the proposed legislation. Specifically, I'm concerned that Bill 202 may not directly target the production of child pornography. This is not to say that this problem is a result of the legislation. Rather, it may be a jurisdictional problem. The reality is that the majority of child pornography is not produced in Alberta or even in Canada, for that matter.

Child pornography is a global problem that may be better addressed through co-operation with other jurisdictions in Canada and, perhaps, even with other nations. This is the role that effectively falls within the control of our federal counterparts, and I'm hopeful that this legislation will move us in that direction.

Because of the jurisdictional limitations we face, Bill 202 may be unable to effectively target the root cause of child pornography, that of the production of the same.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the measures proposed by Bill 202 may have the potential to address the second issue associated with child pornography, that of distribution and proliferation. Currently it is possible that a person will inadvertently find a collection of child pornography and be unclear of their legal obligations. Bill 202 would clearly define these obligations. An individual stumbling across a collection of child pornography would be required to report their findings to the police or to a reporting entity. Mr. Speaker, it's also worth noting that Bill 202 would also enact legislation to ensure that the informant suffers no legal repercussions for reporting their findings.

The end result of these proposed legislative changes would be the creation of a system where there would be a clear process for individuals regarding the reporting of cases of child pornography. In turn, more reporting could lead to more prosecution and conviction of users.

Essentially, Bill 202 is proposing legislation that would target people who own and distribute child pornography, not the people who create it. Now, this is not to say that targeting the users of child pornography is a bad thing; quite the opposite. In fact, I would agree that targeting these people is a good preventative measure. After all, it would stand to reason that people using child pornography might also be the people inclined to create this material. Alternatively, by prosecuting these individuals, we may also be able to decrease the demand.

This is a laudable goal. However, I do not feel as though it is addressing the crux of the issue. Mr. Speaker, while I believe that new reporting legislation may not be the best way to remove child pornography from our communities, I do agree that it is a needed step. After all, child pornography is already illegal in Canada, and I feel that a greater impact could be felt by a renewed commitment to our national initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, we have the most to gain by focusing our efforts on enforcement, particularly international enforcement. As I previously mentioned, the vast majority of child pornography is created outside of our jurisdiction. This does not mean that we are powerless to combat this crime. It is possible that dedicating our resources to improving our international information sharing network would help investigators all over the world battle this shared threat, but at the same time there are things that we can do here at home, like mandating reporting.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the intentions of Bill 202 are both commendable and worthy of praise, and I believe that they are notable steps towards ridding our communities of child pornography. Moreover, I believe the intentions of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek are honourable and clearly come from the heart.

My concerns with Bill 202 stem from my belief that we should do more. However, the fact that jurisdictional restraints hamper this legislation does not mean at all that we should reject it. Mr. Speaker, the act of combating child pornography is complex and in many cases disheartening. It is a dark subject, to be sure. However, I feel that the discussions that we are having today will go a long way towards shaping both legislation and policies that will eventually rid us of this heinous crime.

With that, I will be offering my support to Bill 202 in recognition that this bill, while it may not be perfect, is a step in the right direction. Again, I thank the member for bringing forward this piece of legislation and look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 202, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Bill 202 addresses a very complicated issue facing our society, an issue that in all of its manifestations represents serious criminal behaviour. Child pornography is a crime that jeopardizes the safety and security of our communities as it targets some of our most vulnerable citizens, our children.

As we have stated in this Chamber many times, a priority for our government under the leadership of the hon. Premier is to create safe and secure communities, communities that are free of the types of crimes this bill proposes to address. Albertans know that safe, strong, and caring communities are essential to our quality of life, and our government will continue to take actions that strengthen our streets and neighborhoods. Much of our attention recently has been on the economy, as it should. But in the face of the worst recession since the Great Depression our government has not forgotten to place emphasis and resources on creating safer places for Albertans to work, live, and raise families. Our efforts are part of a comprehensive, long-term approach to suppress crime in Alberta. These efforts include bolstering the front lines of Alberta police forces by adding a hundred new officers to fulfill our three-year, 300-officer commitment. We want to ensure that our police services have the resources and tools they need to be effective.

Bill 202 proposes implementing reporting measures that may help our police officers in their good work. I support implementing legislation that will address these heinous crimes, as I'm sure all of my colleagues do. However, I emphasize how important it is to have this legislation strengthen our enforcement efforts, not impede them. We must take steps that will improve the utilization and effectiveness of our communities' policing resources. We're in this together, and we'll build better communities working together. We need to use our resources wisely and support the programs that will keep our province safe. The decisions we make now must reflect the realities on the ground, and we should be considering how we can help address crime in communities by working with all levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, we in this House know that criminal problems are complex and that they'll require an approach that is comprehensive and effective. Federal legislation that's coming forward will also help address this issue as it would create a streamlined, nation-wide approach to reporting instances of child pornography.

Furthermore, we have existing initiatives here in Alberta that are working in this manner such as the Alberta safe communities initiative, which has been building a foundation for a stronger, more secure province for the past two years. This initiative is a partnership of nine government ministries and serves as a great example on how to address crime at the grassroots level by involving those in our communities who are closest to it.

We are pooling resources and expertise to address crime head-on and from the ground up. I wanted to emphasize that this approach is a very important mechanism in how we work to tackle crime effectively. No other province is approaching crime in such a comprehensive way, and with the leadership of the hon. Minister of Justice we will continue to push ahead with solutions that involve all levels of government and the communities themselves.

Albertans have a proud history of partnering together to address whatever challenges lie ahead. When it comes to crime and building safe communities, our approach will be no different. Our government understands that the people in our communities and their local police services know what they need to best address crime, and we've developed our crime reduction strategies with them in mind.

We know they need the tools to make gains in reducing crime, and our government is committed to providing those tools. The safe communities innovation fund is just one of those tools. The first year of the fund saw our government support pilot projects across the province to address targeted crime issues that directly affect communities. From youth at risk and mentoring programs to family and violence support to gang intervention strategies, these projects are making a real difference because they were developed by people who have the greatest stake in seeing them succeed. We know that a number one priority for Alberta's police service is reducing crime amongst youth. This includes crime in all forms.

We know where we need to focus our attention, and we as legislators must ensure that our authorities can address the root cause of crime efficiently and effectively. We stand a much better chance of preventing young people from falling into the hands of ill-intentioned criminals if we do so. Our approach must be a collaborative effort between all levels of government and the communities where these crimes take place. As we all know, Alberta's police are highly trained, and we want to make it easier for them to carry out their duties and their roles.

Let's be clear. We are committed to addressing this serious criminal and social issue, and we must calibrate our approach appropriately. We want all levels of government along with citizens and police to co-operate in a manner that contributes to stopping the creation, distribution, and proliferation of child pornography. Through this co-operation we will come to effective solutions. We know the harmful consequences that child pornography presents to the health and well-being of our communities. I'm confident that by working efficiently and providing the right resources within the right legislative framework, we can be effective at reducing and eliminating child pornography in Alberta. I laud the intent of Bill 202. I believe it may help our co-operative efforts to address these crimes. That being said, I stand in support of Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to stand and support Bill 202, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Enough has been said. Child pornography or child prostitution is a billion-dollar industry world-wide. Children are being exploited day in and day out with all these materialistic things. They're lured into prostitution. They're drug ponies. You name it. There are all kinds of crimes going on world-wide involving children, and those children are not to blame. It's the predators that get them to do all that. This bill will go to protect the children to some extent. I think we should have tougher laws for the perpetrators and predators so there is a big deterrent for them not to commit any crimes with children. It's only these vulnerable children that get caught into a trap of delivering drugs or being drug ponies or being dragged into prostitution.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I think, is very passionate about children. Bill 202 is entirely congruent with much of the other legislation the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has sponsored during her tenure as MLA, and prior to her appointment to cabinet she was also well known for campaigning against child prostitution. The Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act is an example of one. I commend the member for doing so much hard work on behalf of children. After she became the Solicitor General, she continued to champion children's causes, launching a high-risk offender website and Canada's first Amber Alert program during her tenure.

Nova Scotia became the first jurisdiction to attempt something similar—that's Bill 187, Child Pornography Reporting Act—to what this Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is proposing. It received royal assent on November 25, 2008. However, it's not proclaimed yet. Ontario also came out with a similar kind of bill. Manitoba also placed a similar mandatory obligation to report child pornography on the books in April 2009. On November 24, 2009, the federal government also introduced a similar concept in Bill C-58. So this bill will go a long way to protect children.

There are some things to be clarified in this bill. The term "child pornography," the definition of which is found in section 163 of the Criminal Code of Canada, throws out some of its own difficulties. In 163.1, if a depiction portrays someone as under 18 regardless of the fact the person in the depiction is 18, it will still be considered child pornography. A reporting entity could mean almost anything and is left to the regulations. This particular approach becomes very vague. So there are little issues with the bill, but overall, in considering this bill, I will gladly support this bill as long as it goes to protect children from all those evils that children are put through.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I'll wholeheartedly support this bill from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, that is being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This bill contains numerous well-intended objectives for the reporting of child pornography.

Specifically, this bill, Mr. Speaker, would see that it would be mandatory to report instances where an individual believed that particular material is or may be child pornography. Additionally, the bill would establish the actions that a reporting entity must take following a report. This would include measures like ensuring that the entity performs an inspection, and where it is believed that child pornography is occurring, a report would be referred to the appropriate body.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, the measures in this bill are very honourable, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing it forward. They address a matter that is of high priority to this government. One particularly is the protection of children. Increasingly we are hearing of detestable actions toward children across the world and even at home. That's our reality. With trafficking in other countries and child predators sitting and using computer technology, this issue has taken a new face, one which this government takes very seriously. It is important to make sure that our laws can effectively deal with these issues so that it is clearly understood that these behaviours are not tolerated within our society.

There can also be a connection drawn where child pornography can be a gateway to even more horrendous crimes. That is why there are strong pieces of legislation at both the provincial and federal levels to protect children and to prosecute the predators. Alberta's Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act is one such piece of legislation that addresses this particular issue. More importantly, section 4(1) of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, or CYFE, reads as follows: "Any person who has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a child is in need of intervention shall forthwith report the matter to a director." In essence, Mr. Speaker, this mandates that a report be made to the ministry in cases where a child may be in need of intervention.

In addition, section 1(3)(c) of the CYFE Act reads as follows: "For the purposes of this Act . . . a child is sexually abused if the child is inappropriately exposed or subjected to sexual contact, activity or behaviour including prostitution related activities." Through this act it is already indirectly mandated that child pornography be reported. However, even with the act in place, the abuse and exploitation can still occur. It is our responsibility as a government, Mr. Speaker, to do whatever is necessary to prevent this. Although I believe that the measures proposed in Bill 202 may not completely rid our province of child pornography, I believe that it is a strong tool that can help us achieve this particular goal.

We can also look to the federal government to see how their legislation aims at cracking down on child predators. Specifically, it is the Criminal Code that addresses child pornography. Section 163.1 of the Criminal Code specifically defines child pornography, and the legislation also clearly outlines the punishment for that individual who makes, prints, publishes, or possesses child pornography. These crimes can lead to imprisonment of up to 10 years. It's also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the Criminal Code also outlines the punishment for anyone who possesses or accesses child pornography. These crimes are taken very seriously in that they can lead up to five years of imprisonment. Overall, the Criminal Code clearly emphasizes the severity of child exploitation. This is important as with the Criminal Code the authorities have the ability to reprimand and prosecute those who exploit children.

Furthermore, the Criminal Code, coupled with Alberta's Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, provides law enforcement agencies with the very tools that they need to crack down on child pornography; for example, Alberta's integrated child exploitation unit, also known as ICE, of which there are two team units in the province, Mr. Speaker. There is one for northern Alberta, which includes areas north of Wetaskiwin, and one for southern Alberta, which covers all areas south, including Wetaskiwin. These tools, provided to the units, daily fight to outline child exploitation.

To this point current initiatives of both federal and provincial governments have led to the prosecution of hundreds of people in Canada and around the world who partake in these heinous crimes. However, it may be true that we can do more. Bill 202 contains a number of specific initiatives to further address child pornography. In terms of legislative steps it may be best if such legislation was brought forward by the federal government. However, I believe that it is important for us to do what we can to address this particular issue in the province.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, because this government takes protection of children very seriously, I support the current initiatives of this government as well as the intention of Bill 202. Once again, I thank the hon. member for bringing forward and to our attention this very important issue. I also appreciate that other members of the Alberta Legislature would also support this particular bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and join in the debate on Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I want to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her efforts to bring forward this legislation and do whatever we can to protect our children.

Mr. Speaker, child pornography is one of the scourges of our age. Its victims are amongst the most innocent, trusting, and vulnerable people in society. The issue itself has perhaps existed for years but recently has become compounded by the fact that most of these heinous crimes and images are disseminated on the Internet. This has resulted in its proliferation as it has become so easily accessible with little or no consequence. Furthermore, it has become a difficult place to catch perpetrators and enforce laws.

Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that child pornography does not exist without child abuse. They're not mutually exclusive. Stopping the illegal practice of sexually exploiting children requires collaborative efforts by lawmakers, law enforcement, web innovators, parents, guardians, and individuals world-wide. Investigating cases of child abuse and child exploitation may require specialized technical skills outside the scope of usual investigative methods.

Mr. Speaker, this is why Alberta instituted the Alberta integrated child exploitation unit, known provincially as ICE. The unit plays a pivotal role in protecting our children from Internet predators. This unit is provincially integrated, involving the RCMP, Edmonton Police Service, Lethbridge Regional Police Service, Calgary Police Service, and Medicine Hat Police Service. In addition, there are two teams covering the province, one for the areas north of Wetaskiwin and one for all areas south of Wetaskiwin. One of the team's main objectives is to find, investigate, and arrest people who prowl chat rooms looking to sexually exploit children. Another initiative is to investigate and arrest people who are trading child pornography. This initiative addresses child exploitation in regard to people accessing, possessing, distributing, and manufacturing child pornography. In addition, the unit monitors attempted child luring over the Internet.

Mr. Speaker, a survey conducted by the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children in the year 2000 showed that 1 in 5 youth had received sexual solicitation over the Internet and that 1 in 4 had exposure to unwanted nude pictures. Ten years on, these numbers are likely to have increased with the availability of new technology such as the Internet, compatible smart phones, and wireless Internet connections on all kinds of mobile devices.

Mr. Speaker, in sting operations members of ICE will pose as individuals in Internet chat rooms looking to exploit children and then build a connection with perpetrators and purveyors of child pornography. Once the investigators have acquired enough evidence, often through the help of officers in other jurisdictions they will launch arrest warrants for those involved.

Another element of the battle against child exploitation was initiated by Alberta Justice in 2003 with the appointment of a special Crown prosecutor for technology and cybercrimes. This specialized Crown prosecutor provides support for such warrants and legal advice. This is to make sure that the Crown will have the strongest case possible to get these criminals off the streets.

Mr. Speaker, there is evidence that supports our belief that child pornography shared over the web is increasing. In the year 2000 Alberta had three Internet child pornography cases before the courts. Now there are over a hundred cases pending in the courts. Each conviction from an ICE-led investigation sends a clear message that child exploitation will not be tolerated in Alberta. The proposed Bill 202 advises that an individual who thinks they have come into contact with child pornography report the finding to the police or other reporting entity. With provincial ICE teams this is already being done to some extent, but increased measures need to be taken, and we need to further promote education and awareness regarding this issue.

Mr. Speaker, there is a collaborative effort needed in helping our children to stay safe, online and otherwise, in regard to sexual predation. ICE teams tour the province, visiting schools to promote awareness of online child exploitation, which contributes to their mandate of eradicating child pornography and abuse. While this provincial initiative is very effective in the province, there are challenges regarding apprehension of perpetrators.

Child pornography is not just a provincial issue; it's an issue which extends to the global level. A federal initiative working in collaboration with Alberta ICE units along with other similar organizations throughout the country may be more effective at curbing child exploitation. To a certain extent governments of the world acting together to end this blight on humanity may be something to consider in terms of implementing an effective initiative. However, Mr. Speaker, I believe it's important for us to do what we can here at home. This government takes the protection of children very seriously. This is evident in the creation of the ICE teams.

I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for initiating this debate as it continues to raise the awareness of this important issue. Provincial initiatives like the ICE teams and the hard work of all our law enforcement officers are to be commended. We need to give them every tool possible and use all resources at our disposal to protect our children. I will support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I would like to join the chorus of those praising and thanking the hon. member for bringing this forward and for all that she's done in this respect in the past.

Mr. Speaker, the objective of this bill, as we know, is to mandate the reporting of child pornography. Under the bill if an individual believes that certain material is child pornography, that person would be required to report the same to the police or other reporting entities. I've heard that some members have a little trouble with this, but I fail to see the problem.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, child pornography is a very serious issue. Having become a father less than two years ago and expecting a second one here soon, I had no idea of the seriousness and how this touches every single one of us. I've spoken with a number of law enforcement officials, and they have told me directly from first-hand information that sexual exploitation of children on the Net is not just growing; it's dramatically growing. That's why I fully support Bill 202 as well as the current initiatives that this government has in place for protecting children from sexual exploitation already.

I'd like to just give a few examples if I may. For instance, the Alberta government implemented the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and initiated the Alberta integrated child exploitation unit, also known as ICE, as the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater has alluded to. I'll just go into a little bit more detail here. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act came into force in 2004, and it requires anyone who has reasonable grounds to believe that a child is in need of help to report the matter to a director. A report is then made to the Ministry of Children and Youth Service in cases where a child may be in need of intervention. From this perspective, Mr. Speaker, it's already mandatory at this point for people to report child pornography.

Now, furthermore, the ICE unit is a provincially integrated unit involving the RCMP, the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, the Lethbridge Regional Police Service, and the Medicine Hat Police Service. Currently the ICE unit is comprised of two teams, one in northern Alberta and one in southern Alberta, appropriately so. Each of these teams has very qualified investigators and forensic technicians. These teams are responsible for keeping children safe from predators. It's their job, but I dare say it's the job of every single one of us as, you know, Albertans who really care about our neighbours.

ICE investigators track and investigate, and yes, they indeed arrest people who prowl chat rooms looking to exploit children as well as individuals who view and trade child pornography.

Mr. Speaker, the enhancement act and the ICE unit both help to protect our communities from child pornography, and I believe that Bill 202 will complement these initiatives of our Alberta government that are already instituted at this time.

In addition, I'd like to highlight some of the important support mechanisms that are in place for children who've suffered sexual abuse, which includes child pornography. It's vital for victims of sexual abuse to be aware of the support mechanisms that are available to them. It can change their lives. It can save their lives. One example is the Zebra Child Protection Centre. It's child focused. It's child friendly. The Zebra Child Protection Centre in Edmonton, I'm happy to say, is the first centre of its kind in the country. The centre integrates a community of professionals. Yes, it includes the Edmonton Police Service and Alberta Children Services, but it also includes Crown prosecutors, child-at-risk response teams, medical and trauma screening professionals, and, of course, volunteers. Where would we be without them?

This, Mr. Speaker, allows for a streamlined approach as the integration of law enforcement and social service agencies serves the children in a vital way because it allows for a more efficient system of gathering information. Essentially, for those who are not aware, the Zebra centre provides children with essential social, medical, and mental health services to assist them in their recovery. This community group, like so many others, deserves recognition. They serve over 1,000 children every year.

Another community support agency is the Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Centres, which does invaluable work every day. They are truly angels in our midst, Mr. Speaker. This organization acts as an umbrella for other groups, for members engaged in direct support services for victims of sexual abuse throughout Alberta. Therefore, rather than just delivering front-line services, it acts as an intermediary focused on improving the effectiveness of the sexual abuse victim support sector in facilitating its further development. The mission of this umbrella organization is to provide leadership and co-ordination and a unified voice on issues of sexual violence while at the same time increasing recognition and support for sexual assault centres in Alberta. This support agency focuses on those who are victims of sexual abuse, and, as mentioned earlier, it includes child pornography.

So I hope you can see, Mr. Speaker, that there are a lot of great things happening, bad news turned into good news in the province as it is. But I'll add that with the support of Alberta's Children and Youth Services, the core services of the Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Centres has expanded across the province. The centre is continually removing client barriers by ensuring that services are available and accessible to diverse populations, rural communities, and previously unserved or underserved areas.

Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee you that I've seen it with my own eyes. It's essential. It's vital for effective delivery services for all Albertans. I would go so far as to say that it's imperative for all Albertans to know that healing and recovery from sexual abuse is possible and that the support groups in Alberta provide a safe place for healing to begin, but only if everyone knows about them and utilizes them.

Sexual violence, which includes child pornography, of course, is not an easy topic for many of us to discuss, but we must. Community support groups work to give victims a voice in order to help them overcome their horrific experiences. It's the least that we can do.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just add other community support groups in the time remaining because they do deserve the acknowledgement for the great work that they do every day. That includes groups like the kids' helpline, the Métis Child and Family Services, the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton, the Distress Centre, the Edmonton Police Service child protection section, and, of course, closer to my home, the Calgary Communities against Sexual Abuse. These are just a few of the many more organizations that are out there, and it's the groups like these that continue to help make our community stronger as they provide invaluable support for victims and their families. They truly turn things around.

These groups are advocates for the survivors of sexual assault and sexual abuse. I hope that you might agree that the more we talk about this issue, the better chance we have of achieving justice and helping to prevent it from happening in the first place. I do believe that that's the direction that we need to go. In this way, it's important to continually raise awareness on this matter, which these support groups do successfully, but they do need our help with a bill such as this. Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 helps with exactly that, to raise awareness about the seriousness of this issue.

I believe that this bill will contribute to this government's vision of ensuring safer communities. This government has already committed to protecting our most vulnerable and ensuring our communities are safe and caring environments. That's why I support this bill fully. I also support the community groups and current legislation that already protects our youth from sexual exploitation.

Finally, I'd like to again thank the hon. member for her past, present, and future work in this regard. I'll be voting for this, and I trust that all hon. members will be doing so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I, too, would like to thank the hon. member for her tenacity in sponsoring legislation of this type that continues to make our communities that much safer and certainly for her efforts in bringing this particular piece of legislation forward.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 would mandate individuals who believe material to be child pornography to report that material to law enforcement or other reporting agencies. While Canada's Criminal Code indicates that the possession of child pornography is illegal, it currently does not mandate individuals to report content that they may encounter. Thus, Bill 202 would appear to fill an important gap in our current child pornography legislation by empowering citizens to aid law enforcement in bringing the perpetrators of these heinous acts to justice.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter that our own Justice department in Alberta has taken quite seriously for years. Alberta Justice has lobbied our federal counterparts in Ottawa to enact similar legislation to what is being proposed here today. I'm pleased to say that our federal government has acted over the last several years.

In 2002 the federal government enacted Bill C-15A, which strengthened the Criminal Code by extending the offence of possessing and distributing child pornography to accessing it. The amendments also made it an offence to communicate with children via a computer system for the purpose of facilitating or committing certain sexual offences such as child luring or abduction. Even recently we've heard and read in the news of Albertans that have been prosecuted, and I just can't say enough, Mr. Speaker. I hope that this piece of legislation and others will give us a much bigger book to club these horrible individuals with.

Mr. Speaker, following the throne speech in 2004, which committed the government to cracking down on child pornography, Parliament enacted Bill C-2, which included a broader definition of child pornography and increased the penalties.

On November 24, 2009, the federal government introduced Bill C-58, the Child Protection Act (Online Sexual Exploitation). This bill would require Internet service providers to report cases where child pornography may be available to the public or if they have reasonable grounds to believe that their Internet service is being or has been used to commit a child pornography offence. On November 27, 2009, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-58 was referred to the House of Commons Justice and Human Rights Committee. While Bill C-58 was dropped from the Order Paper after the prorogation of Parliament, the federal government has promised to reintroduce this legislation. I would encourage all members and certainly all members of the public to speak to their Members of Parliament and remind them how important it is that this piece of legislation come back on the Order Paper before the federal House.

Mr. Speaker, a federal legislative solution to fight child pornography would have numerous advantages. First, it would have the benefit of uniformity in approach. Second, there would be no need for individuals to determine which level of government to report to and in what format. Some provinces such as Manitoba and Ontario have implemented mandatory reporting measures that echo what is proposed in Bill 202. However, a single piece of federal legislation would ensure consistent mandatory reporting measures across all provinces.

Finally, a streamlined, single piece of federal legislation could receive greater compliance from industry and the private sector. Internet service providers such as Telus, Bell, or Rogers operate nation-wide. A single piece of legislation throughout Canada would reduce confusion among Internet providers and allow for stronger enforcement. Should Bill C-58 pass upon reintroduction, Internet providers such as Telus and others will have only one piece of legislation to enforce rather than one for Manitoba, one for Ontario, and for others who choose to enact such legislation.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the scourge of child pornography may be a task better suited to our federal government. Similar to a pandemic that knows no boundaries or borders, the task of eradicating child pornography will require the co-operation of nations world-wide. Our federal government is constitutionally empowered to accomplish this. However, these efforts do not preclude the efforts of provincial jurisdictions across the country. As I mentioned, other provincial jurisdictions, including Manitoba, Ontario, and Nova Scotia, have enacted their own legislation mandating the reporting of child pornography.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Alberta should pass legislation to mandate the reporting of child pornography while the federal government continues its efforts. First and perhaps most importantly, the federal Conservative government is in a minority position. Therefore, it is possible that Bill C-58 will not gain the support of the majority of the House of Commons. It is possible that even if it did pass the House of Commons, it could be defeated, stalled, or amended in the Senate. While this government certainly commends the federal government for its ongoing efforts to pass nation-wide legislation like Bill C-58, we must do our part to help in the fight against child pornography. For these reasons I will be voting in support of this legislation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her excellent work in bringing forward this piece of legislation and for her ongoing efforts to protect our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to further debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to rise today and speak to this piece of legislation. Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, is being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I would like to express my thanks to the member for initiating this very important debate. Over the many years I've known this member, she has always been very committed to protecting our children and to a law and order agenda for this province.

Mr. Speaker, debating subjects that are uncomfortable and unfortunate is one of the duties and realities of being an elected official. Bill 202 deals with one of these subjects. Child pornography and exploitation are absolutely harrowing issues that affect some of our most innocent and vulnerable citizens, our children. As elected officials it is part of our job to find ways to protect our most vulnerable and ensure our communities are safe, healthy environments.

Child pornography and child exploitation is a disturbing subject, to say the very least. It is a permanent record of the abuse of a child, which can include pictures, videos, audio recordings, drawings, and stories. A particularly disturbing trend is the proliferation and distribution of child pornography as well as opportunities for child luring via the world-wide Internet.

Mr. Speaker, the materials I just mentioned are created deliberately and can be easily shared through numerous electronic means such as cellphones and the Internet. The government of Canada recently released a report entitled Every Image, Every Child. This report details the global scope of the very real problem of child pornography and exploitation and the use of the Internet to distribute this content. It is estimated that there are over 5 million images of sexual abuse towards children on the Internet at this moment. Each week there are tens of thousands of images and videos depicting sexual abuse towards children posted. This is heinous.

In addition to the sheer volume, there are more disturbing trends emerging with regard to child pornography and exploitation. The distribution of child pornography over the Internet has seemingly had a distressing effect on the content itself. The constant flow of information and the ability to interact with other criminals either creating or distributing child pornography has led to a wide variety of deviant materials and subjects which are being displayed. Adding to the issue surrounding the trends and the content of materials containing child exploitation are the issues of availability and supply. The access to and distribution of these images can be done from any computer, any cellphone any time.

Given the prevalence of the Internet and modem technology, the issue and problem of child exploitation extends far beyond our province's borders. Our national child abuse tip line, Cybertip, recently reviewed the geographical distribution of countries hosting websites that contained images of child sexual abuse. Cybertip found that nearly 60 countries were hosting this type of content. It is clear that the issue of child exploitation is not localized explicitly in Alberta or Canada, for that matter. Cybertip's report, published in November 2009, found that the number one country in which websites were registered that hosted images of child sexual abuse was the United States, followed closely by Russia. Combined, Russia and the United States were home to approximately 70 per cent of the websites found that contained explicit material involving a child. Canada was home to 9 per cent of almost 13,000 website incidents displaying images of child sexual abuse.

Mr. Speaker, while these figures seem to suggest that interest in this material is localized, it says nothing of where the material was created. Furthermore, the difficulty with these statistics is that the measures taken by purveyors of child pornography are sophisticated and very difficult to track. For example, Cybertip observed a single website cycle through over 200 IP addresses in a single 48-hour period. Just as an aside, an IP address is a numerical label attached to devices that are connected to the Internet. One site used over 200 in a 48-hour period. These unique labels can be used to indicate the location of a particular computer. In essence, this means that the purveyors of child pornography have taken great measures to conceal the location from which these images are being posted.

Mr. Speaker, this data demonstrates that the creation of child pornography is a problem that requires our continued attention, and because of that, I support Bill 202. I believe that it will have an impact here in Alberta. However, I continue to believe that due to jurisdictional issues federal legislation may be the most effective approach to this very serious subject. Furthermore, Cybertip has recommended the implementation of international standards with regard to hosting a website as an effective measure in reducing child exploitation. Again, it is likely that jurisdictional issues will prevent our government from moving in this direction.

Ultimately, the issue of child pornography and exploitation is multifaceted. As a society we hope that no child will ever fall victim to abuse. Every member of this Assembly wants to ensure that we continue to protect our most vulnerable and valuable citizens. I support Bill 202. It is certainly well intentioned. However, due to the issues I mentioned previously, I would like to see our government continue to lobby the federal government. Again, I thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward this piece of legislation and look forward to further debate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

If not, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened very intently to all of the comments that were made, and I will definitely provide the definition of child pornography. I listened with rapt interest in regard to "We're waiting for the federal government initiative" and "We're waiting for the federal government." Well, we've been waiting since 2002 for the feds to move: 2002, 2004, 2006, 2007, '08, and again in 2009, but Parliament was prorogued. I think about that timing, and I think about how many people have been hit with this issue of child pornography. I'd be pleased to answer questions in Committee of the Whole on Cybertip and the ICE teams and from my colleague across the way from me on privacy.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I'll move second reading of Bill 202.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the close proximity to 5 o'clock, I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to proceed to private members' motions business rather than to the next private member's bill.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Local Food Production

503. Mr. Griffiths moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the feasibility and viability of developing substantially diversified local food production.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think my biggest regret with this hour of debate today is that we will only be having one hour of debate on this issue. I specifically framed this motion to encourage debate in this Assembly about a lot of issues. This discussion that we're about to have can talk about environmental issues. It can talk about support for local agriculture. It can talk about diversifying the economy. It can talk about land-use issues. There is no limit to what we can discuss when we talk about diversifying our local food production here in the province of Alberta.

You know, where this started, Mr. Speaker, was when I heard over and over again – and I've worked in agriculture a long time – so many people discuss how our farmers feed us. Looking around, we experience farmers' markets, but oftentimes I think we exaggerate just how much of our local food production could feed us. I had one person actually suggest openly that if we only ate stuff that's produced in Alberta, if that's all we were allowed to eat, then the majority of the population would actually suffer from scurvy because we don't produce enough vegetables and fruits or other production. If we eat wheat, barley, canola, beef, bison, and chicken, we'd suffer significantly healthwise.

Now, this discussion about local food production, Mr. Speaker, I believe is one of the most important issues that we'll discuss in the next 20 years, and I think we'll have to address it more and more often in this Assembly. In fact, this is a discussion that's going on globally. I went to a conference in the United States – and there is a lot of discussion going on around the globe – about utilizing food to produce fuel and whether or not our nations actually benefit in the long run when we're turning food into fuel. There are discussions globally around the economy's productions. A lot of great books have been written that discuss the status and situation with Third World countries and the way they produce food. They've actually reached some critical points and fallen backwards because of the way they produce food, importing food from other countries.

In fact, one of the challenges we have globally is that Third World nations are often forced to borrow money from First World nations so that they can turn around and use that money to buy food from First World nations. I don't quite know how you get out of a circumstance where you borrow money from somebody in order to buy their own products. And it's core products. We're not talking about big-screen TVs and couches. We're talking about food, the very essence of survival.

There are also discussions, Mr. Speaker, globally when it comes to local food production about soil conservation questions and soil health issues. How much, and how extensive? Should we use fertilizers and pesticides to produce our food? What does it do to our water quality and our soil quality? We can't forget that environmental issues when it comes to local food production and consumption are huge in the forefront, the quality of our water issues, which can be polluted because of the fertilizers we use and the pesticides that we use and other chemicals that we use.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, carbon capture and storage, carbon sequestration, is often thought of as being a critical issue when it comes to energy production. I mean, that's why the province has a $2 billion carbon capture and storage policy to help address some of those issues when it comes to energy production. But the more front and centre carbon becomes in our debate about the environment, the more we're going to realize that it's not just about energy production that's critical when we talk about carbon capture and storage, or carbon sequestration. What about food production? Food production properly done can help sequester carbon. But we have to ask the question.

I hope the issue actually comes up today, that producing a head of lettuce in Alberta ourselves may cost more money to produce than getting it cheaply from Mexico, but, you know, if you factor in the cost of carbon produced in hauling that head of lettuce all the way up here, it may be cheaper to produce it locally. If consumers actually have to pay the cost of producing carbon in order to get that head of lettuce up here, they may find it's cheaper to buy it here. If we're going to discuss carbon issues globally when it comes to energy production, why don't we start to discuss it when it comes to food production? I think we may very soon, in the near future.

Now, I think most Albertans have had the benefit and a positive experience when they go to their local farmers' market. I don't think there are very many Albertans out there that think that the farmers' market is just a neat tourist attraction and a cute place to go to find some novelties and knick-knacks. I think more and more farmers' markets are drawing in people who want to identify more with agriculture and where their food comes from, want to see more organic or locally produced food, so they support their farmers' market. But I think it's critical, Mr. Speaker, that when we talk about local food production, we actually explore the feasibility and viability of encouraging more of it, diversifying our local food production more.

I have not done an extensive study on the subject, but I do believe the economic benefits will extend beyond just farmers' markets, which Albertans can identify with. In fact, I'm sure somebody out there in the world has done some feasibility study, some economic study, but my notion from what I've read, my understanding from what I've read, Mr. Speaker, is that the majority of stable, strong, enduring economies around the globe always are so because they have a strong, stable agricultural sector and more diversified local food production. The reason why that works is because no matter what – well, look. My grandpa told me a long time ago – and I think I've used it in this Legislature before – that when you evaluate what is important in life, remember that you can go for three minutes without air, three days without water, and three weeks without food.

If we're trying to build a stable economy in Alberta, in Canada, just like other economies have where they've had a stable agricultural base, if we get into a trade dispute with the United States or England or Argentina or whoever, we may not get big-screen TVs. I think we can live without those. We might not get new running shoes. I think we can live without those. But if we're dependent on another country for our food, in a trade dispute that puts us in a vulnerable position. Most economies that are strong and stable and have endured for decades and decades and decades have discovered that the strong, stable agricultural sector is critical to their own success.

Now, I also believe that researching this and finding out how we can diversify and stabilize our agricultural sector is critical because I understand the value and importance of extending our agricultural reach into other markets and selling them our product. We have fantastic products to sell, but we make ourselves vulnerable when we produce twice as much of a product as we can consume locally. I don't want to name any particular industries, but there are industries that produce twice as much of a product as what we could eat here in Alberta or even in Canada, so we ship it to other countries. Then we oftentimes have trade disputes that are shelved in health issues to close the border off so that we can't export our product, and suddenly we have an industry in crisis. Throughout agriculture we have many sectors of that industry in crisis right now because of trade disputes mostly that are shelved or housed in some sort of health issue. If we focused on a diversified agricultural base, our economy, I think, would be more stable, and I think it would ensure us long-term benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to occupy all the time because I do believe this will be an interesting discussion. I will attain my seat and listen to the discussion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great interest that I stand and speak to this. I've been working on this since I became the new agricultural critic. I think, as has already been mentioned, that this is absolutely imperative as we move forward in our society. I agree also that I would love to see a much longer debate on this where people could bring in and have a chance to do a lot of research on this particular issue because, as has already been mentioned, this isn't just an Alberta issue; this is a world-wide movement. I'd like to call this movement going forward to the past because this is how we used to eat in the past. We knew who our producers were. Our food was good. It wasn't full of chemicals to preserve it.

I would suspect that I am probably healthier than my children, and I think that people perhaps in my age range could say that they are healthier than their children. I walked to school, and when I picked up a loaf of bread, if we didn't eat it in two days, it was gone. I think that the fact that we had all of that good, safe food was . . .

An Hon. Member: Wonder bread?

Ms Pastoor: No. No Wonder bread. We didn't have Wonder bread. I'm trying to think. Good old Canada Bread I think is what it was called.

One of the things that has been mentioned is about the fact that we might get scurvy because we didn't have vegetables. There are greenhouses in this province as we speak that can actually produce two crops a year of vegetables because they use solar to keep up not only the energy that they need but also the heat that they need in their greenhouses. Any of these greenhouses could be run on geothermal or wind.

When I was fortunate enough to live in Spain in the early '80s, when we first went there, there were probably – I don't know – maybe 15 to 20 acres of greenhouses. They called them plásticos. What they did was actually make greenhouses out of plastic. They took the soil from the harbour and desalinated it, and that was used as the base for the greenhouses. Then they had a tank of water and fertilizer, and it was dripped at the bottom of the root of each plant.

They got three crops a year, anywhere from carnations to English cucumbers, tomatoes that we've never seen the size of, and were very successful. Now when I go on Google Earth, I look and see that what was desert at one point is now totally covered in what they call plásticos. There's no reason that we cannot do that here in this province. We are going to alternative energies, and it would be more than certainly economical.

There was also a mention and has been talked about the increased costs of organic or perhaps the increased costs of local food. We know that much of this food that we can get locally really is a better food. It is actually picked when it's ripe, which means that it's ripened on the vine or however it's being grown. It's being ripened in the ground if it's a root vegetable.

My argument to that would be that if we spend more money to buy really good food, perhaps we'd eat less. I think that in this day and age of obvious obesity, that wouldn't be a bad thing, so I think that's another argument that doesn't stand up.

One of the things that I see happening as well is that we are exporting first-grade food to other countries. I'm not altogether sure after some of the things that we've heard that I totally trust the inspectors, who have been cut down in numbers, to inspect the food that we are actually bringing into our country. I think we've heard many horror tales about foods that actually had to be recalled because of various things that were in them. Melamine would be one.

Interestingly, the United Nations has predicted that over the next 25 years nearly all population growth will be in the cities of the developing world. At current rates 60 per cent of the world's total population will live in cities by 2030. As the cities grow, so does the number of urban poor. Unemployment, hunger, and malnutrition are commonplace. In the big city most of any cash income the poor might bring home goes to feeding themselves and staying alive. Any food that does not have to be bought is a bonus. As a result, more and more people are attempting to grow at least some of their own food to supplement poor diets and meagre incomes, but farming in the city, urban agriculture, is too often seen by municipalities as a problem to be eradicated rather than a part of the solution to make the city and its environment more sustainable.

I was at a lecture given by Mike Harcourt, the former Premier of B.C., who is now very involved in sustainable communities and spoke about this subject, that more and more and more the ability to actually make a change in terms of how we create our food and have it within our communities really will be at the municipal level. He didn't feel that either federal or provincial legislation would have as much impact as people actually working towards this movement on the ground.

It's interesting to point out that there are actually two cases before the courts in Calgary about people that want to keep chickens in their backyard. Now, one of the women who is challenging this in the court is a single mom and on a limited income and has three chickens in her backyard. She, coincidentally, also has three children, and each one of those children gets a fresh egg every morning. That, I think, is a part of her argument. However, it is interesting to note that Vancouver, New York City, Seattle, Portland, Chicago, Victoria, Burnaby, and Richmond, just to name a few, actually have legislation that says: yes, you can have chickens in your backyard. So the movement is moving; the movement is catching on. We even know that here in Alberta the sales at farmers' markets have increased by 30 per cent over the last two years. Just think of the millions of dollars that are going back into our local economy, but think of the good food that our citizens are actually eating.

The new face of farming is going to be smaller farms. I visited a farm that was only 10 acres. One of their things is that they have specialty vegetables, but one of the examples that I use that came off that farm is that they raise Cornish game hens. This is a place here just near Edmonton. It's sold by contract to specialty restaurants that have very, very picky chefs. These people are actually going to make a living off this 10 acres. The problem with some of these smaller farmers is that the land doesn't really say that they're a farm, but they're sort of not a small business that a bank would look at in terms of giving them those extra monies just to get them over that threshold of allowing them to be a little bit bigger and to actually hire staff.

I think that this is very timely, but I also think that we really have to look at what has already been mentioned, called the 100-mile diet. I in Lethbridge am very lucky that I can actually get any kind of a meat product that is hormone free and some, certainly, vaccination free. With our vegetables, I know which ones are grown organically. I think that these are the kinds of things that we should have in downtown Calgary, Edmonton, and everywhere else. As has been mentioned, these farmers' markets are certainly growing as we speak.

I think that it's important that we work with our agriculture minister. It should be legislated in some way so that there is help, so that there is even education toward thinking about how important this movement can be. One of the economic benefits – this is actually a dollar figure where I put the 30 per cent – is that farmers' markets in Alberta currently have sales in the range of $380 million a year. They are increasing in numbers, as I have already mentioned.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Alas, hon. member, the time has escaped us.

The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm listening with a keen ear here to the debate on the motion, which urges the government to investigate the feasibility, the viability of developing substantially diversified local food production, which, I think, on the surface of it could be agreed with except that to me that kind of reeks of calling for government intervention in the agricultural business, in the local food production business. It may be a laudable goal, but I'll guarantee you that we've heard the Member for Battle River-Wainwright arguing exactly the opposite in this House a number of times.

Then the debate on this thing revolves around some confusion over local food production versus organic food production. The motion doesn't speak anything to organic food production; it talks about local diversified food production. But the Member for Lethbridge-East repeatedly talked about local food as if she meant organic food. Let's examine that issue for a while because, actually, there's organic food in all of our markets and has been for quite some time. Recently there's been quite a take-up on organic food.

I don't know what the number is today, but not too long ago 70 per cent of our organic food was produced in China and shipped to Canada. If anybody knows anything about the Chinese market, they'll know that it's the wild, wild west. It's rather unregulated. Anybody that wants to put "organic" on their package can do so. There's no regulation to say what that word means, so we buy organic food in the market. It's crazy. My concern here is that we have this ridiculous propensity to rush lemming-like into new fads. This could be confused with another one.

Now, the member talks about the future of farming being smaller farms. By what reasoning? I should point out that there's a difference between a farm and a garden, first of all. The Member for Battle River-Wainwright has argued on numerous occasions about what an efficient farming community we have. Now, by what economic reasoning is a farmer in Alberta going to abandon his methods of production – tractors, herbicides, fertilizers, all of those things – unless there's an economic benefit for him? A farmer is a businessman like any other, and if he can make a dollar at doing something, he's going to do it. It has been proven time and time again that the consumer will not pay more for produce in the supermarket.

I urge the hon. member to plant a garden and eat local food. I wholeheartedly agree that it's better for you. But let's not urge our agricultural community to switch to uneconomical practices unless somebody is willing to subsidize. And there's the word. Somebody has to pay for all of this, and if it's not the consumer in the grocery store, who is it? I urge the hon. member to think about that. We're not talking about organic food. We're talking about local production here. All of that is a very good argument for another day.

The reason that we get our fruit from other places is because they can produce it more economically, and there's a limit to what our consumers are willing to pay. In exchange for that we trade goods with them, and we ship our beef there. Who is going to tell the beef producers, "Oh, boy; well, now, we probably should cut down – oh, I don't know – to 10 per cent of our current production"?

Ms Pastoor: COOL will tell the beef producers what they're going to do.

Mr. Oberle: While the member seems willing to tell them that they should cut down to 10 per cent of their current production, I'm not, Mr. Speaker. I think we should let markets evolve. The agricultural community is doing a heck of a good job of that, and I think that we should leave the system be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Oh, that was a bit sooner than I expected.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on this motion and, unlike the previous speaker, to speak in favour of it for a number of reasons, some of which may be good ones.

I want to start by simply noting the government's own sustainable land-use framework and some of the information that they talked about last year when they brought in the land-use framework and heralded much of what it meant for us in the future and what a great thing it would be. One of the strategies in that land-use framework was strategy 5, which suggested that we ought to promote the efficient use of land to reduce the footprint of human activities on Alberta's landscape. Well, obviously, we have local production, but promoting local consumption of locally produced foods is, in fact, a clear mechanism for reducing our footprint and for enhancing the effectiveness of our land use. That's one good reason why this government presumably would already be in favour of this motion, because it completely aligns with their stated goals under the land-use framework that we all talked about last year.

What we need to do in Alberta is not look at this as a fad because, you know, I'm pretty sure that eating is one of those things that's been around for some time. As a result, I think that coming up with efficient and economical ways to feed ourselves is not a fad but is, in fact, kind of survival-like, so we ought to maybe consider it that way. Even if we risk potentially challenging some very vested interests of some very, very large but singular agricorp interests that some folks in this government are quite fond of, at the end of the day, in the long term, what we really need to do is look at how to develop this province in a way that sustains our environment, sustains our food supply, and sustains our health. All of that is something that can be achieved through more focus on enhancing local food production and distribution and consumption.

Generally speaking, I mean, the government itself, I believe, last year reported that their own surveys were suggesting that 90 per cent of Alberta households had purchased local food in the previous year and that a significant portion of them would like to buy more local food if the opportunity was provided to them in the following year.

Now, the government has put quite a lot of money, of course, into the Alberta livestock and meat strategy, a strategy that has gotten it into not a small amount of hot water with their historical supporters. Of course, that's done in order, we're told, to enhance the ability of Albertans to export their meat products and to compete internationally. Now, that may well be, at least in part, a good objective. Whether this particular strategy is the most effective strategy to achieve that objective, I don't know, but the objective is certainly a good one. But why only look at creating an international market if we have the opportunity to enhance and build a local market? In fact, studies show that dollars spent on local food will circulate eight to 15 times in a local economy. If the food is grown here, transported here, bought here, then in fact more of the economic benefit from that stays here.

The other issue that some people have talked about is cost. Of course, there was the whole discussion about organic food versus nonorganic food, but as has been pointed out, we're not necessarily talking about organic food. What we're talking about is the government looking at ways in which they can efficiently support a food distribution system that removes the middleman and connects the consumer much more closely with the producer, and the more you're able to remove that distribution, eliminate or minimize the number of people between the consumer and the producer, the cheaper and more marketable that product becomes.

What we need is government support and exploration into how to connect the consumer with the producer locally because that's one of the problems that we have here in Alberta, that it's very, very difficult to do that. When you seek out organic food, if you're in a major grocery store, you end up buying organic food that's travelled half-way across the continent as opposed to, you know, 10 miles down the road, which, of course, you do with the farmers' market. As many people here know, of course, the only year-round farmers' market in the city resides in the centre of my constituency. I can tell you that that place is overwhelmed every Saturday morning with shoppers, and it drives the economy of the whole area around it. So to suggest that there isn't actually a market for this is really quite short-sighted.

The point is that it's not necessarily going to happen everywhere right away. Is there something the government can do to enhance it? Heaven knows they enhanced the market share of the very small group of agricorporations out there. They do everything they can to support them, so why not look at trying to find ways to do that with respect to enhancing local food production and diversification?

A few interesting statistics that were provided to me by people who are very much in support of this vision of creating a vibrant and sustainable local food economy are as follows. Basically, there is a long-term concern about food security across the world, and ultimately this is going to become a problem. As a result of that, we see a lot of foreign purchases of huge amounts of farmland around the world, up to 15 million to 20 million hectares of farmland in certain countries, equivalent to anywhere between 50 and 75 per cent of the province of Alberta.

As the food shortage develops, or as the market becomes increasingly monopolized by one or two or three or four distributors, primarily at this point, the prices shoot up, which we have seen quite a bit recently. Meanwhile, what the producers receive goes down because, of course, they have far fewer places to sell their produce. The monopoly destroys the so-called free market on both ends. The producer has fewer places to sell, and the consumers have fewer places from which to buy, and the market is distorted.

Anybody who's a student of economics will tell you that even the most right-wing believers in the joys of the free market will acknowledge that monopolies are not always a good thing. Therefore, what we need to do is find ways to get around them. [interjection] I've even got the attention here of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. How often does that happen, that I get nods of agreement from him? Having said that, though, I think we can agree on this piece.

Food prices soar due to demand surges and supply constraints, and as a result of that we see these huge peaks in food prices. Another thing that people ought to know is that the distribution systems that we currently have in place across the world account for about 10 per cent of the annual greenhouse gas emissions worldwide. For those of us in the building who actually believe that this is a problem, this is something that maybe we ought to be concerned about. One way to do that is to stop transporting a freeze-dried vegetable thousands and thousands of kilometres and, rather, find ways to move it from farm A to adjacent urban community B. Anyway, that's another thing.

We also have issues with respect to the way things work right now. I heard one speaker talk about: "Why should we fix it if it's not broke? Why should the government tamper with it? The market is working just great." Blah, blah, blah. The problem is that Canadian farmers at this point are posting record losses, surpassing those that we saw during the Depression in the earlier part of the previous century. Tens of thousands of farmers sell their produce to only one or two large corporations at this point. Food travels on average 2,400 kilometres from field to plate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and offer my support to Motion 503, urging the government to explore the opportunity and viability of developing diversified local food production. Right now the Alberta government is working closely with industry, business leaders, and Albertans towards a shared goal of making the province one of the most competitive jurisdictions in the world. A more competitive province will provide the right environment for the creation of new business opportunities for Albertans and our future generations. This focus cuts across all sectors of government, including agriculture. Motion 503 will help us accomplish this by promoting our local producers.

Agriculture has been and continues to be integral to the success of our province. It is an essential component of Alberta's economy, culture, and heritage. Producers provide our communities with nutritious and healthy food as well as employment and economic opportunities for local businesses that offer services and supports to our producers. Over the years this industry has faced and continues to encounter many hurdles that require innovative solutions, so it is especially important that we continue to look at different ways that the Alberta government can continue to help this industry.

I believe that many Albertans feel the same way and would like to know when they can purchase and consume locally produced food. I know that I do. Not only do we want to support our local agricultural producers, but we also trust the quality of their food. Mothers may not want to buy the cheapest food for their children. They may want to buy the best quality food for their children. In fact, consumer trends report that local food production and sales efforts have seen unprecedented growth over the past few years and have increased by 30 per cent.

With the high Canadian dollar it is especially important that we support our local producers as U.S. producers are now more competitive in our markets and better able to sell their products in our stores. Oftentimes when we go to the grocery store, it's not always obvious where the food that we are buying comes from. Research has shown that Alberta households indicate a lack of product availability as the number one barrier to buying local products. If stores do not indicate where the food is coming from, we do not necessarily know when we have the choice to purchase Albertan. Exploring the possibilities of diversified local food production might alleviate this by increasing our awareness and the profile of local producers as well as providing us with more locally grown products.

I prefer to buy Albertan, and I'm willing to pay more money to do so. I believe that a lot of Albertans and constituents from Grande Prairie-Wapiti would do the same. The desire of Albertans to buy locally can be seen in the over one hundred independently operated farmers' markets in Alberta.

I commend the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright for this motion to support our local agricultural producers. This motion is one of the ways we can ensure that our province's agricultural industry is competitive and provides jobs and prosperity to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the time to speak on this very important issue, and I look forward to hearing other members' thoughts on diversified local food production.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were having a deep conversation on the free market with the hon. member from the ND Party. A deep subject.

I appreciate the hon. member bringing forward Motion 503, but until I heard him speak on it, I thought that it was a typo error: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore the feasibility and viability of developing substantially diversified local food production." What I thought he wanted in his motion was to ensure that there is a competitiveness review to see why we're not more diversified here in the province of Alberta. I believe that if you actually look at the problems, as the Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, you're actually punished for having a small farm: "Well, you're under 10 acres," or "You didn't have this much income," that in fact you don't meet the regulations to get those benefits of being a small farmer.

There is an individual down in Taber that has raised, I believe, eight children on 20 acres, and everyone says that it can't be done. What I think is important is that we recognize we shouldn't say who can and who can't but to allow the free market and that entrepreneur to say: I think I can do this. Perhaps they just want to put in five acres of blueberries or Saskatoons or black currants and realize that they can and will be able to make a living on that. The question is: what are the regulations that we've put in place that allow or prohibit those people from being competitive and being allowed to do that?

There are some interesting points that have been brought up that I want to go back to. I think that most Albertans, if in fact they were given the choice to buy local or foreign, would buy local. As the Member for Peace River mentioned, it is about the cost. Human nature is that we don't want to pay a prohibitive price for something that is competitive and that we can bring in from another area at a lower cost. I don't believe that that's the root of the problem. I really feel that it's important that we allow the Alberta producers to bring forward their produce and to be able to market it in a way that is economically viable for them.

Too often we set up new rules and regulations. There's always a constant battle at the farmers' market on whether we're going to bring in new rules and regulations and limit them from bringing their produce to town. We've passed a lot of legislation that prohibits people, for example, on how many chickens or turkeys they're allowed to raise without getting a quota, thereby creating a problem for those new entrepreneurs who might want to get into those areas.

I think the important thing for Albertans and perhaps the role that the government might take is on the education side, of promoting a little bit of education on how good our product in Alberta is and to allow the local people to realize that. We're very fortunate in southern Alberta to have Rogers Sugar.

Europe went through a period where they had a food shortage. They realized the problem, and the local people there are more than willing to subsidize farmers because they want assured produce in their country. We don't have that problem here in Alberta. We have a surplus. What we need to do is create the demand because we want better, and I believe Albertans do want better. They want the best.

We have a great drive to be competitive, whether it's in the Olympics or whether it's in food production, but we need a positive campaign to allow people to understand the benefits of buying local. We often hear of the 100-Mile Diet. I'd love to hear the discussion and talk about the Alberta diet or the Canadian diet or the western diet. There are many areas where we could and should be looking at those things.

One of the areas where we suffer, I guess, is when we look at the oil sands. There we had a resource, and we wondered: how do we allow or encourage the development of that? The provincial and federal governments got together, they looked at the problem, and they said: "Well, it's a tax problem. There isn't enough capital to develop this under the current system, so what we need to do is put a tax incentive in there to allow the entrepreneur, the risk takers to put their capital in." It's very much the same in agriculture.

There are a lot of opportunities that we could and should explore. The one that I would like to address today is greenhouses. If someone was to do a little bit of research, they would find that the majority of the greenhouses in Alberta are down in Medicine Hat. The reason – I'm sure the Speaker is very much aware of this – is that there they have their own gas. In the city of Medicine Hat they have their royalties. They own the gas, and they were allowed to use that gas without having prohibitive royalties or taxes on it, so the development of greenhouses inside that jurisdiction was abundant. They were able to have greenhouses there where in other places in the province it wasn't economically viable.

It's interesting, though, the number of wells across Alberta that have been drilled, have been developed. In the old days they'd flare them or they'd test them, and they'd say: "These wells aren't economically viable. We can't put in a pipeline. It would cost too much. There's not enough there." Yet we don't have the opportunity to allow a local farmer to use that gas to heat a greenhouse or to produce a crop, to lower their cost on fuel. I think those are areas where we can be innovative in ensuring that Alberta producers have an opportunity.

We very much get focused, it seems, here in Alberta and throughout the world right now on carbon. I think what we should be focused on, though, is carbohydrates, the $2 billion that we're putting in to look at carbon sequestration when the science is definitely not settled on that. We don't know the results on trying to do that. Yet are we going to put some incentives in for agricultural production? We have to question that.

I think there are a few other areas that we could look at, and that is truth in labelling. Down in the States they have COOL, country of origin labelling. I don't believe that as Alberta producers we have anything to fear in that because of the quality of our product. It's the foreign countries where they don't have high standards and questionable ethics on what's being brought in. We get thrown into that same group because of that, and I think that we can overcome that through education. It's interesting that we produce an awful lot of vegetables in southern Alberta for industrial markets: corn, potatoes, peas, beans, sunflowers, lentils, just to name a few. I think that we should realize that that production is there.

The hon. member talked about, you know, doubling the product, that we're maybe producing too much. I'm not sure. I hope you'll clarify that for me because we are an export nation. We export oil, gas, electricity, forest products, just to name a few. I think that we want to encourage export because a great deal of our economy is brought in through that export.

The real concern here and what we want to do is allow the Alberta producer to be able to be competitive and to be able to compete in a world market. I think what's critical and what the government needs to do in a motion like this is to have that competitiveness review and see what regulations we have put in place that are prohibitive versus what regulations are really needed. What are we allowing the producer to produce? What are our standards if someone wants to say whether they're natural foods, whether they're organic foods, or whether they're just foods that are produced here in the province? I think that by initiating some of these other forms of education and truth in labelling, we can and will continue to grow our agricultural market, we can be competitive, and we can create that demand through our great quality of products.

It's interesting, you know, when you see the different brands that are promoted, whether it's McDonald's, Tim Hortons, Coca-Cola. Brand name has shown in the past that it is very significant when you show the integrity of that product, whether it's sportswear, whether it's food, whether it's a vehicle. We see that. What I would encourage the government to do is to broaden their competitiveness review and to realize and ask: what are we doing here to hurt the Alberta farmer? When we try to protect and pass legislation that protects, we usually end up hurting ourselves. We weaken our productivity, our efficiencies in the world. It isn't a long-term benefit, though it might be a short-term benefit. If we really want to protect our farmers, let's give them the freedom and the opportunity to produce in the most efficient and effective way possible. Let's not place prohibitive rules and regulations that are damaging.

I received a phone call from a butcher in rural Alberta. He's struggling with the new regulations that he's saying are going to be brought in and enforced when all he does is process the local producers' beef as well as the wildlife that's taken in his area . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

I'm looking forward to the rest of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak to Motion 503, brought forward by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. This motion urges the government to explore both the opportunity and the viability of developing substantially diversified local food production. I've always been a proponent of Alberta's agriculture industry and the preservation of Alberta's agricultural land even though I've never had the privilege of living on a farm.

Prior to my tenure as MLA for St. Albert I was an alderman in St. Albert, and in that capacity I also served as chair of the Edmonton metropolitan regional planning commission. During that time the commission put together a strategy on agriculture, part of which included the concept of preserving the ecoclimatic zone in northeast Edmonton. The microclimate in this area is well known for its agricultural production. I'm very pleased to say that the most recent city of Edmonton municipal development plan, which I understand is still being debated for third reading, designates at least part of this area as an urban agricultural zone.

The preservation of agricultural land is very important to the future viability of Alberta's agricultural industry. Land with class 1 or 2 soil, meaning those soils with good or excellent capabilities, needs to be preserved. Given the importance of the agriculture industry to Alberta's economy, I believe that prime agricultural lands should be used solely for agricultural purposes.

The demand is very high for fresh produce and other agricultural products, and it is growing every day. In my constituency of St. Albert thousands of people visit the farmers' market every weekend. This farmers' market, I understand, is one of the largest in western Canada.

The World Health Organization estimates that the distance a basic meal travels is 2,400 kilometres from the producer to the consumer. Over this distance products have to be picked weeks in advance and have a substantially higher possibility of being damaged or spoiled. Compare this to our local producers' agricultural products, that are picked fresh in the morning and brought to the market that very day. I am sure that anyone who has indulged in vine-ripened, fresh produce would agree that the taste and flavours of these products are second to none.

Mr. Speaker, I support Motion 503 and urge all members to consider the merits of supporting this motion as well. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright to close debate.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I wasn't disappointed. Again, my only disappointment is that there's only an hour to debate this, and there is so much to discuss. In the five minutes I have to close, I know I can't address all the questions or concerns or issues that were raised but a couple, though.

I do want to point out in the discussion that there is one sector of the meat industry that produces 200 per cent more product than can be consumed in this province. I'm not suggesting there's anything wrong with that either because we are an exporting nation, but we have to be constantly mindful of what it opens us up to and how vulnerable it makes us when we have trade issues that are sometimes legitimate, sometimes shrouded in health issues. It leaves us vulnerable.

I know I heard some comments that this motion, that discusses the feasibility and viability of diversified local food production, does not necessarily tie to organic. I agree; it's not necessarily organic. There is a notion, there is a tendency that the more localized the food production and the smaller the production, the more organic it typically becomes. Whether it's certified or not is not an issue. It typically becomes more organic. Many people are keenly interested in localized food production because of the notion that it's more organic, that it's more local, that it's more wholesome, whatever. There are more people being tied to that notion.

I don't ever suggest that this should be done or undertaken with government subsidies, but I was glad that the member pointed out that there are other ways to incent more capital investment and more production. We've done it with many other industries in this province.

You know what? In the entire discussion about diversifying our local food production, Mr. Speaker, I didn't use the words "competitiveness review" because, quite frankly, when I wrote this motion, that wasn't a really hip and cool phrase yet, and I hadn't analyzed that. But when you discuss it in that context, competitiveness review can talk about reducing rules and regulations that hinder more localized food production. It could talk about the tax structure, which could hinder local production.

But it's more than just doing a competitiveness review. There really needs to be a larger study, a larger analysis to see what sort of global changes are coming that we may have to address here in this province, issues that arise. There may be more environmental or health issues that arise globally that can impact what we do locally and affect whether or not we can diversify our local food production.

We definitely need more education – that is critical – to educate consumers about what's possible when it comes to local food production, to educate farmers on what's possible when it comes to local food production. There's oftentimes a mindset that you have to be big, that you have to do something grand, that you have to be an exporter, that otherwise it's just a local garden. Quite frankly, there is a middle ground in between. There is a gentleman that I've talked to who has written four books, Bruno Wiskel, who makes more money on 40 acres than most people do on 1,200 acres, and it's all localized food production. He's a model for what's possible out there.

Anyway, there are a lot of different things to be considered, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out one last thing before I wrap up. I've read this all over the place. You can find research on the Internet that supports it. In most of the largest European cities the number one economic activity is agricultural production. People grow stuff on their doorsteps, on their balconies. They grow stuff in the windows. They produce as much as they can locally. So there are opportunities for growing more local production, and it doesn't mean we have to export tomatoes to Ontario or that they even have to travel a hundred miles from Forestburg to Edmonton.

It just means that maybe there are a lot of opportunities, and we have a lot of unanswered questions. They really, quite frankly, need to be answered before we can determine whether or not diversifying our local food production is viable and feasible. This motion simply encourages and incents the government, in whatever capacity they feel fit, to explore whether or not it's feasible and viable and answers some of those questions that have been raised by members here and raised by myself. That's why I ask all members to support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. We give further thanks for the gifts of culture and heritage which we share. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a visitor who is in your gallery. Stanley Gooch is a Camrosian. He doesn't live there anymore, is now retired and lives in Kelowna, but he was raised in Camrose and has had a distinguished career as a Canadian diplomat. He has served as ambassador to Central America, to Mexico, as Canadian High Commissioner to India, served in Vienna with the atomic energy agency. He's here visiting relatives today, and we had the chance to have lunch. I always really enjoy visiting with Stan. He actually put his diplomatic skills to great use back in about 2003, when as chair of Augustana University College he helped negotiate the merger with the University of Alberta. He has a very keen interest in world events, world affairs, and obviously what's happening in Alberta. I'm very happy to have him here today. I'd ask that all members of the Assembly offer him the traditional warm welcome. If he could rise, please.

Introduction of Guests

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Alberta Legislature 68 visitors from Northmount elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They are seated in both the public and members' galleries. Also, I'd like to recognize a number of the teachers that are joining this large group of school visitors: Mrs. Krystal Lim, Ms Janis Greenwood, Mr. Derek Lutz, Mrs. Denna Gates, and Mr. Conrad Lutz.

Mr. Speaker, it says at Northmount elementary school, "Another month has come and gone," just as an expression of how much time has passed, and it says, "Time flies when you are having fun!" It is my hope that the school visitors from Northmount school are having their first experience at the Alberta Legislature and having fun learning about this exciting opportunity and joining us today in the House. I would like all members of the Legislature to join me in giving an absolutely warm welcome to Northmount elementary school. I'd ask them to rise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. The first group I'd like to introduce is a group who comes here today from l'école Maurice-Lavallée school in the riding of Edmonton-Strathcona. With the 30 students from the school are their teachers Mme Chantal Grégoire and Mme Marie-Claude Laroche. I'm very pleased that they were able to be here today and also, I believe, to participate in the lovely ceremony that we had earlier today in the rotunda. I would ask that these students visiting today rise and receive the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly leaders from Alberta's francophone community who participated this morning in a flag-raising ceremony in the Legislature rotunda as part of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture and history.

The executives are from the Conseil de développement économique de l'Alberta, or the Francophone Economic Development Council of Alberta. This organization works closely with the province's private sector to develop tourism from francophone regions, encourage and promote business, and promote job opportunities for Albertans. We also have members from the French Canadian Association of Alberta, or the ACFA. The ACFA is the provincial organization representing all francophones.

Le gouvernement de l'Alberta est fier d'entretenir de bonnes relations avec l'ACFA en s'assurant que les francophones de l'Alberta ont accès aux services et aux ressources dont ils ont besoin.

Je demanderais à nos invités de se lever lorsque je les présente: Dolorèse Nolette, Michel Berdnikoff, Jeanne Robinson, Adèle Amyotte, Oumar Lamana, Reed Gauthier, Denis Perreux, Johanne Johnson, Rob Christie, Randy Boissonnault, Frédéric Turbide, Marc S. Tremblay. Se joignant à eux en cette journée spéciale sont des membres de mon équipe au Secrétariat francophone: Denis Tardif, directeur général, et Cindie LeBlanc, directrice adjointe.

Ces individus sont tous assis dans la galerie des membres aujourd'hui. J'aimerais demander à tous nos membres de les accueillir chaleureusement à la Législature.

Merci, M. le Président.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly members of the board of management and staff of the Lamont health care centre. The Lamont health care centre is a combined acute-care auxiliary hospital and nursing home facility located in the town of Lamont. The centre's proud history began in 1912 with the establishment of the Lamont public hospital and is the result of a unique partnership between local residents and the United Church of Canada.

The board members present today and those who came before them, including the hon. the Premier, have worked tirelessly over the years to preserve a strong tradition of caring for the community by the community. A small cottage hospital with modest beginnings established just before the First World War has grown to become a fully integrated health care centre. Our guests today are in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please stand as I name them. They are Ms Trudy Herrold, Ms Connie Newgard, Ms Mae Adamyk, Reverend Lilley Glebe, and the chief executive officer, Mr. Harold James. I'd ask all members to please join me in extending our traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six film and television professionals who are seated in the public gallery. I'll ask you to please rise as I say your name. We have Lorelei Kuchera, who is the vice-president of film for IATSE, local 210. We have Mr. Don Ast, who is representing ACTRA, but most of you will know him as Nestor Pistor. Indeed, many people remember. We have Michelle Gougeon from the Directors Guild of Canada, Alberta branch; Prudence Olenik, who I was very pleased to work with at one point, also with IATSE; and Linda Bourgon, also with IATSE. I just want to point out that Linda was an Emmy award winner in 2004 for hairstyling. We're also joined by Ryan Halun, who is also with IATSE. Thank you so much for joining us. They are here to press the government for changes to the film and television industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you two constituents of mine who are seated in the members' gallery today. They represent St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic school district, and they are here to observe question period today. They are the superintendent, Jamie McNamara, and Arlene Hamilton, who is a Leduc ward member and a former alderman of the city of Leduc as well. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Jocelyn Stenger. Jocelyn is a first-year social work student from Grant MacEwan University and is currently doing her placement at my constituency office. She has a strong interest in the health of the community and in helping those in need. She has also developed a keen interest in electoral politics and the way in which government policy affects the lives of people in inner-city neighbourhoods. She is a much-valued addition to my constituency office, and I thank her for the wonderful work she has done so far on behalf of my constituents. I would ask Jocelyn to please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try this one more time. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two members from my office. The first is Ashley Fairall. Ashley is a social work student. She's in her first year of studies in the social work program at Grant MacEwan University, and she is currently doing her placement at my office. She's also serving on the MacEwan Students' Council, the student program advisory committee, and is active in the students' association. She has a strong interest in government policy and how it affects citizens in the community. I've been personally impressed with her advocacy efforts on behalf of my constituents and her patience with some of my missteps.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, I would like to also introduce Philippe

Johnson. He is my constituency assistant and has been working in my office for almost a year now. Philippe grew up in Lac La Biche, drove truck in the oil patch, went to school at U of T, has done a tremendous amount of international development work, and most recently has been working for the citizens of Edmonton-Strathcona.

I'd appreciate it if both Ashley and Philippe could rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Fallen Four Fifth Anniversary

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fifth anniversary of the deaths of four young RCMP officers in the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency was marked with a community candlelighting at the Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe on March 3. It was an honour for me to have the support of my fellow MLAs who attended as well as the Solicitor General – I thank them for that – as we paused with the community to remember our heroes. I was pleased to see that the families, friends, and co-workers of constables Leo Johnston, Peter Schiemann, Brock Myrol, and Anthony Gordon were joined by family members and friends who came to honour our peacekeepers and other police officers as well.

The memorial society volunteers are to be commended on creating this great memorial and the ongoing events that honour and celebrate all who have given their lives for the uniform. The society volunteers have done a tremendous job in helping the community, the province, and the country turn a devastating tragedy into a dignified memorial park, with ongoing events to encourage healthy minds, bodies, and spirits. As always, a special thank you goes to all that have generously supported the memorial and related events.

On behalf of the society and as MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne I extend an open invitation to all Albertans to share with us the memorial candlelighting of five candles and the annual RCMP memorial hockey team versus the Whitecourt Senators oldtimers' hockey team on March 19 at 6:30 at the Whitecourt Twin Arenas. There will also be a silent auction held to raise funds for the park. All donations are welcome through me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Ports-to-Plains Alliance

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share with the Assembly a brief update on one of our very exciting international trade partnerships, Ports-to-Plains. Essentially, Ports-to-Plains is a corridor alliance which encompasses transportation, energy, and agriculture as well as a trade corridor running from the Texas border with Mexico, through nine U.S. states, and ending up in Alberta's oil sands.

Alberta has been a member of the Ports-to-Plains Alliance for over a year, and the benefits of this membership are beginning to show, benefits like the increase in co-operation between our regional economic development alliances, or REDAs. In fact, our membership in Ports-to-Plains has prompted the REDAs along Alberta's eastern border to work together, rather than competing against each other, and form Alberta's Ports-to-Plains project.

Another benefit gained through our partnership with Ports-to-Plains is the development of strong international connections. Mr. Speaker, through this partnership connections were made with universities in Texas and memorandums were signed to work on research with universities and colleges here in Alberta. Alberta has also gained an additional congressional advocacy group that is nine states large and regularly meets with all Senators and Congressmen in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, through my work with Port-to-Plains I've had the opportunity to speak with many government and business leaders throughout the United States, and I can say with conviction that all of them are truly impressed and excited about the benefits Alberta can bring to their businesses and to their states. But what is perhaps more exciting is that many of these leaders were really not aware of Alberta before our membership in Ports-to-Plains. They didn't really know what Alberta had to offer.

Mr. Speaker, the good work of this organization is going forward stronger than ever. The Ports-to-Plains Energy Summit in Denver, Colorado, on April 8 and 9 will give us another opportunity along with the energy industry to continue to sell Alberta and the benefits Alberta has for the American heartland.

Ports-to-Plains has proven itself to be a valuable ally in improving Alberta's competitiveness, and I'm excited to continue to work with them to meet the goals set out in Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2009 city of Edmonton municipal census reveals that many communities are experiencing an increase in the number of school-aged children as well as preschoolers. In the city of Edmonton the number of preschool children increased between 2005 and 2009 by over 30 per cent.

This 30 per cent increase over the last four years certainly supports the government of Alberta's projections that by 2014 there will be more students than we've ever had in the school system, yet in the latest 10-year facilities plan prepared by the Edmonton public school board the school enrolment for Edmonton is projected to decrease. According to a statement on page 10 of this plan: "This projection is based on an analysis of Federal Census data from 1996 to 2006 and district student residency data derived from historical student information."

Parents demand answers to the following three questions from the school board. Why is it relying on inaccurate and outdated data when making such important decisions regarding public school closures? Why would the school board go against the city of Edmonton's own stated goal of attracting new families into older neighbourhoods to help increase the population density in central neighbourhoods? Finally, is the planning department of the school board deliberately ignoring data which does not support their recommendation to close schools in Edmonton's central neighbourhoods, or are they simply unaware of the latest census information collected by the city?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that in light of this information the Edmonton public school board cease and desist, please, in their actions to close any of the six schools in the city of Edmonton's central neighbourhoods until a proper assessment of the new data collected by the city of Edmonton is addressed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Calgary South Health Campus

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary south health campus is the new hospital being built in Calgary, and I'm proud to say that it's in my riding of Calgary-Hays.

When completed, the new south health campus will be a 155,000-square-metre facility that serves Calgary and will serve as a referral point for parts of southern Alberta. Not only will it contain traditional hospital resources, but it will combine leading-edge health care with the latest in technology as well as research and education in an environment that focuses on providing a healthy, healing atmosphere for patients and staff.

When phase 1 is complete in December of 2011, the facility will house 11 operating rooms, 30 emergency exam rooms, 65 short-stay beds, 12 intensive care beds, 216 additional in-patient care beds, and space for 200,000 outpatient visits a year. Just to put that in perspective, that's about the same number of beds as the expanding Rockyview general hospital and twice the outpatient visits as the Foothills Medical Centre.

The Calgary south health campus will have a tremendous impact on my constituency, allowing for better access to health facilities. Not only this, but it will bring jobs and an economic benefit to my riding. In fact, when fully operational the south health campus will employ approximately 2,000 people.

I look forward to the opening and what this hospital will bring to my constituency and Calgary. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hospital Construction in Grande Prairie

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently was in Grande Prairie, where the main concern was when they will receive a new hospital, a hospital that's been needed for some years for their growing, thriving community. This was promised back in 2007. To the Premier: with the Premier being so willing to talk of the priorities and concerns of the people of Calgary, will he now speak of the priorities for the people of Grande Prairie? Will the new QE II replacement hospital be started this year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of large projects where the tenders have been closed, which will produce some savings. Treasury Board and Infrastructure are evaluating how much money there is in savings. I've also instructed the minister of health to look at those projects that we have set aside money for, but during the huge inflationary period that we went through, the costs really rose. I've asked him to revisit all those projects. That would be Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat, Slave Lake, I believe, or High Prairie, and a number of other locations, including some of the long-term care residences.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the people want to have some definite response. Will the Premier give some definite information to the people of Grande Prairie about when they can expect shovels to be in the ground for a new hospital in Grande Prairie? When?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health will be visiting the city of Grande Prairie in 10 days or so. He'll be visiting with the community and with council and will share some information with them.

Dr. Swann: Well, another health concern for the people of Grande Prairie was the deplorable state of the Grande Prairie Care Centre, a long-term care centre urgently needing to be replaced or extensively renovated. Will the Premier commit to providing funding for long-term care needs in Grande Prairie?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that during the period of time of this inflation we did release about $10 million to the hospital to help support some changes in code requirements. As I said before, the minister will be in Grande Prairie in a number of days and will be able to sit down with the board, the chamber and discuss the situation.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Facilities Capital Plans

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in the ongoing health care saga the only thing that seems to have been accomplished in this last two years is confusion, frustration, and uncertainty. This is the product of failed centralization without a plan, no cost-benefit analysis, and no checks and balances in place. First to the Premier. I hope we'll get an answer today on this question. What is the explanation for conflicting messages coming from this government and from Alberta Health Services? Who is actually in charge, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are no conflicting messages. We are the only jurisdiction in Canada that has not only removed, paid off the accumulated deficit but has given Alberta Health Services increased funding for five years. That's the only plan of its kind in the whole country of Canada.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'll try to the minister of health, then, Mr. Speaker. Please clarify this: do you have the final decision on whether Calgary will or will not receive the much-needed new cancer centre? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated on several occasions in the House, a capital plan for $2.5 billion over the next three years will be available in a matter of days. I will be sitting down with the Minister of Infrastructure, with colleagues from Calgary and from elsewhere discussing that, and we will roll out the good news at that time.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, another question revolves around what criteria are used for determining the priority of capital health projects. Are these determined based on need or on political expediency?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's such an easy one to answer I thought I'd get up. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition had an opportunity to read the capital plan, the 20-year strategic capital plan, how priorities are set is listed in the whole plan, and that's not only for health facilities, schools but for roads and other infrastructure as well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Waterfowl Deaths in Oil Sands Tailings Pond

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that ducks died on tailings ponds controlled by Syncrude, but the Premier's policy of maintaining a wilful ignorance of the damage done to our international reputation is not helping. How can the Premier say that he's on top of this file when he hasn't even seen the photos that the rest of the world is looking at? This is the single biggest black mark on Alberta's oil sands industry ever. My question is to the Premier. What sort of a briefing has the Premier had? Don't ask, don't tell?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. Of course I saw the very same photos that everyone in this Assembly saw when the ducks first perished in the tailings pond. I saw, you know, volunteers trying to remove the oil with cotton swabs off the ducks' bills. However, that was when the incident originally took place. The reference here is to the pictures that are evidence in the trial that is before us. I was very frank to the reporter yesterday. I did not see those pictures at all prior to them being delivered to the court as evidence. This is a serious situation before the court. It's a very good act that we have. We've charged the company that's responsible for it, and let the court decide.

The Speaker: I'm not sure where this is leading, but if this matter is sub judice, I'm going to seek advice from the Minister of Justice. But I don't think so from the first question.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Premier. Mr. Premier, people see these images and ask: what is Alberta doing to stop this? What direct action is the Premier taking to give leadership on tailings ponds reclamation, on hard targets on emissions, on reducing the use of water, and all the other environmental issues that go along with this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have the strictest environmental laws in the nation, and that is why in this particular case under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the charges were laid to the company pursuant to that act.

With respect to the Fort McMurray area, Mr. Speaker, there is no area in Canada or perhaps even in North America that is as closely monitored on a 24-hour basis 365 days a year for air, water, and soil quality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the Premier again. Spin, spin, spin. Leadership is not about spin. It's not about rebranding. It's about actions taken to achieve a particular result. Is the Premier happy with the result so far? We have dozens of pages in international magazines talking about what a disgrace this is. Are you happy with it so far?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot that has been done in Fort McMurray and, in fact, right across Alberta with respect to the development of resources. There is a lot of attention paid, obviously, to this area because there is a fair amount of production of oil, and it has attracted a lot of attention. But, again, if you go back to third-party evaluation, 98 per cent of the time the air quality in Fort Saskatchewan and Fort McMurray, in those two areas, which have a large oil and gas and value-added presence, is better than or equal to any major Canadian city in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Oil Royalty Framework

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Wildrose Alliance caucus released our energy competitiveness strategy outlining what the government should do to assist our energy industry to recover from the devastating effects of this Premier's new royalty framework. In it we have noted that prior to the NRF coming into effect, the Premier and his cabinet were repeatedly warned by multiple caucus members, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, and dozens of industry stakeholders that this policy would devastate our economy, and indeed it did. To the Premier: why didn't he listen to the warnings of those who actually understood the energy industry far better than he did?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that we will have the most innovative and competitive economy in North America, and an opposition report does not change that. We are pursuing the competitiveness review on a number of levels: the oil and gas sector – very important – agriculture, forestry, tourism. I'd like to add small business to that and as well look at how we can attract more financial institutions to the province of Alberta.

Mr. Anderson: It was very competitive before this Premier got his hands on it. That's for sure.

By the fall of 2008 the economy was tanking. Prior to that, land sales for oil and gas exploration in Alberta had significantly decreased on fears that this Premier would actually implement the NRF while land sales in B.C. and Saskatchewan increased during that same period. He had so many warnings, hundreds of warnings from people who actually knew what they were talking about. To the Premier: what possible explanation does he have for barreling ahead with this destructive policy despite all competent advice to the contrary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we will have the most innovative and competitive economy in North America. We are working through the competitiveness review, and that's why we have a bill before this House, which I know will be passed and supported by all sides of the House as we proceed. We will then decide what factors to measure in terms of how we rate in competitiveness not only to other jurisdictions in Canada, North America, but indeed other places around the world.

Mr. Anderson: This study should have been done long before he tampered with our most important industry.

I have hundreds and hundreds of constituents who have suffered a great deal of hardship because of this Premier's poor decision on this issue. I would suggest that most of the members in this room could say the same. Mr. Premier, will you apologize to Albertans for the consequences your decisions have had?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, as oil prices fell drastically from about $147 a barrel down to $37 and gas was as low as $3, what we did was introduced some amendments to the royalty framework, and those amendments were embraced by the hon. member that has brought it up. I also would like to table an appropriate number of copies of a letter he wrote to the Airdrie City View that says that he is supporting the changes that we made in the royalty framework.

The Speaker: We'll do the tablings at the appropriate time.

New School Construction in Beaumont

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Beaumont is recognized as one of the 20 fastest growing communities in Canada.

With a population of approximately 12,000 people, 25 per cent are under the age of 14. [interjections]

The Speaker: Leduc-Beaumont-Devon has the floor.

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Speaker, the school-age population is exploding so much that one elementary school has a classroom across the road in the community hall. The separate and public boards have agreed to a joint K to 9 facility, but there is no school in the current three-year program. To the Minister of Education: how soon can my constituents see a school in Beaumont?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a major building program going on in this province with about $7 billion this year to capital, and that's very aggressive. There'll be 42 new schools being built. There are over 101 major projects going on. But I have to say that we still do not, within all of that, have enough to do all the projects that are needed. There is very definitely a need in Beaumont. We're working very hard. I've asked the school boards to work with me to come up with innovative ways to do it, and I'm prepared to take those innovative ways to Treasury Board and to cabinet to find new ways to get those schools built that we need to build. But I'd have to say that I cannot give the hon. member an assurance today as to a time frame.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. He mentions innovative ideas. The separate board has recently proposed a temporary lease space option. My question to the minister: is this a viable solution that you're willing to support?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if I may say, we had an interchange with the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere in the prior question, and I just can't resist the opportunity to point out that in his comments answering the budget, he suggested we stretch out our building program even further. Under his program with his wild and rosy colleagues they would have us even wait longer for a school in Beaumont. But in answer to the question, the proposal made by the school board is exactly what I've been asking for. Now, unfortunately, I don't have the money to finance it, so I have to find a way to do that.

Mr. Rogers: Well, Mr. Speaker, at least I'm pleased to hear that the minister is willing to look at the proposal. In light of that, then, Mr. Minister, I'm just wondering what the possibility is of a P3 solution. What signs of hope can we pass on to the students of Beaumont today?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I have to find and take forward is a way – and we're building a capital plan to do that – to take these priority projects forward within the context of a three-year capital plan that's already committed but where we're finding savings, as we've mentioned earlier in this House, because projects are coming in under budget, so we'll be able to profile those to take advantage of those savings. We may be able to cast it as a P3 project. We may be able to cast it in the innovative way in which the board has with respect to interim lease processes. But in order to give any assurances as to timing, I have to have the money, and right now I don't have the money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Sour Gas Well Blowout Insurance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A sour gas blowout near Hythe has been burning for almost two weeks now, and regulators are saying that it might take another two weeks to fully put it out. Now, while blowouts are rare, industry is required to take out insurance to protect themselves. Unfortunately, their insurance does nothing to cover the losses incurred by Albertans as owners of the resource. To the Minister of Energy. During a blowout there is an absolute open flow of gas which is much higher than normal production rates. How much gas is expected to have been released over the last two weeks?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Companies are not required to pay royalties on gas that is not produced, so the gas wasn't the only thing going up in smoke for the last couple of weeks. How much money in royalties is the province expecting to lose because of this blowout?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, if I don't have the answer to the first question, I don't have the answer to the second.

Mr. Taylor: Well, then, hopefully, Mr. Speaker, the minister will be able to provide written answers to those questions and perhaps this one as well, written or oral. Albertans are the owners of the resource, so why hasn't this government made it mandatory for blowout insurance to cover the loss in royalties?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that he should put those questions on the Order Paper, and I will respond accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Immigrant Investor Program

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our immigration system needs to attract the best and brightest people to Alberta, including investors and entrepreneurs. Many provinces already have an entrepreneur stream within their provincial nominee programs. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will Alberta open its doors and its immigration system to investors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All provinces have different needs, and in Alberta we want to make sure that Alberta's needs are met by our immigration program. For a while already Alberta has had a shortage of skilled and unskilled labour. That's what our ministry, this department, has been focusing on, attracting the appropriate workers to the province of Alberta.

Mr. Benito: My first supplemental to the same minister. Now is the time to build up our economy and prepare for when it picks up. Why hasn't this entrepreneur stream actually started yet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the economy has changed, the landscape has changed. We are looking into an entrepreneur stream of immigrants to come to our province. However, we're looking at experiences from other provinces. We know that some other provinces had certain issues with varieties of this program. We want to make sure that when or if we introduce such a program to Alberta, it is right for Alberta and it brings the value-added that we need in Alberta.

Mr. Benito: My final question is to the same minister. The federal government has an immigrant investor program. Why does Alberta not participate in that program?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the federal program is a program that Alberta has chosen not to participate in. It requires immigrants to invest $400,000 into the Canadian economy, giving Alberta really no control over what industries or what genres of industries those dollars would be invested in. We want to make sure that when immigrants come to this province, they give value-added to our industry, they help us diversify our economy, and they will benefit Alberta the way we want them to benefit Alberta. We want to have that final choice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last July an open letter to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit concerning the state of Alberta film and TV was signed by a wide cross-section of representatives. This was followed in December by a proposal from the Alberta film and television unions to combine streams 2 and 3, expand the number and description of key positions, implement regional bonuses, and re-establish a recoupable development fund. It is now too late to save a spring or summer shooting season, but with a quick response the minister could save the fall season. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: when can we expect a response from the minister to this proposal?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have the information with my officials, and they are working on some proposals for me. We have in our department over the last two years made a multitude of changes to the film development program with the idea of enhancing business in our province, making ourselves more attractive. Just last November we included $800,000 for money to promote Alberta stories, project and script development, export market development, training and mentoring along with increasing our cap from $1.5 million to $3 million to $5 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister. Well, currently we are not competitive. My question is: why is the minister creating a situation where Albertans trained in Alberta are forced to go to B.C., Quebec, or even New Mexico to work? To put it another way, why are we training talent and crew for our competitors?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're in disagreement. I believe we are competitive. People in British Columbia and Ontario say that we're competitive. Our labour rate as of last September was the most competitive in Canada. It's probably the third most competitive now. We're not in a race to the bottom. If you talk to the film producers, the people who actually put their money on the line, who actually are out there trying to bring business to our province, they're very enthusiastic about our prospects for the next six months. I'm not sure what the member opposite is listening to.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm looking at how many people are working in this province. That's what's important to me, Albertans working.

Given the Premier's focus on competitiveness and given that for every dollar spent toward production, the film and television industry generates $10.80 in Alberta, why can't the minister see the film and TV sector as easy pickings for the government's competitiveness checklist?

Mr. Blackett: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has her facts incorrect. The amount of return on investment is $6 for $1, not $10.80. We went through the minister of finance; we went through the department. We sat down with AMPA; we sat down with other industry representatives. We agreed on $6. If we're going to move forward collectively, let's at least work with the same information, and let's get the facts straight. Let's work together and make sure that we're competitive and attract business to our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Sport, Recreation, and Physical Activity Funding

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent media reports have focused on the province's attempts to reduce rising obesity trends, and many of my constituents are concerned about reports that funds to sport, recreation, and physical activity initiatives are being cut by nearly 40 per cent in the new provincial budget. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Can the minister explain these cuts at a time when a growing number of Albertans are overweight or obese because they're not active enough?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. We're concerned about the obesity levels, no question, as we see the trends that are emerging, but I think it's important to note that this government is investing $23 million in some 100 sports organizations. I think that the confusion has come in from last year's budget in areas of money that were flowing through. About $6.6 million was the Olympics, and $9 million was the final instalment for WinSport Canada, which was redeveloping the facilities at Canada Olympic Park. In fact, it's only about, you know, $1.8 million out of a $23 million budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Constituents are curious: what was the process that was used to determine which sport and recreation groups would be affected by these reductions in funding?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always difficult to make decisions when you have to meet budget targets, but we tried to look at this overarching. We looked at all the different sports organizations. We're just doing, basically, a reduction of a percentage of each organization so no organization feels the pain too hard. As well, we've avoided any organizations with persons with disability. We were able to protect their rent. Where they're housed, at Percy Page, they pay a dollar a year. We felt really good about that. We'll continue to work with these organizations.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I've had inquiries from a number of people with a number of organizations across the province, and they're very curious about the new provincial policy on sport. They've been waiting for it for some time, a little bit of time anyway, and they're wondering: what's the timeline for the new provincial policy on sport and recreation in the business plan of the minister for this current year?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working with the 10 other provincial ministries involved in developing this policy. It's still early days. We're just at the draft form. We need to go out and consult and get better information from our stakeholders, but we're hoping that we can finalize the policy sometime this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 the Endangered Species Conservation Committee recommended that the grizzly be listed as a threatened species. The government ignored this recommendation. Given that there are fewer than 700 grizzlies left in Alberta, my spider sense tells me that these experts will recommend this again on Friday at the minister's scheduled meeting. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that experts state that the grizzly bear is a threatened species, why won't this minister simply list it as such?

Mr. Knight: Well, that's an interesting observation that the member opposite has made. My recollection of what's going to happen here, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a committee that will meet on the 12th of March, and at that point a decision will be made. To my knowledge no decision has been made other than what some folks might have put in the papers or other places, that individuals read and then presume that something is going to happen. I will wait, appropriately, until the 12th of March, until our committee has made the determination and given me a report, and then we will respond.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I misheard the minister last night when I thought he said that he wasn't going to list the grizzly bear as an endangered species. I guess, then, my return question: if this committee, the Endangered Species Conservation Committee, again recommends to you that it should be listed as an endangered species, will you take their advice after their meeting on the 12th?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, it is not my position now nor will it be in the next few days to list any species in Alberta as endangered. We have a process. The gentleman is asking a question now relative to something that went on in estimates last night: a point blank question if I was going to say that bears are endangered in Alberta. I was not prepared last night to say that, and I'm not prepared this afternoon to say that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that estimates is where we have open and candid discussions with a minister. At least, I think that's the process. Last night, again taking the minister at his word, he said that he wasn't in a position to put a moratorium on harvesting bears. If the minister is not in a position to put a moratorium on hunting bears, then who is?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I guess I'm going to have to go through this again. We have a process in place. We have a grizzly bear recovery program in place, and I'm going to let that process work. Once we receive the information from the committee, we'll be in a better position to be able to determine what the status of this species is in the province of Alberta. At that point we will deal with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier showed startling ignorance when he claimed not to have seen the images of the ducks dying on Syncrude's tailings lake. These pictures show the world the consequences of this government's environmental negligence in the development of the oil sands. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why is your government ignoring this problem instead of implementing a firm deadline for oil sands companies to eliminate these tailings lakes altogether?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the preamble and the question, this government is hardly ignoring the issue. In fact, we have stated very publicly and very emphatically that it is our intention to eliminate the need for tailings ponds in oil sands production over a reasonable period of time, and that's probably seven to nine years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the government has no such plan.

The photographs and the videos of what happened at Syncrude's tailings lakes are an indictment of this government's failure to develop these oil sands in an environmentally responsible manner. Why does the government continue to ignore the problem instead of requiring oil sands companies to adopt alternative technologies like dry tailings, fluid extraction, or ozone treatment?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the government was ignoring the problem, we wouldn't be dealing with a court case where the photos that the member references were brought forward as evidence. That's hardly ignoring the situation. We are and will continue to be committed to improving the technology that's employed. There are very, very promising technologies. In fact, when I toured the University of Calgary just three weeks ago, the new faculty that has just opened there has got all kinds of very, very promising work under way that will significantly reduce the amount of environmental impact on resource development.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government was forced into that prosecution by private prosecutions that were brought by environmental groups.

Albertans can ill afford a government that turns a blind eye to the biggest environmental embarrassment our province has ever witnessed. These images and videos expose this government's inability to balance oil sands development with environmental stewardship. Why won't this minister demonstrate to the world that his government is committed to solving this problem by implementing concrete deadlines to clean up tailings lakes and mandating the use of technology that would make them entirely obsolete?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would advise this member that he should stay tuned. He should watch the progress as we make it, and he may just find that what he requests may in fact become a reality.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

New School Construction in St. Albert

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The St. Albert Protestant school board has been working with a private developer to provide a new school in Erin Ridge North, a new subdivision in St. Albert, for three years now. The developer is proposing a P3 where there would be no government capital required and would follow the standard 30-year payback. My question to the Minister of Education is: what seems to be the delay in getting the proposal approved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't discuss the specifics of a particular proposal by a developer, but I would say this: there's always money involved, and I don't have any.

The longer answer, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in the House, is that we have to develop alternative ways of developing capital. This is a very good proposal. I've encouraged the developer and the school board to work on the proposal, and I will be working with Treasury Board to get permission to do alternative capital programs as and when they make sense and as and when we can put them into our capital plan.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The private P3 concept seems to be a win-win situation for everyone involved. The school gets a new facility, the first one in 20 years, the developer has a school in this new subdivision, and the government has no up-front capital costs. What is the downside to this proposal?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's a good proposal. In fact, it's an excellent proposal. We need to do some work on sharpening the pencils and getting the numbers into the area where we could go out to the public and say that this has the best value we could possibly get because there's no other way to do a one-off project. It's either an RFP, where everybody gets to bid, or we can clearly demonstrate the value of the project. We can work on that, but there's no point in getting to that stage until I can work with Treasury Board and with government on our capital policy process because at the end of the day it has to fit into the long-term capital plan. It has to be funded.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister. The government of Alberta has adopted P3s for massive schools in Edmonton and Calgary. Is the government not prepared to consider a single, individual, private P3 proposal?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would hope very much that we would be able to consider those. I just have to find the right process and the right way to fit it into our capital plan so that a project which is a very valuable project, which could be done at considerable savings to government and the school board, which can serve that community very well, can also fit into our capital planning process because at the end of the day, whether it's spending this year or next year or three years out or five years out, it is spending, it is investment, and it needs to be accounted for. We need to align those processes. We haven't quite got it to the stage where we can align those processes, but I'm working on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April 2008 a foster care review report was released. In November 2009 a kinship review report was released. Their recommendations have been widely ignored. A review of the child intervention system was initiated last summer. We're still waiting for the report, but funding to intervention services was just cut by $27 million. This government initiates review after review of broken systems but then undermines its findings. To the minister: how many foster and kinship homes in this province have more than their approved number of children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not able to give you an exact number at this time. I can get that number and give it to the member. I can tell you this. The foster care review report, the eight recommendations that were put in place – it's very clear about the screening process, about the home orientation, about the training for foster parents. I can tell you as well that there are provisions there for level 1 or level 2 support workers to have more children in their home when it's been identified to be reasonable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll look forward to the follow-up information.

Right now it's a first-bed, first-served circumstance for foster children as opposed to placing them carefully. When will this haphazard approach to placing children in foster and kinship homes based solely on beds available end?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, I think that you should apologize for that preamble, for what you're saying about the way that children are placed in this province. I can tell you that the foster care system works very, very well with the people in the field and that they take their responsibilities very seriously. That foster care review report with those eight recommendations: you should read that, hon. member, and you would know the strong screening process that's in place for our foster parents. You'd also know about the good work that's being done in the field by our foster care workers.

Mr. Chase: There is no doubt that there are wonderful foster care parents out there. Unfortunately, not enough.

Was the decision to cut $27 million from children intervention services made based on preliminary findings of the children's intervention system review? What's the justification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated to you before, it's a $1.1 billion budget in this ministry. There is a 3 per cent reduction. Yes, there has been a reduction in the child intervention area of the budget. I will be monitoring that very closely. That reduction was made based on what the staff indicated, that the systems that have been put in place that have changed the way the service delivery is occurring for more placements of children actually create efficiencies. As I said, I will monitor that very closely. I'll ensure that the supports and resources are available, and if they aren't, I'll take the appropriate measures to seek more funding if needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Winagami Lake Fish Management

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every now and then the lakes in my constituency experience a fish kill due to the lack of oxygen in the lakes. This is devastating for all stakeholders relying on this precious economic resource. I am now told that a fish kill is possible in Winagami Lake. This is no way to manage a lake that many people expect some economic benefit out of. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What management plans do we have for Winagami Lake, and who is involved in determining those management plans?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the situation at Winagami Lake, of course, doesn't happen often. The lake is very shallow, about four metres deep at its deepest point, and it's very productive, in fact. Winter ice cover, of course, creates a situation where there's little chance of reoxygenation in the lake, and in the spring, mostly in March, the oxygen levels tend to be low. We continue to work with that. We monitor the lake twice a week. There are a number of fisheries that are sustained there, First Nations fisheries as well as a sports fishery and commercial fishing. We continue to work with those groups to monitor the lake.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really good that we're starting to include all the people that should be determining what happens in that kind of a management plan.

My second question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development as well. What is the allowable, acceptable level of oxygen for Winagami Lake at this time of year?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're monitoring the lake. Currently the levels of oxygen are at acceptable levels for fish to survive. The minimum amount of oxygen that you would expect to have in a lake like that and not have fish mortality is about one and a half milligrams per litre. I believe that's the right number.

Ms Calahasen: If the oxygen level is at one and a half and certain areas in Winagami Lake are at 1.3, why is it that we would not do everything we can to attempt to save a resource that's so crucial to many people in my constituency? Would you continue to ensure that the fishermen can continue to extract the resource so that we can save as many fish as we can?

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we've already actually done that. What we did was instituted a fishery about four or five days early this year, on the 26th of February in fact, and allowed about a hundred thousand tonnes of whitefish, and the margins of other sports fish were caught at that particular point in time. Since that time the oxygen levels have returned and maintained themselves at around two milligrams a litre. We're watching that, and we will institute a salvage fishery if, in fact, it appears that the fish become in jeopardy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

2:30 Online Government Services

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the provincial budget Service Alberta will have 410 full-time employees cut from its staff, most of them in information technology support roles. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. How can the minister plan to offer more services to Albertans online and cut the IT people needed to manage those services at the same time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated before, part of Service Alberta's budget, which I defended in my estimates, is about transforming the way that we do government. That's what Service Alberta is leading. If you look at the areas of technology and the areas of efficiencies we found, yes, there will be some reducing of employees there; there's no question. But when we can find duplication and have efficiencies in government, that's a good thing for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What assurances can the minister provide that cuts made to IT support staff won't impair Alberta's SuperNet access, that many rural and remote communities depend on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the whole SuperNet and rural connectivity that is something that I've been working very hard on. The ongoing team within Service Alberta is working hard, working with all the ministries that are involved with the SuperNet and making sure that Albertans have access to SuperNet, whether it's through their ISP providers or whether it's through the other services that are available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again. Last July the health records of 11,000 Albertans were at risk of capture by a computer hacker. How can Albertans be sure that these massive departmental layoffs won't leave the information that they provide to the government less secure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the security of Albertans' information that is something that we work on very hard, and the Auditor General brought that to this department's attention a couple of years ago. These last two years we've worked very hard in that area to ensure that the information is protected. That's access to information and as well all the good work that the registry agents do when they are working and having access to the information. It's that partnership that we work very hard on as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Foreign-trained Physicians

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent statistics list Calgary's population at over 1 million people. Twenty-five per cent of Calgarians, or more than 250,000 people, don't have access to a family doctor. Many of these people are seniors, children, and new Canadians. To the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness: what action is the minister undertaking to ensure that Calgarians and all Albertans, for that matter, can access a family doctor when they need one?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that if those individuals don't have a family doctor, they are at least accessing doctors in many of the medical walk-in clinics that exist. But I should say, too, Mr. Speaker, that our physician per population ratio of 201 to a population of 100,000 is the highest average in and amongst all Canadian provinces. It's the highest national average, which is at, I think, 195. I would also say that our physician supply is growing faster and is the youngest physician supply in the country and the best paid as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians say that the best place to get sick is either in a taxicab or in a hotel, where either the driver or the cleaner is likely to be a medical doctor who may have tried for years to obtain residency. Mr. Speaker, what is the minister doing to get more of these highly trained foreign doctors, who have met all the requirements, into the medical system so Albertans do not have to utilize emergency rooms for routine health issues?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that between 2004 and 2008 the number of internationally trained physicians increased by about 36.1 per cent. That's an increase of about 575 physicians, which is outstanding. Alberta's medical residency programs also increased in size virtually every year since 2004. In fact, this year we're providing about $25 million to support the integration of international medical graduates into our provincial health system. Also very good news.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite a doctor shortage in the province and despite the $1.5 billion increase in the Health and Wellness budget the government slashed the number of residency spots available to foreign-trained doctors from 70 to 40 for this year. What is the rationale for this decrease?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we actually have up to 50 residency positions for which these internationally trained medical folks are able to apply. I can assure the hon. member that since 2001 Alberta Health and Wellness has done its best to provide the adequate funding to accommodate as many of those residency spots as possible. There are complexities such as accreditation and licensing and other equivalency factors that have to be taken into account. Nonetheless, we are making good progress, and we're also providing funding to international agencies to help out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June 2009 the Premier promised Albertans that their competitiveness review would be completed by the fall of 2009. Since then industry has gone through another winter drilling season with more uncertainty because this government can't get it done. We are now seeing an increase in speculation related to the acquisition and drilling rights on acreages. Clearly, this government's royalty robbery has cost Albertans billions. They continue to cost us millions. To the Minister of Energy: when will your competitiveness review be published so that industry can possibly move forward with more certainty?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it will be published the day we decide to release it, and that will be shortly.

Mr. Hinman: That's why the industry and investors are so excited about Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have long memories, and people who were here understand the devastation of the national energy program. Albertans will not forget that it was this PC government that yanked the rug out from underneath the oil and gas workers and industry here in Alberta. After the great royalty robbery this minister told the oil and gas industry to suck it up. Is he still telling industry to suck it up as the industry continues to lay off people and cut spending?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure who he's referring to that made those comments because that was not me.

As I said earlier, we will be imminently releasing the competitiveness review, not only releasing the competitiveness review but government's response and actions to it, and I believe it'll be very well received by industry.

Mr. Hinman: Well, they believed they were going to get something last fall, so we'll see.

The minister has a real attitude problem, and everybody in Alberta knows it. He bullied the teachers, and it cost the taxpayers billions of dollars. He bullied the medical profession, and it cost the taxpayers billions of dollars. The government bullied the energy industry, and it cost the taxpayers billions of dollars. Does this minister know how many billions of dollars have been invested outside of Alberta because of this government's royalty robbery?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the absurdity of that question says a lot about the person who's asking it. How could anyone stand here and estimate how much investment has taken place outside of Alberta in the entire world? It tells a lot about this particular member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Syphilis Prevention and Control

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's rate of syphilis infection is double the national average, and the problem is only getting worse with the infection rate continuing to increase last year. To the minister of health: will he now admit that this crisis is the direct result of his government's decision to reject advice from public health doctors given back in 2007?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a very serious issue. I indicated yesterday that we are very serious about eliminating syphilis in this province within the five-year window, which is a very commendable and reachable goal. It's all about accessing the treatment that's required right now. It's all about focusing on prevention and generating more awareness to stop the flow.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the five-year window had opened three years ago, we'd be almost there.

Last year six babies were born with syphilis, and three died. The only other jurisdictions where you see numbers like this are developing countries that struggle with provision of basic food and shelter. Will the minister commit today to implementing an antisiphilis campaign for the general population as recommended by his staff three years ago?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I will have the report from Alberta's chief medical officer very, very soon. In the meantime, I would like Albertans to know and I'd like this hon. member to know that we are increasing prenatal screening to help prevent the kind of circumstances that she has just alluded to. We have a larger goal in mind as well, and that's to eliminate syphilis entirely. We'll be looking at other issues such as gonorrhea and chlamydia and so on at the same time.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, last week the minister's head of public health said that provincial efforts to stop syphilis were delayed by H1N1, yet this Legislature just approved extra dollars for the H1N1 campaign, so that shouldn't have had any impact at all. Your government has known about the epidemic for years, and you've had recommendations since 2007. Why are Albertans still waiting for action?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we got hit by a pandemic which had to be dealt with and had to be dealt with immediately to help protect over 3 million Albertans. I think the group that did that did a very commendable job.

With respect to the syphilis issue, I've already indicated that we have a 14-person team that's addressing this immediately. There will be a further report on it very shortly, and we will stay focused on our goal to eliminate it within five years.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period. Eighteen members, 12 in opposition to the government, were recognized today for 108 questions and answers.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine, and I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill in about 15 seconds from now.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie 2010

Dr. Brown: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui je me lève à l'Assemblée pour souligner le début des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration nationale de la culture, de la langue, et du patrimoine français qui se déroulera du 5 au 21 mars. Ici en Alberta les communautés francophones ont lancé les festivités le 5 mars avec des levers de drapeaux partout à travers la province, et les festivités se poursuivront pendant les deux prochaines semaines pour les Albertains de tous les âges et d'origines diverses. Voilà une excellente occasion pour nous tous de se rassembler et de célébrer notre histoire et nos merveilleuses traditions.

La francophonie albertaine est vibrante et diverse. Alors que l'on célèbre notre riche patrimoine, nous tournons également les yeux vers l'avenir en accueillant en Alberta des nouvelles personnes, traditions, et cultures. Au cours de la dernière année la communauté francophone s'est agrandie, et les centres d'établissements francophones continuent d'accueillir et de fournir des services bien importants aux nouveaux arrivants. L'apprentissage demeure une priorité clé pour le gouvernement, et ainsi l'éducation de langue française dans notre province continue de prendre de l'ampleur et s'accroît.

M. le Président, je tiens à remercier les membres de cette Chambre pour leur appui continu, et je vous invite tous à participer à ces célébrations afin de souligner les contributions des francophones au riche patrimoine albertain.

[Translation] I rise in the Assembly today to announce the start of Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture, language, and history that runs from March 5 to March 21. Here in Alberta francophone communities started celebrations on March 5 with flag-raising ceremonies across the province, followed by two weeks of celebrations for Albertans of all ages and all backgrounds. This is a great opportunity for all of us to come together and celebrate our beautiful traditions and history.

Alberta's Francophonie is vibrant and diverse. As we celebrate our rich past, we also look to the future by welcoming new people, traditions, and cultures to Alberta. In the last year the francophone community has seen growth as francophone settlement centres continue to welcome and provide much-needed services to newcomers. French-language education in our province continues to expand and grow as learning remains a key priority for this government.

Mr. Speaker, I thank members of this House for their continued support, and I invite you all to take in these and other celebrations to mark the contributions of francophones to Alberta's rich heritage. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Merci, M. le Député.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Jennie Flett

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week Fort Chipewyan, the oldest settlement in our province and certainly part of my constituency, mourned the loss of elder Jennie Flett. She was 101 years old, often referred to as Mum. She was born in 1908. When her mother died, Jennie took on the daunting responsibility of raising her 10 siblings. She married her husband, Ed, in June 1927, and they had a very large family of their own.

Jennie followed in her mother's footsteps, and at the age of 18 she became a midwife. She taught herself midwifery, gaining her knowledge from her mother. She delivered – and I say this slowly – 450 babies for the province of Alberta. The incredible journey that she had was actually featured on CBC television when she celebrated her hundredth birthday. She never lost a baby or a mother, an incredible feat in today's medical terms considering the conditions she worked in. There was no electricity. There were no vehicles in those days. She travelled from trappers' cabins to wigwams via dog teams in every imaginable weather condition. Husbands came to her in blizzards in the middle of the night on snowshoes. She definitely was the stuff legends are made of.

Jennie, as I mentioned, was often referred to as Mum. She retired from delivering babies at the ripe age of 75. She received a lifetime achievement award from RARA, and on her 100th birthday she was awarded an honorary nursing diploma from Keyano College. She was the oldest Métis women in Wood Buffalo. She dedicated her life to her community and to helping others in northern Alberta.

Our province is a better place because of Jennie Flett. She died on the fourth floor of our hospital, where she had spent quite some time. Our prayers and thoughts are with her family and all those she has helped over her past 101 years.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Bill Pr. 1

Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act. I've signed it and dated it.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill Pr. 2

Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Bill Pr. 3

Lamont Health Care Centre Act

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill Pr. 3, the Lamont Health Care Centre Act.

The Lamont health care centre is a combined acute-care and auxiliary hospital and nursing home facility located in Lamont, Alberta. It is operated by a board of management established as a corporate entity by ministerial order under sections 4 and 5 of the Hospitals Act. The purpose of the Lamont Health Care Centre Act is to allow for continued and uninterrupted operation of the facilities subsequent to amendments under the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, which will remove the opportunity for the board to continue after that bill is proclaimed in force.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, did you have a tabling? The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the article in the Airdrie City View by the MLA of December 19, 2008, where the member highlights that the new royalty regime has some positive elements to it, that there was a global economic slowdown, plummeting oil and gas prices, and competitive royalty regimes in Saskatchewan and B.C.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table an appropriate number of copies of a memorandum that I have sent to the chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy. This memo is indicating that pursuant to Standing Order 52.07 I am requesting that this particular standing committee inquire into and report on the issue of minimum wage in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 20 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which has gathered signed postcards from approximately 2,500 Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of photographs of dead and dying ducks from the oil sands. These include some of the pictures that the Premier has claimed not to have seen, so I'm tabling them today for him and other members of the Assembly. These photographs relate to my questions earlier today.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you mentioned in your first statement that you had 2,500, so I take it you're going to table all 2,500 at one time, or are you going to do, like, 20 a day for the next hundred days?

Mr. Mason: I think we'll do 20 a day for as long as we can.

The Speaker: So we're going to need a minute a day or a minute and a half a day for the next hundred days.

Mr. Mason: Well, I won't read them individually, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh, thank you.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we begin, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

Ms DeLong: Well, I'm afraid that we've missed our opportunity to introduce Marg Mrazek, the past president of the PC Party. She was here, and unfortunately we've just missed her, so we'll have to do it another time.

Main Estimates 2010-11

Executive Council

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. We have for consideration Executive Council main estimates.

The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you. Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2010-2011 Executive Council budget estimates and the 2010-2013 business plan. I'd like to begin by introducing the staff that are with me today. We have up in the gallery Elan MacDonald, who is the deputy chief of staff for policy and strategy; George Samoil, up there waving, chief of staff for operations and legislative affairs; Jason Ennis, my executive assistant; Bob Fessenden, who will be here shortly, deputy minister of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy; Anita Lunden, representing the Agency Governance Secretariat; Cam Hantiuk, director of communications; Jerry Bellikka, director of media relations; and Lee Funke, the new managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau. They're with us.

On the floor would be my chief of staff, Ron Glen; Brian Manning, who is the Deputy Minister of Executive Council; Dwight Dibben, deputy secretary to cabinet; Roxanna Benoit, deputy chief of policy co-ordination; and Elaine Dougan, who is the executive director of corporate services.

I'll begin with the fiscal overview for 2010-11. Executive Council is one of the 13 departments whose budgets were cut this year to enable government to increase its support of key program areas such as health care during a time of fiscal restraint. The budget for Executive Council is $31.7 million this year. It's down $3.7 million from last year. This reduction will mainly be achieved by reducing spending in the final year of the brand initiative by $3 million. We will also do this by focusing on supporting our brand ambassadors in developing products they can use to help carry Alberta's message to the world. We're also reducing funding for the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, which is delaying recruitment to vacant positions and reducing discretionary spending on things like staff training, travel, hosting, and supplies.

I'd like to now turn to a review of the Executive Council's program areas and priorities as outlined in the business plan. The Executive Council includes my offices in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary, the deputy minister's office, the cabinet co-ordination office, the policy co-ordination office, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, the Agency Governance Secretariat, the protocol office, the administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor, the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Our 2010-13 business plan lays out the following strategic priorities for Executive Council: strengthening agency governance, enhancing policy capacity, continuing the work of the Council for Economic Strategy, implementing the branding initiative, continuing to implement the strategic communications plan across government, and using new social media and technology to enhance communications.

Mr. Chairman, let me put those activities in some context. Alberta is facing industrial and urban development on a scale never seen before. As a government we've had to raise the bar and develop policies to accommodate this development such as the strategic capital plan, the municipal sustainability initiative, and the competitiveness review. We did this because Albertans want economic growth and all the opportunities it brings but not at a cost to the environment or our quality of life.

Our government has worked hard to put this policy framework in place to achieve Albertans' goals. This work could have easily gone out the window with the recession, with short-term economic and budget pressures trumping long-term planning. But leadership isn't about changing directions whenever the wind does. Our plan positions the province to be ready when growth returns. It recognizes the need for Alberta businesses to be globally competitive to attract investment needed to further develop Alberta's resources and does not rely on tax increases. In fact, there will be no tax increases. It gets us back in the black in three years and continues to save for the future.

A couple of comments with respect to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. I established the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy to provide advice on how we can ensure that Alberta continues to be an innovative and prosperous province where Albertans enjoy a high quality of life built on vibrant communities and a healthy environment. We can't predict what the world will be like in the future, but we can look carefully at the challenges and opportunities that lay ahead in the next few decades.

The council is a group of globally recognized experts that will provide an external, big-picture perspective on our economic future. Through meetings, individual interviews, and consultation with experts in communities of interest it is now developing an understanding of the opportunities and challenges facing our province in a constantly changing global environment and how they will affect our economy, environment, society, and government. Then it will turn its attention to possible opportunities and responses and start figuring out what conditions government should put in place to ensure that Alberta stays focused on her vision of an innovative and prosperous province for this generation and generations to come.

One of the things we know will be important is continuing to promote our province and manage our reputation globally as we recently did at the Olympic Winter Games. You know, we've been criticized for spending money on this, but you can't reach a worldwide audience without spending money. It'll never be cheaper than when the whole world is already next door.

While the naysayers in Alberta were moaning and groaning, let me tell you what others were saying about Alberta's presence at the Olympics. People were calling the Alberta train, and I quote, the best idea Vancouver never had. The Vancouver Sun said that with the train the wily Albertans attracted all kinds of media coverage. In fact, we attracted about $70 million worth of media exposure. Another article, in the Vancouver Province, had this to say: "You have to hand it to the Albertans. First, they stole our Olympic train . . . Then they pinched the premier location for their Olympic pavilion. Alberta's Olympic vision . . . is as clear as it is down-to-earth. It's to drum up business for Alberta." A story in the National Post said that when they asked a Swedish man what he knew about Alberta, he replied: spirit to achieve, freedom to create.

Yes, we could have saved some money by not being there, but we would have been missing a huge opportunity to promote our province. We as Albertans will never sit on the sidelines when we could be promoting our province and helping to realize its full potential.

I'll stop there, Mr. Chairman, and I'll prepare to take questions from committee members.

The Deputy Chair: The first speaker is the Leader of the Official Opposition. You have 10 minutes, and the Premier has 10 minutes to respond. Do you wish to combine that time for 20 to go back and forth or keep it separate?

Dr. Swann: With the Premier's permission I'd like to have an interactive discussion, a few questions, some brief answers, and back and forth if that's acceptable to him, and written responses if it's too short to deal with a question.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Premier, and welcome to the staff. I'd like to introduce my staffperson also, Ryan Gordey, who is our research officer in the Alberta Liberal caucus on health care and several other ministries, including Executive Council.

Executive Council is a very important ministry in any government, and it's essential to provide leadership to the rest of government and to show the way in terms of both leadership and policy and in management and appropriations for the public interest. This ministry is essentially the Premier's office with the addition of the Public Affairs Bureau and in these past couple of years the branding initiative, policy development initiatives, and the new economic advisory committee.

The overriding question for all government spending is value for money, clear goals, monitoring of results, and evaluation of how we can spend better in the long-term public interest. Albertans continue to have concerns about how this government is managing its budget, how it's setting goals, monitoring the implementation of strategies to achieve those goals, and holding itself accountable, providing evidence of value for money, whether it's in health care, education, infrastructure, or any particular role that government has in caring for people and the infrastructure and the services that care for all of us.

The Premier's office clearly, then, sets the tone and the standard for the rest of government, and how responsibly it's managed is a weather vane for the rest of government. Given that half the budget in the Executive Council is related to public communication, it begs important questions about the goals, strategies, and accountability of spending in our communications budget both within Executive Council and how that relates to the rest of communications and public relations in the other ministries.

One of the fundamental questions that the opposition has continued to raise over the years is the extent to which the Public Affairs Bureau, answering to the Premier, is really an important tool of the public and answerable to the public, that messages are indeed conveyed in the public interest to advise and inform and educate and improve the lives of Albertans. Like the questions around the member benefits discussion and our Motion 501, that called for independence of those kinds of decisions that members benefit from and the question of a conflict of interest, the question around the Public Affairs Bureau and the Executive Council has to be: is there a conflict of interest when the major portion of the budget in Executive Council, that related to communications of government services and plans and policies, is directly answerable to the Premier as opposed to the Legislature?

That's a preamble, Mr. Chairman, to address a very ongoing, persistent question that I think Albertans continue to ask us and ask us to represent to this government. I think perhaps I'll ask the Premier to respond to that specifically since it's a fairly overriding and general question. I'd like to hear how, if anything, he would like to reassure Albertans and all representatives that this Public Affairs Bureau is paid out of the public purse and responds to the public interest as opposed to the Premier and the government's interests.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, the Public Affairs Bureau is nonpartisan. It has the responsibility of ensuring that all Albertans are informed on what policies and laws are agreed to by this Assembly and by government. Albertans deserve very clear, strong information with respect to what government has done in this Legislature and what policies and regulations are implemented. So I think that there is no conflict of interest in terms of the Public Affairs Bureau giving that information out to the public. It's also a function of the executive branch of government, which is not a branch of the Legislative Assembly.

The one thing that I want to say is that you find as you travel through Alberta, that whether it's in advertising in papers in terms of policy direction or new policy or new laws that are implemented, there are always those that either miss the information or have to rely on phoning government for additional information, and these are some of the responsibilities of the Public Affairs Bureau.

Just for additional information, there are 118 FTEs in the branch. Seventy-two are professional communications staff, and these are people that are assigned to communication branches in the departments. On any given day, as you know, there are news releases to co-ordinate, plan announcements, provide communications advice to department officials, and respond to media calls sometimes totalling in the hundreds in one department, depending on the issue. So they do serve a very, very valuable responsibility in government.

Many departments chose to augment their communications branches by adding staff to meet particular needs such as their internal communications. It is entirely up to each department to make that choice and to resource these positions.

Now, in response further, there are 46 FTEs in the Public Affairs Bureau who fill a number of roles, including co-ordinating government communications to and from Albertans for major government initiatives and during public emergencies; planning, co-ordinating government-wide internal communications to employees; managing the government of Alberta website; co-ordinating cross-government standards for all ministry websites; providing advertising consultation and support to ministries and co-ordinating corporate advertising; distributing government news releases and providing media monitoring service to the ministries; and providing technical support for major government news conferences and announcements.

I think, to be very clear, that there is no connection between the bureau and party politics. Partisan political matters are, of course, those that are the domain of the party and its members and not government employees. Like all members of the public service, our bureau employees are guided by a code of conduct and an oath of office.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a bit hard for us to swallow that this kind of budget, this kind of staff, 180 full-time equivalents ultimately reporting directly to the Premier, has no political affiliation or no political agenda. I guess I would ask the Premier again whether he sees any loss of confidence from a public that sees this kind of spending on communications and, instead of having any kind of an independent committee or any kind of a balanced committee overlooking our communications agenda, whether he would not see any merit in changing the perception that this is a vast resource that very much appears to be, even if not true, at the whim and the will of one man who represents one particular party?

For many in this province there's a real disconnect. When he talks about transparency and accountability and open, honest communication, there's a real disconnect with this kind of money, half of his budget, going to the Public Affairs Bureau without any sense of balance in how that communication is being vetted, apart from his own.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member mentioned 180 FTEs. There aren't 180. There are 118 FTEs in the department.

As I said before, this is nonpartisan. This is communicating the policies of the government. It's not party politics. Various parties, no matter what their political stripe, have their own infrastructure to get their message out. These are policies that are passed by the government. Many are debated here in the Legislature, whether it be information with respect to the budget, information to change in policies in health, transportation, any department. So I don't see where there is a conflict of interest.

Dr. Swann: In connection with numbers, then, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Premier, including Public Affairs Bureau staff and other communications staff with the rest of government: what is the sum total of communications people in this government? I have a directory here that lists all the ministries, and it suggests to me that it's close to actually 220 people in this government that are charged with communicating this government's purposes and services.

Will the Premier also explain how the reporting lines are between communications staff and the Public Affairs Bureau staff? Do the staff report to their respective ministries or deputy ministers, or does the Public Affairs Bureau staff only report directly to Executive Council?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the Public Affairs Bureau, like I said before, 118 FTEs. There are additional communications people in departments. These are people that may not all necessarily be right here in the city of Edmonton but may be working for various departments in locations throughout Alberta. As you know, the province is big, and it's necessary to get the information out to individuals living in different parts of the province. I know that within the regional offices Transportation will have some communications people, especially if, you know, there are some road bans going in or changes, perhaps, to a construction schedule, where some roads may be temporarily closed. Those are all part of departmental communications.

I believe I gave a total listing person by person not that long ago through a question, and we'll do the same thing. We'll just itemize all the people, where they work, and we'll get that to the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Throughout the 2010-11 government estimates – excluding Housing and Urban Affairs, Municipal Affairs, Service Alberta – each ministry has a line item that shows their communications budget. The total for all ministries, including Executive Council and the branding initiative, is $34.9 million. This is an improvement because it seems the Premier has taken some advice from many of us to reduce government spending on spin. How did the Premier find these efficiencies from the total amount of government spending on communications, and why now? I mean, communications last year went up $6 million.

Mr. Stelmach: The $14.3 million budgeted for Public Affairs Bureau represents less than .04 per cent of the 2010-11 spending estimate for the government. If we include the roughly $15 million that departments have allocated to their communications budgets, that figure is still less than .08 per cent of total spending. If it's less than 1 per cent of total government spending for communications, I think that is pretty efficient given that, you know, every department has so much to communicate over the course of a year. So I think that has been quite prudent.

Dr. Swann: On page 124 of the Executive Council 2010 business plan under Significant Opportunities and Challenges it states: "Executive Council will enhance policy capacity and cross-ministry collaborations and ensure consistency with overall government strategic direction by facilitating collaboration in strategic planning and policy development." Let me ask the following question, then, using as an example our health care system. Mr. Premier, is there a plan for public health that the public, professionals, and representatives of the public could contribute to, and if so, when can we see an overarching plan for health?

My second question would have to do with the way that health policy has been developed in the last couple of years. There continue to be questions raised about who is developing our health policy. Is it Alberta Health and Wellness? Is it Alberta Health Services? There's more and more confusion around leadership on health and whether we can get access to a plan so that Albertans and professionals can contribute to that plan. In light of the decision not to redevelop Alberta Hospital Edmonton, it seems that this policy decision was made by Alberta Health Services, and the news release that accompanied the decision was released by Alberta Health Services, yet the minister seems to have made a different decision. Which organization is actually responsible?

Again related to health, what measures . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we are with the estimates for Executive Council, not with health.

Dr. Swann: Yeah. I'm referring here to the policy role of Executive Council. How is the policy role in this Executive Council relating to the delivery of a major part of our budget, health care?

The Deputy Chair: As long as it applies to the estimates.

Dr. Swann: Oh, yeah. Very much so.

What measures have been taken through Executive Council to improve and increase policy development capacity with Alberta Health and Wellness? What influence does Executive Council have with health policy decisions? Is the Executive Council briefed on policy decisions before they're made or announced or implemented? How does that work between Executive Council and Alberta health?

Last year in the budget debates for Executive Council the Premier stated: "I'm proud to say that we have the most participation in policy development from our caucus. We have various policy committees. All ministerial recommendations come forward for thorough discussion." Two questions related to that, Mr. Premier: what input did cabinet policy committees have into the decision not to redevelop Alberta Hospital Edmonton, the decision to cut 290 acute-care beds from Edmonton and Calgary, the decision in 2009 to reduce the number of elective surgeries performed in our public hospitals?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you're going to have to direct this to the estimates.

Dr. Swann: Go ahead, Mr. Premier, if you'd like to respond to those.

Mr. Stelmach: In response to the hon. member the ministry sets overall policy. Let's say the policy that health care in this province remains publicly funded. That is a policy. That it's publicly administered. That is a policy. But in terms of the overall responsibility for operational decisions, that is up to the Alberta Health Services Board. The board has a budget that's been allocated to them, and they have to live within that budget and all of the responsibilities that are assigned to the board within the operational side. But the general policy, again I repeat – publicly funded, publicly administered – is the responsibility of the ministry and of government.

Dr. Swann: Just a supplementary, Mr. Premier: were all the above-mentioned health decisions that I mentioned presented to the government caucus as a whole for their debate?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, they're operational issues. The Alberta Health Services Board is assigned a budget, and they make decisions based on recommendations that come forward to the board by their staff. The board then looks at the recommendations made by staff, and they make the final decisions, and they implement those decisions.

Dr. Swann: Well, I hate to belabour this, but just one further question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you're going to have to tie this directly to the estimates and not to the policy of the rest of the government.

Dr. Swann: This is Executive Council's role, with all respect.

The Deputy Chair: And their estimates.

Dr. Swann: I'm asking for clarification about the role of Executive Council with respect to the major budget item in this government. Do you, Mr. Premier, know what the plan is for health care? Did you, for example, make the decision to centralize health through one board and eliminate regional delivery systems?

Mr. Stelmach: Those decisions were made back in the '90s in terms of reducing the number of local hospital boards, health unit boards, et cetera. I think there were about 200 and some-odd individual boards across the province. They were collapsed into a number of regional health authorities. We made the decision to collapse the health authorities plus the other boards – Cancer Board, AADAC; I'm missing one – into one Alberta Health Services Board. That recommendation was brought forward by the minister. It was a policy decision simply to save the overall taxpayer millions of dollars, roughly $600 million, in costs to the overall government, which streamlined process, removed the need for individual accounting and human relations departments throughout the government.

The Deputy Chair: The time has elapsed for this round of speaking. The 20 minutes have elapsed. Now I'll call the next speaker, please.

Dr. Swann: Is it not true that I have the first hour?

The Deputy Chair: No, you do not. This is estimates. This is not policy field committee. You have the first hour in policy field committee. This is Committee of Supply. You have 10 minutes each, and you can combine the two for 20.

I'll call the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you going to combine your questions and answers for the two 10s if that's all right with the Premier?

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I will confine this completely to the estimates. I want to talk specifically about some of the specific salaries and specific roles in this specific Executive Council budget, okay? I'm not going to go off somewhere else. I just want to make that clear up front. I need to understand the role of the chief of staff, and I need to better understand the role of the deputy chief of staff, so that means asking some very specific questions.

First off, I guess the thing that strikes me the most when you look at these numbers is that for a government that claims to be fiscally responsible, claims to be fiscally conservative, I just cannot understand how that jives with some of the salaries that are being paid to Executive Council members. For example, the Deputy Minister of Executive Council: just before you came into office, Mr. Premier, the salary that was paid here in Alberta for that position was $283,000. Today it's $530,000. It's just short of being double. Comparatively, the clerk of the Privy Council for our nation makes $427,000. I don't see how on earth that number is justifiable. It's no offence to the people making the salary. It's just: how on earth is that justifiable if we're trying to be fiscally conservative here? I'm not saying that they're not doing a good job, bad job, or medium job.

Secondly, if you go to the chief of staff, $232,000 in 2004; six years later it's almost $400,000, a massive increase. If you look at the southern Alberta office director, in 2004 again we go to $118,000; now it's more than double that at $252,000. And this is an amazing one. The director of communications used to make $66,000. We've all heard of the complaints about communications in this government. It's all communications' fault. This year it's $216,000. That's almost four times the amount – four times. It's just amazing to me that we could even make an attempt to justify that number.

I guess the first line of questioning is: how are these salaries justified, especially given the economic climate that we're in today?

Mr. Stelmach: The question is raised with respect to pay and bonus to Executive Council. For a matter of record with the two positions, Deputy Minister of Executive Council and the chief of staff, in terms of showing leadership, well before other provinces picked up on the idea – and, indeed, the federal government in the latest budget said: well, we're just going to freeze all of MPs' and ministers' salaries this particular coming budget year. The government made that decision two years ago. MLAs' and ministerial salaries have been frozen.

In terms of the Deputy Minister of Executive Council the year before last we said that the bonuses will be eliminated, so for this year the deputy of Executive Council sees the elimination of compensation of $80,000 – that was the amount of the bonus – plus a 10 per cent salary reduction. The deputy of Executive Council will see his compensation reduced by $112,000. The chief of staff, a 10 per cent reduction, which is $25,000, plus the elimination of the bonus, which is around $76,000: that's a reduction of $101,000. So the total for the chief of staff and Deputy Minister of Executive Council is $213,000.

All management salaries in government have been frozen. All bonuses are cancelled. That, in itself, is a reduction of approximately $1.4 million in compensation cuts. Previous to that as well the Premier announced a reduction of $12,000 some-odd dollars a year in salary reduction, and cabinet ministers took a salary reduction of about, I believe, $6,600 a year.

The government has shown great leadership, and in fact, from what I gather, some of the other jurisdictions are following the leadership of the province.

Now, some history in terms of how the compensation was decided. This was decided a number of years ago when our deputy ministers were quite low compared to other jurisdictions in terms of their total compensation. The minister responsible for human resources – and this was a number of years ago – and our previous Premier put together a corporate human resources committee that was chaired by Eric Newell, Charlie Fischer, Gail Surkan, Gerry Protti, and the Deputy Minister of Executive Council. It came forward to cabinet at the time in terms of the salary range and also all of the other items that will be the total compensation package for the deputy ministers.

There is a comparison to other jurisdictions. I don't have it here, but we're in the range of what some of the provinces pay. Obviously, some provinces are smaller, and other provinces have different rates of compensation which are, of course, much more than what we have. We're kind of in the median in that particular range for deputy ministers.

Now, when the member talked about the deputy minister, this position and the numbers he's referring to was occupied by two individuals during that year, and there was an additional cash benefit, which was the vacation payout of $54,204, which is according to the contract. As I said, two individuals, April 1 to September 28, '08, and the second from the 29th of September to March 31 of '09.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Thank you for those explanations, Premier.

On the question of the salaries I think everyone in Alberta expects, and rightfully so, that as the Premier you're the boss, you're the leader, you're the head of the Executive Council. I think that for a lot of people it's a contradiction and a little unsettling that your chief of staff as well as the Deputy Minister of Executive Council are making so much more than yourself. That doesn't seem to jibe. I mean, I think a lot of us here have been in different businesses. The guy who's making the decisions at the end of the day should be the guy who's the highest paid, and that's not the case in our government. I wonder if the Premier would address that.

I'm not asking that he, and I don't think he would, raise his salary to above what they're making, but at the very least create a hierarchy, that I think the people of Alberta would understand, where the Premier is the leader, is making the decisions. He's the one that's been democratically elected, and therefore he should be making the highest salary and not two or three or four or five bureaucrats.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, that is the same right across the country of Canada. I know that the Prime Minister isn't paid more than his deputies. In fact, he might even be paid less than the assistant deputy ministers and other senior officials in government. I don't know what the remuneration was for some of our municipal leaders across Alberta, but I do know that most of the CEOs and CAOs that operate municipalities were paid much more than the highest ranking elected official, which was the mayor.

Mr. Anderson: Well, would it not be a good example, then, to the rest to rein back? I mean, we spend more in our bureaucracy than any other province per capita in the country. Wouldn't it be a good way to show leadership at this point and lower those higher paid staff, you know, the bureaucratic, nonelected, executive-paid members, maybe rein those salaries back a little bit to something that makes a little bit more sense to the average Albertan? I mean, we're all in public service. You know, you've set an example. I personally don't believe that the Premier's salary is overly exorbitant for the amount of work that you do, but shouldn't, then, the people that report to you be making less or, at least, on par but certainly less than yourself? If that was the type of leadership we had across the board, I think that we might foster more of a culture of public service rather than a culture of entitlement, which I kind of see existing right now. Is that something that you'd be willing to look at?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm not going to ask people that are under contract in this province across all of government to take what would be significant reductions in management positions, in senior positions in government, and get paid less than what the Premier gets paid or the ministers. In fact, I don't know what issues there would be to the current contracts we would have in place. But, you know, that's a matter that we can debate.

I have great confidence and pride in our civil service in this province as a minister over the last number of years, no matter what ministry I served in. I started in agriculture, and I remember attending my first ministerial FPT, federal-provincial, meeting. When it came to policy, all other provinces seemed to look to Alberta to take a leadership role, whether it be on crop insurance, farm programs, food safety.

In Transportation we were the first province – and, again, leadership and buy-in through our civil service – to reduce I believe from 2,100 or 2,200 individuals down to about 700. We outsourced project management. We outsourced engineering. We outsourced maintenance. That was a significant change in the way transportation services were delivered. There was a lot of pride in the Transportation department, and that pride was invested by Albertans. We've made the changes, and in order to attract good quality people, we've got to be in the median at least.

I've always said that we may not be paying the highest as compared to other jurisdictions, but on the other hand we do have the lowest personal income taxes. That, to me, is an added benefit because no matter how much a person earns, they pay a flat 10 per cent. I believe we still continue to have one of the largest personal income tax exemptions compared to other provinces. That, again, is another benefit, but that benefit is for all Albertans.

Mr. Anderson: I didn't really want to discuss the competitiveness of our province right now, and I won't. I would love to have that discussion, but I'm going to try to remain with the estimates here.

We spent an awful lot of money and we're planning to spend $7 million more, I believe, on the rebranding initiative. Personally, and no offence to the people that worked on it, I think the new brand is terrible. I think that it doesn't reflect what this province stands for. As a people, thanks to the leadership of the previous Premier, I would say, too, we had come up with a slogan: the Alberta advantage. That's something that really defined us as a province. It's something that people not only all over Canada knew but also all over North America.

To come and change that to Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve, which essentially no one knows unless they're following politics or following the debate on it, I just don't see how the money was well spent that went into that rebranding initiative when we have so many other ways that it could have been spent; for example, on getting our message about the oil sands out to the world a little bit more. Maybe that could have been spent there. Or, you know, it's obviously well documented the health care issues that we have. It's well documented the budget deficit that we have. It just seemed to me that not only was this a waste of money or not the best use of money; the product that we got out of it was extremely poor. No one identifies with it. It's a bit of a joke if you go around and talk to people. With that, I mean, could we not save $7 million or reallocate it by moving on to something else rather than this Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve slogan that we've come up with?

Mr. Stelmach: I expect that member to not agree because he's in the opposition. He's expressed an opinion, and he has a right to express that opinion in the House.

Just a little more information in terms of the spending details on the branding initiative. The budget that was introduced in '08-09, the first year, was $5 million; the second year, '09-10, was $10 million; then $10 million in 2010-11, for a total of $25 million. We did not spend the full amount budgeted in '08-09 or in '09-10. We reduced the budget in 2010-11, again, $10 million down to $7 million.

What is the money being used for? It has been spent in a number of different particular areas. The brand was launched in March 2009. We ran TV and international print ads to support the invest in Alberta message. We've also used some of the funds to develop the brand website. To date there have been more than 160,000 visits to the brand website, over 36,000 viewings of our videos on YouTube, 660 Alberta photos posted on Flickr, and growing numbers, of course, on Facebook and Twitter accounts. Two-thirds of those visitors are consistently from outside of Canada. In total we've had visitors from 148 different countries. So, you know, we can debate whether the money is well spent. I do know that it also includes some investment in contracts that we have with two U.S. firms as well to get the message out in terms of environment and some of our advocacy efforts in Washington, DC. That's all part of the branding process.

I will say that through a lot of the work that was done, a lot of polling, asking questions of Albertans, the Alberta advantage served Alberta very well for a number of years, but it kind of lost its appeal to many. As a result, we had to rebrand the province of Alberta.

Given the comments we've had in Vancouver at the Olympics and, certainly, the number of hits on the website, I believe that we're on the right track, and we'll keep monitoring. We're going to rely on our branding ambassadors to do more. It's really been picked up by schools, universities, businesses throughout Alberta that are using the logo and are now promoting this with whoever they do business either in Canada or the United States or around the world.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: How much time do I have left?

The Deputy Chair: Twenty.

Mr. Anderson: Twenty seconds? Okay. Well, I'll defer my questions till later.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to go back on some of the questions I asked earlier to the Premier about setting an example of responsible spending. How can he justify in the last several years 200 to 400 per cent increases in his senior staff's income? How does he respond to people living in poverty, on AISH, women who are unemployed, men unemployed, students who can't get into postsecondary education? This flies in the face of responsible spending and a reasonable leadership style. How do you respond to Albertans with 200 to 400 per cent increases under your watch?

Mr. Stelmach: As I said earlier, I read the numbers into the record, if he wants me to do that again.

We have shown leadership as a government going through a very difficult economic situation. We've asked all our management people to forgo a part of their compensation, which was their bonus, and this is part, quite frankly, of an agreement that was reached many years ago when we fell behind in managerial salaries compared to other jurisdictions. As I've said, it was a private-sector committee that came forward with recommendations to at least put us in the median of other provinces.

Given that we're going through a difficult period and we had to find a considerable amount of money in in-year spending in '09-10 and '08-09, all bonuses were cancelled, and of course all managerial salaries were frozen. That's two years before anybody even thought of doing anything in that particular area in any other jurisdiction, and that in itself is $1.4 million in compensation cuts. I'll remind this House that that was done on a voluntary basis. There was an agreement in place, and our people did that on a voluntary basis. So, you know, I commend our public sector for doing that, which has allowed us to reach our targets and balance on the operational side, especially when it comes to finding dollars in various departments to balance heading into the year-end.

Every year the compensation committee asks the CHR, the human resource people, to review our compensation across Canada, and as I said before, we are in the median. Again, hats off to all of the managers and the people that had a bonus coming to them that voluntarily said: we will not accept the bonus for the year to try to reach our targets for that particular year during a period of economic downturn.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't think that sits very well with Albertans, and I dare say that the nonconfidence in this government and this Premier is well reflected in that kind of response, that doesn't address the massive increases that he oversaw in his bureaucracy. This is part of what Albertans disdain about public service, that this is no longer public service; it's people at the public trough. A lack of leadership in this respect is part of what you're going to deal with for the next couple of years, I'm afraid.

On page 125 of the Executive Council business plan strategic priority 3 is to continue the establishment of an economic strategy, namely the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. A few questions related to this council. How long is this council going to be in place? What concrete gains has the Premier seen from this council? What decisions have been made? Will the Premier make public any reports and recommendations he's received from this council in line with strategic priority 1, which is accountability and transparency? Finally, how many meetings has the Premier had with the council in the past year?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure. With respect to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, as I said in my opening remarks, we've asked world experts, world leaders in various areas of expertise under the leadership of Dr. Emerson to identify major forces and trends in the world economy and what Alberta has to do to present itself, position itself in an ever-changing world economy, let's say from the 2010 to 2040 period. The Alberta Economic Development Authority looks at the short term. The Alberta Economic Development Authority will be working with the council in terms of the short term – you know, 2010, 2015, 2018 – but we've asked the council to look much further ahead and see what is it that we have to do in a number of areas, whether it be in education and technology, technology transfer, obviously commercialization of that technology, health, our own personal health, what strategies we can put together.

I've had one face-to-face meeting with the chair. The chair has used, of course, various ways, through the Internet, working with the council members, and they have put together an interim report. They will be getting together in Edmonton at the end of March to review it.

They will be, again, consulting with the public and with people that have good, far-reaching ideas, and they will collate those and bring them forward to government. That report will be made public. It is something Albertans want to see, and they will have, of course, the ability to respond to the report because we're in this together.

We've seen some huge global economic shifts. We're going to see tremendous competition for investment and for people in the world, and we've got to position this province correctly. It may mean, of course, ideas on how we change some of the current policies not only within Alberta but in Canada and offer suggestions on how we can work with other provinces and our federal government to improve Alberta's and Canada's position.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I guess I would ask the Premier: if he was spending a million dollars of his own money, would he have been more inclined to meet with this committee over a year and find out what they're doing and what influence it could have and should have on current decision-making? I'm surprised that there's only been one face-to-face meeting over this period.

In last year's budget the Premier stated that the total amount of funding for this council was $2 million, which was an increase of a million dollars to cover remuneration, travel expenses, and other costs. I have several questions around this $2 million. Is the total amount of funding to the council still at $2 million for fiscal 2010-11? Would this $2 million in spending be found under line item 1.0.1? What is the reason why there are not more specifics given around this spending, and what accounting has the Premier for this? Is it all on remuneration, travel, and consulting fees? How much of the total funding to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy goes to consultants outside those individuals on the Council?

Mr. Stelmach: Perhaps a little bit of background on the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. The council, as I said, is chaired by David Emerson, who actually was born in Grande Prairie, was with the forestry industry, and served as an elected official with the federal government. The council has 12 members, many national and international in stature and each a globally recognized expert in their field.

The members were nominated by community leaders from across Alberta. We had three nomination committees that volunteered their time and brought names forward. Then the committee selected whom they thought, you know, should be appointed to the council and gave their ideas. All people that are selected have global experience, are respected strategic thinkers, and represent a broad range of experience with the major economic sectors of importance to Alberta.

Remuneration for the council follows the guidelines laid out in the public agencies governance framework.

Now, in addition to David Emerson – and I'd like to put this in the record – in terms of the membership, from the United Kingdom Professor Sir John Bell, who is a professor of medicine at the University of Oxford; Professor Jennifer Welsh, a professor in international relations, University of Oxford; Clive Mather, former president and CEO of Shell Canada, now chairman of Iogen Corp. From the United States Juan Enriquez, managing director of Excel Medical Ventures in Boston, Massachusetts. From across Canada Elyse Allan, president and CEO of GE Canada; David Dodge, who is a senior adviser for Bennet Jones in Ottawa; Courtney Pratt, the former president and CEO of Stelco, now the chairman and CEO of the Toronto Region Research Alliance. From Alberta we have Bob Brawn, who is the chair of the Alberta Economic Development Authority; James Gray, better known as Jim Gray, Brookfield Asset Management; Anne McLellan, a former cabinet minister now with Bennet Jones; and Lorne Taylor, who is the chair of the Alberta research institute.

In terms of the compensation, the chair is paid $50,000 a year; members are paid $20,000 a year plus $1,000 for each day on council business as per the guidelines. I think the question was: is it included in the budget line item? Yes, it is. It's in the office of the Premier and Executive Council.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to know whether we're getting value for money. It's not clear at all from what the Premier has said that we have any capacity for measuring the output from this committee, value for money. What is the total budget this year, Mr. Premier, and are we getting value from this?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes, we are getting value. I mean, very rarely do you have people that have dedicated their time for the amount of money that we are paying them, that come from different corners and parts of the world to give advice to the Premier of the province of Alberta. These are people that, I'm sure, get paid much, much more than what they're paid according to our guidelines and are willing to take the time and help Alberta take a leadership role in the country of Canada in terms of where we want to be by 2040. Not very often do you get people like this just by sheer invite, sending them a letter to help and participate in a committee like this.

There is a lot of research that is being done. Many have asked for further research in terms of the background information. I know that this is very, very important for Alberta because, as I said before, there is a huge global shift. We've always relied on the United States as our number one trading partner. We've seen that economy diminish somewhat. Asia, of course, China, India are moving forward in the growth of the economy. There are some issues, obviously, in Europe. We've got to be ahead of the curve, and this is definitely going to give us the advice on how we can reach our full potential.

Now, some of the things, of course, in terms of the council are taking an account of Alberta's current natural resources and built assets, looking at the strengths of Alberta's people and its institutions, identifying the major forces, as I said earlier, and trends shaping the world around us from 2010 to 2040. It's reviewing the implications of major external and internal forces and trends on Alberta's economy, society, and government. Just briefly, Mr. Chair, what's happening in the Middle East in terms of some of the issues tied to oil supply, peace, what could happen between, you know, Iran and some of the other Middle Eastern countries and the Emirates: there are some very sensitive issues now. We have to ensure that we're in the right position to deal with the ever-changing circumstances.

Now, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, the budget overview. In the first year we had allocated a million dollars; the actual was $766,000. In '09-10 the budget is forecast to be at $1.9 million. I don't know what that will be, but it will be less than that. Then for '10-11 it'll be about $1.6 million, a reduction of $285,000.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it's kind of discouraging that we ask for brief answers and clear responses, and we get the same runaround. Albertans want to know how this money is being spent and what value we're getting from it, what decisions are changing as a result of this council. There is also no indication of how long this spending is going to go on. I guess some of us get frustrated by the lack of clarity and the lack of brevity, the discussion around world economics as opposed to answering the questions specifically.

To move on to the branding initiative, page 189 of government estimates shows that the estimated spending for the branding initiative is $7 million in this year and that $9.66 million was forecasted for the '09-10 fiscal. None was spent in '08-09. But page 195 of the 2009 government estimates shows that it was forecast for branding spending of $5 million in '08-09. Can the Premier clarify why this year's estimate does not include the $5 million that was budgeted to be spent on the branding in '08-09? Was that $5 million budgeted not spent? Is it included in the Public Affairs Bureau line? What is the reason for that $5 million discrepancy?

Secondly, of the $7 million that was budgeted for the '10-11 year, how much of that funding is going towards consulting costs?

If some of these are not readily available, I would appreciate a written response.

On page 128 of the Executive Council business plan there are performance measures for the entire branding initiative under development, stating, "A measure to test awareness and recognition of the brand is currently under development." To the Premier: how is the Premier going to actually test awareness and recognition of the Alberta brand? This performance measure was under development last year as well, with the initiative expected to be finished in the '10-11 fiscal year. Isn't having a performance measure developed for '11-12 a little too late? Isn't this simply a post hoc justification for what was projected to be a three-year spending of $25 million? Will the Premier commit that this performance measure will be replaced by a complete cost-benefit analysis in next year's business plan? He needs to show tangible benefits from this $25 million of public dollars investment.

On page 190 of government estimates, line 3.0.1, the branding initiative shows a reduction of $3 million for '10-11. What was originally budgeted as $10 million is now $7 million. To the Premier. I would first like to thank the Premier for taking the advice of the opposition and cutting this spending on a very questionable initiative. Will the Premier explain what was cut out of the plans for that branding initiative, and is this reduction because of a decrease in advertising dollars? Is it a decrease in consulting costs? Where did that $3 million get cut? If the Premier managed to find $3 million in savings, could he explain why these were not found in the two years prior in the program? Is the Premier planning on spending the $3 million saved this year in '11-12? Surely that $3 million could be better spent on core services and policy development.

Will the Premier give some examples of the performance benchmarks that are under consideration for measuring the success of the program? Will it be the total amount of investment in the province? Will it be increases in tourism dollars? How does the Premier propose to measure success of this program?

Will the Premier answer how much of the $7 million being spent on the branding initiative will be spent through the Public Affairs Bureau? To what extent is the branding initiative handled through this bureau, and has the role changed over the last two years since the initiative started? Will the Premier provide the list of all consultants that have had a part in the branding campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, I don't know how good my memory is. There are about 50 questions in there.

Again, I don't know why the hon. member said that I'm going around the detail. I was very clear. I read out the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy budget overview. In '08-09 we budgeted a million, we spent $766,000; in '09-10, $1.9 million. The totals come in for '10-11, which will be the final year of the council. We're estimating $1.6 million, which would be a reduction of approximately $285,000. All of the council's reports will be completed, and we'll bring the last report and all of the recommendations to government at that particular time. Then the council will cease to exist. I can't be any clearer than that.

Going back to the branding initiatives budget – and I think I answered this in previous questions to the previous member – '08-09 was $5 million, '09-10 was $10 million, and $10 million in 2010-11, for $25 million. We did not spend the full amount targeted in '08-09 or in '09-10, and we have reduced the budget in '10-11 from $10 million to $7 million.

The Deputy Chair: I call the Leader of the Official Opposition for the next set of questions for 20 minutes and after that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I look forward to the written responses to those questions, Mr. Premier. I didn't expect you to have some of those details, but I did expect a few answers.

With respect to board governance page 125 of the Executive Council 2010 business plan states that the number one strategic priority is to strengthen agency governance. In the October '09 Auditor General's report the Auditor recommended that the Ministry of the Treasury Board increase the transparency of termination benefits. Page 160 of the 2010 fiscal plan shows that the government's response to this recommendation is under review. Further questions to the Premier: what is the reason for this recommendation not being accepted from the start, the Auditor's recommendation to review and make more transparent termination benefits?

The implication that the Auditor General outlined if this recommendation is not accepted is that there is a lack of oversight, unawareness of contractual obligations, risk of overpayment, and damage to the corporate reputation of his ministry. Surely the Premier is concerned about this. This recommendation is important across all government boards but especially Alberta Health Services, an organization that controls $9 billion of spending.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we will work on the estimates. If you can find the line item for Health Services in the estimates, we'll work with that. Otherwise, Health Services will be debated in the policy field committee. They could certainly have a lot of detail in there.

Dr. Swann: Sir, I'm looking for policy direction from this Premier with respect to recommendations for fiscal management.

The Deputy Chair: And we're talking about the Executive Council estimates.

Dr. Swann: And how they are using that budget to direct the spending of other departments, especially the Auditor General's recommendation.

Let me try again. Accepting this recommendation would tie in perfectly with your priority, Mr. Premier, to improve governance, accountability, and transparency of all of government and its agencies. When can we expect to see full disclosure of executive termination benefits, another recommendation related to the importance across all government boards of this accountability and transparency? Does the Premier not see the need for change in this area?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm going to go back to the branding initiative, and then I'll do the question on the response to the Auditor General because there was a comment made that I didn't answer the questions. I'm going to again go through item by item on the branding initiative budget overview, and hopefully there's somebody there taking some notes so they have the answer. If not, then you can read Hansard the following day.

Branding initiative budget overview. The budget amount in 2008-09 was $5 million. The actual was $3,678,908. Now, spending in the first year of the brand initiative covered the development and launch of the new brand. What did we spend money on? We included extensive research in Alberta, nationally, and internationally; development and testing of the creative elements of the proposed brand; development and testing of the brand campaign; province-wide TV, print, and radio advertising to introduce the new brand.

The next year, '09-10, $10 million; published forecast, $9.6 million. Spending in the second year supports implementation of the new brand; support for Alberta's venues at the 2010 Vancouver Winter Olympic Games; U.S. advocacy consultation; developing videos of Alberta/Albertans to convey consistent messages about Alberta as a place for people realizing possibilities; designing, producing, and installing brand pageantry at strategic locations around the province, purchasing promotional items, all to improve awareness of Alberta's identity; creating and placing ads to support an invest-in-Alberta message; in evaluating brand awareness.

Now, the 2010-11 estimates, $7 million. Funding for the final year of the initiative will primarily go towards ambassador engagement and community development. It's working with brand ambassadors to identify key opportunities for brand development and promotion; developing high-quality materials for brand ambassadors to support their marketing communications about Alberta's immigration, employment, investment, and tourism potential; directly advocating our story to decision-makers in government, business, and policy leaders in Canada and around the world; promoting Alberta at conferences in targeted markets; creating and running advertising campaigns and telling Alberta's story nationally and internationally; and enhancing albertabrand.com and other online communications. That is the complete overview of the branding initiative budget.

Now, with respect to the Auditor General and the executive compensation, many of the contracts that were terminated, Mr. Chairman – and this is not an excuse, just a matter of record that a lot of these contracts were entered into well before I was sworn in as the Premier. These are contracts that were entered into by various boards and agencies, whether it be Health Services, some of the other Crown corporations that we have, or agencies that receive funding from the government to deliver services. It was up to those boards to reach reasonable contract negotiations and, I would say, reasonable compensation for those that might have not had their contract renewed or might have been otherwise removed.

The Auditor does make good suggestions, and we're looking at formalizing guidelines and also bringing this forward to government for final approval in terms of how we can put some objectives in place to make sure that within, again, a reasonable amount of dollars boards, agencies, and those that work for government have either in legislation or in regulation terms of choice based on what the responsibility is of the individual, of course, in a particular agency and a reasonable clause in the contract that would be paid upon termination.

There were, I believe, contracts that were entered into in the past that we did not see through government, the contracts, because we left it up to the authorities to make those decisions. That will change, and we're looking at coming up with a model that we can apply to all government agencies and Crown corporations so that we meet the recommendations of the Auditor General so that they would be reasonable in nature in the future.

Dr. Swann: Well, I think it has become clear over the last few years, Mr. Chairman, that Albertans are quite dismayed by the lack of a systematic, consistent, businesslike approach to managing the public purse in this province, and this is another example of where we're slowly, slowly, slowly facing the reality that we are failing in basic business practices.

Page 126 of the Executive Council business plan has the performance measure: percentage satisfaction of policy co-ordination office clients with products and services. The last measurement here was 85 per cent satisfaction. Can the Premier explain how this measure was actually taken and which clients this measure refers to? Is it related to arm's-length government agencies, boards, and commissions, or does this refer to satisfaction of other government ministries? If it is measuring the ministries' satisfaction with his department, is this measure not misleading? Surely government ministries will be reluctant to show dissatisfaction with the Premier's role.

On page 128 of the Executive Council business plan there's a breakdown of expenses by core business, a total of $10.3 million for policy development. For "help government . . . communicate with Albertans" there's a total of $21 million. This $21 million, again, relates to the Premier's message, the government's message, with only $10 million spent on good public policy. We're spending more on spin than actually on policy. What is the Premier's explanation for year after year pouring more money into advertising, public relations, relative to policy development and policy spending?

Mr. Stelmach: This government has undertaken a number of items that have been put, perhaps, on the back burner for a number of years, ensuring that we are in the position to see and acknowledge the growth that's happening in the province and moving forward on a number of initiatives. They can be anywhere from land-use framework to issues tied to any of the pieces of legislation that we passed in the House, on transmission, for instance, or some of the changes we made in transportation, education, of course, postsecondary. All of those things require a fair amount of communication with the public, and that is why we continue to give as much information as we can to the Alberta public. We have done a lot as a government over the last three years; there's no doubt about it.

I just want to go back to the other item raised in terms of the Auditor General. Sometimes in the response from the hon. member it's like, you know, this is a simple undertaking. Well, there are contracts in place at the moment with respect to some of the agencies, and we're looking at a format for guidelines in the final approval process that we could post on the secretariat website. These will be regulations under the Public Agencies Governance Act or a combination of various forms to communicate to our boards and agencies in terms of the private-sector compensation.

Treasury Board is also reviewing compensation for various management positions and the termination benefits and some of the salaries that are paid. We'll continue to work on a disclosure directive that will be posted on the web, and we will achieve the Auditor General's recommendation. But it does take time to get there because, as I said, there are current contracts in place, and we have to work through those to make sure that at the end of the day we've found a balance in terms of attracting the best people yet ensuring that they're paid within a reasonable amount of the median in the country of Canada.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: No more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask the Premier some questions on his estimates. I think the first question I have has to do with what changes the Premier has made with respect to senior officials in his office since he became the Premier. Can he outline who the senior people are in his office and what they do?

Mr. Stelmach: I believe I gave a total accounting in the questions earlier, but I'll go through it again as soon as I find my notes here.

With respect to the Executive Council we have individuals that have responsibilities in various areas, from policy co-ordination to operation of the office, and of course the office has a number of responsibilities. We have, of course, a very talented team of people working in the executive office. The work they do is essential to the operation of my office. These positions are unique and order in council appointments, which are not subject to the standard recruitment process. We've not added any new positions but have made some changes to the players and to the duties of a number of staff. These sorts of adjustments are made in any office as you move forward and move people around. I know that all members across the way have also made similar changes over time.

The recent changes include updated duties for Elan MacDonald, the deputy chief of staff responsible for policy; George Samoil, who's the deputy chief of staff, operations; the new communications director, Cam Hantiuk; the new director of media relations, Jerry Bellikka; the new executive assistant, Jason Ennis; the new deputy secretary to cabinet, Dwight Dibben; Roxanna Benoit, moving to deputy chief of policy co-ordination; and the new managing director for the Public Affairs Bureau, Lee Funke.

Now, I believe I read into the record – the question, I think, also was in terms of what compensation was paid or the changes in the compensation package. Again, we showed leadership in this area very early as government and as this Assembly. Government MLAs' and all MLAs' salaries were frozen for two years. That was two years ahead of anybody else that took the position to freeze those salaries. When it came to all management salaries, they were all frozen. All bonuses as part of the compensation package were cancelled. That is about $1.4 million in compensation costs.

For the two senior officials. For the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, once again, a 10 per cent salary reduction, which was $32,000, and a bonus of $80,000, which was cancelled, so that's a reduction of $112,000. For the chief of staff a 10 per cent reduction, $25,000, plus the bonus elimination of $76,000, so that's $101,000. The total for the chief of staff and the deputy, in reduction of just those two areas, was $213,000.

Once again, the bonuses were part of the compensation package, and all management staff came forward voluntarily in the government's drive to reduce costs. In a year when we really got hit with this totally unprecedented economic downturn, the team came together.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I apologize if that question was redundant, but when there's an hour and 20 minutes of questions ahead of you on a small budget like this, you're going to cover sometimes the same ground a little bit.

My next question has to do with the branding initiative. I was looking in the Executive Council annual report and the business plan and so on trying to determine if there is, in fact, some way to evaluate the branding initiative and whether or not the money that's been spent on it has been successful. I mean, we may each have our personal opinions about whether this is a good brand or a bad brand, but the real question is: is its effectiveness being measured? How many people in Alberta know the brand, like the brand? What does it mean to them? What about, then, outside the province and internationally? How effective is the brand being? The question is: what are the measures of this brand? What are the results?

Mr. Stelmach: A good question from the hon. member. This is a significant initiative in terms of rebranding the province of Alberta. I think that, in all honesty, it's sometimes difficult to measure, especially in an economic downturn, but perhaps it was the best time to rebrand Alberta, when no one predicted this economic downturn, and we came with a new brand for the province to be new, fresh, not only within the country of Canada but within the North American continent and, indeed, the world.

The campaign was implemented in March '09, and the evaluation is critical. There is an evaluation process currently under way to measure the response, and again it comes in various forms: polling, asking Albertans, looking at which sectors of business in Alberta have done better with the new brand, how it's been accepted by what we call brand ambassadors, how they've implemented that in their advertising of whatever particular product.

Now, the other measurement is difficult because it's an open brand. It's not only government; it's open to everyone. You know, a school board can use it. Maybe some trucking firm can use it. Who knows? Maybe there's a sausage maker there someplace that's using the brand in terms of getting their product into other markets around the world. A good example is that Travel Alberta has accepted the brand, and they've used that in the advertising across Canada into North America and indeed some of the markets in the world.

Of course, we wrapped the Rocky Mountaineer train in our brand, and it has again proven to be very effective. You know, the fact that Rocky Mountaineer has chosen to keep the train wrapped till the end of October is going to give us additional advertising dollars. But it's always difficult to measure, and I will say to the hon. member that we'll have more information on this in terms of the evaluation process.

It's difficult, you know, even when you're advertising in the paper, to know if it's that particular ad that got you the requested sales, or was there some other means of getting your name out there that has attracted more business? But I feel comfortable in the brand. It's certainly been accepted by so many of our brand ambassadors, and they're using it quite effectively in advertising their product.

Mr. Mason: I would ask the Premier, then, if the criteria for the evaluation of the effectiveness of the brand and the money that's been spent on rebranding the province are going to be made available specifically. I don't want you to get up because you'll take too long to answer that.

The next question I have has to do with Public Affairs Bureau. What I'm asking about: I see on page 194 of the estimates that there are 118 full-time equivalent positions with the PAB, and the Public Affairs Bureau budget is $14.3 million. The question I have is: how much other communications work does the government do through the contracting of external firms, and where is the budget for that located? Is it located in the PAB budget, or is it located in the various departmental budgets?

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to contracts, I know that for any external contracts that are offered to anybody outside of government, those figures will be in the blue book, and we can certainly get some target numbers for the hon. member. Those are published, I believe, every three months and will communicate to Albertans in terms of what money is spent on consultants, especially in this particular area.

The hon. member was right: there are 118 FTEs. I didn't get an opportunity to compare — there had been some comparisons thrown at us earlier — in terms of what other governments do in this particular area. For our neighbours to the west the 2009-10 budget for the B.C. government's Public Affairs Bureau is $28.8 million, which includes 223 FTEs, so it's double what our budget is in that particular area.

Now, are there additional people within government that are communicating? Yes. There are those in various ministries that are in different corners and parts of Alberta. I used the example where in one particular area for a transportation network — let's say Grande Prairie — there would be a person responsible for communicating to the public when the highway road bans will be. They might talk about the new weights and measures in that particular area as a result of spring breakup, will be communicating with the oil and gas industry in terms of rig movement and when new bans may be put into place.

The staffing for the Public Affairs Bureau. Of the 118 full-time equivalents, 72 are professional communications staff. These are seconded to ministries who plan and implement communications initiatives. They provide a range of communications services in ministries, including communications planning and advice, writing, editing, responding to media and public inquiries.

Nine staff develop communications for our long-term strategic plan and priority initiatives; co-ordinate government communications for major initiatives, public emergencies; support internal government communications. Six staff provide advertising consultation and support to ministries, co-ordinate corporate advertising, and manage the branding initiative. Eighteen staff provide communications support services to ministries, including websites, news release distribution, electronic media monitoring, technical services for news conferences. Thirteen staff provide corporate services to Executive Council and the bureau, including human resources, finance, administration, business planning, annual reports, records management, and FOIP. This also includes the PAB's managing director's office.

We put the blue book online, so it's definitely searchable. I know the member can look up any of the items, but if you're interested in any one particular area, they can certainly assist you in getting that information. I do want to say that we've certainly moved a long direction positively in being more open and transparent with our airplane manifests, ministerial expenses posted on the website. We also have of course introduced a lobbyist registry.

All of these things have happened over the last couple of years, again, in consultation with the Assembly here on the lobbyist registry. But the other, in terms of posting all of the information on the website, it was, of course, a move by me to be more open and transparent and just put it out there. It's amazing now that anybody can just pick up who went where, on what plane, and on what day. All of a sudden we don't get the kind of headlines that we used to before.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Open and transparent is good, so is briefer.

I want to ask about the council for economic strategy. I know that this has also been covered, but just for my benefit I wonder if the Premier can tell us what the deliverable is on the council for economic strategy. Is there a specific report with specific recommendations that has been provided to the Premier here?

Mr. Stelmach: The council is chaired by Dr. David Emerson. The council includes a number of very high profile expert people in a number of different areas that we've asked to serve on this council that live in different parts of the world, in Canada, and in the United States. Their role here is to put together an overview of what Alberta has to do to be in the best position by, let's say, from 2010 to 2040 but certainly from 2020 to 2040 given some of the huge global economic shifts and the competition that we're seeing today for people and for investment.

I've had one face-to-face meeting with the chair. Towards the end of the month the council will be here in Edmonton. They've always had meetings but through the Internet so that it would minimize travelling, which saves a fair amount of money. They're building a report in a number of key areas.

Our goal here is to drive Alberta to be a knowledge-based economy. That's part of the mandate that was given to council, to do whatever we need to ensure that we position the province in postsecondary education, technology transfer, technology commercialization, and compete with the best in the world. Because we have the best in the world, people that have a proven background in terms of their accomplishments, we will be getting some very good advice and will set the direction in co-operation with the Alberta Economic Development Authority, which is chaired by Bob Brawn, who is also a member of this council.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to go back to the previous question two questions ago because I thought I heard the Premier say that he would provide us with a list or a summary of the expenditures that are made across all of the departments in government on external communications and so on. I just wanted to confirm that for the record.

Mr. Chairman, I know that with the Premier you sort of overlap into lots of departments and different issues. I want to talk about the public relations problem, if you want to call it that, around the oil sands a little bit because in question period you only get three questions, and it's a little different format. It really does seem to me that there's a mounting issue internationally with respect to the development of our oil sands and that that is compromised by the current environmental state of the developments that are taking place there. It also seems to me that it's very difficult to just deal with that as a public relations problem.

We could spend an awful lot of money trying to counteract the negative publicity, but it really seems to me that we have to tackle the issues that are underlying this international black eye, if you will. That means cleaning up the tar sands – sorry; I didn't mean to say that; old habit – oil sands, actually cleaning them up and not just doing a PR campaign. I think we have to do things differently in this province if that development and the economic benefits it brings are going to continue. We have to change how we do things, and we have to show that to the world.

I'll just leave you with that, Mr. Premier.

The Deputy Chair: The time limit is up. You can answer it if you wish.

Mr. Stelmach: Oh, sure. Very good point. I agree with the member. We can spend a lot more money on so-called branding and trying to defuse what a lot of the various organizations are bringing forward with respect to the one issue I find that is most easily identifiable, and that is the tailings ponds. We have a goal in mind that we're going to move towards dry tailings ponds, and when we do that, that will remove a lot of the issues. Once the present tailings ponds are recovered, that will, I think, take away a lot of the issues that we're facing today.

I do want to say one thing, though. There's a lot of talk, and yesterday we heard about low-carbon fuel standards, you know: Alberta, your carbon is much higher in the oil sands, and how are you going to meet the new legislation that may or may not come forward from the Americans? Well, presently today there is oil shipped from Venezuela to New Brunswick. It's refined there. We already know that carbon is a lot higher than the Alberta oil sands, and that refined fuel is making its way down into Maine and some of the other states. So are the Americans going to have two, three, four different low-carbon fuel standards? Are they going to be based on the California model that is producing 500,000 barrels a day of heavy oil that, quite frankly, is even heavier carbon?

You know, we can debate this, as you know, Mr. Chairman, with your responsibility in PNWER and the work you do with the American governors, but the best thing is to start picking away at what is the eyesore, and that is the tailings ponds. I know that we're close to having the technology to have dry tailings ponds. There's a whole bunch of new technology that's ready to move ahead. That, in itself, will remove the number one issue that I think most groups point to, and that's the tailings ponds.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the Premier a couple of questions, first of all, starting with the core business of communicating with Albertans, specifically on page 127 of the ministry's business plan. The goal, Mr. Premier, as articulated in 2.3, is to "identify and implement emerging web technologies to enhance communication with Albertans."

I wonder if the Premier would share with the Assembly some of the strategies that the government proposes to increase use of things like the social media channels, the e-newsletter, the webcasts, streaming video, video conferencing, and so on, and some of the vision on how that strategy can be enhanced given some of the challenges that we have in getting people signed on to those networks online, given some of the challenges that we also have to high-speed Internet access in some of the remote parts of the province, just generally some of the ways in which the budget expenditures with respect to communications might be achieving that objective of enhancing those web technologies.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member makes an excellent point, being that Alberta is third, I believe, behind B.C. and Ontario in terms of Internet penetration. I believe we're at about 85 per cent. One of the provinces is about 89, and the other one is 90, so we're very close to those two provinces. That is why I support what the member has said. We have to use more of the Internet and social media to get the message out.

I learnt a couple of lessons over the last number of months. One is when we were at the WorldSkills conference, and we had a panel of youth from different corners of the world. These were very, very successful former WorldSkills competitors that won the highest levels in the various competitions. When the question was asked, "How do you get your news?" whether you get it from TV, from print, all of them said that they got it from the social media. In fact, a lot of them said that they didn't get a lot of detail, just a few pertinent facts, because that's all the time they had to receive the news. Obviously, the member is pointing in a direction that we have to take.

I did my first YouTube interview, which I believe was successful, and we're going to have to do more of that. I believe the first one had something like 9,700 views. If we're going to reach out to the younger generation to get the message out in a quick response and maybe even respond quicker to, you know, some policy change or maybe some criticism that may be applied to Alberta perhaps by someone outside the province, by another government or whatever, that's the best way of getting the message out.

The government of Alberta websites are increasingly being used by Albertans. Having the opportunity to spend some time with seniors in smaller communities, who are now very well connected, I find that many seniors now use the Internet not only to connect with their relatives in other parts of Canada, other parts of Alberta, other parts of the world, but they get so much of their information now from the Internet. Sometimes we think it's the younger generation that we have to, you know, find a way of communicating with, but certainly through the social media this is one way of getting our message across.

I think that we've taken a bold step. We've got to do more, and we'll continue to do more. Are there some issues, some sensitivities? Yes, there probably are in terms of the monitoring of information that goes on the social media. But all in all, it's a positive step to take by government, and we'll continue to push in that direction.

Dr. Brown: Well, if I could follow up with a second area, Mr. Premier, with respect to enhancing the government's internal communications and better aligning the internal and external communications, which is one of the strategies under goal 2. Certainly, there is still an awful lot of paper that circulates within the government of Alberta. Any initiatives that could be taken, of course, to increase communications through our electronic media certainly would be much appreciated and I think is a much more efficient way of doing business. I wonder if the Premier could share some of his vision of where we're going with respect to those internal communications and co-ordinating those things and trying to get us more oriented towards electronic communications in government.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, because we can reach out further to many smaller communities in the province through Internet connections, we're now able to do more and more paperless communication. The internal web-based newsletter that we have in the government of Alberta is one good example. I think it's called MyAgent, which is the human relations site. It puts on the web all of the policies and procedures for all government staff. So rather than sending tons of paper to individuals around the province, we can do it through web-based information.

The other is that, I think it was yesterday or the day before, a former colleague of this House, who's now a judge of the provincial court, Judge Adam Germain, did his first court case using the Internet. I don't know where the accused was or where the judge was, but obviously they conducted the court of law very successfully, which minimized the amount of paper and also minimized moving the accused from one location to another. So if the judges can do it – you know, they don't change very often. I hope I don't face a judge soon.

You know, you can tell that it's being included more and more in the everyday way of doing business in the province.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, if I could follow up with a third question. With respect to the open brand, Mr. Premier, Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve, I think it's an excellent initiative to sell the attributes of our province within Canada and around the world. The business plan proposes to have the brand recognized both nationally and internationally, and the Premier mentioned in his remarks an encounter with a visitor from Sweden who actually was able to recite the logo to him, Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve, so it shows that that promotion is beginning to take hold.

With respect to the issue of tourism, Mr. Premier, of course, tourism is a really important part of Alberta's future because it brings dollars. It's the same as an export, people buying our oil and gas or our lumber or our beef, because it brings dollars into the province of Alberta. Those dollars then circulate, and they have a multiplier effect on the economy. So a very, very important initiative. I wonder if the Premier could perhaps share with us how that branding will be promoted to enhance tourism in the province of Alberta and to bring those dollars here that can circulate and create jobs here in the province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The value of just using our brand on Travel Alberta promotional products is estimated at about $50 million. That is significant, building on the rebranding initiative.

The other business that uses the brand and is using it very successfully is Big Rock Brewery. Its brand identity is part of the Untapped Alberta campaign to promote their beer in western Canada. In fact, I could probably use one now. What they're doing is that they're reaching a much younger audience through the campaign, and they've struck really an identity in advertising on their website, on their posters, and also on their CD cover. So this is adding to the ever-growing list of brand ambassadors that are out there, including, as I said before, our universities, all of our public institutions, that also have quite a large web of distribution across Canada.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Well, it's a privilege to have the Premier here. I appreciate the time that you take out to allow us to ask you a few questions about the Executive Council. To start off, he continues to talk, Mr. Chair, about the two-year freeze that we have on wages. One of the problems that Albertans see – again, our actions speak louder than our words. They gave a massive raise of 34 per cent, and then they said we're freezing our wages or a slight rollback. They kind of took three giant steps forward and two back. It's just frustrating for Albertans that see that and look at: well, where's it at?

Just to demonstrate, to follow up on Airdrie-Chestermere's point of questions, again, I guess, to reflect on TILMA and the labour movement that's allowed back and forth, I'm just wondering if the Premier has considered making a trade labour swap on the Executive Council because B.C.'s deputy minister makes $289,000, seeing as how that's who we're talking about so often, and the chief of staff makes a whopping $229,000. I'm wondering if he's aware of that inequity between these two provinces?

Mr. Stelmach: Is he asking for a raise, then? That's considerably more than the Alberta chief of staff is receiving. You know, we can debate this back and forth, but as I said before, in terms of across Canada we are in the medium for our officials in government and in management. As I said before, we had other additional benefits in terms of our personal income tax and their exemptions, which are the best in the country of Canada.

I can't remember. What was your first comment?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I don't know if I was clear enough. I started off with: the deputy minister makes $289,000 in B.C., not $589,000. It's $289,000, which is significantly less than here. And the chief of staff makes $229,000, which I believe is significantly less than here. I just think that we need to really look at: if we want to be competitive, it's not by paying the most for our public service. There are many people that are interested and wanting to serve here in the province of Alberta. Perhaps competitiveness would be to actually say: "I have this opening, a new communications position. Who'd like to apply?" We could even be so competitive as to say: "What would you be willing to work for to have the honour of being here, in the Premier's Executive Council, to do that?" I think that we could put a whole new dynamic on competitiveness if we were to look at it in that respect.

I'm a little bit disappointed with the Premier talking about that we had these signed contracts with these public officials and saying that we couldn't break these contracts, yet he didn't have a problem breaking contracts with the oil and gas, Mr. Chair. So he says that we have to pay these out.

To switch over and to follow up a little bit more about these 180 full-time equivalent employees on page 194, we have a young lady with blond hair that follows our leader around. I was just interested if she is one of the employees on the Public Affairs Bureau or in the Executive Council. If the Premier could answer that.

Mr. Stelmach: We have to compare apples to apples in terms of salary. Knowing some of the comparisons that the member has used in the past, we'll certainly look at comparing apples to apples.

One thing – I have to address this – about the oil and gas, that we broke a contract. For the benefit of this House and for the benefit of the member, contracts were renegotiated with the oil and gas industry at least 12 times. Those 12 times they were opened at the request of the oil and gas companies as there were different changes in the economy since the '70s. So that is a totally unfair comment, and that is simply not true. If he feels that what I'm saying is not true, he can go right back to that oil and gas community, and they'll substantiate that. That happened in the oil sands. It happened in the conventional oil and gas business as well.

Now let's talk about compensation. There was a motion passed here – and that was introduced by a member of the Official Opposition – to put together a compensation review committee. This Assembly supported it, and we are going to move forward to ensure that we find the appropriate mechanism to ensure that it's fair. The decision is something that we can bring forward to this House or at least to the MLA compensation committee.

The other thing about compensation is that we do have, of course, other benefits that are paid to members, relocation allowances. I'm not quite sure if the hon. member that's asking about this increase in compensation paid back his relocation allowance because he's back in the House.

Mr. Hinman: Well, at this point I haven't even applied for the relocation, so I don't know how I'd give back something I haven't applied for. It's the second time the Premier has brought it up. He should perhaps check on those things. But I guess I should apply. I do feel that people are entitled to their full benefits.

Comparing apples to apples, we have more crabapples here than Delicious apples, and I don't know if we can compare the two.

But he didn't answer my question. There's a young lady that follows our leader around, and I'm just wondering where in the budget she works. Is she under Public Affairs? Is she with Executive Council? If he could report on where she is and what her wages are. Is that part of the nonpartisan money that this government spends tracking and following what the Wildrose Alliance is doing?

Mr. Stelmach: All I know is that it's not the Public Affairs Bureau. I don't know who he's referring to. Maybe he has more detail. If he's seen this blond lady so many times, maybe he has a name that he can bring forward, you know, in the House.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Her name is Jessica Powless. If he could ask if she's under the Public Affairs Bureau or not.

Mr. Stelmach: No.

Mr. Hinman: Does she work out of the McDougall Centre, then?

Mr. Stelmach: During the day I'm sure she works in the McDougall Centre.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are we still on estimates?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I guess I'd like to go back to the freedom to create, spirit to choose.

Some Hon. Members: To achieve.

Mr. Hinman: To achieve. I guess that's right. That's how well it's working. I guess I can't help but ever get it out of my mind. I was told that there's a European slogan like this: the freedom to procreate, the spirit to choose with whom. I just wondered if that's where it came from.

Going back to the Alberta advantage, where we've been to where we are now, I guess I just have a great concern with the Premier saying that, you know, we're looking at a $50 million return on investment for this new logo to promote Alberta when, in fact, we've lost billions of dollars of investment because we've lost the Alberta advantage.

Going back to the Public Affairs Bureau and the purpose of putting out a good message, the Premier went through a list of many of the activities. He went through a detailed list. Like, we have 18 people with IT. I'm wondering if there's anyone that's following the papers and the announcements that are being made around the world, whether it's National Geographic or the National Post, about the problems with the oil sands and if there's actually a department in the Public Affairs Bureau that sends back or if the Premier even sends back rebuttals asking to get our time in there to say: these are the facts about the oil sands. We continue to be attacked, yet I don't ever see any defence. I'm just wondering if they've tried to get articles in there and rebuttals because often when it comes out in the papers, one can say: "Well, that was about me. We'd like to respond." Does the Public Affairs Bureau do that, try and get rebuttals to improve our image?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes, we do.

But before I get to that point, there was a comment made with respect to Travel Alberta and $50 million worth of advertising. In addition to Travel Alberta, in addition to Big Rock Brewery, there are a number of additional ambassadors. There's Prairie Gardens & Greenhouses, that planted a corn maze last summer incorporating the provincial signature that was visible to air travelers. The University of Alberta has installed banners around their main campus. The University of Calgary has banners at the Olympic Oval. The Edmonton Eskimos and the Calgary Stampeders have set up in-stadium signs advertising and featuring the brand. Brewster, the bus line, will keep Alberta buses wrapped through October and have included the original provincial signature on the back of the buses with the Brewster logo.

ATCO used the provincial signature on clothing for Celebrating Excellence, a program where students submitted essays to win a trip to the Winter Olympic Games. We have Chloe Cartwright, a real estate agent with Century 21 in Cochrane, who also travels to England to work with people emigrating to Canada. There's Sirius Creation, creative arts and events management out of the United Kingdom, who now have an office in Alberta. BioAlberta, a biocommercialization association, uses the identity on promotional materials that are circulated globally. Glenn Simon Incorporated is a new ambassador that has blogged about the ambassador program and promoted the brand story video through their web links.

Working with WinSport Canada, we installed banners around Canada Olympic Park. WinSport also featured the signature in their iPhone app for the Olympic and Paralympic Games. The University of Alberta Debate Society took Alberta T-shirts to an international competition in Turkey this winter to give to other teams, and the Alberta College of Art and Design has also signed on to the ambassador program.

Those are just some examples of how the branding initiative has taken hold and of our additional ambassadors that are using the logo.

Now, in terms of the Public Affairs Bureau we do monitor issues relating to departments and correct misinformation. The same is done with the oil sands. We've had a number of articles in papers not only that have been submitted by government, but some have been submitted by our ambassador in Washington whenever something comes out that is totally incorrect. With respect to some of the speeches we gave in eastern Canada, in Toronto and in Montreal, again, I believe the day before we got to Montreal, one of the institutes there said that, you know, the oil sands threaten to pollute the Great Lakes. So we had a speech in Montreal, talked about the oil sands, how that was a very misleading statement, a misleading headline, because it had nothing to do with the oil sands.

In Toronto, again, we talked about air monitoring 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. We said that air quality in Fort McMurray 98 per cent of the time is equal to or better than in any major Canadian city. For more information for the House I believe one of the radio disc jockeys said: well, the Premier comes to Toronto, tells us we've got smog.

You know, we've done a lot in getting the correct information and some of the misinformation, but you can't of course write for a lot of these particular magazines. National Geographic did an interview for close to an hour, and none of that interview or any of the reclamation pictures that we gave to the group to put into the magazine were used, so you can't edit, obviously, for that particular magazine or others. If they want to write a certain slant to the story, they will. That's why we have to keep undertaking every opportunity we can to correct some of the misinformation and put ever-increasing new information out there so world decision-makers have some good information to make reasonable and responsible decisions.

Mr. Hinman: We appreciate that answer, and we'd encourage the Premier and the Executive Council and Public Affairs to keep working on that positive message. We think that part of the branding and getting out a positive message is very important because we do continue to get black eyes, it seems like, and the message not getting out there.

I'd like to go back a little bit to Jessica because I'm not sure: if she works out of the McDougall Centre during the day, is she on the Executive Council payroll, then? Is that the accurate place to find her location?

Mr. Stelmach: We'll get your answer back in terms of where her employment is.

Mr. Hinman: Well, again, I guess our employees have to keep a time sheet and a record of where they're at. I'm very interested in how she travels back and forth to Edmonton. For the last two events we've had, she's been here, and I guess my question is: it's amazing how her daytime job seems to have the days off that coincide with ours.

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. Hinman: Well, it's Public Affairs, and you said that it's nonpartisan, yet we have these people that are travelling around, and I think that it's important that we're open and honest. Again, like I say, perhaps the Executive Council would like to put forward the compensation she's getting for travelling as well as the hours of the days that she's actually working. We think that it's important that the Executive Council does a nonpartisan job. I guess my question with Public Affairs and the answers we're getting here: if they're nonpartisan, if we have an important message to get out and can help them, do they work for all caucuses, then, if it's truly in there? We think that much of it is very partisan that is going forward and the message that's going out to Alberta and the rest of the world.

Again, going through the trimming back on the branding initiative to $7 million from $10 million, it's interesting that they're paring back in that area, but we still have concerns whether we're getting value for our money, if that's well spent. I just really feel that it's important, as the Premier has leaned towards, that we need to lead by example, that he continues to, I think, rein in the spending in the Executive Council.

Again, we'd encourage that the most important place would be looking at the wages or the top end. The Ontario government put out what's kind of commonly known as a sunshine list. I'm wondering if the government would take steps forward with the Executive Council and for the Public Affairs to do that, if in fact he would bring that forward where for public-sector employees that earn over $100,000, their names are on a list, and we can see where the taxpayers' money was going. Would the Executive Council consider such a move?

Mr. Stelmach: I can't speak to the Ontario sunshine list. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: No, not the sunshine girl.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, maybe that's what they're paying attention to.

Anyway, all of that is in the blue book. We don't need a sunshine list. It's on the web, all the contracts, any payments. I'm certain we're the only province in western Canada that's doing that in terms of the openness and transparency.

The other is that, you know, when we start comparing to other provinces, Alberta is the only province that at the end of this economic downturn will not be adding any to its operational debt because we have two savings accounts to work with. Every other province that's driving a deficit is going to have to add to the debt, which their deficits will because, in fact, other than the province of Saskatchewan with a very small savings account, the rest are all adding to their debt. Ontario will be at least $180 billion, maybe even closer to $200 billion in debt. I hope they're not comparing to that particular province.

Anyway, the 2010 budget interview by area. Office of the Premier/Executive Council: the budget is $9.9 million. That's a reduction of $561,000. Office of the Lieutenant Governor: $493,000. That's a reduction of $18,000. Corporate services: $1.6 million, a reduction of $191,000. Corporate communications: $10.5 million. That's a reduction of $354,000. Communications support services: $2.2 million. That is the only increase because there are additional staff there, $128,000. And the branding initiative: a drop of $2.7 million. That's a budget reduction of $3.7 million, which is about 10.1 per cent.

Mr. Hinman: Well, we'd very much like the commitment from the government, I guess, on the employment of Jessica and her job and her travelling. We find that that's not in the best interests of taxpayers' money. We'd encourage the government again, though, to go after the news and the media that are publishing untruths about the oil sands as the Premier knows that there's a great story up there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to probably deviate a little bit from what's been happening. I'm going to actually focus on something that's in the estimates.

An Hon. Member: Relevant? Important?

Mr. Rogers: Well, that's what I'm hoping for, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. Chairman, on page 127 of Budget 2010 the Executive Council business plan outlines the continued implementation of the corporate communications policy for the government. We've heard bits and pieces based on some of the questions or partial questions that have been asked by some of the members across the way, so I'm wondering if the Premier might just give us a bit of a clearer indication of what the intent of this policy is all about.

Mr. Stelmach: The intent of the policy with respect to the corporate communications policy is laudable. We want to ensure that we have open communications across the provincial government and make sure that these are well co-ordinated and effective. They also have to be fiscally responsible but also responsive to the needs of Albertans. This includes not only communicating to Albertans but also actively listening to Albertans and making sure that not only is our message getting across to Albertans but also hearing from Albertans that we're getting the right message from them as well in a number of jurisdictions.

Now, many jurisdictions, including the federal government, use communications policies to help ensure the public receives timely, clear, and accurate information about the priorities, policies, programs, any changes that may be coming forward, and, of course, the services we offer on their behalf. A few detailed examples of this policy illustrate this. For instance, we try to consistently and clearly identify communications materials from the government of Alberta. That means everything from ads in papers to postings on the Internet, signs on government buildings. Of course, now we have the benefit of our new Alberta brand to help us in that identification. As outlined in the policy, we also aim to communicate with Albertans through a variety of ways, providing information in the formats that are most appropriate and accommodate different needs. We provide documents in large print for seniors or for those that are visually impaired. Again, that's also a part of the policy.

In terms of accommodating needs, we also take care to ensure we are sensitive to concerns of the public and respect privacy and individual rights. We always try to be as prompt, courteous, and responsive as possible.

There was a comment made about a particular staff member. McDougall Centre houses many public functions as a government building: AEDA, Alberta Economic Development Authority; the Calgary Homeless Foundation; and the Premier's office; and it's used for government meetings like caucus. Once again, the person the member refers to does not work for the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for that clarification, Mr. Premier. Certainly, I think you have some laudable goals. I'm just wondering, in terms of taking this across all the ministries, how you'll be achieving this. Is this something that the PAB will be responsible for, and how do you expect to achieve that across ministries?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The Public Affairs Bureau is the lead in administering this policy to make sure that across ministries we have the same message, concise, and it's ensuring that we're relying on every communications tool to make sure that that happens. Now, as the various branches do their jobs, the Public Affairs Bureau provides guidance. It provides support in a variety of areas.

In terms of cross-ministry initiatives we are moving more and more to cross-ministry initiatives with respect to a lot of the social benefits, whether it be seniors, lower income Albertans, et cetera. How do you collapse all that information that's going forward into a concise package that is presentable, understandable to Albertans that do rely on that information? That's the main priority, the main job of the Public Affairs Bureau, that they manage the delivery of that information and the message.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to raise a few issues. I am on page 125 of the business plans. I have a handful of issues, so I'll go back and forth with the Premier if that's okay.

Strategic priority 1 on page 125 speaks to strengthening agency governance, and it says, "Support the implementation of the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act," and it goes on from there. Mr. Premier, you may well know that there are concerns in the largest Alberta government agency, Alberta Health Services, that there are potential conflicts of interest. That arises in situations where there are physicians occupying positions in a public organization who are assigning contracts or allocating business to clinics in which they are investors. I'm thinking, for example, in Calgary. This has historically occurred – and I expect it's still occurring – around orthopaedic surgeries, for hip and knee replacement. I'm certain that it's still occurring in the cataract surgery industry in Calgary.

It's blatant violation of good governance. It would be not unlike, say, an assistant deputy minister of Transportation being able to channel road-building contracts to a company that he or his family are shareholders in. So I'm wondering if the Premier is prepared in this coming year, given his strategic priority 1, to take a hard stand on conflicts of interest in health care delivery and bring performance there up to the standard that would be accepted generally as a best practice for public governance.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure. Provide the names of the individuals that are in question, and we'll make sure that there is no conflict of interest.

Dr. Taft: I'll start with Dr. Stephen Miller – you can take notes on this – who is a very senior orthopaedic surgeon in Calgary and an investor in Network Health, HRG. For many years he was, in fact, chief of orthopaedics in the Calgary health region and, I suspect, may well still serve in an influential role in orthopaedic surgery allocations in Alberta Health Services.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you're on the estimates?

Dr. Taft: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I'd suggest that you consult your Beauchesne's on what's allowed and what's not allowed in terms of relevance. I've cited the page, I've cited the paragraph, and then I quoted from the sentence that I'm referring to.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

Another name would be the Huangs out of Calgary. Their company is called Enterprise Universal. One of the Huang brothers was chief of ophthalmology for the Calgary health region for many years and was actively involved in – well, in fact, we have copies of correspondence – assigning surgeries to clinics that he owns. It's a real concern to other people doing ophthalmological surgery, cataract surgery, in Calgary because they, frankly, feel like perhaps the Huangs have an inside track.

Those are two names, and I'd urge you to look into that.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Dr. Taft: Again, I would tell the minister who's heckling that I'm referring specifically to page 125 of the business plan, strategic priority 1. The sentence from which I'm working says: "Support the implementation of the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act." Okay? I hope the minister takes some lessons in Beauchesne.

Now I'll turn to page 126. Again, it's Executive Council business plan 2010. I'll quote from goal 1 of Executive Council: "Government policy and planning are coordinated and effective." It says under What It Means: "Decision makers need comprehensive and coordinated policy and planning advice and analysis to make strategic decisions."

Perhaps the most fundamental strategic decision that his government has to make is around securing its long-term fiscal security. I know this is an interest for the Premier. I suspect it's a priority. I'm thinking back to correspondence that was submitted to the government from Jack Mintz after his fiscal review indicating that the government needed to have some $200 billion in reserve if it was to be able to sustain its spending in the long term.

I'm wondering if the Premier, as the leader of the government of Alberta and as the person who is in charge in Executive Council of "comprehensive and coordinated policy and planning," sees a way forward to securing or meeting the challenges of the Mintz report and ultimately obtaining a $200 billion plus balance in the heritage fund or an equivalent. What's being done now to address those long-term strategic needs?

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to the two names that were mentioned, I heard the words: was a member. I'd like to know from you: is. Put that in writing, send it to my office, and I'll check it out. But make sure that it is a member. No, no. You've done that in the past, so just put it in writing and send it to me, and we'll get it to you in writing because, you know, using members' names and was a member, not is but was. However, in terms of the implementation of the Public Agencies Governance Act this is an area that we have undertaken through legislation and will be following up on under regulations.

About 50 per cent of the money, maybe even more of the money, that taxpayers give us goes through various boards and agencies to support the various programs through various authorities. The purpose, of course, is to ensure that we have the right people for the right job by requiring competence-based recruitment and appointments; encouraging agencies to improve their effectiveness by providing orientation, evaluation, and training to their members; requiring agencies to have a written statement of their mandate, roles and responsibilities, and code of conduct; clarifying the relationships and accountabilities between government and agencies; requiring periodic reviews of all agencies to ensure they are operating as effectively as possible and ensuring the public knows what steps are being taken to promote agency effectiveness.

This is, I believe, one of the few pieces of legislation that have been passed within the country of Canada. The Agency Governance Secretariat has been working with departments and agencies to develop regulations to accompany the act. The process of consultation has been extensive, and we have close to final versions of the regulations that we can implement.

You know, I can go from so many of the elements, from agency creation and review, agency inventory, mandate and roles documents, competency-based appointments, orientation to public-sector governance, governance fixed term length and maximum years of service for directors, codes of conduct, evaluation processes, agency member remuneration, and responding to the Auditor General recommendations, which was brought up here earlier, in terms of the compensation practices and some of the compensation of senior executives that agreements were entered into with.

The comment made I think it was with respect to the Mintz report. I am actually buoyed by the fact that the member across is serious now about putting some money aside because I remember in the last campaign part of their policy was to spend the money that we had in the sustainability fund on infrastructure within a matter of years. Glad that they've reversed their original policy decision from the last election, and they're going to be working with the government to build a long-term savings policy for future generations.

I guess that's it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Actually, we had a very extensive policy developed in which we took the initiative in the last election and in probably 18 months leading up to the election put in place a formula to save a substantial portion of nonrenewable resource revenues to get us towards a much larger heritage fund, which in the long term could sustain government spending. Is there any work going on in the government's strategic business plan or its other policy initiatives to look at that sort of option? Is there work being done on the feasibility of setting aside a portion of nonrenewable resource revenues into a permanent savings account that would be like an endowment fund for the government of Alberta?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Yes. It's a responsibility of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. He'll be working through the policy discussion both within government but also seeking an opinion from Albertans in terms of how the fund should be built and how it should be retained for future generations.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: I'll leave it at that. Thanks. Give somebody else a try.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just don't want to disappoint the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, so page 189 of the estimates. We're going to be going over the Public Affairs budget and the Executive Council budget and the branding initiative, specifically those first two items.

Again, to the salaries. I just have to get my head around this, and excuse me for not being able to do it sooner, but we want to compare apples to apples, and I agree with that. If you go to the other provinces, what they're paying their Deputy Minister for the Executive Council and their chief of staff, for the deputy minister Alberta's is $531,000. B.C. is $289,000; Ontario, $239,000. If you look at the chief of staff, Alberta is at $390,000; B.C., $229,000.

Again, I think those are apples to apples, and just in this time, with the deficit being the size that it is, with having to lead by example, how can we excuse that difference? B.C. is a bigger province than us. It's bigger. It's about a million people bigger. How are we paying our chief of staff and deputy minister that much more money?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, I'm going to go through it one more time. I agree that B.C. is a bigger province and, in fact, will be at about . . . [interjection] Well, he says better run. I guess with this latest budget their accumulated debt will be close to $30 billion. So I guess, you know, if we wouldn't have had prudent planning, we would not have a sustainability fund to carry us through some very, very difficult economic times. You know, it's a matter of opinion as to who is better run. If he thinks that B.C. is a better run province with that accumulated debt, so be it. I mean, I'm not going to argue with the individual.

The salaries and benefits disclosure. Again, I read into the record earlier in terms of the amount that the member is referring to. There were two individuals in that position. One was leaving, and a new deputy started, so there were some vacation payouts, et cetera.

The base salary for a senior here is $320,000; for the chief of staff it's $253,000. What they've done is they've taken a 10 per cent reduction in their salary plus the elimination of the bonus, so with that, as I read into the record earlier, it's almost, I think, 200 and some-odd thousand dollars. I don't have all of the information in front of me, but that is a substantial reduction, plus the fact that over government $1.4 million savings resulted from managerial people getting together and saying, "Look, we'll forgo part of our compensation," which was the bonus, and that was about $1.4 million. That is just for the Executive Council. That is a significant reduction for Executive Council, $1.4 million.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. It's on the record now.

Returning to the Public Affairs Bureau and the Executive Council office and their budgets, this is important because you said earlier on that the Public Affairs Bureau, nonpartisan, completely nonpartisan. You've established that Ms Powless does not work in the Public Affairs Bureau. Great. She does work out of the McDougall Centre during the day, you've said, so the question is: who pays for her salary? Is it the Executive Council, or is it the Public Affairs Bureau? If it's not Public Affairs, I'm assuming it's Executive Council during the day, her day job, as you referred to it. If so, if that is her day job, why was she up here this morning during the day covering our press conference in the press room downstairs? Did she have a day off today, and if so, why was she given a day off? I don't think today is a holiday.

5:30

Mr. Stelmach: Information is that she's not a member of the Executive Council.

But speaking about Executive Council, when I mentioned that $1.4 million Executive Council bonus that has been eliminated, the total across government in compensation for management and, again, voluntarily given up in bonuses across government was a saving of $40 million. That is a substantial saving in the budget.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. That's good information.

Again, she's an employee of the Executive Council. Will the Premier undertake to find out why she was here today covering an event in the legislative media room downstairs when she works out of the McDougall Centre? That's a partisan activity.

Mr. Stelmach: You know, I'm not even aware that a lady with that name was here in the building. I will get some further detail. I don't know what the issue there is. Anyway, we'll get the information.

Mr. Anderson: That's fair. I appreciate that.

Now, just to end off, I'd like to talk a little bit about the chief of staff and his role. I do have a good understanding, I feel, of what the deputy minister does in the Executive Council. I'm a little bit hazier on the chief of staff. What, Mr. Premier, do you feel is the chief of staff's role? You're smiling from ear to ear. It must be an important role. Could you tell me what that role is?

Mr. Stelmach: The chief of staff, of course, takes most of the arrows in terms of issues management with respect to, you know, cabinet and caucus, does similar work compared to executive assistants to ministers. He has a huge responsibility in ensuring that the cabinet is apprised of various issues and situations. It takes a lot of time. It's not an easy job. There are issues that arise, human resource issues to issues that may come forward at any particular time, any time of the day or night. It is not an easy role to fulfill, but he's doing an excellent job.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. So he's paid $390,000, obviously, it sounds like, to oversee the staff that you have in government. That amount over and above what we pay you as Premier, what the government of Alberta pays you as Premier, is that hazard pay for taking those extra slings and arrows, perhaps? What's the reason for that extra amount?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm not quite sure what extra amount he's talking about. My salary?

Mr. Anderson: No, no. Sorry. The amount that he makes more than you, Mr. Premier: why is that? Is that because of all the slings and arrows he has to take?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, I think the earlier questioning was that the Premier should be the highest paid official in government. That would be relative to a mayor paid higher than the CEO or the CAO of the municipality, you know, or a university professor paid less than the Premier, all of those things. We're attracting good, qualified people to various management positions, and we are in the median in terms of staffing in those particular areas. If that is the new policy for an individual for that party, then so be it. I guess we're either going to see a huge reduction one way or a huge increase for the position, whether it be a mayor or Premier, which I don't accept.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I think Albertans would feel a lot better. You know, I don't think anyone has a problem with what the Premier makes. I think he's one of the hardest working if not the hardest working person in this House, absolutely. There's no doubt about that. What I think Albertans have a problem with is that his chief of staff and his deputy minister and the people that are supposed to report to him are making that much more when they're supposed to be in the public service. But we'll move on.

The role of the chief of staff again. Is there any policy development role that the chief of staff plays? Is his job to communicate important things to cabinet and caucus, or does he also get himself involved in the development of policy, and to what extent would that involvement be?

Mr. Stelmach: Policy is developed by elected officials. The process is that members, government members have ideas, different policy objectives, maybe something reflecting the wishes of their particular constituency that they bring forward to caucus. Caucus then can take it forward to a cabinet policy discussion, where the minister then will build a ministerial recommendation. That recommendation comes back to CPC. CPC then has a look at it, whether they support the ministerial recommendation. They may change some of it, may add to it, maybe delete some part of it. Once that cabinet policy committee makes a decision on it, then it goes to cabinet for final approval.

Then the co-ordination in terms of if it's policy, that has to be then announced provincially. That is co-ordinated through the Public Affairs Bureau to make sure that the information is disseminated to all Albertans. The policy may be with respect to an issue, perhaps, in Transportation or in any department, new legislation that's passed and the regulations that follow and how we communicate those with those authorities that will have to implement those regulations, or maybe changes in the Municipal Government Act that various municipalities will then have to abide by. So there's a lot of time spent in communicating all those policy decisions over to the PAB and getting the correct information out.

Mr. Anderson: We're paying the chief of staff this amount of money, so I'm just wondering. Again I go back to policy. I want to understand his role in the development of policy. I guess the problem I have or the concern I have, the thing that's unclear is, for example, in the Calgary Herald the other day the chief of staff was quoted as saying that he wants to make sure that the government consults more with Albertans as we go forward on various different topics. What the topics are, that's policy, so we won't go there, but he wants to consult more. I'm wondering: when he said that, I'm assuming the Premier would say in that case that the chief of staff was talking that the Premier would consult more with Albertans going forward on these difficult policy decisions. Or is he talking about the chief of staff consulting more with Albertans as we go forward on these difficult policy decisions?

Mr. Stelmach: We're going to have quite an extensive policy discussion this spring and into summer, and that is with respect to following up on the recommendations that have been brought forward by the health committee, that is chaired very ably, that brought forward a number of recommendations. Those recommendations then go to a policy field committee. We will hear representations from Albertans in terms of: how do we build an act that reflects health provision services in this province for seniors, acute care, emergency? Is the health care relevant, or can we add to it, add a few more principles? All of those things are just an example of the consultation that will take place.

I feel that we're the closest now, in all the years that I've had the pleasure of representing the constituency, to getting full input from Albertans. Initial input was from, of course, the health care providers, the advocates that brought forward recommendations. Now those recommendations are going forward to a full policy discussion, again, something that this government introduced. We never had policy field committees before. It has been, I believe, an improvement and an opportunity for Albertans to bring forward their views on various issues that go before the policy field committee.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, time? How much time left?

The Deputy Chair: You've got over five minutes left.

Mr. Anderson: Five minutes. Okay.

I guess that moving along on this with regard to the executive, I want to understand, too, the Executive Council and the budget that we spend on it and its role with regard to policy-making and how caucus relates to that Executive Council decision. For example, to put it into context, you have a caucus meeting on, say, the budget, and you approve certain parameters in the budget. After a caucus makes approvals and it goes to Executive Council, are the recommendations of caucus often superceded by Executive Council as that process goes forward? I mean, the budget document I remember before I left the government is very different from the one that was announced in the House, yet there was no caucus meeting in between. I'm wondering: does Executive Council have the ability or the power to change that, and does the chief of staff have any role at all in making those changes? They don't seem to be going through the elected representatives unless you're the one making those changes or approving them.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the budget I think we've got to go back to British parliamentary practice. This caucus had an open discussion in terms of the goals and objectives of government and funding their priorities. Definitely, out of that discussion health was a priority; postsecondary education was a priority. I heard good discussion about infrastructure as well. We heard a considerable amount of good, positive information from caucus members, but the final budget document is in the total purview, control of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. The reason I say that is that there may be some budget implications with respect to tax changes, maybe tax increases, maybe tax decreases, maybe new forms of taxation, you know, maybe a tax put on gasoline, for instance, all of those things.

Well, as I said before in this House when the question was raised, I believe, in question period, I would have had to fire the Minister of Finance and Enterprise if he had discussed these changes with a small group of elected government members and given the information well in advance of these changes in the budget. That, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, is not part of British parliamentary practice.

The information in terms of goals, objectives, where is the priority spending given a limited revenue stream: those generally remain with caucus, but the final determination is always made by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise in delivering the budget in this House.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. That makes sense. I guess the question would be: bringing it back to what we were discussing, does Executive Council have an effect on what the minister of finance would put out in their final budget?

Mr. Stelmach: The cabinet, because it's Executive Council, certainly works with the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, but in terms of delivery the final detail in that budget speech is up to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Cabinet does have the authority to discuss it openly and give suggestions to the minister of finance, but all of those things are maintained in strict confidence around the cabinet table because, once again, in British parliamentary practice Executive Council is the government.

In this particular case in this government and in this caucus we had very extensive discussions in terms of the goals and priorities, on where we want to see increased spending, where we want to see reductions and in what departments, and that was made around the general caucus table. The very specifics, though, still are within Executive Council and within the purview of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Mr. Anderson: I guess I'll just say it this way. In the Executive Council did the current minister of finance bring forward these changes, or were they determined before he came into his current position by Executive Council?

Mr. Stelmach: All discussions of Executive Council are confidential.

Mr. Anderson: That's what I thought. That's it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I would like to go back. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview started by questioning the government priorities on page 126, that again government policy and planning are co-ordinated and effective. I guess the Premier answered a little bit earlier that we are going to come out of this the best of any province. I don't think there's an Albertan that isn't grateful for the sustainability fund, but the key of the sustainability fund and what the Wildrose Alliance and the Liberals were saying is that what we need to do is have a big enough sustainability fund that it is sustainable. The spending is out of control, and the Premier says: well, we're going to come out of this the best of any province. Does he actually have a date when this is going to turn around and our revenue is going to balance the budget?

Currently we're not the best run, in my humble opinion, when we have a $4.7 billion deficit that's acknowledged and a true deficit of $7.5 billion. We have, well, a liability to the teachers' pension fund of currently $7 billion. The next Premier of this province is going to inherit a debt that is going to be enormous. Are we going to be able to pay it off? I guess that with the Premier talking about the importance of renegotiating because of boom times in the oil and gas industry, because the salaries really boomed as well in the Executive Council in that same period, has the Premier considered renegotiating the salary of his Executive Council?

Mr. Stelmach: There was so much there from all over the place. For the matter of the record, we are the only jurisdiction in Canada that has a large sustainability fund, $17 billion. We are also the only jurisdiction in Canada that has another, additional savings fund, which is the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, which, I might add, is rebounding very, very quickly, much faster than originally anticipated given the losses and the economic downturn. You know, all of us have lost significant dollars in our RRSPs and our investments during that difficult period. We're going to see the heritage savings trust fund come back, and there are policies that could be changed with respect to the heritage savings trust fund. Do we leave all the money in? Do we just inflation-proof it? All of these things will be discussed by Albertans.

I will say, though, that there was some mention that, well, we should have listened to someone that said, "You put all this money in Alberta heritage savings trust fund to build the fund, and your operational fund should only be 10 per cent of your operating," which would have been a little less than $4 billion. Well, there is no one in this House or anywhere that's going to come forward and say: "You know what? You should have anticipated the most severe economic downturn since the '30s." Nobody did that.

The reason we put that much money in the sustainability fund, the $17 billion, is that we already knew the volatility of our oil and gas. You can't go from $75 to $147 and then down to $30. In fact, I remember being questioned in this House by the opposition, who said: well, you know, you capped oil royalties at $120, and it's now $147, and you're losing money. Everybody got excited. Well, within months it was down to $30, and in fact at the end of the year we hit what we thought would be an anticipated average for oil, around $72, for that particular year. That's good budgeting.

The other thing is that we are debt free. We learned a lesson. We paid those debts off in the '90s, and I'm one of the members in this House who went through the pain of getting there. It wasn't easy, and we're not going down that road again.

The other thing is that we have the most competitive taxes in the country of Canada. While we suffered through this economic downturn, there was unemployment. There's no doubt about it. It was across areas from forestry to agriculture, oil and gas, tourism, you know, with fewer people travelling. Our small business suffered through all of this. During that period of time this province still contributed $21.1 billion to Ottawa, and collectively over the last 10 years it's $131 billion. We're still at $200 per capita, about $700 million, short on our Canada health transfer even after contributing all of those. I've mandated the Minister of Finance and Enterprise to start working with the federal government on how we can correct this fiscal imbalance.

All this talk about saving $200 billion. I've asked the presenter of that particular policy: how are you going to defend it if you have such a large savings account when you know you have people down east that just want to get their fingers on it at some time because they're going to have accumulated debts in the billions? I mean, Ontario's will probably be $200 billion, Quebec's probably $200 billion or more. That doesn't include their Crown corporation debt, Mr. Chair, not one dollar of Crown corporation debt.

What is going to happen to the country of Canada if we don't get on the road to recovery and balanced budgets? We're going to do this in this province in spite of the fact that we took such a huge hit economically. We're going to be balanced and we're going to be back in the black by 2012-13. We're going to be the first jurisdiction to do it in Canada. We're going to have money in our sustainability account. While others are going to be adding to their debt, we're going to have money in the bank. We're going to be able to attract even more investment because we're going to be the most innovative and competitive economy in all of Canada and, indeed, North America. I promise that to every Albertan.

Mr. Hinman: Will the Premier promise not to run in the next election, then, if he's not back in the black? I'm almost amused at some of the statements that he's making there that we're not running a deficit.

There were a lot of nobodies – and I was one of those nobodies – who said that we shouldn't spend more than 25 per cent of our resource revenue on our year-to-year budgeting. We were way over that. There are many economists that directed that to him. I will agree: this government doesn't have the courage to stand up and defend a $200 billion heritage trust fund. But the purpose of that is so that if you look at the average return on investment of 6 per cent, it would be roughly $12 billion, which would replace the revenue that would be lost when our resource revenue is depleted. There are many nobodies, Mr. Chair, who have given instructions, but just like the instructions on not changing the royalty framework – and I was one of those nobodies who said that – this Premier didn't listen to it.

My question on all of that. He talks about the heritage trust fund; he talks about the sustainability fund. The sustainability fund is there when you can sustain your spending. This government is not able to sustain that spending. It's off the chart, whether it's infrastructure and other things. It was burning a hole in their pocket, but thankfully there wasn't enough capacity in the industry to even spend all that money, so they had to save it. But what did he . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now immediately rise and report progress on the estimates of Executive Council. I would invite the staff to leave now.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for Executive Council relating to the 2010-2011 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: All those members in concurrence with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 10, 2010

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome. I would ask all members to remain standing after the prayer so that we may pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Mr. Thomas (Tom) George Thurber
October 26, 1934, to March 7, 2010

The Speaker: Mr. Thomas (Tom) George Thurber, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, sworn in as member 618, passed away on Sunday, March 7, 2010, at the age of 75 years. Mr. Thurber was first elected in the election held March 20, 1989, and served three terms until March 11, 2001. During his years of service he represented the constituencies of Drayton Valley-Calmar and Drayton Valley for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his terms of office Tom Thurber served on Executive Council as Minister of Public Works, Supply and Services from June 30, 1993, to December 21, 1994, and as Minister of Municipal Affairs from December 21, 1994, to March 26, 1997. He also served on the standing committees on Law and Regulations, Private Bills, Public Accounts, and Public Affairs.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office.

Tom Thurber, in his own inimitable way, has asked that there be no memorial nor funeral for him because he did not want people standing around talking about him.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. member Tom Thurber as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour it is for me today as one of the 2.2 million Albertans that are sharing in the rich ancestry of the European Union and one of those states to be able to welcome somebody in our midst to this Chamber who comes representing that wonderful European Union. Our history in Alberta is rich and richer by far because of the association we have of the people that are descendants from one of these countries, and together they form Alberta's fourth-largest market. It's a real honour today to introduce His Excellency Ambassador Matthias Brinkmann, who arrives here as head of the delegation of the European Union to Canada, who has recently with his wife and four children taken up residence in Ottawa. Accompanying him is Luigi Scarpa de Masellis, who is the adviser, economic and commercial affairs, from the embassy in Ottawa. I would ask them to please rise in your gallery so that we can give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 30 young visitors from Aldergrove elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Christine Steil, and by one of the parents, Mrs. Kathy McDonald. We had a good, long chat with these bright young people about what they wanted to do. I was quite impressed and amazed by their understanding of the process. They were asking questions about Committee of the Whole and laws and bills and how long it took to pass a law. In fact, I thought: well, geez, they know almost as much as their MLA if not more. These young people want to grow up to be veterinarians, snowboarders, soccer players, pharmacists, firefighters, and doctors. But to tell you the truth, with their knowledge of the Legislature I think we've got a bunch of future leaders sitting up there. I'd like to ask all of my colleagues to welcome these young people to the House and ask all of my friends to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House visitors from my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They are 14 wonderful students filled with passion for education from St. Matthew school, where with pride they emulate their school motto: Together toward Tomorrow. Indeed, togetherness and unity are needed for all of our tomorrows. The students are in the members' gallery, and they are joined by their teachers, Mrs. Karen Baniak and Mrs. MaryAnn Goetz, and parent helper Mr. Trevor Busch. I would ask that the students of St. Matthew school please rise with their teachers and parent helper to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce six individuals who are joining us today for a tour of the Legislature. They are participating in the government of Alberta's leadership program, which is a comprehensive 18-month program that encourages participants to develop their own leadership style. Participants experience leadership education, assessment and feedback, developmental experiences, and a chance to build new relationships with colleagues and mentors. I had the opportunity earlier today to meet with these people. They're interested, they're engaged, and they care what we do here. They are Carla Kolke and Anita Sharma from Alberta Justice, Sylvia Lepki from Employment and Immigration, Kathleen Pate from Energy, Kirk Wolstenholme from Sustainable Resource Development, Tyler Wightman from Municipal Affairs. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests seated in the members' gallery today. First, Mr. Amson Saintimé, president of the Haitian Community Services Centre, and Miss Christina Tertulien, administrative assistant from the same organization.

The Haitian Community Services Centre represents over 250 families in Edmonton. It fosters positive development of the local Haitian community and helps and guides them in settling and integrating into life in Edmonton. Since the earthquake in Haiti the centre has been very active in assisting these families in finding and creating support for loved ones in Haiti.

Accompanying them today is Ms Laura Roberts, communicator and advocate with the Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative. This co-op was created and operated by 40 community members and workers from 18 local immigrant and refugee communities in Edmonton. Currently it is the only workers' co-operative in Alberta. The co-op is involved in providing culturally and linguistically relevant holistic family support, community development, system navigation, and advocacy to over 1,500 families.

I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three guests in the public gallery. David Goa is the director of the Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion and Public Life. That's at the U of A's Augustana campus in Camrose. He's both a philosopher and a teacher who has spent 30 years of his life teaching religious studies at the U of A and also doing field research work in the study of culture at the Royal Alberta Museum. Along with him are his friends Faris Kaya and Riza Akcali. They are, as I said, seated in the public gallery. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly and especially the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere one of my staff members from government members' communication, Ms Jessica Powless. This lady with blond hair supports all members of Calgary caucus, which once included both of our former colleagues. Ms Powless keeps our Calgary members up to date on current events, news stories, messaging, and media as well as other duties prescribed by myself, her supervisor. Ms Powless is a valued member of our team, and I would ask her to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, each day I've been introducing members of the professional film and television community by name, and each day more of them have been coming to show their concern for the competitiveness of this sector in Alberta. Today there are too many of them to name, so I would ask them to please rise as a group. They're representing a wide cross-section of people who work in the film and television industry in Alberta. I'm very pleased to welcome you to the Assembly. Please, I would ask that you join me in extending that welcome to everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the very talented staff members of the Wildrose Alliance caucus. If they would stand as they are called. With us today are Ms Barb Currie, legislative assistant to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore; Mr. James Johnson, researcher for the Wildrose caucus; and Mr. Jeff Trynchy, legislative assistant for myself and for the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. They've been of great assistance to us in keeping us on our toes, and we're having a good time up there. I'd like for them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Seniors' Consultation in Calgary

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In an ongoing effort to foster dialogue between government and community, I had the privilege of organizing a function that involved several seniors' groups in my community and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. This particular function was also attended by the Member for Calgary-Mackay, the Member for Calgary-East, and the Member for Calgary-Fort. As well, parts of the day were attended by the Member for Calgary-McCall. The combined efforts of Marichu Antonio of the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary and Lalita Singh of the United Way made this meeting a great success.

I would like to thank all the seniors' organizations for participating and for making our community that much stronger. Bear with me, Mr. Speaker. There are many of them: the Bangladesh Canada Association, the Calgary Hambastagi Cultural Association, the Canadian Hispanic Seniors Society, the Council of Sikh Organizations, the Filipino Christian Fellowship, FOCUS on Seniors, the Filipino Calgarian Seniors Club, the Guru Ravidass seniors' society, INCA seniors' society, the Indo-Canadian immigrant seniors' organization, the North Calgary Cultural Association, the Somali Canadian Society of Calgary, the Tibetan Association of Alberta, the United Sudanese-Canadian Enhancement Society, Portail de l'immigration association de Calgary – I'm sure I didn't do that justice – the Young Once Seniors Association of Calgary, the Calgary Chinese Elderly Citizens' Association, the Golden Generation club, the Calgary Korean Association, the Calgary Vietnamese veterans' association, the Royal Women Association, and the Indo-Canadian seniors' society as well as the Peruvian association.

Mr. Speaker, it's our seniors that built this province, and quite frankly it's their generosity and their hard work that leads and helps us, really, to ensure that our future generations foster a spirit of caring as they did.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

2010 Arctic Winter Games

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week I had the privilege of attending the 2010 Arctic Winter Games in Grande Prairie, which run from March 6 through 13. What an amazing celebration of circumpolar peoples, youth sports, and cultural excellence.

The opening ceremonies were reminiscent of the Vancouver Olympics, with tremendous creativity and talent expressed in unique cultural presentations. Key organizers were the Grande Prairie 2010 Winter Games Society, Grande Prairie city council, and the county of Grande Prairie, with several thousand volunteers as well as support from the provincial and federal governments. I was thrilled to hand out medals to a number of world-class athletes who came to compete in events such as skiing, snowshoeing, dog mushing, high kicking, and many more. In fact, the medals themselves are quite beautiful, shaped like ulus, the traditional Inuit knife. What a thrill for the young people to earn and a life-changing experience for most of the competitors.

Participating athletes came from the Yukon, Alaska, Quebec, Nunavut, the Northwest Territories, Greenland, Scandinavia, and Russia. It took three years of planning and effort to transform Grande Prairie into the host city, and all Albertans should be very proud of the results.

Dream, Achieve, Inspire: this was the motto of the 2010 Arctic Winter Games, and the people of Grande Prairie and their guests from across Canada and the world embraced these words with passion. Naturally, I am rooting for team northern Alberta to bring home the most ulus, but no matter the final result, we can all take pride in Grande Prairie and her people for a remarkable achievement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Chester Ronning Centre

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to venture to guess that most of my colleagues here are probably like me. Some days they get up and wonder: "What am I doing? What am I accomplishing?" You know, we come from many different belief systems, many different traditions, and sometimes it's challenging to kind of just maintain a handle on where we're headed.

About four or five years ago the Chester Ronning Centre was launched at Augustana campus of the University of Alberta in Camrose. The centre strives to cultivate a deeper understanding of the relationship between religion and public life and faith. The centre was the first research institution in Canada to study this intersection of religion and public life and provide us with a better understanding of these issues. It's vital to have a truly comprehensive knowledge of this intersection of beliefs for us to understand the events that are shaping our world.

Although the Ronning centre is located in little Camrose, director David Goa, whom I just introduced, and his associates realize that the work extends far beyond the walls of that academic institution. Routine meetings with members of various religious traditions are beneficial in providing an understanding of how those traditions are positioning their citizens in this changing world.

The Ronning centre is named after a great Canadian and a great Camrosian, Chester Ronning, who lived in Camrose for years, was president of Camrose Lutheran College, was a member of this Assembly, and also was one of Canada's most distinguished diplomats. His most notable work was bridging communications between North America and China, which facilitated the Canadian government's recognition of the new Chinese government in 1970. He strove for a better understanding between east and west, and now this centre with his name strives for a better understanding of issues where faith and public life intersect.

It's an honour to have that centre in my constituency, and I'd like to thank Mr. Goa and his associates for their work. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Calgary Vietnamese Tet Festival Celebration

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary's Vietnamese community chose a unique and very meaningful way to bring in the lunar new year, or Tet Festival, this year. The Calgary Vietnamese Youth Group, the Vietnamese Students Association, and the Association for the Encouragement of Learning brought together 700 people for a celebration focused on youth education, support, and achievements.

The event started with a keynote speaker, Dr. Kim Nguyen-Lam, who shared her inspirational story of struggle, overcoming barriers, and success. It is also a story of community mobilization, institutional change, and struggle for full participation. From refugee to faculty member, associate director of the Center for Language Minority Education and Research at California State University to state panel member related to teacher credentialing and preparation programs and policies, and on board of trustees of the Garden Grove unified school board district, Dr. Nguyen-Lam is a tireless leader in the promotion of educational equity for racial and linguistic minority students, families, and communities. Her appointment as the chief superintendent of a school district, which was rescinded due to her race, sparked a community movement to examine issues of diversity and institutional discrimination.

This new year gathering also included 17 career mentors who provided advice to students and a presentation from Alberta Advanced Education and Technology's Learning Clicks ambassador, who also distributed interactive Learning Clicks CDs to the 400 youth in attendance. Representatives from the University of Calgary, SAIT, and Mount Royal University were also there to provide information to the youth and their families. The event concluded with scholarship awards given to 276 students from grades 7 to 12, who also received a letter of congratulations from Alberta's Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Montrose, who was also in attendance, agrees with me that it was a wonderful event of community connection, reflection, learning, and celebration. I'd like to thank the many leaders and volunteers for organizing this event that benefits the entire community. Thank you.

The Clerk: Oral Question Period.

The Speaker: Mr. Clerk, would you just hold the clock?

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we commence Oral Question Period today, the chair would like to advise the House that yesterday afternoon the Speaker's office received a copy of a House leaders' agreement signed by the Government House Leader and the House leaders for the Official Opposition, the New Democrat and the Wildrose Alliance caucuses, and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

In brief, this agreement proposes a new question period rotation and the addition of two more members' statements per week. As indicated in the chair's February 8, 2010, statement on the subject of the rotation of questions, which can be found at pages 16 to 19 of Alberta Hansard for that day, the chair is always amenable to agreement among the caucuses, but it must be acceptable to all of the parties in the Assembly. In the absence of such agreement, which materialized only yesterday, the chair devised a scheme for the rotation of question period to ensure the smooth operation of the Assembly while recognizing the changes in caucus numbers.

The rotation outlined in the February 8, 2010, statement ends today and will be replaced by the rotation provided for in the House leaders' agreement outlined in the memo from the Government House Leader to House leaders dated March 4, 2010, and subsequently sent to the Speaker by the Government House Leader under cover of a March 9, 2010, memorandum.

The chair wishes to advise members that commencing today the rotation of questions during Oral Question Period shall be as follows. The Official Opposition will continue to be entitled to the first three main questions each day. With respect to the routine on days 1 and 3, the Wildrose Alliance will be entitled to the fourth question, the New Democrats will be entitled to the fifth, and it would then alternate between the Official Opposition and government members until the 12th question, which would be asked by the Wildrose Alliance. The Official Opposition will be entitled to the 13th, 15th, and 17th questions, and members of the government caucus will be entitled to the 14th, 16th, 18th, and any subsequent questions, time permitting.

On day 2 the same sequence will apply except for the 12th question, which will be asked by the New Democrats.

Finally, on day 4 the rotation will shift slightly to accommodate the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. To be clear, the fourth question will go to the Wildrose Alliance, the fifth question will go to the New Democrats, and the independent member will be entitled to the sixth question. The questions will then alternate between the Official Opposition and members of the government caucus until the 13th question, which will be asked by the New Democrats. The Liberals will be entitled to the 14th, 16th, and 18th questions. Government members will be entitled to ask the 15th and 17th questions and any questions after the 18th.

To recap, for our four-day rotation, 18 questions per day schedule the Official Opposition will see their number of daily questions increase from eight to nine. The Wildrose Alliance caucus will get six questions instead of their current eight, a reduction of two. The ND caucus will get six questions instead of their current eight, a reduction of two. The PC private members' number will remain the same, with six questions on days 1, 2, and 3 and five on day 4. The independent member remains with one question per four days.

The chair also notes that House leaders agreed to eliminate preambles to supplementary questions. The chair will continue to undertake a vigilant watch of the clock to ensure that questions and answers do not exceed 35 seconds and will reinstate the rule prohibiting preambles for supplementaries. The agreement makes it very clear that there are to be no preambles to the supplementaries, and the supplementaries are to be on the same subject and purpose of the main question.

One last item noted in the agreement is the desire to increase the number of members' statements by two each week, with one being added to the Routine on Monday and the second on Thursday. This will require an amendment to the standing orders, so the chair would anticipate that this would be brought forward in the very near future by way of a government motion to be debated in the Assembly.

In the light of the new reality brought about by the House leaders' agreement, it seems only fitting that today be considered day 1. The revised schedule is on the members' desks. At the appropriate time in the Routine I will table the agreement, and following Orders of the Day members will receive copies of the agreement that I hope all will read carefully so that they can more completely understand all aspects of the agreement. This agreement is not precedent setting and does not bind either the chair or the Assembly and may change as new realities arrive.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Review of MLA Compensation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition for years has been fighting for an independent review of MLA salary and benefits. The need for this review was further highlighted when the Premier and his cabinet voted themselves huge raises after the last election. While we won the battle with the passing of Motion 501, there are still unanswered questions about the scope of review of this committee. To the Premier: will the recommendations of the committee be binding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I met with the hon. leader the other day, I believe at a social function here in the city of Edmonton, and I asked him if we can get an opportunity to just sit down and chat about the motion that was passed, since it was moved by an hon. member from the opposition. We're going to do whatever we can to work with the opposition parties and put the right committee in place. That information, I believe, goes to a committee that's chaired by you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the MLA pay committee's scope include the extra pay that government members receive for sitting on internal cabinet policy committees?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, I asked the hon. leader to sit down and work through all of these questions that they might have and also have input on what process we follow and what's on the table for review.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: will the MLA pay committee's scope include travel, accommodation, and hosting expenses that are claimed by both members and their assistants?

Mr. Stelmach: That comes out of the Legislative Assembly, so that's a completely different matter. But I will say, though, in terms of ministerial expenses, that I believe we're the only jurisdiction that on a regular basis puts all the expenses on the web on a regular interval. No matter what expenses are incurred in the office, all Albertans know of them almost immediately.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Closures

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Government utilization policy is forcing school boards to drain the city core of schools in favour of the suburbs. At the same time, cities like Edmonton and Calgary, in keeping with the government's own land-use framework, are trying to reduce urban sprawl and revitalize their cores, which is hard to do without good schools to attract people to the core. To the Premier: will the Premier commit to an expeditious review of these contradictory education and municipal policies before real damage is done to core neighbourhoods in Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not government policy that determines whether a school is closed or not. It's a question of what the most appropriate educational opportunities for students are. School boards have a responsibility to make sure they use their resources well to make sure that they have the best opportunity for students, and they do a good job at it. Edmonton public school board, with the city centre school project, closed some schools, yes, but made sure that the receiving schools provided a better educational opportunity for the students in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the last Minister of Education mentioned reviewing a school closure situation in 2005 and nothing happened, will the Premier end the empty promises and temporarily halt school closures in Edmonton and Calgary until this review is done?

Mr. Stelmach: As the minister mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we're going to do what's best in the interests of the education of the children.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. They're clearly not talking to each other in the government. Given the government's policies for school utilization are on a collision course with municipal development, why won't the Premier take this issue seriously and put in place a school utilization policy that actually works with our municipalities instead of against them?

2:00

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can let the hon. member know that I have had many, many conversations with school boards and with mayors and municipalities about how we can better use our schools both as a school facility and as a community facility. We're working very closely with them in terms of how surplus school properties can be utilized, how they can be maintained where necessary in order to be reused as a school when the neighbourhood regenerates. All of that work and that communication is actually happening.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Patient Safety Report

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday afternoon the Alberta Health Quality Council and Alberta Health Services released a one-and-a-half-page summary of a 60-page investigation into four patient safety incidents at the Children's hospital in Calgary. The Health Quality Council wanted the full report released; Alberta Health Services is blocking that release. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister exercise his authority and order Alberta Health Services to release the full, unedited report?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've spoken with the Health Quality Council. I've also spoken with Alberta Health Services not long ago. I've asked them to work together immediately to provide as much information as they possibly can and to release a full, detailed report regarding this matter as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Accountability cannot happen without full disclosure, and the Health Quality Council drafted the report so that it could be released without violating privacy. Mr. Minister, why the secrecy?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no secrecy. The fact is that you have to respect the parameters of the Alberta Evidence Act, you have to take into account the Health Information Act and what its parameters are, and then you have to contact family members. You have to work with physicians. You have to be very careful in these matters, and I'm sure the hon. member knows that. Those issues are being looked at as we speak, and I've asked for the full, detailed report to be released within 10 days.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this report was concluded in October. The Health Quality Council took full account of the issues that the minister has provided. The minister has made himself complicit in this cover-up. Why won't he stand behind the Alberta Health Quality Council and have this report released? Who's he trying to protect?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the member didn't hear what I just said. I said that I've spoken with both of these parties. I've asked them to go through this issue very thoroughly. They are doing that as we speak, and in less than 10 days they will have the full report issued to the public as requested by me the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Isn't this fun? Question, question, question. They never have answers. This is going to be fun.

This government seems to think that the world revolves around them. The government's bullying and cavalier attitude has a direct effect on hard-working Albertans, employers, investors, and small-business owners. This government yanked the rug out from underneath the most significant industries despite repeated warnings from those who actually understood the entire process. My question is to the Premier. Are the elected government MLAs going to have time to review and give meaningful input to the new, new, new, new, new royalty framework?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there was a committee established to review the competitiveness of the oil and gas sector. That report and the recommendations: the two people appointed, working with government and industry, have come to a number of recommendations. Those recommendations came forward to the minister. The minister has apprised cabinet of those recommendations, and then they will be moving forward for further review by caucus.

Mr. Hinman: Well, is that going to be a three-hour review or a couple of weeks?

Again to the Premier. The Department of Energy recently posted an unusually large block of land for bid. We'll know the results later today. Has the government been holding back on the release of this competitiveness review to try and take credit for a possible record land sale today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how holding back a report is going to either increase the land sales or decrease land sales. The companies that are bidding on land will make their own business decisions based on the current environment: the price of gas, the price of oil, some of the new technology that's being applied. But I also have to stress the fact that there are very good incentive programs, that were put in place just about a year ago, that are certainly supporting the increase in land sales over the last few months.

Mr. Hinman: It's interesting that we need to change it, then.

My question for the Premier is simple. What does he tell the tens of thousands of Albertans who lost their jobs and had their life savings drained to survive because the government got greedy and actually shrunk the economic pie with the great royalty robbery? What are you going to tell them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've gone through a huge economic downturn. I remember sitting in this particular Assembly when oil was $145, $147 a barrel, and it dropped down to $35, natural gas from $10 down to $3, and the fact that there have been significant finds in a number of American states, huge, huge reserves of gas in shale that we'll now be able to drill for and frac properly – those are changing conditions within the North American continent, and I said that we're going to be innovative and competitive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday a federal official testified in court that birds have been landing on tailings lakes and dying for at least 20 years. The provincial and federal governments receive reports on wildlife deaths every year, and I have one such report here, dated March 31, '06, to Alberta Environment. Allowing animals to come in contact with this waste means that industry has been in breach of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act for a long period of time. My question is to the Minister of Environment. How long have you known that oil sands companies were in breach of the act?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well, as I believe that we've even discussed it in this Assembly, that we have ongoing status of the impact that industrial development has on wildlife. Unfortunately, everything that we do as mankind in this world has some impact on wildlife. What we're dealing with here in Alberta is a trial that is dealing with the absence of mitigation to prevent undue harm to wildlife.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this minister should familiarize himself with the act that he's sworn to uphold.

Given that the industry files reports outlining wildlife deaths every year and knowing that industry had significant and recurring breaches of this act for decades, why did this minister not act sooner?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'll simply repeat what I said in answer to his first question. There are instances that, frankly, are unavoidable. Every day there are instances where the interaction of humans and animals results in the loss of life to the animals, whether it's through incidents on our highways or a myriad of other things. There are some instances that are simply unavoidable. What we're dealing with here is whether or not there was sufficient mitigation in place to avoid those kinds of interactions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, again to the minister. Given that hundreds of birds have surely died at oil sands sites and there are 20 or more just like this one, it's clear that this government is more concerned with protecting its friends than it is with protecting our environment and our international reputation. I want to know from the minister when this government will finally realize that this is damaging our international reputation and that it's the fact that they continue to put their friends ahead of the environment.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, what's most damaging to our international relationships are irresponsible statements like that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Support for the Film Industry

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Film Advisory Council has AMPIA producers, film commissioners, and unions working together to advise the minister. Unfortunately, the minister has not attended even one meeting in the last two years, and the MLA position that was on the council was cancelled. After a three-year consultation the council developed a business case for the minister. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Why has the minister abandoned the three-year Alberta film development business case? What happened to it?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, just to clarify one thing, I haven't been invited by the Alberta Film Advisory Council to a meeting until last week. I will be attending a meeting with them on the 29th of March. I have representatives from my department that attend those meetings on a regular basis.

As far as the business case, it was deemed when we sat down with the film producers and representatives from the guilds that some of the aspects of the business case weren't relevant and weren't going to go forward, so we have moved on.

Ms Blakeman: Of course you're invited. It's your council.

Given that our film industry needs both indigenous Alberta productions and the work for many Albertans through Hollywood big-budget movies, why is the minister continuing to pit the two sides against one another?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I've never pitted the two sides against one another. If that's the assertion the hon. member would make, ask somebody from AMPIA if I ever did anything disparaging to any member of a guild or union. Our crews, our grips, our camera people, our sound people are some of the very best, hard-working people in the entire world, and they're recognized as such internationally. I would never do anything to disparage that. We need to work together. I've consistently said that we need work together and would continue to work with those people who want to.

Ms Blakeman: You need to watch your Facebook postings, then.

Will the minister show leadership to the industry, commit to attending meetings of his own advisory council, re-establish the MLA co-chair, and work to rebuild this sector?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I as minister responsible for the film and television and digital industry will take responsibility for meeting with the representatives of that group. I don't think it's necessary for us to have an MLA co-chair. I will become active with that, as I have continued to be, and will continue to meet with anybody in the industry who's willing to meet with me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the news and the opposition have focused on concerns stemming from tailings ponds in our oil sands region. My question is for the Minister of Environment. What is this minister's response to those who say that we need to intervene and put an end to tailings ponds?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no denying that there are significant challenges associated with the development of oil sands, not the least of which are tailings ponds. But it's important to remember what the purpose of the tailings ponds is in the first place, and that is to prevent the process water from ever entering into our natural water courses. Safe, alternative ways of dealing with this waste water are constantly being improved, and the bottom line is that we are committed to ensuring that we continually have improvement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In order that concerns on tailings ponds be dealt with, government needs to play a key role and work with industry. What meaningful actions is this minister taking to ensure that the management of tailings ponds continues to improve?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are in fact taking action now. We're well along a path to long-term storage of tailings, and the interim directive 074, that was jointly developed by Alberta Environment along with the ERCB, talks about how we are going to manage tailings on a go-forward basis. There are really two issues. One issue is: how do we prevent the development of new tailings through new technology? Then the secondary: how do we eventually eliminate the existing tailings?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that my family lives very close to the Athabasca River, and the health of that river is very important to all of us. Potential seepage of tailings remains a problem. What actions is the minister taking to protect the environment from tailings pond seepage into the Athabasca River or our groundwater aquifers?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have the most intensive investigation that is known to ensure that we have the ability to detect seepage where it would exist. As I've said a number of times in this Legislature, there is no evidence that there is any seepage that is coming into contact with the Athabasca River. We are confident that the tailings ponds as they exist today are safe receptacles. That being said, we are committed to the elimination of those tailings ponds.

Kainai Community Correctional Centre

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, on February 9 the Kainai Community Corrections Society, who operate a corrections facility for Alberta's aboriginal population, were told they would have to close their doors on March 31 because this government would no longer provide funding to the facility. To the Solicitor General. After meeting with the people from Kainai, they indicated that the ministry was pleased with the performance of the facility. Given that, I was wondering why the corrections facility was being closed when so many aboriginal offenders could benefit from its existence.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. It allows me to clarify that there is absolutely no performance issue involved here. It's a simple matter of the fact that our minimum security inmate population has dropped radically as a result of conditional sentences, community supervision, those sorts of things, and the Kainai centre is around about 50 per cent capacity and continues to decline. I have those resources available in other centres, and we've made a budgetary decision. It has nothing to do with performance.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the Kainai community corrections facility is designed and operated for aboriginal offenders, who make up 35 per cent of Alberta's prison population, and not only that but it also employs 29 people on the Blood reserve, accordingly, could the Solicitor General please explain to me how closing this facility helps these aboriginal Albertans?

Mr. Oberle: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, my job here is to provide correctional services for the entire population spectrum of the province of Alberta. The fact is absolutely crystal clear. We have very few minimum security inmates anymore. That is a minimum security facility, and I can't fill it.

Mr. Hehr: Finally, Mr. Speaker, why did the Solicitor General give only 50 days' notice to the Kainai community corrections facility that they would be closing their doors within 50 days? Why the short notice?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am planning to meet – we're trying to arrange a date – with the leadership there, and we'll certainly talk about that. The fact of the matter is that I can't release budget details any time before the budget is actually tabled in the House, so I had no possibility of warning them of what was coming there. I will meet with the community and discuss their concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents and I have been closely watching the progress of the Anthony Henday Drive construction in north Edmonton and are excited to start driving on this new road. The section was scheduled to open in the fall of 2011. My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Will the government be able to deliver on its commitment to have the road completed in 2011?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say yes. Construction on the northwest Henday is on track, and it's set to open in the fall of 2011. The $1.42 billion road is being built as a P3, which allows the project to be completed two years earlier than conventional delivery, will save taxpayers $240 million, and this will give Albertans a 30-year warranty on the road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I am very glad to hear that construction is progressing well, my constituents are waiting for the final missing section that will connect Manning Drive to Yellowhead Trail to meet with highway 21. Can the minister tell us when the final section of the Anthony Henday Drive will be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department is moving ahead on the final section of the Anthony Henday, and I'm hoping that we can start the P3 process later on this spring. The final nine kilometres will connect Manning Drive with Yellowhead Trail on the east side of Edmonton, and it will include a new bridge over the North Saskatchewan River. Government has set the goal of completing the Anthony Henday Drive by 2015, and we're on track to meet that goal.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. How much of the capital plan is being spent this year on highway construction?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, a strong transportation network supports all sectors of the Alberta economy. It's vital to our future growth. Our roads are also fundamental to supporting and building strong communities. That's why Alberta is investing $1.9 billion on the provincial highway network this year. Our continued investment in road infrastructure is an important part of Alberta's economic recovery and our future growth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation would rather make excuses than take the initiative. He failed to fund the airport tunnel by passing the buck to the city of Calgary and so far – so far – failed to bring in distracted driving legislation. His excuse? He's waiting to get the legislation just right. To the Minister of Transportation. Ontario has distracted driving legislation. Why can't Alberta adopt something similar?

2:20

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that he's absolutely right on one thing: I'm waiting to make sure we can get it right. He's absolutely wrong on another. It's not our responsibility to fund the airport tunnel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the minister legislate against electronic distractions now since he could always expand the legislation to apply to other types of distractions later on?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think I've said that to the hon. member a number of times. There are a lot of distractions out there. We want to make sure, when we put legislation in place, that it's effective, and in order for it to be effective, it's got to be enforceable. We're looking at all those aspects to make sure we get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about electronic distractions right now, Minister. Then you can change them later on, add other distractions.

To the minister again. This government has failed to end drinking and driving. Now they won't rein in distracted drivers. Why are safe drivers not a priority for this minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I've said in this House how important safe driving is to this government and keeping our roads safe and protecting all Albertans on our roads.

Federal Equalization Payments

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, recently the Frontier Centre for Public Policy published a paper that concludes that the so-called have-not provinces that receive federal equalization transfers are better off in terms of the service levels that their governments provide than the have-provinces that actually subsidize these transfers. In other words, the real have-not provinces are provinces like Alberta that do not receive equalization payments. While I understand the concept of equalization . . .

The Speaker: We have to have a question in a hurry.

Mr. Dallas: My question to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise is: how are Albertans being disadvantaged by federal equalization?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Frontier centre research confirms what we've been saying all along, that equalization is not working for Canada, and it's not working for Alberta. Last year Alberta sent $21 billion more to Ottawa than it received back, over $5,700 per man, woman, and child. Yet as the hon. member indicates, this research indicates that in Alberta we have fewer hospital beds, fewer teachers, higher university tuition than some of the so-called have-not provinces that are receiving these transfers.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my supplemental to the same minister. The Premier of Ontario has said that he has the same concerns yet is reported to have said recently that it isn't important enough for him to pursue. Why is it so important to Alberta, which arguably is in better economic shape than Ontario?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier of Ontario has pointed out in the past that it's not just an Ontario or Alberta issue; it's a Canadian issue. It's a well-confirmed fact, not just by the Frontier centre but by the C.D. Howe and Fraser institutes, that the receiving provinces have higher spending, larger civil services, higher taxes, therefore less investment, therefore a smaller tax base. They then get more transfer. It's a vicious circle. It's not working for Alberta, and it's not working for Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is this government going to do about this flawed system of transfer payments?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the principle of equalization is entrenched in the Constitution, but the quantum, the amount of money that's transferred, is not specified. Since it's good neither for the sending provinces – B.C., Alberta, and Ontario – nor for the receiving provinces, we think it's time to begin a discussion about changes. All of these transfer programs come up for renegotiation in 2014. Now is the time to begin talking about changes to make them good, a program that works for all of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of governing effectively entails being able to prioritize between needs and wants. This year the government proposed a capital budget of $7.2 billion. In order to balance the books, the Wildrose proposes that we rein that back to roughly $4.6 billion this year, which still places us at the very top of all the provinces. The government is always asking what we would do differently, how we would prioritize. Our caucus would like to take up that challenge. To the Transportation minister: would you be willing to table in the House the exact order of priority for capital projects?

Mr. Ouellette: We want to make sure, Mr. Speaker, that we build the infrastructure that's needed in this province through our capital plan that's there. And I don't ever remember asking the Alliance what they would do.

Mr. Anderson: Given that the airport tunnel project in Calgary is clearly a top priority of Calgarians and Albertans, will this minister table your department's priority list so that we can all sit down like elected adults and figure out a way to delay a less time-sensitive project in favour of the airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got to say that I really have a hard time believing that people do not understand what different responsibilities different municipalities have. It's been said a number of times that local roads are the responsibility of the local municipality. We supply infrastructure money through different types of grants, and they get to prioritize because that municipality knows what's best for them and what they need. We don't need to micromanage that for them.

Mr. Anderson: You know, an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, Mr. Speaker. Given that waiting to build the Calgary runway until the other runway has gone over will cost taxpayers millions of dollars, why won't this minister allow Albertans to see the exact order of priorities for infrastructure projects as they now stand so that all Albertans and their elected representatives can have a discussion about what can wait so that we can get this key piece of infrastructure rolling?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we don't hide anything. It's showing on our plan all of the infrastructure that we're going to build over the next three years. We're also saying that we will help municipalities in the best way we can, but they have to deliver what they believe is important to them within the finances they have to do it, and we have to do what we believe is the best for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Local Food Production

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Local food production is about knowing where your food comes from and what products or fertilizers, if any, are used in its production. It's about smaller, family farms, a strong rural community, and a sustainable new agricultural industry. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Six hundred million dollars a year is spent by this government to maintain our agricultural system, yet we continue to lose farmers and prime agricultural land. Why isn't some of this money going to support our local food industry?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, in fact it is. We have loan programs in place for producers that max out at $5 million, depending on the operation and the innovation that's being proposed. Farmers' markets and local food production is one of the fastest growing areas of the agricultural industry, and I support it all the way.

Ms Pastoor: As the minister has pointed out, it is a growing industry. It's a $350 million a year industry and growing. Will the minister expand the approved farmers' markets program to increase access to local food and meet the market demand?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we are working on a continuous basis with the producers that go into the farmers' markets and the farmers' markets. It's absolutely an area of interest to us as it adds some diversification to the industry, and I think it's got great potential. As people believe more in purchasing food within a 100-kilometre limit, I think the potential will continue to increase.

Ms Pastoor: Organic food is a $30 billion a year industry internationally, but Alberta lacks a legislated organic standard. When will the minister introduce legislation that includes organic standards?

Mr. Hayden: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the industry itself has the standards and the requirements based on the number of years since the soil had chemicals used in it. I can't recall right off the top, but I think it's something like 18 or 20 years. Nothing can be certified as organic food through these associations unless it meets those standards. It absolutely is a growing market and, I think, something worthy of attention.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the numbers of farms and people in rural Alberta that have been decreasing, it's no surprise to our government. It has been happening since 1910.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Incorporation of Financial Advisers

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several financial advisers have expressed concern that legislation that allows professionals such as doctors, lawyers, dentists, and accountants to incorporate as professional corporations does not grant the same privilege to financial advisers. Real estate agents and insurance agents are also allowed to incorporate. My question to the hon. minister of finance: why does the current legislation discriminate against financial advisers?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, currently individual financial advisers are not able to use incorporation to provide investment advice in any province in Canada. The issue of adviser incorporation has been discussed by provincial securities regulators in the industry for a number of years, and no consensus or conclusion has been reached. I can tell the hon. member that the Alberta Securities Commission has recently put forward a possible model of incorporation. Several other provinces have shown interest in it. I've asked to be informed of the progress, and we'll let you know if that changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister. The problem as I see it appears to stem from the provisions in the Alberta Securities Act. What is the rationale for these restrictions in the Alberta Securities Act?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, registration is one of the core areas of securities regulation. Individuals who sell securities must be registered because of the key role they play in the efficient functioning of capital markets. The primary aim of registration is to ensure that those engaged in the securities business are suitable; that is, they must demonstrate that they're not only honest and of good repute but also competent, of good character, and have a degree of financial well-being. These standards help foster both investor protection and investor confidence.

Mr. Allred: My final question again to the same minister. Given that TILMA is now in place, financial advisers are not on a level playing field with their cohorts in British Columbia as well as Saskatchewan. How can this situation be rectified with regard to British Columbia?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe the hon. member's facts are quite correct. Under the passport system, of which Alberta is a member, a new national registration regime was implemented in the nine participating provinces last September. This provides standardized registration categories as well as a single set of registration requirements. This new registration regime effectively eliminates any barriers to labour mobility that may have existed under the previous regime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More children in Alberta are taken into custody by this province per capita than anywhere else in Canada. When children in care are hurt or die, the privacy of the family is paramount, but the details of the incidents need to be released. The sharing of information and solutions is the only way to bring change. We need to know what happened and what is being done to fix it. To the minister: how is it in the best interests of a dead child or their family to keep the circumstances that led to their death a ministry secret? Exactly whose interests are being protected?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will look at the preamble and see, hon. member, if your preamble was correct. I think it is incorrect, but I'll look into that further.

In answering this question, we are governed by laws and regulations, and they do regard privacy for children in various circumstances. For the one that this member is discussing, there is an ongoing police investigation. To respect the integrity of that investigation, we will not be releasing any further information at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Will the minister provide details that led to the death of a 21-month-old child in care last Wednesday and the findings of the ministry's internal investigation when it is completed? We don't need names. We don't need addresses.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, I believe people have the right to know what has happened in cases involving children in this ministry and not just in this situation but in others as well. That information will be released that is appropriate in accordance with the regulation and the legislation that we have.

There is an ongoing police investigation right now, and I will not compromise the integrity of that investigation.

Mr. Chase: I don't want the investigation compromised, but when it's through, we need the details.

I will ask again. Will the minister take the first step to end the systemic secrecy and require that the children's advocate report directly to the Legislature, as is the case in all other provinces?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The children's advocate and the reporting that the children's advocate does in the ministry is not related to systemic secrecy. It's related to what is right, and it's related to the information. There are four quarterly reports that come to the Legislature through the children's advocate as well as an annual report, and the member is aware of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Northern Student Supplement

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are concerned about the cuts in postsecondary education, more specifically cuts to the program of scholarships designed specifically for rural students like the northern student supplement. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Could the minister please explain why the northern student supplement program has been cancelled as indicated in Budget 2010?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in this budget we had some very difficult decisions to make with our budget for student financial assistance. What we did was that we chose to focus our resources on the priorities, and one of our top priorities is to ensure that we are able to help as many students as possible gain access to our academic institutions. To accomplish that, we were going to discontinue three grants and shift those dollars into the student loan program because I can give $1 to one student, but I can use that same dollar and do three student loans.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister. Like many students from rural communities both my children attended postsecondary school in the city and, as a result, were burdened with added living expenses compared to those students who had the opportunity of living at home during school. Many rural students are forced . . .

The Speaker: Okay, okay. No preambles, remember?

Mrs. Leskiw: That's after today.

The Speaker: No, no. [laughter]

Mrs. Leskiw: What programs are in place to relieve the unique financial pressures of rural students?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, rural students do have added issues to face when they have to travel to the cities, and we recognize that. It goes well beyond tuition, and that's something we've talked about a lot in this House and with the students, that the affordability of our postsecondary system is more than just tuition. It's travel to and from. It's affordable housing. It's all of those things. Today 70 per cent of student aid recipients are considered to be independent from their parents, and that's an important factor to consider when we're looking at our student financial assistance package.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister. The minister is often heard talking about building Alberta's next generation, knowledge-based economy. Isn't he concerned that the increase will deter Albertans, particularly rural Albertans, from pursuing postsecondary education?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had a good discussion about this exact topic last night in our estimates in the House when we talked about the fact that, you know, some would consider an investment in stocks or something and borrow for that investment, and it's still an investment. We look at the investment that the taxpayers of Alberta are putting in, on average 70 per cent to every one of those postsecondary courses, and the students are putting in, on average, about a 30 per cent investment. How they are able to do that is important to us because we want to help every student have access to that. So if they have their own resources, that's great, but if they don't, we want to help them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question will be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I want to confirm with him what he said earlier today in question period, that the full, unedited report prepared by the Alberta Health Quality Council into patient safety incidents at the Children's hospital in Calgary will be made public within 10 days.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I believe I said is that a full, detailed report within the parameters of the Alberta Evidence Act and respecting the parameters of the Health Information Act is to be made available within 10 days. I'll leave it up to them to get together and figure that out. I'm sure they will.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, our information is that the report was already written to meet those parameters, so if the report is going to be released unedited, why not just release it today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, I've spoken with the two groups, and I've asked the same issue of them. I said: why not just release it? They said that they have some confidentiality issues that they still have to address, and as soon as they get the green light on those confidentiality agreements, which I know the hon. member himself would respect and know about, the report will be released, as I've just indicated.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Quality Council has said that the confidentiality issues are already addressed. It's as if Alberta Health Services thinks the Health Quality Council reports to them. Will this minister do the right thing and from here on give the Alberta Health Quality Council full independence in releasing its reports?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the first two incidents that were reported on were done within a matter of hours. Immediate action was taken. The third one was done within a very short time period as well, and so was the fourth one. But as they all came in, it was decided by the Health Quality Council, through their own protocols, to lump all four together in one report. That's what they've done. They are just as concerned about patient quality and safety as we are, and we'll ensure that it gets released.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Support for Library Services

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Knowing the importance of library services, especially to immigrants and foreign workers in Alberta, why has the government made a budget reduction to library services?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, immigrants and foreign workers and all Albertans truly value and rely on our libraries right across the province of Alberta. This government is committed to strong, province-wide library systems. The reduction that the member is talking about involves internal programming spending but will not reduce provincial funding to individual library boards. As a matter of fact, Budget 2010 increases library funding for growing communities with a $600,000 increase.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: is the funding for the construction of the new library still intact?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, yes, the MSI funding for this project remains intact. This government is committed to supporting and investing in municipalities despite our tougher economic times. Individual municipalities make decisions as to how they spend their MSI dollars. I'm pleased that the province did approve the city of Edmonton for a $30 million grant to build this particular library, which will benefit the residents living in Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: My final question is to the same minister. When do we expect the construction and opening of this new library in Mill Woods?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, MSI dollars go directly to the municipalities so they can prioritize the funding to meet the unique needs of the people that are living within their communities. It's those municipal leaders that are responsible for choosing the projects and managing their timelines, so it's basically up to the city of Edmonton. They've received the approval. It's up to the city of Edmonton and the councillors to decide when they will build the particular library in the Mill Woods area.

School Configuration

Mr. Bhardwaj: Alberta Education appears to be moving away from separate schools for elementary students and junior high, or middle schools, and replacing them with larger K to 9 combined schools. My constituents are concerned that their younger children will not receive the attention they need in a larger facility. My questions are to the Minister of Education. What is the rationale behind combining the schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question of what configuration, what size of school is really a decision that's made by local school boards acting in the best interests of their students and their community. There is a lot to be said. We have through the Inspiring Education process over the course of the last year been talking about how we might change the way we do education, recognizing the current situation, current realities, new technologies, so configurations of classrooms and configurations of schools themselves should be the topic of discussion. With respect to K to 9, I mean, there's a lot of evidence to suggest . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister. The needs of a five-year-old vary rapidly from the needs of a 14-year-old. How is combining administration, facilities, and staff going to reflect the disparity in needs?

Mr. Hancock: Well, administration, of course, is something entirely separate in terms of the ability to use administration effectively and efficiently, different from the programming needs. There's a lot of evidence, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that you could make great utilization of combining classes and ages: older students helping younger students, learning together. Quite frankly, we've been doing it. I grew up in rural Alberta. We had K to 12 schools, worked perfectly well. We shouldn't be focusing on specifically any particular type of classroom or configuration but what's in the best interests of the children and the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: with issues such as violence and drugs and alcohol use facing teenagers, is the minister concerned about the interaction between teenagers and elementary-aged students that will require increased supervision?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, regardless of the configuration of the school we have certain requirements that need to be there for students to be successful. We need a respectful and caring school culture. We need safety and security. We need to focus on teaching and learning. We need positive, caring relationships between students and teachers. We need social and behavioural expectations to be adhered to, and we need community involvement. That is true whether we're talking about a grade 1 to 3 school or a grade 1 to 9 school or a grade 1 to 12 school. Those behavioural expectations and the focus on making sure that it's a safe and caring place for students has got to be our ultimate priority.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period today. Today, 19 different members were recognized – that was made up of nine members of the Official Opposition, two members of the Wildrose caucus, one member of the New Democratic caucus, and seven private government members – a total of 114 questions and answers.

In 15 seconds from now we'll proceed with the Routine and members' statements.

2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans can be proud of their contributions to the 2010 Winter Olympics. I'm not just referring to the recent $100 million injection of our Alberta government in our Olympic heritage venues or the fact that over half of our Canadian team lives and trains in Alberta or the incredible work of the ministries of Tourism, Parks and Recreation as well as Culture and Community Spirit with the Alberta train, Plaza, and House. I'm also referring to the priceless memories which our athletes from across the country have shared with us that will last a lifetime.

I'm sure that none of us will forget when Alberta's own Jennifer Heil won Canada's first medal, when Alexander Bilodeau shared our country's first gold on Canadian snow with his brother and the entire nation, when Virtue and Moir capped a 13-year project with gold, when Joannie Rochette found the podium after her mother had passed on, and when our Canadian men and women won hockey gold.

I also think that Michael Bubl   deserved a medal for utilizing a big, beautiful background of Moraine Lake, Alberta, during his performance during the closing ceremonies.

Mr. Speaker, an American Olympian friend of mine told me Canada did a super job with these Olympics, just like they did in Calgary. It was a great reminder that this record-setting journey actually began with Alberta's Olympics in 1988.

Canadians won more gold medals in 2010 than any country on Earth has ever won at an Olympic Games, winter or summer. Now, in the minds of some the Own the Podium campaign was controversial at best and arrogant at worst, but in my humble assessment it was simply wildly successful. It was based on a U.S. program which has been in operation since Nagano, and it can be easily argued that the Canadian version was not only much faster; it was far less expensive.

We were on top of the world in 14 different events. While this brought back beautiful memories for me of '99 and 2001, it also brought back memories of this past June, when some great friends and I climbed to the highest point in Russia and Europe. At that time we could not have imagined that in a matter of months a young Georgian from across the valley would perish in an accident on opening day in Whistler.

But we did know that the people of Sochi were getting ready for 2014. Let's get behind our government and all Canadians getting ready for Sochi in 2014.

Oil Royalty Framework

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier tabled an article from the Airdrie City View which he said proved that I supported his economically disastrous new royalty framework. I know the Premier is a busy man, but, honestly, perhaps he should have read the article first before tabling it. I do thank him for tabling it for everyone to see. Remember, this article was written in 2008, prior to the NRF's taking effect.

After outlining the key importance of the oil and gas sector in creating jobs and agreeing with the adjustments made to the oil sands royalties, something I've always said publicly and in caucus, I then say the following:

When Premier Stelmach [initially] announced the royalty changes, he left the door open for further modifications . . . I, and many others, have been advocating that given the global economic slowdown, plummeting oil and gas prices, as well as the competitive royalty regimes of BC and Saskatchewan, it is important to readjust royalties downward . . .

As your provincial representative, I will continue, as promised, to advocate for further decreases in royalty rates for oil and gas projects outside of the oilsands. I believe that doing so is essential to the . . . prosperity of our province.

That's quite a smoking gun, indeed.

Mr. Speaker, again, this article was written in 2008, before the destructive NRF took effect. It proves what I and thousands of Albertans told the Premier and his chief of staff for a long, long time: that his energy policy was flawed, that the economy and industry had changed and we would not be competitive, and that thousands of Albertans would suffer if he went ahead with his ill-conceived royalty changes.

I thank the Premier, his chief of staff, and his research staff for reminding me of this article. Not only does it show I've been consistent on this issue; it shows I've been consistently right. It also shows just how consistent the Premier, his chief of staff, and his Energy ministers have been on this issue, consistently out of touch, consistently wrong-headed, and consistently incompetent with an industry so many Albertans rely on for their well-being.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: And the hon. member knows what he shouldn't have done.

Mr. Anderson: I was speaking to their actions, only their actions.

The Speaker: No, no. The member doesn't know what he shouldn't have done. He can read Hansard.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to give the House oral notice of a motion that I propose to move.

A. Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended in Standing Order 7 by adding the following after suborder (4):

7(4.1) When Members' Statements is called, Members other than Members of the Executive Council may make a statement, each statement to be no more than 2 minutes in duration, according to the following allocation:

- (b) on Tuesday and Wednesday, up to 6 Members.

B. Be it further resolved that

- 1. The amendment in this motion shall come into force on passage and shall have effect until the dissolution of the 27th Legislature;
- 2. Standing Order 7(4) shall not have effect for the balance of the 27th Legislature.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 6(2) of the Alberta Economic Development Authority Act it is my pleasure to table five copies of the authority's 2009 activity report. The Alberta Economic Development Authority celebrated an important milestone last year, 15 years of providing strategic advice and recommendations to the government on key economic issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today.

The first is the appropriate number of copies of a report from Syncrude Canada entitled Annual Report of Oil Sands Development in 2005 and Projected for 2006, Mildred Lake Oil Sands Mine. The report includes information on wildlife that has come into contact with tailings ponds and was related to questions asked by my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood earlier today.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of three photographs of ducks caught in the bitumen mat of Syncrude's Aurora tailings pond on April 29, 2008.

The third tabling is the appropriate number of copies of 24 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. These postcards have been collected by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the letter our caucus has been asked to table in which Sandy Bray of Calgary explains the impossible task of being the only income earner living with and caring for two elderly parents, one with dementia, and a 17-year-old son. The waiting list for a nursing home can be a two- to three-year wait. She asks for help.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the Wildrose Alliance caucus Restoring Alberta's Energy Competitiveness document. It outlines the effect the royalty framework has had on the economy in this province, which has been negative, and goes on to propose some proposals for how we can get back on track.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter that I wrote on March 5, 2010, to the chairman of the board of Edmonton public schools regarding population data that was gathered and tabulated by the city of Edmonton in 2009. In this letter I request respectfully for the public board to cease and desist from any further closures of public schools.

The second document I have is dated spring 2010, Options: Your Guide to Private Medicine. It was a supplement in the Calgary Herald a few weeks back, and it asks questions such as why Albertans are seeking private health options.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The chair today would like to table the required number of copies of a March 9, 2010, memo from the Government House Leader which attaches a March 4, 2010, agreement signed by all parties, a revised projected sittings days calendar effective today's date, and a revised schedule concerning Oral Question Period rotation based on the house leaders' agreement dated March 4, 2010. Members will receive copies of the complete package shortly after Orders of the Day is called.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Webber, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar; Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; Dr. Taft, hon.

Member for Edmonton-Riverview; Ms Calahasen, hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake; and Dr. Brown, hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on February 10, 2010, Department of Aboriginal Relations main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might be revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you seven special guests who are visiting from our sister province of Hokkaido, Japan. These individuals are part of a delegation visiting our province to learn about our voluntary sector. They are studying leadership in the voluntary sector, international development, youth agencies, citizens' and disability support, senior citizens' facilities, libraries, and health care facilities. I'd like to introduce Ms Keiko Sato, Mr. Koji Takahashi, Ms Tomoko Maruya, Ms Yoshiko Fujii, Mr. Masaaki Noh, Ms Ayaka Tateyama, and Mr. Nobunao Kasai. If I could have them rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to speak to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill contains amendments to both the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Our elections legislation allows Albertans to continue to elect their provincial representatives in a clear and orderly way using processes that are neutral, consistent, and understandable. Hand in hand with the Election Act is the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. They work in tandem. They govern how political entities will collect and use money and require detailed financial reporting to the Chief Electoral Officer.

This is a complex body of law. We've taken the time as a government to review each change to ensure that it represents an improvement to this essential democratic process. Throughout our review we have held discussions with the Chief Electoral Officer's office, and I'd like to take this opportunity to thank that office for their involvement and co-operation in our review.

Now I would like to address some of the more significant amendments included in Bill 7. First, I'll talk about prisoner voting, Mr. Speaker. Currently our legislation does not allow inmates to vote in provincial elections. In a 2002 decision, Sauvé versus Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada held that denying inmates the right to vote violates section 3 of Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As a result of this clear direction from the Supreme Court of Canada Bill 7 will give all eligible inmates the ability to vote at future provincial elections by way of a special ballot process.

In most cases the inmate's vote won't be counted in the constituency in which they are serving their sentence. Instead, their vote will be counted in accordance with the tests set out in the legislation.

Although we have heard comment that we should use the notwithstanding clause of the Charter to challenge this provision, I want to clarify that this is not a legal possibility, Mr. Speaker. The notwithstanding clause applies only to certain sections of the Charter. It does not apply to section 3 of the Charter, which is the section that includes the right to vote.

I'll now talk about the appointment of returning officers. After the last provincial election the Premier promised to change the manner by which returning officers are appointed. Previously all returning officers were appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Bill 7 authorizes the Chief Electoral Officer to appoint returning officers. The Chief Electoral Officer will be able to start the appointment process as early as two years after the previous general election. The Chief Electoral Officer will be able to fill all returning officer positions in a timely manner. This amendment eliminates any perception of political involvement in the appointment process.

With respect to the appointment of enumerators, and in a similar vein, Bill 7 removes the perception of political involvement in the appointment of such enumerators. This bill requires each returning officer to personally hire all the enumerators that are needed in the returning officer's electoral division. This replaces the old process of gathering input from constituency associations in communities as to who should be considered for enumerator positions.

One of the issues that will be very interesting as we go forward, Mr. Speaker, is new technologies. Technology is changing rapidly, and Bill 7 will allow the Chief Electoral Officer to explore and promote the use of new technologies. If there is a way to improve the efficiency of our voting process, we want to know about it. Using new kinds of equipment or developing new procedures to make casting a vote easier may lead to greater public participation in our democratic process. Running an election is a complex process. While we're always striving for an easier and more efficient voting process, we must protect the integrity of the system and safeguard accuracy, secrecy, and political neutrality in the process.

While Bill 7 provides the opportunity to undertake pilot testing in by-elections, it also includes safeguards. Before testing new technologies, the Chief Electoral Officer must make a presentation to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices explaining in detail the procedures and equipment that he proposes to use. If the standing committee approves the approach, the new technologies can be incorporated at a by-election. I'm excited about this opportunity and what this recommendation represents. It provides us the opportunity for a forward-looking, nonpartisan discussion that could result in great benefits for all Alberta voters.

Bill 7 will also add flexibility to early opening of voting stations. It will allow for a pilot project to test early opening of polls. Normally our polls open at 9 a.m. In the interests of making it more convenient for Albertans to go to the polls, Bill 7 would allow the Chief Electoral Officer to run a pilot project where polls could open at 7 a.m. during a by-election. This change was made on a test case basis only, as the extra two hours added to the polling day means that election officers will be working more than a 15-hour day. To help election officers complete all of their duties, including the count at the end of the day, the amendments will allow the use of vote counting equipment. This will help ensure an accurate count of the ballots.

Once the by-election is completed, the Chief Electoral Officer is required to report back to the Legislative Assembly, outlining his opinion as to whether the extended hours had any effect on voter turnout and whether the vote counting equipment was effective and efficient. The Chief Electoral Officer's report will help inform future decisions regarding whether polling hours should be extended across the province.

We've also dealt with advance polls, Mr. Speaker. To further encourage voter turnout, Bill 7 eliminates restrictions for those who may use an advance poll and makes it easier for voting and more accessible for Albertans with demanding or unpredictable schedules. The legislation would allow Albertans who are eligible to vote to do so at an advance poll without requiring them to give a reason for doing so. This additional flexibility provides one more opportunity for Albertans to cast their votes.

In addition to increasing flexibility with respect to location and time, Mr. Speaker, we've also dealt with identification. Bill 7 contains options for voters to make it easier for them to identify themselves. A person whose name appears on the list of electors does not need to provide ID now in order to receive a ballot. A person can ensure that their name is added to the list of electors in a number of ways, including through enumeration, by registering online with Elections Alberta, or by otherwise contacting the Chief Electoral Officer's office.

If on election day an individual's name is not on the list of electors, he or she must take additional steps to establish their identity and eligibility to vote. Bill 7 sets out how a voter may establish his or her identity. This includes that the voter may provide government-issued photo ID, the voter may show two documents from a list of documents that are authorized by the Chief Electoral Officer, or a voter's identity can be vouched for by another voter whose name already appears on the list of electors. The bill removes the requirement for a voter to swear an oath to accompany the necessary identification. Instead, the voter will be asked to complete a declaration. This would be a faster process and would reduce waiting times for those people who are not on the list of electors.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will also deal with third-party advertising. It deals with the rules for political advertising specifically for third parties. Bill 205, a private member's bill, set out new rules for individuals or groups who engage in political advertising during an election campaign. This bill was passed by the Legislative Assembly last fall, but it is not yet in force. The government supported the principles underlying the private member's bill, but after looking at it in some detail, we have improved it by aligning it more closely with the existing rules in the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

Chief Electoral Officer powers have also been dealt with in this bill, Mr. Speaker. Under existing legislation, the Chief Electoral Officer has the power to investigate and inquire into possible violations of the rules under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Among other things, the Chief Electoral Officer has the power to request production of financial documents. Bill 7 would give the Chief Electoral Officer the additional power to inquire and investigate perceived violations under the Election Act. For example, Bill 7 would allow the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate an allegation that the list of electors has been used inappropriately. Also, the bill gives the Chief Electoral Officer flexibility in determining the size of the fine imposed on a person who donates more than the contribution limits allow. Bill 7 also gives the Chief Electoral Officer the power to address emergencies on polling day by changing the hours that a polling place is open.

We also deal with tie votes in Bill 7, Mr. Speaker. We believe that this is an improvement in that it will provide for a change in the way that tie votes are resolved. Currently if after all the counts are done, there is a tie between two or more candidates, the returning officer is required by law to cast the deciding vote. The current law treats returning officers unfairly in several ways. First, a returning officer can't cast a vote unless there is a tie. Second, if there is a tie, the returning officer can't necessarily vote for the candidate of their choice as he or she must select one of the two tied candidates. Third, the returning officer cannot decline to vote, as is the right of all other electors. Finally, the returning officer's vote is not secret. To eliminate this, Bill 7 provides that in the case of a tie vote between candidates there will automatically be a by-election.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this legislation deals with fundamental democratic principles. Bill 7 strikes a balance. It updates and streamlines electoral processes while at the same time maintaining the integrity and security of the vote. I encourage all members to support Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, and I look forward to hearing and participating in the debate.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

[Adjourned debate February 25: Mrs. Fritz]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I want to begin by thanking the hon. Premier for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. As Alberta emerges from the recent economic downturn, the Alberta Competitiveness Act addresses matters that are important to our long-term and ongoing success as a province and as a country and, certainly, addresses issues that are important to my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I have a particular interest in the subject matter that Bill 1 deals with. As a farmer and rancher I know the importance of meeting the demands of a market and of positioning a business to be competitive. Through my previous involvement as chairman of the Alberta Beef Producers and the Canada Beef Export Federation I know the challenges agriculture and specifically the beef industry face related to competing in international markets.

The preamble to Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, highlights priorities that are important to Alberta's future success.

Alberta's success is founded on the competitiveness and the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans . . . competitiveness is core to the Government of Alberta's plan to position Alberta for sustained prosperity . . . the role of government is to create the conditions for competitiveness so that entrepreneurship, innovation and investment will generate benefits for Albertans . . . better alignment of activities across Government to strengthen partnerships among Albertans, business, industry and Government will support the development of a shared strategy to increase Alberta's competitiveness.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, reviewing the mandate of the body created under Bill 1 I think really focuses on the priorities of this government and I believe is a highlight for the focus of our government in this Legislature:

to increase Alberta's competitiveness by

- (i) accelerating the implementation of current Government of Alberta initiatives to increase competitiveness,

- (ii) developing a shared strategy to increase Alberta's competitiveness through strengthened collaboration with industry, business and Albertans,
- (iii) developing benchmarks for measuring Alberta's [success];

[Further,] to develop strategies and initiatives

- (i) to encourage innovation and to develop and adopt technology,
- (ii) to create effective regulatory systems that deliver the results Albertans require and that provide clarity, predictability, certainty and efficiency, and
- (iii) to increase Alberta's competitiveness and productivity of individual economic sectors.

Those are important initiatives for all Albertans and particularly for agriculture. But I believe that this initiative will have a positive impact on a whole range of sectors throughout our economy, including energy, forestry, agriculture, as I suggested, transportation, health care, and education.

I want to focus my comments this afternoon, though, on positive impacts that this legislation can have for agriculture, again, based on the experience that I've had representing agriculture producers over a period of many years. Competitiveness is a mindset, Mr. Speaker, one that I think is extremely important for Albertans within the Canadian context. As Alberta livestock and agriculture producers we know that our capacity to produce requires access to markets in order to gain returns for our production that keep us competitive in terms of recovering costs for high-quality products that agriculture producers go to market with in this country.

I appreciate the fact that Alberta has a very high and strong reputation in international markets for the high quality, the food safety standards that we meet, and all of that kind of thing. I particularly appreciate the emphasis that this bill has on a strong collaboration between industry and government. I have had the opportunity to see both remarkable successes with regard to what can be achieved when that partnership works and also some failures when that partnership doesn't work as effectively as it needs to.

I want to just refer to a number of experiences in international markets because I think there's a key and important role that the Alberta government plays together with the industry in ensuring that Alberta and, frankly, that Canada plays the role that it should in international markets. I've had the privilege to visit Alberta's trade offices in Mexico, China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Russia, and a number of other countries as well. I've seen first-hand how when industry and government representatives are working together, the end result is better.

I was on a trade mission in 2003 with the federal government as well as beef industry representatives, and at the end of the day we would collaborate with regard to what the situation was on a government-to-government basis. The very key interest at that point was reopening access to important markets for Canadian beef.

On the industry side we were having discussions with our counterparts in Taiwan and China and Hong Kong to discuss what their issues were with regard to marketing and gaining access to Canadian products that at that time were restricted from moving across the border, very effective opportunities to collaborate and ensure that the end result was better because at the end of the day what's required in terms of international trade negotiations is that there's an agreement made that can actually be traded on.

It's possible, when there isn't a proper link between industry and government, that the trade deal you end up with at the end of the day has some quirky detail in it that restricts the opportunity for Canadian and for Alberta exporters to actually get the job done in terms of exporting products. There are various examples that I could cite where because of an effective collaboration, those kinds of situations have been prevented. But where that collaboration was not or the communication was not effective, we ended up with a trade deal that had to be reworked in order for the industry even to trade on the deal. Then you simply don't have the success that you need.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I had a document presented to me from beef industry representatives that speaks about what it is that's preventing Canada from trading beef products into Russia. It's a very detailed outline of matters that are not within the ability of the Alberta government to influence directly. They're actually federal trade initiatives and matters that need to be addressed by the federal government. But I think there's an opportunity for the Alberta government, through our minister of agriculture, to collaborate with Alberta livestock producers and press our federal counterparts to get the job done. I think that Alberta cattle producers and also our Alberta government have a first-hand understanding of the importance of moving at the right time, of acting when there is opportunity to actually get a deal done.

One of the other things that I appreciate about Bill 1 is its reference to ensuring that we have the regulatory regime in place that works for industry. That's extremely important as well, Mr. Speaker. We all know that costs can be incurred by industry, particularly agriculture producers, if the regulatory regime is not effective. We have to ask ourselves as we review the current regulatory regime that faces agriculture: to what end? Are the regulations that we have in place providing a safer product to market? Are they reducing cost? Are they reducing risk? Those are matters that are extremely important, and we need to ensure as we add regulation, as we encumber agriculture producers with more rules, that we in fact have markets that are willing to pay for the increased costs that are imposed and forced on producers as a result of the regulations.

One of the things that I think agriculture producers are facing right now that I think this bill can help address is their ability to reduce costs, and that's where an effective regulatory regime very much comes in. If we've got rules in place that add costs that can't be recovered in the market, they really need to be effective in reducing risk, or else they're really impractical. I think those are some of the things that I see as opportunities through Bill 1.

I particularly appreciate that this bill shows Albertans and the world our commitment to make Alberta one of the most economically competitive places in the increasingly interconnected global marketplace. Through travel and communication it's a pretty small world that we live in, and I think it was highlighted in the recent experience at the Olympics, even, where we knew that the world was at our doorstep. That's true for agriculture producers, too, but meeting those markets efficiently and competitively is extremely important.

I believe that Bill 1 shows that the province is committed to creating the conditions that will attract new businesses, innovators, and the next generation of entrepreneurs to be involved in this province. For all of those reasons I would like to again express my appreciation to the hon. Premier for bringing this piece of legislation forward. I think it has a great deal of resonance with my constituents, who understand the importance of effective regulation. It really isn't about getting rid of regulation that we need, but it's very much about making sure that the regulations, the rules, and production standards that we have meet the needs of our production community and also meet the needs of international and domestic markets.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for the opportunity to speak to this piece of legislation. I look forward to the positive results that Bill 1 will deliver to this province and to the way that it positions our government as setting up the framework, so to speak, that will ensure that we have long-term success in international markets and that Albertans – and I’m speaking particularly with regard to agriculture producers – have the opportunity to produce to their capacity and market to their capacity as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a great pleasure to speak on Bill 1, Alberta Competitiveness Act. The object of this bill is intended to increase collaboration between the government, business, and industry to improve Alberta’s competitiveness. The bill will also allow for the establishment of a board or committee with a general mandate to identify actionable areas for increased competitiveness, to quicken the implementation of government competitiveness initiatives, and to establish a benchmark to measure Alberta’s competitiveness.

In essence, all this bill does is allow for the establishment of a board or committee with a vague mandate of increasing competitiveness. The underlying principle behind this bill is to increase the collaboration between the government, business, and industry, but there are so few specifics that it is difficult to determine what, if any, impact there may be by this bill.

The government’s news release on this bill states that throughout the next year, benchmarks and goals will be established. There is no reference to when completion or action on these benchmarks and goals will take place, nor is there any reference to specific action that will be taken now. The only reference to anything specific, both in the bill and in the news release, is to the government’s oil and gas competitiveness review and the western economic partnership between B.C., Alberta, and Saskatchewan.

Establishing these benchmarks, reporting explicitly through annual reports, collaborating across the ministries and with key players in industry are all important positive steps towards improving Alberta’s competitiveness. But this bill does not take any real action towards making these things happen. There are no details, no time frames, no end goal other than the elusive phrase “increase competitiveness.”

All this bill does is legislate an idea. The government’s own news release states that benchmarks and goals to increase competitiveness will be increased in a year with no indication how long after that year action will take place.

The government already has a Regulatory Review Secretariat with the following mandate: “The goal of regulatory reform is to identify opportunities to reduce and simplify the regulatory burden of government on the people and businesses of Alberta.” This goes on to say, “Supporting the development of good regulation creates the conditions for business to thrive and enhance productivity towards sustainable prosperity.” So we already have something in place.

The Regulatory Review Secretariat seems to be more concentrated on the red tape burden of compliance requirements and regulations whereas the guiding principle behind Bill 1 is more about collaboration. Yet both have very similar mandates and ultimately have the same end goal of allowing for productivity, competitiveness, and sustainable prosperity.

Eliminating red tape is not the only step necessary to increase competitiveness, but it is a very important first step. Other provinces such as B.C. and Newfoundland have set percentage reduction goals and have produced results. Alberta has been reviewing the regulatory burden for over 10 years now and has yet to produce the reduction in red tape that other provinces have. The CFIB argues that Alberta has actually increased its regulatory burden in that time frame.

Also, the government already has the Premier’s economic advisory committee, a Regulatory Review Secretariat, an oil and gas competitiveness review that we are still waiting to see, a western economic partnership with B.C. and Saskatchewan, and a Canada-Alberta western partnership. How many more committees and partnerships do we need? We keep on coming with new committees and new reviews. Why can’t the goals of Bill 1 be carried out by one of these many arrangements? Why is the government scared of taking action and setting its own goals rather than passing off the job to another committee? This is the kind of initiative that the premise of this bill is intended to eliminate. The government is actually creating more legislation, more regulations with this bill.

Ultimately, this bill is meaningless. The intention of the bill is something that is laudable and necessary, but the bill itself is hollow. There are absolutely no specifics in the bill, and it seems unusual that this act is being done through legislation. Why are we mandating another committee to do the role of the government? Why isn’t the Premier setting up a specific task force?

There are some general questions arising around the vagueness of this bill. Which industries is this bill targeting? How exactly will this bill improve competitiveness? What kind of competitiveness are we talking about? Are we talking about red tape? Is it limited to the oil and gas industry? Do we want to be competitive through a strong, knowledge-based economy by supporting education, by creating a competitive environment for small business by reducing red tape, by diversifying the economy in general, by allowing our film industry to stay alive and competitive? What is the main goal behind this bill? What does competitive mean? What is the end goal of these actions? What is the time frame?

When we talk about reducing red tape in Alberta, in 2009 the minister of finance released a report on the Regulatory Review Secretariat entitled Regulatory Excellence, in which it reports launching an online tool called Alberta’s public registry for regulations, that will provide notice of government regulatory proposals relevant to business. This report also highlights the reduced regulatory burden brought about by TILMA and BizPaL, an online service that gives information on business permits and licences.

Reducing red tape for businesses is one of the goals of the Regulatory Review Secretariat and is also a point that is highly advocated for by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The reducing red tape argument centres on the amount of time, ultimately lost productivity, taken up on what are considered unnecessary and redundant government regulations. According to CFIB Canadian businesses spend $30.5 billion a year to comply with obligations from all levels of government.

The election platform of the Alberta Liberals in 2004 called for the creation of a red tape task force to lessen the burden of unnecessary rules and regulations, improve the business climate, reduce government costs, and improve efficiency and competitiveness. In the 2008 election the Alberta Liberals again called for the enactment of a red tape review to aid small businesses.

British Columbia is a much-cited example for its successful efforts to reduce its red tape. B.C.’s original goal in 2001 was to reduce government regulations by one-third in three years. It met the goal, and as of January 2010 B.C. has eliminated 152,000 regulations since it first started in 2001. This is a red tape reduction of 42 per cent.

Newfoundland and Labrador implemented a red tape reduction task force, that submitted initial findings to the minister of the Department of Business in 2007. In 2005 the goal of reducing 25 per cent of red tape over three years was set. As of now 83,000 unnecessary regulations have been removed, which accounts for a reduction of more than 27 per cent as a result of the government's red tape reductions.

There's an oil and gas competitiveness review. There's a western economic partnership, the Alberta western partnership agreement. When we go to section 2, the section outlines the purpose of a body established under the act:

To increase Alberta's competitiveness by

- (i) accelerating the implementation of current Government of Alberta initiatives . . .
- (ii) developing a shared strategy . . . through strengthened collaboration with industry, business, and Albertans,
- (iii) developing benchmarks for measuring Alberta's competitiveness.

And it goes on.

Why do we need a new board to do the role of the government? Why do we need a new board to communicate to Albertans? The government already has a well-established communications department in each ministry as well as the Public Affairs Bureau in Executive Council. How will the shared strategy with industry and business be developed? How much influence should there be from the interests of business and industry, which are inherently different and even at odds with the role of the government?

When will we see this strategy? When will the benchmark measures be made public, and how will those benchmarks be determined? Is the quality of life the main goal, or is it increased profitability for business and industry? Are we encouraging the latter in the hopes that the former will follow? How far is this taking Alberta into the business of being in business, and how much of this is creating a competitiveness climate? Where is the line drawn between establishing the conditions for strong economic development and propping up the private sector?

Identifying the need for reduced regulation and increased competitiveness is a step in the right direction, but to be effective, there needs to be action, and this bill just legislates an idea. This bill exacerbates the situation the government is trying to improve. The bill itself is adding more regulations and more unnecessary work. This is a hollow bill. Is this bill really the best that the Premier could come up with for his flagship bill?

There are lots of questions being raised by this bill, and for those reasons I'm afraid I cannot support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. You spoke about competitiveness, and I can understand your frustration and your caution regarding this government initiative. Being from northeast Calgary, do you think northeast Calgary, in particular the region around the airport, would be more competitive if there was to be an airport tunnel constructed, as you have suggested earlier?

Mr. Kang: Well, there is a $3 billion expansion going on at the Calgary International Airport. The International Airport is a hub not only for the province but for the country as well, and to move traffic around the airport, that will go a long way. You know, if we have the tunnel, we don't have any traffic jams, and we won't be putting out any greenhouse gas emissions. Like the Minister of Transportation says: improving the environment. Anything coming out of the tailpipe will be reduced if we have the airport tunnel.

It will help battle the east-west flow of traffic. Right now we only have 16th Avenue, the Trans-Canada highway 1, and we have Stoney Trail way up north. Those are the only major arteries I can say are moving traffic east and west. So having the airport tunnel will be very helpful to move traffic for the businesses coming into the northeast.

CN is just building a big yard, 272 hectares, in Conrich, and other businesses will follow suit. The only access to Conrich is McKnight and Country Hills Boulevard, and Country Hills Boulevard is not going to be a freeway kind of road. For now it's just two lanes each way. So I think having the tunnel will go a long way to help all the businesses to compete. It's going to affect 20 hotels; it's going to cost them $2 million a year more. And for the guy who's working at the airport for 10 bucks an hour, it's going to cost him $150 a month more. The airport tunnel, I think, will be the only access for the LRT to the airport.

Then the minister keeps on saying again and again that the airport tunnel is not a provincial responsibility. As I said, the airport land, I think, is the responsibility of the provincial government and the federal government and the city and the Airport Authority as well.

Mr. Snelgrove: Darshan, it's there. The tunnel is already there. You just have to take the dirt out of it.

Mr. Kang: The tunnel is already there. That's what I'm looking for. Let's have the shell in place so we can take the dirt out whenever we need it, and we can connect onto it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand before the Assembly today and speak on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. This province and the world have been faced with an economic climate that has impacted all facets of our society. As a result, business and government are seeing the need to adapt to changing economies. Bill 1 acknowledges this and resolves to see Alberta adapt to the shifts in our global economy. Bill 1 will ensure that Alberta is prosperous, successful, and competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 1 will benefit not only my constituents but all Albertans. Essentially, Bill 1 will create a more prosperous province, and all Albertans will be able to prosper as a result. A competitive economy leads to lower prices, higher wages, more jobs, and improves living standards. Not only that, but a more competitive economy grows faster and adapts quicker. My constituents will benefit greatly from the intended outcome of this bill. They will be able to better provide for their families and will benefit from an increase in living standards. Let me be clear: I believe that Bill 1 will benefit all my constituents and all Albertans, including vulnerable Albertans. After all, a more prosperous economy means that they and all Albertans will have the opportunity to prosper.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 1 builds on the success and prosperity that this province has already achieved, success like our savings in the sustainability fund. As a result of these savings this province is in the best financial situation in this country. Furthermore, Bill 1 will build on current government initiatives to achieve a competitive economy. With Bill 1 Alberta can and will be one of the most competitive places to do business, invest, and live.

In addition, Bill 1 will allow this government to better co-ordinate the efforts of the government, industry, and business. This will allow this province to continue to build on our strengths and deliver both the economic results and the quality of life Albertans deserve.

Most of all, Bill 1 will focus on ensuring new partnerships for the future. This bill shows Albertans and the world this government's commitment to make Alberta one of the most economical, competitive places in the increasingly interconnected global marketplace. I believe that with new partners we can bring innovative ideas and people to this province, and those new partners can only help us be better and build on our current successes.

Mr. Speaker, this past year has shown that we must adapt to the ever-changing markets and the direction taken by our business partners not only here in Alberta but across the nation and around the world. In my mind, Bill 1 is the best possible way to do this. Through Bill 1, the leadership of this government, and the work ethics of Albertans, this province will become one of the most competitive jurisdictions in the world, and as a result my constituents and all Albertans will benefit.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to stand in support of this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to join debate on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Now, I think a couple of previous speakers have already made the point that one might want to think about renaming it. Although they identified some good ideas, I think that what you really ought to do is get right to the heart of the matter in terms of what this bill is about. You could actually call it Bill 1, An Act To Make the Government Sound As Far Right As Possible So They Can Recover Their Lost Support from the Wildrose Alliance.

The neat thing that would happen if you renamed the act is that you then have built-in performance measures, something, of course, which is extremely lacking at this point. You could just simply look at polls and determine whether, in fact, the act has actually brought about the outcome that I think it's clearly designed to achieve. Anyway, that's sort of where I would start with the act.

In terms of what's inside the act, again, a couple of people have mentioned – but I do think it's worth repeating – the very beginning of the act, the whole whereas about what it is that underlies this act and why it is we're bringing it in place: "Whereas Alberta's success is founded on the competitiveness and the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans." Others have made this point, but I want to say that I think that's a very narrow view of what contributes to Alberta's success. It's one that, unfortunately, then results in a very narrow view of governance and a very narrow view of policy development.

Personally, I think Alberta's success is also founded on the sense and strength of community across our province. I also believe it's founded on a sense of work ethic and a strive for excellence, not an excellence that brings about competitive advantage but simply excellence for excellence's sake. For instance, in our postsecondary institutions we are actually seeking out knowledge for knowledge's sake, not just because some company is looking for a competitive advantage and the university is there as a support for them but, rather, because we think seeking out knowledge is a good thing.

You can see how defining things as narrowly as defined within this piece of legislation will result in losing the point, I think, in many cases of what it is we're trying to achieve in much of the work that we engage in every day in government.

The other thing, of course, about just that first part, the whereas, is that it talks about "Whereas global competition for access to markets and for investment capital, people and skills is ever increasing." I'm afraid that what this is really about is attracting or thinking you're going to attract investment capital for short periods of time, but it is not at all focused on attracting people and skills to Alberta. Ultimately, when you're looking at trying to present your province as a kind of place for people with great education who have a tremendous amount to offer to the development of our province and who have high skill levels, when you try to bring those people in, they're not so interested in living in, you know, an unregulated, polluted, sprawling suburb right next to Wal-Mart, where their kids can expect to go to work for $6 or $8 an hour or whatever it is, unless of course they're younger, and not receive any health and safety protection. This is not the kind of thing that makes people want to come to Alberta and make their life here and invest their skills and themselves in building the province.

Again, the way this bill is defined and described, it's way too narrow, so we miss out on what it is we're actually trying to achieve or what we should be trying to achieve. One of the things that the bill does, of course, is that it sets up this committee or this agency that's going to then, very vaguely, review how to make Alberta more competitive. I suppose the first concern that we have around this is that we have no sense of who's going to be on this committee or this agency and what their mandate will be.

Of course, you know, the act refers to key stakeholders. Well, my question is: who are those key stakeholders? Will we have temporary foreign workers on that committee, the very people who would be protected by the regulation, which is often characterized as being a barrier to competition? Would we have environmentalists? Are those the key stakeholders that will be on that committee, the very people who advocate for the kind of regulation often characterized as being uncompetitive, characterized in error, I would add, but nonetheless often characterized as being uncompetitive?

Would we have children on that committee; you know, the kids that would be cared for in daycares that are safe and government funded and overseen rather than daycares which are structured through government apathy to allow for sort of Wal-Mart international daycare operators to come in with a minimum of regulation and oversight? Would we have consumers, whom we're supposed to be protecting? Of course, people constantly complain that consumer protection legislation is red tape. Are those the stakeholders?

Really, the term "stakeholder" is very, very vague and, of course, intentionally so in this case. Based on sort of the preamble of the bill, we can only assume that the stakeholders that we're really talking about are business. We're going to put together a committee. We're going to fund that committee. We're going to give it lots of authority and lots of support and resources, and then government is going to sit down with business behind closed doors and cut some regulations and cut some red tape.

Now, of course, the other piece of all of this is the whole question of whether it's behind closed doors or whether it's open and how often it reports and whether people can attend. Maybe we could have public competitiveness review committee meetings, and the public could be invited to come. Maybe that would be a good idea. But, of course, that's certainly not provided for here, and what we know from the record of this government is that transparency is pretty much the last thing on its list of priorities. These are the kinds of things that we are concerned about with respect to the legislation as it's currently constructed.

In the throne speech – I believe it was in the throne speech – there was talk about how, you know, when it comes to the environment and oil and gas, we need to move away from all that sort of red tape at the beginning of giving business approvals. Instead, what we'll do is we'll just sort of let them come on in, and then we'll enforce and monitor once they're in. This, of course, is exactly the kind of thing that we're concerned about because if you don't sit down with business at the outset and say, "Here are the rules that we need you to operate by because our community values safety and the rights of your employees," blah, blah, blah, there's no reason to believe that that's the way they're going to operate other than crossing your fingers and closing your eyes and hoping that it happens. I know this government does use that strategy a fair amount, but we've also found that that often doesn't work.

Then the idea is that, well, everything will be fine, and then we'll send people in to monitor them periodically. Of course, what we've seen in the budget is that we're cutting the budget specifically designed for those people to go in and monitor. What we've seen just in the last two days is that even when we do monitor and we get reports saying, "Oh, FYI, these things have happened which are in breach of your environmental regulations and standards," not only do we not monitor, but we don't enforce, and we don't lay charges. The only reason we do ultimately lay charges is because private citizens file prosecutions, the federal government does it, and international attention is directed towards the problem in a way that embarrasses business. Then suddenly the government gets involved, but before then, we had absolutely no intention of getting involved.

That's what government's monitoring and enforcement looks like now, and their plan, of course, is to actually reduce the funding for that while at the same time limiting red tape, quote, unquote, for the approval process for various applications. Not good. Not good for Albertans, not good for our environment, not good for workers, not good for consumers. It is, as many people have already stated, clearly something that's designed to become a race to the bottom.

The only thing, of course, that gives me any hope in all of this is that, going back to my original point, this is an entirely political document with absolutely no performance measures built into it and no clarity of any type. I suspect that what will happen is that this bill will be passed, and at some point down the road a few Tory friends will be appointed to the committee, and every now and then they'll have a press conference and roll out some documents that have been carefully prepared by the Public Affairs Bureau. Then we'll move on, and if anyone ever asks them about specifics, we'll just hear about how reports are coming but not quite yet. That's kind of how I would describe most of what happens in this government.

Nonetheless, I think that ultimately this bill is sort of meant to lessen, again, even beyond what we expect to have happen tomorrow, restrictions on oil companies and to give opportunity for more royalty breaks as time goes on. Once again, it will be an indication of government prioritizing big business over the interests of regular Albertans.

I've already identified the concern we have about there being no genuine measures of success within this bill. I suppose, as I said, that's kind of standard for how the government functions in these areas.

As I said, ultimately, the question becomes: what is it that the government intends to use to attract business and businesspeople and a skilled labour market to Alberta? We had talked yesterday in the advanced education estimates about a recent report released I think yesterday by the TD bank predicting that one of the most significant economic challenges facing all provinces in Canada will be the labour shortage and a shortage in particular of skilled, educated workers because so many of them are expected to retire at a certain point. As things look right now, we're not doing a very good job of educating the next generation coming up behind them. The gap between the rich and the poor is increasing, and the absolute numbers of people who are able to get this kind of training are also decreasing. Then we're going to have a shortage of these skilled labourers, and that's going to be one of the things that is really critical to the economic development of this province.

Instead, what we will have done is we will have embarked upon a strategy to get rid of so much red tape so that we can kind of convince international business that we're more like China than they thought and that, you know, we can compete with China and India. I suspect that the odds are good that those well-educated, high-skilled workers that we're going to be going after aren't going to be that interested in going to China and India either. We will have basically put our money on the wrong horse while at the same time significantly undermining the health and future of our communities here in Alberta.

Ultimately, all that happens when you simply go after investment money is that money comes, money goes, and it turns on a dime. What makes the economic strength of a province more reliable is having a well-educated, committed local workforce that wants to be there. But you're not going to get that if you don't have accessible advanced education, if you don't have a K to 12 system where the class sizes are reasonable, if you don't have child care, if you don't have a place for people's parents to retire and live out their lives in dignity, if you don't have a well-funded and effective health care system. These are the things that bring people to the province and make us competitive in the long run, and these are the things that a bill like this, phrased as it is, is going to completely ignore.

For all of these reasons at this point I have to say that we will be unable, or certainly I will be unable, to support passage of this bill past second reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona: I share your concerns regarding this bill, but are you, too, concerned that if this legislation passes, this committee that we're going to set up may turn into nothing more than a patronage plum for government members or members of the PC Party?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I sort of touched on that earlier, but absolutely. Because the act itself sets out no parameters for why or how someone would get appointed to this committee, we know that, of course, that's exactly what will happen, that it will be a group of primarily patronage appointments identified and selected through cabinet. Then the question becomes: exactly how are they paid? How much are they paid? For what are they paid? How many meetings do they have to attend? Do we get into these ridiculous situations where they're being paid thousands of dollars for each meeting? Maybe they get thousands of dollars of pay for each meeting plus getting flown around the province and staying at a really, really lovely hotel, a really nice place. Maybe they can meet every time at the JPL or someplace like that because it's, you know, no one's place. Who knows what they'll do?

The point is that there is a history of unchecked, gratuitous spending when it comes to the discretionary salaries that are applied by this government, particularly when we're looking at government appointments to high-level positions. They've certainly not demonstrated a record that would convince me that this is not something we ought to be worried about. When we're in the meantime talking about just even relatively small amounts of $10 million here coming out of programs for kids at risk or a few million dollars there coming out of enforcement, these are things where you need to balance. This is a government that, you know, gave out hundreds of thousands of dollars in iPods to business friends for no apparent reason. I mean, there's not a strong record of sound fiscal balancing by these folks. That's my concern.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. I don't know whether any of the Premier's speeches or any of the government press releases were already on those iPods before they were given out, but that's not my question to the hon. member. Getting back to the competitiveness review and the changes, the sort of odd changes that were made to the minimum wage recently by the minister, how do you feel about those changes whenever you compare our minimum wage to other provinces' and what this government has done with the minimum wage?

Ms Notley: That's a really good question, and that's exactly the concern that we have about this competitiveness review because, of course, it will all be behind closed doors. We'll have business friends and government friends getting together to quietly decide what standards need to be lowered. Of course, we have a perfect example with just an off-the-cuff little decision to walk away from a previous promise made to low-income Albertans, rationalized with the ludicrous explanation that they were going to actually protect jobs by not letting them be paid more, which you could only come up with if you were in a room behind closed doors with one or two of your friends without somebody with more good sense to be in there with you to explain what a ludicrous explanation that was.

These are exactly the kinds of things we're concerned about, whether it's health and safety regulations, workers' standards, temporary foreign worker protection, environmental standards. There are so many areas where this government has barely met a national standard or in many cases hasn't met a national standard. If you put this process in place, there'll be even more opportunities for behind-closed-door efforts to further reduce protections for regular Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Alberta is a great province to live in and do business in. We're blessed with opportunities and natural resources, and Albertans know how to turn that opportunity into success and prosperity. As government we also play an important role in this. It is absolutely critical that the legislation and regulations that we put in place serve a purpose, are not burdensome, and contribute to a healthy economy by encouraging industries, not stifling them.

We need to go further than just not inhibiting growth. It is incumbent on us to work with other industries and help create an environment that encourages industry, an environment where it is the competitive place to do business. The Alberta Competitiveness Act seeks to do just that by making our great province of Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in North America to do business. By creating this environment, everyone benefits. A more prosperous place to do business means our economy grows faster and adapts quicker. It helps create more jobs, higher wages, and improved standards of living.

Mr. Speaker, in my own department, Alberta Transportation, we have looked for ways to help make industry more competitive. In an area such as this it can be a bit of a balancing act. We need to ensure that our roads and railways are safe, but we must find ways to ensure this safety without overburdening the industry with rules and regulations. Rules and regulations must serve a purpose other than to be another rule. They must make sense and contribute to safety, be effective and enforceable without hindering growth and innovation.

Since I've been the Minister of Transportation, a number of changes have been made to enhance competitiveness. Simple changes like allowing easier access to forms and publications and streamlining processes for industry allow businesses more time to focus on their business instead of spending time trying to navigate a confusing process. We've increased winter weight allowances on selected roads to help reduce costs to forest product companies. We've minimized user cost for the transportation of goods and services to contribute to a more competitive environment. We work with other provinces and the federal government to achieve harmonization in regulation.

We also work very hard advocating to the federal government so they do not overburden industry here with regulations that absolutely do not work for Albertans. We're not always successful, but we continue to focus on working with the federal government. If we aren't successful and national regulations come into play, we do whatever we can to help industry adhere to those regulations with the most minimal impact on their businesses.

We've also implemented an online weights and dimensions permit system called TRAVIS to help reduce costs and minimize administrative steps for carriers and shippers. Right now we're working with industry on pilot projects to reduce cost per kilometre through selective lift axle allowances and evaluating super-single tires.

Creating a competitive environment is only half of the solution. We must also maintain a competitive environment, and that means we need to always be assessing, looking for new efficiencies and opportunities to become more competitive. It isn't a task you do one time and put on the shelf. The environment is always changing. We must look for new opportunities and new ways to make the environment better for business, not just to survive but to grow and prosper, and we must do this by working with the various industries in Alberta. It will increase collaboration between government, industry, business, and Albertans, enhance Alberta's competitiveness, and provide long-term benefits for Alberta families and the entire province. Through this new partnership Alberta will better co-ordinate the efforts of government, industry, and business and continue to build on our strengths to deliver both the economic results and the quality of life that Albertans deserve.

Bill 1 shows Albertans and the world our commitment to make Alberta one of the most economically competitive places in the world. It also shows that the province is committed to creating the conditions that will attract new businesses, innovators, and the next generation of entrepreneurs. The purpose of Bill 1 is to create a focus on competitiveness that brings together government, industry, and other Albertans to implement initiatives and develop a strategy that drives action that measurably improves Alberta's competitiveness. Bill 1 will bring together all of these initiatives under one umbrella so we have a co-ordinated effort and greater success at creating a more competitive environment. It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I support Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act.

Thank you very much, and I would like now to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4
Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling
Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate February 24: Mr. Olson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's again a pleasure to speak on Bill 4, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act. The object of the bill is to amend the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Act so that provincial laws align with the new federal legislation. We are just trying to harmonize our laws with the federal legislation, but while doing this largely administrative legislation, this legislation would also give the dangerous goods and rail safety branch of Alberta Transportation a lot of power.

The concern is the sections on time limit for prosecution and the administrative fees, sections 14 and 15, which are unnecessary to align Alberta legislation with the federal counterparts. There are two problems with these sections. It ties the time limit of prosecutions to when the director learns about the offence instead of on the alleged offence itself. It gives the director the power to order a person to pay up to $10,000 in administration fees if the director is of the opinion that a contravention occurred. While the alleged offender has the option to pay the fee outright or appeal to the board, there are questions concerning the independence of the board and concerning the potential fee there may be in place to file an appeal.

I saw nothing in the May 2009 federal amendment to the federal Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act that would require these provisions. These sections, I believe, are the result of staffing and funding shortages, and it would cost a lot less time and money to sway the opinion of the director instead of a judge. So this bill, in my opinion, should have been an uncontroversial bill that upholds the government's agreement with the federal government to align the province's regulations concerning the transportation of dangerous goods with federal regulations. However, because they added powers to the director of the dangerous goods and rail safety branch of Alberta Transportation, an amendment is needed, or else I'm afraid we shall vote against this bill.

When we do the sectional analysis of the bill, in section 3 the FOIP legislation supercedes the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Act. On the face of it I don't see any problem with this section.

Section 4 seems okay, and section 6 is okay.

In section 9 in order for the people to be allowed to transport or handle dangerous goods, they have to meet certain conditions. This section adds to the already existing conditions the condition of passing some sort of security clearance. Under the present circumstances, you know, with the threat of terrorism and all that, people should be required to pass some kind of security clearance to be able to transport dangerous goods.

Section 10 standardizes allowing shipping and documentation and safety standards for dangerous goods.

When we come to section 14, the current time limit for prosecution of an offence is two years from the last alleged offence. The time limit will stay at two years, but it will be two years after either the day of the last offence or the day on which evidence of the alleged offence came to the attention of the director – that is, the director of the dangerous goods and rail safety branch of Alberta Transportation – whichever is later. This is controversial. If it is five years after an alleged offence but the offence just came to the attention of the director, then someone can be prosecuted for the offence.

Do we really want companies or drivers to be liable indefinitely? There could be a problem with proving when the director was alerted to the offence. With the fact that there isn't a maximum of when a person could be charged, the director could learn of an offence 15 years later even. So we need clarification of this clause. Why is it here? What is supposed to be achieved? Is it really fair for a driver or a company to be on the hook for that long a period of time?

The following section of the act deals with penalties for contraventions of the act. This section is adding an entirely new section for administrative penalties. In particular, if the director has the opinion that a person has contravened this act, then the person is to pay the government an administrative penalty in an amount not exceeding $10,000. A person who pays the administrative penalty or wins their appeal will not get charged for the contravention so will not face those penalties. The time limit for receiving an administrative penalty is either a year after the alleged contravention or a year after the director learns of the offence.

Within 30 days of receiving an administrative penalty, a person can either pay it or appeal it. That appeal will also come, probably, with some kind of fee. The board's decision on the appeal is final. According to the stakeholders the likely motivation of this provision is that the province does not have enough inspectors, and there's a lot of paperwork to file a charge against someone. So by issuing fees based on the opinion of the director instead of penalties decided in a court of law, this will be a lot cheaper and require fewer inspectors.

This section gives the director of the dangerous goods and rail safety branch of Alberta Transportation a lot of power. Shouldn't the standard rule for contravention of the act be greater than merely the opinion of the director? If there are fees to appeal an administration fee, then couldn't this become a tax on people who transport dangerous goods in Alberta? If the director wants to generate more revenues for this department, he will just issue these administration fees so that regardless of whether people appeal or just pay the fee, they will receive the revenue.

This is also a get out of jail almost free card. For people who do contravene the act, they can just pay the much lower administration fee instead of penalties they would have had to pay if they were found guilty in a court. Won't this actually make Alberta's highways more dangerous? Are the people guaranteed to have a fair appeal considering that the appeal will be heard by the Alberta Transportation Safety Board and that decision is final? There is currently a lack of inspectors, and the new rules won't be fair and will offer a get out of jail for close to free card. This is probably a result of the government wanting a cheaper, easier way to enforce these rules.

Also, I doubt that an appeal which is heard by the Alberta Transportation Safety Board would be either independent or fair. What I see is that this bill should have been a straightforward bill to protect the environment and people from possible dangers of transporting dangerous goods. Working with the federal government is important to secure the safety of all Albertans. Instead of a straightforward bill, this government seeks some provisions that give them more power and more money.

This bill would potentially make Alberta's highways more dangerous and the rules less fair, all because they don't want to spend the money to get enough inspectors out there to enforce the rules. How would one like to wake up and receive a notice that you owe the government a $10,000 administration fee when your only recourse is to pay the fee or appeal? If you appeal, there's also a fee, and now you have to pay for a lawyer as well.

These are the issues with this bill, so I cannot support this bill as is. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to this bill sponsored by the very honourable Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I would like to make a few comments to this. I'm actually quite interested in this bill, as well as my colleague from Calgary-McCall, because I had very a close experience with one of the largest dangerous goods spills I think probably in Alberta's history. That was the railway spill at Lake Wabamun about five years ago, I believe. If memory is correct, it was the summer of 2005. My family had at that time a cottage at the far west end of Lake Wabamun. I had just gotten there for my one week of holiday. Before the day was over, my holidays were totally disrupted because of this terrible spill.

I'm sure everybody recalls it was a train that derailed towards the east end of Lake Wabamun. The train track there runs along the north side of the lake for many miles, is often within very short yards of the lake. In this particular location where the spill occurred, the track was virtually beside the lake. When the train derailed and the several tanker cars went off the tracks, some of them were punctured and drained into the lake and caused a terrific spill. It caused not only a lot of damage to cottages right nearby; it caused serious and long-lasting environmental damage to the water itself.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I was quite dismayed and concerned with how long it took for both government authorities and the Canadian National Railway to respond in a responsible way. Frankly, the first interest of Canadian National seemed to be to clear the tracks so that their trains could continue to roll. They actually pushed some of the cars aside using maintenance equipment and through that process spilled even more bunker C crude into the lake.

Even worse, Mr. Speaker, a couple of days later it became evident that it wasn't just bunker C that was spilling into the lake. There was something called pole oil, which is a preservative and considerably more toxic than bunker C. Thousands and thousands of litres of that preservative had spilled into the lake, and nobody realized it for the first few days of the spill.

One of the distressing things about that was how long it took officials to respond and how poorly prepared we were. When I say "we," I mean not just the Alberta government but Canadian National Railway. As it turned out, it took several days to bring in equipment and supplies to mop up this spill, and they had to come from places like Montreal and Texas, as I recall. I found that particularly concerning because if you pay attention to the railways in Alberta and, frankly, in many areas of Canada, they follow rivers. It's an obvious place for a railway track to go because rivers follow the lowest elevations, and typically that's where railways want to be going. So we have hundreds and hundreds of miles of railway track in Alberta running beside bodies of water, and we have very, very little preparation.

That was a real eye-opener for me and I think for the people of Alberta and perhaps one of the reasons that this piece of legislation is before us now. If I understand the legislation correctly, it will improve the marking of railway cars that are carrying toxic materials. Hopefully, next time, if there is a next time, people will realize immediately that there is something like pole oil as well as bunker C crude being spilled, and it won't take a number of days for that to be discovered.

One of the questions I have – and perhaps when we're in committee the sponsoring member could address that. All the evidence around that spill suggested that the spill was actually made worse because CNR seemed to put such a priority on clearing the track so their trains could continue to flow. One of my questions with this spill is: does this bill give anybody the authority to order a halt to railway activities until there's a proper assessment done of the situation? A railway is going to be extremely reluctant to do that if it's a main national line like the one involved at Wabamun. But the simple fact of the matter is that it may be necessary to assess the scale of the damage and the best way to minimize that damage. My question on this point to the government would be: under this legislation would there be an official with the power to order a halt to rail activities until an environmental spill was assessed?

I'd also like to just raise the concern around the proposed section 30.1(1), which is on page 8 of Bill 4, and that's concerning the fines, $10,000. Now, the Member for Calgary-McCall raised this. I'm going to take a little different approach. Both 30.1(1) and 30.1(2) address the issue. Actually, I'll read the entire section into the debate. Section 30.1(1) says:

Where the Director is of the opinion that a person has contravened this Act, the Director may, subject to the regulations, order that person to pay to the Government an administrative penalty in the amount, not exceeding $10,000, set out in the order.

Then (2) says:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), where the Director considers that a contravention of a continuing nature continued beyond a single calendar day, the person held to have committed it is additionally liable to the applicable penalty under subsection (1) for each calendar day after the first one on which the contravention is so held to have continued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my questions are around this and around the scale of this fine and how it would be administered. Depending on the spill, $10,000 may be a lot of money. On the other hand, in the case of Wabamun I think total damages got into the many, many tens of millions of dollars. In fact, they might have exceeded $100 million although I'd have to confirm that.

When we're talking about that scale, a fine of a maximum of $10,000 is trivial, frankly. Even if that fine is applied every single day, I can easily see an argument arising from the defendant, "Well, how many days does it apply?" when the act says, "each calendar day after the first one on which the contravention is so held to have continued." Who is going to argue how long the contravention continued? Who is going to rule that? Is it going to be argued in court? I believe it would end up there. Even if it went on for two months, 60 days – help me with my math – I think that's $600,000. It sounds like a lot of money, but if you're talking about a $100 million spill, it doesn't strike me as all that much of a penalty.

I'd ask the government, when we get to committee on this bill, to address that issue and to justify a maximum penalty of $10,000 or perhaps, if they can't justify it, to amend the legislation. There may be explanations through fines under other legislation, but I'd appreciate if that could be elaborated upon.

I would also just like to reinforce in my final comments how important I think this piece of legislation is. Alberta is the base of operations for extensive chemical production and petroleum production. All kinds of dangerous goods are transported down our highways, through our cities, over our rail lines. I think of the development, for example, in the Industrial Heartland and all the chemicals and the millions of tonnes of dangerous goods that are transported through that area.

I feel strongly as a legislator that we have to have not only a tough piece of legislation, but we need to have the resources in place to back it up. So my final question to the government to raise and address in committee would be on what resources there are going to be – money, inspectors, people, equipment, and everything else needed – to make sure that this bill isn't just a good piece of paper but that it's actually effectively out there, backed up, and enforced so that the people of Alberta can live in this province without worrying about a disaster from a dangerous goods spill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 4.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate February 24: Mr. Goudreau]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This piece of legislation is intended to protect search and rescue groups from negligence lawsuits, and it allows for the regionalization of emergency management operations. Now, it's kind of appropriate, I suppose, that this would follow immediately on our debate on Bill 4, which was concerning the transportation of dangerous goods because it could well be that a dangerous goods spill would require a major response from emergency measure organizations. That would require the activities under this piece of legislation.

As I understand it, the object of this bill is to amend the Emergency Management Act to better protect search and rescue workers and organizations from lawsuits and to allow for the regionalization of emergency management responsibilities. One of the things this bill sets out to achieve is to protect search and rescue organizations from trivial or unreasonable or mischievous legal actions, for example around negligence. I'm guessing that perhaps this anticipates that if an emergency organization responds and there's an allegation of negligence and if the negligence is strictly a result of best effort or people responding without full information or otherwise trying to fulfill their responsibilities, they would not be liable for undue legal risk.

There is a rising number of civil lawsuits seeking damages from search and rescue organizations, and it's actually getting to the point where I think it's a serious burden for some of these organizations to continue. It becomes very difficult for them to obtain insurance. They end up spending more money on insurance than on training or on equipment, and that simply seems unreasonable.

I think there are cases in the last couple of years, for example with mountain rescues in the wintertime, where perhaps search and rescue organizations have scrambled and worked hard and put themselves at risk to undertake a mountain rescue, and if things don't go perfectly according to plan or if somebody is inadvertently injured or perhaps the lost person isn't found in time, then the search and rescue organization can find itself liable. Of course, that's counter-productive. These are people, largely, who volunteer their time, go to considerable personal sacrifice to offer their search and management efforts and expertise, and they should not be penalized for doing so. If there's a move in here to better protect these organizations, then I applaud that, and I think you would see us supporting that sort of an initiative. I want to make sure there's an opportunity, however, for our critic, the Member for Calgary-Currie, to speak to this.

There is a question around this, and that is whether people who suffer from damages caused by a search and rescue operation will no longer be able to seek damages. There's a balancing act here. Where will those damages be sought? How do we strike the balance between protecting search and rescue workers and organizations and still protecting the rights, frankly, of the people who may be being rescued? That's going to be interesting to see how this plays out, and we'll learn more from debate.

I think with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and allow our member for Calgary-Currie to respond, unless there's anything under 29(2)(a). Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much. Not on 29(2)(a)? This is on the debate itself?

The Acting Speaker: No, it's not 29(2)(a).

Mr. Taylor: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and get on the record at second reading debate on Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010. [interjection] Behave yourself, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who has been known to get a little carried away from time to time.

An Hon. Member: No. We don't want to know.

Mr. Taylor: I promise, hon. member, I won't go into details on that.

Now back to the matter at hand. This bill, Bill 6, is a little bit like fixing something that isn't broken yet. I think I'm very supportive in this case of the notion of doing this because it really seeks to do two things: to allow for the regionalization of emergency management operations – and, at least in theory, there should be some efficiencies and perhaps some expertise to be gained from taking that approach – and to protect search and rescue groups from negligence lawsuits by not providing funding for third-party insurance but by stipulating good-faith legislation.

This really, Mr. Speaker, hearkens back to a case a little over a year ago in British Columbia where three search and rescue teams suspended service after a lawsuit was launched by a man whose wife tragically died when the couple got lost in the backcountry near the Kicking Horse Resort in British Columbia. We haven't had a situation like that in this province yet, and I think that this legislation seeks to ensure that we don't have a situation that gets to the point where search and rescue workers very much operating in good faith are liable for legal action.

Search and rescue workers do go out into some pretty hazardous conditions sometimes and do everything in their power to rescue people, to find people who are lost, to save lives. Bill 6 would extend roughly the same protection to them as we extend to firefighters currently, and I think it's a very, very reasonable thing to do for the protection of those people who, you know, often in volunteer situations put their own safety and security of the person on the line to help others who are very much in need of assistance and who would also, without this legislation, be running the risk of putting their own personal financial situations at risk should something go wrong or be alleged to go wrong.

On the good-faith section of this bill what that really does, as I understand it, is say that when search and rescue operators are acting in good faith, doing everything that they know how to do or that they're aware that they could do to try and find someone who is lost, to rescue someone who is in trouble, if the outcome is not successful, if the outcome is tragic, they did nothing wrong by trying their best to save a life, to rescue somebody, and they should not be held legally or financially liable for that. That, in principle, Mr. Speaker, is something that we on this side of the House can very much support.

On the other issue, which is the regionalization of search and rescue and emergency service providers, again, in principle, that seems to make sense. Regionalization, when done right, makes sense. Emergency planning and response requires collaborative efforts. Smaller municipalities often lack the resources that would be necessary. You really do have to ask yourself, Mr. Speaker, why it would be necessary for every town and village and summer village and hamlet to have their own person tasked with having responsibility for emergency management when, in fact, it might all be more effectively rationalized and regionalized under the municipal district or under a collaborative approach.

Again, in principle, Mr. Speaker, I think that that is something that we can support. Of course, second reading debate is precisely that: it's debate in principle on a bill.

I do have some questions. I will have some questions that I will want to get into when this bill moves to committee. I don't think that I have any huge concerns about the bill. I don't see anything in here, depending on the answers that I get at committee to my questions, that suggests to me that this bill is going to need to be amended, but just so that we make sure that we're clear on the section-by-section intent of this bill, I will be asking those questions at committee stage but certainly pleased to support this bill in principle at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak very briefly on this bill and, basically, just simply to put out a question. I pretty much agree with everything that's been said up to date, that the intentions, the good faith behind this bill seems to be there, and it seems to make sense to support it.

The only question that I will ask and I'm hoping that maybe in committee or at some point further on in the process I can get an answer to, that I always worry about, is the situation where let's say you have some type of outfitter company that earns money by selling an outdoor package to people. They promise certain safety and all that kind of stuff. People buy that package. They go out – let's just say it's into the mountains, skiing, heliskiing, whatever; it doesn't really matter – into the mountains, and they ultimately get lost, and something bad happens. The search and rescue goes in to try and retrieve them. Then they actually also make a mistake in terms of the retrieval, so some type of very severe personal injury or damage is suffered as a result.

I'm absolutely fine with the idea of the search and rescue people not being held liable for whatever they do in good faith, particularly because so many of them are volunteer based. My concern is that were that person to then try and sue the outfitter, would they run into situations where the outfitter, because of sort of the regulatory infrastructure within which they operate, would be entitled to argue that they had reliance on certain actions being taken by the search and rescue team? Then, of course, you can't sue the search and rescue team.

Effectively, what ends up happening is that you've got a regulatory infrastructure, and the person trying to sue is sort of following the liability trail. Then, ultimately, they get to a point where that trail, for good reason but for a different reason, disappears, and they can't get damages for what may ultimately be very severe personal injury through no fault of their own.

That's more my question. It's not the search and rescue people but rather the other agencies or businesses that may ultimately also have liability and whether they get into a position of being able to shift their liability to the search and rescue groups because then the standard changes dramatically. Then the person who suffers injury, in part because of the negligence of the business owner in the first place, is unable to collect. That's just a question I have. I hope I articulated the question in a sufficiently clear way that at some point the sponsor of the bill can come back and answer that question. Otherwise, for all the reasons that have already been identified, it makes good sense to support the bill, but I would just like that question answered.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, anybody wish to speak? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 3 Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010. I would like to begin by thanking everyone for their united support for this bill. This bill proposes two house-keeping amendments. The first amendment relates to section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act, which allows certain surviving family members – a spouse, adult interdependent partner, a child, and parents – to recover damages for the emotional suffering and grief caused by the wrongful death of a close family member. This law ensures that family members do not have to litigate in order to receive damages for their grief.

Presently the act limits the class of family members eligible to receive bereavement damages. These damages may not be awarded to parents if their deceased child was married or had an adult interdependent partner, and damages may not be awarded to a child for their deceased parent if the child was married or had an adult interdependent partner. The passage of Bill 3 will broaden the eligibility for bereavement damages by opening up eligibility to a child that is married or has an adult interdependent partner. This change will mean that parents may be awarded damages regardless of the marital status of their deceased child and a child may be awarded damages for the death of a parent regardless of the child's marital status. This amendment is consistent with the rule of law and court decisions on this issue.

The second amendment removes the reference to a child as including an illegitimate child. Distinguishing between legitimate and illegitimate children is no longer appropriate in legislation. It is also out of step with modern-day family structures and dynamics. All children should be considered equal regardless of the marital status of the child's parents. This amendment is consistent with Alberta's Family Law Act.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, these amendments reflect the rule of law and current demographics in Alberta. I thank all members for participating in this debate and look forward to their feedback.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks so much, Mr. Chairman. There are times when I think it's worth reflecting on history and the way that the decisions we make in this Legislature may be played out in years and decades and even centuries to come. I think we have an opportunity here to reflect on that. This is a small, modest bill that I'm sure our caucus will support. But it's a bill with a very long history, and I think it's worth just getting some of that on the record. The provisions of Alberta's Fatal Accidents Act are rooted in English common law, and as I'll explain in a minute, some of this law goes back a number of centuries.

Under the common law of England and Wales the death of a person causes emotional and economic loss to their relatives, and in general damages cannot be recovered for either one of those types of damage but only for the physical damage to the claimant or to their property. This was a rule that goes back to a court case in 1808, so 202 years ago. It was Baker versus Bolton in England and Wales. Scotland had a little different take on the law. Trust the Scots. Anyway, the way the English and Welsh law was 200 years ago, if a person was injured, the wrongdoer could be liable for causing injury, but if the person were killed, there would be no liability. So, perversely, the wrongdoer had a financial interest in killing rather than just injuring a victim. That's how things were 200 years ago.

Then during the 1830s there was rapid development of the railways. That led to increasing public hostility to an epidemic of railway deaths and the indifferent attitude of the railway companies. Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, a railway company being indifferent to things like safety? But, I guess, it does happen or it has historically. Anyway, as a result of public outcries, inquest juries started to revive an ancient remedy of Deodands as a way of penalizing the railways. The railway accident at Sonning Cutting in 1841 was particularly notorious. This was quite a startling accident. As a result of that, in 1841 legislators, in particular Lord Campbell and the Select Committee on Railway Labourers – well, Lord Campbell formed the Select Committee on Railway Labourers in 1846, and in the face of railway opposition a bill was introduced to change the situation.

What became law was known in 1846 as the Deodands Act, and it somewhat addressed this issue. What it did is it gave personal representatives the right to bring legal action for damages where the deceased person had had such a right at the time of their death. Compensation was restricted to the husband, the parent, or the child of the deceased and was for such damages proportioned to the injury resulting from such death.

In any case, the law continued to evolve. In 1858 it was amended again and gradually evolved into the legislation that we are amending one more time now in 2010. So this piece of legislation goes back over 200 years and has been amended many times. The amendments we're looking at today are really strictly a matter of language, in effect modernizing some of the language and terminology that's in the legislation. As the Member for Lethbridge-West said in his opening comments, it seems like a simple and appropriate thing to do, so we will, I expect, fully support this piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Ouellette]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member – the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know it can be a little confusing having a couple of titles in this Chamber.

I'm rising today just to have a few words on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, as we move it through second reading. I'd like to start by thanking the Premier for bringing this piece of legislation in. I do think that it is important that we actually continue this not just in our oil and gas, as many people have talked about the competitiveness there. Rather, we also need to talk about competitiveness in other areas and the economy as a whole. We have the highest per capita GDP in Canada but at the same time have to continually ask ourselves if this is a competitive economy, and we must continually ask ourselves what we can do to make us more competitive as well.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta emerges from the worst economic downturn in over a half century, this shows another reason why we need to continually re-evaluate our competitiveness. We've been taught a difficult yet very valuable lesson about the importance of using all of our resources to create a strong and healthy economy, but right now I think we also have been presented with a golden opportunity to demonstrate that we have indeed taken that lesson to heart. With that opportunity, this government has created Bill 1.

Many may ask: "What is Bill 1? Why do we need this?" Well, this bill proposes to establish a partnership between relevant government ministries and key competitive stakeholders. The partnership would work better to co-ordinate the efforts and resources of the government, industry, and business, which would build on our strengths and encourage that Alberta has a solid economic foundation going forward. As I've mentioned before, it's important to continually evaluate this because the private sector does change, the economy does change, Mr. Speaker, but at the same point of time, likewise, the government must change. We can't simply think that we have something down pat just because we are in a situation in this province as we are.

Mr. Speaker, by legislating this partnership we're demonstrating our commitment to providing Albertans with the type of economy that will ensure prosperity over the longer term. That's something all members here are charged with regardless of their party stripe. We're taking it upon ourselves to assume responsibility for this province's economic future and creating opportunities for future generations.

In addition to this, by creating a legal foundation for economic competitiveness, Bill 1 will hold this and future governments to account for the health of Alberta's economy by creating objective standards by which we can measure our own progress. This bill will also help ensure that the industry-government partnership looks at all aspects of competitiveness. That includes, without limitation, Mr. Speaker, existing partnerships and existing policies and existing regulations. In doing this, we can identify and eliminate any unnecessary regulations that could act as a barrier for competitiveness, and that's something that is quite attractive to me.

Indeed, regulatory pressures in many areas can directly affect an industry's ability to compete in the global marketplace. We have to remember that we're not just competing with British Columbia or with Saskatchewan or with Ontario. We're competing globally with different states and different countries with which we have free trade agreements or not. If we can work with stakeholders to reduce the amount of red tape that these industries have to cut through in order to do business, it will work to the advantage of all Albertans.

I must also say, Mr. Speaker, that this act is consistent with things that this government has done over the past couple of years, including the TILMA agreement a couple of years ago reducing trade tariffs with our neighbours. By creating efficiencies and eliminating redundant processes and policies, we are also demonstrating fiscal responsibility by ensuring that public money is not being wasted.

Mr. Speaker, now more than ever Albertans simply need their government to do everything it can to protect their livelihoods today and to ensure continued prosperity for their children and future generations to enjoy tomorrow. I know members of this Assembly consider this every day, but at the same time this act actually puts it into writing, puts it into stone.

This legislation will not only facilitate competition for Alberta businesses, but it also will oblige and commit governments to maintaining a process by which we can regularly review our efforts and evaluate our achievements. Because of the tremendous opportunities that Bill 1 will create for our province now and for years to come, Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support this bill and encourage my hon. colleagues on all sides of the House to do the same.

I thank you for this opportunity to speak to this bill. With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that this House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:59 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three grade 6 classes that came from Ashmont school. Sixty students, five teachers, and three teacher aides have come to visit this Assembly. Just very quickly, I want to say that Ashmont is very proud of their accomplishments, especially their accomplishments in athletics and their participation not only throughout Alberta but throughout western Canada. The teachers that are in the public gallery are Mr. Keith Gamblin, Mrs. Carol Kam, Ms Amber Faganello, Mrs. Doris Vallee, Mrs. Jackie Michaud, and teacher assistants Ms Lisa LeMaigre, Mrs. Debbie Tchir-Houle, and Ms Susan Novosiwsky. If I could please ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to rise on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-West and Minister of Energy to introduce to you and through you this wonderful group of students from Webber Academy that are seated in the members' gallery. There are 53 of them here today, and they are the grade 5 class. Webber Academy is one of the top-rated schools in the province and also the school that my granddaughter Mackenzie attends. Accompanying them today is Mr. Daniel Mondaca, who is also my granddaughter's basketball coach and who just won the league pennant a couple of weeks ago and the bronze at provincial league this past week; Mr. Jason Ash; and Ms Heather Gallagher. I'd like them all to stand now and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Barbara Sriver, Tracy Kennedy, and Megan Lalonde from the Alberta Association of Midwives, who are seated in the public gallery. The Alberta Association of Midwives evolved out of a recognized need for continuity of care in the maternity cycle as well as in response to increasing public support of midwifery in Alberta. Since it was formed, the association has worked very hard to promote legalization and public funding of midwifery, and now that these services are covered, we need to start training more of them here in Alberta. Midwives have a unique and essential role to play in the facilitation of normal birth through the art and science of midwifery, and simply put, we need more of them. I would ask that my guests now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly Dr. Keith Archer and his five senior students in political science 429 at the University of Calgary. These students have been studying the political process which results every few years in the election of this Legislature. They're here to examine the makeup of the Legislature, to develop an understanding of how this happened, and what the Official Opposition's role is. I had the pleasure of meeting with Dr. Archer and his students earlier today and was impressed with their knowledge and interest. I hope they'll find their trip to the Legislature illuminating and that they'll be inspired to continue participating in many different ways in Alberta politics. Alberta needs active, engaged citizens, and I'm so glad to have them with us today. Would you rise and get the enthusiastic welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it is, frankly, a real honour to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a group of nine family members seated in the public gallery who are joining us today to witness the tabling of Dorothea Arneson's tragic story in the Alberta health care system. Dorothea's family are now strong advocates for proper patient care. I would like to ask each of them to rise as I say their names: Carol Logan, Elmer Arneson, Norma Ross, Don Ross, Laryssa Speck, Sarah Logan, Melissa Logan, Dorothea Matter, and Terra Matter. Please give them a warm and respectful welcome.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction today is to introduce to all members of the Assembly a representative from the Kidney Foundation who is joining us today on what is World Kidney Day and working so hard to raise awareness of the importance of kidney health. Our guest is executive director Heidi Erisman, who's working very hard to help fight kidney disease and promote kidney health. I would ask her to please rise, and I'd ask all members to give her a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a gentleman who travels Alberta on a daily basis. He travels providing service and supplies to coffee shops, that all of us as MLAs are familiar with in knowing what's going on in a community. This gentleman travels highway 63 often. He has some comments he'll provide to the Transportation minister later. Indeed, it's a pleasure to introduce him today. His home is in Vegreville. I'd like to ask the gentleman, Rick Davey, to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Luzviminda "Ching" Rodriguez of the Republic of the Philippines. Ms Rodriguez is the president of Arrowhead Manpower Resources Inc. and a staunch advocate for the ethical recruitment of Filipino workers for overseas employment. A few minutes ago she had a courtesy call with the Minister of Health and Wellness and has a scheduled meeting with Alberta Health Services. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of introduction, there's also an anniversary today for a number of members. On March 11, 1997, an election was held in the province of Alberta, and today is the 13th anniversary for the following members: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Their 13th election anniversary.

On March 12, 2001, there was also an election in the province of Alberta, and today is the ninth anniversary of the election of the following members to the Assembly for the first time: the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Their ninth anniversary.

And tomorrow will be happy birthday for the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2010 Paralympic Winter Games

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have heard a lot in the last month about the success of the Winter Olympics, and I think we're all still probably aglow from that experience. But I'd like to remind everybody that there's still lots more excitement to come. The 2010 Paralympic Winter Games begin tomorrow – 7 p.m. is the opening ceremonies – and for the next 10 days people from around the globe will be treated once again to world-class competition.

Games for people with disabilities have been occurring since 1948 in England, when after the Second World War there were games that were set up for veterans with spinal cord injuries. Then the Paralympics as we now know them today began following the 1960 Olympics.

The 2010 Paralympic Games will feature 600 athletes competing in five different sports, which are biathlon, alpine skiing, ice sledge hockey, wheelchair curling, and cross-country skiing. All of these sports are medal events, and the athletes are of the highest calibre. We have nine Alberta athletes who will be representing our province during these games. One athlete you may have heard of is Brian McKeever, a seven-time Paralympic medalist in cross-country skiing from Calgary. He has only 10 per cent vision, but this hasn't stopped him from competing in and winning numerous world events, including the world championships. His brother Robin, who is also a talented skier and competed in Nagano in 1998, races alongside Brian as his guide. Brian is going to be one of the many inspiring athletes for us to follow this year.

Again, if you haven't had a chance, I really encourage you to make a concerted effort to see these Paralympic Games and watch Alberta athletes in action. These Paralympians are phenomenal athletes, and as Brian himself says, "I don't think the public understands how high the level of competition is for the Paralympics." The athletes' courage, determination, and commitment reflect the world-class competitors they are.

So watch tomorrow night. Good luck to all participants.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Highland Park Community Association

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize the Highland Park Community Association. This is a community in my constituency of Calgary-North Hill that exemplifies the challenges of an urban inner-city community as well as the unwavering community spirit exhibited throughout communities in Alberta.

I've attended several community functions in this community over the last couple of years, including attending community association meetings, a lawn sale organized last June by several community members as well as a couple of Saturdays ago their winterfest. This community has faced several challenges over the last years, including the siting of the Fresh Start recovery housing and addiction treatment centre, with which they developed a good neighbour agreement that I tabled in the Legislature a couple of weeks ago. They've also had the siting and operation of a methadone clinic without proper consultation and zoning. They also need some much-needed funding for vital repairs and maintenance to their community hall as it's, you know, falling apart as it's a much older building. That includes repairs to the roof, ceiling, and kitchen and landscaping necessary for flood prevention.

The good news, Mr. Speaker, is that the Highland Park Community Association was recently approved for some community facility enhancement program funding that in combination with funding from the city will go a long way in repairing and revitalizing and reinvigorating the Highland Park community centre and its citizens. Countless hours of hard work have been put in by the volunteers of the association to deal with these issues and for planning for the future vitality of the community. These contributors deserve to be recognized for their hard work and commitment to the community. They are Kevin Bentley, Mike Speta, Wayne Carrol, Monica Curle, Kirsten Sztain, Anne Naumann, Bill Morrison, Kathy Saunders, and Syd Deck. The work of these volunteers has been crucial, as is the funding that they will be receiving for their community hall, in dealing with the challenges of inner-city urban communities such as this. It is an honour to stand today and recognize them and celebrate the tremendous spirit of this community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

World Kidney Day

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 there were nearly 164,000 people with diabetes in Alberta, double the number of cases from just 10 years ago. That's a city's worth of citizens with a controllable but still serious, still life-threatening disease. The cost of the disease, the impact on health and happiness are immense, yet diabetes is just one of a score of medical conditions that affect the kidneys. Infections, inflammation, and inherited disorders such as polycystic kidney disease all have negative impacts on human health. Today, on World Kidney Day, I encourage Albertans to take a moment to think about their kidneys.

The good news is that most kidney diseases can be detected early. If you're obese, if you smoke, if you have hypertension, if you're over 50, or if you have a family history of kidney disease, make an appointment with your doctor or visit a clinic to get screened.

As we consider World Kidney Day, I'd like to acknowledge the many scientists, researchers, health care professionals, volunteers, and organizations such as the Alberta Kidney Disease Network and the Kidney Foundation of Canada. They are all working very hard to fight kidney disease and help people with kidney problems live more enjoyable lives.

I encourage Albertans to consider how they can help join the fight against kidney disease. Volunteer with the Kidney Foundation, donate your old, unwanted vehicle to the kidney car program, make sure you sign the organ donor consent line on the back of your Alberta health care card. Seventy per cent of Canadians waiting for an organ donation are waiting for a kidney. Kidney transplants enjoy a high success rate, between 90 and 95 per cent, and can bestow 10 to 20 additional years of life to the recipient. Your gift of life, our gift of life can make a huge difference.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Volunteer Recognition

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Volunteers are the building blocks of our communities and make an invaluable contribution to our society. One of the highlights of success of the recent Vancouver Olympic Games was the exceptional contribution of volunteers. Within Alberta approximately 2.5 million volunteers contribute approximately 449 million hours to community services. That's almost half a billion hours. Additionally, over 160,000 Albertans serve on boards of directors of organizations ranging from community associations and recreational sports groups to health regions and major cultural and social service organizations. Volunteers make Alberta a better place to live, and many are recognized for their contribution to the province.

On March 5 I had the honour of participating in the Grasslands Regional Family and Community Support Services citizen and junior citizen of the year presentations and celebration. More than twenty 2009 volunteers of the month for Brooks and area were recognized and honoured by the community for their volunteer activity, 20 people who represent a strong network of dedicated people who make Brooks and area a better place to live.

Mr. Albert Zagorsky was honoured as citizen of the year. Albert has been a dedicated volunteer for over 40 years in Brooks and the surrounding communities. As founder of the Brooks Overture Society, director and leader of the Brooks and District Community Band, and teacher to thousands of students Albert has created a musical legacy in our area. Albert is an accomplished ambassador for Brooks and the Newell region, gaining recognition across the prairie provinces, and if you've had the opportunity to hear the Brooks marching band, you'll know what I mean.

The junior citizen of the year is Talon Chandler, a grade 12 student at the Brooks composite high school who has immersed himself in student clubs and community organizations, particularly volleyball. Nominated for the award by his teachers, Talon has made an outstanding contribution to his community and represents many volunteers in the Brooks area. Talon is positive and outgoing, actively looking for ways to help others. He is the elected president of his graduating class at the Brooks composite high school.

As is often the case, a host of volunteer activities were some of the highlights of both Albert's and Talon's nominations.

Mr. Speaker, today I join the Grasslands FCSS, the Rotary Club of Brooks as the award sponsors, and the communities of Brooks and area in honouring Albert Zagorsky and Talon Chandler as Brooks' citizen and junior citizen of the year and acknowledge the host of volunteers who make our communities, our province, and our country a better place to live.

*Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Decision-making

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Doctors, nurses, and other health professionals have a moral and professional responsibility to advocate on behalf of better patient care. Cancer doctors in both Calgary and Edmonton have from time to time spoken out about the need for expanded cancer care in these centres. Yesterday Alberta Health Services forbade cancer physicians at the Tom Baker in Calgary from speaking publicly about the need for new cancer facilities. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: does the minister agree with the health superboard forbidding cancer doctors from commenting on capacity problems at the Tom Baker cancer centre?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm very aware of what the needs are for cancer treatment and cancer patients in general in Calgary. I was just there and visited the Tom Baker centre, and I'm pretty on top of the issue. I don't know what the hon. member is driving at here. I'm not familiar with the directive that he's referring to. But what I would just say quickly, Mr. Speaker, is that if it's a policy matter, whoever is asking that question should direct it to the Health Services people. If it's medical, ask the doctors.

Dr. Swann: I'm disappointed, Mr. Minister. You know there's a culture of intimidation and fear in this province around health care workers speaking out.

Do you support that gag order, or do you not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any gag order. I've been out talking to doctors. They're talking very openly, very freely with me. They're talking very openly with the Health Services people. I've talked with the nurses. I've talked with the optometrists. I've talked with pharmacists. I've talked with a whole bunch of people. There are 90,000 people out there, and I may get to talk to every one of them yet.

Dr. Swann: Denial, denial, denial, Mr. Minister.

This is the same week that the superboard blocked the full release of the report from the Health Quality Council. Does the minister agree that the superboard is spinning out of control and blocking information from Albertans, including that from health professionals?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, nobody is blocking any information whatsoever. I spoke with Alberta Health Services yesterday. I spoke with the Health Quality Council yesterday. They said they had some privacy concerns related to the parameters of the Alberta Evidence Act and the Health Information Act, issues of privacy that are being resolved. I said: well, speed it up, please, so that we can get the report out to the public. They're going to do that in nine days.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care in Grande Prairie

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 this government committed to fund a new long-term care facility in Grande Prairie. It promised $4.6 million. A total of $2.3 million was paid to Chantelle Management to get the building under way to replace the outdated and unsafe Grande Prairie care centre. In this facility it takes 45 minutes to get all 60 patients down to the main floor. Families must be praying that a fire doesn't break out in the future. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: why has no work been started on this facility in the four years since the $2.3 million was transferred?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand there are a number of circumstances around this project, but I believe that they are in the process of getting started. We will follow up with our office to see where they are in this process.

Dr. Swann: Well, how is the minister accounting for the funds distributed through this affordable supportive living initiative when it seems that the residents of Grande Prairie are still waiting for action after four years of this company having 2.3 million public dollars?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have a program in my department called the affordable supportive living initiative. There are a number of criteria that organizations have to meet in order to be able to get the funding. One of the criteria is that they're able to go into the ground within nine months of receiving the funding, and the second one is that they're finished within two years of receiving that funding. That part of our program has been in process in the last two years.

Dr. Swann: I assume, then, that the minister is acknowledging that she doesn't know what's happened to that $2.3 million.

To the Minister of Health and Wellness. The Premier stated earlier that the minister is travelling to Grande Prairie. Will the minister commit to visiting this centre and ensuring that he understands the need for urgent change in that facility?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if the schedule allows, I'd certainly welcome the opportunity to do that. We're visiting Grande Prairie. I'll also be visiting High Prairie. We're on a tight schedule so that I can come back here for question period that same day, but we'll do the best we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with the third Official Opposition main question.

Funding of Private Schooling

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: why does this government have so much money to pay the private school tuition for the children of elite Conservative appointees, yet it is forcing the closure of necessary public schools in central Edmonton neighbourhoods? [interjection] You may laugh, but it is true.

Mr. Hancock: Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of different ways of delivering education to the children of Alberta to make sure that every child has an opportunity to learn in their best way, in their best place. As we study how we go forward to do it better, we will even provide more options, I hope, for children to be able to learn in the manner and in the place and at the pace that makes sense for them. We pay for students in public schools, and we pay significantly less for students who go to private schools, but they all get educated.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister. That's not true, Mr. Speaker. How can this government justify spending $100,000 a year on private tuition for Gary Mar's children in Washington and on Vancouver Island at the same time we're closing public schools in central Edmonton neighbourhoods as a cost-saving measure?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in many circumstances both in the private and public sectors contracts of employment are entered into. I'm not aware of the details of the contract of employment intergovernmental relations has entered into to ensure that we have the best ambassador possible in the U.S. to promote Alberta's interests and make sure that Alberta jobs are secure. But I can tell you this: Gary Mar is doing a fantastic job down there making sure that every single state in the United States knows how much they benefit from the work that happens in this province, and the contract of employment is worth it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education: why does this government value the elite, private education of the children of hand-picked Conservative appointees over the public education of children in central Edmonton neighbourhoods, right here in this city?

Mr. Hancock: The answer is: we do not. The government does a wide range of very important things. One of the most important things the government does is make sure that every child in Alberta has an opportunity to succeed, an opportunity to learn. We do that very well through very good school boards across the province, including the school boards right here in Edmonton, who are among the best in the world. People come from all over the world to see what we're doing right here.

We also do other things, Mr. Speaker. It will surprise the hon. member to know that one of the ways we pay for those schools is by doing business and selling our products around the world and having ambassadors to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Oil Royalty Framework

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this government puts politics ahead of Albertans. They have been declaring how pleased industry would be with the new, new, new royalty framework and, "Trust us." With yesterday's accepted offers for the petroleum and gas rights the industry told this government: we don't trust you. Analysts believed a billion dollars could be raised. We received $167 million; 17 cents on the expected dollar. To the Premier. Well, the President of the Treasury Board may be able to answer this: why did you choose to fail the people of Alberta and industry by waiting to pay . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously we all read the newspapers. We all read the discussion in the papers around what some analysts expected and what some other analysts expected. I recall reading one of the clips saying that one of the buyers in the auction yesterday said: I don't know where that number came from. Simply, that was a projection by one or two analysts who thought, given what was going on in shale gas and given what was going on in some of the other areas which we're very akin to, that the auction might be a little higher.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the expected money was because, perhaps, they'd know what the royalty rate is going to be. Is the Premier and the cabinet not aware that industry needs to know the royalty rate before they can decide the bonus bid they are putting to purchase offers for petroleum and gas rights?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course we are. Which is why this afternoon we're going to be following up on a commitment this Premier made to ensure that we are the most competitive and innovative jurisdiction in this country.

Mr. Hinman: You're going to do it this afternoon? Mr. Speaker, given that we have had nine land sales totalling $870 million since they promised last fall a new, new, new royalty framework, did the Premier really believe that industry is going to bid top dollar not knowing what the royalty rate is from one year to the next? Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board will give us a lame excuse for this delayed release.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the second-largest land sale year we've had in a number of years. That shows the commitment and the optimism that our industry has.

I would also point out that most people in the financial sector or even in the oil and gas sector would recognize that you don't make an announcement like the one that we're going to be making before the markets are closed. I think the hon. member should understand that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

2:00 Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the so-called competitiveness review is being released in downtown Calgary and is widely expected to recommend slashing royalties further. The government, afraid for its political life, has sold out the interests of Albertans, who own the resources, in favour of its friends in the oil and gas industry. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Why has this government folded like a cheap tent on oil and gas royalties when faced with industry pressure?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that all members of the House and all the listeners at home and the members in the gallery will recognize that I just had a question about why we aren't slashing them even more, and now we're getting the question of: well, maybe we should make them higher and not slash them at all. It's about the right balance. It's about creating the right competitive environment, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government does not have the right balance.

Given that industry activity has been affected by dropping prices more than the very modest royalty changes we saw two and a half years ago and that activity is now beginning to rebound along with prices, will the Deputy Premier admit that these changes reflect its fear of political defeat rather than economic necessity?

Mr. Horner: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what I will admit to is that this government will respond to the economic climate of the day. This government will respond to what has been probably the worst global recession since the '30s. We're creating an environment within this jurisdiction that is second to none in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that no one is left defending the interests of the owners of this resource, namely the people of Alberta, except Alberta's NDP, will the Deputy Premier admit that his government has stopped, in Peter Lougheed's words, thinking like an owner and is putting the interests of its friends in the oil and gas industry ahead of the people of Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, every member of this government caucus represents the people of Alberta, that have elected them to this House. It is about striking the right balance. It's about striking the right balance about the value that the owners of the resource get, which are all Albertans in the province. It's about striking the right balance ensuring that the investors who put the money in to get the resource out of the ground or out of the oil sands make an adequate return so that we can make a return.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Swan Hills treatment plant cost Albertans $22 million to operate. A review of the plant was completed one year ago. The review gives recommendations on what to do with the plant, to close it down or to keep subsidizing it. To the Minister of Infrastructure. The government has been reviewing these recommendations for a year. What has the minister finally decided?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me first tell you that the Swan Hills treatment plant has done an excellent job in helping rid the province of hazardous wastes and PCBs and dioxins. Also, let me make this very clear: the purpose of the plant is to ensure that we get rid of those PCBs. There is no doubt that the government is reviewing the recommendations, as it does every five years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister publicly release the review done on the Swan Hills treatment plant? That's my second question, sir.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're doing a comprehensive strategic assessment. But I need to express one thing: the Swan Hills treatment plant is a plant that is like a utility. It is for the insurance that the dioxins and the PCBs are taken care of in this country and in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the minister is waiting for the next review, scheduled four years from now, to make a decision. While the minister hems and haws, how many more taxpayer dollars are going to have to go to this money pit?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that we have done a strategic review and a strategic assessment, and at this particular time we are assessing what that assessment is saying and what the recommendations are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Wetlands Policy

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been some suggestion that industry is influencing the development of the provincial wetland policy more than other sectors. My question for the Minister of Environment: is it true?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I would say that industry certainly has an influence on the policy development that government makes but no more so than any other of the sources that we seek to provide us with advice and input as we develop policy. As an example, on the wetlands policy the Alberta Water Council consulted with in excess of a thousand different stakeholders in developing a policy, but I remind the member and I remind all that it's up to the government to develop the final policy and make the decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: will this government adopt a policy that treats all wetlands alike?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's very much the crux of the issue. There are on one side of this equation those that believe that all wetlands should be treated identically, and on the extreme opposite end there are some that believe that some wetlands shouldn't be considered at all. Really, therein lies the problem that we're wrestling with. How do we maintain that balance? Clearly, some wetlands are of differing value. Some support biodiversity. They benefit local ecology. Some are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second supplemental to the same minister. This process has been going on for some time and, as I understand it, has missed at least one deadline. My question: why is this taking so long?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a complex issue, as I've already explained. As an example, it took the Alberta Water Council three years to come up with a nonconsensus recommendation. We're committed to getting this right. At the end of the day we have to protect our wetlands if we're going to turn over an environment that we are proud to turn over to future generations. If we get it wrong now, subsequent generations are going to pay for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Kainai Community Correctional Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Solicitor General was kind enough to provide some responses regarding questions about the Kainai Community Corrections Society. I'd like to follow up today. To the Solicitor General. This government has worked to scale back conditional sentencing and keep offenders in correctional facilities. Won't tougher laws, the prospect of new minimum penalties, and relying on prisons as a deterrent lead to a larger custodial population?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose that's a possibility, but these are issues under federal jurisdiction. I can't really comment at this time what the impact will be, but certainly we will respond to whatever impact is imposed upon us. In the meantime I have to provide the facilities to house the inmates that we do have.

Ms Pastoor: The Solicitor General noted that the Kainai facility's utilization rate was too low and that economically viable solutions needed to be found elsewhere. Did the minister or the department consider other options to closing this facility such as reclassifying the institution to hold medium security prisoners? Has anyone from the ministry ever discussed other options?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, this is a minimum security facility; it's not a medium security facility. The province doesn't own the facility. The province already owns facilities that are adequate to house these inmates. Unless this is a spending day, I think the member would agree with me that I need to utilize those facilities.

Ms Pastoor: The Solicitor General wants us to believe that this is a purely economic decision not to provide funding for a facility that is an essential part of its community aimed at ameliorating the overincarceration of aboriginal offenders. It may sound like good fiscal policy, but in the long run is it really a good social policy?

Mr. Oberle: I believe it is, Mr. Speaker. I don't see how a facility designed to house inmates in that community or any other is going to change the cultural issues around incarceration. We are providing facilities that are culturally sensitive, and I'm required to utilize those facilities to their maximum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

2:10 Food Regulations for Sale of Home-baked Goods

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans who bake at home sell their products at licensed farmers' markets. However, they cannot sell their items at bake sales or flea markets without having their products baked or produced in a commercial kitchen. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is Alberta Health Services making it impossible for local people to provide home-baked or home-produced foods for themselves and their friends?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, farmers' markets have a very long-standing and honourable tradition in our province, and we want to see them continue. It's actually Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development that approves farmers' markets, but the Public Health Act, which comes under my purview, looks at and addresses the types of foods that are regulated in the food regulation. Now, there is an exemption for bake sales. In actual fact, if nonprofit organizations are baking things like cookies and cakes and so on and they're doing it for the purpose of fundraising, that is exempted and allowed.

Ms Calahasen: Well, given that the issue may be public safety, Mr. Speaker, isn't it odd that nonprofits can sell food that was prepared from an uninspected kitchen while those making a profit, like a bed and breakfast, need to use a licensed facility or install stainless steel kitchens so that they can serve the people that are there?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the food regulation was updated in 2006, and it recognized the need for some flexibility, not quite along the same lines as what's just been referenced. Nonetheless, she's right. There is a need to strike a better balance between the provision of food in a safe and caring way and the need for community events to do their local fundraising. I'll be happy to review this and see where it goes.

Ms Calahasen: Oh, that's so nice. Those words are music to my ears, Mr. Speaker.

However, given that the minister is trying to protect Alberta consumers, is there any possible way, as you identified, to change those regulations to allow home bakers or home producers whose kitchens have been inspected the same rights or similar rights as a commercial kitchen and tell those pie police to please back off?

Mr. Zwozdesky: It's a very interesting reference. I'm not sure the Solicitor General shouldn't be answering.

Mr. Speaker, on a more serious note, I don't know if we'll ever get to the point where something that is baked in a traditional home kitchen the way we all know it would perhaps be viewed in the same way that stuff that's prepared in a commercial kitchen would be in terms of the safety factors and the regulations and everything else that goes along with it. Nonetheless, I am prepared to have a look at that whole issue. I don't know if any further exceptions or exemptions can be made or not at this stage.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, there are 83 members in the Assembly. When the hon. member returns on Monday, 83 different pies, from cherry to apple, would be acceptable.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions will be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Yesterday cancer doctors at the Tom Baker cancer centre were ordered by Alberta Health Services to stop raising concerns publicly about capacity problems at the Tom Baker cancer centre. This was widely reported. My first question to the minister: is the minister aware or not that this gag order was given?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any gag order, but I am aware, just as of a few minutes ago, of a clipping that just got delivered to me on this subject, so I'd be happy to take a look and see what actually happened.

As I said earlier, I think doctors should feel very free to comment on medical issues, and people at Alberta Health Services should feel free to comment on policy-driven issues.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a medical issue. This is about the capacity to provide cancer treatment in Calgary. Will the minister order Alberta Health Services to reverse this gag order and let the physicians speak about these concerns?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I'll take a look and see what it is that the member is referring to.

I want to just go back to what I said a little earlier this week, and that was that the whole issue of what kind of health-related facilities are needed and in which part of the province, for what purpose, will be reviewed very thoroughly and is being reviewed very thoroughly as we speak. It will be all announced at the end of this month.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, secrecy is the enemy of accountability. Openness is what's needed here, and it's needed throughout the health care system. Does the minister understand that physicians and nurses need the right to openly advocate for patient care and that the public has a right to know?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I do understand that. I understand it very well. That's why we have the Health Quality Council working with Alberta Health Services as we speak on the release of a detailed report regarding the four unfortunate incidents that occurred last year at the hospital in Calgary. We'll continue that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

School Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of our older schools that are well utilized require a lot of modernization and upgrades to provide a safe and effective learning and working environment for many of our teachers and students. Balmoral school in my riding is one example. For example, they can't even have a microwave in their lunchroom because of the outdated electrical system. My question is to the Minister of Education. What are his plans to ensure that many of our older schools, particularly those in the inner city, are maintained so that they can serve us in the years to come?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have an incredible investment in facilities for education across the province, and it's very important to not only keep them in good shape but to improve them so that they can be available for new technologies and have the appropriate wiring that they need. We spend a lot of money every year in terms of grants to school boards for the planned operation and maintenance of those schools, and as well we have IMR funding, infrastructure maintenance funding, so that we can improve and renew schools. There are significant projects on that under way in the province. It's very important to keep our infrastructure up to date.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education. Your department has announced nearly a billion dollars over the next three years for completion of school projects. Does this amount include any allotment to retrofit and upgrade projects, and if so, how much?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes. There are a hundred and one projects on the go in this province as we speak, including, I think, about 42 new schools but perhaps more even. There are 47 modernization projects, involving approximately $470 million. Those are major modernization projects, where there's a complete overhaul of most or all of a school facility, including upgrades to the building envelope, the environmental capacity of the building, the furnaces, and, of course, the technology upgrades.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Has his ministry looked at any innovative ways to ensure that old schools can be maintained at an acceptable level, if not the best standards, without jeopardizing any future budgets?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of factors that go into that. We work, of course, very closely with the Department of Infrastructure. Infrastructure does audits of buildings on an ongoing basis. I can report that less than 2 per cent of our school infrastructure across the province is rated as in poor condition, but that doesn't mean there's not a lot of work to be done to make sure that it's current. We fund that through the school boards. The school boards determine what their priorities are. They also have to determine what schools we're going to utilize in the future and what schools will become surplus to their needs, and hopefully we can take some of the embedded capital and re-employ it in creating new and modern spaces for students.

Patient Safety Report

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this government has a proud record of being the most secretive government in the country. Whether it's full disclosure about the safety of children in care, pictures of unprecedented environmental disaster, or, most recently, the report of the Health Quality Council, this government's first priority always is its own protection over the public interest. Instead of forcing Albertans to learn about their government through the courts or brown envelopes, why won't the minister of health take the first step in transparency and just release the complete Health Quality Council report today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if it's ready to be released today. There are just a couple of privacy concerns that I've alluded to earlier this week – and I alluded to them earlier this afternoon – that have to be addressed. They are being addressed. People who need to give what you might refer to as releases and that type of thing – “permission,” I guess, is the better word – are being contacted, again, and as soon as it's ready to go, it'll be released publicly. That will be just a matter of days, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the council itself has already stated very clearly that the report has been vetted for privacy concerns and given that since government has had it for four months already and the only possible reason you could need another 10 days is to give your staff even more time to censor it, why won't the minister himself stop with the delays and release the report, that's already written, today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, same question, same answer. As soon as it's ready, it'll be released.

Ms Notley: Well, given that the Health Quality Council CEO said yesterday, “When you bring us in and publicly commit to the release of a report you've got to live up to the public commitment” and given that it doesn't take 10 days to release something that is already written with privacy concerns already addressed, why won't the minister just stop the delay and release the report today in full?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are two parties involved here, Alberta Health Services and the Health Quality Council. They are working together to make sure that the privacy concerns of both bodies have been addressed. I have every reason to believe that they probably have been, but they are working through that right now. The report could be released as early as tomorrow or Monday, but it will be very quickly released.

Caribou Management

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the woodland caribou is an endangered species, recognized both by the province and the federal government. Development has already shrunk caribou habitat to an unsustainable size. This government's answer is not to protect caribou habitat but to simply cull wolves year after year. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: does this minister have any plans, besides killing wolves year after year, to protect and preserve caribou habitat on an ongoing basis?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what we're going to do with respect to habitat conservation affects more than just caribou habitat. If you take a look at the work that has been done up to this point in the lower Athabasca region and work that will be done in the Peace River region, in the boreal forest areas of the province of Alberta, there's a tremendous amount of effort being put into habitat conservation, particularly for caribou but for all species.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that's good to hear.

Now to jump to my third question, which is on the lower Athabasca region. By your answer are you assuring Albertans that you will be preserving large areas in the lower Athabasca region for caribou protection?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think part of that answer is very obvious already. I don't think that many people would argue with the fact that Wood Buffalo park is a large piece of the boreal forest in the lower Athabasca drainage area that is already preserved for habitat for a number of different species. The issue relative to caribou is actually a specific one that we are paying a tremendous amount of attention to. As the member indicated, predation is part of the problem. We do need to manage these wildlife populations.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I like to hear that answer, that you have to manage these problems, but there seems to be relatively little action on it. The Alberta Wilderness Association has requested, actually, federal intervention. Can your organization give a timeline as to when caribou habitat will be protected in the lower Athabasca or anywhere?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's there now. You know, the “when” is a number of years ago that we started into this program. We continue to work with it. There has been some suggestion that additional real estate should be added to what's already there in protected areas. When the plan comes forward, you will see that there will be a very strong element of conservation in that plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

SuperNet

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government established an extensive broadband network for high-speed Internet access to 429 communities in Alberta. My understanding is that many communities are not making use of the SuperNet because of the local connection costs. My question to the hon. Minister of Service Alberta: what are the additional costs of a municipality to connect to the SuperNet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there are approximately 220 municipalities throughout the province that have the SuperNet built directly to them. The cost of connection was paid by Municipal Affairs many years ago; however, there are ongoing fees to support the SuperNet that are required. Basic broadband service is about $242 a month. If the municipality wants to use the SuperNet to access the Internet, it needs to use a private-sector Internet service provider.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, my second question to the same minister: what does the SuperNet provide that an ordinary Internet service provider does not provide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are three areas. The first area is quality. Videoconferencing is very crisp, and it's better on the SuperNet. Capacity: there are never any slowdown or network traffic peak times. And consistent price: the fees associated with the SuperNet are capped and do not change without government approval.

Mr. Allred: My final question. Again to the same minister: what does it cost for a private-sector customer to get access to the SuperNet?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 80 ISP providers working very hard across Alberta. The cost for service depends on the packages that the ISP providers provide. We know there's good work going on out there. But I fully recognize there are many rural areas that have challenges, and that's what I'm working very hard on with a number of ministers across government, to ensure that we work on the issue of rural connectivity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The noble mandate of the public school system is to provide the best education possible for all children regardless of their ability, their economic status, their creed or culture. Under this government's guise of choice the line of demarcation between public, private, and charter schools has been blurred to the detriment of the public school system. To the minister: what is your justification for publicly funding exclusive, tuition-charging private schools and religiously restrictive charter schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe we do fund tuition in private schools.

With respect to charter schools there are a number of reasons why charter school exist. As long as they fit the purpose of their charter and meet the requirements to be renewed on I think it's a five-year term, they are public schools, and they're funded like public schools.

Mr. Chase: To the minister again. How is it that Springbank's athletic, elite Edge private school is permitted to receive full public per-pupil funding and charge restrictively high tuition rates while hiding out under the mantle of the geographically distant Grande Prairie public board?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the short answer, Mr. Speaker, is that it's not. Grande Prairie has announced that they have an arrangement with the Edge school. If, in fact, they do bring the Edge school into the public system as an alternative program, it will be considered as such, and if it fits the requirement to be an alternate program in the public system, it will be funded as an alternate program in the public system. But it's not funded as a private school, and it's not funded now.

Mr. Chase: Again, we're turning around as opposed to coming across with the answers.

Tuition. Can they charge tuition and still be a public school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] Whoa. You had the question and no more preamble. The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not dodging the question at all. The short answer is that we are not paying tuition for students at Edge school. If they are a private school and if they charge tuition, they're not a public school, so they don't get funded like a public school. As a private school they're eligible for either 60 or 70 per cent of the operating funding of a public school, depending on whether they've agreed to adhere to the reporting and accountability requirements. As a private school they're not eligible for the public school funding, but if they become an alternate program in the public school, that's a different situation. Then they're not a private school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2010 Paralympic Winter Games

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting tomorrow night, Albertans and Canadians will once again be wearing their red mittens, toques, and Team Canada gear in support of the Vancouver 2010 Paralympic Winter Games. Because of this, my first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Given the success of promoting Alberta at the Olympic Winter Games, what's Alberta's involvement in the Paralympic Winter Games?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're extremely excited, as was mentioned earlier by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, to see nine of the 55 Canadian Paralympians coming from the province of Alberta. We're excited to be able to support them as they go out to compete on this world stage. We will not be keeping Alberta House and the train open, of course, during the Paralympics, but myself and the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit are going. We're going to be supporting them. We're going to be meeting with the Paralympic Committee as well to ensure these games stay robust into the future. Again, we think that we're doing all that we can to support these athletes.

Mr. Rodney: My second question is to the same minister. Having met a number of Paralympians – and it was a great experience to do so – I'm concerned about them and how our government is supporting them. Can she explain how our government is supporting Paralympians in any specific ways?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we do a lot to support them. We know they're just as high a quality of athlete. They work out, they have the same kind of training, so they're eligible for Podium Alberta, which is what we do with the federal government to support them while they train. They get to use the same facilities that we just put $100 million into rehabbing so that they have great facilities. We think they do just as good of a job and that they are first-class athletes.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, who was extremely active during the Olympic Winter Games. My question is: will he be exacting similar duties on behalf of his ministry in our province at the Paralympic Winter Games?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are three reasons I'm going out to Vancouver. First of all, we have the Cultural Olympiad, that still continues through the Paralympic Games to support our artists. Two, it's to go out and support our great athletes, as the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation mentioned. Third, Alberta is now a signatory on the declaration of the United Nations on protecting persons with disabilities. Alberta along with nine other provinces and three territories has just signed on to that, and as a representative of the Alberta Human Rights Commission I thought it was important to be there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Support for Museums

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Alberta Museum has been missing in action, on hiatus, mothballed, something. We've had a new plan, and that was put on hold. Then a second, downsized plan, and that was put on hold. And then the persistent rumours of two museums, neither of which has been built. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Clearly, the budget does not contain infrastructure money for new museums, but Albertans would like to know what is wrong. Why has our museum been sidetracked for so long, well before the recession hit us?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, whether we're talking one site or two sites, it is a significant amount of money that we're looking at to be able to put forward. Given the current economic circumstances we don't have in our budget or in our capital plan the ability to finance a $250 million facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but you mothballed these before the recession. Back to the same minister. Given that in 1997 the Syncrude Gallery of Aboriginal Culture replaced the pioneer exhibit and, aside from travelling exhibits, we've had no permanent exhibit of nonaboriginal history, when will it be replaced or a new exhibit be established?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the financial situation is such that we have the ability to move forward, then we'll be able to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Can the minister tell us the timeline for restoring funding for the three provincial archivists that the Glenbow Museum in Calgary was forced to lay off in the fall? These are critical staff for a museum.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Glenbow Museum is a private institution. It's not one that's funded by our government. What we do fund is our collection and the maintenance of our collection. Other than that, the Glenbow is a private institution, and they have to respond to their financial situations like anybody else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Securities Regulation

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The federal government wants to institute a national securities regulator instead of the current passport system. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Why is Alberta opposed to moving to a national regulator?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, for the past 143 years regulation of securities has been a provincial jurisdiction under the title of property and civil rights. This approach recognizes the regional differences, the different regional economies of Canada, and that a one-size-fits-all approach does not work. This has allowed the Alberta Securities Commission to serve Albertans well. We oppose a single federal regulator inevitably located in Toronto and reflecting the economic interests of southern Ontario that would hinder investment opportunities to Alberta businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. Why is the federal government pushing for this? Are there any problems with the current passport system?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the current passport system is working very well. Since 2004 it has provided a single-window access to capital markets across Canada. Internationally it's consistently ranked as one of the best in the world. The World Bank for the last five years has put it in the top five, ahead of the United Kingdom, tied with the United States. In the prairies there's that old practical bit of wisdom: don't fix it if it isn't broken. It ain't broken; leave it alone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why is it important for Alberta and Quebec to protect provincial jurisdiction on this matter?

Dr. Morton: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is not just about regulation of securities. It's about the balance of power between the federal government and the provinces. It goes right to the heart of the balance of power in our constitution.

The federal position represents a significant expansion of federal power. It would potentially open the door to federal regulation of financial services. As everybody in this House knows, financial services is a growth industry in this province as it services the oil and gas sector and other juniors. We're not going to just sit by and let it slip away.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Innovation in Education

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Education. As discussed in my Motion 508 of 2009, to better equip students with the skills and competencies they need to succeed in our world, high school students need the ability to pursue real-world learning opportunities while in high school. Minister, can you please explain what you're doing to achieve this objective?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, hopefully, all of our curriculum is designed to ensure that students get a real-world experience, but specifically to the member's question and motion, the work experience program at the high school level helps students get out into the workforce and get experience in the workforce in a safe and supervised manner. The RAP program, registered apprenticeship program, allows students in the trades to actually be prepared to almost a point where they can get their first-year apprenticeship when they graduate from high school. Of course, there are many other circumstances where we have colleges co-operating with high schools and sometimes even co-located.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to maximize their high school experience, I think students should be given the opportunity to pursue postsecondary credit while in high school. Can the minister explain what he is doing to achieve this objective?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, school boards across the province are working with postsecondaries. We have some very exciting places which I could point to where that is actually happening very well. In Cold Lake, for example, Portage College is co-located in the same building as the Cold Lake high school. In Rocky Mountain House Red Deer College is co-located with both the public and the separate high school. In Olds, for example, the learning campus of the new high school is built on the campus of Olds College, so there is that opportunity for integration between high school and postsecondary and to earn those postsecondary credits. One of the exciting programs: SAIT and the Calgary board of education have a pharmacy technician program. High school students can actually get their accreditation for the pharmacy technician before they graduate.

Mr. Bhullar: My last question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Financial literacy is a key component relating to the real world. Minister, are you willing to embed financial literacy in the high school curriculum?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's supposed to be embedded now, but obviously in the recent two years that this has become, in essence, the flavour of the month, we really do have to look at our math curriculum, our social studies curriculum, and particularly our career and life management curriculum to make sure that it is teaching and providing an opportunity for our students to learn the real-life skills that they need in terms of finances, balancing a chequebook, planning a budget: those sorts of skills. The career and life management course should be doing it. We are in the process of reviewing that curriculum, and we'll make sure that it's there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Online Camping Reservation System

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. As the global economic situation continues to be uncertain and with the summer travel season soon approaching, what specific actions is your department taking to maintain tourism revenues, especially in northern Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we were just out at the Olympics, promoting Alberta as a world-class destination. We're going to continue those efforts. But something that we found very successful for the last two years has been the Stay campaign. We would have had not such a great tourism season last year except that we ran the Stay campaign. Albertans loved it. They came out to our campgrounds and our RV centres in record numbers and really helped an industry at a time when it could have been troubled.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that you mentioned the Stay program, I'd like to talk about it. It's so successful that you can't get a place to camp in this province. When are you going to start building some more inventory?

Mrs. Ady: Well, this is a good problem to have, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Stay campaign was successful. But one of the things that we did last year was start the online booking system, 25 campgrounds. This year we've increased it to 50 because it was so popular. Now you can actually find that camp spot, maybe at another campground than the one you go to every time, so it gives you a better opportunity to look around the province and maybe go somewhere different.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, given that the minister talked about the reservation system, I heard that all kinds of people couldn't get on the phone line. You know, the May long weekend nobody could make a reservation. It's so busy that nobody could get on. What's going on with this system?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's correct. Last year there was such a rush when they knew it was near the May long weekend that they crashed our systems. I'm happy to say that this year it was more robust. It stood up to it. We've made some 4,400 reservations for the May long weekend already, but remember, we doubled the number of campgrounds that are now on it, and we're still building. I know the hon. member always asks me about Carson Lake. It's on the list, and we're looking at the areas where we need more product.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 120 questions and answers today made up of nine questions from the Official Opposition, one from the Wildrose Alliance, two from the NDs, and eight from the PC private members.

In just a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine, and I'll call on the hon. members for members' statements.

To the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, these are the orders: coconut, blueberry, lemon, apple, and cherry.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Miyo Machihowin Health Careers Conference

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had the privilege of attending Miyo Machihowin, the National Aboriginal Health Careers Conference and Tradeshow, on behalf of the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. I was especially pleased to attend because the Native Women's Association of Canada hosted this event during International Women's Week. This conference certainly reflected this year's theme – Strong Women, Strong Canada, Strong World – as aboriginal women from Newfoundland to B.C. to Nunavut to Yukon are here to move the agenda of exploring business and career opportunities in the health sector.

To build on their strength, they brought together a hundred youth from across Canada so they can begin to see what is available to them in health. Youth always bring a vitality and energy to any conference, and it was no different this morning. They have, in fact, great role models like Dr. Lindsay Crowshoe describing his experiences in becoming a doctor and, of course, other health professionals to exchange ideas. This conference certainly reflected so many of the needs of the communities.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say thank you and congratulations to the Native Women's Association of Canada because with these strong women I'm positive that they will help prepare strong youth so they can become part of a strong Canada and a strong world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Women's Issues

Ms Notley: Thank you. March 8 was International Women's Day. We celebrated the achievements of both women who have achieved fame and also women who live unnoticed outside their own circles but who are vital to the quality of life for each of us. But we need to be wary of the easy use of International Women's Day to look only at our successes. Many challenges for women remain today in Alberta. Nearly 70 per cent of adults in Alberta trying to live on jobs that pay less than $15 an hour are women, many of them supporting families. Funding for women's shelters is inadequate and leaves many women and children in danger. As well, on child care Alberta has a shameful record, with too few spaces available and costs that are far, far too high.

At the NDP's recent health care hearings we were told that women across the province are struggling to find acceptable birthing options. In rural areas in particular women have no choice in who delivers their baby, and they must often drive for hours for care. One way, of course, to deal with this shortage is to rely more on midwives. Indeed, that strategy would have the added advantage of respecting a growing preference amongst Alberta's expectant mothers. But right now there are simply too few midwives in Alberta. Alberta offers no training locally for midwives, and this is something that must change.

In other parts of the world discussion is under way about substantial measures to improve the lives of women. In Alberta we need to do the same. We can start by addressing the issues I've just outlined. We need a new energy to advance an agenda that is committed to the full participation of women in every aspect of life, not just cheery words of tribute once a year. I hope that we will find substantial changes coming forward from this government in the future.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, March 15, 2010, we will be accepting written questions 1 through 9 inclusive, 11 through 26 inclusive, 28 through 35 inclusive, 38, and 39. We will be dealing with written questions 10, 27, 36, and 37 that day.

I also wish to give notice that on Monday, March 15, 2010, we will be accepting motions for returns 10 and 11, and we will be dealing with motions for returns 1 through 8.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity. I am tabling today a letter that is signed by 10 people who have watched very patiently and attentively from the gallery for the past hour today. The letter is dated September 15, 2009, and it is, frankly, a tragic account of the last days of their mother and relative, Dorothea Arneson. I'd just read one very short quote. At the end of the letter it asks: "What about the protection for the patients . . . do they also not have a right to be treated with equal care and compassion? Do they . . . not have the right to be heard?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have a tabling?

Ms Notley: Yes, I do. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 32 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from a constituent, Roger Ellis, who is blind as a result of a work accident and was struck in the head by the mirror of a hit-and-run driver, pinning himself and his service dog against the truck. He is finding that the $5,000 is very unfair to him. It does not deal with the damage to retrain himself and his dog and compensate for the long-term pain.

My second is a report to the Assembly with regard to the letters that I received concerning the government's plan to close acute-care psychiatric beds at Alberta Hospital, noting that community mental health care options are needed and that it is a lifesaving institution for those that are in crisis and whose needs cannot be met in the program. It includes the names of those who signed that form letter.

My third tabling is also a report in regard to issues facing postsecondary students. It contains the names of all of those students who wrote to me with form letters. In the letters they raise concerns around the increase and the worry about the effect of these fees on their ability to continue paying for school and ask that the government reject market modifiers and introduce regulation to prevent loophole mandatory user fee increases.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is a letter dated today. This letter is from myself to the hon. the Premier, and it is requesting information, specifically ministerial order 01/07 as referenced in a letter I received from the Premier's office recently.

The second tabling I have today is, of course, with permission from Geri Spring, a constituent, who is urging that Alberta Hospital in Edmonton not only remain open but that we also fix it up.

The third letter I have is from a constituent as well, and I have permission to table this letter from Sandy McAlear. It is urging this House and this government to continue adequate funding for our schools.

My fourth and last tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is also regarding Alberta Hospital, and it is being tabled with permission from Mr. Paul Ferguson. He is urging the government to make sure that Alberta Hospital Edmonton remains an open and viable institution. He sums up his frustration this way: "This government couldn't organise a rock fight in a gravel pit."

Thank you.

2:50 Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share with those assembled the projected government House business for the week commencing the 15th, government business commencing March 16.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would anticipate on Tuesday, March 16, for second reading Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, and Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act; in Committee of the Whole, depending on progress this afternoon, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, Bill 4, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, and Bill 6, Emergency Management Amendment Act; in third reading, also depending on progress this afternoon, Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act.

On Wednesday the 17th under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, actually, the same business as proposed for Tuesday, of course depending on progress. That's Bill 7 and Bill 8 in second reading and bills 1, 2, 4, and 6 in Committee of the Whole.

On Thursday, of course, we have the scheduled Committee of Supply votes and second reading and third reading as per Monday and Tuesday, depending on progress and as per the Order Paper.

For the interest of the House I would indicate that Bill 9 is on notice and that several other bills will go on notice, hopefully this afternoon, and will be available for introduction for first reading probably on Tuesday, I guess that means.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

12. Mr. Hancock moved:

- A. Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended in Standing Order 7 by adding the following after suborder (4):
 - 7(4.1) When Members' Statements is called, Members other than members of the Executive Council may make a statement, each statement to be no more than 2 minutes in duration, according to the following allocation:

- (a) on Monday and Thursday, up to 7 Members, and
 - (b) on Tuesday and Wednesday, up to 6 Members.
- B. Be it further resolved that
1. The amendment in this motion shall come into force on passage and shall have effect until the dissolution of the 27th Legislature;
 2. Standing Order 7(4) shall not have effect for the balance of the 27th Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Government Motion 12, which arises as a result of the agreement relative to question period and the order of questions in question period and the agreement around preambles, et cetera, which included, of course, the provision of an additional two members' statements, one on Mondays and one on Thursdays. That needs, of course, to be put into place by virtue of an amendment to the standing orders.

For the information of the members, Mr. Speaker, 7(4), which is being suspended, is the current standing order, which provides for six statements per day. That's, of course, being only suspended and not removed or replaced because this amendment to the standing orders only has effect until the end of this Legislature.

The Speaker: It's a debatable motion. Anyone?

[Government Motion 12 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, as this is a day dealing with the Kidney Foundation, recognizing the kidney thing, this is one of these little stress things that has been provided to each of the members in the Assembly, that you can keep on your desk and you may use at any time, including during the question period.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

The Alberta Corporate Tax Act is generally amended every year to ensure that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime. While most of the amendments in this year's bill are of a housekeeping nature, I'd like to highlight three specific measures in the bill.

The first measure I'd like to highlight is changes for functional currencies. If a corporation keeps its accounting records in United States or Australian dollars or the British pound or the euro, this is known as the functional currency, and the corporation is able to file its tax returns in that currency. However, changes to federal legislation have required the province to make changes to our own provisions concerning functional currency. There is one policy difference between Alberta and federal legislation. That difference is that when the functional currency reporting was adopted last year, Alberta decided that taxes payable would be converted at the average exchange rate for the year rather than at the spot rate the day when payment is due. This decision continues to be reflected in today's amendments.

A second change in this legislation brings Alberta legislation in line with the federal fairness provisions that allow the minister to waive interest and/or penalties in certain situations. For example, when a taxpayer requests a reassessment under the fairness provision, the minister will now be able to waive interest in penalties in appropriate circumstances at the same time the reassessment is issued. When the legislation was amended several years ago, the minister's ability to waive at his own volition was unintentionally removed. This legislation corrects that omission.

The third and last point I would put forward concerns corporate refund interest rates. In Budget 2010 refund interest rates were reduced by 50 per cent for all prior periods and going forward. While these rates are set by regulation, the regulation-making authority in the act has been amended to ensure it is clear that the new rates can be made applicable to prior periods. In comparing our interest rates to commercial bank rates, it was determined that Alberta's refund interest rates on overpayments of corporate tax were simply too high. Reducing the rates by 50 per cent is a middle ground between bank rates, which are considered by some to be too low and the full treasury bill rates, which are deemed to be too generous. This change strikes a balance.

Thank you. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate February 16: Ms Woo-Paw]

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, as we see it presented before the House this afternoon is not a contentious piece of legislation. [interjection] No, it is not contentious, hon. member.

There has been correspondence between ourselves and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay regarding this bill. We are told it is an amendment to ensure the professional organizations have the ability or the function to consult with the responsible ministers and update the language in various acts. As I understand it, Bill 2 as it's proposed would amend laws responsible for a series of professional occupations, including architects; agrologists; regulated accountants; the engineering, geological, and geophysical professions; land surveyors; regulated forestry professionals; veterinarian professionals; and any association registered under the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act.

Now, it doesn't look like a necessary bill. I don't know why we need this legislation, Bill 2. It is my view that Bill 2 is a redundant piece of legislation that has been poorly justified by the government. Professional associations, our research indicates, already consult with the government on a routine basis when they amend or alter their academic standards or licensing requirements. Therefore, I would think some of the professional acts amended by this bill are also unnecessary.

Veterinarians, for example, have their own requirements spelled out clearly in legislation. The association representing forestry professionals adjusts its criteria based on a benchmark program; I believe it's at NAIT. I am not certain if there is a similar program elsewhere. Neither association can alter its requirements without going to the minister or to cabinet to change the legislation or regulations.

There is a danger, albeit a slight one, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is the latest in a series of attempts by the government — labour mobility clauses are another. The President of the Treasury Board is familiar with that, and I'm sure he's concerned about it as well. If there's a flag to be raised on this issue, it would be that this is another attempt by the government to interfere in the operations of what is supposed to be an independent regulatory association. Now, we all know that the government has a responsibility to work with professional associations to serve the public interest. This government seems to have a poor understanding of professional associations and the way they approach changes to academic standards or licensing requirements.

I really don't think that this bill is necessary, Bill 2 as we know it on the Order Paper. I understand the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay and her interest in having this passed, but I think everything is working well already. I don't understand the necessity for this. We have certainly contacted various professional associations, and they have indicated that there is a dialogue. They indicate that they have a very good dialogue with the government and the respective cabinet ministers. So my question, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion is: why is it necessary at this time that we have this bill before the Legislative Assembly? It seems to be unnecessary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and join debate on Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay. Bill 2 proposes revisions to six acts: the Architects Act; the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act; the Land Surveyors Act; the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act; the Regulated Accounting Profession Act; and the Veterinary Profession Act. In addition, this bill will also update the wording in both the Agrology Profession Act and the Regulated Forestry Profession Act.

These changes will require professional regulatory organizations in Alberta to consult with the appropriate minister responsible for the act itself and the minister responsible for parts 1 to 3 of the Post-secondary Learning Act before they make any changes to their educational requirements. The purpose for these changes is twofold: first, to allow for greater consistency amongst similar legislation; and, second, to encourage a strong relationship between government and Alberta's professional regulatory organizations.

This government has enjoyed a productive relationship with Alberta's self-regulating professions for many years. I personally have been involved with professional associations in one capacity or another for nearly 50 years. I have managed and have been involved in the governance of an association, and I've studied professional regulation in several countries and given papers on Canadian regulatory schemes at international conferences.

Alberta and Canada have a system of professional regulation that is unique in the world, a system that makes professional organizations responsible to the respective provincial governments, a responsibility to deliver a high quality of professional service to the public at large.

As the 1970 Quebec report of the Commission of Inquiry on Health and Social Welfare entitled The Professions and Society stated:

As a public service, it [being a professional association] assumes a public role in the functioning of the state:

- 1) a governmental role when it is empowered to control admission to the practice of a profession in lieu of a diploma awarded by the public education system;
- 2) a legislative role when it sets certain norms (regulations, codes of ethics and of deontology) relating to conditions of practice of the profession;
- 3) an administrative role when it is charged with the inspection and examination of professional acts;
- 4) a jurisdictional role when it is judging and, as required, sanctioning acts or failings against existing norms.

Our system of professional regulation saves the government from the responsibility and expense of regulating many professionals that are quite prepared and very competent to assume this responsibility themselves and, in turn, provide a public service that is much more efficient and less costly than if it was provided directly by the government. Mr. Speaker, this system of professional regulation very much falls in line with the principle of self-reliance that has been a hallmark in the development of the province of Alberta.

As the hon. Bert Hohol, minister of labour, stated in 1979 in a review of professional legislation in Alberta: "Self-government is a privilege delegated to a professional group by the Legislature only when it is clear the public can best be served by delegating this authority." This authority has been delegated to many professional bodies by this government over the years, and I would emphatically suggest that the authority has been exercised responsibly and has saved the taxpayers of Alberta considerable funds. It has also saved members of this Legislature much frustration that would have resulted had government not delegated authority to those who understand their respective professional undertakings best.

Through the power of democratic government legislative bodies use a number of means to share certain aspects of their authority while delegating other aspects to the professional body. For instance, the Legislature may grant an exclusive scope of practice or grant protection of the right of title or regulate specific activities under a controlled acts system while at the same time requiring accountability to the public through the legislative body. This accountability is accomplished by means of public members on the council of management of the professional organization who report back to the government, public members on disciplinary tribunals and practice review boards who represent the public viewpoint to these bodies, provisions for government ratification of regulations prior to them becoming operative, regular reporting mechanisms through annual reports, or periodic review of legislative mandates.

Mr. Speaker, in all of the acts that are listed in Bill 2 the government of Alberta has the authority to regulate the academic qualifications of these professional bodies as well as the foregoing attributes through the regulation process, which, as we all know, must be ratified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Further, as the hon. Catherine Chichak stated in another Alberta report on the professions in 1970:

In establishing entrance requirements a professional body must be very careful not to set those standards so high that persons who would be adequately qualified to practice the profession are barred from that practice. A professional association should not appear to be a closed shop but should set standards at a sufficiently high level to ensure that the public receives an adequate service and that the membership is broadly enough qualified to meet the challenges of technological and societal changes. Educators, active field practitioners and public representatives should be involved jointly, through a formal structure, in the development of educational and experiential standards and programs that are a prerequisite for registration. These standards should be reviewed periodically to ensure that they continue to meet societies' needs.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that Alberta's regulatory framework accomplishes these goals with regard to professional regulation. Bill

2 clearly establishes the authority of the Legislature to regulate the academic qualifications of the professions listed.

It is significant, however, that in the last 10 years there has been a move in Canada, that has been supported by this government, to standardize professional entrance standards across the country. This has been accomplished through the agreement on internal trade and agreements such as TILMA. One consequence, however, of this move has been the moving of standards to the lowest common denominator. Alberta has traditionally sought to achieve excellence in the delivery of professional services and, hence, has had some of the highest standards across the country in many professional disciplines. Even today there is some resistance to accept the lower standards of qualification that exist in some provinces. I do not believe that that is the case in the professions enumerated in Bill 2. I believe that there has been a move to an agreed standard amongst all professional organizations across the country.

Mr. Speaker, there are several areas of potential conflict between the primary role of a professional association to protect the public interest and the secondary role of serving its members. Self-governing professions were not created for the welfare of their membership. They serve their members by serving the public, and the interests of the public are always paramount.

In closing, I would like to capsule the responsibility of a self-governing profession with a quotation by Everett Hughes. He said: "In place of the cautionary admonition of the market place, caveat emptor (let the buyer beware!), professional practice should substitute the encouraging injunction credat emptor (let the buyer trust!)"

Mr. Speaker, it is important for us to maintain an atmosphere of co-operation between the government and the professional services that are regulated by our professional organizations. We have one of the best systems in the world. Let's work closely with our professional communities to maintain that trust for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak in second reading to Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I agree with much of what the previous speaker has outlined, but I think I disagree with his conclusion. I join my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar in wondering why we're seeing this bill in front of us. We can just guess because it isn't made clear from the sponsoring member's remarks why we're seeing this. I do not see the rationale for it.

Two things are going on right now. One, it's not easy to establish yourself as a professional association under our statutes in this province. There are a number of barriers that you have to get over and tests that you have to meet in order to do that. As the previous member has outlined, there is a process, a protocol, and a good reason that we have achieved the state that we have.

The government says: "Okay. You have to meet certain tests in order to be recognized as a professional occupation in this province. Part of meeting that test is that you will establish professional rules of conduct of your members and, further, that you will ensure through a disciplinary process and now in most professions a testing and monitoring process that you will hit those marks, you will achieve the various requirements. If you fail to do that, there is a disciplinary body that is included in that, and you're responsible for disciplining your own members." And the government stays out of all of this.

Once they've set up the test and the professional organizations have met those tests – they've formed themselves, they've set out the guidelines for behaviour or for professional achievement, and they have their disciplinary body in place – that's it. The professional organization is left to basically carry on its business. Part of that business, by the way, in every statute that I've looked at for any of these professional organizations is a requirement to consult with government, at the very least to notify government if they're going to change anything that they do.

Now we see a bill in front of us that says that if these professional organizations are going to change anything, they have to consult with the government. I beg your pardon? Isn't that what they're supposed to be doing already according to their various pieces of legislation? What is the purpose in duplicating this? That's what I was ruminating on for some time, thinking: why is the government wanting to get involved in this? Why are they trying to kinda, you know, sort of hip-check their way into the scene here?

It's not breaking the protocol that's established, but I would argue that it's bending it. The only specific difference I can see is adding in the requirement of also consulting with the minister responsible for the Post-secondary Learning Act. But I think even then – I mean, that's where we start to talk about the professional requirements that the organizations have set out that a member must achieve before they become a member.

The scuttlebutt that I'm hearing is that the government has a concern that professional organizations might be bumping up their requirements to keep themselves special and to keep others out. And you think: well, who would they want to keep out? I mean, in this day and age there is strength in numbers. Certainly, since most of these associations are self-funding through the membership fees that are paid by their members, why would you want to be smaller and more exclusive? Wouldn't you want to have more members? That gives you more of a budget. So I was really curious as to what this might be about.

Now, one of the things that you hear about is that some associations were very resistant – and I'll say this was in the past – to dealing with people who had foreign training or foreign qualifications, and if they could make themselves sort of exclusive enough, they could cut out some of the people that were moving to Canada with degrees from other countries. I don't think that's the case very much anymore. It might still exist in various pockets, but for the most part I think everybody is looking around and saying: "You know, our membership is getting older; they're getting closer to retirement. We need to rejuvenate." They need those new members coming in. I don't think that argument is valid, if it ever was. So, again, why would the government be worried these organizations might be doing that? I can't see a reason for it, and I don't think there is a reason for it.

I think what's happening here is that the government is looking to get more control over those various agencies. Now, why would they be doing that? Well, one of the areas that we see changing professions and occupations is these various interprovincial agreements. We've always said labour mobility, right? But there have been differences between provinces in the way various professions were able to establish themselves. For example, law: you can qualify for the bar in Alberta, but that doesn't qualify you for the bar in Saskatchewan or in Nunavut. You would have to requalify in those various places.

If the government gets more control over how these organizations, these professional occupations are mandating themselves and organizing themselves, I think it makes it a bit easier for them to have either legislative sway or a sort of argumentative persuasion in getting groups to accept some changes that make them fall in line, for example, with TILMA, which we've already heard talked about today. I think that pretty quickly what I'm hearing is that it's going to be far beyond TILMA as the government looks to agreements with other countries, not just other provinces.

What I'm seeing in this act is a sort of backdoor way of gaining back some legislative authority. They have ceded much of it, and it's worked very well. As the previous speaker said, that process worked very well for many, many years. I think what we're seeing here is government attempting to have more control. I am really interested in that because this is the very same government that howls over a number of things they consider the nanny state.

Yet here what we have, essentially, is the daddy state. They've got the boys inserting themselves back into controlling a number of delegated administrative organizations that were working very well. Frankly, I've heard no complaints, nor have I seen any legal reportings. There's nothing in the paper, nothing in the trade magazines that would be indicating to me that agronomists or architects or accountants, that the engineering, geological, or geophysical professions, land surveyors, regulated forest professionals, veterinary professionals, that any of them have done something so terribly wrong that the government would need to sweep in and have them reporting back to them again. So what's this really about?

I've seen too many pieces of legislation come through here with a great deal of government presentation about what a great idea it is and how it's going to do this, that, and the next thing, and then we find out years later: no, no. It may have done that, but it did a whole bunch of other things as well. Because I don't know what this act is ultimately going to do and I have not had the questions answered that my colleagues have requested be answered by the sponsoring member, I'm not willing to accept this. Every group that we have talked to has said: "Well, we already do this. Why do we need another law telling us to do it again?"

So I start to have questions about which one has supremacy. If you already consult under your own legislation, do you have to do it twice? Do you have to do it on the same day or different days? I don't mean to mock this, but what is the point of having duplicating rules that an organization is supposed to be able to follow? I do think that this is government's attempt to interfere in what is supposed to be an independent regulatory body over specified professions and occupations.

I have one question that I would like the sponsor to answer for us. It talks about any association registered under the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act. Could we please get a listing of who all that is? I'm thinking that's everybody else, like all the other professional organizations and occupations that exist in this province. If that's the case, that's definitely what's going on here. [interjection] Well, sure, it would be midwives. It would be everybody. It would be lawyers. It would be physicians. It would be nurses. It would be, well, all of the allied health professionals. It would be every professional occupation in the province, and I think that's who's on that list. So, please, I'm happy to be proven wrong, but I would like that answered, and I would like to see the list of what's captured under that catch-all heading.

This should have been a really simple bill, but it isn't. At this point I'm not willing to support it. I look forward to having some of my concerns and issues addressed, and we will proceed to Committee of the Whole to get that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Overall, I'm very much encouraged by this proposal. It only makes sense that ministers responsible for the professional legislation and the Post-secondary Learning Act be consulted when it comes to any changes to the academic requirements. I certainly don't envision this as any sort of meddling, Big Brother approach. Rather, it promotes and encourages healthy discussion about the deletion or addition of academic courses for programs that lead to a degree, diploma, or certificate. I know that between the ministries of Employment and Immigration and Advanced Education and Technology there is an incredible source of knowledge among staff that could and should be utilized when it comes to determining these requirements. Bill 2 is an important piece of legislation, and I understand that the two ministries will work closely with all of the associations with its implementation.

If I have one concern, Mr. Speaker, it would be the term "education requirements" referred to in the Regulated Accounting Profession Act. I note that most of the other acts under Bill 2 refer to "academic" requirements, which would be in reference to postsecondary education. The postsecondary component is what government is interested in: degrees, diplomas, and certificates. Government appreciates that there are many other educational activities which are internal to the profession, like in-house training or continuing competency requirements. These educational activities are their own internal business. Is this clear with the current wording of Bill 2?

I'm hopeful that the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, can proceed without delay to ensure that government is involved at the early stages of any revision to postsecondary curriculum. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hinman: I guess I'd like to ask the hon. member: if he feels it's so critical, how did we get to this point in Alberta with the professional act? I very much see it as: you cannot do anything in your profession until the minister gives his okay. That very much seems like father state saying that we're going to look after you. How did we survive? Should we take it away from those professionals if, in fact, they need to get permission from the minister and just have the minister look after the entire area?

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we were talking about this Bill 2, we were looking at making some of the changes such as I noted earlier in my remarks, the reference to academic requirements. One of the things this bill is talking about is looking towards the future, instead of using words such as "education" requirements, changing that to "academic" requirements, as it is used with many of the other professions which this bill deals with such as the Architects Act, the engineering, geological – other professional acts: Land Surveyors Act, for example, and other registered occupations such as the Regulated Accounting Profession Act. These are the things this bill is intended to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. So the member is saying that you need an entire piece of legislation that gives both of those ministers much more access and control over what appears to be every profession and occupation in the province in order to change the wording from "education" to "academic"? Isn't that sort of overkill?

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish. Others on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: Just, you know, in regard to Bill 1, that says that we need to be more competitive, now here in Bill 2 we're saying that the minister needs to overlook and give the final okay before any amendments are made in a professional act regarding education. I guess I just have to ask: if it's so critical and needs to be there, why do we not just move the entire professional act under the government and eliminate it for efficiency and competitiveness if that's what the government is saying we need?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier may participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a), but I do believe the question in the response was directed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who can or cannot respond if he so chooses. But I will recognize the hon. Deputy Premier if he wishes to make a comment under 29(2)(a).

3:30

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That, indeed, was my intention. It was to simply make a comment under 29(2)(a).

Certainly, we value the professional associations that we have in the province to be self-governing. We value what they do in terms of their individual professions, but in some cases the academic qualification is provided by the taxpayers of Alberta through our postsecondary system. In keeping with the Campus Alberta approach we need to ensure that when a change is made to the academic qualifications in a profession, as an example, we are able to transmit that through the entire Campus Alberta so that we ensure transferability for the students, we ensure that there's value there for the taxpayer, and we ensure that we are responding to the economic and societal benefits, which are, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this House many times, the three clients that the postsecondary system in the province of Alberta serves.

The Speaker: Time is still available.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the original member, but I'm sure that the minister of advanced education will have a comment to make. That still does not strike me as justification for a piece of legislation or a statute to be amended. There are ways to work with those professional occupations and with your academic institutions to say, "These are the standards that we accept," or, you know, to have your communication plan. But it just strikes me that you're changing a piece of legislation to deal with a communications problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Kind of following up on that same question, I feel, as the minister of postsecondary education, very much that: co-ordinate that to say that these classes from these institutions all qualify for a profession. I see the importance of unanimity from our education system, but to impose that and say, well, "The professional system now doesn't know which ones to accept and not accept; therefore, we'll institute that" is still strange.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, but the time has now elapsed for that section.

I have no additional speakers on my list. Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary Mackay to close the debate?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening intently. As I had alluded to during my comments at second reading, the intent of this bill is twofold. One is to ensure that these regulatory bodies must consult the ministers responsible and must take into consideration their comments, so it's an opportunity for us to formalize the process and also to recognize the currently existing very positive relationships.

Secondly, it is time to update the language and make it more consistent across the board, in addition, after we amended the Health Professions Act.

I look forward to more discussion at the Committee of the Whole next week, and I thank you for the opportunity to respond.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon in Calgary the Premier and the Minister of Energy have released a document from the Alberta government called Energizing Investment that is certainly one of the critical pieces of our competitiveness strategy. As I'm going to be quoting from the document, I'm more than happy to table both that document and the technical report that comes with it as part of my speaking notes.

To summarize from the document, I think it's very important to make note of the principles that were involved in the determination of the go-forward with regard to the royalty framework that we were in. To do that, we used the three guiding principles which were relevant, are relevant, and remain relevant today and into tomorrow. One of them was to

- support sustainable economic development that contributes to a high quality of life for all Albertans now and into the future;
- support a fair, predictable and transparent royalty regime; and
- align Alberta's royalty regime with overall government objectives.

Mr. Speaker, it's important not only for Alberta to ensure that we have well into the future a stable, profitable, functioning oil industry, but it's critically important for all of Canada. I think the development of our energy sector would be considered by our neighbours to the south one of critical importance for the security of their nation. With those in mind, our go-forward will probably contribute not only to our economic benefit but across Canada as we all know how much the oil sands development, for example, contributes to the economies of Ontario and other Canadian provinces and, in fact, Mr. Speaker, all over the world.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that because of some of the changes that we've made, over the next 25 years upstream oil and gas development in Alberta has the potential to add $2.5 trillion in new economic activity and millions of person-years with regard to jobs. That's really what it's all about. It's about maximizing the opportunities that come from this tremendous resource that we've got. The Albertans I represent and, I think, probably the Albertans that we all represent would rather work than wait. They would rather train, innovate, and be world leaders than just accept the challenges that were dropped on the industry with not only the economic financial collapse but the challenges around the energy sector itself, whether it be environmental or just the practical production challenges.

I've been involved in the development of the oil and gas sector, Mr. Speaker, for many years. As a contractor we built, leased, maintained, moved rigs, dug pipelines. The people that work in this industry are probably some of the toughest, most innovative people I've ever met. They can face the 40 below or 50 below with the wind chill, and you just get it done. You can face roads that are just about impassable with 80,000 pounds of steel behind you, and you just move it.

You know the old saying: well, it's the oil companies here; let's hurry up and wait. There are all the challenges of logistically organizing rig moves and permissions and permits. I think that also is part of our competitiveness, that while they can face all of the elements that Mother Nature and the geophysical challenges give them, they can't beat world prices. They don't have any say in it, they don't have any way to affect it, and they can't get ahead of the regulatory burden that we as well as just about every other government in certainly the modern world have made around their industry. They make it far more challenging than it used to be.

We're not prepared, Mr. Speaker, in any way to compromise our environmental responsibilities or our workplace safety and health of our workforce by being more competitive. We're just going to be better at what we do.

Aside from the effect that this will have on Calgary and the oil industry, for many of us the biggest contributors in our community to really important community initiatives are, in fact, the oil and gas sector. Husky Oil has been in Lloydminster for over 70 years. They are going to break ground for their new officer tower next Tuesday. Very few projects in that community that are built with the partnership of government and private money are done without Husky and other very, very generous oil companies and service companies.

It is an amazing community to attend functions where they'll routinely raise half a million dollars for their health foundation or other worthy causes from companies like Grithog and Universal Industries, people that are always at the plate in good times and bad. When it's really good, they are able to be more generous, and when it's bad, many times, Mr. Speaker, they go without to make sure that they maintain a good presence, a corporate identity that they work very hard to establish.

It really is about making the oil and gas industry part of the fabric that makes Alberta what it is. It's something that, rightly or wrongly, has separated us from many other provinces, and like the challenges our Albertans face in agriculture or forestry, we're not afraid of the challenges. But when we self-impose some of the challenges or we're part of an industry that faces new developments – no one could have anticipated two or three years ago the opportunities to produce shale gas. It became a deal changer, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what we thought to be stable, long-term markets at significantly higher prices than now evaporated virtually in front of our eyes.

We could do like some of the provinces in the east have done when the fisheries dried up; we could sit on the dock and wait for our ship to come in for a generation. Or we could take the bull by the horns and say: "Okay. That was then; this is now. What do we need to do to make sure that the resources we've got and the people that we've got to produce them can be put together in such a way that this product can get to market?" The profit that was there probably won't be there in the near future, but what we can do, we need to do is spare no expense to make sure that we get the maximum economic rent, which in many ways, Mr. Speaker, means building a bigger economic pie so that the piece we get is there to support, to make the things that we feel very important about in our health care and our education and the other things that we do as a government possible.

Mr. Speaker, we have spent eight or nine months of extremely focused work with the financial sector. I don't think many people realize how connected the financial sector is to the success of the oil and gas industry. They play with big dollars, and they need to have certainty of return or as much stability as possible. We didn't just take what the gas companies or the oil companies said was their bottom line. We looked to the financial sector. We had a very thorough vetting of what we need to do to move forward.

In the documents that we're tabling, Mr. Speaker, that's all there. While it would have been easy to put together a document on short notice, it was critical for us to make sure that what we've got now is the foundation for the next generation of wealth creation, of opportunity in Alberta. We know we've been very successful in establishing the oil sands regime that's going to be producing wealth for generations of Albertans. We think that with this proper balance the gas and conventional oil sectors can also play a very real and important part in the economic opportunities in Alberta for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I want to sum up in saying that this document of the work that's been done by the former Minister of Energy, current Minister of Energy, and, in fact, many other people in government and the Department of Energy is a true testament to what happens when you put your good minds to work, when you work with industry and the other sectors involved with it, including the service industry. We are keenly aware of the great opportunities and how important it is to all the communities of Alberta, that will see their hotels full again. They'll see their tire shops or their truck stops and their grocery stores once again thriving, prospering, building the life that we're all so very fortunate to have.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Assembly for this opportunity, and I do want to thank all the people that have been involved in the production of these documents. They were truly worth waiting for.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to proceed to 29(2)(a) with the minutes afforded to it, but I'm also going to permit the tabling of these documents today. We have in our Routine a section for tabling, but recognizing that these documents pertain to an announcement that, as I understand, was delayed till 3 o'clock today, when the markets in central Canada closed, this is the first opportunity, I guess, for them to be a part of the Assembly. So proceed with the tabling.

Now 29(2)(a). Calgary-Glenmore first and Edmonton-Centre second.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was quite enlightening, to see the government change its direction, realize that it's wrong, yet still not apologize to the industry or the workers of Alberta for their mistake and the two and a half years of pain that could have been avoided. The minister talked to say that Albertans would rather work than wait. He talked about listening to the investment world now, when people that worked with Tristone and other areas for three years have been telling this government that this is wrong. Investment dried up, starting when it was announced. Why will you not admit it? Just feel good to say: we messed up; we're sorry.

You revert back from 50 per cent to 36 instead of 33. I mean, we're almost going back. But how can you possibly say that we don't want to wait when we've waited a whole year? There's nothing new in this report, nothing new revealed, only that you're admitting that you were wrong.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, actually, it's quite nice to see that the Wildrose really do appreciate the document. Much of what they produced the other day pretty much comes out of the document we've done.

What they don't seem to understand: every other reasonably intelligent person in Alberta and the world knows that the world went through a commodity collapse. Our Premier, this government didn't cause the price of natural gas to go from $12 or $14 down to $3. He didn't cause the financial sector to lose its way. We're part of it. We've seen circumstances change. We didn't put and hide all that natural gas in the shale deposits in the States and in Alberta and Saskatchewan. It's been there forever. It's now just practically possible to produce.

Whether they want to admit it or not, the rest of the world knows, the energy sector knows, we know, and we've realized that, yeah, we do have to make changes. If nothing else had happened, just the establishment of the shale gas numbers would have resulted in us having to readjust our formula. That's a simple matter of common sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to the presentation from the President of the Treasury Board. Not having the benefit of having a BlackBerry in the House to catch the media that's going on, I take it, then, that the government has announced that it is going to be reducing the royalty rates and giving some sort of incentive around natural gas. Is that what we're talking about here?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is. I think the minister of finance may address some of them, but, yes, we are. We're going to reduce the front end on our natural gas to 5 per cent. We're going to reduce some of the top end benefit that was there from 50 per cent on natural gas down to 36 per cent and conventional oil down to 40 per cent.

This was done in very, very close consultation with the financial sector, who say: for us to get in the game with the oil and gas sector, we need to know that your risk/reward is very close to the competing states and provinces that we're with. We compared the costs to 10 American states that are the ones that are fighting for the same dollars we are and to Saskatchewan and British Columbia, who are obviously our most competitive market.

We are changing it. It will be available to all of Alberta as of this point now, and we do believe it will set the stage for a very viable and stable re-establishment of the natural gas sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, then Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. I find that just amazing, that the minister would get up and talk about the high prices of oil and the collapse in August of '08. The new royalty framework didn't come in until the 1st of January '09. The collapse had bottomed out in November, December. The investment community had told and told this government as well as industry not to implement them on the 1st of January. The government went ahead.

The Barnett shale was hitting production in 2003; 2001 was when they first started developing that. In 2007, a year before the collapse, the shale gas was going up. We were at 5 billion bcf. They in the U.S. in their production and the punitive royalty rates here drove that business, which was developed . . .

The Speaker: Alas, the time for this segment has now left us.

Additional speakers on this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and speak in support of Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. The global economy is slowly showing signs of recovery. It's also showing us over the last year to two years that there is a lot of change and a requirement for change in order for Alberta to remain competitive in this new economic climate. We must adapt to these changes. Our government's prudent fiscal saving strategy has afforded Alberta the opportunity to lead the nation out of the recession and excel in this new global economy.

Mr. Speaker, many jurisdictions in North America have seen their debts soar as a result of the economic downturn. As debt increases, so do the challenges of achieving fiscal stability. Not only in North America – we look at Europe, and we only have to look at the turmoil in Greece in recent days to see vivid evidence of this.

In Alberta our fiscal situation is a result of years of strong fiscal stewardship and prudent fiscal planning. By drawing on cash reserves from the sustainability fund and with a plan to return to a surplus position in three years, Mr. Speaker, our government is emerging from this recession in an enviable fiscal position and poised to become not only a Canadian but a global leader. Our province is one of the most competitive jurisdictions in North America, and Bill 1 will ensure that we remain competitive.

Attracting investment is vital to our economic competitiveness, and competition for attracting investment capital is always increasing. Favourable business conditions, including our competitive tax rates, provide the foundation for attracting this investment. Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 builds on this foundation by enhancing collaboration between government, industry, and the hard-working citizens of our province. By communicating with Albertans and industry stakeholders, we're able to gain a comprehensive knowledge of how the changes in the global economy will affect our province.

The report on the competitiveness strategy and the government's response released today is testament to our government's commitment to this task. This ongoing communication will ensure that we can develop the right strategies to see that Alberta continues to flourish and attract investment, to grow our economic pie and create opportunities for Alberta entrepreneurs and families.

One area that stands out in my mind is, of course, technology and innovation. The advancements that have been made in these areas over the past few years have been astonishing. It is clear that enhancements in both technology and innovation are vital to ensuring that Alberta's economy remains competitive. Bill 1 will enhance our ability to both develop and adapt to new technologies. Again, Mr. Speaker, here in Alberta our government's fiscal prudence permits us the ability to adapt to these changes in a timely manner, ensuring that our industries are on the cutting edge. The development of new technology in Alberta is a source of great pride and a catalyst to spur growth in our economy and improve the quality of life for Albertans.

Within the walls of our postsecondary institutions lie some of the brightest young minds in Canada. These students are indeed the future of Alberta. Our postsecondary institutions, under the umbrella of Campus Alberta, provide these students with a world-class education. An example of this was the announcement that the University of Alberta was ranked fourth in the country and 59th world-wide.

Mr. Speaker, a competitive provincial economy does not solely mean attracting investment. It also means attracting and retaining workers who have the skills and knowledge that are necessary to develop new technologies and drive Alberta's provincial economy. The strength of this province, the backbone of this province, is our people. When students graduate from our postsecondary institutions and are looking for employment, we want them to remain in Alberta. We believe in growing our own, not exporting our best.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 does not focus on a specific industry in which to promote competitiveness. Rather, it seeks to promote competitiveness in numerous industries right across our economic spectrum. Alberta is a province rich in diversity both in our cultural backgrounds and our resources. I believe that Bill 1 recognizes this diversity and promotes competitiveness that will benefit numerous sectors of our provincial economy. Alberta has always been known for being competitive, and Bill 1 intends to build on our great track record to make a great province that much more attractive.

Our province was an attractive place to do business before the global downturn, and I'm confident, Mr. Speaker, that it will continue to be one of the most competitive jurisdictions in North America or, frankly, anywhere in the free world.

Mr. Speaker, the foundation of Alberta lies in our entrepreneurial spirit and the competitive economic climate that our province is known for. Bill 1 will build on this foundation, ensuring that Alberta remains competitive and that Albertans can continue to enjoy a high quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, I would sincerely like to thank our Premier for bringing forward this legislation and for his vision and dedication to a prosperous Alberta. I support Bill 1, and I would ask all my colleagues, including the Member for Edmonton-Centre, to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. The member, when he first started up, talked about the importance of Bill 1, that we're the most competitive in the world and also talked about the new competitiveness review of the oil and gas. If in fact we were the most competitive, Mr. Speaker, we would never be discussing any of these things. We wouldn't be having a new change in our royalty. We would have already been competitive. I don't understand how he can say that we're the most competitive when we're putting all these things in and implementing them. Why do you say that we're the most competitive? Yet we're changing; therefore, we're not.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, if you wish.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to respond to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Alberta has been very competitive . . .

Mr. Hinman: Has been.

Mr. Rogers: Has been, and we believe that it will continue to be. That is why, hon. member, we have gone through this process of this competitive strategy: to make sure that we continue to do the right things. This province, like the rest of the country and anywhere else, has not been immune to the global economic downturn. We must make sure that we do everything to make sure that that competitive advantage that has existed here will continue and be there for the future so that this province not only will continue to be of benefit to us but to our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: Under 29(2)(a), yes, Mr. Speaker. This would be aimed at, frankly, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore or even the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. It would seem to me that a key measure of competitiveness as it's being debated here is profitability. My question to any of the people I've named would be: have any of them looked at the scale of corporate profits in Alberta as a percentage of GDP compared to other jurisdictions? We often talk about spending as a percentage of the economy and taxes as a percentage of the economy. In doing the background work for their comments, have any of them looked at corporate profits as a percentage of Alberta's economy and how that might compare to other jurisdictions?

The Speaker: Well, the comments will go to the last speaker, which is our tradition. The other two, if they choose to participate, the member will have an opportunity then. The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I certainly don't have those figures handy at my fingertips. The minister of finance might. I might remind the hon. member that in Alberta and particularly the part of Alberta that I represent and, I can assure you, right across this province, profit is not a dirty word. The reason that companies invest in Alberta, have invested in Alberta, and will return to invest in Alberta is because we have always treasured through that entrepreneurial spirit the opportunity to make a profit in this province.

I hope, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member, that opportunities will continue to abound, that our investors will see great returns on their investment in this province of Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Remember my advice a minute or two ago.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I appreciate the question from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It's an excellent question, but it's not the right question. The question is: what percentage or how much tax are we actually receiving? As we've been lowering the corporate tax here in the province, we've raised it from $1 billion to $3 billion of corporate tax being paid. Had we raised it to say, "Oh, we want a higher percentage of the GDP," we would have actually shrunk the pie, as this government foolishly did by saying that if we raise the royalty rate, we're going to grow the pie. It actually shrinks it.

As you shrink and lower it to a competitive tax, more business comes in. There's more economic spinoff, and we actually grow the economic pie. Therefore, we increase the dollars into the revenue of the treasury here so that we can in fact make sure that we have the health care and the education and the roads that we do have and want to have. We want to be competitive, and that is in looking at the overall tax rate, not the percentage of GDP.

The Speaker: Time is still available under Standing Order 29.

Dr. Taft: Well, again, I guess to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon or perhaps the Member for Calgary-Glenmore: if we accept the logic that lower taxes increase the economy, would it be sensible, then, just to eliminate taxes altogether? Would we all be a lot better off if there were no taxes?

Mr. Rogers: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are probably places in the world where there are very little or no taxes. I'm very proud that our province has . . .

The Speaker: Alas, the time has escaped us.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point, as we all understand Gladwell and The Tipping Point: we raised our taxes to the tipping point, where we're destroying our economy. Yes, you can lower them to the point where there isn't enough possibly for what the people want.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, has lofty ambitions like advancing competitive initiatives and developing strategies to encourage innovation, productivity, and adoption of technology, but once again this government is going the wrong way because of its bad ideas. This government promotes one bad policy after another, lurches from one crisis to another crisis, and is constantly having to clean up its own mistakes.

As we have seen with the way the government has handled health care, the energy sector, they mean well, but they keep getting it wrong. I am sure that the irony behind Bill 1 is not lost on many members of this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is supposed to be the land of opportunity, where we embrace the entrepreneur and unleash their potential. Now, because of this government's incompetence, they feel that they need to pass a bill and create an agency that will encourage competitiveness. It took them a whole year just to review the competitiveness of the oil and gas industry, where we used to lead.

I also remember, Mr. Speaker, that back in 2005 this government re-formed a new cabinet, and they increased the size of that cabinet. They found it necessary to have a minister of restructuring and government efficiency. I don't know where that minister has gone to. Well, actually, I do know. Now he's working on Transportation and doing a little bit of restructuring. But the point is that they try to be efficient, and they become more inefficient as they do that.

The problem is that this is already the government's role. The government's role is to put the proper rules and regulations in place to protect the health and safety of our workers, to create a level playing field, to protect the environment, and to protect the public and the consumers. But the key to creating a competitive economy is to make sure that the government does not get in the way unnecessarily by putting up too many needless rules and regulations, by making the system so complex that it is hard to figure out the rules, and by wasting people's time and money to try and comply or follow those changing rules, as we're seeing with Bill 2. Mr. Speaker, this just dampens the spirit of the entrepreneur and the real job creator.

But what is the government doing? The opposite. It is getting in the way. It's making doing business more difficult, wasting the time and money of the businesspeople. The result is loss of jobs. With the number of businesses that I have discussions with, they say that compliance and the number of rules, regulations — environmental and on all the other things — are repetitive, they overlap, and they're just costly and hard to implement. Yet many of the bureaucrats that they report to don't even understand them themselves, especially in the ag industry. This government has cost Albertans thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment and economic activity loss because of their wavering ways.

When the government of British Columbia was first elected, Mr. Speaker, one of their first acts was to eliminate regulatory burdens and to be a partner with business so that it could create the jobs and value-added opportunities that its citizens could rely on regardless of who was in power. The business of government is to be friendly with business. This was a bold step. It's unfortunate that this government could have done this a long time ago. Instead, it is simply copying what another province has done and what every government should do as part of its operations. There is no time to waste. With each passing day businesspeople relocate to projects in B.C. and Saskatchewan. So it's great that that review has finally come out today. We'll see if we can turn the tide. The livelihoods of Albertans are in shambles because of the chronic meddling by this government.

I urge this government to demonstrate real leadership by being humble enough to admit its mistakes, which it seems is unlikely, and to realize its limitations by being strong enough to say no, that it does not need to do things just because some group protests, and by being wise enough to realize that it is business and the taxpayers, who create jobs and who make real and lasting investments in communities, to whom we owe our real prosperity. Mr. Speaker, while I applaud the principles of Bill 1, I struggle to find how it helps the people of Calgary-Glenmore or Albertans to create another government agency to ensure competitiveness.

Competitiveness is created by fewer regulatory hurdles that serve no purpose, competitiveness is created by a government that realizes it is a partner with business and Albertans, and competitiveness is created by having the lowest taxes, reducing unnecessary fees, and limiting the interference of government in our personal and business lives. I do not see how Bill 1 can accomplish this.

When the first settlers came to Alberta and began to trade one with another, I'm sure that they would have scratched their heads if someone told them that the future government was going to push a law to encourage competitiveness. That is why they came here. It was to compete and to make a living. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure they would have wondered what went so wrong that the government would have brought forward something like Bill 1.

While times have changed, basic principles do not. Sometimes the best thing that legislators can do is reflect on the wisdom of those who came before us because limiting government, focusing spending, and empowering communities and individuals to help one another in time of need have stood the test of time. Giving government even more power to encourage competitiveness does not. That is the reason why I am not all that thrilled with Bill 1.

A few other items I wanted to cover. It's interesting, you know, as we just finished the Olympics, that it was a very great time for Canadians. We've come together. We're proud. We had that desire to own the podium. That's world competition at its best, down to the seconds. Probably the most heartbreaking for me to watch was Devon Kershaw, after 50 kilometres of racing being 1.6 seconds behind and placing fifth. Competition is sharp. But I don't think any less of him; I think all the more that he carried on right to the end and was there.

It's exciting to see competition in sports, in industry, amongst the different towns in Alberta, whether it's curling, whether it's hockey, basketball, football, all those things. It brings out the best in us, and we like to compete. Competing is fun, but it's not fun if it's not on a level playing field. It's not fun to have an Alberta business, based here in Calgary or Edmonton or Leduc, and to have to move your equipment and your workers to Saskatchewan or B.C. in order to keep that business going. It just isn't right.

We've made a huge mistake by becoming greedy and thinking: oh, if we actually take a bigger piece of the pie, we're going to get $1.4 billion more. It has cost us billions of dollars. Yesterday's land sales are another classic example. If we want to be competitive, we need to have the rules and regulations put in place. We've had nine land sales since they announced last June that we are going to do a competitiveness review. It's very simple for businesspeople to realize that A plus B equals the cost. A was bidding on the lands. B was the royalty that we're going to have to pay if we get that. Why would we say for a year, "We don't know what we're going to do with the royalty rates, but please bid A, and bid the maximum amount"? We will never know the answer on what the dollars would have been yesterday or two weeks ago or for the last six months had those rates been implemented.

You don't understand the investments. Even your own minister talked . . . [interjections] You're listening to him now? More of you should listen. You don't know what return on investment is. I don't believe it. Otherwise, you wouldn't be mumbling now and grumbling about this.

Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing that we have come to this, where we need to pass a bill to say that we need to review and be competitive. This is as disappointing as having a government minister on restructuring and government efficiency. One has to scratch one's head and ask: what are we really doing here? To think that this government feels that Bill 1 must be legislated is wrong. Albertans are by nature a very industrious and competitive group. Through our struggles of the last 100 years we are stronger. What legislation is this government going to try to pass next? That we need to wash our hands when we leave the restroom? We already know and understand those things. Are we going to have to cover our mouths when we cough? These are common-sense things.

It's human nature to be competitive, and this government is wasting time and money in trying to look at how to be competitive when they should just clear the deck and allow people to compete on a level playing field, one where the rules aren't being changed. I mean, how many times have they changed the new, new, new, new royalty framework? Well, now they have the new competitiveness. It's a sad day that we had to wait this long and lose this much money so that we can get back in the game.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow, then the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having listened to the comments from the former speaker, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, I'd just like to know who was involved in giving them advice on the energy policy which they came out with. I know he believes in transparency and all the other good things. I'm just really curious to know what sources and resources their party used in developing their energy policy.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I'm surprised. I would have thought that perhaps the government has been following us around to see who we've been speaking with. One thing, Mr. Speaker, that I've learned since I've been elected to this House is that the economic tyranny of this government is appalling. They want to know who they've talked to because they want to punish them. [interjections] That's the problem. You laugh.

Do you realize that tomorrow our leader is speaking to COADC and that they've received a letter from your Minister of Energy saying: "She shouldn't be there speaking to you. Come and talk to me"? It's comical, but it's wrong. The reports are out there. There are tons of reports. If you want, I'll maybe put a few of them together so that you can read them if you want. But you've got it corrected. You understand. And, no, I will not talk about who we've talked to to share with the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite very much talks about: we are changing the focus and direction. Does he not believe and understand that economics in this country, economics in the world have changed? Also, at least as it sounds from his presentation, does he believe that no matter what takes place, they should stay stagnant and in the same direction year after year, generation after generation? I don't understand where this individual is coming from, and I would like him to express it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Hinman: I understand that he doesn't understand. We had a collapse in the equity markets. There was too much money being borrowed. We were fortunate here in Alberta to have some money, but the fact of the matter is that there's a shortage. The spending of this government isn't sustainable. We're going to get in a wreck like we were back in 1992, and to say, "Oh, we're going to have to dig ourselves out of a debt" is wrong. Yes, we maybe have one more year of sustainability, but the spending is not sustainable. That's what you have to look at.

We understand because when you put out your budget, we said that you'd need to balance it. That's the difference, Mr. Speaker. Are we going to realize what causes economic disasters? It's governments that spend more than they have. It's governments that don't know how to prioritize and realize what's important, building things that aren't necessarily needed now or even able to be used, yet they're funding those. Again, they think they're being penny-wise when they're pound-foolish. We need to look at the infrastructure that needs to be done long term, and when we fail to do that and we want to do something that's politically popular to get a few votes, it fails the Alberta taxpayers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to absorb the answer that he didn't give me, so I'm assuming that because I wasn't given the answer as to who they actually used as resource people, he doesn't want to answer that question.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the people who talk to us prefer not to be given out. They say: you don't understand how much we're risking. It's just like the doctors, the nurses. They're not allowed to talk to the press. These people are the same. They put in bids on these lands. They want to get wildcat wells. They want to be able to continue to do business here. This government likes to flex its economic tyranny on people that speak out against them. They won't even listen to their own. We're talking about getting information.

Why are you now listening to the investment world? They said that in January 2007, when the Premier spoke and said that we're going to have the review, the investment into this province started to shrink at that point long before it came out. Whenever government says that it's changing its rules and regulations, it creates instability. There's been instability for three years in the oil and gas industry. It's wrong. It wasn't beneficial for anybody other than outside jurisdictions. I think Saskatchewan, the U.S., and B.C. want to nominate our Premier for man of the year because they've benefited so much because of his decisions.

The Speaker: I have one last speaker that I have on my list, I think, the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and join second reading debate on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. A healthy, growing economy requires that Alberta remain competitive. A growing economy creates jobs and opportunities for Alberta families. A growing economy is also the key to government's ability to fund world-class health care, education, and programs that help those who need help. Competitiveness enables us to build the hospitals, the schools, and the roads we need to meet the demands of a growing population. Bill 1 will support our ability to compete on the world stage and increase Albertans' prosperity and quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, the oil and gas industry is the primary fuel of this province's economy. One in 15 jobs is directly related to energy, and that proportion gets even higher when you look at indirect employment related to the energy sector, some estimates being as high as 1 in 5 jobs. The importance this sector has on the provincial economy is critical to our future.

To keep this sector one of the most competitive in the world, this government initiated the natural gas and conventional oil investment competitiveness study. Today the government released the much-anticipated competitiveness review. The review proposes changes to our royalty system that will ensure we remain an attractive destination for investment dollars. This review is about more than just royalties paid by oil and gas companies. It's about Alberta's economy. It's about growing that economy, growing a larger economic pie.

Oil and gas revenues, Mr. Speaker, come not just from royalties but from a variety of other streams, including taxes and land sales. The review will grow this economic pie by adjusting royalties to be competitive. This will lead to more investment, more drilling activity, and more jobs in our communities. This means the government will be creating a larger economic pie by creating a smaller slice of the royalty piece, but that will be more than made up by growth in land sales and taxes. Over the next 25 years we expect this will create tens of thousands of direct, indirect, and induced jobs not just in Alberta but across Canada.

Bill 1, though, our topic today, is more than just about oil and gas, more than about any one sector. Mr. Speaker, enhancing competitiveness in Alberta involves and is important to all sectors: agriculture, manufacturing, financial services, forestry, infrastructure, tourism. Sustainable prosperity won't be achieved unless they're competitive.

Government taxation plays an important role in all sectors in making them competitive. This government has been widely praised for understanding the key role of taxes. That's why we monitor and adjust our taxes over time. Since 1993 we have reduced personal income taxes, corporate taxes, and education property taxes. We introduced a science and research development tax credit to foster innovation in the province. We also established and enhanced the family employment tax credit. Our most recent budget, the current budget, Budget 2010, complemented these efforts. There were no new taxes or increased taxes. As a result, Alberta does continue to have the most competitive tax regime in Canada.

With respect to the corporate world the province's low corporate tax already helps attract investment from around the globe. Alberta is low, in fact the lowest in Canada. Its low general corporate tax rate supports growth and development in both small and large business. In addition, there is no capital tax, no payroll tax, no general sales tax, and we have the lowest fuel tax of any province. These are factors that are looked at by organizations and investors when they think about opening up business in Alberta.

Let me turn to personal taxes. This province also has the most generous personal basic exemption amongst all provinces, at $16,825. If Alberta had any other provincial tax system, Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay between $2,800 and $4,900 per capita more in taxes each year. In 2001 Alberta replaced its multirate personal income tax with a flat tax. Alberta's single tax rate of 10 per cent helps attract and retain skilled workers, a major asset in the global economy. This taxation system has been one of the keys to our competitiveness. It's simple, it's transparent, and it's a fair way to levy taxes.

Recently there have been some critics who've argued that it is not a progressive taxation system. In fact, figures show that the flat tax is very progressive. Most provincial revenues are collected from higher income earners in the province. For example, the top 10 per cent of income earners in Alberta pay 57 per cent of the total income taxes collected in the province.

Mr. Hinman: Say that once more.

Dr. Morton: The top 10 per cent of income earners pay 57 per cent of total personal income tax. Meanwhile, the bottom 50 per cent of earners pay only 3 per cent. Talk about progressive.

Increasing competitiveness, though, is more than just about taxes. The government is already taking action on a number of fronts to improve Alberta's ability to compete. As well as taxes we've looked at issues like bureaucracy, productivity, innovation. We've addressed specific sectors: forestry, agriculture, and now oil and gas. We've also focused on human capital, the training and education of our workforce to ensure that it is one of the most capable and productive in the world.

With respect to bureaucracy the Alberta government created in the '90s the Regulatory Review Secretariat to focus on reducing red tape. Streamlining regulations results in an environment where businesses can focus on productivity rather than complying with redundant or ineffective regulations. Most recently an example of this type of success was simplifying of the business registry process during the implementation of the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, the TILMA agreement, between Alberta and British Columbia.

Alberta's competitiveness is also dependent on our ability to improve productivity. Alberta's productivity has led the nation for a number of years now, but our productivity growth rate has actually trailed that of other provinces. In response to this, the provincial government has created Productivity Alberta. The staff there help organizations examine and improve their ability to run more efficiently, work smarter, and increase overall productivity. While Productivity Alberta typically helps manufacturers and industrial clients, the help they provide crosses sectors. Interestingly, one of their noteworthy successes has been helping several of our hospitals implement methods that cut down on emergency room wait times.

In terms of innovation Alberta Innovates, the successor to the Alberta Research Council, strengthens the province's role as a world leader in using science to help increase our competitiveness. Specifically, Alberta Innovates focuses on bioeconomy, health, energy, and environment solutions. Through Alberta Innovates the province has positioned itself to foster a culture of innovation that will support entrepreneurs in technology-based industries.

An example of government addressing a particular sector has been the Alberta livestock and meat strategy, or ALMA. This strategy is a road map for a competitive, profitable livestock and meat industry. The Livestock and Meat Agency, ALMA, the lead organization of this strategy, played a pivotal role recently in opening Hong Kong borders to Canadian beef during a federal Asian mission.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, in this province and this government much has been done on competitiveness, but we cannot rest on our laurels. Government work on competitiveness needs to continue, especially in light of the current global situation. Bill 1 is about partnership, partnership between industry and government, between the private and public sectors. This partnership will improve the province's ability to compete on all fronts. Bill 1, the Competitiveness Act, highlights this government's commitment to being competitive in the past and continuing to improve our competitiveness in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: Under 29(2)(a), yes. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one comment, and then I have a question. The member who just spoke said that a flat tax is actually progressive because the top 10 per cent of taxpayers pay 57 per cent of the taxes, but that's mathematical hocus-pocus. If the top 10 per cent of income earners earn 57 per cent of total income, then that would explain why they're paying 57 per cent of taxes. It would be useful if perhaps next week the minister could table how much of Alberta's total income is earned by that top 10 per cent, and then we'll see how progressive the flat tax really is.

My question to the minister is: how does this government balance taxes and profitability? When does it decide that corporate income is at a point where taxes need to be cut or increased?

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this would be a lesson in economics longer than we have time for today. Suffice it to say that it's as much an art as a science, and finding the right spot, the tipping point, as the hon. member said there, is the work of an economist. The metaphor is pretty simple. If you try and take too much too fast, you scare away investment. We see a number of provinces, the so-called have-not provinces that receive the equalization payments that I was talking about, I believe, in this Chamber yesterday, that have the larger governments, higher spending, higher taxes, drive out investment, have lower fiscal capacity, and then go hat in hand looking for transfers from wealthier provinces like Alberta.

Alberta, obviously, has benefited from the natural endowment of hydrocarbon resources, but certainly we watched Saskatchewan for three decades, where ill-informed tax policy and ill-informed resource policy drove out investment. What did Saskatchewan do? They all moved here. A lot of them are in our caucus. So tax policy may purport to be a science, but it's also an art.

I'd say that Alberta's record speaks for itself, and I'd say that this government's record speaks for itself. People vote with their feet, and people have been coming to this province. Even in the downturn we continue to have twice the population growth rate over the national average.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 1:30 p.m.

Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome. Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen and young people, we will now participate in the singing of our national anthem. Today with us is Mr. Paul Lorieau, who will lead us, and I'd invite all to join in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a thrill it is for me to have the singular honour of introducing our very, very special guest in the Legislative Assembly today. Fresh from his posting in Brussels and living now in Aylmer – just across the river, as it were, from Ottawa – is the ambassador that we greet today from the Republic of Italy. Italy and Canada have had many very special relations. We have 82,000 Canadians of Italian descent living here in Alberta. Over the lunchtime we had an opportunity to have a conversation about many things, but the wise words from the ambassador were that many people in his country expect a great deal from Canada. We resolve not to disappoint him or to disappoint the Italians that are expecting us to do the very great work that Canadians do to be sustainable and to deliver our products to market.

With that introduction, may I welcome and may you join me in welcoming the ambassador from Italy here to Alberta today. A very special welcome to His Excellency Ambassador Andrea Meloni. Please rise.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Athabasca-Redwater it is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 18 students, one teacher, and four parent helpers from H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake. They have travelled here to visit the Legislature Building. Miss Chelsea Evans and Mrs. Nancy Senetza, Mrs. Michelle Palichuk, Mr. Rick Anton, and Mrs. Giselle Anton are here. They are seated in the members' gallery today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it is also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 28 students, two teachers, and two parent helpers that have travelled two and a half hours from Vilna school to Edmonton today to tour the Legislature Building. With them are teachers Mrs. Rayanna Tremblay and Mrs. Tanya Pelech and parent helpers Mrs. Laurie Shapka and Mr. Ken Krieg. They are seated in the public gallery today, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 36 students and two teachers from one of my favourite schools in the Lauderdale district of the Edmonton-Calder constituency. With us today are teacher Mr. Dennis Ralston and teacher Mr. Mathieu Brosseau Tremblay. I did not have an opportunity to ask Mr. Brosseau Tremblay if he was part of the clan, but he's an awfully good-looking fellow, so I must assume that he is. In spite of that, I would ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Merci, M. le Directeur. Je veux vous présenter et à tous mes collègues dans l'Assemblée deux classes d'élèves de l'école Gabrielle-Roy, qui est située dans Edmonton-Gold Bar. S'il vous plaît, souhaitez la bienvenue aux deux classes, une du sixième niveau et l'autre du neuvième, avec leurs professeurs et leurs parents: Meyranie Giroux, Nicole Hébert-Royer, et Nadia Duchesneau. S'il vous plaît, levez-vous et recevez la réception de l'Assemblée.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you two outstanding Albertans. One is Annie Changarathil. Annie has been a single mother. She's worked for the Alberta government. She is currently working for NAIT. Her greatest success is raising her young daughter, who is in grade 8. Her name is Judy. She's a 13-year-old. She goes to Jean Forest leadership academy. It's a girl's-only, uniform school near NAIT. I recently met Judy at a public event for India Day ceremonies. She said she wants to do something meaningful with her life to help others, so I thought I'd bring her down to the Legislature and introduce her to all of our friends here. She's won many awards in academic achievement, leadership, volunteerism, Indian classical dance. I thought that with bright young people like this we need to mentor them, guide them. This is the future of this province. I'd ask my young friends Judy and Annie to please rise and be awarded the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group seated in the members' gallery today, joining us from the Academy of Learning and Digital School in Edmonton. Elmer and Audrey Brattberg are the two owners of the two schools I previously mentioned. Charles Jarvis is an operations manager and a past graduate of the Academy of Learning. Andre Harris is the information systems manager and a past graduate of the Academy of Learning. Luke Wolff is a very successful Digital School graduate with a new career as a CAD technician, and Michael Nagy is also an Academy of Learning graduate and valedictorian with a new career as an insurance adviser. At this time I would ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS, representing over 70,000 undergraduate students at the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. They're meeting with many members of the Assembly all week. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I'd ask that each rise as I call their name to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. They are Beverly Eastham, who is finishing her second and final term as VP external of the U of A Students' Union and as chair of CAUS; Kay She, the outgoing VP external of the U of C Students' Union and vice-chair of CAUS; Zach Fentiman, president of the U of A Students' Union; Jeremy Girard, the outgoing president at the U of L Students' Union; Alex Massé, VP academic at the U of L Students' Union; Hardave Birk, the newly elected VP external at the U of C Students' Union; Duncan Wojtaszek, the executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students; Taz Kassam, newly elected president at the University of Lethbridge Students' Union; and River Walton, external commissioner of the University of Calgary Students' Union. They are all standing in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that we to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Academy of Learning and Digital School

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, February 26, I had the honour and privilege of taking part in the graduation ceremony of the Academy of Learning and Digital School. The Academy of Learning is a career and business college with over 30 fully licensed diploma programs, all under one year in length, training individuals to enter the workforce upon graduation. Their programs generally fall under the categories of office administration, health care, accounting, and information technology. The Digital School is also a career college, specializing in one-year-or-less diploma programs for computer-aided drafting engineering. Graduates from these schools are mostly mature students who opted to return to school to get the postsecondary education that they need to qualify for more lucrative careers.

Mr. Speaker, these schools have seen tremendous success over the years, boasting a consistent employment rate of 90 per cent from immediate graduates. In addition, the Academy of Learning has been a proud recipient of consumers' choice awards for business schools for the past eight years both in Calgary and Edmonton. Congratulations to the dedicated employees who have helped to make the Academy of Learning and Digital School a successful and important aspect of Alberta's education, and congratulations to the students who have taken these important steps to improve their futures.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Kevin Koe Rink Brier Championship

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud to rise today to celebrate the tremendous performance of Alberta's Kevin Koe rink as the 2010 Tim Hortons Brier champions. Yesterday evening in a thrilling final Kevin Koe's last shot was right on the button, giving him a 6-5 extra-end victory over Ontario's Glenn Howard and making him Brier champion for the very first time.

For more than a decade Kevin Koe's rink honed their skills in the shadows of better known Edmonton rinks skipped by Randy Ferbey and Kevin Martin. Ferbey and Martin not only competed and advanced in the same local playdowns but between them won a total of eight Briers for Alberta.

This year Koe's rink made its own mark in a brilliant fashion, culminating with the championship in his very first Brier appearance. Their path to the championship was a long road as the Koe rink had to win two playoff games against Newfoundland and Labrador and northern Ontario to advance. Now their efforts can focus on representing Canada at the world curling championships in Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy, from April 3 to 11.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all members of this Legislature to join me in congratulating skip Kevin Koe, third Blake MacDonald, second Carter Rycroft, and lead Nolan Thiessen on their Brier championship. You have made Albertans very proud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary International Airport Development

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This administration made a grave mistake when it declined to show some genuine leadership and long-term planning with regard to the construction of the Calgary airport tunnel. The deadline for action has passed, and the project is dead or, at least, delayed. Should the tunnel ever be built, it will be far more expensive than it would have been had this administration and the federal government acted sensibly or had the Calgary Airport Authority not resisted the tunnel's construction earlier on. Once Barlow Trail is closed, Calgary will face unprecedented gridlock, commuters will be frustrated, emergency vehicles will lose precious time reaching their destinations, more carbon will be spewed into the atmosphere as cars sit idling on Deerfoot, and local businesses will suffer significant loss of revenue, which in turn will impact property values in Calgary northeast.

This administration continues to say that transportation is the key to our future, yet you have failed to see the need for the tunnel and the future LRT expansion into the International Airport. It is ironic that an administration that commissioned a well-hyped competitiveness review doesn't understand the competitive disadvantage they have imposed on Alberta's largest city and, in fact, upon the province at large. The Calgary International Airport's new runway is going to open up Calgary to the world, but the lack of a tunnel is going to create a backlog for the new influx of business travelers, air commuters, and tourists. How is that competitive?

Constituents in northeast Calgary are incensed by this administration's failure to show leadership in this matter. That anger will only increase and spread across the city as Calgary commuters are forced to live with the consequences of your failure.

On behalf of my constituents in Calgary-McCall and all of the people that depend upon efficient transportation links around the airport, I will continue to work with city of Calgary officials, aldermen, MLAs, MPs, and citizens to find a responsible solution to meet the transportation needs of Calgary-McCall.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Clean Energy Projects

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Innovation is a focal point as Alberta moves to increase competitiveness and embrace a clean energy future. The Alberta government is supporting research and innovation today to find the clean energy technologies of tomorrow. Using Alberta's nearly $150 million allocation of the federal Ecotrust fund, we are supporting ideas that can make us more efficient and that support low- to no-emission energy.

We're funding unique projects like turning forest remnants into electricity in Drayton Valley and turning Edmonton's municipal waste into energy that will heat homes in Strathcona county. We've also invested in research in our energy sector with a $25 million grant to the University of Alberta's partnership with the world-renowned Helmholtz Association of German Research Centres. This partnership will help address challenges facing oil sands development through research into such areas as eliminating tailings ponds.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Minister of Environment announced funding for another Ecotrust project. One million dollars has been granted to Enbridge and its partners for the carbon dioxide slurry pipeline project. The plan is to pump captured carbon dioxide through a pipeline to transport materials such as sulphur and limestone to markets where it can be sold. Normally a slurry pipeline uses water to propel its contents. Using carbon dioxide is a new idea that has tremendous potential. Once materials arrive, the carbon dioxide will be stored underground or used in enhanced oil recovery rather than released into the atmosphere.

Congratulations to Enbridge and its partners for challenging themselves to find new and better ways to do business, ways that demonstrate the commitment of Albertans to seek out innovation, apply technology, and improve environmental performance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The competitiveness review confirms what we all knew, that within two years of taking office this Premier succeeded in eroding trust with the energy sector and in introducing a bucketload of uncertainty to what was one of the most stable oil and gas jurisdictions in the world. The effect was a less competitive oil and gas industry. To the Premier: given this government's track record for changing royalties again and again and again, what assurance can the Premier give that this time will be different and that this time he'll stick with it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the changes that were introduced in terms of the drilling incentive and some of the other changes recently were in reaction to an ever-changing market, new finds of shale gas, and also to deal with the credit crisis and partly, of course, the economic recession. This last competitiveness review was done with months of consultation with the industry and having that information analyzed and the recommendations coming forward to government.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this competitiveness review doesn't actually speak to Alberta having to have one of the three lowest combined royalty and tax rates compared to similar jurisdictions – this is to the Premier again – does performance measure 1(a) in this year's Energy ministry business plan, which says just that, still hold?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the changes following the competitiveness review are to put jobs back in Alberta, whether it's the local tire shop, to put people back in motels across rural Alberta, and also to keep creating more jobs well into the future. Again, a third party analyzed the report and said that this is building a $2.5 trillion business over the next 10 years.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, so far two questions and no answers. I'll try this again. How does the Premier intend to prevent his government's new focus on competitive royalties and resource revenues from becoming just a race to the bottom?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the competitiveness review analyzed all information coming forward in terms of the new geological data that's out there: shale gas available not only in the United States but in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Alberta, some of the cardium plays for oil. Of course, this is about introducing innovation and also new technology, new technology that will significantly reduce the environmental footprint the oil industry has put on Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try my luck with the Minister of Energy this time, and maybe I'll get some answers this time. Maybe. While this report is four months late, it still remains short on details. To the minister: since the new royalty curves weren't done when you released this review last Thursday, why weren't they ready, and who's designing them?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I would like to correct the preamble, as generally is the case. There were a number of initiatives that were announced last Thursday. What we did say, however, Mr. Speaker, was that we did want to get the report and the response to it out so that industry could make its decisions regarding investment. We wanted to also ensure, because of the situation involving natural gas and the low prices for natural gas, that we take a further look at, as the member said, the royalty curves. We're not expecting significant changes, but we did want to have the extra 60 days to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, when we consulted with industry, they were not opposed to paying higher royalties when prices were high, so what is the minister's rationale for lowering the maximum for oil by 10 per cent and the maximum for natural gas by 14 per cent?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I can't comment on the consultations that the Official Opposition had with industry, but if that was what they were told by industry, we were told differently, Mr. Speaker. We were clearly told that, especially in the area with the new deposits in shale gas, there's huge investment up front, there's high risk that's being taken, and the high end of the curve, which was previously at 50 per cent, simply did not make the risk viable. We've made those adjustments, and they've been well received, I would say.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since conditions change and since there's nothing in the competitiveness review about how this government would review royalties in the future, what is the minister going to do, if there is a need to make changes, that doesn't throw the industry back into turmoil? Do you have a process in place?

Mr. Liepert: Well, yes, we do, Mr. Speaker. The process we outlined very clearly was that it would be the process that we've gone through for the last year, which is consultative, collaborative, and working together. We have huge challenges outside our province. With our province being under attack, we need to ensure that as Albertans we are working together, that we trust one another, and I think the announcements of last week will go a long way to rebuilding that trust as Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with the third Official Opposition main question.

Construction and Manufacturing Outsourcing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta was the only province with a notable job loss in February. We lost 14,800 jobs last month. My first question is to the Premier. Why are we exporting so many construction and steel fabrication jobs to places like South Korea when the unemployment rate for the construction sector here in this province is increasing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, while it's certainly disappointing to see the unemployment increases here in the province of Alberta, over the long term we're going to see the economy pick up and the number of people without a job diminish. Even though the numbers are up, we still have the third highest employment rates in the country of Canada. But to this government even one person that's without a job is serious, and we want to get all people back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that 200 very large production modules for Imperial Oil's Kearn oil sands project will be shipped from South Korea to Portland, Oregon, then moved by barge up the Columbia and Snake rivers, that from there they will be trucked slowly through Idaho, Montana, and Alberta to the Kearn oil sands project, how many jobs were created in South Korea as the result of this bad deal for Alberta, and how many jobs were lost here in this province in the construction industry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's why the competitiveness review is so important, to make sure that we compete with other countries. There has been a huge global economic shift. Countries are competing not only for contracts. They're competing for investment, and they're also competing for people. That's why, I believe, the opposition will support this government in the Competitiveness Act, Bill 1, and get the process moving as quickly as possible.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's difficult to compete when this government is selling out the industry.

Now, given that the people of Alberta have provided generous royalty and tax concessions to Imperial Oil for the Kearn oil sands project, how does this deal between South Korea and Imperial Oil benefit the steel fabrication and construction and manufacturing industries in this province, which are suffering through such very difficult times?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's just the issue here: why is it that other countries can compete with industries in the country of Canada and provide the necessary equipment and some of the large vessels that the oil and gas expansion in the oil sands requires? That is why we want to go through the whole regulatory process – the review, the competitiveness – to reposition Alberta to make sure that we can compete.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. Anderson: Last Thursday the government reversed course and adopted many of the Wildrose proposals on energy competitiveness. Let's hope they do the same with the province's finances. On Sunday Frank Atkins, a well-respected economist, and Marcel Latouche of the Institute for Public Sector Accountability released their findings that the true size of this year's provincial deficit is not the government's claimed $4.7 billion. It is, in fact, $7.6 billion. Sound familiar? To the Premier: will he admit that this year's true cash deficit is $7.6 billion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and Enterprise will take the next two questions, but in all honesty we have the best books in the country of Canada. Nothing is hidden in our reporting. Everything is reported by law on a quarterly basis. There is no jurisdiction in Canada that has the same legislation that Alberta follows.

Mr. Anderson: So the experts are wrong again, I see.

To the Premier: will he accept the recommendations of Atkins and Latouche to annually report the true cash deficit this government is running instead of massaging the numbers to "obfuscate how much of a spending hole they have actually dug themselves into"?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd remind the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere that what professors Atkins and Latouche actually said in referring to our budget was, "Of course, this is following accepted standard accounting principles." If we hadn't followed accepted standard accounting principles, I think we would have heard about that, too.

Mr. Anderson: The professors clearly stated that they were hiding the numbers. That is what the professors said in the report.

To the Premier. Perhaps he could explain to this House how the reported deficit is $4.7 billion when Budget 2010 projects $6.8 billion being withdrawn from the sustainability fund and over a billion dollars more added in new debt. That's $7.8 billion in total deficit financing. It just doesn't add up.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has already indicated, precisely the fact that our books are as clear and as transparent as they are is why you're able to put these things together, as these two professors did. Let me quote from the TD Economics analysis of the budget, where they say, “The accounting of a provincial government’s capital plan rightly splits outlays into ‘capital investment’ and ‘expenses for capital purposes’” and that capital investment is rightly excluded as an expenditure. I’d be happy to table this.

2:00 Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it’s halfway through this government’s first term in office, and they’re in retreat on all fronts: first, a reversal on health care reform and now a flip-flop on oil and gas royalties. Over two years have gone by, and Albertans are wondering what, if anything, this government has actually accomplished. My question is to the Premier. Why has the Premier sold out Albertans by reversing his commitment to higher royalties on oil and gas?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we are as a government going through a complete competitiveness review. We started with the oil and gas sector. We are going to include agriculture, small business, and forestry because we’ve got to make sure that we reposition the province of Alberta given the huge global economic shift that we just experienced. We’re going to come out of it stronger than ever, and we are going to lead this country of Canada out of this recession.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier’s royalty framework was supposed to accommodate lower prices as well as higher ones, why won’t the Premier simply admit that his weak and vacillating government has once again caved in to pressure from the oil and gas industry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what we’ve done is exactly reflecting the current issue at hand, and that is that since the first royalty framework was introduced, there has been a major shift. We have large, large finds of shale gas, and a new technology that, quite frankly, was developed here in Alberta, is being applied in other jurisdictions. We have thousands of trillions of cubic feet of gas now available. A lot of that gas is very close to the markets, our traditional markets. The other is that we have an opportunity to improve innovation and technology so that we reduce the footprint on the face of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that a recent poll shows that a majority of Albertans did not want the royalties to be cut and a substantial group of Albertans actually wanted them to be increased, why won’t the Premier admit that what his government has done is not in the public interest but is, in fact, a huge retreat in the face of political pressure from special interests?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is all about doing what’s right. As I said in Calgary on Thursday, you don’t get paid royalties on the resource that’s in the ground. This is one way of extracting the resource and finding the balance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Environmental Monitoring and Reporting

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don’t believe that Alberta currently has a perfect balance between oil and gas development and environmental protection. The problem is that when it comes to environmental regulations, this government has a terrible track record, and while the competitiveness review does recognize and talk about environmental protection, I don’t see anything in here that clearly defines and prioritizes action. To the Minister of the Environment: what was the minister’s part in this review?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this review was an effort that was a partnership between independent third parties, industry, and government, and by government I refer to the Department of Energy, the Treasury Board, Environment. Who else was involved? Technology was involved in the review. SRD was involved in the review. The role of Environment was to work with other ministries and identify areas where there is overlap, where there is duplication, and where we can streamline a process but at the end of the day protect the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: how exactly will the minister streamline the review process for environmental assessments? What has been lined up so far?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the competitiveness review talks about a group that will be chaired by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy. The parliamentary assistants from Environment and SRD will also be involved in this. They will be in fact working with officials within those industries to identify those. They have two objectives, short term and longer term, and we expect the report back from them very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain what it means for environmental monitoring when the report states on page 17: “Stakeholders have also raised concerns about duplicative and overly frequent reporting requirements”? What exactly does that mean?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as you’re well aware, there are a number of jurisdictions that have responsibility for the oil and gas industry: the ERCB, SRD, and Environment. In some cases industry finds itself reporting the identically same data to all three regulators. It makes sense that they should only have to report that data once. Maybe the government could talk to itself rather than industry talking three times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Competitiveness Review Impact on Employment

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lots of talk today about the past in the oil patch. Everyone can be an expert on items in the past. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. What are you going to do in the future? What are you going to do now for my constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to get them back to work?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as always, Mr. Speaker, the toughest questions come from the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. You know, it's not government that gets people back to work; it's the private sector that gets people back to work. What government needs to do is create an environment whereby the private sector will invest in this province because there's an opportunity to succeed. We estimate, based on some of the projections that we've made, that it could be as many as 8,000 jobs created as a result of some of the announcements of last week. I'm sure that some of those jobs will be in that member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given your commitment to private enterprise what are you going to do to allow them to use the emerging technology to build this oil field and build this province again? When are you going to allow them to get to work?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right. You know, a lot has been made by members of this House relative to changes in the fiscal regime, but I think the announcement last week was much broader than that. It relates to changes that we need to make around regulatory streamlining. Maybe as importantly as some of the changes, as the Premier mentioned earlier, we have new deposits not only in shale gas but in oil as well where technology is required, and we need to ensure that we are flexible in order to deploy that technology.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being flexible, my next question is to the minister of finance. What's the finance community going to do to allow this industry to grow and to prosper?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, energy revenues into this province come through three streams. There's the royalty stream, there's the tax stream, and there's the land sales stream. What we're going to do, very clearly, is that we're going to grow two by temporarily shrinking the royalty stream. It's going to attract investment. More money is going to come into this province. We're going to grow those quadrants of the pie. Overall the pie will keep growing. You're going to see 8,000 jobs next year and 13,000 jobs in the years after.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Farm Worker Safety

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last reported year there were 23 farm-related deaths and 757 injuries that required ER visits. While this government supports farm safety education programs, there has been no noticeable decline in the farm injuries or deaths, and paid farm workers continue to be excluded from the Alberta Occupational Health and Safety Act and aren't covered under workmen's comp. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. A year ago the minister was consulting with the agricultural sector on farm safety. When will the farm safety report...

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We ran out of time for the full question, but with respect to the issue of farm safety, we are concentrating on reducing fatalities and injuries rather than regulating and legislating what takes place there to the point that this morning I made an announcement that $715,000 is being invested through ag societies throughout the province to put on farm safety seminars and education seminars in order to make it a safer environment for people to work. So our commitment is there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the same question in a year and see if that extra money has really helped.

To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: when will you be introducing legislation amending the Occupational Health and Safety Act to protect the health and safety of paid farm workers, as was recommended by a provincial judge over two years ago?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development has clearly indicated that both his ministry and the Department of Employment and Immigration are committed to farmer safety. Indeed, there is a report that in due course the minister may be receiving. It's that ministry that takes the lead on it. But in the meantime I am of the firm opinion that I'd rather prevent accidents from happening in the first place than deal with their consequences. That's what both of the ministries are committed to right now.

2:10

Ms Pastoor: Well, that was a nice answer, but I'm not sure that it really was the one that would match my question.

Why does the minister continue to exclude paid farm workers from workers' comp coverage? What is the rationale behind that decision?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, work environment on a farm obviously differs a great deal from that in any industrial setting. A farm is also a place where people actually live and raise children, and it's a community, so applying strict industrial standards to a farm setting is not exactly comparable. But there are reports that we are looking at. You must appreciate the fact that both the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and I had a chance yesterday to take a fresh look at it. Wait and see what we shall do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. In constituencies like Strathmore-Brooks we don't have the big corporate head offices; however, we do have numerous oil companies that provide employment and know the importance of investment in this industry. When will service companies in southern Alberta see a positive boost or see a return to busier times as a result of this competitiveness review?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my previous answers, what government does is create the environment for investment. You know, one of the things that has happened over the past year was that we have brought forward interim measures that have in fact actually got many of the companies that the member refers to back in business. What last week did was make those programs permanent so that the investment community could look at Alberta with some predictability into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We hear a lot about how the Alberta royalty framework caused so much of the downward spiral in the oil and gas industry, but we also know there was significant downward pressure impact from the global recession. How is the competitiveness review going to move this industry forward in the face of continued global recession, and how are those two factors connected?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. You know, nobody, including the critics who sit in the right-field bleachers, could have predicted the global recession that we had and certainly not gas prices at $4 and $5. Even with the changes that were announced last week, it is going to continue to present a challenge to our industry. But I believe that the history of our industry in this province is one of resilience, and they will persevere.

Mr. Doerksen: Again to the Minister of Energy. Although the competitiveness review is trying to place Alberta in a more favourable position, our neighbouring provinces have surged ahead in attracting investment and even offer a royalty holiday, for example in Saskatchewan. How do we compete with that, and what are our tactics to ensure that we succeed?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there's more to competitiveness than just royalties. I mean, Alberta enjoys a number of advantages over some of our neighbouring provinces, like no sales tax, like lowest personal and corporate income tax. Also, we have an infrastructure into our resource fields that is second to none. I saw last week where the British Columbia government had to in fact put in an incentive so oil companies could actually build roads into the northeast shield gas plays. However, as I said earlier, it is Albertans that will benefit as a result of what we announced last week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Activity-based Funding Model for Hospital Care

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Activity-based funding is a new funding model that Alberta Health Services is going to implement across the province. The reported plan is that it will be implemented for continuing care facilities starting April 1, 2010, just a couple of weeks from now. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the drive to activity-based funding being led under the Alberta Health Services superboard or under the Department of Health and Wellness?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of funding models out there which hon. members here would be familiar with. One of them is block funding, or global funding, which is where we're coming from. Another one, which we're moving a little bit toward in this case, is called activity-based funding, and I think it warrants even further discussion. It's basically based on volume and on type of service. To my knowledge it's primarily Alberta Health Services that is pursuing this, with the intended first target group being long-term care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. According to the organization chart of the Alberta Health Services superboard – this chart was just updated a couple of weeks ago – the lead position for activity-based funding for continuing care is vacant. Apparently, no one is going to run this new funding model. Is the minister aware of this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I am aware of is that the board and its CEO, Dr. Duckett, are looking at this matter and hoping to start that particular process as part of the five-year funding plan. Now, if that's different than what I understand it to be, then we'll clear that up in a hurry, I'm sure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. Given that five of the six positions for activity-based funding under Alberta Health Services are vacant, how can this minister have confidence that Dr. Duckett or the board is going to begin ramping this up? How do they have any capacity to run this system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, you don't recruit people to those kinds of senior positions overnight. It takes some time, it takes some doing, and there are processes and protocols to be followed. Secondly, now that we know that we have a secure, stable, and predictable funding plan coming very soon, that too will help take some pressures off the system and allow for better planning going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Royalties for Unconventional Oil

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you well know, the oil sands are an important resource, a resource that has resulted in an unprecedented investment, an important driver of the economy in Lesser Slave Lake, so I was so pleased when the government announced the findings of its conventional oil and natural gas competitiveness review as well as the necessary steps to position Alberta as one of the most competitive North American destinations for energy investment. To the Minister of Energy: why didn't the review also address the competitiveness of Alberta's important oil sands resource?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess, two reasons, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the oil sands in Alberta really don't have a lot of significant competition worldwide. We would say that the new royalty framework that was introduced a year ago or so has actually worked very well relative to the oil sands because as you will recall, there were a lot of issues around the 1 per cent royalty rate in the oil sands. That has actually turned around now. As a result of the new royalty framework the revenue to the province actually now exceeds natural gas.

Ms Calahasen: How can the minister then be sure that the oil sands royalties are hitting the sweet spot? I know about sweet spots.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm not sure of the definition of sweet spot, but I will say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things that the government will realize at the end of this fiscal year is a significant increase primarily for two reasons. One is that bitumen prices internationally have risen dramatically, thereby higher royalties to the province, but also production has increased significantly more than anticipated in both oil sands and in situ. Those are all very positive factors.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister. Oil sands still face regulatory hurdles. Will the minister please tell me: will the regulatory review be looked at in the future at all?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the member raised a very good question, Mr. Speaker. While the competitiveness review was about conventional and unconventional oil and natural gas, the work that we're going to be starting relative to streamlining the regulatory process will include oil sands and in situ as well because there are a number of hurdles and barriers that were put up that have built up over the years, and we want to ensure that it's as efficient to do business in all sectors of the oil industry in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Centralized Cytology Lab Services

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to create the problems and start the fires and then claim how wonderful they are after they put them out and say: we're here to save you. Alberta Health Services disbanded the council of lab leaders. Is the minister of health aware of the reports submitted by the pathologists in the southern zone of AHS on their request for the proposal?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the important thing here is that cytology services will continue to be provided. In fact, there are some new and improved methods of doing that. What we're talking about is the analysis part, not the actual treatment or testing part. It's the analysis part that's being consolidated. All of southern Alberta is going to be done now in Calgary, and that's what he's referring to. That should provide for faster results and more expedient results.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they're undermining our future.

Does the minister feel that pathologists and cytologists of the southern zone are wrong in their concerns on lowering quality assurance, loss of expertise, as well as no correlation plan for future biopsies and treatments in the local areas?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the intention is to actually provide faster access to the results of those tests. That's part of what Health Services is trying to do, a faster turnaround time to get the results back and also at a lower cost, which I know the hon. member would likely support.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, and some of those reports are very much questioning whether it will lower the cost.

Will the minister do the right thing and return the decision-making to the local level and to those who are competent to make the decisions concerning quality and efficient health care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member as I can assure all members in this House and all Albertans that nothing will ever be done that compromises in any way patient safety, patient quality. In fact, quite the opposite: we're working hard to improve where we can and to provide faster, better, more solid services province-wide.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked the Minister of Infrastructure when the review of the Swan Hills treatment plant will be released. All I got was data on PCBs, so I'm going to try again. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why has it taken a year for the minister to assess "what the assessment is saying"?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear again that the Swan Hills Treatment Centre has done an excellent job in treating the hazardous waste of this province. I want to say to you as well that every five years we do an assessment of that treatment plant to see what the future of that plant should be, and that is in the process. We are reviewing not only what is taking place in Alberta but what the needs of Albertans are and what the needs of industry are as far as the plant is concerned. It is a very much-needed plant at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again. The minister keeps on saying: we are assessing; we are assessing. When will the minister stop the secrecy surrounding Swan Hills and release this report?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure exactly what the hon. member expects us to do. I want to say to you that it is very important to assess. It is very important to look at what is necessary for the future direction of this province. This government is not going to stand up and say, "Yes, we're going to do this," and then backtrack in a different direction. It is clearly important that the direction that is taken is a well-thought-out focus.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister should get off his assessment and provide some action. This treatment plant cost $22 million to run last year. Albertans want a government that is accountable. So why won't the minister release the review?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what this government is: accountable for what we are doing. It is in our budget. It is in our focus of what is important in the Swan Hills treatment plant. The review is there. We are looking at it; we are assessing what is necessary. I will reiterate again the importance of the plant and the importance of Swan Hills, looking at it as a utility and not as a profit-making institution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Private Postsecondary Institutions

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have heard a great deal over the recent weeks about the government's tuition caps for universities and colleges. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: does the tuition cap apply to the private institutions like CDI or DeVry or Academy of Learning, for that matter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No. The answer is that our tuition fee policy applies only to public institutions. Private institutions are governed under a separate act. They provide different options than our publicly funded institutions. For some students these institutions offer quick, employment-ready kind of training and provide very focused options for students. It's all about choice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: does the government provide private postsecondary institutions any operational funds?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, again the answer is no. The over 150 private vocational colleges in Alberta do not receive government operational grants like we provide to the universities and colleges or Campus Alberta. However, we do provide financial assistance to students attending private schools in a lot of cases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: what role does your ministry play in relation to these private schools?

Mr. Horner: It's a good question, Mr. Speaker, given the funding questions previously. Our role, really, is to ensure that programs offered by private vocational institutions comply with the Private Vocational Training Act. The primary objective of the act is to provide a measure of consumer protection for students that are enrolled in these licensed private vocational training programs. So we review and approve and license the programs of those private vocational providers. We have over 800 licensed programs at the 150 institutions in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mill Woods.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike their public school counterparts, private schools and religious charter schools exclude students by charging tuition or by applying faith-based restrictions. Recently MLAs were recipients of a letter dated February 12, 2010, from Don Zech, public board chair of Palliser regional schools in which he suggests, "The timing is indeed ripe for a discussion about formerly private schools joining the public system as alternative programs." To the minister: does the minister not see this as a case of private schools not only wanting to have their private pudding but eating our public's, too?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, when a private school decides to fold its tent and join the public system as an alternative program, it becomes part of the public system.

Mr. Chase: Does the minister agree with the chairman's justification that "the full instructional grant does, however, help them offer competitive wages and benefits so they can hire the best teachers for the job at hand"?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. When a private school joins the public system, becomes an alternative program under the public system, it becomes part of the public system. In that case, the public board becomes responsible for the educational opportunities there, responsible for the quality of instruction there, responsible for reporting to the public with respect to the results there. That's a very good thing in many circumstances. Those that choose not to join the public system continue to be responsible in their own way for the funds that are being provided. But when the private school joins the public system, they become public.

Mr. Chase: And they continue to charge tuition while getting full per-pupil funding.

Given that the underlying principle of public schools is inclusion regardless of culture, creed, ability, or economic status, why is the minister permitting "faith-based alternative programs" to hide under the public school banner and receive full per-pupil, taxpayer-funded instructional grants?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm astonished at this hon. member. Normally he's suggesting that we shouldn't be having private schools, that we should be having just a public system. What we have in Alberta is a very strong education system because there's a lot of choice. That choice is very extant in the public system in Alberta. Faith-based alternatives in the public system are working very, very well in Edmonton and Calgary and right across the province.

Where the hon. member goes wrong is when he suggests that you can still charge a tuition fee to somebody who's attending a public school. That's not on in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta Schools Alternative Procurement Program

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are paying interest on top of the principal on the first ASAP project, which will provide 18 new schools in Edmonton and Calgary by September 2010. To the Minister of Education: is our government actually saving any money over the 30 years of this agreement?

Mr. Hancock: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Independent third-party studies by PricewaterhouseCoopers demonstrate that the first phase of our design, build, finance, and maintain K to 9 schools will actually yield a cost savings of $97 million over the traditional build approach. Similar net present value analysis demonstrates that our design build bundle for the four ASAP 2 high schools will save us $40 million. We anticipate similar savings for the other ASAP 2 schools. The bottom line is that we wouldn't proceed with building under a P3 unless it was a better deal for Albertans.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: given the current economic climate is there any possibility that some of the planned projects under ASAP 2 might be cancelled or deferred?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the current economic climate makes it better for building. The prices are better, the cost savings are better on the various capital projects. We have committed to Albertans that we'll build the 14 new schools in time for the 2012-2013 school year, and we will deliver on that commitment. The contract for the four new high schools has been let, and those are actually starting construction as we speak. With respect to the balance of it the bid process has closed. I can tell you that the results are good. I can't tell you those results because there's a time frame to work out the agreement with the successful contractor.

Mr. Benito: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that these schools are being built as a P3 project, what assurances can the minister give that they will be completed on time and on budget and, more importantly, that quality will not be sacrificed in order to achieve cost savings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to assure everyone that ASAP 2 is on time and on budget. The schools are 80 per cent complete and will be delivered by June 30. The contract includes a penalty clause for completion date. Quality is this government's number one priority, and this is in the contract as well. The standards, designs ensure high quality and equality across the province, and there's a 30-year warranty that guarantees that quality is maintained and also ensures the use of the best material and innovation practices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Closures

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Waves of potential school closures are washing over communities in Edmonton and Calgary, but this government is looking the other way, claiming that the decisions are for the school boards to make. The truth is that, yes, city core neighbourhoods are losing students to the suburbs, but provincial policies are making the situation worse. To the minister: how are municipalities supposed to keep families in the city core when this government has a utilization policy that pushes schools out of these neighbourhoods?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, under the Municipal Government Act when municipalities plan for their future neighbourhoods, they're requested to consult with school boards serving those neighbourhoods to plan appropriately. One would suggest that that type of consultation and process should also work with respect to the redevelopment of area structure plans in the inner-city neighbourhoods or the areas that are not in the suburbs. That type of consultation has to work between local governments because local governments, the municipalities and the school boards, are the ones that know what's in the best interests of their communities and for their students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The utilization formula is out of sync with the Learning Commission's class size recommendations. One of the Minister of Education's predecessors conceded five years ago that there were problems with the utilization policy. Why is the minister still standing idly by while outdated bureaucratic formulas are being used to hurt communities in Calgary and Edmonton, perhaps permanently?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, what's outdated is this member's understanding of how we do capital. In fact, utilization is a very minor part of the capital formula with respect to where new capital is allocated and how modernizations occur. What's most important is the health and safety of students. What's next important is the need for spaces in places where students live. Those are the things which go into the question of where we allocate capital. I'd like to say that there's enough capital to do everything we need all at once, but there isn't, so it's very important for school boards to use their infrastructure in the most effective way possible so that all of their students have a good educational opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The first schools to close are the big ones, whose hallways are considered instructional spaces. Infrastructure grants were tied to student enrolment five years ago, a change that also punishes schools the moment students begin to flow out of the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. Please, please, please. Remember, you signed the paper. No preambles. You signed the paper.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I will use that in the future, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No. Now. Get to the question.

Mr. Chase: Will the Minister of Infrastructure re-examine this policy before it accelerates the decline of city core neighbourhoods in our major cities?

The Speaker: Perfect.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, school boards should and school boards are making appropriate decisions with respect to where the schools are and what resources they need for their students. I would say that it's very irresponsible to suggest that a school board is closing a needed school because the hallways are too wide. That would be ridiculous, and I don't believe it's happening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are livestock producers, and I continue to hear their concerns about the U.S. mandatory country of origin labelling issue and its negative impact on our producers. I understand that there was a recent meeting in Washington: the Council of the Federation, elected officials from the provinces along with Ambassador Doer and Tom Vilsack, the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. My first question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Was there an opportunity at this meeting to discuss the negative impact of this mandatory labelling policy, and do you sense any possibility of movement by the Americans?

Ms Evans: It's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. No, I don't sense any movement at all. It was an excellent meeting on a Sunday morning for an hour and a quarter, 90 per cent of which was consumed by talking about the impact on both sides of the border, not only to our agricultural producers but to producers south of the line. The Secretary of Agriculture indicated to us that this Congress was not prepared to move on the country of origin labelling. We're hoping that we'll be able to, through our Minister of Agriculture . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: My first supplemental is for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. I've heard talk about a Canadian WTO trade challenge on this issue. Can you advise us of the status, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The World Trade Organization is in the process now of selecting the members for the dispute settlement panel that's going to judge this. I think that it's worth noting that Mexico has also initiated a challenge to the same rule, and the panel will hear both cases. I believe that that's going to be helpful, that two countries are actually challenging this as a violation to the North American free trade agreement that we've been operating under.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. For the same minister: what are we doing to help our producers compete in this difficult economic climate – I mean, over and above the challenge – and importantly, what kind of input are we getting from our producers?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I think that this challenge and the situation that we face now points out more than we've ever seen before that we cannot rely solely on the American market for trade and that our priorities need to be focused in other directions. I mean, we need more trade with Asia and many other markets. We also, I believe, can improve dramatically our domestic markets, and I think, even though it's voluntary now, that I would like to encourage Canadian retailers to actually advertise the fact that they have Canadian products on their shelves. Because of the quality we produce, I think Canadians would prefer to buy Canadian.

English Bay Provincial Recreation Area

Mrs. Leskiw: The campground and boat launch at the English Bay recreation area have been closed for almost three years now due to archaeological work taking place on the site. While the boat launch reopened in the fall of 2009, the campground facility remained closed. A constituent of mine visited English Bay several weeks ago and was not able to access because of the blocked entrance. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. If the boat launch is open, why are my constituents still unable to access it?

Mrs. Ady: Well, hon. member, I'm happy to report to you that staff has assured me that the boat launch is now open. They will still find some barricades around the recreation area because we're getting ready, as you know, for a campground redevelopment. I am happy to say that the archaeological work is complete, and the boat ramp is open.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question is to the same minister. Since the archaeological work is finished and the boat launch has been opened, why does the campground still remain closed?

Mrs. Ady: Well, hon. member, we're in consultation right now. We're redeveloping the campground. It's going to have, like, 185 new stalls – there are going to be new ones that will allow for the larger recreation units that you have today – trails, and a lot of things. It's under consultation right now as to what that should look like.

Mrs. Leskiw: That's really great to hear.

My last question is also to the same minister. How long will it take to redevelop the English Bay campgrounds, and when can my constituents expect to see it open to the public and enjoy it?

Mrs. Ady: Well, we're hoping to have those consultations completed by April, so stayed tuned. We think we're going to begin that redevelopment this spring.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 114 questions and responses today. Nineteen members were recognized. Of the 19, nine were members of the Official Opposition, two of the Wildrose, one of the ND, and seven government members.

Very briefly we'll continue with our Routine and Members' Statements, but first of all, one update. To the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. You were instructed by the Assembly last Thursday to do something today. Have you fulfilled your direction?

Home-baked Pies for MLAs

Ms. Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I've had many challenges in my political life, and I've usually come out pretty good. On Thursday you challenged me to accomplish a task, a difficult one, yes. Well, I've done almost exactly what the House had asked. I've delivered a pie for every MLA in the Legislature, but because of our strict rules I was unable to get some of the orders that were given – cream, lemon, or flapper pies – because we are not able to transport them that far without having them in a cooler. I would like everyone to have a taste of the home-baked pies, and I'd ask the hon. members here to help me change those regulations so that they are more friendly for our home cooks and our home-baked goods.

The Speaker: Where do the members obtain these pies that you've brought in?

Ms. Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, they're in their respective areas, so you can pick your pie up.

The Speaker: We'll proceed in 15 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Foster Care

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am excited and honoured to rise today to speak about Alberta's caring and dedicated foster parents. Thousands of children and youth in provincial government care, who often face significant challenges in their lives as a result of being abused or neglected, benefit each year from the love, guidance, and support of these devoted Albertans.

I have heard comments in the past from some hon. members about the training and screening of foster parents and potential foster parents. This is something that is very personal to me and my family. As some of you may know, my wife and I are considering becoming foster parents ourselves. We have already taken part in the initial training required for all foster parents, and I can personally attest to how extensive the training is. Every person who is even considering becoming a foster parent must take eight 3-hour sessions of orientation training. Topics include child development, special needs of children in care, and the duties and responsibilities of foster parents.

All new foster parents must also take additional training covering topics such as guiding the behaviours of children, maintaining a child's culture, and working co-operatively with the birth family. As part of this screening process potential foster parents have to successfully complete a criminal record check, child intervention check, and provide three personal references and a medical reference.

In addition, a qualified professional, usually a registered social worker, assesses the family's dynamics and suitability to parent through a safe home study. Only after potential foster parents have been fully trained, screened, and licensed can foster children be placed in their home. After that, additional training and monitoring takes place. Mr. Speaker, the training and screening process for all foster parents is extensive and rigorous, as it should be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Capital Region Board

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to bring attention to the long-range plan that will help ensure the continued strength and sustainability of Alberta's capital region. Two years ago our Premier made the decision to create the Capital Region Board and task it with creating a long-range growth plan. The mandate for the 25 municipalities was to formulate a plan to deal with the four areas: regional transit, regional land-use planning, a regional geographic information system, and a regional housing plan.

Mr. Speaker, having a strong, co-ordinated, long-range growth plan is in the best interest of all residents within the metro area. Everyone benefits when you eliminate duplication, plan for essential infrastructure, and attract investment. The board completed its far-sighted plan in December, and now, after a provincial review, it has been approved by government. The region, which expects about 600,000 new residents over the next 40 years, has a solid plan to manage the impacts of development, promote efficient use of land, and, mostly, provide for land conservation and stewardship.

This is a tremendous opportunity to plan ahead in order to get it right, Mr. Speaker. We have seen a united group of local leaders put in a tremendous amount of work to fulfill its mandate. Heartfelt thanks for that. The government, led by Premier Stelmach, is to be commended for wanting to improve long-range planning for infrastructure and services that capital area residents need most dearly. It's about looking ahead and building upon the 21st century collaboration model that can be an example to other jurisdictions within other provinces and across Canada. Now it's time for action to capitalize on current and future economic opportunities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Value of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Energy recently announced changes that will advance Alberta's competitiveness in the upstream oil and gas sector in order to regain lost ground. These changes will ensure Alberta will be the location of choice for investors for decades to come.

After hearing from constituents ever since I was elected as the representative for Calgary-Lougheed, I understand very well the impact of oil and gas industries on the economies of our city and our province. This sector not only fuels our economy; it also defines us as innovators, entrepreneurs, and people who believe in the free market and meet challenges head on.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's prosperity is founded on the abundance of its natural resources, and today Albertans enjoy benefits from discoveries and decisions made decades ago. Energy accounts for 30 per cent of our total GDP, and as of January 2009 Alberta's mining, oil, and gas sector was responsible for close to 150,000 direct jobs for Albertans. On top of that, almost 1 in 7 Albertans is employed in the energy sector, and it's estimated that every job in this sector is supported by two additional jobs in support industries.

Future Albertans, our children and our grandchildren, will be the benefactors of the decisions that we make today. By ensuring Alberta becomes more competitive and remains competitive, even greater rewards await the people who live and work here tomorrow. Every additional dollar invested in energy will increase by close to one and a half times, and it's expected that 8,000 more jobs will be created in 2011-12 and 13,000 more jobs annually thereafter across the economy. Over the next 25 years the Canadian Energy Research Institute estimates that conventional oil and gas development in Alberta has the potential to add $2.5 trillion – that's with a "t" – in new economic activity.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to seeing the improvements in Alberta's conventional oil and gas sectors and, ultimately, the continued prosperity they will bring for all of Alberta. Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2009 activities. Additional copies of the report have also been provided for all Members of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is on behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Riverview. This is in regard to questions the hon. member asked earlier in question period. This tabling is copies of the Alberta Health Services organizational chart dated March 4, 2010, showing five of six positions related to activity-based funding as being vacant.

My second tabling today is correspondence from an individual in Spruce Grove, Michele Ford, who is writing to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly, encouraging hon. members to please support Motion 504, the anaphylaxis policy that's going to be discussed after 5 o'clock this afternoon.

My last tabling is a letter I have with permission to table from Colleen McDaniel, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar. It is regarding Alberta Hospital, and she is writing to encourage everyone to ensure that it remains open and viable.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. I'm tabling a letter from my constituents Robin and Jean Crawford that was sent to the Minister of Municipal Affairs requesting full disclosure of the formula/regression used to calculate their property taxes. They have been told by assessors and the manager of tax assessment north Calgary that, and I quote, the formula/regression is proprietary information and not to be released to the public. End quote. But the Crawfords believe that this provincially approved formula/regression information is essential in order to properly consider their tax assessment and that it be released.

The Speaker: Okay. This is tablings, not Ministerial Statements.

Mr. Chase: My next tabling is a copy of a letter sent to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports by Calgarian Pat Corbett, whose two sons with autism are receiving supports that help them be vital, contributing, successful, and happy members of society. Mrs. Corbett wishes to convey that impacts from what appear to be small cuts on paper make huge differences to people with disabilities and their families, and she is asking that we all be the voice for these Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, my third tabling is the letter I referenced in QP from Don Zech, chair of Palliser regional school boards, to all MLAs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, five copies of an article by Frank Atkins and Marcel Latouche entitled The True Size of the Provincial Deficit, in which they say that the true deficit is $7.6 billion, not $4.7 billion, and chastise the government for not being transparent enough with their record keeping.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 20 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The second tabling I have is the appropriate number of copies of letters from two Edmonton public school board teachers, Gordon Hepburn and Lynne Kaluzniak. Their letters describe the positive experience they've had in their classrooms recently when their class sizes were low, and Lynne Kaluzniak, in particular, discuss some very negative experiences where they were forced to teach in a classroom where the class size was well above what was recommended. They hope that funding will remain in place to prevent class sizes from increasing again.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, responses to questions raised by Mr. Taylor, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie; Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; and Mr. Chase, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on February 17, 2010, in the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs supplementary supply estimates.

Long-term Care Wait-lists

- Q10. Mr. MacDonald asked on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.
On February 4, 2010, how many Albertans were on wait-lists for long-term care placement both in hospital facilities and in the community, and what is the age range for these individuals?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a reasonable request, and it is information that certainly would be needed to come up with a good policy or a good plan to deal with the whole issue of individuals in this province who really need long-term care but who are occupying acute-care beds in the hospital.

Now, whether we look at the annual report of the Department of Health and Wellness, the first volume, with the performance measures in it, or we look at Alberta Health Services' own annual report for 2008-2009, we'll see where this is quite an issue. The government has had a very, very difficult time dealing with it. I believe it came up in question period last week as well. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo asked some questions around it.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, at the end of March 2009 there were 550 people assessed as ALC and awaiting placement for long-term care facilities in acute-care beds and 675 waiting urgently in the community. There were 150 ALC clients waiting for supportive living in acute beds and 400 waiting in the community. All clients waiting for acute and urgently in the community will be reassessed, according to Alberta Health Services, in two to three months using the new admission guidelines that they have, and it is expected that the numbers will reverse, with the majority waiting for supportive living.

That's information that's provided in Alberta Health Services' annual report, and it's sort of a reminder to us all just what kind of a problem we've had with the lack of long-term care beds. We know it's been an ongoing issue which the government has had a great deal of difficulty in trying to resolve. To find out how many Albertans are on the wait-list for long-term care placement after what is described here, that is not an unusual or unreasonable request. Which hospital facilities in which communities these individuals are also waiting for: that is not unreasonable or unusual information to request. It would be interesting: what is the age range for these individuals?

I know we have a lot of reading material with the other written questions, but certainly Written Question 10 is appropriate, it's in order, and I would respectfully request that the hon. minister of health provide that information to us without any ifs, ands, or buts or any amendments to the written question as we had requested. I think it can be provided. I don't think the February 4, 2010, deadline is burdensome. I do not think that at all.

In conclusion, I would urge the Minister of Health and Wellness on many issues to please provide the information as requested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness to move that Written Question 10 be amended as follows: by striking out "on February 4, 2010" and substituting "as of December 31, 2009" and also by striking out "and what is the age range for these individuals?" The new question then would read as follows: "As of December 31, 2009, how many Albertans were on wait-lists for long-term care placement both in hospital facilities and in the community?"

Mr. Speaker, the rationale for this is that the specific information requested with respect to the age range of individuals waiting for long-term care placement is not available from Alberta Health Services. Further, the latest wait-list figures released by Alberta Health Services are from the third quarter of the 2009-2010 fiscal year, and as at December 31, 2009, there were 742 individuals waiting in acute care and 999 individuals waiting in the community for long-term care placement.

I would urge that the House support this amendment as I have tabled it. Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. With regard to the amendment our concern is that the government has substituted a date as well as not providing us with information requested. Between December 31 and February 4 a ministerial change took place. The Premier seemed to be indicating a different shift with a new minister, a new direction, the possibility of improving our so-called superboard organization. That's why we wanted to see as of February 4, 2010, whether these shifts in ministers and, potentially, shifts in attitude or in ideology were going to equate with a shift in system results. That's the reasoning behind the February 4, 2010.

Now, I appreciate that the hon. minister speaking for the minister of health indicated that, apparently, the system doesn't track age. I would suggest that given the fact that seniors are considered bed blockers, a very derogatory term, and there are over 600 of these individuals waiting for placement, we should be able to know their ages.

Another concern about not knowing age is the fact that there are a number of individuals with disabilities, young people who, unfortunately, because we don't have the appropriate accommodations for them, find themselves shoulder to shoulder with in some cases individuals old enough to be their grandparents or great-grandparents. The age of the individuals who are caught in so-called transit is extremely important, and that's why we requested those specifics, the February 4, recognizing the ministerial changes, and the ages.

I would suggest to the hon. member that if he could pass on to the minister of health the importance of tracking ages in the future so that that information could be supplied, that would be much appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to rise just briefly, of course, to suggest why it is that we think this information is very important and to express my concern about the second amendment that's being put forward by the government.

For obvious reasons there has been a tremendous amount of discussion in the public about the provision of current and future long-term care placements throughout our province. It is an issue that has reached crisis proportions, so we need enhanced transparency on this issue. It shouldn't simply be a function of written questions in this Legislature. Rather, we should be getting this information updated on a monthly basis on a website. We should be able to track this information as quickly as the ministry gets it because this is how you ensure public accountability, the accountability of the government to the public, whom they serve.

I am quite concerned about the fact that the ministry suggests that they don't know the ages of the folks that are on the waiting lists for long-term care. Our caucus went across the province last fall having public hearings on the issues of health care, and we heard from people in every community about their concerns with respect to long-term care. One of the things that we heard about consistently in community after community after community was that the acuity of the people in long-term care is growing increasingly more onerous in terms of the services that those people require in long-term care.

Now, obviously, age is not a clear indication of the acuity of the long-term care client. However, it is one indicator. I find it really difficult to believe that the ministry is not tracking the characteristics of the people who are waiting for long-term care, whether it be a question of weight – quite honestly, we've heard that the size of patients is actually going up quite dramatically and that that's creating a huge stress on the people who work in these facilities – also the issue of mental health and also the issue of their physical state.

I'm quite shocked at the notion that this information is not something that the ministry has at its disposal, and I think it's very deeply concerning that they don't have that information. I think we should all be worried that the ministry does not have this information because it strikes me as being very unlikely that they're going to be remotely successful at addressing this crisis without some basic information like this at their disposal.

As we already heard about last week, we had an unfortunate incident north of the city in one particular long-term care facility. We know there are problems in long-term care. Last year our caucus on a daily basis in this Legislature tabled reports from people who worked in the long-term care settings outlining infractions, violations, safety concerns, and patient care concerns in a number of long-term care facilities across the province. Several months later, after we started tabling those concerns, the minister in charge of seniors had still not had any of her staff go out to any of these places to check on these concerns that were being raised.

These are really, really important issues that are facing Albertans every day, not just the number of long-term care placements available but the quality of long-term care that's being provided in the places that are there. How this issue can possibly be managed without this government having access to the information on something as simple as what the age range is for the typical long-term care patient waiting to get into long-term care is very, very concerning for me, and it should be of great concern to all Albertans. I would certainly urge this government to move forward very quickly in enhancing the information that they provide on a regular and updated basis in terms of the demographic characteristics of patients who are currently not receiving the care that they need in the setting that they need in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, shall I call the question?

Speaker's Ruling Consuming Food in the Chamber

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on to the next one, I recognize that a number of hon. members are at a disadvantage today in understanding the pie police problem. Normally the rule is that there's no food allowed in the Assembly, but because of the endurance of the members currently in the Assembly I would invite you to bring in a piece of the pie to understand the issue and have the pie in the Assembly.

We'll continue on with our work. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincially Funded Affordable Housing

Q27. Mr. MacDonald asked on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What percentage of affordable housing units that have been built with provincial government funding since January 1, 2007, is currently occupied by low-income tenants?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This, of course, is from my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Certainly, we all know, unfortunately, that the list of individuals with low incomes who are interested in affordable housing units continues to grow and grow and grow. We do know that hardly a Friday goes by, constituency day, while we're in session that we don't get a phone call from one individual, sometimes two, sometimes three, requesting information regarding the list: who is on it and why and how come their names cannot be added to the list of individuals who are looking for affordable housing at a very, very modest price.

Now, we do know that this government has made some strides, to their credit, to make more affordable housing units available not only in Edmonton and Calgary but throughout the province.

Now, when you compare budgets of the last, say, five years with what was occurring 25 years ago by the same party, while they've been in power for close to 40 years, one would see, if my examination of public accounts is correct, that we're actually spending less now than we did 25 years ago on affordable housing initiatives. Certainly, not only is there a need for affordable housing units, but there's also a need for housing that's dedicated specifically for individuals with very low or very modest incomes.

That's why the hon. member who is our Housing critic is requesting this information. Simply put, of all of the housing units that have been constructed, what percentage, if any, has been set aside to be occupied by individuals who are looking at a very long waiting list? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it's a lot longer than 18 months, and in some cases it's a lot longer than even two years, depending on some of the individual circumstances. Some individuals I have talked to – I've been astonished – have told me that it's over three years for some of them.

So this is an important question. Hopefully, we can get an answer straightaway from the government, and I look forward to reading it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise just to respond to this question, but before I go ahead, I do want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for his comments. While we have some policy differences from time to time, we do have the same goal of combating homelessness and also providing people with low-income housing, and I want to thank him for that as well. I won't speak long, as I do want to get a piece of pie.

This question should be rejected on the grounds that the data, in fact, is not presently available due to the timing in the question. Now, over the past two years, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has funded the development of an additional 6,000 units of affordable housing. Given that the initial allocations to affordable housing projects were approved by my ministry late in 2007 and 2008, it's premature to provide these occupancy statistics.

I further submit, Mr. Speaker, that from beginning to completion affordable housing projects take an average of 2.5 to three years to complete. There is, in fact, that type of lag time there. The majority of funded projects are just nearing the completion stage now, and reporting is required within six months to one year of the said completion date. About 1,250 units have been completed to date, and I can further advise this House that we expect to have meaningful occupancy statistics in time for the Housing and Urban Affairs ministry's 2010-2011 annual report. Data about the occupancy rates will be updated annually thereafter.

I further submit, Mr. Speaker, that Budget 2010 will make a total of $88 million available through RFP, which is the request for proposals process, to support the development of affordable units for low to moderate income Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the capital grant program is based on a partnership model which leverages private-sector dollars with taxpayers' money. I've always submitted that this is more efficient. Community partnerships allow us to build more units with less money and tailor projects to meet the unique needs of the community. We're on track to add a total of 11,000 units by 2012, something I'm very proud of as the responsible minister.

Having made my submissions, I would recommend that this House reject this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. While I appreciate what the hon. minister has provided in the way of information, I would have appreciated even more an amendment rather than an outright rejection. If there are limitations, as the minister partially spelled out, on the information that's available, it would be nice to have a report on the information that is currently available. As I said, this could have been amended rather than outwardly rejected.

The other concern in rejecting the number of affordable housing being built is the comment about the proof being in the pudding. It should be in the pie, I guess, today, Mr. Speaker. Without having the details – it's wonderful to hear about projections, and we thoroughly hope that the 17,000 or the 20,000 affordable units will be up and running and that Habitat for Humanity, for example, and the Calgary land trust will be part of the solution. I would also add that it's important that a percentage of these units be not only affordable but accessible. I hope the minister will take these concerns into account.

Also, the minister mentioned that there are annual updates. If that is the case, I'm not sure, then, why we couldn't at least have had the annual updates for 2007, for 2008, and for 2009. Obviously, we're just into the year 2010, so that would provide some difficulties with completely built structures at this point.

As I say, to outwardly reject the question that was asked instead of amending it provides us with little to no information. So back up the projection with the pie proof, please.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you want to close the debate? Call the question?

Mr. MacDonald: Call the question, please, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 27 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Employment of Registered Nurses

Q36. Mr. Chase asked on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.

What was the percentage of registered nurses that worked part-time, full-time, and casual in Alberta from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010?

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment suggests that it would strike out "April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010," which is very specific, and substitute the generic "in 2008 and 2009." Now, the reason for this specificity of the dates is that an awful lot has happened in Alberta in terms of the health direction that we've taken. We've gone from 17 boards to nine boards down to one superboard, and with each of those moves there has been a significant attrition rate in nurses. Therefore, getting the specifics is extremely important.

Now, Stephen Duckett has caused a lot of consternation for not only nurses but recipients of health care in this province. He suggested, for example, that nurses were taking too many coffee breaks, and then he turned around and said: well, they had to take those coffee breaks; they were mandated. He suggested that some of the jobs that nurses were doing were below their job description, that they could be fulfilled by LPNs, for example. So Dr. Duckett seems to have gotten very involved in the micromanaging of the nursing profession. You would think, given that degree of oversight and micromanagement, that the specific request, “from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010,” could be taken into account.

Also, almost a year ago we were looking internationally to fill 1,700 nursing positions. Then, come the completion of our session in June of 2009, all of a sudden we had a surplus. So the mathematics behind how many nurses we have, how many are doing the various positions – part-time, full-time, and casual – in Alberta, given the specified times, are extremely important. We’re at a point now where nurses are entering into contract talks with the province, and the way the province values, accounts for, remunerates, and differentiates the different levels of nurses working part-time, full-time, and casual in Alberta is extremely important.

Recruiting nurses is, obviously, something very important to this government because the postsecondaries – Grant MacEwan here in Edmonton, Mount Royal in Calgary, of course the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, and the University of Alberta – have all increased the number of positions for training nurses. You would think that if we’re going to subsidize their tuition to this degree, we would have a sense of how many we actually needed and in which particular category they fit; hence the time frame of April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010.

Again, this has been a tumultuous time in Alberta’s health care delivery system, and as such those specific details on nurses are extremely important. After the last nursing purge in the 1990s the number of nurses that were working full-time and part-time was drastically reduced, and we’ve been trying to catch up ever since. Young nursing graduates are in a lot of cases favouring part-time work because they are seeing their older counterparts wearing out on the front lines doing double shifts. They want to have a quality of personal life as well as the accredited public service life, so they are looking for that balance.

Things have changed from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010. The dynamics are changing, Mr. Speaker. That’s why my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview was so specific in his request.

Thank you for allowing me to point out why that request is important to us as a caucus.

The Speaker: Deputy Government House Leader, you’ve already participated.

Mr. Denis: This is Written Question 36.

The Speaker: Oh, sorry. No, you haven’t yet. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We’ve had some good pie this afternoon.

I’m rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to move an amendment to Written Question 36 striking out “from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010,” and substituting “in 2008 and 2009.” This would make the amended written question to read as follows: “What was the percentage of registered nurses that worked part-time, full-time, and casual in Alberta in 2008 and 2009?”

The rationale for that is that the only database that contains employment status of all registered nurses, referred to as RNs, is the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, otherwise known as CARNA. CARNA requests employment status from its members annually each September as part of their licence renewal process.

Mr. Speaker, CARNA published the following information for 2008 and 2009: RNs working full-time as of September 30, 2008, 38.1 per cent; as of September 30, 2009, 42 per cent. RNs working part-time as of September 30, 2008, 42.5 per cent; as of September 30, 2009, 37 per cent. RNs working casual as of September 30, 2008, 13.2 per cent; as of September 30, 2009, 11 per cent. RNs classified as “other” as of September 30, 2008, 6.2 per cent; as of September 30, 2009, 10 per cent. For the purpose of my comments, “other” is defined as employed in another industry, looking for employment in nursing, not employed and not looking for employment, on leave, or no response.

I would recommend that all members support this amendment to Written Question 36. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, I would have questions. I can appreciate where the hon. member from the government caucus is coming from. Specific to February 4, 2010, again, that doesn’t seem reasonable. The amendment, I think, I would be quite agreeable to if it stated the fiscal year 2007-08 and then again 2008 through 2009, just like the annual reports that are presented.

3:30

Now, I’m a little bit confused here. Is this the calendar year, or is it the year of the annual reports? If we look at the latest information presented to this House by Alberta Health Services, we can clearly see – and I’m looking at the Calgary health region, because they break it down by region. Next year whenever we get this report, I don’t know how they will do it, but I, for one, have an opinion that it will be certainly not as detailed as this, and it should be. RNs, RPNs, grad nurses: in the Calgary health region there were full-time equivalents of 6,329. We know what the base salary was, other cash benefits. We can see also what it was the previous year, in 2008, which would be the fiscal year 2007-08, March 31 year-end, as this year it would be March 31, 2009. So that’s in the Calgary region.

But there’s no breakdown on whether any of these registered nurses worked part-time, full-time, or in casual positions. There seems to be some confusion in the public because certain members of the government maintain that many of the nurses are working on a part-time basis. So the actual number would be very important for the public debate. When you look at what’s provided in the annual reports, it wouldn’t be unreasonable to suggest that this information is somewhere at the click of a mouse because you can get a lot of things in an annual report if you look.

I’ll just have a quick check of Capital health. We can see the number of full-time equivalents or employees for RNs, registered psych nurses, and grad nurses. That’s broken down as 5,813. There is a separate item for licensed practical nurses. It goes on, and they give you the total compensation package, whatever, but again no number on how many worked full-time, part-time, and casual. Certainly, that information, as I said earlier, is very important in the public health care debate in this province.

I think I could possibly be persuaded to support the amendment if I was sure it was fiscal year 2007-08 and, again, 2008-09, year-end March 31, not the calendar year as suggested in this amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional speakers on the amendment?
Should I call the question?

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 36 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Overtime Hours of Registered Nurses

Q37. Mr. Chase asked on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.

What was the total number of overtime hours worked by registered nurses from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010?

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the backdrop for this question is a very tumultuous time back in 2009. There was considerable discussion and worry over the closure of the Alberta Hospital. There was similar concern over the closure of a total of approximately 300 beds in the Calgary and Edmonton areas. Again going back to Dr. Duckett, Dr. Duckett was suggesting that nurses by working so many overtime shifts were costing the system a tremendous amount of extra compensation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I was doing outreach along with my colleagues in Calgary and Edmonton, in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, when we door-knocked, we ran into a number of nurses, and it seemed that the majority of those registered nurses were regularly performing double shifts, which of course would mean that the second of their two shifts was at an overtime rate. It wasn't something that they were doing out of a desire to increase their bank accounts. They were doing it out of necessity and to avoid burnout on the parts of their fellow colleagues.

We haven't asked for the age of the nurses serving, but we are finding that we are retaining a significant number of our nursing population, and there is a fear amongst those senior nurses that the young nurses are not coming on and of the speed to replace them. Out of a sense of lifelong and professional duty of service to their patients and their concern for their well-being the nurses are staying on longer, and because of a nursing shortage in this province they're forced into overtime circumstances.

Now, again, the timing is extremely important because things changed dramatically between April 1, 2008, and February 4, 2010. As I mentioned earlier in the discussion of Written Question 36, a number of nurses entered into the postsecondary system and began their training. A number of nurses, for example, this spring will be graduating but not finding even part-time employment in this province. Therefore, the money we'll have spent to train them, while it will have benefited the nurses to a degree as they head for employment in B.C., Saskatchewan, or, as was the case with the last tremendous exodus, down to the States – we will have lost not only our investment in their training, but we'll have lost their human resource, and we will continue to be in the position of nurses having to do double shifts, which is hardly advantageous to themselves or to their patients.

This time period is key to our request: April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010. So when the amendment is suggested – what was the ratio of overtime hours worked to straight-time hours worked for registered nurses employed by Alberta Health Services in the former Capital, Calgary, and David Thompson health regions for the fiscal year 2008-2009? – while a correction was made noting the fiscal year, because that was one of the problems that we had with the amendment for 36, that does not take us to our current situation, where . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the difficulty the chair has is that you're talking about an amendment that has not been introduced yet. The chair has no idea whether or not the amendment will be introduced. It may very well be that the arguments put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity will be so swaying that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader will not bring forward an amendment. We can't really debate something that hasn't been introduced.

Mr. Chase: I very much appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to actually expedite the discussion by referencing an amendment which everyone in this House has a copy of. I would not want to prolong the process, but I do appreciate your clarification and thank you very much for the opportunity.

Mr. Denis: Without further ado, Mr. Speaker, I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to move an amendment to Written Question 37. The amendment is striking out "total number of overtime hours worked by registered nurses from April 1, 2008, to February 4, 2010," and substituting "ratio of overtime hours worked to straight-time hours worked for registered nurses employed by Alberta Health Services in the former Capital, Calgary, and David Thompson health regions for the fiscal year 2008-2009." Thank you.

The rationale for that is that the total amount of RN overtime hours must be viewed in context. Alberta Health Services employs approximately 75 per cent of RNs, and the remaining RNs work for a multitude of employers who may not report to government. Alberta Health Services is not able to easily pull data for the requested time frame for the entire province, Mr. Speaker, and the RNs that are in fact working in the former Capital, Calgary, and David Thompson regions represent approximately 80 per cent of RNs working directly for Alberta Health Services. RN overtime is 4.1 per cent of the total RN hours worked. RN hours worked: 17,701,730; and RN overtime hours worked: 724,529.

I would urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I find this a very interesting amendment. I believe the hon. member indicated that 80 per cent of the RNs employed are in Calgary, Capital, and David Thompson, which is sort of the Edmonton-Calgary corridor, essentially. This information is all we need; however, when one looks, again, at last year's Alberta Health Services annual report, you can see where there are significant amounts being spent in some of the other former RHAs on wages, whether it be overtime or straight time, for registered nurses in the Peace Country, Aspen health region, Northern Lights, certainly the Palliser region, and East Central. East Central was the one health region that was to co-ordinate all these events that led up to the formal legal creation of Alberta Health Services. So to provide only three regions I think is unsatisfactory.

Whenever one looks at the David Thompson region – and I'm surprised that the member was so able in pulling out the statistics. I could stand corrected on this, but if you look at the Public Accounts from last year – I brought this up in budget estimates recently, and I didn't get a satisfactory answer – the David Thompson health region, the total grant, Mr. Speaker, was omitted or missing from the blue book. It is there certainly in previous years. It's there, David Thompson health region, each and every year before the last issue of the blue book, but it's not there. I don't know how the amount would fit in, but the member was very quick at providing that information through Alberta Health Services. That is an alarm for this member that that information in Public Accounts is not there, but the hon. minister seems to be able to access this information quite quickly. That's one point.

When you look again at what is suggested here, the ratio of overtime hours worked to straight-time hours for registered nurses employed by Alberta Health Services in three former regions, I think that is a significant change from what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was looking for. He was looking for the total number of overtime hours. That should be available as well, and it is a request that, hopefully, we will receive other than this amended version for whatever reason the government wants to provide to us. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview certainly asked a valid question, and that we're getting just a partial answer is disappointing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others on the amendment?

Then we'll proceed with the question.

Motions for Returns

[The Clerk of Journals/Table Research read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Edmonton Security Operations Branch

M10. Mr. Hehr:

A return showing a copy of any reports, travel manifests, correspondence, expense claims, job listings, or operational guidelines that outline the day-to-day duties for officers of court and prisoner services, or the security operations branch as it is now called, who provide dedicated judicial security services to the judiciary in the Edmonton Law Courts.

Calgary Security Operations Branch

M11. Mr. Hehr:

A return showing a copy of any reports, travel manifests, correspondence, expense claims, job listings, or operational guidelines that outline the day-to-day duties for officers of court and prisoner services, or the security operations branch as it is now called, who provide dedicated judicial security services to the judiciary in the Calgary Courts Centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mountain Pine Beetles

M1. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. Hehr that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents, including studies, reports, and environmental or economic impact assessments, relating to the effects of the presence of mountain pine beetles in Alberta forests from fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2008-2009.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just for the benefit of people tuning in and wondering about the definition of motions for returns and written questions, I would just suggest that these are pieces of information that are requested because no minister could potentially be expected to have this information, sort of thumb sketches, while standing, and therefore this information is requested.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I'm not going to be causing further confusion by talking about what was asked for versus what was given. But let me read into the record what was asked for. My hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo requested the following as Motion for a Return 1:

that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of . . .

This is very important.

. . . all documents, including studies, reports, and environmental or economic impact assessments, relating to the effects of the presence of mountain pine beetles in Alberta forests from fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2008-2009.

Now, in making that request, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was not seeking out the proprietary ministerial notes that belong, as I say, completely to the minister. But what the government has offered is that instead of providing all the information . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Once again, nothing has been offered. You are being offered an opportunity to move a motion. I've accepted that. That's what the Assembly is listening to. There is nothing else that has happened yet. So proceed with the offering given to you.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll look forward to discussing the amendment, as you suggest, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Motion for a Return 1 be amended to read, "a copy of studies, reports, and environmental or economic impact assessments relating to the effects of the presence of mountain pine beetles in Alberta forests from fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2008-2009." The amendment is based on a couple of reasons. First of all, the request for all documents is too broad and consists of a large volume of records, that could be quite overwhelming. The department would like to provide the member with a reasonable amount of meaningful material respecting the intent of his request.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to the amendment, the difference between all and some is very much open to interpretation. As elected members of this Assembly we need to be operating on the same basis of understanding and information as the hon. members of government. Regardless of which side of the House we are sitting, we're all expected to represent our constituents to the highest level possible, and if we don't have the information necessary to provide that advice or to form judgments, then not only are we left out of the information cycle, but also our constituents are left out of that information cycle.

The pine beetle is a menace, and I am pleased that the government, in managing the pine beetle, has seen fit to place selective logging, cutting, and burning as one of their highest forms of combatting the beetle. They've also used the pheromone way of trying to distract pine beetles and capture them and prevent further damage. I credit the government with the forms of combatting this scourge and attempting to prevent it from hitting the boreal forests to the rest of Canada, east of us.

However, the minister says: "We'll give you some of this information. We'll give you a few studies, maybe the odd report, and, you know, if it's a good day, we'll provide some environmental and economic impact assessments, and you should be happy with that information." The government could save the opposition and the general public a whole lot of requests by simply putting this information on the website. If it is so cumulatively excessive as to be denied in a request, then I would suggest that we have as Alberta taxpayers paid for this research. We've paid for these reports and studies and the impacts, and that should be common knowledge. It shouldn't be something that has to be requested as a motion for a return. I would encourage the hon. minister, who is new to this portfolio, to follow the transparency and accountability mandate issued to him by the Premier and make as much of this information available through the web to all Albertans.

Thank you. I also, Mr. Speaker, a teacher of a teacher, appreciate the clarification on the amendment process.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now, I can offer the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity an opportunity to close debate, but I suspect I should just call the question.

[Motion for a Return 1 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Sour Gas Release in Lodgepole Area

M2. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports and data regarding the environmental impacts of the gas release near Lodgepole on December 16, 2009.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. May I speak to that?

The Speaker: Oh, yes. Absolutely. You have the floor.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We've had a series of gas releases throughout Alberta's history, the most serious ones having to do with the release of hydrogen sulphide. This is of considerable concern to all Albertans and, obviously, the people living in the vicinity affected by that Lodgepole blowout. Now, I don't have anything, Mr. Speaker, suggesting that this was amended, the request. All I have, I gather, is an outward rejection of the request. Therefore, I would ask: why is this information not being provided to the opposition? Why is it not, through the opposition's request, being provided to the residents of the Lodgepole area or to all Albertans?

Our economy is highly dependent on gas. I know the play has changed with the advent of shale, but the amount of gas that we have in Alberta, which is of the highly volatile sour gas nature, is a tremendous concern. Without receiving that background information, how do Albertans prepare for the advent of blowouts?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We've had reason to be concerned. For example, at the Shell plant around Pincher Creek instead of the gas being ignited – this was sour gas – the ignition system twice failed. We are left to wonder what happened with the Lodgepole circumstance. Unfortunately, I gather by the government's response that not only will we be left wondering, but all Albertans will be left wondering.

This is not only an economic issue. It's a safety issue. It's an environmental issue. That's why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre requested those documents. Not only will I be interested; the hon. member will be interested and all Albertans whose livelihood depends to a large extent on the reserve of gas and who want to be able to live in a safe province where we enjoy the fruits of our labour, where we enjoy our God-given nonrenewable resources but don't fear the possibility of blowouts such as the Lodgepole that we have requested information about dating back to 2009.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't say I'm looking forward to the reason for rejection, but at least it'll be on the record.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his comments about this gas release. The gas release obviously is a concern to the government itself, specifically the gas release that occurred at a sour crude well site operated by Daylight Energy Ltd.

A bit of background, Mr. Speaker. The release of gas happened about four kilometres west of Lodgepole, and I'm happy to say that no injuries occurred and no evacuations were in fact required. Of course, the Energy Resources Conservation Board was notified promptly of this incident, and they responded immediately and, in fact, worked diligently with the company and emergency response teams to successfully contain the gas release.

Following this, as is normal practice, Mr. Speaker, the ERCB launched an investigation into this matter. In the course of reviewing this motion, I have consulted with the hon. Minister of Energy, and I have been told that the ERCB is in the process of, in fact, preparing a report about the Lodgepole incident. This is expected to be made public in the summer of this year. I would also expect that issues and information referred to in this motion would also be addressed in this report.

At this juncture, Mr. Speaker, it would be premature of me to release information on behalf of the Minister of Energy which is part of an in-progress investigation by the ERCB. I would therefore urge all members to reject this motion. I will add, however, Mr. Speaker, that the office of the hon. Minister of Energy would be happy to forward the completed report to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity when it becomes publicly available and table it in the Assembly at the first possible opportunity.

In conclusion, I would urge all members to reject this motion with respect to the gas release. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the question.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Natural Gas Valuations

M3. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta finance regarding natural gas valuation for the fiscal periods 2010-2020.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We can look at the fiscal plan with the budget, and we can see where there is a natural gas price or a benchmark through to 2013. It certainly indicates that natural gas prices would or should increase to around $6.59 or $6.60. That would be a considerable increase from last year at $3.99 for the Alberta reference price.

We're in a fiscal year where for the first time that I can recall – and it may be the first time ever – royalties from bitumen or upgraded bitumen, synthetic crude oil, will be larger or greater than royalties that are collected on natural gas. We do know that the amount collected in royalties from natural gas over the last number of years has been significant, and this motion would provide information that is necessary, the information that Alberta finance is using not only for its price benchmark through to 2013 but on what exactly is going to happen for the next decade.

We realize that there is a $4.3 billion deficit. We heard in question period, of course, earlier that it's much higher than that, over $7 billion. Time will tell who was right on that, but I do know that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development worries day and night about the deficit and the consequences of the deficit. A lot of this, of course, is not only caused by a lot of wasteful spending by this government but also by the price of natural gas or the lack of a price.

The Americans, what they're going to do. Now, the Premier today talked about shale gas and the implications of that to our province, and the Premier is absolutely right to be concerned about this. There have been significant discoveries of shale gas in various places in the lower 48 states. This motion, Motion for a Return 3, certainly would reveal exactly what Alberta finance has done in regard to the significant discoveries of shale gas in the lower 48 states.

Now, U.S. domestic natural gas production, Mr. Speaker, has increased 6.8 per cent since 2005 despite significant decreases in offshore production. Offshore production is in the U.S. Gulf of Mexico. We also know that the share of U.S. gas production from unconventional sources has increased steadily since 1990, and gas shales have been a major contributor to this growth. The Barnett shale production in Texas was 94 million cubic feet per day in 1998, and it has increased by more than 3,000 per cent to over 3 billion cubic feet per day in 2007. There also have been other discoveries: the Haynesville, Fayetteville, Woodford shales, and of course the largest one that I'm aware of is the Marcellus basin, which incorporates much of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York state. It even goes up under Lake Erie through Ohio. I think it catches a part of southwestern Ontario.

But there are reports by Navigant that the total production for these shale plays, these big seven shale plays, in the next decade, the next 10 to 15 years – and that's why it's important that we get this information we're requesting in Motion for a Return 3 – could be between 27 billion and 39 billion cubic feet a day. If that happens, that's going to have a major implication on the price we get here in Alberta when we export natural gas. It's also going to have an effect on natural gas as a feedstock for the oil sands development and also for electricity generation and also for the petrochemical industry. I think they will be positive developments, but whenever you consider how much money has been raised in the past through natural gas royalties, this production valuation, if it does come true in the lower 48 states, is going to have a significant influence on us. Now, certainly, the same corporations that are active in the lower 48 states are busy here as well.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that in many of these states, particularly in New York and Pennsylvania, we're looking at a 12 and a half per cent royalty rate for this kind of gas. Motion for a Return 3 could certainly give us an indication, if we were to receive the information, just exactly what the province expects to collect in royalties as a percentage of production or the value of production. I would calculate that on my own if I had to, but those states are looking at a royalty rate of that nature.

Now, things are always bigger in Texas, and whenever you look at royalties, it certainly is true. The royalty rate in Texas on shale gas as a rate and a per cent is 25 per cent. Royalty rates were more common at 20 to 25 per cent about five years ago, but most state-owned lands are not considered to be among the best sites for shale gas development. That's one of the comments that's made in this document I had from America.

Now, the royalty rates on private lands in Texas: again, they're big. Things are bigger in Texas. It's 25 to 28 per cent, and the bonus bid per acre – and this is going back to 2008, at the height of the boom – was between $10,000 and $20,000 per acre. In New York state it was $2,000 to $3,000, as was it in Pennsylvania. The royalty rates on private lands there were 17 to 18 per cent for Pennsylvania and 15 to 20 per cent for New York. But that's on private lands; that's not on Crown land.

Just as a comparison, Mr. Speaker, in 2008 if the bonus bid on private land in Texas ranged between $10,000 and $20,000 per acre, in the same time period in this province the average price per hectare for 2008-09 was $420. It would be roughly half, slightly less than half of that for an acre, so we could say $200. That's a very interesting comparison at this time.

Now, with Motion for a Return 3, if it was to come as we had requested, there is a lot of information that landowners in this province who have mineral rights would be very keen to read and determine for themselves whether they're getting the best deal possible or not. Certainly, whenever you look at the financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that are or were prepared by Alberta finance regarding natural gas valuation, I would really welcome that information, and I expect to get it.

Thank you.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Many of these topics were discussed at some conferences that I attended last year, when I was parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy. I have spoken with the Minister of Energy, and this broad-ranging motion is requesting all financial forecasts, economic trend data, and recommendations that are involved with natural gas valuation for a specific period in time.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a few words about forecasting the price of commodities such as natural gas. I wish I could say that this is, in fact, an exact science. We all know that it is not. It is a process that involves large sets of market data well beyond estimation and approximation, but that does play a major factor in that as well.

Mr. Speaker, part of the issue is that much of the information received by Alberta Energy to produce these estimates is provided by parties such as banks, finance-orientated businesses, market research corporations, consultant agencies, and world financial centres. This information is proprietary. It's disclosed to the government under conditions of legal confidentiality, which I can appreciate needs to be respected. One of my concerns would be that this motion as it stands may be easily interpreted so that the door is opened to this data.

As I've spoken to the Minister of Energy, he's indicated to me that he provides information to the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance and Enterprise which is in fact utilized in the preparation of the provincial budget and a three-year fiscal plan. Essentially, this would be an analysis of the aggregate proprietary information that I referenced earlier in this address. This information becomes summarized in such a way that it does not refer to an individual or to a company. Rather, it becomes publicly available in the provincial budget and the Ministry of Energy's business plan. I would suggest, with respect, Mr. Speaker, that if this hon. member is interested in the government's forecasting and trending for natural gas, he should review these documents because that's where the information is.

I would advise all hon. members, accordingly, to reject this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. While I understand that the nature of sort of the in-house discussions between various companies in the field and the government is of a proprietary nature, unless we understand the premise under which the government is going forward and making its financial decisions on royalties, then how can we possibly move forward? What's the premise upon which we're making our forecasts?

Gas has played such a significant part in terms of billions and billions of royalty dollars that we've received up to this point, and our dependency on our primary source of royalty revenue, being gas, has changed dramatically. Not so long ago we thought that the last easy gas was gone and that we would be encroaching into the foothills, that we would potentially be interrupting our underground aquifers, our basins, and we had to balance how valuable this gas was in comparison to the risks that would be taken to extract it.

Now, we've seen terrible examples in the States – in Wyoming, in New Mexico – where in going after coal-bed methane, which is a type of gas that belongs in the shale group, disastrous circumstances occurred in terms of underground aquifers. No amount of gas revenue will make up for the loss or the poisoning of wells and the loss of those aquifers, so the importance of coming up with a premise, a go-forward, is extremely important.

We are fortunate to have in this province our backup of the Alberta oil sands, and fortunately through scientific technology, innovation, research we are moving away from the traditional shovel method, with its accompanying tailings ponds, to the less environmentally destructive in situ. But we're still involving water, and the balance between the reward and the price of the commodity, which now seems to be in abundant supply, and the risk to our future development and economy in terms of the water risk has to be taken into account.

I think Albertans need assurances given the fact that the government has redone its royalty review six times and seems to have gone right back to the last days of the Klein empire with this most recent result. Yet what are we basing our decisions on in terms of the quantity of available gas and where it will be processed? We've had several members ask questions about, for example, the upgrading of bitumen or the upgrading of gas.

Previously a lot of our gas has been upgraded in Texas and in Illinois. That should be part of the premise, the projection as to what will be our capacity to not only acquire this gas but also to refine it. Instead of Chicago, Illinois, taking out the butane, taking out the propane, taking out the methane, and getting a much higher price for these parts of the natural gas refinement process, we need to know: where is the government going ahead? We basically need to know: does the government have a plan to go ahead, and if so, on what basis are we moving forward?

Gas no longer plays the role it once did. But as we move on, as the request says, towards 2020, it is possible that given our extraction methods and the speed at which governments need to make up for their recessionary blunders, which are particularly obvious south of the 49th, they're going to go after that gas with the greatest of speed possible to pay down their budget deficits in the trillions of dollars.

We have an opportunity to potentially learn from their mistakes, as I mentioned, in Wyoming and New Mexico. But if we don't know what the formula is and what the projections are, then how can the minister of finance or the hon. President of the Treasury Board account for the importance of gas in future budgets. It's impossible, we know, to crystal ball exactly what percentage we're going to get in the future. But it seems that the process has been delayed until 2011 and we can't even get a forecast into what we're expecting to receive in terms of projected gas revenue for the next year, never mind where we're going in the next 19. If we don't start thinking beyond our recession and our bust-boom scenario, and don't have, "If this happens, we'll do this; if that happens, we'll take these methods" – if we don't have these premises, then how can we possibly make budgetary projections?

I thank the hon. Speaker for allowing me to participate in this debate. I know that with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's extensive experience in industry, he has a much better understanding, but even he with his wide knowledge is looking for clarification from his government colleagues.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Hon. member, being a boilermaker doesn't make me an expert, but as a taxpayer in this province and as a citizen of this province it makes me very interested in this.

Now, the Deputy Government House Leader in rejecting this motion indicated that there were many proprietary and confidential estimates made, but I would ask him to respectfully look at page 140, the economic outlook, in the government's fiscal plan for the current budget cycle that we are debating. You can see where there's a natural gas price benchmark in Henry Hub numbers, not Alberta reference price numbers, and it comes from a wide range of national forecasting agencies for a period of four years. They are not concerned about hiding. Their projections are here for everyone to read. It's not a confidential deal between themselves and Alberta Finance or the Treasury Board or the Department of Energy.

The national forecasting agencies include the Conference Board of Canada, Global Insight, the centre for economics. Again, they go almost halfway through the period which I'm requesting in Motion for a Return 3.

Banks and investment dealers. For instance, we've got BMO Capital Markets, Credit Suisse, CIBC World Markets, J.P. Morgan, National Bank Financial equity research, Peters & Co. Limited from Calgary, RBC Capital Markets, Scotiabank, Toronto-Dominion Bank. These are the banks and investment dealers. The idea that this is confidential and private information is totally wrong, Mr. Speaker.

Industry analysts – U.S. Energy Information Administration, GLJ Petroleum Consultants, Sproule Associates – they're all willing to put their estimates in the public domain. So for them to do that and for the hon. minister across the way to suggest that somehow the information that I'm requesting is proprietary or confidential is flat out wrong, Mr. Speaker. That's no reason in the world to reject this very good motion, and I hope the government changes its mind and presents that information. They're the ones that are running the $4.3 billion deficit, not anyone else.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the question.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton Implementation Team

M4. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports and recommendations prepared by the Alberta Hospital

Edmonton implementation team between October 6, 2009, and January 18, 2010.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I don't believe that there was a more emotional circumstance that rallied people to this cause since, basically, Bill 11, which set to undermine universal health care, that got people so concerned. It wasn't just Edmonton residents that were concerned about the potential closure of Alberta Hospital. There were patients suffering from mental illness throughout the province that had the potential of ending up at Alberta Hospital, which, due to its rural setting, offered healing in just its location, never mind the professional practices which were incorporated in the facility.

This is a very specific, very short timeline request: October 6, 2009, to January 18, 2010. A terrific amount of attitudinal change occurred. To the government's credit they appointed the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to chair the committee to reconsider the wisdom of closing all the beds at Alberta Hospital. I credit the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for doing the research that he did that obviously had an impact on his fellow and female colleagues in terms of reversing a very detrimental decision. Now, that decision hasn't been completely reversed because there is still talk about using that facility partly, I believe, in a long-term fashion and taking some of the more senior individuals suffering from mental illness and removing them from that facility to another facility that is currently being built, of a much more urban nature and closer to the Edmonton hubbub of activity.

As I recall, several thousand signatures were tabled in this House by members of the Alberta Liberal Official Opposition, by the member from the Wildrose – there was just one member at that time, initially – and also by our hon. members from Alberta's third party, the New Democratic Party. The point is that we saw on television ads, we heard on the radio, there were numerous op-ed pieces, numerous articles written about the negative impact of the closure of Alberta Hospital. It was based upon the concern for that potential closure and the relief felt when the closure was not going to be as dramatically carried out that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview requested a copy of all reports and recommendations prepared by the group that was activated under the then minister of health to review what, admittedly, was a bad decision.

Now, we're hoping that the government learned something from that bad decision that could potentially be applied to other institutions. The current minister of health has indicated that he's reconsidering the closure of 300 beds, cumulatively, in Calgary and Edmonton. I wonder: was his decision in part founded on the findings of the Edmonton implementation team for Alberta Hospital?

This government, since our Premier was appointed leader, has emphasized transparency and accountability, yet . . . [interjections] Well, selected. Yes, I should say selected. Selected by members of the Conservative Party to lead the government. He was initially rejected, but in the second round selected, and then he was elected to another term in his constituency.

Anyway, the point being: he has emphasized transparency and accountability. He is your leader. Follow-through with what he has requested. Follow-through with what we've requested. Show us that there is really a plan.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to speak briefly on this motion. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for his comments, specifically about teachers. You know, my mother was a teacher for 33 years, and she taught me very well.

Moving forward, Mr. Speaker, I cannot recommend acceptance of this motion, the rationale being that the team's report with recommendations to Alberta Health Services already is available publicly. It was released as a backgrounder on January 18, 2010, and the news release is available at www.albertahealthservices.ca/1324.asp.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to conclude the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the references to where this information is available. It would have been a whole lot simpler and this debate would have been considerably shorter if you'd just provided that information as requested in our motion for a return.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the question.

Acute-care Bed Closures

M5. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all stakeholder consultations, reports, research, or recommendations that resulted in the recent decision to not close 290 acute care beds throughout the province.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm doing so well today in terms of having motions for returns rejected.

Albertans are suffering from whiplash. They don't know what the next move is from this government. We have one minister that rides a black horse throughout the province, closing hospitals in his wake. Then we have the minister on the white horse saying: "Oh, no, that was a mistake. We are going to reopen. We're not going to close those 290 beds. We're not going to play musical beds anymore at the Rockyview. We're not going to play musical beds at the Peter Lougheed. We're not only going to not close those beds; we're going to keep them open." All hail the new minister of health for having changed the circumstance not one bit. The beds were open; they stay open. We celebrate the fact that they're open, and there you have 300 complements that are currently unstaffed.

It was based on that whiplash reaction that we requested the reasoning behind the change of attitude. So we got a new minister. What happens – heaven forbid – should the minister of health not be able to continue his duties and we get another minister? Heaven forbid that we get the old one back and have: oh, no, today we're closing the beds. We are asking on behalf of all Albertans to give us a sense and give Albertans faith that there is actually a plan, that when the government makes a decision, it's based on research, that it's based on a collaborative preface, that it isn't simply: you know, I got up on the right-hand side of the bed today, and I think I'll close 290 of these complements. What's the reasoning? Albertans want to know. We want to know as their representative.

I look forward to the hon. member enlightening me as to where this information can be found and why we're not being entitled to receive it on behalf of all Albertans looking for this information.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for that rather impassioned speech. I trust that this member doesn't have an issue with new ministers per se.

My comments will be rather brief as well. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, there are no consultation reports. On January 20, 2010, the health minister announced that plans to close acute-care hospital beds in the Edmonton and Calgary areas would be put on hold pending a review. The same minister indicated that since Alberta Health Services announced their plan in September 2009, progress has been made in identifying efficiencies to reduce costs in administration, and the minister has made a decision based on this positive development.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of the member's comments, with respect, were baseless conspiracy theories. I speak quite often with health care professionals, one in particular in this city, and I see no evidence of that at all. I would ask this House to reject this motion.

Thank you.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

M6. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Ms Pastoor that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports, studies, and memoranda prepared by Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development since January 27, 2009, that contemplate the inclusion of paid farm workers under provincial workplace health and safety legislation.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good thing that I don't take these defeats personally, or I could no longer live with myself or my colleagues.

Now, I have a horrible feeling, Mr. Speaker, that I know the answer. The answer is probably: well, we haven't contemplated anything in terms of protecting farm workers. We're going to, as we heard today, put out I think it was something like $680,000 in terms of an education program to prevent farm injuries, that are occurring on the basis of two individuals being killed per month and hundreds being injured. You know, I may have actually guessed or read the hon. member's mind as to the answer to this question, but if that's the case, that's a pretty sad answer.

Farm workers – and I'm talking about those beyond the family farm, and we lose a lot of family members on farms as well. More and more of agriculture is becoming commercialized, industrialized, and more and more workers are paying the price of that commercialization with lack of protection for the individuals involved.

We've had a judge in our latest review of the death of an individual, Kevan Chandler, look at recommendations for individuals being covered by compensation. Not only is it the compensation for the injured worker, but the compensation for the widow or the husband and the children left behind is extremely important. Without that compensation it's just absolutely cruel.

In terms of workmen's compensation or legislation, we have pages and pages of fine print of individuals and workers, not only in the agricultural sector but across this province, who are not covered by workmen's compensation. If they're injured, whether it's a repetitive stress injury or whether it's a very traumatic injury, they're not covered. So we said: well, let's start. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said: let's start.

Given the judge's recommendations, given the number of deaths, given the number of injuries, has the government decided to take action and contemplate the inclusion of paid farm workers under provincial workplace health and safety legislation? As I began, all I've heard is a few thousand dollars on an education program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's concerns. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to move an amendment to Motion for a Return 6, which reads as follows: by striking out "all reports, studies, and memoranda" and substituting therewith "the report titled Stakeholders' Consultation: Occupational Health and Safety, prepared in November 2009"; secondly, by striking out "prepared by Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development" and substituting "for Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development and Alberta Employment and Immigration"; and thirdly, by striking out "since January 27, 2009, that contemplate" and substituting "that addresses in part."

I have a hard time looking at that myself after those amendments, but this would read, Mr. Speaker:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the report titled Stakeholders' Consultation: Occupational Health and Safety, prepared in November 2009 for Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development and Alberta Employment and Immigration, that addresses in part the inclusion of paid farm workers under provincial workplace health and safety legislation.

Thank you very much.

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To the hon. Deputy Government House Leader: will that amended motion be tabled here in the Assembly in the next day or perhaps Wednesday if it is to be accepted by the House?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on the amendment.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will ensure that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development does so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Also, to close, Mr. Speaker, unless there are others who wish to participate in the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the amendments page has been circulated. You should have it on your desks.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Obviously, we're pleased to receive some of the information, but what the government has done in this amendment is be very selective. We have no idea through their selectivity if they are not just going to simply hand us information that supports their position, that this isn't a concern. We've asked for a variety of reports, and the government has said: well, we'll give you Stakeholders' Consultation: Occupational Health and Safety, prepared in November 2009 for Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development and Alberta Employment and Immigration, that addresses in part – so they're giving us partial information. They admit that they're giving us partial information, and we're supposed to say: well, thank you very much for giving us a small part of what we've requested.

You've changed the date. You've changed the reports that were going to be given to us, that were requested, and instead of providing all the reports and the studies and the memoranda, you're going to give Albertans one. At some point – and it's probably, Mr. Speaker, going to take a minority government to achieve it – the transparency and accountability that this current government professes will actually occur.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment?

The chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

Asset-backed Commercial Paper

M7. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any other documents prepared by the Alberta Treasury Board regarding asset-backed commercial paper for the 2010 fiscal year.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, whenever we look at this whole issue of asset-backed commercial paper, we're going back a number of years. We can almost go back to 2007, when there were caution lights on this whole investment scheme. Certainly, in 2008 we look at the report of the Auditor General and some of the questions he had around asset-backed commercial paper at ATB Financial, the treasury management of that. I won't spend too long on the facts that were presented to the public through the Auditor's report, but certainly asset-backed commercial paper is a short-term investment, usually maturing in less than a year but often in as little as a month. Asset-backed commercial paper is backed by a variety of assets, such as mortgage loans, car loans, credit card balances, and other interest-bearing assets, and/or by synthetic assets such as collateralized debt obligations, or CDOs, or credit default swaps. The investor buys the paper for less than the face value and holds the paper until it matures, at which point the investor receives the face value of the paper or the instrument. The difference between the purchase price and the face value of the paper is interest income to the investor.

Now, we do know what's happened at the Treasury Branches, which I mentioned before. We also know that the University of Calgary, the University of Alberta had an exposure to this. We know the details of the Montreal accord, which, hopefully, will resolve this issue, and hopefully there will not be any more significant losses to this province. I hope there are no more significant losses throughout the investment community in North America or internationally, but I'm not so sure. However, I think it's reasonable to request a copy of all the financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any other documents prepared by Treasury Board regarding this issue for the fiscal year 2010.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I urge the members to reject this motion. The Ministry of the Treasury Board is responsible for meeting the legislative commitment to be accountable to Albertans through the publishing of annual audited financial statements. Any changes that are coming to the government's investments in asset-backed commercial paper will be disclosed in the government of Alberta's 2009-10 annual report, which will be released in June 2010. However, Treasury Board is not responsible for preparing financial forecasts and economic trend reporting on government investments in asset-backed commercial paper. As such, we do not have any requested information.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We're fortunate in this nation, in Canada, that we did not get bitten to the extent our southern neighbour did by the subprime mortgages, which form an awful lot of the phony finances of asset-backed commercial paper. That said, we did get hit. AIMCo got hit, the independent financial arm of the Alberta government. Alberta Treasury Branches got hit by asset-backed commercial paper. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned what happened to the University of Calgary's endowment fund. In discussions with the hon. minister of advanced education, innovation, and technology he explained that one of the reasons that his colleagues weren't in favour of endowment funds was the lack of security within the investment environment, and he didn't believe that creating endowment funds was even a partial solution.

This province along with the province of Quebec is resisting very aggressively the notion of a national securities regulator, yet the protection afforded to Albertans by our own securities regulator did not prevent the millions of dollars lost in asset-backed commercial paper. The government, which is the backup for the Alberta Treasury Branch – and the government makes the investments for a series of funds, including the heritage trust fund – is reliant on making sound investments.

So when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asks for a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trends reporting, and any other documents prepared by the Alberta Treasury Board regarding asset-backed commercial paper for the 2010 fiscal year, you would hope to be getting something along the lines of: been there, done that. These are the wise preventative measures that we can assure Albertans that their investments, whether their own investments or those by the government, whether directly, as is the case with the heritage trust fund, or through AIMCo or their finances being looked after by the primary rural bank, the Alberta Treasury Branch, are secure. Unfortunately, the hon. member, the President of the Treasury Board, has said: we're not going to provide you with that information.

Mr. Snelgrove: Ask the right department.

Mr. Chase: Well, I would certainly ask you on behalf of all Albertans to request it from the ministry of finance if that's the right department. But, please, don't sidestep the financial responsibility by saying that you're asking the wrong ministry. If that's the sole reason we're not receiving this answer, then it's a sad circumstance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Long-Term Investment Strategies

M8. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any other documents prepared for the Alberta Treasury Board or Alberta Finance and Enterprise by the Alberta Investment Management Corporation concerning long-term investment strategies for the fiscal periods 2010-2020.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I might be in for more bad news from the hon. President of the Treasury Board, but I certainly would like to move Motion for a Return 8, please.

Mr. Speaker, I think this motion is certainly timely. We look at any number of investments that have been made on behalf of citizens of this province by the government. We look at what has happened with investment income in the past whenever we failed to achieve our targets, and we were basically short of cash and in deficit. We rely, whether it's right or wrong, on the investment return, for instance, from the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for a certain percentage of total government revenue.

There are other pools of investment as well. Long-term investments include: the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and the associated endowment funds, global equity markets, interest, and exchange rates. Also hopefully included in this would be the amounts that are held as cash in the general revenue fund and also amounts – and I'm sure they do – in the sustainability fund before that money goes. What exactly are the long-term goals or strategies of AIMCo?

Now, I was surprised to realize that AIMCo wasn't selected by Alberta Health Services to be their investment desk of choice, if you could use those words, Mr. Speaker, to invest any short-term cash that they may have. They are doing their investing through I believe it's a branch of RBC, the Royal Bank of Canada, and it's a decision the board has recently made. I'm quite surprised that they didn't have the confidence in Alberta Investment Management Corporation that this government does. They are looking at a significant pool of cash to manage over the next decade. It would be standing at $69 billion right now, and I certainly hope it increases beyond that.

Certainly, that is the intent of our motion. I will await the government's response, but I don't see any reason in the world why we should not be able to get that information.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise just to respond to Motion 8. AIMCo was established to be operationally independent, and in order to avoid a conflict of interest, it does not participate in government policy-making. So it would be inappropriate for them to be in fact providing policy advice of this nature to the government or another body.

In the normal course of business AIMCo frequently produces financial forecasts and reports economic trends and analysis, but these are provided to AIMCo's clients, which include without limitation the boards of public-sector pension plans, the government endowment funds, and others. With respect, Mr. Speaker, neither the Alberta Treasury Board nor Alberta Finance and Enterprise has requested any such documents to be provided exclusively to them for any special purpose such as long-term investment strategies for the fiscal periods between 2010 and 2020.

Mr. Speaker, in the normal course of their business AIMCo frequently produces financial forecasts; however, these are intended to be widely used by, again, all of their clients. Moreover, as I mentioned, AIMCo has to be independent. For these reasons neither the minister nor I believe that this motion should pass, and I would therefore ask that all members vote to reject Motion 8.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I'm sorry to hear of this rejection. It concerns me tremendously that the government by having AIMCo as an independent arm may simply be using AIMCo and its management and its expertise for the purposes of deniability, that says that because they're such an independent arm of the government, they don't have to report necessarily to the Auditor General. It sounds like they don't have to report, certainly, to Albertans in general, never mind members of the opposition. So it sounds like they've got carte blanche in terms of investment, yet the money they invest belongs to all Albertans, and our future well-being is staked upon the decisions they make.

Now, in this highly volatile time I was pleased to read recently that the approximately 2 and a half billion to 3 billion dollars that had been lost appeared to have been regained. The decisions that were made that led to this regaining would be extremely important, and the decisions going forward that AIMCo makes and how they formulate these decisions I think would not only be advantageous to this House but could serve as kind of a learning process for all Albertans in terms of proper investment.

So it's again with disappointment that this information is considered proprietary, which has been the word of the day if this were Sesame Street.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Anaphylaxis Policy for Schools

504. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring all school boards to establish and maintain an anaphylactic policy that includes strategies to reduce exposure to anaphylactic causative agents, information on life-threatening allergies, annual first aid training on dealing with life-threatening allergies, and a requirement for every school principal to develop a plan for each pupil affected by an anaphylactic allergy, including the maintenance of a file for each anaphylactic pupil.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and present before the Legislative Assembly motions other than government motions, this one specifically Motion 504.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are, unfortunately, many students throughout the province who have a condition, an allergy or a severe reaction to any number of things, including certain foods, insect stings, and products even like latex. These allergic reactions can unfortunately in some cases be life threatening. Motion 504 would require school boards to put in place a policy to protect students with these life-threatening allergies. I have talked to people from across the province – from our own constituency, from people in Spruce Grove, some people in Calgary, an individual from Red Deer – concerned about the lack of standards. All these parents, all these families are concerned about the lack of standards across our province.

Now, Manitoba and Ontario have legislation in place to ensure that there are standards across each and every school throughout their provinces. British Columbia has issued a ministerial order requiring such policies. Alberta does not have legislation, Mr.

Speaker, or regulation and leaves it up to school boards to have a policy in place. We know that a committee was struck in Alberta to create a resource kit on anaphylaxis that was mailed to schools in 2006 and 2007.

Certainly, before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my gratitude to the many people from across the province who have given myself and our research staff advice and direction on this matter. I just would like to say that I appreciate their time, their interest in this issue. Hopefully, this motion will eventually end up in a law or regulation that is protecting each and every student regardless of whether they have an allergy or not. I know that our School Act ensures that when students go to school, they're in a safe environment. This is one thing that, in my view, has been overlooked, and we have an opportunity today to correct it.

Anaphylaxis is a severe allergic reaction to certain agents, as I said earlier. It can be triggered by a number of agents. The most common and most widely discussed trigger, however, is food. No one is saying that we're going to ban any kind of food or food product from a school or from a cafeteria or from a field trip. No one is saying that whatsoever. A reaction can result from even trace amounts of foods such as peanuts, tree nuts, seafood, and products made with eggs and/or dairy. Anaphylaxis is usually diagnosed in childhood, but it can develop later on in life.

Now, a reaction involves multiple systems, including the skin, respiratory, cardiovascular, and gastrointestinal systems. At its most extreme a shock results from a massive overreaction of the body's immune system to a particular agent. Individuals undergoing the shock could experience symptoms such as swelling, breathing difficulties, abdominal cramps, diarrhea, nausea, and circulatory collapse. Anaphylactic shock can also induce coma and can lead to death, unfortunately. A life-threatening reaction can develop rapidly, so every moment is valuable when assisting an individual with anaphylactic shock. That's why a standard such as the one that we are proposing this afternoon with Motion 504 would give schools, whether it's the teacher, whether it's support staff, whether it's the principal, in case there was a condition or in case there was a reaction, time to react because time is of the essence, and it's important.

Now, students with this condition are no different than any other student. They play minor hockey. They play minor soccer. They're in the band in their local school. They're in the theatre groups. They go on field trips. They have sleepovers with their friends. They're no different. They're students. We have to consider that, please. If we could consider enhancing their safety, I think it would be a great step forward here in this province.

These life-threatening allergies appear to be on the rise in western cultures. There are some experts that speculate that this is due to improved hygienic standards. Now, I can't say whether that's fact or whether it's fiction, but certainly it is interesting. Individuals living with this condition, as I said earlier, must avoid contact with any agent or avoid all contacts with risk of a severe or life-threatening reaction. If it does occur, of course, most individuals have the EpiPen. They either have it in their possession, or it's in a locker, or it's in the corner of the teacher's desk. It could be in the principal's office, Mr. Speaker. But we have to know where that is, and we have to be able to find it and use it in a safe, effective manner, sometimes in 30 seconds or less, sometimes in less than a minute.

Now, other jurisdictions. In Ontario in 2003 a 13-year-old girl named Sabrina Shannon unknowingly ate french fries from the school cafeteria that had been contaminated with a dairy product. Sabrina went into shock and passed away before school staff could give her a dose from her EpiPen, which was stored in her locker. This is an example where in 2003 Ontario, of course, introduced Sabrina's Law, which many of us here are familiar with. It was a private member's bill, Bill Pr. 3, and it was passed in the Ontario Legislature almost two years after Sabrina's unfortunate passing.

Now, Manitoba and British Columbia did it a little differently. Manitoba issued a directive in 2002 that required school divisions to create policies to protect students with anaphylaxis. A registered nurse was hired to assist boards in developing their policies, which was to be completed by 2004. However, Manitoba still opted to formalize this requirement in legislation by passing a private member's bill, moved by MLA Erin Selby, which was endorsed by the Minister of Education, Citizenship and Youth. This legislation came into force on November 1, 2009. The amendments required all school boards to have policies in place that meet the needs of pupils who have diagnosed anaphylaxis and allowing for regulations to spell out the details in those plans.

It's interesting to note that both Manitoba and Ontario passed this anaphylaxis legislation with all-party support, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Alberta's approach to date has been distinctly different when compared to provinces such as Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia. The dates are fuzzy. Few people seem to know the specifics. But it appears that rather than pass legislation or issue regulations, the provincial government opted to create an advisory committee in 2006 to study the issue of anaphylaxis in schools. The committee was comprised of stakeholders such as the Alberta School Boards Association, Alberta Education, Allergy/Asthma Information Association, Alberta information centre, and Alberta Health.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is no specific legislation in Alberta requiring school boards to have policies in place regarding anaphylaxis. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 504, brought forward on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. There's no doubt that this is a serious issue. There is not one single member in this House that would ever stand to trivialize the dangers of anaphylactic allergies. Not one single member here. But I do have to take exception to the member who brings forward the motion, that suggests that there is a lack of standards, that there are no standards in this province whatsoever.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, just for a bit of a timeline, in 2006-2007 the Minister of Education provided a conditional grant to the Alberta School Boards Association, the ASBA, to lead a working group known as the anaphylaxis policy advisory steering committee. The ASBA anaphylaxis policy advisory steering committee included representatives from Alberta Education, the College of Alberta School Superintendents, Alberta School Councils' Association, Alberta School Boards Association, Anaphylaxis Canada, the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, and parents of children who have severe, life-threatening allergies. A policy advisory was produced for school boards on how the safety of students with anaphylactic allergies can be addressed.

Now, then, the committee also recommended that school boards develop policies and procedures that allow for adaptations – adaptations – not static legislation, Mr. Speaker. The committee recommended adaptations to meet the needs within the local context of each school.

In 2007, Mr. Speaker, a resource was developed that would support schools in implementing the advisory policy. This involved bringing a team together with representation from Anaphylaxis

Canada, Alberta Asthma Centre, Chronic Obstructive Pulmonary Disease & Asthma Network of Alberta, Allergy/Asthma Information Association, the Lung Association, the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, and the original advisory group that was created to create the policy.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the allergy and anaphylaxis information response, AAIR for short, resource produced in English and in French was completed and distributed to public, separate, charter, private, francophone schools in Alberta in February of 2008. On March 11 of 2010 the AAIR resource was also distributed to First Nations. Now, keep in mind that it was distributed already to in excess of 2,000 public, separate, charter, private, and francophone schools and health authorities within the province of Alberta. That's pretty extensive.

In 2009 one final concern that schools and health professionals shared was in regard to the training of school communities. There were three issues that needed to be addressed. Those were inconsistent training, which was provided at the school level; the availability of health care professionals to go into schools, particularly in rural areas; and, of course, just-in-time training that schools requested.

Now, Alberta Education provided Anaphylaxis Canada with a conditional grant to develop a training program to address those three needs specifically for Alberta. The e-module that was created, Mr. Speaker, was recently piloted by the Canadian anaphylaxis readiness education program and reached over 200 teachers in Alberta. I believe that soon it's going to go province-wide.

The second strategy that came out of that, Mr. Speaker, was to make available training for health care professionals who work in school communities. Anaphylaxis Canada provides face-to-face training for them, all consistent policies throughout our school system. Again, there is not a lack of standards.

On January 19, 2010 – and I'll table this at the appropriate time – there was even a letter that was tabled by Judah A. Denburg, MD, scientific director, and Dr. Diana Royce, education director, managing director, and chief operating officer with AllerGen Canada, the allergy, genes, and environment network to the minister. On behalf of AllerGen research network I'd to congratulate Alberta Education for taking a leadership role with regard to education and training for school personnel on anaphylaxis and potentially life-threatening allergic conditions. AllerGen has been proud to help support some of the research and evaluation.

To our knowledge Alberta is one of the first provinces to embark on such a comprehensive and innovative anaphylaxis education program. In particular, the online training component represents an outstanding collaboration between province, policy-makers, health care providers, medical associations, consumer groups, McMaster University, and the organization that wrote the letter. We understand that other provinces are watching this initiative with great interest, in particular some of the innovative components such as the e-learning module, all designed to set standards in curriculum, in policy within school boards. Mr. Speaker, we in this province lead the country when it comes to anaphylaxis policy in dealing with students who have conditions.

The motion, I believe, includes strategies to reduce exposure to anaphylactic causative agents done at the policy level with school boards; information on life-threatening allergies done at the school boards and through the research programs that I'd outlined; a requirement for every school principal to develop a plan for each pupil affected by an anaphylactic allergy – I'll get to that in a minute; I think that's being addressed – including the maintenance of a file for each anaphylactic pupil. I'm not quite sure if every single principal is maintaining a file on every single student that has anaphylactic allergies, Mr. Speaker, but I don't know that having a file is necessarily guaranteeing somebody's life is being saved. It might be beneficial. I don't know whether every principal is doing it or if they've adopted some other policy in place that keeps records and tracks them. I don't know if necessarily creating a file makes everybody safer.

The policies, Mr. Speaker, for anaphylactic allergies, students who have them, is in place. If this is legislated, I worry and wonder about the precedents that we're setting sometimes. If you legislate all of this, I don't know if it allows flexibility. The bigger question that you have to ask is: if we're going to put in legislation what's more appropriately dealt with in policy, what else do we need to legislate? Should we be legislating safety practices for football programs? Should it be in legislation exactly what sort of safety practices you're going to have for a football program or a hockey program? Are we going to put in legislation the safety protocols for playing on the playground over lunchtime rather than in school policy? How much do we actually have to put in legislation, and will it make us all safer?

Now, that leads me to one of my final points. I'm worried, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes when we create legislation, we give the impression that we've addressed everything, that it's all better now. We put in legislation the anaphylactic policy. Now no student will be harmed from the allergy that they have. Now, because it's in legislation, policy is obviously not consistent enough; we have to legislate it. I don't know that because it's in legislation, it guarantees anybody is more safe in any context. We legislate against murder, but it still happens. It doesn't stop accidents from happening, and it won't necessarily protect a student whose parents may, because it's in legislation, be less vigilant within the schools about managing their own situation. Principals may become less vigilant in managing the situation of their students. So I worry that as soon as we discuss legislation as being the solution, we may actually create more harm because everyone thinks it will be fixed.

Look. Think of it this way, Mr. Speaker. It is illegal to run a red light. It's in legislation that we can't run a red light. Does that mean that not one single person, when the light turns green, doesn't still look both ways once in a while just to make sure someone's coming? If we just assume that because it's illegal to run a red light, it's illegal to speed, then we don't need to watch anything. It makes everything safe. We can just legislate ourselves right into utopia. It's got to come down to the policies that are in practice in the schools.

We have excellent policies in place already in the schools, Mr. Speaker, and that's because the School Act fundamentally says that schools have to be safe and caring. They have to provide a safe environment. We have to legislate anaphylactic policy. We legislate against bullying. We legislate against – well, you name it. We can just legislate everything and make everybody safe.

The School Act says that we have to create safe and caring schools. Every single teacher, every single principal, every single student, every single parent works together on policies, procedures, and day-to-day operations to ensure that safety. Just because something might or might not be in legislation does not mean that it's weak because it's not in legislation or assured because it is. It all comes down to people and how vigilant they are and whether or not the actual day-to-day policies are in place.

Mr. Speaker, my last concern with this is that we become too rigid in our legislation about anaphylaxis policy. We always talk about how legislation is not adaptive or flexible or responsive to meet quick issues that might arise – new treatments, new policies, new procedures – so if we create legislation that may take two or three years and we have to have public consultations to get it changed, we may actually wind up with legislation in place that's more harmful to students or the situation in schools than it is good.

I encourage all members not to support this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

5:20

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm going to take a very personal approach to this motion. I'm going to suggest that if the hon. member's children suffered from these types of allergies and complications, he wouldn't have gotten up and made that statement. I'm going to provide a little bit of background detail first, and then I'm going to very much personalize this debate.

The advisory information resource, AAIR, prepared in '06-07, was simply mailed out to schools and school districts to use as they see fit. Officials from Education could not confirm that the department made any attempt to verify that these kits were actually received by school districts. They also were not sure if new schools constructed since the AAIR was originally distributed would be sent a kit. It was also not clear if the kits had been updated since the original mail-out. The responsibility for ensuring that the information contained in the kits is implemented rests with the school boards or the schools themselves.

A parent dissatisfied with a particular school's approach to anaphylaxis should have recourse to a provincial law to ensure that appropriate protections are in place. A higher standard of protection in our schools would also reduce the risk that school boards could be held liable for deaths resulting from severe anaphylactic shock. Emergency room visits, which cost our health system, could also be reduced.

Now, the argument that we just heard from the Member for Battle River-Wainwright is the same type of argument that we heard with regard to seat belts, the idea being that you can legislate them, but people don't necessarily have to wear them. That type of legislation may be appropriate if you're an adult and you choose, based on your safety issue, to defy the law and not wear a seat belt because you feel that you'd rather die than be crippled in an accident. You have, based on your age – and, I would also add, stupidity – a degree of choice. Children do not have that choice, and I'm going to speak as a grandfather. My grandson . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: Wisdom comes with age.

Mr. Chase: Obviously, you don't have children, or you'd be more concerned.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, continue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry to be distracted by people who don't seem to care about the well-being of Alberta's children.

My grandson, Kiran Warrior, turned six this past February 22. He suffers from a degree of allergies which are compounded by the fact that he has rather severe asthma. Now, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated, that does not prevent him from participating to his fullest extent possible, but everywhere he goes, Mr. Speaker, the EpiPen accompanies him. For example, if I have the opportunity to take him to his hockey practice, I have to make sure that that EpiPen does not get left in the car because the cold affects the quality of the serum in the EpiPen, which is absolutely essential for my grandson's life.

Now, individuals talk about: you can't legislate the saving of a life. By having a common legislation and a common application throughout the province, which creates common expectations, common responsibilities, there is a better chance of the activities being taken into account. Now, most children, once they reach school age, carry their EpiPens with them in their packs or, as was the sad case of the young lady in Ontario, Sabrina, may have the misfortune of leaving it in her locker. For the EpiPen to take effect, it has to be immediately available. That's why, as parents and grandparents and protectors of our grandson, we make sure we have that EpiPen always within our sight, whether it's taking our young grandson to the theatre, as we did on Friday night or, as I mentioned, to a hockey practice. That is a life-determining circumstance.

He has been tested for all kinds of allergies, but the tests don't necessarily reflect the severity of the circumstance. For example, he has no problems with almonds or cashews, but get him anywhere near peanuts and the swelling starts. We had no idea, for example, that he was allergic to macadamia nuts till he happened to have some icing which barely touched the macadamia nuts, and that caused his throat to swell, his eyes to swell. Fortunately, we were able to give him Benadryl right on the spot, and the EpiPen wasn't required.

This is life and death. To be as cavalier as suggesting that we could actually damage the protection of children by having universally required legislation across this province ignores the importance of protecting our children. Again, I'm a big fan of the Member for the Battle River-Wainwright region, and I know that he's a good father and a loving husband. I'm sure that he was a very professional teacher, and that's one of the reasons I have such respect for him. But as a teacher he should realize the number of kids that we have in our classrooms and in our schools with a whole series of menacing and, in some cases, life-threatening conditions.

The hon. member mentioned just our desire to have everything absolutely clean and sterile, where kids no longer, you know, put in that mouthful of dirt that builds up the antibodies and so on over the long run. The reality is that our kids are in danger, and more and more are placed in that danger. If you go into any school, you would be absolutely amazed, on the board by the principal's office or wherever it's chosen to be displayed to protect the privacy of the child, at the number of kids who suffer from a variety of things, whether it's diabetes, whether it's anaphylactic shock, whether it's allergies. The number of asthma, pulmonary concerns in Alberta far outnumber any other province. It's a real problem, and the hon. member is trying to come up with a real solution. It's not the end-all answer, but unless we take some form of standardized procedural policy development and enforcement, we're going to lose children.

Now, my wife, myself, my daughter, her husband, everybody in our family will do everything to protect our grandson, and we'll do everything to ensure that when he's on a field trip, he carries his EpiPen with him. We will make sure that we inform the school authorities. We'll make sure that when he's on a sleepover, he has that EpiPen with him. The point is that he's going to be spending a significant part of his day in school, and if the most well-meaning and well-intentioned teachers don't know where his EpiPen is, that could mean the difference between life or death for my grandson. That's the case for thousands of Alberta children.

When you're arguing against the possibility of protecting children, I don't get it, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely essential that we do everything within our power for the well-being of children. Opposing this makes absolutely no sense. I wonder where a person's brain or where their heart is or, in fact, if they have one if they oppose this legislation.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I particularly take offence to the last comment, and I will try and qualify it. First of all, I do want to say that I am an individual who has a severe allergy to all types of nuts. I have EpiPens. I do want to say that the regulations that have been brought forward have probably caused me and many people who have allergies more challenges than if nothing was done.

Now, you say to me: how does that make sense? Well, first of all, I do want to say that the schools do a lot of work as it is right now, and I commend them for that. But let's talk about the situation that we're in as individuals who have those types of allergies.

The world becomes complacent. How does it become complacent? Because we as a society need to protect everybody, we're protecting people or we're protecting ourselves, if I want to call it that, against situations where we need to be ready for the situation. If we have a school that completely bans nuts, if I was a child, I'd become quite complacent in the attitude of saying: "You know what? There are no nuts here, so I have no worry. Nobody is going to put nuts in somebody's cookies. I can share." We need to teach the individuals who have those conditions that they have that responsibility on their own, and it's critical.

Now, I'm going to give you another example. If you take a look at cereals or you take a look at bars, what happened? In order to protect themselves, companies have stated: this product may contain traces of nuts. If you have a grandson that has an allergy, that's very frustrating. Why is it frustrating? Because those individuals are protecting themselves from liability, and now all of a sudden every product and every cereal that you buy has that sign on it. You become oblivious to that signage because they all may. So you don't eat cereal. You don't eat, you know, certain products. You know that these products don't have nuts, so you eat them anyway. That's what I'm talking about: complacency. Well, cornflakes may contain nuts. You know that it doesn't contain nuts. It's done from the legality point of view instead of the common-sense point of view.

I say to you that when I look at students in schools, when we look at individuals in society, we have to be prepared. We have to be ready, whether we carry an EpiPen or, I guess, whatever type of precautions we take. It's necessary that we educate the individuals themselves. I'm very confident that what's been provided in schools is very adequate. I just don't think that if we take that step further, we are helping. In some cases I think we could be deterring what we're trying to do because of the complacency side.

I can only speak on my behalf and only on what I went through not only discovering the allergies that I do have but also trying to deal with them. You know, I can say to you – and I'll use an example right here, that happened in this building – that there was a situation where there was a meeting, and there was some food. What took place is that they thought it was important that we identify which product has nuts, and the individual who was ahead of me was looking at the food, moved the sign from one to the other. I was right behind him, and I saw it and basically said: exactly what are you doing? He said that he didn't even know he'd done it.

I think I can say to you, hon. member, that no matter what the sign is, no matter what the regulation is, no matter what we're doing, the onus is on ourselves first. Can we support? Yes, there are ways to support, but we can't go overboard because we can't put our children in the situation of complacency.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to stand today and support this Motion 504. I see the points being made on both sides, and I think there are some good points. I don't dispute that they're genuinely held. I've seen, as many of us in this Chamber have seen, situations where we've had friends or family members with severe allergies – it usually seems to be with nuts, but it can be other things – have kind of near-death experiences or real scary situations happen when they don't have their EpiPen or whatever they're using. It can be really scary.

I remember one scary situation for me. I was in Taiwan at the time. I was with an individual from the United States, and we were kind of going around. We were out for dinner, and we were eating. He thought it was nut free, and then he saw on the bottom of his plate a nut. I remember that he almost went into shock without actually going into shock. It turned out it was a false alarm, but he was just very scared because he didn't have his EpiPen with him. It was a very scary situation.

I know that these things do happen in schools. Things get missed. You know, as a parent sometimes things get left behind, like knapsacks. You can be good 99.9 per cent of the time, but sometimes things get missed. When those situations occur, the consequences can be dire. If there's a way we can increase the safety for these children by doing something relatively simple – I don't think we need to overdo it or overkill it – if we can at least make sure that the school boards and the schools are mandated to have a plan in place and to know who the people are, I think that's just good planning on their part.

I think it can be done with very minimal regulation. I think it's one of those things where, again, when the government does want to regulate and does want to step in, it should be for public safety, for things like this. I do think that the good outweighs the bad, so I will be supporting this bill. I've also had several e-mails on it from constituents with children who have this allergy, and they've been relaying their scary stories to me about it. On their behalf I will be supporting this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to note that there have been some family members and a few moments ago there were several children in the gallery. I'd welcome them. I'm glad they're here to watch the debate and listen to the positions of the various people.

I just want to reread the motion so that we're really clear here. I listened to the comments from the Minister of Infrastructure, and I just want to be clear here. We're not talking about a ban on peanuts or anything like that. Here's the exact wording of the motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring all school boards to establish and maintain an anaphylactic policy that includes strategies to reduce exposure to anaphylactic causative agents, information on life-threatening allergies, annual first aid training on dealing with life-threatening allergies, and a requirement for every school principal to develop a plan for each pupil affected by an anaphylactic allergy, including the maintenance of a file for each anaphylactic pupil.

That's the end of the motion.

When I read this, Mr. Speaker, I'm kind of reminded of fire drills and fire escape plans. This isn't a bill that says: ban all peanuts or all anaphylactic agents from a school. This is a motion that says: "Be prepared. Know who is at high risk. Make sure that once a year that file is reviewed and there's a bit of training in place. Make sure you have the adequate equipment. Take some precautions." That's really what this is saying, and I think we need to keep it in that perspective.

I say this as somebody who, very fortunately, doesn't have allergies, so I personally don't have these concerns, but sadly I know people who do. Very good friends of one of my sisters lost a child to an anaphylactic allergy reaction, and I know a number of people who have similar life-and-death threats. I was a camp counsellor once where a student had anaphylactic shock because, even though we asked him, he never told anybody he was allergic to peanuts.

The camp cook put a tiny bit of peanuts in the Cocoa Puffs squares. He ate them, and he was down. We were an hour from any medical help. We were way west of Rocky Mountain House. That was quite frightening. So I have had experience with this with other people.

I'm sure that over the years these kinds of debates have gone back and forth and back and forth. I think that as a Legislature it's reasonable for us to say: well, do we really need this law? Is this law really going to be effective? Could it, as the Minister of Infrastructure said, be counterproductive? I have no doubt. In fact, I've been here long enough to remember the debates on bicycle helmets. You know, there was back and forth, and for years and years the government voted down legislation to require kids to wear bicycle helmets. Well, you know what? It was brought forward. It's done. We have undoubtedly saved any number of injuries to kids because they have to wear bike helmets. A similar debate on seat belts: I think Alberta was the last province in the country to bring forward seat belts.

This is an issue that's going to be in a similar vein. One of the concerns I have – and other members have mentioned this – is around liability issues. There will come a point now where it's widely known that there are serious allergy problems and that steps can be taken. When authorities do not take those steps, I expect that they will be increasingly exposed to liability. It may not just be the authorities as the school boards. It could be teachers. It could be other families. Why not take the step now and prevent this from becoming that kind of a big issue?

We're watching the same issue play out in air travel. I believe WestJet has stopped serving any kind of peanut products on its flights. You know what? It's not a big deal. It showed me, when I read this article, that WestJet is being very proactive and responsive to the health needs of their customers. In contrast, Air Canada is dragging its heels and resisting making the changes that are necessary. I think it looks bad on Air Canada, and I wouldn't be surprised if it increases their liability risks.

I think that when we consider our roles as legislators in setting standards and leading by example in protecting children, we have to remember that here we're not talking about adults. We're talking about kids who could be as young as four years old, in kindergarten, kids who don't have full choice, who don't have full knowledge. I think the Member for Lethbridge-East might speak in a few minutes to an example from Vancouver Island, a particularly unfortunate example in a school. These are children. We have a responsibility to take reasonable steps to reduce the extreme risks to our children.

I'm sure this debate will play out over and over and over in this Assembly, consuming all kinds of hours, and probably any number of children will suffer because of these delays. Eventually, at some point in the future the government will realize that, yeah, we should do this, just like we do with fire drills. We require every school to have a fire exit plan, to once or twice or three times a year have a fire drill. No big deal. We all think it's a reasonable idea. Why not do the same with allergies?

I support this motion, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to weigh in on this debate. Certainly, there have been good arguments, actually, on both sides. But I think that one of the things we have to keep in mind – and this government often does this. They'll have these wonderful programs. They announce them with great fanfare. Then they download those programs onto the stakeholders and those that are responsible for delivering those programs, but they often don't give them the dollars that are required to have those programs go forward. It is bit of a pattern, and certainly I've noticed it at the municipal level.

In this case it's the anaphylactic program, which I'm sure was launched with the greatest of intentions and knowledge that this type of information must be in all the schools. The question would arise in my mind that you introduce a program without any time frames for evaluations. How is this working? Are all of the schools doing it? The other question that I would have on this is: is this a standard program throughout the schools? Is it being applied in the same fashion? Children move in this province all the time.

One of the arguments was made that children are responsible, you know, for themselves, and they understand that, and I do understand that. Young children who have juvenile diabetes know exactly how to use their needles. They know exactly how much insulin they need. They know that if they're tired, they're going to need some orange juice. Yes, they do know these things. Children with allergies often are aware of what they are as well, but we're talking about kids, and kids sometimes forget. They get themselves into little situations without having thought.

My thrust on this would be that we have to help little children who, yes, may well know what they have to do, but they're kids, and they forget. It is very easy to give an Epi-Pen, and often some of them may have them as they would have their insulin supplies, but teachers are not health care workers. I believe that for them to have basic knowledge is easily taught because what their basic knowledge must be is that they can recognize the signs and symptoms of a true allergic reaction.

The point is that whoever is teaching these children, in the school room or outside of the school room, in the play yard, has to recognize the signs and symptoms and then be able to put in whatever their protocol is. My problem, as I've mentioned, I think, is that the protocol hasn't been evaluated. It's just been sent out and said: well, we hope you do this. And, again, I don't believe that it's standardized across the province. I think it's very important.

One of the other things that can easily happen to children when they're out playing are bee stings or wasp stings. They can be very, very highly deadly for the children who are allergic to those. Again, it's the question of the teacher being able to recognize the signs and symptoms of an anaphylactic shock and knowing what to do. If it's a child that may never have had that reaction before, again, I hope that teacher recognizes the signs and symptoms and gets help right away. It doesn't take long to die from an anaphylactic shock.

One of the reasons I'm saying this is because I think part of the big problem – I can certainly speak from the long-term care side of it – is that each regional health authority had its own version and its own analysis and its own assessment of what was considered long-term care. That care was not consistent across the province, and it was very important because, again, seniors move across this province just as our young children do.

Just before I finish, I would like to talk about a very unfortunate incident that happened at a Vancouver Island school. There was a young man, and kids were bullying. It was a classic case of bullying, where there were four young men chasing another young man. They told him that they were throwing peanuts at him, and he had a very severe reaction to peanuts. It was a clear case of bullying. I think it's most unfortunate that, of course, that was used. I'm sure that these other four thought it was a lark and this kid's going to react when he thought he had peanuts, but if they really understood the life-and-death situation that they could have been putting this young man in, I'm sure they would have thought twice.

Often what I get back from the other side of this room is: education, education, education. Clearly, what you've tried to do is send out kits that are, in quotations, education, but there isn't the evaluation with it. There isn't the fact that anyone knows, and I think that it should be a directive that can go out to the school boards. I realize that school boards are autonomous, and so they should be, but I think that when it's health and wellness, it comes under a different criteria that we should be looking at to protect our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:50

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a few words I'd like to say. First of all, I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward because, obviously, it's generated a very valuable debate here, and although members may not be all together on how they see the most appropriate solution, I think it's still been very valuable to raise consciousness about this issue.

I really think that what we are talking about here is the method not so much as the end. As was mentioned by an earlier speaker, there is nobody in this Assembly who would be arguing against the need to have students as safe as can be in schools. But I think my concern about the motion is just that – well, I guess I'll just say that I'm a diabetic. Now, I was fortunate. I got juvenile diabetes when I was 28 years old, but I can imagine what it must be like for a young person, a young child, having to take insulin and being fearful of reactions and so on in school when they're young. I was fortunate to have missed that, but I guess my concern is that there are all kinds of risks, there are all kinds of threats out there, and specific legislation, a specific section dealing with specific risks, as dangerous as they are, I think, may cause some problem.

For example, I don't think we have – and I stand to be corrected on this – a section in the act that talks about fire drills. There is a requirement to keep students safe, and we've already got that requirement. I was trying to listen carefully to some of the other precedents that were mentioned, and if I'm not mistaken, some of them were not done in legislation. They were done by ministerial order. I think, really, what we're talking about is how we implement this process that we all feel is valuable.

Those are my only comments, but if I am to vote against this motion, that would be why, certainly not because I don't appreciate the challenges that people with allergies face.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to, first off, thank all hon. members for their contributions in this debate and discussion on Motion 504 this afternoon. Certainly, we need to, before we vote, clarify some of the previous statements that were made.

I'm not confident that every school board in our province has a well-developed anaphylaxis policy in place as was suggested by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. Now, I was provided – and I really appreciated this from the former Minister of Education – the advice to the minister under anaphylaxis students with severe allergies, which was advice to the Minister of Education at the time on March 14, 2007. For the record, there was $25,000 granted by Alberta Education to the Alberta School Boards Association to lead a working group on this issue. Now, the working group, or the committee, was responsible for developing a policy advisory – a policy advisory, Mr. Speaker. A school policy advisory was drafted, and it was reviewed by the committee members. There is a big difference between a policy and a policy advisory. A policy advisory is simply the paper it's written on. It's an advisory. It's not a set standard across the province. I would urge all hon. members to consider this when they vote.

Now, there was talk about self-compliance: it works better than legislation. I would remind you that the Assemblies in Manitoba, Ontario, and with all due respect British Columbia have decided that self-compliance in this matter doesn't work.

The backgrounder that was provided to me also indicates that the policy advisory is the responsibility of the Alberta School Boards Association and, therefore, does not require departmental or ministerial approval. The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright suggested that the government had all this under control. If I heard him right, I would certainly take exception to that and point out that section 45(8) of the School Act states that the school boards have the responsibility for providing students in their schools with a safe and caring environment. Developing local policies and procedures is their local responsibility. That's what we're after here, a policy that each school board can implement through this legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we consider what is going on in this province, Alberta needs to pass legislation requiring every school to have a well-developed anaphylaxis policy. Children with this condition deserve to have a consistent standard of protection in each and every school. Currently, parents must choose between enrolling children in schools that meet the geographic and educational needs of their family or risking placing their children in a school without proper safety standards. A parent should not have to lobby an individual school or district to create appropriate policies and practices to protect their children.

Some parents may not even be aware of the danger of life-threatening allergies, and schools have a responsibility to ensure that all students are as safe as they can be. This motion, Mr. Speaker, that we are proposing before the Assembly: we are moving it because we want to provide and build on the good work that's already being done by schools and school boards across the province and make sure that it's a standard across the province.

Now, a school board has the ability to develop policies regarding anaphylaxis, and these policies may or may not conform with this policy advisory that the hon. member spoke about earlier issued by the stakeholder committee. If a particular board chooses not to create a policy – and this is very important – then the responsibility rests with the individual school. If a school board chooses not to create a policy, it is up to the principal of a school to create and enforce policies on anaphylaxis.

Time did not permit us in the Official Opposition a full examination of school districts in Alberta, but it is clear that the absence of provincial legislation has left serious gaps in the school system. For example, the Edmonton school district, with a projected enrolment in this year of close to 79,000 students, does not have a board-level policy in place on anaphylaxis, and this was confirmed in a phone call to us by school board officials. The Calgary board of education, by contrast, has a detailed policy on anaphylaxis that is posted on their website. So it's not all as what was claimed earlier by the hon. member.

I would in conclusion urge all members of this Assembly to please accept this motion. It will be a small step in the right direction towards providing each and every student, regardless of whether they have an allergy or not, that is enrolled in our school system the utmost in safety.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Before the chair calls the question, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to record a standing vote for this motion but to waive the normal 10-minute bell period.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the question, and if there is a standing vote, it'll be one minute.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 10 of the brightest stars from Destiny Christian school in my riding. They're accompanied here today by Mr. Glenn Mullen, who is their teacher and also the principal of the school. As you know, they're going to be our leaders tomorrow. They're in the public gallery, and I'd like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 100 visitors from Spruce Grove, the Woodhaven middle school, along with a number of parents and teachers. They are seated in both galleries, obviously, today. I'm extremely pleased to have had an opportunity to speak with the students this afternoon on the steps. I can tell you that they are very knowledgeable about what it is that is happening in this Legislature and what MLAs do. We have teachers Mr. Moe Teliani, Miss Emily Pearce, Ms Deb Schellenberger, Miss Keri Getz, Mrs. Triena Hoople, Miss Christine Van Natter and parent helpers Mr. Karl Iles, Mrs. Eileen Sherburne, Mrs. Jeanette Chmilar, and Mr. Jeff Gamble. As I said, they are seated in both galleries. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the pleasure of taking part in a news conference with the Premier, members of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, and individuals from Edmonton's homeless serving community. There with me were several individuals, some of which have joined us here today. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the following people: Susan McGee, member of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, if she could please stand; Mr. Tim Richter, president and CEO of the Calgary Homeless Foundation; Miss Judi Deslauriers, a former homeless Edmontonian who now is in permanent housing supports; and her follow-up support worker, Miss Samantha Smith. I would ask that you please join me and give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly today two of my constituents, Norm and Judy Radomsky from Willingdon. I just want to say that they travelled here today for some meetings and stopped in to see the Legislature. I do want to add a little extra comment. Judy had gone to school with the Premier, but as it looks today, as we can see, I think it was a K to 12 school. I think she was in K, and I'm pretty sure the Premier may have been in 12. If I could ask them to please stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. Firstly, I'd like to introduce my new assistant, Amanda Karlzen. She was raised on the family farm in Carrot Creek, and she's been an accomplished 4-H member and leader in her community. While studying political science at the university here in Edmonton, she still worked weekends running farm machinery, feeding, processing, calving, and other general duties. Amanda, it's now time to put your political studies to work here at the Legislature. Welcome. Please stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction, Brock Mulligan, is more of a public thank you to a very bright young man that has served this Legislature for five years. Brock has taken a new job outside government and will be a true asset to his new employer. Brock, thank you for your dedicated service. The door to my office is always open. Please stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week in Edmonton in particular is Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week. There are many women and men working to raise public awareness about issues relating to sexual exploitation. Members may have noticed in both galleries quite a number of people wearing orange. Those are the people who have come forward today to watch us in question period and debate. They are seated in both galleries. I will quickly read their names and ask them to rise as I do so: Kristin Raworth, Kate Quinn, Sarah Ramsey, Danielle Boudreau, Rejoyce Appedoe, Sue Huff, Patti Brady, Dorian Smith, Lou Kinartz, Andrew Fiebiger, Andrea Burkheart, Karen Smith, and there may be others. I see that there are. Anyone involved with this group wearing orange, please rise and receive the warm reception of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to introduce to you and through you a group of university students who are at the Legislature today representing CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students. They are – and I would ask them to stand when they're named – Duncan Wojtaszek of CAUS staff; Beverly Eastham, representing the University of Calgary; Kay She from the University of Calgary; Jeremy – I'm going to use the French pronunciation – Girard of the University of Lethbridge; Hardave Birk of the University of Calgary; Lauren Webber of the University of Calgary, who has a direct line of connection to the minister of aboriginal affairs; Zach Fentiman of the University of Alberta; Alex Massé of the University of Lethbridge; Aden Murphy of the University of Alberta; and Keith McLaughlin of the University of Lethbridge. Please give warm welcome to these students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Edmonton's Common Ground Arts Society. Common Ground Arts Society is an organization that is less than four months old. Its goal is to celebrate the incredible artistic talent in Edmonton and to help existing organizations develop an infrastructure for emerging artists. On March 19 I had the privilege of attending their inaugural Edmonton show, a monthly showcase of local artists ranging from live musical performances and visual arts to theatre and dance. The show was hosted at the newly renovated Avenue Theatre, which is proving to be an instrumental force in the revitalization of Alberta Avenue.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask that my guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Nicholas Mayne, the executive director; Patrick Lundeen, the artistic director; Simon Gorsak, the associate co-ordinator; Dawn Ringrose, the board chair; Phil Varley, the Avenue Theatre manager; Kevin McCann, a performing artist; Julie Jonas, a performing artist; Forest Mackay, a performing artist; Sarah Seburn, a visual artist; Rachel Seburn, a visual artist; and Danielle Annicchiarico, a visual artist. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly the board members of the Alberta Somali Community Center. The Alberta Somali Community Center works to foster the contributions of Canadian Somalis to the multicultural fabric of Alberta. The centre aims to work with all levels of government on issues of importance to Canadian Somalis in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask that my guests rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: the chairperson, Jama Nur; president Mahamad Accord; treasurer Abdi-Aziz Liban; vice-president Mohamed Hersi; communications director Yusuf Yusuf; membership, Jibriil Osman; secretary Said Hussein. If you could all please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Calgary-Montrose Awards

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to bring awareness of the Calgary-Montrose awards. For the first time in my constituency individuals will be recognized by this award. The constituency of Calgary-Montrose has been an incredible example of community at a time when it is most important. Together we have embraced safe community initiatives, worked together to make our most vulnerable supported, and moved to become more environmentally friendly to ensure we leave our children with a healthy planet.

Mr. Speaker, all individuals and organizations in east Calgary have been encouraged to nominate deserving individuals for the following awards: the Montrose student award, the Montrose youth award, the Montrose spirit award, the Montrose environmental leadership award, and the Montrose safe community award. In addition, there are three awards for organizations: the Montrose community outreach award, the Montrose environmental leadership award, and the Montrose safe community award.

I'm often inspired by the people of my constituency for their hard work and dedication not just to their own lives and to their children but to the community as a whole. Mr. Speaker, that's what makes my constituency so vibrant, and that's what makes me so proud to be their representative. I hope my constituents will consider nominating their friends and neighbours that make a difference in our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Carmangay Centennial

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to call Carmangay, Alberta, my home. On January 20, 1910, the village of Carmangay was formally incorporated even though it had been on the prairies since 1904. C.W. Carman had purchased a large tract of land along the Little Bow River. The village began west of the current site, but before completion of the CPR line to Carmangay those buildings had to be moved by a steam engine and horses to the current townsite. The original wood trestle, two years in construction, was one of the longest of its kind, over 1,040 feet long spanning the river coulees along the Little Bow River.

Carmangay was a growing and booming community until the great fire in 1920, which destroyed many of its businesses. Over the next seven years Carmangay slowly lost many of its remaining businesses: seven elevators became five, then three, then none. Gone are the farm machinery dealerships and fuel distributors, hardware and grocery stores, newspaper, law offices, and others, including our public school.

Today Carmangay is seeing a small resurgence in growth. It's got a wonderful long-term care/continuing care centre and has become home to many retirees and commuters. In its 100 years three of its five MLAs have been from Carmangay. Besides myself two were Speaker of this Assembly, Mr. James McNaughton and Mr. Peter Dawson.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, Carmangay was recognized for possibly having the shortest St. Patrick's Day parade in Canada, maybe the world. Each St. Patrick's day green-clad residents and visitors assemble to follow the local music from the post office one block to the Grange Hotel to have Irish coffee and green beer. All are welcome tomorrow.

This summer the formal celebration of Carmangay's centennial will take place July 30 to August 2. Many hours of volunteer work have gone into making this a year to remember for residents, former residents, family get-togethers, and their history book.

Welcome, all, and congratulations, Carmangay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week

Dr. Taft: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Right now a man is on trial for the murder of Ellie May Meyer, a young woman who died in a senseless act of violence. Ellie was, first and foremost, a human being with hopes and dreams and people who loved her. She was also a prostitute, a victim of sexual exploitation. Ellie's murder is one of 31 verified murders of vulnerable women during the last 27 years in Edmonton. Only five of those cases are solved. At least five more vulnerable women are officially listed as missing, and there could be many more.

Sexual exploitation is a common factor in these cases, and Edmontonians have organized Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week to raise understanding of the issues. Edmonton police estimate that our city could be home to 600 sexually exploited people, and there could be many more given that it's not easy to track people exploited over the Internet, through personal ads, or escort services and massage parlours.

Ordinary people, overwhelmingly men, fuel the demand for these services. The Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton has created a campaign called stop the demand, which aims to curb sexual exploitation by reducing demand through education and awareness. Without demand there's no market for human traffickers, pimps, or profiteers. The foundation's men of honour award complement this campaign by recognizing men who encourage healthy relationships and who speak out to stop the dehumanization of the sexually exploited. I encourage everyone in Alberta to follow the example of these men of honour. We must not tolerate the victimization of vulnerable people. That starts by recognizing our common humanity with respect and compassion for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Budget 2010

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 9, 2010, this government tabled the 2010 budget, positioning Alberta to take full advantage of the global recovery under way. Thanks to this budget we will have the most innovative and competitive economy in Canada, the best health care system in the country, and the newest and best infrastructure in North America. This budget strikes the right balance between making spending adjustments and ensuring that priority programs are properly funded.

Others agree with the government's forecasting and budget goals. CIBC, for instance, has indicated that beyond 2010 the province is expected to average 3 per cent real GDP growth, with investment remaining a driving force. This province's fiscal performance has bettered expectations from April of 2009, and with the global recovery taking root, fiscal growth will accelerate, and we will meet our goal of being back in the black by fiscal 2012-2013. CIBC also points out that the sustainability fund is coming to good use, having been established to cushion volatility in the resource sector to avoid painful program cuts.

Critics continue to call for less spending and, without basis, state that Alberta's 2010 budget is bad for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2010 continues to provide priority of services for Albertans. We will monitor our spending and our revenues to ensure that we meet our targets and the Premier's goal of being back in the black by 2012. That's responsible fiscal management. That's reasonable budgeting. That's what a responsible government does. It strikes the right balance.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to later table the CIBC provincial budget brief dated February 9, 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak this afternoon about the progress being made to help vulnerable Albertans break the cycle of homelessness. Today is the first anniversary of our government's commitment to end homelessness in our province. Alberta's plan is based on a housing first approach whereby permanent, safe housing is provided along with the supports and services needed to break the cycle of homelessness. This model increases the likelihood that the individual will reach independence and is a more cost-effective way to co-ordinate and maximize resources.

Mr. Speaker, few jurisdictions are immune to the problem of homelessness, and fewer still have a plan of action to address it. In fact, Alberta remains the only province in Canada to put a 10-year plan to end homelessness into motion.

There are as many causes of homelessness beyond those that first come to mind: mental health problems, substance abuse issues, and others. Illness, family breakdown, or job loss can often result in temporary homelessness, and the economic downturn has brought the tipping point of homelessness much closer to some.

But one year after endorsing Canada's only 10-year plan to end homelessness, our province is a better place for so many who previously had little hope. Today more than 1,300 formerly homeless people have a place to call home and the help that they need to remain housed and become independent, shelter use is declining in all major centres – and this is a good thing, Mr. Speaker – and more than 900 housing units for the homeless are being supported across our province. These are encouraging results.

The reality is that we still have homeless people on our streets, and we still have people in need of basic housing. In our world of technological and social change belonging somewhere remains a basic human need.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to offer my thanks to all the stakeholders, which include the government of Alberta, community volunteers, professionals serving the homeless, and private-sector investors, who have made a difference in this particular area. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care in Grande Prairie

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday I asked the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports why the long-term care centre promised to Grande Prairie in 2006 has not been started. She could not provide an answer. She also could not say what happened to the $2.3 million that was given to Chantelle Management to start this facility. To the Premier: why has $2.3 million of taxpayer money been sitting in Chantelle Management's bank accounts for four years, and construction has still not started?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to seniors' housing in the province of Alberta we are moving forward with a very aggressive plan to add to the number of living spaces in the province. We want to make sure that seniors can retire in the very same community that they helped build. We're reviewing all of the applications that have come forward for funding, and we'll make decisions on them soon.

Dr. Swann: To the Premier. It has been four years. Is the province going to ask for that $2.3 million to be returned with interest or not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can get additional information on that particular issue, but overall in terms of increasing the number of spaces, we're looking at at least 800 to 900 spaces. We've been told that with the increasing population in years to come, we would need about 1,200 spaces every year to keep up with the pace of growth in what you'd call the baby-boomer generation, that will be retiring within a number of years.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm sure the people of Grande Prairie will be very interested in that lack of an answer, Mr. Premier. How do you expect to build trust in a population where you neither answer a question nor have a serious response to 2.3 million public dollars absent from our agenda?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, what is going on in Grande Prairie right now with Chantelle developments is a very important project not only to the people of Grande Prairie but to us. We are in the process right now of learning that they have managed to get all their building permits and to get their contract with Alberta Health Services, and they will be starting the project within the next two months.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Centralized Cytology Lab Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One theme that's clear within this government is that there's no long-term plan for health care, including lab services. This past weekend I was in Lethbridge, and the resounding concern related to the impending closure of their cytology lab. To the Premier: why is the Premier closing a lab in Lethbridge which performs necessary tests for cervical cancer?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister recently met with the pathologists, and he'll have more information with respect the results of the meeting. We're working with Alberta Health Services to deliver the best quality of services with the pathologists in the province.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've spoken to pathologists and to public health officials, and they're puzzled also. What's the evidence the Premier can table in the House to show that this change will improve both the timeliness and accuracy of the testing for cervical cancer?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to undertake that follow-up on behalf of the questioner and on behalf of the Premier. The fact is that it's just the analysis of the Pap smears or whatever services are being alluded to here that are being centralized. They are being sent somewhere, in this case probably to Calgary, so that the turnaround time can be faster, and that's what we're working toward, making the whole system more efficient. But I will look more deeply into that on behalf of the member.

Dr. Swann: Well, for such a significant issue it's surprising that the minister is only now looking into this issue. How is it going to save time or money to send all the Pap smears from Lethbridge to Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it could well be the case that Alberta Health Services has put in place some additional precautionary steps to make sure that it will be more efficient, to make sure that the turnaround time is faster. This is not an issue of contracting things out; this is an issue of working within the publicly provided system, which is exactly what this cytology analysis lab is in Calgary.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Erotic Massage Parlours

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The time has come for Alberta to take a strong stand in the battle against sexual exploitation. This government should cut through the confusion, strengthen the laws, pursue prosecution, go after the gangs, support the victims, and educate the public about the issues. To the Minister of Justice: in order to decrease victimization and sexual exploitation, will the minister and this government develop legislation that will address the proliferation of sexual massage parlors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue is important to all Albertans, and I want to commend the member on his statement today with respect to this issue. We in Alberta Justice and, indeed, this government take this issue very seriously. We believe that it's about more than criminal prosecutions, and by that I don't mean that we're not prosecuting. What we are doing is supporting projects like Project Kare, which are integrated investigative teams that include senior counsel, senior investigators who are ensuring that we're able to resolve these cold cases.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to be in a province where we don't need Project Kare. That's way too many victims. We want to stop the victims from turning up in the streets of this city.

Will this minister work with municipalities, police, health officials, and other stakeholders to develop provincial standards that enable Alberta municipalities to better establish, investigate, and prosecute bylaws related to adult entertainment and sexual services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the pieces of work that we've worked on very closely with police agencies in this province in the last two years is to ensure that their investigative teams are looking not only at what particular acts may be involved in running businesses such as massage parlors but also the environment, the actual, factual environment as to how people are functioning in these businesses so that they're not exploited. We believe it's very important to ensure that we're creating a system where people are talking about this, understanding this, investigating this, and prosecuting.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, that sounds like a step in the right direction. Again to the same minister: given the power of public awareness and opinion, will the minister support a broader educational program about the risks and victims of sexual exploitation aimed at the demographic groups most likely to use these services?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's a very good suggestion. We've certainly done a lot of work around this through the safe communities innovation fund. Just this evening one of our Crown prosecutors will be at the library speaking to victim sexual exploitation online. We'll continue to do that work, and I'm happy to work with the member on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 the government committed to implementing a tuition fee calculation policy that capped tuition increases at the rate of inflation for a 10-year period. In November 2009 the minister announced that postsecondary institutions could submit proposals requesting tuition increases for professional faculties. This goes against the very commitment this government made to ease the financial burden on students. My questions are to the Premier. Why did your government's promise to postsecondary students by removing the tuition fee increase policy for legislation . . .

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, if I could correct the preamble, this government did not request proposals from the postsecondaries. The postsecondaries indicated to us that there was a problem with some of their tuition levels in 2004, when we froze tuition rates. All we did was indicate to them that we would entertain receiving those proposals. We have done that. We've had meetings with the students. Some of the institutions have had numerous meetings with the students. We're going to continue to look at those proposals as they come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that postsecondary tuition in Alberta is already the third highest in Canada, will the government stay true to their word and support increases based on the consumer price index per year only?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I've been very clear in my response to the CPI cap as being protected. However, if there were issues around errors that were made under that program back in 2004, I think it's prudent for the taxpayer and for the students to be able to look at that so that we can protect the CPI cap going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that students build plans around policy – they are able to work, save, and get financial support based on government policy – what is the point in passing this policy if you're going to ignore the rules that you've already put in place?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be advantageous if the hon. member would listen to the answers rather than just go back to the script of the question. This is exactly what I've said. We are honouring the policy of the CPI. However, in order to ensure that that CPI is there for the rest of the period of time, we want to make sure that we correct the errors in it so that we don't have to go back and revisit it. We've said very clearly to the postsecondaries: this is a one-time adjustment only. We're not talking about changing across the board. We're not talking about any of those other things, simply correcting an error, which I believe this hon. member would agree is a good thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier announced his new royalty framework in 2007, he said that it's "good, it's sound, and it's going to carry this province well into the next century." Wow, that went by fast: 2100 already. Why did the Premier abandon his commitment to a fair share for Albertans just three years later?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the oil sands royalty changes are working very well; in fact, billions of dollars of new investment. There have been changing circumstances with respect to the market for natural gas, especially given the new finds of shale gas, which leads to the need for more innovation and investment in technology. It would have been a real mistake not to revisit this particular area to make sure that we attract the same investment we've had before the market conditions changed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that on the same day in 2007, the Premier said that this "framework was put in place to provide certainty and predictability," and given that the Premier has rolled back royalties seven times since then, why won't the Premier admit that the only certainty he's provided Albertans is that he can't be counted on to stand up for their interests?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since the royalty framework was introduced in 2007 to take effect in 2009, we have seen major changes with respect to the marketplace: huge finds in shale gas, a world economic crisis, a credit crisis that many companies face. But the biggest issue, though, for so many companies was that natural gas dropped down to that $3 level. We were losing production, the tariffs on moving gas to the United States almost doubled from what they were before, and as a result we were losing production, which led to less gas being produced and less ethane and less polyethylene produced in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the NDP is the only party standing up for the majority of Albertans, who want fair share royalties, and given that both the Progressive Conservatives and Liberals have changed their position on this issue so many times that you need a program to keep track and given that the Wildrose Alliance is supported by the oil and gas industry precisely to fight for lower royalties, why won't the Premier admit that his government has betrayed Albertans who voted for him based on his promise to raise royalty rates?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a partnership that exists between the government, Albertans, who are owners of the resource, and also those investors that put billions of dollars at risk in searching for the resources of natural gas and conventional oil. I believe that what we've gone through over the last six to seven months was a good process which has led to a good policy, and that policy has been supported by industry, by government, by others who have invested billions of dollars in a basin that is depleting. We need innovation to access new gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Competitiveness Review of Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night I attended CAPP in Calgary with many colleagues of this Assembly. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore joined me. In a speech to a thousand people the Minister of Energy mentioned that he consulted with only 68 MLAs. My question to the Minister of Energy is: does he know how many MLAs there are in this Assembly representing all Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: I think the last time I counted, Mr. Speaker, it was 83.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm one of those 83, and I'm very proud as an independent to represent the economic engine of Canada that provides lots of revenue to the minister of finance, who is smiling. My question is: why did the minister exclude from the competitiveness review the oil sands, the economic engine that creates so many jobs for Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, probably because, if the member actually would think about it for a minute, the royalty framework that the Premier referred to has been working very well as it relates to oil sands royalties, and there was no need to review it.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy: isn't it true that new political forces and pressures from this very Assembly are what forced this government to do the right thing in treating Albertans fairly, in creating jobs? [interjections]

Mr. Liepert: No, it's not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boutilier: I still have the floor, Mr. Speaker, don't I?

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Hon. member, sit down. Read the document you signed about preambles. Okay?

Mr. Boutilier: No response?

The Speaker: There was a response.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's failure to properly fund the postsecondary system is causing institutions to look at charging students non tuition-related fees of $500 or more to fill their financial shortfalls. In Alberta, however, students already have the third highest tuition in the country according to Stats Canada. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: can the minister explain why he thinks students should do the job of this government, which is to provide sustainable funding for the postsecondary education system?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, postsecondary education in the province of Alberta is a partnership between the taxpayer and the students. We have always maintained that an investment in one's future is an investment in education, probably the best investment they're going to make in their lifetime. So it's a partnership. I would say that the CPI cap, which we talked about, is a good way to move forward. Other provinces are removing their caps. We're keeping ours. I would say that in my discussions with the students over the course of this week as it relates to ancillary fees, we're going to continue that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't the minister move to provide sensible regulations for mandatory fees by limiting the amount that fees can be increased, requiring consultation with students, and ensuring that students aren't being charged extra fees for basic educational services?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that the hon. member isn't listening to what the students probably have told him. We met just the other day, and we talked about that very thing. We are looking at and discussing with postsecondaries how we might be able to deal with one-time issues around IT costs, around various things that aren't necessarily with regard to instruction but might be something that the institution might want to look at in terms of its fixed assets or in terms of supports for students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I met with the students this morning, and one of their concerns was having a referendum on all increases so that students would actually have a say in their fees.

Will the minister admit that his government's tuition cap policy is meaningless if institutions can simply raise noninstructional fees by unlimited amounts?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently there are regulations in place that do limit some of the noninstructional fees that institutions can levy. We are, as I said, working with the students and the postsecondary institutions to talk about how we might build some fences, if you will, around things that are outside of those regulations. To suggest that we're moving away from the policy that we've had before is ridiculous.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. One year ago today Alberta endorsed a 10-year plan to end homelessness. Alberta is one year and several million dollars into the plan, and we still have people living on the streets. Why does Alberta think it will succeed in any homelessness plan when other jurisdictions have failed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has made, in fact, a bold commitment to end homelessness as we know it. I fully believe that we can do this. When fully implemented, the 10-year plan to end homelessness will ensure that individuals who present themselves to a shelter will be channelled into permanent housing within 21 days. At the same time, I'd indicate that it's also important to note that this program, unlike any others in any other province, partners with nonprofit organizations throughout the province, who know how to stretch the dollars even further than the government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness has concluded that it's going to cost more than $3 billion to end homelessness in Alberta over the next 10 years, how can you be sure that the costs will not get out of hand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I share the same concern about costs. In the previous budgetary year there was an increase in spending in this department. This year there was a 19 per cent decrease in spending in our department, over $100 million. Why? Because over the last three years we completed a three-year plan to transfer $100 million in each of these years to municipalities. At the same time, we realize that we've completed this plan, and we have to move forward with other plans, including being compassionate to the taxpayer.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Several members have recently heard from communities that oppose certain affordable and homeless housing projects in their neighbourhoods. What is the minister doing to address some of the community concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. This member raises an important issue about community engagement. It is important, actually, to consult in the communities where affordable housing goes, but at the same time we also have to consider that we don't want to just concentrate affordable housing in one particular neighbourhood but, rather, spread it throughout the city, give people some dignity and actually integrate it into the community at large. That's in the best interests of the taxpayer and those people who are in affordable housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has created a catch-22 in the competitiveness review. It is extremely vague on expectations for changes in environmental regulations, yet only a 90-day period is allowed for a response from the task force on how changes are supposed to take place, so no detail, no context, but make changes in 90 days. To the Minister of Environment: is there support for increased funding for environmental impact assessments on the front end? If the government is serious about increasing development in the oil and gas sector, this is where the system bottlenecks.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday we talked about the role that Alberta Environment will play in the regulatory review. The member brings forward a very important point. The whole issue of how we conduct an environmental assessment I think has to be considered in the context of whether or not we are making unnecessary duplication. I do think that that's an area that we would like to move forward on to look at how we do environmental assessments in that context.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Is the minister saying that he's looking at downgrading the environmental impact assessments or somehow lessening the requirements for them?

Mr. Renner: No. I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, that if you do things the same way, you should probably expect the same outcomes. We would like to improve our outcomes. So I'm saying that there may be opportunities for us to do environmental assessments from the perspective of determining what is more global in nature. Can we have 15 volumes of data that are generated in environmental assessment that are more generic in nature and then concentrate our efforts on those aspects of that environmental assessment that would apply to any particular application and do that in more detail?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: what is the factual basis for stating in the review that there can be cost savings without negatively impacting the environment?

Mr. Renner: Well, I gave her a very good example yesterday when I talked about the fact that we can avoid unnecessary duplication. The line of questioning that we just were in is a very good example. Is it necessary to do over and over and over again environmental assessments that cover the same information? Or should we, in fact, be concentrating our energies on those aspects of that assessment that pertain to an individual application and enhancing the amount of background and research information for those aspects rather than duplicating over and over multiple kinds of information that's not necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Queen Elizabeth II Highway Intersections

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has been spending a great deal of money in the last few years on ring roads and intersections to improve traffic safety in urban areas. Queen Elizabeth II highway also is becoming extremely busy between Edmonton and Calgary, at times up to 30,000 vehicles per day on this road. Neither the road nor the intersections have been designed for this volume of traffic. My question to the Minister of Transportation: what are we doing to ensure the efficiency and the safety of the travelling public on the QE II highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're always looking to improve our highways and improve motorist safety at the same time. As for highway 2 we've built some new interchanges during the past few years and have upgraded a number of others. It's all part of a plan to eventually turn highway 2 into a freeway, which means that access will be via interchanges only. This really improves safety as interchanges are the safest way to enter or exit a highway.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how can you improve the safety of the old cloverleaf-style intersections?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, one way to do that is by converting these into what are called diamond interchanges. The diamond interchange is a much more modern design and handles higher traffic counts. A diamond provides longer and straighter entrance and exit ramps, with better visibility for the merging traffic. It also allows drivers to merge into traffic at highway speed, which is both safer and more efficient. We converted the north Innisfail interchange into a diamond last year, and we'll convert the highway 11A interchange at Red Deer into a diamond this year.

Mr. Prins: My last question is: when are you going to do the one at Lacombe and Ponoka?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we convert those old cloverleafs into diamonds as fast as we possibly can and when the traffic volume at that particular intersection triggers it. I mentioned the highway 11 interchange in my second answer, but there's a lot more to come. In our three-year program we're going to convert interchanges at Red Deer, Ponoka, Olds, and Wetaskiwin. I'm confident this will greatly improve the safety on the QE II.

Kainai Community Correctional Centre

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Kainai community corrections facility, the only correctional facility in the province established for aboriginal inmates, is being closed, and the reason given by the Solicitor General is that there are not enough minimum security aboriginal inmates available to use this facility. To the Solicitor General: now that we had an opportunity to discuss this last week, is it still your assertion that Kainai community corrections is closing because of a lack of minimum security aboriginal inmates in Alberta in need of its services?

Mr. Oberle: Actually, just to correct the preamble, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe I said that the reason that we are closing it is because of a lack of minimum security inmates. That is one issue. I also indicated, I think rather clearly, that we have a budgetary issue, and we also have services available in other locations. If the member would like to attend my estimates tonight, I'll be discussing this in more detail.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if you check Hansard from last week, you can refer to your answer there, where it did say that you had a lack of aboriginal inmates for the facility.

Nonetheless, on March 8 the Kainai correctional centre received notice that the Lethbridge Correctional Centre was holding 19 male and 15 female aboriginal inmates that were classified as minimum security. Why were these aboriginal inmates not serving time in the Kainai correctional centre, located a mere, short distance away?

Mr. Oberle: Well, again to correct the preamble, Mr. Speaker, I most certainly didn't say that there was a lack of aboriginal inmates. That's what he said in his second preamble. I did say that the inmate population was changing, and there are less minimum security inmates in our inmate population today. If the member would care to get his facts straight, we could get to a question.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Fair enough. So if we have less minimum security inmates, we have a few more medium security inmates. We have this facility that's being used for aboriginal inmates. Why aren't we using more of this facility to house aboriginal inmates in medium security? Can't you use your powers to make this happen?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I was asked that question before, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind the hon. member that the facility is not ours. It's a lease program, a contracted services arrangement. The facility is not ours, and it's not up to me to reconstruct it, and I don't have funds to do that. So we're seeking solutions elsewhere.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Alberta Economic Development Authority

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in this Legislature the Minister of Finance and Enterprise tabled the annual report for the Alberta Economic Development Authority, which was created in 1994 for the purpose of bringing together business and government to identify areas where we may enhance our competitiveness and facilitate economic growth and prosperity. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. In what way does the Alberta Economic Development Authority provide input to you and your department for policy development and strategies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-North Hill is correct. Last year represented the 15th anniversary for the Alberta Economic Development Authority, and last week I had the pleasure of tabling its annual report. Over those 15 years AEDA, as its acronym is, has provided us very valuable policy input on a variety of policy topics, ranging from carbon capture and storage, productivity, competitiveness, sustainable water management, and most recently broadband. All of these address the question of growing prosperity for the people of Alberta.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer AEDA presented the government with its report Restoring Fiscal Balance: Input for Budget 2010. What recommendations in that report were used as priorities for the development of the 2010 budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill is correct. AEDA did provide us advice on the budget for the upcoming year. In the wake of the economic collapse of 2008-09 we looked to the business community for advice on sound fiscal management and coming out of the recession. Three very specific recommendations they gave us were: we had to cut spending to reduce the deficit, but also they told us not to cut critical services, and that was reflected in our budget; they told us to take a cautious approach to issuing bonds; and finally they told us to focus on competitiveness, which explains why we have Bill 1.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my final supplemental to the same minister: as we move forward with Budget 2010 and subsequent budgets and achieving the goal of our Premier to be back in the black by 2012, will the Alberta Economic Development Authority continue to play a role in policy input?

Dr. Morton: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely yes. Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is one of the key initiatives of the government to get Albertans working again and to become globally competitive. I've met with the AEDA board, and I anticipate they'll play a very co-operative role in developing the policies that come out of Bill 1.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Funding for Homelessness Initiatives

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eight years ago the public was outraged when Ralph Klein threw money at a homeless person in a shelter. Upon reflection, at least he was giving money instead of taking it away. This government pretends it wants to end homelessness, but they fail to implement rent controls, they've cut funding to rent supplement programs, and overall they've cut a hundred million dollars from housing. How can the housing minister tell this Assembly that they're going to end homelessness any time soon when the government is actually cutting funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just before I get to the meat of the question, I want to thank the member for her comments. We may have some different partisan views from time to time, but we have the same goal, and that is ending homelessness as we know it.

Looking forward, we are on track. If you look at our spending now versus the last few years, while we have cut spending this year, we have actually grossly increased spending to ensure that we are actually going to make the 10-year target to end homelessness.

Ms Notley: Well, given that the government has cut $200 million from affordable housing, actually reduced planned affordable housing units by about 800 this year alone, and cut funding for rent support, wouldn't it be more honest for the minister to begin each housing announcement with an apology to the Albertans who are becoming homeless as we speak because this government keeps cutting money from them?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, if anybody owes an apology, it's this member for just insinuating dishonesty in this Chamber.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm looking at the same budget documents that everyone else has in this Assembly, so given that a year ago . . .

The Speaker: Please, sit down. We know that it's customary that the day that the budget for a particular department is being raised in this Assembly, we don't ask questions about it. So frame your question and go forward with the third, please, because his budget is coming up tonight.

Ms Notley: Given that a year ago the then housing minister said that she fully endorsed the $3.3 billion plan although was only prepared to fund one-third of it and given that so far every dollar for homelessness has been taken away from the affordable housing initiatives, why won't the minister admit that this government is merely robbing from poor and almost homeless Peter to pay already homeless Paul?

Mr. Denis: I didn't really keep track of all of the names between Ralph and Peter and Paul there. But, Mr. Speaker, moving forward, we are the only government in Canada, including provinces governed by NDP regimes, that has a 10-year plan to end homelessness. The Premier is sticking to this. This government is sticking to this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Erotic massage parlours in Alberta are incubators for sexual exploitation and human trafficking. The victims are the sex workers, who are often coerced and entrapped by pimps, profiteers, and gangs. They are treated as if they are barely human. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will the minister and his department investigate the number and welfare of foreign workers working in sexual massage parlours in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. member brings up an issue that I think is important to all of us in this House. Just like our Justice minister, I would look forward to working with this member on ideas on how we can address this very important issue. But just to let you know, in our most recent federal-provincial-territorial ministers' meeting the issue of identifying sex trade worker smugglers has been very high on the Canadian agenda. As a matter of fact, my department right now is training our front-line staff on how to identify situations where we suspect individuals have been brought in from abroad for the purpose of sex trade.

Dr. Taft: Great. Actually, that program is a good step in the right direction.

My next question is to the Solicitor General. Given that prevention is far better than treatment, will the minister use some of the $47 million surplus in the victims of crime fund to support the sex workers who are victimized in massage parlours with a program to help them escape from that business?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will work with all victims of crime in allocating that victims of crime fund. The member will know that we want to maintain some sort of a surplus there so that we can ensure the sustainability of that fund. But we'll certainly look at the proposal.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I appreciate that.

My next question then is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the health risks of sexual massage parlours, including the spreading of diseases like syphilis, which is on the increase in this province, will the minister direct his public health officials to use their full authority to clamp down on massage parlours as a public health risk?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Employment and Immigration through his staff provide related health coverage or health services or something to that effect. I'll discuss it with him, and we'll figure out where it should go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Code of Conduct for Health Care Workers

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently there have been stories about certain doctors saying that they have been told that they are not allowed to speak to the media about certain health issues. I constantly seek out feedback from my constituents using our health care system and from my constituents who are the front-line staff of the system. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. As an elected representative who highly values feedback and suggestions, I want to know if there has been a directive from anywhere within the health system that would constrain doctors or any other front-line staff from speaking out about health-related issues.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there hasn't been any no-talk order issued, certainly not by me, certainly by no one in Alberta Health and Wellness, and to the best of my knowledge neither from anyone within Alberta Health Services. In fact, openness and transparency are two very important hallmarks of our government, and I'll ensure that that's carried through. AHS likely has had some conversations with respect to the so-called code of conduct issue to ensure that trust, accountability, respect, and transparency are reflected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if that is the case, then why did certain cancer doctors in Calgary say that they are not allowed to speak to the media?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what might have prompted anyone to say that. I was recently with the Alberta Medical Association as well as with the United Nurses of Alberta heads, and we talked about various issues related to code of conduct. They seemed to be pretty understanding and relatively pleased with the new code of conduct that has been put in place. So we'll just make sure that it's working as effectively as it should because physicians must feel free to comment on medical issues any time they wish.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister. If there is no gag order in effect, then what can you do to ensure that all doctors and, for that matter, nurses and perhaps others are aware of this fact?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there is any uncertainty – and certain stories in the media would lead us to believe that there is – we're going to clear that up in a hurry because nurses, doctors, and perhaps others need to feel free to comment on medically related issues as they might impact services that they are providing or as they impact services Albertans are receiving.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:30 Construction and Manufacturing Outsourcing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred very large production modules for Imperial Oil's Kearl oil sands project will be built in South Korea. Substantial job losses here in Alberta will result from this deal. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is exporting construction jobs offshore the cheapest way for Imperial Oil to construct its Kearl oil sands project here in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I should start by saying that not only creating jobs but keeping Albertans employed and creating an environment in which businesses can stimulate employment is this ministry's and this government's number one priority. However, individual companies within this province make business decisions based on cost models or availability of production skills or other variables that this government does not monitor. One of the differences between this government and perhaps governments in different parts of the world is that we don't tell people how to run businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of unemployment: what is the total value of the work being done in South Korea, and how many person-hours of work have been lost here in Alberta in the construction and steel-fabricating industries?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if this question is appropriately addressed to me. He should contact the employer and find out. This government is not in the business of business. We don't tell businesses how to run businesses in Alberta. However, we are in the role of making sure that there are workers available in the province, and we always make sure to hire Albertans first, the rest of Canadians second, and then, when you can't find them, export abroad.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of unemployment: how can steel fabricators here in Alberta compete fairly and on a level economic playing field against South Korean manufacturers who have access to cheap, subsidized steel and steel products? How can industries here compete? How can you allow that?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess welcome to the real world would be my answer to this question. The fact is that he identifies a very good point. Alberta is immersed in a global economy. We compete not only against other provinces and states but also against the world, and our job is to make sure that our employers have well-trained and skilled workers in this province. However, that doesn't mean that they will not export some jobs or import workers to this province. It's a world economy, we're functioning in it, and it is our role as government to make us as competitive as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and then maybe the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

School Construction and Renovation

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Education. There is a large backlog in deferred maintenance of schools, and with classroom space becoming critical in some areas of the province, what is the minister planning to do to address the student space issue and the maintenance backlog when there are no new projects in the 2010-11 budget?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, while it's important to note that there are not any new announced projects in the budget, there are 101 major new or major refurbishing projects under way as we speak or in planning which will start shortly, so there is a significant amount of work happening. The 101 projects will see the creation of more than 30,000 new student spaces and the refurbishment of a considerable amount of space that's out there now. We're putting about $550 million into renewal of our school system.

Mr. Benito: My final question is to the same minister. I understand that more than half of the capital budget is going towards schools in Edmonton and Calgary. With Alberta's student population continuing to grow, what is this budget doing to address the school infrastructure pressure in the rest of the province, particularly in the communities outside the urban areas?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of the 101 projects that I spoke of, 58 of those projects are in jurisdictions outside the metro area. The work is being done, yes, to create with the ASAP 1 and 2 projects new spaces primarily in Edmonton and Calgary and the immediately surrounding areas. That's where the majority of growth is happening. There are other growth areas that we need to pay attention to, but there's a significant amount of work being done to keep up and to improve the school infrastructure right across this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Employment and Immigration stated that his number one priority is that every Albertan leaves home in the morning and comes back to his or her family safe at the end of the workday. In 2008, the last reported year, 23 people died as a result of farm incidents and 19 the year before. These are Albertans who left for work but didn't return home. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why is the minister content taking no action to protect paid farm workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate the fact that my number one priority is to make sure that every worker leaves their home, be it in the morning, and comes home healthy and, obviously, alive at the end of the day. That is my number one priority. It's heart wrenching when I read about accident reports when, unfortunately, something has happened. We're not in the business of pointing fingers. This is a collaboration between employers, employees, and this government to make sure that we have as safe a workplace as possible.

Now, dealing with farms, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid we're going on.

Ms Pastoor: Given that occupational health and safety legislation increases monitoring and safety in the workplace, which leads to decreased injury and health in every other workplace, when will the minister change the legislation to include paid farm workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I must brag on behalf of our Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. He has just significantly increased funding for safety training throughout the Alberta agricultural community. Under the auspices of this department WCB coverage is available to farm workers if they choose to avail themselves of WCB coverage on farms. That has always been available. But we are looking at a balance. Most farming in this province still happens on family farms, where people actually live, not only work.

Ms Pastoor: Given that the farm accident monitoring system is voluntary and that, as a result, farm injuries are widely underreported, how can the effectiveness of the farm safety education programs be accurately determined to ensure that that $715,000 is well used?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we are monitoring all injuries that are employment related on farms. But this member actually brings up a very good point, perhaps unintentionally. The fact of the matter is that if an accident happens on a farm, it doesn't necessarily mean that it's a work-related accident. People actually live on farms; they play on farms. Those are not only places of employment, so not all accidents that occur on a family farm are farming related.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Highway 27 Interchange

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. The minister has repeatedly stated in this Assembly that the safety of Albertans on Alberta roads is his highest priority, yet the overpass on the QE II at highway 27 no longer meets today's standards as far as access or exit lanes are concerned. Earlier today he spoke of turning cloverleafs into diamonds on other locations on the QE II. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. When is he going to offer me a diamond and turn this very important intersection into a much safer road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, had the hon. member been paying attention to the answer that I gave earlier to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, he would know that we intend to upgrade this interchange. So I'll repeat myself. Converting this cloverleaf to the diamond design is on our three-year construction plan. The conversion won't happen this year, but it will be done in either 2011 or 2012.

Mr. Marz: I apologize for not hearing the minister earlier because he's so soft spoken.

To the minister: is the bridge structure going to be replaced as part of this new plan, and if not, why not?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the current bridge structure will be used as part of the upgraded interchange. The bridge may be modified or added onto, but we're certainly going to utilize it. The bridge is still in very good shape, and I don't think this province's taxpayers would appreciate us ripping out a perfectly good bridge.

Mr. Marz: Again to the Minister of Transportation: how many more years of estimated life does the current bridge structure have, and is it economical to wait longer?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, that interchange was built in 1966, and our bridges have a life expectancy of 75 to 80 years, so there are at least 30 to 40 years left in that bridge if we did nothing to it. As part of the conversion to the diamond the modifications to the bridge may extend the life expectancy even further. I can assure this member that we're going to do the best for his constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Forest Industry Competitiveness

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The forest industry is very important to Whitecourt-St. Anne and to many other constituencies around this province. While the industry has gone through some tough times, I recently read in the AFPA news release that shipments of forest products to the United States are up. Will this mean increased employment in the mills in Whitecourt-St. Anne?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that in many of the 50-plus communities in the province of Alberta where there is a reliance on this industry, it is good news, and it very likely will increase the number of hours and shifts that are worked at mills in the province of Alberta, but it goes much farther than that. As a matter of fact, we need to continue to work with the industry to broaden the issues around the use of fibre, generally speaking, in bioenergy, the possibility of fuel production, diversification into petrochemicals, and fuel products.

Mr. VanderBurg: To the same minister. With the Canadian dollar rising, what's your opinion: how will this negatively impact the Alberta forest sector?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I think it goes without saying that there are many factors around the pressure that's on the forest industry today. However, one of the things that's been very negative to any of our commodity production sectors is the fact that the Canadian dollar is strengthening, and as it comes closer and closer, of course, to parity, our market possibilities and our competitiveness in international markets begin to decrease.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister: will this minister commit to working with the federal government to secure an increased market share for Alberta in the American market?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, you know, we do have international trade agreements around the issues, one of them, of course, relative to softwood lumber. I don't believe that in the long term that's necessarily the key for us. I do understand the importance of the U.S. market, but I believe that it's incumbent on us to work with the federal government not only on those issues but on issues that allow us to expand the markets of those commodities and the products from Alberta to other places in the world that are receptive to those types of products.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. In total, we had 118 questions and answers. Twenty different members were recognized: nine Official Opposition Liberal members, one Wildrose Alliance member, two New Democratic members, one independent member, and seven Progressive Conservative members.

We'll continue with the Routine in 15 seconds from now.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008, after consultation with postsecondary students and elected student representatives, the Premier and the government committed to capping tuition fee increases to the consumer price index, CPI, until 2016. In 2009 the Premier wrote to the council of university students.

My government continues to support initiatives contained in the Affordability Framework, including the Tuition Fee Policy. The Government of Alberta would not consider revising the Tuition Fee Policy without consulting with key stakeholders such as the student organizations that you represent.

Not surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, the Premier broke this promise just two months later and announced that universities and colleges could submit proposals to hike tuitions for professional faculties across this province. Currently tuition fees in Alberta are the third highest in Canada, and for many students the cost of postsecondary education is becoming unaffordable.

This creates a big problem for many Albertans. Students must work hard to get good grades and to make the most of the very important investment that Alberta's taxpayers make in our education and advanced education systems. All educators must do their best to make sure that students are performing and that we truly do provide them with a world-class education.

The proposed increases create even more uncertainty for the families and students that have made financial sacrifices based on the government's promise to cap tuition increases. Given that this government has introduced legislation to make Alberta more competitive, wouldn't it make sense to look ahead and make the postsecondary system more competitive as well?

Mr. Speaker, we all know that a good postsecondary education will be key to the success of Alberta in an increasingly competitive global market. On behalf of students across this province I challenge the government to keep its promise and maintain the current tuition increases to the CPI until 2016 and allow all Albertans the opportunity for affordable and accessible postsecondary education.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 10

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010. This being a money bill, His Honour the Administrator, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This act has been a successful tool to date in suppressing crime and making Alberta communities safer. The civil forfeiture process has allowed us to disrupt street-level drug dealing and residential marijuana grow operations. We've also been able to seize property derived from illegal acts, which will be used to compensate victims affected by these crimes.

The amendments we are proposing will allow us to broaden the scope of our act in accordance with recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada. These proposed amendments are aimed at making it easier to restrain and dispose of property and proceeds tainted by crime and to help compensate public bodies such as municipalities who shoulder the costs of criminal activity.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Bill 11

Witness Security Act

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act.

This legislation will establish a provincial witness security program in Alberta. Investigating and prosecuting gang-related crimes is becoming increasingly difficult, especially in cases when individuals are unwilling to come forward and give evidence because they fear retaliation. Alberta's Witness Security Act will provide short-term protective services to witnesses who agree to give evidence; for example, in gang-related investigations and particularly homicides. This legislation will complement the federal witness protection program, which addresses the needs of witnesses who require longer term protection and identity changes. Alberta's law enforcement agencies and the Crown are working extremely hard to reduce gang activity and deserve every tool possible to do their jobs.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 11 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Bill 12

Body Armour Control Act

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act.

The proposed legislation would allow police to seize body armour from individuals who do not have a permit for its legitimate use.

Police officers, peace officers, emergency medical service providers, Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission inspectors, licensed private security guards, and others who need to wear body armour to do their jobs will be exempt from the requirement to get a permit. Individuals holding a valid firearms permit will also be exempt. Other individuals may be issued a permit on the basis that they have legitimate occupational or personal safety reasons to wear body armour.

The goal of this proposed legislation is to restrict the ability of violent criminals and known gang members to possess body armour while ensuring that law-abiding Albertans have access to this equipment for occupational or personal safety reasons.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 12 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the report from the CIBC titled Provincial Budget Briefs, dated February 9, 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from one of my constituents, Deanna Kayne. She's concerned with the high cost of postsecondary education. She notes that to pay for education, students must either have the support of a wealthy family or incur a substantial debt that could take decades to pay off.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of 28 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Webber, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act, the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal 2009 annual report.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Competitiveness Act

[Debate adjourned March 11]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to continue the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join second reading debate on Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, the government's apparent showpiece piece of legislation in this particular session of the Alberta Legislature, although it's not much of a show.

This is a pretty thin bill, and I mean that literally and figuratively. It is only three pages long. Even at that I'm quite surprised that we needed to go three pages and cut down the requisite number of trees to essentially produce a bill as Bill 1 that does nothing more than allow for the establishment of a board or a committee with a vague mandate for increasing competitiveness. I have been in this Legislature now for, I think, five and a half years – that would, I guess, be six years of spring sessions – and this is the flimsiest, most vague Bill 1 that I have seen so far.

I don't really understand the point of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I don't really understand the purpose of this bill. There is no reference in the bill as to when completion or action of benchmarks and goals will take place, nor is there any reference to any specific action that will be taken now. It seems to me that all this bill does is kind of legislate an idea: well, we should be more competitive, and we should set up a committee to figure out how we're going to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can do better than this. We waited long enough for the oil and gas competitiveness review – the Minister of Energy brought that out into the public light last Thursday in Calgary – and at that there were a couple of pieces missing from it. I'm given to understand that part of the reason that the competitiveness review for oil and gas came out when it did was because there was considerable pressure from the investment community to find out what the government was going to do, which direction it was going to take, that sort of thing.

We certainly have, I think, a good broad sense of the direction that the government is going to take. We're still waiting for the royalty curves to be designed, which I asked the minister about in the House here yesterday, and that will come down, I guess, by or before the end of May. That's a pretty key piece of the competitiveness review, I think, to determine what the royalty curves look like because they could make a lot of difference. So there's still a little bit of work left to do on the oil and gas competitiveness review.

This bill does not get anywhere nearly as specific as the oil and gas competitiveness review did. It just sort of seems to want to somehow increase collaboration between government and the private sector to improve Alberta's competitiveness, to allow for the establishment of a board or a committee with a kind of general loosey-goosey mandate to identify actionable areas for increased competitiveness, to quicken the implementation of government competitiveness initiatives, to establish benchmarks, as I said, to measure Alberta's competitiveness. Yet there is really no detail about how any of this is going to be done.

You know, the government already has a Regulatory Review Secretariat, Mr. Speaker, with the following mandate, and I will quote it in part: "The goal of regulatory reform is to identify opportunities to reduce and simplify the regulatory burden of government on the people and businesses of Alberta." That speaks to the red-tape burden of compliance requirements and regulations. Although Bill 1 is more about collaboration, I think you'd have to argue that both have similar mandates, and both ultimately have the same end goal of trying to make business more productive, more competitive, make the province more competitive, make our prosperity more sustainable.

If I can talk for a second about the red-tape aspect of things, which is not specifically in this bill but is, as I pointed out, a means to much the same end, we're still waiting for some significant action on that from this government. British Columbia and Newfoundland have set and even exceeded percentage reduction goals. They've produced results. We've been reviewing the regulatory burden for a decade or more, and we've yet to produce any reductions in red tape that other provinces have. There is a joke, Mr. Speaker, that, you know, governments always support cutting red tape as long as they can cut it lengthwise. It would seem that that's what we've been doing here in the province of Alberta.

In fact, I'm suspicious that someone in the backrooms of the deep recesses of the machinery of government in this province has pulled the wool over the Premier's eyes here with Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, because it doesn't seem to do anything that would enhance competitiveness. It seems to have done something that would enhance bureaucracy through the creation, the implementation, the facilitation of an ability to study the concept of what competitiveness might look like should we wish to actually look at competitiveness. It doesn't really seem to do anything concrete, anything active, anything actionable, anything that solves problems with a goal to making this province more competitive.

You know, that kind of gets under my skin because while we've been looking at competitiveness in the oil and gas industry – and thank goodness for that – I have a lot of people living in my constituency of Calgary-Currie who make their living or try to in the film and television production business, which continues to be one of those businesses, one of those spheres of economic activity, that holds out great potential yet never, ever actually seems to be able to reach that full potential.

There are a couple of good reasons for that, Mr. Speaker. One, the tax incentive, or film development credit regime, that exists in this province relative to other provinces and other jurisdictions where movies and television programs are made. You have to look at two different arms of that, both indigenous, or domestic, film and television production and creating the climate under which Hollywood producers want to come here and film big-budget motion pictures or film network television series for airing in the United States and other countries around the world. We're getting the pants beat off us by other provinces, who, by the way, are going through some of their own struggles, provinces like B.C. and Ontario, cities like Vancouver and Toronto, because they're now competing pretty much one to one with the motion picture industry's own backyard of Hollywood. The dollar is worth virtually a dollar today, and there's a forecast by one of the big banks that, in fact, we will achieve parity within the next couple of months with the U.S. dollar, so that's a challenge in and of itself.

Of course, there are jurisdictions all over North America, all around the world who want to attract the film and television production business for the very reason that it creates a lot of jobs, it creates a lot of economic spinoff, it's got a multiplier effect, it's clean, and it's green. You know, you don't really have to reclaim a motion picture set to any great extent. You don't really have to go around 40 years later and deal with a television tailings pond because they don't exist. It's an industry that you can bring in and put a lot of people to work in and create a lot of spinoff jobs and a lot of spinoff business for all sorts of other sectors and businesses that will serve the motion picture and television crews and provide services for them. Then, when all is said and done – and you hope that they don't just pack up and go back to California when that particular show, that particular movie, that particular series is done shooting – you don't have a big mess to clean up at the end, which is kind of desirable in this day and age, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing that the industry doesn't have yet that it needs in order to really take off in the province of Alberta is a world-class, right-sized sound stage in the city of Calgary. The city of Calgary is the obvious location for it because most film producers and television producers want to take advantage of the exterior scenery in southern Alberta: the mountains, the prairies, the geography of southern Alberta. In fact, what keeps them from doing a lot more business in this province is, in large part, the fact that they do not have the proper facilities to shoot their interior scenes.

Those are the two things that this industry needs in order to be competitive. There's every indication, Mr. Speaker, that if this government just got down to business on that, we could create a really vibrant, going concern in film and television production in the province of Alberta that helps diversify our economy. It builds on a strength we already have because we're using crews that in many cases are the envy of Canada and the envy of North America. They're highly, highly respected and regarded throughout the motion picture and television industry. We train them here. We educate them here. Increasingly, after we finish training and educating them, we're exporting them to Vancouver, where they can find some work, because they can't find it here.

You see, Mr. Speaker, that's kind of what I think we should be doing here with Bill 1. I'm using film and television production just as an example and, I think, a very achievable example. But we should be getting down to business. I think that part of what competitiveness is all about is getting down to business and solving problems and improving the situation that we find ourselves in and taking real steps to make real progress towards a more competitive and more productive business climate in the province of Alberta, taking real steps towards a more productive and more competitive Alberta.

Instead, what we seem to be taking steps with on Bill 1 is a busier bureaucracy and employment for some more – I don't know – friends of the government or whoever needs a job these days, sitting on a board or a commission or a committee, to sit around and study what competitiveness would look like if we really wanted to be competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think we have that much time to waste. We have just come through a very, very serious economic downturn. Luckily, the price of oil, which we have nothing directly to do with – we just benefit from it – is over $80 a barrel again, and that's going to help pull us out of the recession quicker than some other jurisdictions. But we should be taking advantage of that competitive advantage that we have, by virtue of the fact that we have oil under our foot and it commands a reasonably decent price these days, to get on with the business of getting more competitive not only in oil and gas but in every area that we already have some degree of expertise in. When the world comes out of this recession, all the experts say that it's going to be a very different world and a much more competitive world. We could be part of that, or we could be left behind twiddling our thumbs and studying the thing and debating a bill to allow us to study it and passing legislation to create a committee or a board to do this while the rest of the world is actually making a better mousetrap, maybe filming a half-decent movie about it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. What could the government have done differently in this bill so that we are more competitive?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, thank you for the question. Well, what could the government have done differently? The government could have sat down, I think, and worked out in Bill 1 some specific steps that it wanted to take to make us more competitive. Depending, I think, on the sector, on the endeavour, on the industry, on business, it could have involved, well, all the things that the board or the committee will eventually chew over over the next year or two or four or 10, as in the case of the Regulatory Review Secretariat: tax incentives, perhaps tax penalties as well for desirable work not done or not done according to a certain set of parameters, real regulatory reform that cuts red tape across itself as opposed to lengthwise, that does like the province of British Columbia has done, for instance. B.C. set a goal in 2001 to reduce government regulation by about one-third in three years. It met this goal and kept going, and as of January of this year B.C. had eliminated 152,000 regulations since the review started. That's a red tape reduction of 42 per cent.

You know, I think you start looking at areas like that, hon. member, and start looking at specifics. Start looking at what can be done and how the government can partner with the industry or the business or the economic sector in question through regular ongoing consultation, where the government sits down at the table representing the public interest and businesses involved in that industry sit down at the table representing the interests of their shareholders and their various stakeholders, and you have everybody committed to a win-win arrangement through consultation, participation, partnership, negotiation. You work it out so that when people get up and leave the table, they leave the table with a solution that everybody can live with, that leaves the people of Alberta better off than they were when we went in. Those would be some of my thoughts and some of my starting areas.

You know, if you're going to go to the trouble of bringing in a piece of legislation, especially given this government, which for years now has said, "The less legislation the better; you really don't need all these laws," then let's bring in a law about something. When I talked about the film and television business, I was reminded that Seinfeld used to be a show about nothing, which is fine. I'd support a law that would support the creation and the filming of a show about nothing, but I can't support a law about nothing, and that's what this law is.

3:10

The Speaker: That was a pretty long response.

Okay. Any additional comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Kang: The way the Member for Calgary-Currie came across: is it like putting the cart before the horse? Is that what they're coming across as by bringing in this law?

Mr. Taylor: I'm not sure that I'd put it that way, hon. member. I think it's more like: we took the horse out and shot it, and we can't get anywhere with the cart without the horse.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes. My question would be: when B.C. got rid of all those regulations, are you inferring that all those regulations were costing someone money? When you're talking about the horse, many of these go back to the horse-and-buggy days. They were just lying on the books and were doing nothing anyway.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has a point. If we were to go through all our regulations, whether all our regulations in total or all our regulations in one particular field of endeavour, like the oil and gas business, we'd find a number of regulations that just no longer apply because people no longer get back and forth by horse and buggy, for instance. We'd find a number of regulations that . . .

The Speaker: Alas, the time has expired.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. VanderBurg in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I call the committee to order.

Bill 2

Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This bill, if passed, would paraphrase the Health Professions Act by requiring professional regulatory organizations to consult with the ministers responsible, namely Advanced Education and Technology along with Employment and Immigration, and consider their comments prior to removing or approving a program of study for registration requirements. This omnibus bill would ensure that this provision is included in the Architects Act, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act, the Land Surveyors Act, the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act, the Regulated Accounting Profession Act, and the Veterinary Profession Act. If passed, Bill 2 would also update the language in both the Agrology Profession Act and the Regulated Forestry Profession Act, both of which have similar provisions already in place.

Bill 2 also responds to the Alberta government's concern that qualification requirements for an individual to practise in a certain profession are reflective of the actual requirements to do the job.

This proposed legislation would also ensure that the Alberta government is apprised of discussions between professional regulatory organizations and this province's postsecondary learning institutions and is involved at the earliest stage possible regarding any potential changes to postsecondary curriculum.

Finally and most importantly, in addition to providing greater consistency among similar legislation, Bill 2 would continue to enhance the strong, proactive relationship between the Alberta government and this province's professional regulatory organizations. Each organization affected has been advised of Bill 2 and is understanding of the reasons behind these proposals.

Mr. Chair, I would like to address a concern raised by members opposite in second reading. There were a number of questions, but all had a similar theme: why is this necessary at this time, why are we seeing this bill in front of us now, and why duplicate something that's already in place? This government is the first to agree that our working relationships with Alberta's professional regulatory organizations are very strong indeed. Updating legislation and ensuring consistency among several pieces of legislation doesn't have to be a reactive measure. This is about being proactive, about ensuring that government, especially the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology, is well aware of any requested changes to curriculum, changes that could affect planning, budgeting, and ultimately the pocketbook of Alberta taxpayers.

In fact, it was the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology who reiterated during second reading that when a change is made to the academic qualification in a profession, we can transmit that through the entire Campus Alberta to ensure transferability for the students and to ensure that there's value there for the taxpayer. So while the opposition is desperately searching for an ulterior motive behind this piece of legislation, I can only say that there is none. I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Centre who requested a list of professional associations affected by Bill 2 and began wondering whether it includes doctors, nurses, and midwives, to name a few. The answer is no. Many of the professions she mentioned are already covered under the Health Professions Act; indeed, that is the act that we're intending to mirror in Bill 2.

To be clear, I will now list alphabetically the professions included within Bill 2 for the members opposite: certified general accountants, certified management accountants, certified management consultants, chartered accountants, community planners, human ecologists and home economists, information systems professionals, land surveyors, local government managers, municipal assessors, professional agrologists, professional biologists, professional chemists, professional electrical contractors, professional engineers, professional foresters, professional forest technologists, professional geologists, professional geophysicists, purchasing managers, registered architects and licensed interior designers, school business officials, shorthand reporters, and veterinarians.

Mr. Chair, also in second reading last week the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised an important question on the use of the term "academic" instead of "education" in the Regulated Accounting Profession Act, one of the acts addressed in Bill 2. We believe, as does the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, that the word "academic" reflects the kind of information required by the government. The postsecondary component is what government is interested in here: degrees, diplomas, and certificates.

There are many other educational activities internal to professions like in-house training or competency requirements; however, these educational activities are not the subject of Bill 2. To make that perfectly clear, I would like to introduce a House amendment. I propose that section 6(2) of the bill be amended to change the proposed section 15.1 of the Regulated Accounting Profession Act by striking out the word "education" and substituting the word "academic."

I have tabled the appropriate number of copies and will wait a moment while the pages distribute them to all hon. members. Meanwhile, I will add that we've done our homework, Mr. Chair, and we've taken a close look at the legislation involved and look forward to providing greater consistency for all of our professional regulatory organizations.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: As the copies are being distributed around the Assembly, I have an indication from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to be on the speaking list. We'll speak to the amendment first.

We'll call this amendment A1. Any speakers? The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in support of the proposed amendment to Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act. I will make my remarks brief because I believe that this amendment speaks for itself. It was never the intent for this piece of legislation to capture the internal educational activities of professional regulatory organizations, and under the current use of the word "education," the boundary is unclear. By striking out this word and replacing it with the word "academic," I believe that the intent of the legislation will be more clearly reflected in the wording.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay for responding to the concerns raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and ensuring that this legislation is as concise as possible.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Any other members on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll ask the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Chair: We'll move on to the main bill as amended. You've withdrawn?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Any other speakers? The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. An interesting bill. The objective: it would amend a series of laws governing professional associations in Alberta. The amendments are to require the council of the professional association or its comparable governing body to consult with the minister responsible for the act and the minister of advanced education in the event of any changes to the academic or licensing requirements for that profession.

In the government's summary of the bills for the spring session the purpose of Bill 2 was defined as addressing "the potential for over-qualification which may be unnecessary for an individual to perform the work." That in itself, I think, is a very interesting thought behind this and a rationale.

Bill 2 would affect the occupations that have already been mentioned, but I'll go through some of them: agrology, architects, regulated accountants, engineering, geological and geophysical professions as well as land surveyors, regulated forestry professionals, veterinary professionals, and any association registered under the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act.

We on this side of the House will be voting against this, and the rationale behind that is that we feel that it's a redundant piece of legislation that has been poorly justified by the government. Professional associations already consult with the government on a routine basis when they amend or alter their academic standards or licensing requirements.

Some of the professional acts amended by this bill are also unnecessary. Veterinarians, for example, have their requirements spelled out already in legislation. The association representing forestry professionals adjusts its criteria based on a benchmark program at NAIT. Neither association can alter its requirements without going to the minister or to cabinet to change legislation or regulations.

The only objective of the bill is to prevent professional associations from inflating entry requirements, so-called credential creeping. The government has failed to present any evidence of credential creep in many of the occupations affected and noted in this bill. Even if we can substantiate this problem, the proposed bill would not likely resolve the issue as this legislation only requires associations to consult with the relevant ministers and consider their feedback.

I question this part, as I've mentioned before, about the potential for overqualification which may be unnecessary for an individual to perform their work. Now we're calling it credential creep. I have a problem with that kind of thinking because, in my mind, in my opinion, the only way forward both here and abroad will be accomplished with advanced education. The fact that we would even hint at somebody not wanting to further themselves in education, I think, is quite frightening. Why would we always accept the status quo?

I understand, I think, part of, perhaps, being the entry level, but to actually say that it's an overqualification for a person to perform work I find very interesting when, as I've mentioned, in fact the only way forward is through advanced education. We are in competition with India and China; we are in competition with other countries that put high, high emphasis on a highly educated population.

Finally, there's the danger that this legislation is the latest in a series of attempts by the government – labour mobility clauses is another – to interfere with the operations of what is really supposed to be an independent regulatory association. The government has a responsibility to work with professional associations to serve public interests, but it would appear that this government seems to have a very poor understanding of professional associations and the way they approach changes to academic standards for licensing requirements. Every association and every profession that I'm aware of is constantly trying to move the bar forward because many of these associations have research departments. When you do research and put it forward into development, you can't help but move forward.

The stakeholders feel that it is certainly worth having the discussion in the House, and this is what I believe that I have just done. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

3:30

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Are there others?

Seeing no others, are you ready for the question on Bill 2?

Ms Notley: Excuse me.

The Acting Chair: Oh, sorry. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's sometimes hard to see those of us way back here by the back door.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise to speak briefly to this bill. This is an interesting bill. There are both good and bad considerations that I think underlie it, and there is some merit to it, yet we also have some concern about why it is coming forward and what the implications of it are. Generally speaking, of course, the bill sort of presumes and those who've spoken in favour of it presume that there has been quite a bit of consultation with the professional groups that are impacted by the bill. We have heard that that level of consultation has not been consistent across the board. One is then concerned what that will mean and the degree to which it actually represents more of a top-down approach to moving forward with this issue, so for obvious reasons we have some hesitation as a result of that.

The other thing, of course, deals with sort of the competing interests. On one hand I think it actually does make good sense for the minister – typically, I assume, the minister of advanced education – to be consulted on these kinds of changes because, of course, in a perfect world it's necessary for the minister to be able to determine whether the system itself has the capacity to adjust to those changes and whether the resources are there and how those might be rolled out and all those kinds of things. Having credentials increase without necessarily having the capacity to provide those credentials to learners would be a problem, and it would ultimately create a shortage. That's important.

The problem, though, of course, then sort of gets into the issue of: what are sort of the overarching objectives on the part of the government with respect to managing the labour force? There are some professions where I suspect, you know, this term credential creep may be a legitimate concern and where, in fact, the professional bodies have almost gotten to the point where we have a situation of the tail wagging the dog vis-à-vis public policy as well as the funding of the professional services provided.

However, there are other professions where that's definitely not the case and where we've actually seen this government articulate a stated desire to reduce the level of qualification in certain professions. That's where I have a bit of concern about what it is that's driving this particular bill. In particular, I refer to, frankly, a majority of the professions that are occupied primarily by women. Whether you're talking about nursing, whether you're talking about LPNs, whether you're talking about social workers, whether you're talking about child care workers, these are all professional groups who at one point or another in the last two years have come up against resistance from this government towards their either promoting the professional qualifications of their group or at least crystalizing and recognizing the professional qualifications of those groups. In every case that is linked, of course, to a desire to keep their wages lower.

Well, we know that in Alberta the wage gap between men and women is the highest in the country – I believe women right now earn about 67 cents on the dollar – and we know that these professional groups and those that have been previously identified by the government in other contexts are primarily occupied by women. One then becomes concerned about what the overarching objectives of the government are and to what extent they're going to try to manage the labour force in a way to save a dollar and the extent to which that dollar is saved on the backs of low- and middle-income professional women.

That is the concern that I have with respect to this bill, and I do appreciate, obviously, that this bill does not necessarily relate to those areas that I've identified. I also understand that some of the rationale that has been provided to support this bill is a rationale that applied to these other groups and is very problematic. Again, it's one of those things that requires a leap of faith. Simple consultation between the professional groups and the minister of advanced ed makes good sense in terms of planning – it absolutely does – but only if you've got a government that does not gear towards picking and choosing professions based on whatever their economic interest is and whatever the history is with respect to a particular political party's recognition and appreciation for the work that is done.

With those words, I will end my comments on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Are there others?

Seeing none, I'd ask members to return to their chairs before I ask the question.

[The clauses of Bill 2 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

[Mr. VanderBurg in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I call on the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Having heard the motion as proposed by the hon. Member for Little Bow, are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 3

Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with interest to the debate on Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act, 2010. As we've heard, this legislation will amend section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act. Bill 3 awards a set amount of damages for bereavement to a surviving spouse; adult interdependent partner, or AIP; parent; or child of a deceased person. The amendment will remove references to marital status currently found in section 8 of the act. This reflects a decision made by the Alberta Court of Appeal and the current state of the law in Alberta.

The amendments will also remove the reference to illegitimacy as the current act defines child to include an illegitimate child. Consistent with current demographics and family law legislation all children are treated as children of their parents regardless of their parents' relationship.

It's now my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 3, the Fatal Accidents Amendment Act. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any speakers? Question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 10: Ms Redford]

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to speak to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, an important bill to be sure, an important amendment that's been a topic of much conversation both in and out of the House, especially since 2008, the last provincial election, when there were so many irregularities, so much uncertainty, so many instances of barriers to access to the polling stations, misinformation, in some cases a sense of a bias in those polling stations with some of the returning officers, and then a lack of accountability around some of these issues. It's no surprise we've now seen a court case launched in respect to this and continued pressure on this government to actually step up and make this a more authentic democratic process.

The essentials of a fair democratic process surely are known to all members. It's no mystery that across the world democracy is being embraced at very different levels of implementation. Surely, the essential measures of a true democracy have to be examined, and they have to do with the freedom to vote unhindered, uninfluenced, and secret. They have to do with fairness to all, regardless of the physical ability. They need to be accessible. They need to be accountable for how they're being influenced by money or by political power. They need to reflect the public will.

On all these counts we have been pressing this government for many years, and it's now reached a point where government has finally taken some action. I commend the government for some of the changes that have been made, but they reflect a less ambitious approach than we had hoped to move the ball forward for a leadership role on democracy in the western world. It took a Supreme Court decision and constant scrutiny of the Legislature to get these reforms made.

I guess the question Albertans are asking is: what is it going to take to get some of the other issues addressed such as fixed election dates; the release of information on campaign financing for leadership challenges; the need to reform our campaign financing, where too much money is influencing the outcome of elections; the lack of enforced access to certain buildings and institutions to campaign; the ambiguity around special ballots to remedy some of the inaccurate or inaccessible situations; the need to address inaccurate polling information and contradictory information that people have received in the past; and, fundamentally, the need to reflect the public will? Again and again Albertans have asked: how is it that just over 50 per cent of people support a particular party and the Legislature reflects that party by 87 or more per cent? Clearly, this is not encouraging people to recognize the importance of being involved, voting, and taking the democratic process seriously.

We've made a number of recommendations in these areas and will continue to do so, having recognized that some of the following are positive changes in this bill amendment. It does, for example, make the Chief Electoral Officer responsible for appointing returning officers. We expect that to result in fewer biased returning officers because the Conservative Party has less opportunity to identify and name returning officers that support their particular political stripe.

It does provide for greater investigative powers of the Chief Electoral Officer. We hope that will result in more active and accountable results after elections.

It does provide now for anyone who wants to vote early to get access to advance polls. This is positive. People have very busy lives and complicated lives and should not be restricted from early voting if that's their choice.

It does provide that candidates who run a campaign deficit must dispose of that deficit and report to the Chief Electoral Officer when and by which manner that deficit is retired. This is positive. Wherever money is involved, there needs to be transparency and accountability.

It does seek to improve the safeguards of the list of electors, a positive change.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It does allow the Chief Electoral Officer to test new voting technologies and to conduct pilot projects. We need to find better ways, more reliable ways to get people's views and choices into the electoral system.

Several other innovative concepts include looking at election finance reforms. We hope that will result in significant changes to the way campaigns are financed and will properly reflect the priority of Albertans to see that money does not have such an influence on electoral outcome.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would re-emphasize that we on this side feel very strongly about the need to be transparent about leadership campaign financing and are puzzled why this would not be a priority for a government that says that they want to be accountable and transparent. We still look forward to seeing the leadership information from the last Conservative leadership campaigns. That would restore some level of confidence.

We would again encourage the government to look at fixed election dates, which have been embraced by most other jurisdictions, to try to address the question of fairness and to honour our commitment to fair reflection of the public wishes.

With respect to trying to reflect more accurately the public will in the Legislative Assembly and the numbers of members each party has, we would also encourage the government to consider amending this to include a citizens' assembly to examine other forms of voter procedures, including proportional representation and the single transferable vote and other such options that have been explored across the country. There is an appetite in Alberta to look at other ways to improve the accountability of government, the balance in government, the responsiveness of government to the public wishes. By not holding a citizens' assembly, it appears that this government is entrenched in protecting its own interests, its own party interests, and is not interested in advancing an accountable, transparent, fair, and accessible democracy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you wish to speak?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak at second reading to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I think it's certainly a very interesting act, and it raises a number of very, very interesting issues that relate to the conduct of elections in this province.

While it's very, very substantive and there's no question there are a number of changes included, it does unfortunately represent what I would suggest is a huge missed opportunity on the part of the government. The amount of work that had to have gone into amending this legislation and rewriting it so significantly probably means that we're not likely to get a similar level of reconsideration of these issues for some time. I think it was an important opportunity for this government to address so many of the democratic deficits that exist in this province.

Unfortunately, I think that what we have before us, although it's really thick, really represents a huge case of denial on the part of this government in terms of the crisis that we face in this province with respect to the health of our democratic system. I suppose some people might say: "Hey, you know, we continue to get a majority government. That's all that's got to happen, and anything beyond that is not our responsibility." But others might suggest that all political parties have an interest in maintaining the health of the democracy within which they live. Tomayto, tomahto, I suppose, but not quite.

Let me start, first of all, by talking about a couple of the things that are simply not addressed in this piece of legislation at all. I think that it's important to talk about those things. Just because they weren't part of the recommendations put forward by the departing Chief Electoral Officer doesn't mean that they weren't something that required significant consideration by members of this Assembly.

The first issue, of course, simply relates to the issue of spending limits generally in elections. We need look no further than south of the border to see what happens when spending limits are not put into place and what a travesty it makes of the health of the democracy. We know, by looking south of the border, that money is an integral part of the democratic system. One ought not to consider any kind of substantive entry into politics unless one is able to raise millions and millions of dollars, which, of course, means that the vast majority of the country is disqualified from engaging in electoral politics.

We need to be careful that we don't move in that same direction here in Alberta. There's a lot of money in this province, and it's concentrated in certain areas and in certain industries. When it comes to how it is you fight an election on a particular issue, frankly, I think that the people that get to vote should be the people that get — well, I'll talk about donations in a minute. But in terms of spending I think that everybody should have an equal opportunity to make their case and that the people of Alberta, conversely, have a broad range of choices from which to select.

The problem is that when you get into a situation where one group can outspend another group 10 to 1 or, you know, if the problem continues to grow, 15 to 1 or 20 to 1, well, then, once again a serious malaise starts to creep into the democratic system, that we all rely on. We end up in a situation, basically, where people who don't have a lot of money essentially feel like they have no voice. They get frustrated, and they get angry, and they disconnect. When they start to disconnect from their political institutions, they start to disconnect from other things soon after, too, because they just feel as though they have no way of having their opinion heard or reinforced by the community within which they live.

It's really a problem in the long term that we're not looking at spending limits. There are spending limits in other jurisdictions. Obviously, federally there are spending limits. You know, if we can have spending limits federally, why can we not have spending limits provincially? There's no good reason for it. Other provinces have spending limits. What it does is that it provides for a certain amount of equity.

You still have to be enough of a going concern to raise a reasonable amount of money to be able to communicate with the people whom you want to have elect you, but it's not a question of buying up 30 seconds of ad time for every commercial break on every station for 40 days before an election. If you can start to do that, you're going to let your dollars drive your democracy. That's not what people envisioned when they first put together their democracy, but that's, unfortunately, what's happened. Communication is electronic, and it's expensive, and you either buy the opportunity to give your message or you don't get the opportunity to give your message.

What needs to happen is that there needs to be some equity of access there. As I said, other jurisdictions have considered it. There's been no conversation about that at all in this province, and certainly it's not been included in this legislation. As I say, I believe it represents a huge missed opportunity. Of course, we have a provision in this legislation to refer one particular matter, which, frankly, was a no-brainer, in my view, and should have been included in this legislation, the whole issue of leadership funding. There's already provision for that to be referred to a policy field committee, so why not refer the whole issue of election financing and spending and donation? That is a huge issue that has significant import on the health of our democracy, yet it's not there.

The other thing that, of course, we would have wanted to have seen in this as well is a cap on who can donate. People vote; corporations don't. People vote; unions don't. Again, we have several jurisdictions in the country where the only people allowed to donate to election campaigns are individuals, and this makes sense because they are the ones that get to vote. The same type of limit should be included in this legislation, and it's not. Once again, it's a huge missed opportunity.

I also mentioned, of course, the whole issue briefly about disclosing the funders for leadership contests. In the face of what I've just said, where we have a growing situation where the dollar buys the vote in this province and where we have the Wild West of donation laws right now, one of the few things we have is at least to find out who gave what, yet that's not the case when it comes to the issue of leadership campaigns. That, in my view, is a huge loophole in our legislation, and it's something that I think hurts the interests of the people of Alberta.

As you know, we had a leadership campaign recently for the leader of the third party. Notwithstanding that party's many stated commitments to opening up electoral reform and the whole sort of populist notion that they, theoretically, represent, they soon found the first opportunity to refuse to disclose who it was that was funding the successful candidate's campaign. I think that's something that Albertans have a right to know about. Obviously, the current leader of the governing party also went through that process, as did many members of the current cabinet who also were in a leadership campaign who refused to note who it was that was funding their campaigns.

Again, this is important public policy information. Disclosure is something that can only benefit the health and robust nature of our democratic debate. Again, I see no reason, actually, for hiding that information unless there's something to be embarrassed about. So it's really a tremendous disappointment that that recommendation was not included in this piece of legislation.

There are a number of things, of course, that ought to also have been put into this legislation. One that's close to my heart is the whole issue around the obligation of the Chief Electoral Officer to provide information about the election process and the right to vote and all that kind of stuff. Unfortunately, we have a Chief Electoral Officer who has been quoted in the media as saying that he doesn't believe it's his obligation to do anything to increase the participation rate of voters in this province, which is absolutely shocking to me. That, to me, would sort of be like the minister of health saying that he doesn't have any obligation to make sure that people can still get heart surgery in the province. It utterly surprised me when I heard that that was the position of this person and that he thought it was appropriate to be considered for the position of Chief Electoral Officer with that position.

Nonetheless, I think that we have a real problem. We've talked about in this House before that, you know, a 40 per cent turnout for an election is something that is not seen in pretty much any other developed jurisdiction. There are many jurisdictions where people would question the health of the democracy, the human rights of people involved in those jurisdictions, all that kind of stuff, where you would not see a voter turnout as low as 40 per cent. So it is something that we as legislators ought to be ashamed of because it's something that we all need to take very seriously and take some responsibility for.

Since the Chief Electoral Officer reports to this Legislature, I would have wanted to see an Election Act that tells that Chief Electoral Officer that he must focus on the issue of increasing the full democratic participation of Albertans. So that, again, is a huge oversight on the part of this legislation. There are so many smaller pieces that I imagine we'll have a chance to talk about in more detail as we go through this legislation, but I do want to say that those are very, very critical ones for me.

Of course, I have a lot of students who reside in my particular constituency. There were recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer to deal with the confusion around the ability of those people to vote. Basically, we have this ridiculous situation right now that it depends on what time of the year the writ is dropped to determine whether a good portion of the people in my riding are told or not told by the Chief Electoral Officer that they are entitled to vote in my riding. There were several recommendations geared towards addressing the confusion around the right of students in Alberta to cast their ballot, and those recommendations were entirely ignored by this government, as reflected in this piece of legislation.

Again, going back to the previous issue, the fact that we have so very few people voting, study after study shows that if people do not vote in their first election that they're eligible, they are much less likely to vote at all. So here we are again. We're not telling the Chief Electoral Officer to encourage participation, and we're not making any of the changes that were recommended in order to facilitate the full participation of students who are at university or college at the time that the election is called.

Once again, if anything, it appears that the government believes that the best direction is to continue downward, that what we need to do is actually perhaps reduce even further the number of people voting. Personally, I think that if I were over on the other side of the House and analyzing some of the polls that have come out recently, once I got over the fact that I was very likely to lose my position in government, I might want to think about actually increasing the number of people coming out to vote in an effort to save my bacon, as it were. Nonetheless, whether it's self-interest or whether it's for the good of democracy, increasing participation is something that we should all be supporting, and that is not something that is reflected at all in this piece of legislation.

I will say that it is good that the long-standing banana republic-esque practice of having the Premier's office appoint deputy returning officers is finally eliminated. I can't imagine how many decades it's been since it has been eliminated in every other jurisdiction, but thankfully we have at least moved forward on that particular embarrassment.

Again, this is a very big bill, and I would have expected a little bit more than that. So that's where we are at this point on this bill, and I look forward to more opportunity to debate in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. I'd first like to thank this member for bringing forward this beneficial piece of legislation, which serves to reinforce Alberta's democratic principles. Bill 7 amends the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. These pieces of legislation are probably the most important pieces of legislation on the books since they lay down the very foundation for our democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe in making the system more democratic, and Bill 7 contributes to this. The bill proposes to allow the Chief Electoral Officer to appoint returning officers along with changing the way enumerators are appointed, eliminating the need for the involvement of a constituency association or political party. It only makes sense from both a democratic and an administrative point of view to give the Chief Electoral Officer full control of the electoral operation. Additionally, this bill would serve to recognize the broader investigative powers of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Speaker, within the proposed bill advance polls will be open for those who for any reason want to vote early. This will allow anyone who may be working or travelling on election day the opportunity to exercise their democratic right as their personal schedule allows. The opportunity to vote for your choice of candidate is inherent in all democratic societies, and Bill 7 enables all voters a greater ability to do so. My constituents along with all Albertans will find Bill 7 very beneficial.

This bill does not address fixed election dates or allow Albertans to vote at any polling station they choose. I personally would like to see these issues addressed; however, I recognize that at least the first issue has already been addressed in this Assembly. Bill 7 will provide ways for the Chief Electoral Officer to delve into the use of new voting technologies. These technologies could enhance Albertans' options on how they can vote in the future. This is particularly important, Mr. Speaker, in view of the large number of snowbirds who are away for extended periods of time, particularly in the winter months, but still wish to exercise their franchise.

Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for greater accountability in the electoral system. More detailed information will be kept about candidates' revenues and expenditures. Furthermore, the time periods over which records must be kept will be extended to allow for more thorough scrutiny of past election results.

Other amendments in Bill 7 include technical improvements and stricter rules which enable the Chief Electoral Officer to better monitor and enforce financial reporting. These measures greatly increase the transparency in the electoral process. As the Minister of Justice and Attorney General stated, "It is important to balance updated and streamlined processes with maintaining the integrity of the system." This legislation provides all Albertans who vote as well as prospective voters the right to do so in the most accountable, efficient, and transparent system possible.

I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow once again for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. I wholeheartedly support this bill, and I urge all of my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I appreciate the comments of the hon. Member for St. Albert and would like to ask him a question. To my mind, we all have a certain amount of influence in this Legislature as part of our being elected, but I think it goes without saying that the people with the most influence in this Legislature are the people who are leaders. Of course, that would be the leader of the government, the Premier, the leaders of other parties, and all that stuff. I was wondering if he was disappointed that money raised in leadership contests was not made to be mandatorily disclosed in this Election Act like they are in many other jurisdictions in Canada and around the world.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I don't have any strong opinions on that issue. I think it probably needs to be studied a little bit more and some fair rules brought in. I guess I would say that it's not an issue that I feel really strongly about. I don't see any major abuses. I certainly agree with the comments of one of the previous speakers that the system in the United States on leadership and elections in general, where the costs get totally out of control, is certainly not acceptable.

I guess that from my own personal perspective when I ran for city council five times and other previous election endeavours, I've always attempted to maintain a modest election campaign fund, and I think in the end it's paid off. I'm not sure that Albertans or Canadians are particularly impressed with the big-spender concept that is very evident in the United States.

The Deputy Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) still allows for some time. Any other hon. member wish to take that offer?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to get up and speak to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I, too, agree that although some changes were made that could be seen to be putting us a little bit in the right direction, when I look at the overall substance of this act, I look at this as an opportunity lost. We could have really done so much more to make democracy a more vibrant and more real thing here in Alberta and to really add to an open and accountable not only government but democratic process that would keep us in line with many other jurisdictions who have moved ahead of us in making democracy available to their citizens as well as sending a message to the electorate that our elected officials will be, like I said earlier, open and accountable, that we will have a system where donations are tracked.

As we all know, money influences the game we all play in this Legislature. We can be naive and bury our heads in the sand and pretend that it doesn't, but let's face it: at the end of the day it does. A little further on in my response here I'll go into some of those instances where we appear to be burying our heads in the sand.

As my cousin David Vamrobaeys from Lethbridge says, this is a bill that has a whole lot of feathers and not a lot of chicken to it. You know, you pass a lot of these smaller, innocuous sort of things, but you avoid the real meat of some of the issues that are brimming here in Alberta, some of the real nice pieces of flank or veal that might be available that the electorate could have really bitten into and really seen the system change here. Let's talk about those.

Right now Canadian soldiers are engaged in efforts across the world not only to uphold democracy, but they put themselves in harm's way to establish democracy, to try and encourage a voting pattern that exists, I guess, in this part of the world, yet we miss an opportunity like this to really strengthen our democracy as much as it could be. It's with that dichotomy in mind that we're willing to send our soldiers on and Alberta citizens take part in that effort to protect democracy. Yet that we here in Alberta through this legislation haven't done all that we can to protect and encourage Alberta citizens to get to the polls is really shocking.

I, too, would like to comment. You know, we have hired an individual here in Alberta who is in charge of elections who has openly stated that it's not his job to encourage Albertans to vote. Like the other member from the fourth party, I am shocked and stunned beyond belief that those words would be uttered and outright actually admitted by a person that has been put into a position such as his by this Legislature. It is beyond the pale that a person would consider taking the job that didn't understand that his mandate would be to try and foster democracy, to try to get people to pay attention to what goes on in this House, to pay attention to what happens in their communities, to go out and cast their ballots once every three, four, or five years when this Legislature goes to the polls. It strikes me as being one of those unbelievable things that, I guess, could only happen here in Alberta. Really, it was just shocking.

Nevertheless, let's look at some more of this bill. Like, I asked the hon. Member for St. Albert if he was concerned that people who run for leaders of their respective parties were not required to put who financed their campaigns out for public view. That to me is one of those things that this bill should have addressed. If we look at the recent leadership run of the governing party, many people took part, and many people funded those campaigns. There was an actual winner, and I would be interested to know who financed that campaign just, you know, because it's important to me. It's important to democracy that not only do things appear to be on the up and up but that they actually are on the up and up.

I think a lot of people in our society, rightly or wrongly, look around and they say: those politicians are bought and paid for. By not stopping things like this, by not demanding that we have this information open and available for the public, we're encouraging the public actually to believe that. We had an opportunity here in this bill to say to Alberta people: "No. Here are the contributors who have contributed to a leadership campaign. You can see by the legislation we've brought in that it was not unduly influenced by these campaign donations, and that's the way we do things. These people supported me for being an open and accountable government, to bring in good legislation on behalf of all Albertans, and you can check my donation list to see that I wasn't unduly influenced."

That doesn't happen here in Alberta. We have remained with our heads buried in the sand, which says: I guess a person who becomes Premier of this great province doesn't have to show who donated to his campaign because we're just going to be naive and assume that money wouldn't influence that person, that there's no way in the world that money would influence that person. You know, I think that's wishful thinking.

We missed a real opportunity to send a message to all Albertans and, in fact, people around the world that we do things differently, that we stand for open and accountable government. That was one thing that really disturbed me about this act, that we could have done this and it would have led to a better democracy.

Let's also look at campaign financing. I would agree that we should have certain limits on the amount of money that various parties can spend in any one election. Now, we look at other jurisdictions around the world, and there are many places, such as Ontario and otherwise, who have brought in those rules, that have limited the number and amount of money individuals and groups can give to any one party or candidate. Those are good. I believe they allow for money to do as little damage as possible, I guess, to the electoral process. We all know we all have to run campaigns. Yet at the same time we know that when those forces like are happening down south — when large amounts are given to those campaigns, it's pretty tough for an individual to, I guess, turn a blind eye to those types of influences. We could have closed some of those loopholes there.

Let's look at the last two provincial elections. The governing party spent twice as much as all other parties combined. It is probably a little bit of sour grapes, but I think it's also a little bit of the fact that democracy is a little different here in Alberta than it is in other places. It ensured that they had more money for television, telephone polling, brochures, billboards. I even heard that some people were paying for door-knockers to go door to door and having polling done from other areas.

Mr. Liepert: Name names.

Mr. Hehr: It's word on the street, word on the street.

Mr. Liepert: Name names.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I could name names. The hon. Energy minister wants me to name names, but I won't.

Mr. Liepert: Then withdraw.

Mr. Hehr: I won't withdraw it either.

Anyway, let's just say that the governing party was spending a lot of money on a lot of different things to get the election results necessary. There we go. I said it and didn't name any names.

Nevertheless, we had an opportunity to do some things better here in Alberta. The names I'll name is that this government didn't do as best they could've to try and stop some of those things that in other jurisdictions in the world we look at and say: that shouldn't happen. Like the hon. member from the fourth party said: banana republics, where, I guess, the political influence on the system of government is not as progressive as it is in some jurisdictions.

Hey, I've been pretty vocal. I would have liked to have seen fixed election dates come into play here. I think it would be a good move, that many jurisdictions have already instituted, that would allow for less gerrymandering with election dates and would allow for, I guess, greater certainty in preparation and allow for our people running elections to do things a little bit better.

If I can comment, I am happy that, you know, no longer will the Premier of this province be selecting the people who are going to be in charge of the polling stations and who are in charge of the electoral districts, those types of things, which should have been changed years ago. I am finally happy that those things have occurred.

Like I said at the beginning, there are a lot of minor things done in this bill that, I guess, eliminated some of the minor troubles that were out there. The government can say: oh, we brought in that electoral amendment, and it straightened everything out, and everything is all in line. It's just that this bill could have been so much more. This bill could have really done a lot more things to have open and accountable elections and encourage Albertans to vote. Needless to say, I'll be putting forward a few amendments in further reading that, hopefully, will maybe bring this bill a little further along, where we should be in Alberta.

Those are my comments at this time, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for giving me an opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for questions.

Mr. Snelgrove: The hon. member doesn't want to name any names of how campaign contributions could have affected them. He probably talks in here about why people aren't interested in politics. You don't have to name names. Could you just give us an example of when you or anyone has been able to connect a campaign contribution to a benefit that an individual or group got from making that contribution? You don't have any names to name. I'll grant you that. You can fictitiously make that. What do you base your hare-brained suggestions on that this corruption is going on all over Alberta? Can you give us one example of where someone has contributed to any political party – you might have more knowledge in yours; maybe it's over there – that has received a benefit back because of the contribution they made.

Mr. Hehr: Common sense leads me to the conclusion that political donations can influence the decisions that are made. Call me crazy, but I stand by that decision. I believe you can bury your head in the sand and ignore the fact that money can influence this process. Feel free to do that, hon. minister. I won't be one of those people who will bury his head in the sand and will deny that money influences this process. I guess that's my answer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps on another topic, then. Is he one of those who's burying his head in the sand when he totally ignores the fact that all the discussion about leadership rules and processes has been referred to an all-party committee of the House, that all parties can participate in the preparation of appropriate rules and legislation relative to leadership? Is he burying his head in the sand when he totally ignores that?

Mr. Hehr: No, I'm not. That was mighty brilliant of the government to do such, but let me tell you something: it would have been just as easy for you guys to legislate it right now.

Mr. Hancock: Obviously, you don't want to have any input, and you'd just like us to make the decision.

Mr. Hehr: No. Because I could input right now and . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: Don't want to be accountable.

Mr. Hehr: Oh, yeah. You're right.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any comments or questions? Standing Order 29(2)(a) still has some time for questions.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the bill?

Mr. Taylor: Yes. On the bill, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. Anything that's this thick deserves a little more chit-chat at second reading than what it has gotten so far, I'm afraid. So it's a little premature to call the question. [interjection] Did I hear something from the minister there? No? Okay. Let me get back to the point because I'm wasting my time, if not yours.

Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, at second reading. I mean, there's a lot that's good in this bill. About the only thing that you might be able to quibble with there is why it took this government so long to bring these amendments in. I think there are a couple of things that are missing, and I don't quite understand why they're missing. One that is key for our side is the fact that fixed election dates are not in here. I don't quite understand why this government seems to want to run from that concept as much as it does. You know, there are fixed election dates in other provinces in this country.

I will acknowledge that one of the traditional benefits in parliamentary democracies of the government getting to choose the timing of the election call within a five-year window is that the government can choose an election date that it estimates, surmises is beneficial to its re-election chances. That puts the opposition, clearly, at somewhat of a disadvantage if the government surmises or guesses right. The history and tradition of parliamentary democracy is such that there are lots of times when governments clearly guess wrong on the timing of those elections, because they go down to defeat.

However, the coming trend, if you will, I guess, seems to be that more and more jurisdictions are looking at fixed election dates, and there seems to be, I think, some real wisdom in doing that. A fixed election date gives everybody, all participants, whether those are members of the Legislative Assembly currently who would seek re-election or people who are considering getting involved in politics – the hon. President of Treasury Board made a comment a couple of minutes ago about the fact that a lot of people don't want to get involved in politics, and there are many reasons for that. One of them is, I think, the uncertainty of this sort of thing.

It would give everybody a clear understanding of when the next election is going to be, it would give everybody a clear understanding of how long the mandate of current government is, and it would give the government a clear understanding of how long they had until the next election to get their legislative agenda through. I don't know how this is going to go over on that side of the House, but it might actually lead to some planning. You never know.

Having fixed election dates does not necessarily put the government at a strategic disadvantage simply because they have to go to the polls every fourth year on the 32nd of April, or whatever the hypothetical date is. It does give the opportunity to work towards that. I think that, on balance, the positives to fixed election dates outweigh the negatives. It helps to take care of some of the fundraising issues, I think, some of the campaign donation issues, in that it gives everybody a clear indication of how much time they have to try and raise money for the next election.

On the subject of election contributions, I too would like to see some limits of the sort that many, many other political jurisdictions practise that we do not. I mean, Alberta is the only province that doesn't limit spending by political parties or individual candidates, and it has one of the highest, richest maximum ceilings for what an individual or a corporation or a union or an organization of any kind can actually donate to a political party. It's a rich enough limit: $15,000 in a nonelection year, and it doubles to $30,000 in an election year.

Fixed election dates, again, Mr. Speaker, to come back to that, would give everybody the same amount of time to raise whatever kind of money that they wanted to raise for their re-election bid, their first election bid if they were thinking about it. Obviously, different people would have different levels of success or not and different parties would have different levels of success or not at fundraising. That wouldn't change, I don't think. Again, there's no reason, I believe, not to go to fixed election dates.

The other thing that this bill does not do is allow Albertans to vote at any polling station in any electoral division. I find that kind of curious, Mr. Speaker, because one of the things it does do is it opens up the possibility of voting using the Internet, at least on a trial basis if such a measure were to be agreed upon by a committee of the Legislature. Now, Internet voting has some drawbacks. There is always the possibility that somebody could hack into your system on voting day and elect the Rhinoceros Party. You know, it could happen. Well, you'd have to re-create the Rhinoceros Party, but there you go. There is a danger posed by counterfeit websites, viruses, the possibility that a disruption to Internet service could affect the election result.

Mr. Liepert: Worse yet, the Liberals.

Mr. Taylor: Worse yet, re-elect the PCs. Anyway, we can get into that partisan stuff later, hon. member.

And it's not cheap. In 2006 the Dutch parliamentary election actually experimented with Internet voting, and about 20,000 people took advantage of it to vote on the Internet. The cost worked out to about 90 euros, which would be – what? – about $120, $130 Canadian per voter. It's not cheap, but, I mean, things rarely are in their early incarnation, especially when they involve technology. I could certainly imagine that the cost of Internet voting would come down and the safeguards would be built in to the extent that we could in the initial experiment, the initial trial run, and they would get better as time goes on.

You can't help but think that we can't be too, too terribly far away. If we want anybody to vote at all in general elections, we can't be too, too far away from the day when Internet voting is a reality. Well, if Internet voting is a reality, I think pretty much by definition it means that if you are a registered voter and a citizen in the province of Alberta, you can vote on election day from any computer with an Internet hookup. If that's the case, why wouldn't we go to a system that allows Albertans to vote at any polling station in any electoral division?

We are a province of footloose people. We are a province of people who travel a great deal, who move around and travel around within this province for work, for business, for play, for recreation, for a multitude of reasons, and who travel outside this province a great deal as well. Since it strikes me that one of the purposes of Bill 7 is to encourage voter participation – not the only purpose, obviously, but one of the purposes is to encourage voter participation – I'm a little puzzled as to why they wouldn't have gone that route, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I might get an answer. I might get a very reasonable logistical explanation when we get to committee stage on this bill for that issue. I don't know. So I'll put out that challenge right now to see if they can come up with one. But if they can't, then the question remains: well, why not do that?

There are many things that I could talk about that are not in this bill. Certainly, we on this side of the House in the Official Opposition are on record repeatedly as favouring the establishment of a citizens' assembly to look at different ways of electing governments, compare the first past the post system that we use today to differing forms of proportional representation, report back with recommendations, and then put those recommendations out to the people of Alberta in a referendum, as has been done twice in the province of British Columbia.

I would remind the House that the first time it was done with a very high threshold set, it came very close to passing, and the second time that it was put to a referendum, it didn't come within a country mile of passing. The people of British Columbia said: ah, no, we're not interested. So I have no idea, Mr. Speaker, whether the people of Alberta would be interested in going for some form of proportional representation or not, but it seems to me that that might be a worthwhile experiment to go down the road of doing the citizens' assembly.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is making scary faces right now. Not that he's scaring me with his face, but he's going, "Oh, you don't want to go there, hon. member; that's fraught with danger and problems," and he might be right. He might be right, but I'm just saying that it might be worth considering.

Also, it's worth pointing out that talking about such things as proportional representation is never really in the interest of the party in power because the party in power is doing just fine, thank you. The system works for the party in power. Why change it? The party or parties out of power, when they talk about democratic reform and proportional representation and stuff like that, you know, based on the history of snake oil salespeople in this line of work that we're in who have come down the pike in the last generation talking about the need for democratic reform and as soon as they get within sniffing distance of the trough, they flip-flop and sign up for the government pension plans and all the rest of that – I mean, it does stretch credibility to stand here and talk about the need for democratic reform. Of course, that's what opposition politicians are going to be likely to say because we're not in power, which means that the status quo didn't work as well for us the last time as it worked for you guys on the other side of the House. So it's a bit of a red herring.

Quite frankly, I would love to see a government get into power, or get re-elected for that matter, based on making promises to voters that have to do with the price of eggs and where people live their lives on a daily basis, that, you know, has nothing to do with promising or talking about democratic reform at all, get into power and then, if democracy needs some reformation, just get in there and do it and let the people judge how you did at that.

Of course, this is an opportunity. This bill is an opportunity to do exactly that. It's an opportunity for the party in power to go down that road of democratic reform should they wish to. Acknowledging that it might be perceived to be in their best interests not to, I'll understand if they don't come back with any amendments along that road, along the road of a citizens' assembly or something like that or something that leads to proportional representation.

I do hope that when we get to committee stage on this we can take a look at fixed election dates and we can take a look at allowing Albertans to vote at any polling station in any electoral division. I think that will take a bill that otherwise, although it may be several years late or several decades late in the case of having the Chief Electoral Officer actually be responsible for appointing the returning officers, nevertheless is a good bill – I think it could make the bill even better.

We shall see what comes down the pipe at committee stage, I guess, Mr. Speaker. With that in mind, I will support this bill in principle, and we will see where it goes from here.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to hear, I think, perhaps some more thought on fixed election dates and the fact that with a fixed election date, although it doesn't particularly work in the United States — it would work better here because I'm thinking of how it's fixed in municipal — you don't have to spend your time campaigning. You know exactly when that election is going to come, so you can work flat out until maybe three months ahead of that election. I wondered if the member might have comments on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for that question. She has some experience with fixed election dates as a former city councillor in Lethbridge. Municipal elections, of course, happen as regular as clockwork, every three years in the middle of October. I do note, at least in the city of Calgary, that not much real work seems to happen after about the end of June or maybe the end of Stampede in an election year, but in most election years work gets done up until that point. I think, hon. member, that you're right, that it does shorten down the effective campaign period and lead to more work getting done by the legislators.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I say "the effective campaign period" because, of course, if you want to get technical about this, we have a 28-day campaign period at the provincial level. The writ is dropped, and 28 days later the people go to the polls and decide whether they want to renew our contracts or not for another four years. So, technically, that's the campaign period, 28 days. But I think everybody in this House knows that the campaign period starts much earlier than that when election dates are not fixed and the rumours start to buzz around about, "Oh, it could be this spring; it could be this fall; it could be next spring; we'd best get ready," and all the rest of that.

Part of campaigning is not just physical door-knocking and raising of money and so on and so forth. Part of campaigning is the beginning to angle so that you can get your point of view out to your constituents, take advantage of the fact that, you know, if you're seeking re-election, you already have a bit of a platform, I suppose, to stand on, a bit of a podium to stand behind, whereas your competitors don't. It differs from MLA to MLA, no question about it, but one has to wonder in that last year or so before the election comes along how much work really gets done and how much is just political posturing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional comments? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've just got a quick question. I missed most of the speech, and that was very unfortunate, but now we're talking about fixed election dates a little bit. In one of my fed-prov meetings down east I was visiting with the minister from Ontario at that particular meeting, and we talked about fixed election dates. They have them in Ontario, of course, so I asked her about them. She said: well, when I was in the opposition, that was a wonderful idea, and we did get it. Now, as you know, the Liberals are in power in Ontario, and she made the comment: I don't think that's such a good idea now. I wonder if you have any idea how this Liberal would have that opinion that it's such a bad idea now?

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's because it doesn't really much matter whether you're a Liberal or a Conservative or a New Democrat; when you're sitting on the opposition side of the House, things look one way, and when you're sitting on the government side of the House, things sometimes look differently. But what we really should be talking about here on the question of fixed election dates, hon. member, is not whether it looks favourable from the opposition side of the House or unfavourable once you're in government but how it looks to the people.

The people in Ontario know that every four years or whatever the date is — and I don't know off the top of my head what the fixed election date is for the province of Ontario, but it's about every four years — at a predictable interlude they're going to be going to the polls, and they get to weigh in on the performance of the governing party, whether it's a Liberal Party or a Conservative Party.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, but the time has elapsed for this segment. Additional participants? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to speak on Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This bill will go some way in addressing the issues, the concerns arising from the 2008 provincial election. The election was nothing but chaos. The writ was dropped, and returning officers were even scrambling to find a place for their offices. The returning officer for Calgary-McCall, because I was in the real estate business, approached me to find a place for her. She ended up finding a house out in the industrial park, and that's where she set it up.

This bill will address some of those issues because returning officers will be in place long before the election, and it will make the Chief Electoral Officer responsible for appointing returning officers. Enumerators will also now be appointed in a manner that will eliminate the need for particular constituency associations or political parties. Enumeration will be done earlier. In the last election 27 per cent of the voters were left off the voting list. When they went to vote at their respective polling stations, they were told that they're not on the list, that they have to go to another polling station; that's where they vote. The voters went from polling station to polling station to polling station. Finally, they got frustrated, and they went home.

That, in turn, caused people to wait long. There were long lineups. I talk about Calgary-McCall from personal experience. There were long lineups, and people were just getting frustrated. The word got out that it takes too long to vote, and voters were discouraged. They said: heck, we're not going to go vote because it takes too long. This bill, I think, will go a long way to addressing those concerns if it's enforced properly.

This will provide greater investigating powers to the Chief Electoral Officer because the Chief Electoral Officer will be able to do things on the spot, I believe.

It will allow anyone who wants to vote early. We had a concern on special ballots. Only the people who were travelling or people who were sick or couldn't make it on voting day or were going to be out of the country could vote. At the advance poll we had big lineups, especially in Calgary-McCall. It was done in the basement. The room wasn't big enough, and there were stairs going down to the basement. People were standing for hours and hours in the lineup to vote at the advance poll. This will go to address that concern when people can for any reason vote at the advance poll.

It will bring Alberta in line with the Supreme Court of Canada decision. This means that prisoners have the right to vote.

It seems to strengthen third-party advertising legislation at first glance.

Candidates who run campaign deficits must dispose of the deficit and report to the Chief Electoral Officer when and the manner by which the said deficit is retired. In addition, the time period over which records must be kept has been extended. The legislation will also require more detailed reporting concerning revenues and expenses. I was looking here, Mr. Speaker. What if one cannot eliminate the deficit in the time provided? I don't see any provisions for the candidate. How is he going to handle his or her deficit situation? What will happen in that case? Will there be fines, or they won't be allowed to run again? Will there be some kind of deduction they can make when they file their income tax return? That's the concern I have.

It also seeks to improve safeguards to the list of electors – it changes the kind of information voters can present at polling stations; government-issued ID, for example – and allows the Chief Electoral Officer to test new voting technology and extend the voting hours, maybe, in upcoming by-elections.

Several other innovative concepts regarding electoral reform will be deliberated upon by the Chief Electoral Officer along with the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

Bill 7 doesn't create fixed election dates in the province, nor does it allow Albertans to vote at any polling station in any electoral division.

Leadership campaign financing rules are not included in the bill as the government is expecting to have the matter studied by the policy field committee. I think that they should have been included in this.

The impact. Bill 7 proposes many amendments for streamlining future provincial elections. Of particular note is the extension of the right to vote to correctional inmates as per the decision of the Supreme Court.

The change also opens the possibility of voting using the Internet at least on a trial basis. There are concerns with Internet voting: the possibility that disruption of Internet service could affect the election result; the danger posed by counterfeit websites, viruses, and hacks into the election system. Above all, it's not cheap, Mr. Speaker. In the 2006 Dutch parliamentary election the cost of approximately 20,000 Internet votes was 90 euros per voter. That's about a hundred and forty bucks per vote.

Most importantly and more substantially, the government has been forced to eliminate a previously held regulatory power which allowed the cabinet to appoint the constituency returning officers, a post that was intended for the neutral supervisor of election activities in each constituency. This was an issue during the 2008 election, when it was revealed that many returning officers had PC connections. Many of the enumerators, those responsible for assembling voting lists, also looked like political appointments. This will make it more impartial. The perception out there was that that's what was happening. Real or perceived, this will take that perception away.

Campaign financing remains a concern. Alberta is the only province that doesn't limit spending by political parties or individual candidates. Ontario, for example, utilizes a formula which limits campaign spending by a political party in each constituency to 70 cents per registered voter. Alberta has no similar provisions to limit spending, so the governing party remains free to raise and spend as much money as they feel is necessary. In the last two provincial elections the Progressive Conservatives spent twice as much as other parties combined. This ensured that they had more than enough money for television advertising, telephone polling, brochures, and billboards while opposition parties struggled to make contact with the electorate.

Nothing was done in the Elections Statutes Amendment Act to limit campaign and political donations. Alberta allows for greater contribution amounts than most provinces. For example, in Alberta the upper limit for a party contribution is $30,000 during the election year compared with $15,000 in Ontario.

Finally, other provinces and the federal government have banned donations from corporations and unions. Alberta has no such ban.

However, the most glaring omission is the lack of changes to the leadership finance rules surrounding the leadership contributions to candidates of political parties. The Premier has never fully disclosed all the financial backers who contributed $160,000 to his run for the PC leadership. Interestingly, the leader of the Wildrose Alliance has refused to name her financial supporters even though it is well known that the petroleum industry has reportedly poured $250,000 into the Wildrose Alliance leadership. Even other leadership contenders haven't fully disclosed their donors from the last leadership. Instead of instituting full disclosure of leadership donors, the amendment will refer the matter to a committee of the Legislature. I think that that should have been included in this bill to put some teeth in this.

It doesn't talk about proportional representation, or PRep. Critics of the proposed reform have stated that many of the changes do not go far enough, that they are not comprehensive enough in their totality. That said, the act adopts the majority of the 144 changes proposed by the former Chief Electoral Officer from the report that was commissioned as a result of the dismal voter turnout of the last provincial election. Although the reforms aren't an exhaustive response to the previous recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer, they do represent a much more ambitious attempt than most would have predicted.

Well, I think, you know, that by drafting some amendments to this bill for Committee of the Whole, we can improve on this bill. My concern is: is this really the best the Premier could come up with for this legislative session? These are just, like, some housekeeping additions. It only took years of public pressure and a Supreme Court decision and constant scrutiny in the Legislature to get some reforms made. What are Albertans going to have to give up for fixed elections and the ability to cast a ballot anywhere they want?

I think this is a step in the right direction, but I'd like to know more about the 52 recommendations that the government chose not to address. This makes it a little less of an ambitious approach than I would have liked, but it gets the ball moving in the right direction, at least. I believe that with this bill, Mr. Speaker, we will not face all the problems we faced during the last election. This will go to address lots of the issues faced by the electorate, by the returning officers, by the polling clerks, and by the voters. I hope it does what this bill is intended to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very interested in Bill 7. In my mind, it is a very small step forward to returning democracy to this province, a very small step. The previous Chief Electoral Officer had recommended 182 recommendations. It's now been watered down to 144 suggestions, which then turned into 92 accepted to be a part of this bill. As I've said, it's a very small step.

One of the reasons that I'm making these comments is because for many years I have had direct experience as a deputy returning officer. I've been in charge of municipal, provincial, and federal elections. I've watched over the years how the integrity of this process has been diminished and manipulated, and it's very disappointing. I was always proud of the integrity that not only myself but everybody that worked on elections displayed.

I'll use an example which can't be used anymore because we don't have the physical manpower to do the enumerations as we used to, and it sort of overlaps what happened in the last election, where the people that worked for the returning officers were all basically okayed by the Premier's office. But in the old days all of the parties presented a list to the returning officer, and we who decided who would be the enumerators, who would be the deputy returning officers, the clerks on the day of the election would choose one from each party, and if there was an enumeration team – and it always was a team – they were never ever from the same party. They also knew that when they became involved in the election process, they therefore did not become political.

I know that the two returning officers that we've had in southern Alberta, both federal and provincial, when they were given these appointments many, many years ago – and they still are there – did not become political. In fact, I'd be surprised if they even had party membership in any party because they took their responsibilities as being nonpolitical extremely seriously.

One of the other things that I'm disappointed to see. Even when I was the returning officer and the deputy returning officer, we did have three parties, and the British parliamentary system really is based on a two-party system, which is why first past the post works very well in a two-party system. But Canada and certainly all the provinces will never ever go back to a two-party system. I believe that without the ability to change the way we vote, we will never truly have a representation sitting in this House of what people really want, and I believe that that's why they're very frustrated and don't bother to vote at all.

I can recall many places that I went, both in this election and the last election, where people were proud that they hadn't voted because it was all such a bunch of malarkey. It wasn't quite the word they used, but I think we all know what they were trying to say. They just had absolutely no interest in voting because they didn't think their vote counted. In fact, in some of the examples that were used to me – and, again, it's a phenomenon in Alberta, and as we all know, Alberta is a phenomenon unto itself – they said: why bother going to the election when the election was won at the nomination? Everybody knew that if they won the nomination, they'd win the election, so why bother voting? In fact, that person could be elected by winning the nomination by a very small portion of the people that were actually allowed to vote.

Actually, Alberta does have an interesting history. In 1921 the Liberal government instituted a block voting system for large cities. MLAs from Calgary and Edmonton were elected. Now, please remember that this was 1921, and the Calgary and Edmonton that we know today certainly did not resemble the cities at that time. They were elected across the city rather than in single-seat ridings. Each city elected five MLAs, and the winners were chosen by polarity; that is, the candidates with the most votes won.

In 1926 the United Farmers of Alberta government maintained at-large voting in Calgary and Edmonton but replaced plurality voting with proportional voting, and the voters ranked the candidates in order of preference. The winners were those with the highest preferences. What B.C.'s citizens' assembly had actually recommended when they went to that vote was the system called the single transferable vote, or the STV. For the rest of the ridings in the province, what we would consider rural at this point in time, a system of majority voting was adopted. A single candidate was elected by preferential ballot, the winner being the one who received 50 per cent plus 1 of the first or subsequent preferences. The system was called the alternative vote, or the AV. This change in the voting system fulfilled a promise by the United Farmers of Alberta made in their successful 1921 campaign.

But in 1959 the Social Credit government abolished the province's mixed system of proportional and majority voting, returning the entire province to the single-member districts with plurality voting. As we know now, it was certainly first past the post. The government of the day changed the voting system without public consultation and was accused of making the change out of self-interest. I can't imagine why anybody would have thought that. As I've mentioned, it's basically that first past the post does work with a two-party system.

One of the things that I've already mentioned is enumeration. As I've mentioned, we don't have the manpower because women are now working and more people are working out of their homes. Also, in those days – and I certainly sound like I'm coming out of ancient history here, but it's not – actually, we didn't have Sunday shopping, and we didn't have as many 24-hour jobs, where the husband babysits, the wife works, and vice versa. It was a totally different society in those days, so it's not really fair to compare what's going on. The enumeration was very important. The people who enumerated also worked that poll, and they knew who should have been on that list and who shouldn't have been on that list and were more than capable of accepting people that could come forward and say: you didn't get me. They knew exactly what was going on in their polls.

But in this day and age all cities, towns, hamlets do census counting in order to receive the provincial dollars based on their population. It's always been a question to me: why are we not using these lists for electoral purposes? They could be turned over to the electoral office, which, in fact, would then be able to adjust those lists to reflect the boundaries in the province. They could use those, and they are updated all the time, so they wouldn't have to rely on old enumeration lists. That was a huge problem in the last election.

We've also talked about fixed election dates. I totally support fixed election dates for a number of reasons. I would suspect that for the feds it should be five years, the province four, and municipal three, which sounds like a lot of elections on top of each other, but it does work at the municipal end.

The other thing that would work with fixed elections: it would be a much better, more efficient process. The returning officers would know ahead of time when it's going to be. It would help them rent the proper facilities so they're not scrambling at the last minute. They would have lists that were up to date, which, as I've mentioned, didn't happen in the last election. The electoral lists were an absolute mess: a disgrace that a returning officer should have to try to scramble at the last minute to make sure that they're proper so that their deputy returning officers could use them. They would be able to hire the proper help that they need. What those people should know is that once they start working for an election, which is the 28-day period and perhaps a little bit ahead of it, they're not allowed to be political. The printing that they have to do, the training of the staff: it would be a much more efficient manner to run elections.

I know that we all as politicians have always said that the next election always starts the minute you've been elected and that you're running again for the next time. I suppose that would always be a part of your thinking, but I really believe that fixed election dates would help concentrate the focus on the work that is to be done. I know that it worked well in municipal politics. You'd work, and then it would be maybe the last couple of months ahead of when you knew the election was going to be that it kind of simmered down, and then people would run for election or not.

There was some conversation about the money that can be raised or not raised. Should there be a cap on it? I would like to certainly see a cap on it if for only one reason, that we can give everyone, basically, an equal chance. I think we all know that it's getting more and more expensive to run elections because of the price of television, because of the price of printing. Often the elections turn out to be only for the rich and the connected. I would like to see everyone have a chance, and if they have to raise $60,000 for a campaign, that's a fair amount of money for the average person on the street. The average person on the street has a great deal to offer to this House in terms of what they would bring to the table and their discussions.

One of the other things that could well happen in the future – and I know that it's been discussed at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities – is the fact that, basically, in Canada we do now have big city states: Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal, maybe those three. At this point their budgets are actually larger than their provincial budgets, so they really are big city states. I think that's another reason why we should be perhaps looking at how we change the way that we elect people.

We talked about technology to make it easier. I feel strongly that over the last 60, 70 years we've had military personnel that have died so that we are allowed to vote. We should take it as a privilege as a Canadian to be able to vote in a free vote. Yes, as I've said before, people think their votes don't count, but even if they don't count, even if somebody went to a poll and put in an empty ballot, they have fulfilled what I feel to be the duty of a citizen of this country. Why are we going backwards to make it easier for someone to do what we should consider a privilege and a duty?

Technology, I think, can be too easily manipulated. I still can't believe that somebody in a four-year period doesn't have 20 minutes to go to a polling booth. The polling booths are all very easily situated. It doesn't take long. If the process and the efficiency of the system is there, it doesn't take long to cast a ballot. Even if it's half an hour, half an hour out of someone's four-year life is, I think, something that we should consider to be a citizen's duty.

One of the things that has been talked about is everybody being allowed to vote at the advance poll. Again, I think that's something that is going backwards. Yes, make it easier for people to vote in case that they are going to be away. But I think that people who are going to be away for whatever . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but the time has now elapsed.

Ms Pastoor: I move to adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I've already called it.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. You mentioned a couple things I'd like to just comment on and ask for further elaboration. You indicated you felt that technology or computer voting could be manipulated. I guess my question is: do you have a bank card, and do you use the ATMs? Do you have a fear that that is manipulated?

Secondly, you mentioned the municipal census and tying that in with the provincial enumeration. I certainly had some feelings for that as well. I note that I just got my notice from the city of St. Albert that they're going to be allowing you to do your census by computer this year. That will be good.

I guess the third comment is that I believe there was some discussion a few years ago about tying in the provincial enumeration with the federal enumeration, and that seems to have fallen apart.

Perhaps you'd comment on those three items.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, about my bank card. Do I believe that there's any privacy left in this world? No, I don't. Yes, I use it because I have to. Do I trust it? No, I don't. I think all we have to do is look around at any kind of articles that appear in newspapers on how easy it is for really smart kids to hack in. I think they've even hacked into the Pentagon. So, no, I don't trust it too much.

As far as the federal and provincial enumeration lists being put together, I think that's a good idea, but I still think that I would prefer to use the census lists because they are up to date much better than if we relied on the federal enumeration. I think the last federal election wasn't any great shakes either in terms of enumeration lists that were actually up to date. I think it's already been mentioned how much we move in this province, particularly in the northern areas, where people are working in the oil field but actually, say, may vote in Lethbridge.

I think that this is a problem that should be addressed. Again, it would be addressed perhaps in the same fashion as we would address students who are living in a different riding than where they actually reside. Again, our oil workers are working in a different place than where they actually would reside and be allowed to vote.

I'm not altogether sure that the two enumeration lists would be as successful or perhaps as accurate as if we could use our census lists, that are updated, certainly, on a very regular basis.

Thank you very much for those questions.

The Speaker: Additional questions? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just further to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I think I agree with you on the municipal census. It's certainly probably the most accurate method, but it seems like it's always such a waste of money if we do it at three different levels at different times. As I think you indicated, the municipal is usually an annual enumeration. That's likely to be the most up to date. I guess I think that we could really save some money and provide some much more accurate information by doing it once every year at the municipal level. Of course, the province pays for that anyway.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I would totally agree with that thought. Rather than using enumerations as we are now, maybe we should be sharing that census information with the feds instead of going back the other way. I really believe, as I think you do, that that is a much more accurate list, that stays up to date, particularly on the rental side of the enumerations because renters often move.

Certainly, for someone who's done enumerations over a number of years, if you go to a house, you think that there's only one, but then all of a sudden you discover there are these three little sort of secret rooms in the basement, and there are all kinds of people living there. Often the people that are living together probably shouldn't be, but that's another whole issue. You do finally get the numbers if you are very, very diligent in what you do, but as I've said, that can't happen. So I'd like to see the census list being shared at the federal level rather than the other way coming around because I just don't feel the federal lists are of huge value, particularly on the rental side.

Mr. Kang: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has raised some concerns about electronic voting. What kind of fraud can occur with electronic voting?

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but the time has now elapsed.

I'm prepared to recognize additional speakers.
Should the question be called?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 11: Dr. Morton]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief in rising to debate the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010, Bill 8, in second reading. This is a very straightforward bill, and we deal with this virtually every year: housekeeping changes to parallel federal amendments; changes to functional currencies to allow corporations to file their tax returns in the currency they keep their accounting records in, so if they keep their accounting records in U.S. dollars or euros or whatever, they can now file their tax returns in that currency; some changes to fairness provisions, which will allow the minister to waive interest or penalties in certain situations; and really the last change that it makes is a clarification regulation regarding refund interest rates, where they're being reduced by 50 per cent for all prior periods and going forward. This is straightforward. We see no problems with this legislation, and we will be supporting this bill at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers?
Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in light of the progress today and the hour I move that we adjourn to 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mittel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I have the great pleasure of introducing Dr. David Carter, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery. Dr. Carter served as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, member 518, for 15 years. He was first elected on March 14, 1979, for the constituency of Calgary-Millican and then subsequently for the constituency of Calgary-Egmont in 1982, 1986, and 1989. He served as the ninth Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for seven years, from 1986 to 1993. He was the second ordained clergyman to serve as Speaker. He is presently the pastor of St. Margaret's Anglican church in the Cypress Hills. I'd ask him to please rise, and I would ask all members to join me in welcoming Dr. Carter once again to our Legislature.

Gracias, Sr. II Moderador. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some important visitors. Seated in your gallery are several members of the Chamber of the Americas. During a visit to Alberta this group has toured through the oil sands and is meeting with business and government leaders in both Edmonton and Calgary.

I would now ask these visitors to rise and remain standing as I call their names: Senator Juan Fernando Perdomo, representing the state of Veracruz in the Mexican Senate; Mr. Gilberto Cisneros, president and CEO of the Chamber of the Americas; Mr. Michael Reeves, president of Ports-to-Plains; Mr. Joe Kiely, vice-president of Ports-to-Plains; Mrs. Gaynelle Riffe, member of the Ports-to-Plains board of directors; Mr. Juan Carlos Gideon, manager of Latin American sales, Continental Airlines; Mr. Cal Klewin, executive director of the Theodore Roosevelt Expressway; from the city of San Angelo, Texas, city council member Mrs. Charlotte Farmer, assistant city manager Mrs. Elizabeth Grindstaff, and director of economic development Mr. Fran Owens; Mr. Carlos Moran, senior partner of Goodrich Riquelme; Mr. John Town, manager of HW Process Technologies; and Mr. Bob Sivertsen, president of Highway 2 Association. Sr. II Moderador, I would now ask for them to receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, the Home Educators of St. Albert I do not believe are in the gallery just yet. I hope to have their list of names later.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 45 visitors from Wetaskiwin Centennial school, grades 5 and 6. They're here today to check out the Legislature and see what happens here. For most of them it's their first visit. A few of them indicated to me that they have some interest in being an MLA, so I'm sure they'll be watching with great interest the proceedings this afternoon. Along with them are teachers and group leaders and parents Mr. David Luck, Mr. William Black, Ms Anne Wiebe, Ms Eva Rasmussen, Ms Karen Mason, and Miss Julie Larocque. I believe they're mostly in the public gallery. If they would all please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the schools in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre are wonderful, but this particular school is very interesting because it is both French and Spanish immersion. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly 59 visitors from Grandin school, l'école Grandin. With them today are instructors Michael Leskow, Sra. Teresa Campanaro, Sr. Wilson Gonzalez-Rico and a number of parents and helpers: Sandra Leskow, Nicholle Carrière, Carol Chovanec, Donna Chovanec, Marta McKenna, and Sra. Teresa Talarico. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a group of visitors from Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are from St. Gabriel school. There are 20 students. They're very polite and respectful. St. Gabriel school is another great community school in our constituency. The group today is accompanied by teacher Svetlana Sech and also by assistant principal Jackie Flynn. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine members and staff of the Capital Region Board. The leadership shown by all members of the board has been tremendous. When they started drafting this plan, Alberta was fully engrossed in an economic boom. The capital region was experiencing tremendous growth. Alberta had never seen anything like it. The long-range growth plan they have developed will ensure that the capital region is ready when growth returns. I want to thank each and every one of the members for their efforts, for rising to the challenges set out by the Premier in 2008 and exceeding everyone's expectations. The consistent leadership being shown by these members is helping to build a stronger Alberta.

Some members and staff with the Capital Region Board are with us today. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Mayor Stephen Mandel, city of Edmonton; Mayor Greg Krischke, city of Leduc; Mayor Rob Wiedeman, Parkland county. Board alternates with us today include Councillor Ed Gibbons, city of Edmonton, and Councillor Ben Van De Walle, town of Morinville. Administrative staff joining us today are Shari LaPerle, Capital Region Board; Kathleen LeClair, Capital Region Board; Yolande Shaw, Strathcona county; and Sharon Shuya, Capital Region Board. Please give our guests the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the Alberta government is focused on supporting those most in need, and I'm proud to say that there are many Albertans who are also committed to doing this. Today I have the great honour of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful Albertans who continue to show their dedication to helping those in need. Bruce Murray is the vice-president of the board of directors for the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, or ARBI, in Calgary, and Judy Stawnychko is their executive director. ARBI is truly a grassroots organization. It's well known for innovative, caring, and individualized rehabilitation programs for Albertans. ARBI was the first community-based rehabilitation program in Canada for people with severe brain injuries, and it began right here in this province. I would now ask Bruce and Judy to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a young gentleman named Jeremy Kulba. Jeremy is the son of Audrey Dutka, who works in our office. They are both in the members' gallery. If I could ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mrs. Phyllis Kocuipchyk and Jane Ke, seated in the public gallery. Phyllis is a constituent of Edmonton-Calder, and Jane is currently in Alberta learning English. Jane is here today to learn about the work that we do in the Legislature and will later be required to give a 30-minute presentation to her ESL class about the experience, so I would encourage her to keep her seating plan handy. I'd ask these two lovely ladies to rise to receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy St. Patrick's Day to you and everyone else.

I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some special guests that are, actually, from Banff-Cochrane and our riding of Little Bow. They're here as members of the Southern Alberta Energy from Waste Alliance. It's a coalition of waste management jurisdictions, representing over 60 municipalities from northeast Calgary down to the American border, from B.C. and halfway over to Medicine Hat. They also represent close to 300,000 people who are committed to researching and recommending for implementation new technology applications for recovering energy from waste materials, including SRMs.

I would ask them to rise as I introduce them. Included in this group in the public gallery are Mr. David Schneider, who's a councillor with Vulcan county; Mr. Rod Ruark, who's a councillor with Vulcan county; Mr. Paul Ryan – that sounds a little Irish – who's a councillor with the MD of Bighorn; and Nadine Epp, our executive assistant from Vulcan county. I am pleased to have them here. They've been doing meetings at AAMD and C and meeting with some people in the building. It's the first time for a lot of them. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Iftikhar Ahmad, general surgeon, who is working for his sponsorship and assessment for his final registration to be part of the Alberta health care system for this great province of Alberta. He recently moved to Alberta with his wife and five children from Dubai in the belief that this province is the best place to live, work, and raise a family. He is seated in the public gallery. I would ask Dr. Ahmad to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Keith Donlevy, who is seated in the public gallery. Keith, who was born, raised, and educated in Alberta, is a successful small-business owner and operator in the hospitality industry. Keith firmly believes in Alberta's boundless potential and long-term prospects. I'm pleased to have my guest join us today to witness the legislative proceedings. I'd ask that Keith now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly representatives of local 41 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees. Local 41 represents workers at the Grey Nuns and Edmonton General hospitals. They care deeply about the families and senior citizens who are enduring long wait lists and decreased affordability. They urge this government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care spaces. I am pleased to have my guests join us today to witness the ongoing tabling of their postcard campaign. I'd ask that they now rise as I call their names: Lola Barrett, the president of local 41, Hans Gronau, Pat Clermont, Avril Vigilance, Kathy White, and Darleen Olinyk. I'd now ask the Assembly to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce Norm Dupuis, the director of lumber grading for the Alberta Forest Products Association. It's his first visit here, and I'd like to welcome him to the Assembly. Please rise and be recognized by all of my colleagues.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Chamber of the Americas

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the pleasure of introducing several members of the Chamber of the Americas who are visiting us today. I'd now like to share with the Assembly some background on this group and the important role they play in Alberta's economic development.

The mission of the chamber is to promote businesses in the western hemisphere by supporting free trade and connecting businesses to one another, to investors, and to governments. They achieve this goal by sharing information and cultural understanding across international and national boundaries, and as such, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that they decided to visit Alberta and to see the benefits Alberta can bring to businesses throughout the United States and Mexico as well as to see the role they can play in developing Alberta's businesses. After all, international trade goes both ways.

Mr. Speaker, the trip by the Chamber of the Americas' leaders highlights the value of international partnerships to Alberta's economy. As many might have noticed in my introduction, several of the leaders of the chamber are also board members of Ports-to-Plains, one of Alberta's successful trade partnerships. What this means is that through our membership with Ports-to-Plains we also get access to valuable international organizations like the Chamber of the Americas. In turn, greater access to international organizations means we have greater access to not only international markets but to international information and cultural understanding.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is now in a place where we can work with organizations like the Chamber of the Americas to sell our province internationally. After all, Alberta has a lot to offer on the world stage. We all know this. The key has always been getting the word out. I believe that the partnerships that we develop today with groups like the Chamber of the Americas will go a long way toward improving our economy tomorrow.

I would also like to again thank my guests for coming here today and hope they have an opportunity to see the best of what Alberta has to offer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Deputy Chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to welcome the new deputy chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Since July of 2008 I have had the tremendous privilege of holding this position, and during that time I have been privileged to have a role in communicating to government on behalf of the Premier's council. I have shared information with my colleagues about matters of interest to the disability community across our province.

As a member of the council I have also had the opportunity to provide insight and to contribute to the development of the council's current strategic plan and to begin work on one of the plan's strategic directions, the promotion and implementation of universal design principles throughout Alberta. Another highlight for me was copresenting the council's awards of excellence at Edmonton's International Day of Persons with Disabilities celebrations over the last two years.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very grateful for the opportunity to have worked with the council, a truly dedicated group of Albertans from across the province who have an unrelenting commitment to listening to members of the disability community and acting to concretely improve the lives of Albertans with disabilities.

That is why I'm honoured today to be able to welcome the new deputy chair for the council, my colleague and friend the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. He is currently serving as chair of the First Nations, Métis and Inuit Workforce Planning Committee, and he is a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Standing Committee on Private Bills, and the Standing Committee on Health. Like many hon. members, I regularly turn to this member for insight and advice, and I am confident that his experience and dedication to Albertans will be a great addition to the council.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and, again, congratulations to my colleague on his appointment.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Funding for Long-term Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has demonstrated repeated failures of management of the public purse: major reorganization in the health care system, $1.2 billion deficit, millions spent at the Foothills and Lougheed hospitals and no new beds, and now $2.3 million sitting four years in Chantelle Management with nothing to show for it in Grande Prairie. To the Premier: how many more boondoggles with taxpayers' money can Albertans expect before this government becomes a responsible steward of public money?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, under my government we are committed to a publicly funded health care system. We're also committed to having the most innovative and modern public infrastructure. This includes facilities both for health and continuing care and for those that, unfortunately, have gone perhaps through a brain injury and that are young and need special residences as well. We'll continue on the path of building those facilities that are necessary.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, people are really suffering out there. That kind of a response is very disappointing. We're talking about financial mismanagement, Premier. Will the Premier stand up and reassure Albertans that he'll put an end to financial waste and mismanagement?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are the only jurisdiction in Canada that has committed to a five-year increase in funding for a publicly funded health care system – the only jurisdiction. That speaks to health being the number one priority for all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, how many other projects through this affordable living initiative have been similarly mismanaged, as the care centre in Grande Prairie has? Albertans deserve some answers.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the issue that was raised yesterday. This project is proceeding. The project received a number of different cash allocations from different funds to proceed. They had to get, of course, approval from their municipality. They also had to have a contract in place from Alberta Health Services. All of those now are in place, and they're prepared to start building here in April of 2010.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question.

Centralized Ambulance Dispatch

Dr. Swann: In the last year this government has flip-flopped with helipad closures, acute-care bed cuts, mental health services cuts, and capital funding schemes. This is a ridiculous number of mistakes in a short period of time. The latest fumbled health initiative by this government is the emergency medical services transition. To the Premier: who is responsible for this latest failure in the EMS transition? Is it the minister or the superboard?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the policy itself was debated in this House. It was developed after months of consultation. There was a committee that reviewed ambulance services throughout the province of Alberta, and a decision was made. In some parts of the province it works well, and in some parts we've heard that there are some issues with a centralized dispatch service. We've heard from the locally elected officials. We heard from individuals that work in EMS and the first response. We've listened to them, and we've made the appropriate decision. We're going to review it, and within a few days the minister will work with those municipalities to make sure that it's done right.

Dr. Swann: How many people are going to suffer through delays in action as a result of this mismanagement? Civic leaders are now voicing concerns with dispatch and response time. Can the Premier say how much response times have grown as a result of this EMS debacle?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in some places it's actually been shortened. But there is a goal here to bring all of Alberta to a particular standard beyond basic life-support services. But, once again, Alberta is a big province. There are various municipalities. There are different needs. There are different radio systems in play today. We want to make sure that we have the best system in place, that both ambulance and fire and also the RCMP and municipal police forces are on the same band and can respond immediately.

Dr. Swann: For years municipal people have been saying this, Mr. Premier. This is not reassuring that we're now taking a quick reversal in decisions. Given confusion and policy reversals, Albertans are unsure who's running health care today. Will the Premier clarify who makes provincial EMS policy? Is it the minister or the board?

Mr. Stelmach: As I said before, the policy was decided in this House. It was debated. I believe that there were members across the way that even agreed with it. On the other hand, this is a policy that was decided here. We've asked Alberta Health Services to implement it. We've heard from locally elected officials that there are some issues in some parts of the province; other areas are working very well. In fact, I heard earlier today at the AAMD and C some of the elected officials say: in our part of the province it's working well. There may be others that need some help, a revisit, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Renter Assistance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the direct-to-tenant rent supplement program started in April, and by August the program's funding had run out. This year funding for that program has been cut, and there are no plans to expand it. To the minister of housing: why is the program capped at helping approximately 80,000 people when the minister knows that 90,000 people in the province of Alberta qualify for assistance right now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for that question and his interest in this portfolio. The program is designed to help those most in need. There is a wait-list, and the priority base are those most in need. So a person may come on, and it's much like an emergency room. You help those who are most in need first, not necessarily those who have been in the longest, targeting the money where it's needed the most.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're talking here about 10,000 people on a wait-list who have already qualified. To qualify for housing supports, a person must be spending over 50 per cent of their income on housing and have less than $7,000 in total assets. How is waiting months, years on a waiting list under these trying conditions in any way acceptable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would remind this member that this program is designed to be compassionate to individuals but also compassionate to the taxpayers. I believe that we have held exactly the right balance as to where we need to be for individuals who are actually in need. It's based on a points system that is objectively decided on an individual, case-by-case basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, if you really want to be compassionate to the taxpayers, invest in people so that they don't end up costing us more in the long run.

Given that 10,000 who qualify for rent subsidies, who are already qualified, are already waiting for assistance, with even less money budgeted this year, how many more people can we expect to be on that wait-list a year from now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We adjust this on a year-by-year basis. Again, I want to thank the member for his comments. I'm always happy to hear from constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Senate Appointments

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have three Alberta Senators who will be retiring between 2011 and 2014. In 1989 Albertans sent Ottawa a message and elected Stan Waters as a Senator-in-waiting. He was soon appointed, as was elected Senator Bert Brown in 2007. The mandate of our remaining Senators-in-waiting expires November 2010. My question is to the Premier. Will you commit to holding Senate elections in conjunction with municipal elections this fall?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are three choices here. One is to hold the elections this fall. The other is to look at a separate election in preparation for the retirement of the Alberta Senators. The third is to wait for the 2012 provincial general election. We're reviewing the three different times because there are significant costs that will have to be borne by the government this fall if we're going to do it in conjunction with the municipal elections.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're taking too long to decide. Given that this October municipalities will be holding their elections, why hasn't the Premier let them know so that they can do it in an efficient and effective manner? The mandate is running out this fall. Let's have it done on time.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, if the member wants to agree to a special allocation of funds to assist municipalities to hold the election, then he has an opportunity to state his position in the House right now.

Mr. Hinman: I think that we are stating. But, again, their consultations and listening lack a bit of discipline here.

Given that this government says it's committed to ensuring that Senators-in-waiting are in place when the next three vacancies come open, when will this government do the right thing and let Albertans know we're having an election this fall for our Senators-in-waiting?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, not having heard whether the member wants to support additional expenses in hosting the election, I guess we'll have to make the decision on our own. That decision will be made soon in working with municipalities because there is a process to follow in terms of nominations and also the printing of the ballots.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil and Gas Revenues

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. On November 7, 2007, in this House, following the Premier's announcement of his royalty regime, he responded to a question by the then leader of the Liberal Party by pointing out the flip-flops of the Liberals on royalties: first opposing an increase, then supporting one. My question is to the Premier. Who's flip-flopping now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that we're not. The competitiveness review was done in light of the fact that there are significant changing circumstances with respect to both shale gas, which is a new resource that requires innovation and technology to reach, but most importantly the changes in the market. We have seen substantial gas finds in the United States, our number one market, trillions of cubic feet. That has put quite an issue at hand, and that's why we reviewed royalties but also the regulatory framework to ensure that we are the most competitive in North America.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premier doesn't seem to understand what a flip-flop actually is, I'd like to ask him if he thinks that his government has been more consistent than the people that he criticized back in 2007.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when we did the first review, gas was, you know, $9, $10, good market conditions in the United States, didn't have the world credit crisis nor the world economic situation.

The circumstances have changed dramatically. I'm just very thankful that as Albertans we set a lot of money aside during those good times so that we can weather this economic storm without going into debt, as other jurisdictions have to, over the short term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that we now appear to have a case of the pot calling the kettle black and given that both parties have flip-flopped more than a pair of fish out of water, will the Premier do the right thing and flip just one more time and demand the fair share he promised from the oil and gas industry?

Mr. Stelmach: I think, Mr. Speaker, supporting an industry that according to the Canadian Energy Research Institute will contribute $25 trillion – $25 trillion – to the GDP of this province over the next 25 years is a good decision. That's a significant contribution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Noise Abatement

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For those of us who live in the centre of our cities or by major roadways, spring heralds the new season of modified mufflers, tuned pipes, and roaring hot rods. Now, the Edmonton police have worked with the Council of Motor Transport Administrators, the Motorcycle and Moped Industry Council, and Alberta Transportation to establish testing procedures and recommendations for new legislation to establish a provincial noise emissions standard [interjections], which could be applied in this House right now. It was expected in this spring sitting, but so far no sign of it. To the Minister of Transportation: please tell me this legislation is coming now.

Mr. Ouellette: No, Mr. Speaker, I can't tell her that. We are working with a national group on that to try to figure out how we could actually know when it's – I guess what I'm trying to say is: how are you going to enforce it? What type of equipment are you going to use to register it?

Ms Blakeman: The minister may not be aware, but this work has been done by the groups that I just outlined, so the noise limit and noise testing equipment has the Good Housekeeping seal of approval from everyone that's involved. What is the holdup? Why can't we get that legislation in time to have it passed before this summer season?

Mr. Ouellette: You know what? That's not what I'm being told. I disagree that people have agreed on whether or not we can use all that equipment and it'll work. In fact, just the other day I was told – this is second-hand, of course – that the police association is saying that they don't know how they would be able to enforce it at this point.

Ms Blakeman: They need the provincial legislation to do it. The municipalities cannot move forward without the changes in provincial legislation. Why is the government holding cities and their citizens hostage? You need to move on this one.

Mr. Ouellette: I don't believe we're holding cities or anybody hostage, Mr. Speaker. The cities can pass a bylaw any time they want to handle their bylaw stuff. We are working with them, but we're not at the point that we're ready to bring in legislation yet. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Health Care ID Cards

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The health care cards in other provinces such as Ontario have pictures of the cardholders, much like the drivers' licences. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why doesn't the government of Alberta require photos on our health care cards?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I believe the question was about photos on health care cards. I'm sorry; there was so much yelling over here, I couldn't hear. If that's the gist of the question, I want to say to the Assembly that we have explored this idea before, Mr. Speaker, as a department, and what was found is that 97 per cent of Albertans over the age of 14 already carry a form of photo ID. So the idea was left as one to perhaps think about in the future but not one to act on immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: what is the estimated cost to Alberta taxpayers of fraudulent use of health care cards?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the member that we have very stringent rules and laws in place to help prevent any fraudulent activity when it comes to health care cards. One of the preventative measures we have, of course, is requiring physicians' offices to make patients who arrive show some form of ID. In other cases, if we're dealing with new people to the country or to the province, we also ask them to show their entitlement to be here and their residency and so on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One in four accidents in Alberta is a result of distracted driving. People are dying. There have been studies and policy field committees, but there is no legislation on this. To the Minister of Transportation: when is the minister planning to introduce distracted driving legislation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I agree that distracted driving has been a problem everywhere across the continent. I will say that most other provinces have done a knee-jerk reaction to one issue of distracted driving, and that's cellphones and electronic texting. We know that there are a whole lot of other distractions involved in distracted driving that cause problems. We're looking at the whole, big picture in order to try to get it right, that it can be effective.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the minister hems and haws, Albertans die on the highways. Now I'm asking the minister point-blank, and he refuses to answer. Again, when will the minister introduce distracted driving legislation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as soon as we know that we have it right so it can be effective and we can enforce it. I don't know how many times I have to try to tell that to this hon. member so that he understands. When we can do the proper thing and look after the big picture, then we will get it done.

Mr. Kang: I'm asking the minister: why is it taking so long? Again, the minister hems and haws. Given that there was not a single mention of distracted driving in the operational plan for traffic safety, why isn't this a priority for this minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, traffic safety is always a priority for this ministry and this government. There's no sense putting in a law that doesn't cover the actual problem that you have. There are a whole bunch involved with distracted driving, and we have to be able to look after the whole big picture of it and get it done right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bonnyville Primary Care Network

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bonnyville was the first primary care network, or PCN, in the province. To be a PCN, Bonnyville was required to submit a business plan to Alberta Health Services. This business plan means that Bonnyville is not able to apply for additional funding throughout the year should costs for vital services arise. The town of Bonnyville had a local nurse who recently became a nurse practitioner, but under the PCN they were not able to pay her as a nurse practitioner. As a result, they risk losing her to another municipality in Alberta.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the town of Bonnyville for being either the first or among the first to have a PCN. That's a very positive news story. In fact, the primary care networks that she's talking to operate on a basic per capita budget of about $50 per Albertan served. The PCNs do have the ability to hire and pay for nurse practitioners in addition to the doctors.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question is to the same minister. Will the minister compensate the town of Bonnyville the $155,000 they pay the PCN in order to keep the nurse practitioner in the community?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health and Wellness would not be able to do that directly, but there are a couple of options that you might want to pursue with your local PCN. One of them is to approach Alberta Health Services and ask for that funding that you've just alluded to. The other would be to ask the Bonnyville PCN network to request some additional per capita funding specific to the case you've just outlined.

Mrs. Leskiw: My last question is to the same minister. What action can be taken so that this government will support essential services in my constituency in the future?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. First of all, I want to assure the hon. member that we are always interested in removing any kinds of barriers that might be there that would impede either access to care or that would in some way, shape, or form potentially negatively affect the delivery of it. We're working with the College and Association of Registered Nurses and other stakeholders to eliminate barriers that might exist. I'd be happy to speak with you some more about it.

Anticrime Initiatives

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, Fort McMurray has struggled to eradicate crime and the social turmoil that resulted from Alberta's last resource boom. To the Solicitor General. Evidence points to an increase in trafficking of narcotics across provincial boundaries, and unfortunately Fort McMurray has become a hub for this drug trade. What specific measures have been implemented to break ties between Alberta criminals and suppliers and clients across Canada?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suspect the hon. member would know about the ALERT teams, the integration of police forces that we operate in Alberta for specifically that type of cross-jurisdictional crime, that involve partnerships between the RCMP, the Edmonton Police Service, the Calgary Police Service, and Medicine Hat, and some of the great work they do in this province. They're active across the province, not just in the south.

Mr. Hehr: Again to the Solicitor General. Maclean's magazine has placed the community as Canada's 28th most dangerous city in 2009, just one spot below Calgary. Given our commitment to policing and community safety, how does the minister justify that Fort McMurray's crime rate is still so far above the national average? What are you doing to lower it?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member would know about ALERT teams. I just had some of the other innovative police work that we do in our province. I invite him to attend my estimates tonight, and we'll talk specifically about that issue.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thanks for the invitation, and I will be there.

Again to the same minister. Alberta's energy booms have created a self-sustaining crime wave in Fort McMurray and some other jurisdictions in Alberta. Given the cycles of our economy, why does Alberta have fewer police officers per capita than other provinces with comparable crime rates?

Mr. Oberle: Well, that's also a topic for estimates. The member will know that on a direct comparison of police officers that may be true, but we have many additional resources and innovative use of those police officers. Just the use of sheriffs, for example, is different than is done in other provinces. Direct comparison is very difficult, Mr. Speaker. I did invite the hon. member to estimates tonight. I didn't mean to speak out loud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Oil Sands Image

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether it's the outcry against investment or the recent Dirty Oil documentary, we've been hearing increasing concerns lately about the development of Alberta's oil sands from certain stakeholders in certain places like the U.K. To the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: what are you doing to get the record straight in the EU?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, currently we have one of the hon. members, Drayton Valley-Calmar, over with the CCS group, the four providers. Actually, you might call them the winners of the dollars that are going to support their carbon capture and storage initiatives. We have been sharing information very expeditiously, and you would be pleased to know that this morning Ambassador Ross Hornby responded to the European Parliament to decry any kind of allegation of dirty oil relative to the oil sands and cited the excellent work done on an environmental front to make improvements here. A lot of it's about sharing information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. It does beg the next question, which is: how is this affecting our trading relationship with the EU? Is it all negative, positive, or a combination of the two? Can we have some specifics, please?

Ms Evans: We have not seen an erosion; however, there has been some reduction in trade of exports from some of the 27 countries given the nature of our economy. I would advise a most interesting fact for this House. We've recently hosted the ambassadors from the European Union and from Italy. From afar they have viewed us and said two things about Canada: they wonder about the seal hunt; they wonder about the allegation of dirty oil. It begs the question: how are we communicating as a nation with the rest of the world? Part of what we're doing now is working with our U.K. and German offices to see if we can make sure those countries know fully what we're doing.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is for the same minister. Are we looking at a truly free trade agreement, or is it in name only? Will Alberta actually gain from this kind of an arrangement?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we will gain. It's our intent over the next few months to have a number of targeted missions to go and work with the EU since we know fully that they intend to provide us with a more regulatory framework on the environmental front. You'll see missions that will be targeted with very specific times, places, and people to meet so that we're not over there all at once. Obviously, our Minister of Environment will be looking at this as well as myself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In its bungling bid to centralize health services and take away local decision-making, this government continues to create problems for communities across Alberta. Airdrie has already been forced by Alberta Health Services to divest itself of its prized integrated fire and ambulance service, and it turns out that so many communities are up in arms over the centralization of emergency dispatch services that the minister has gone into full retreat. My question is to the minister of health. Will he return the delivery of ambulance services and dispatch back to local communities, who were doing a great job?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, nobody is in any kind of retreat whatsoever. We're halfway through the process. It's timely to take a look and see how the first half has done before we proceed with the second half. Some municipalities have raised some issues, which the Premier enunciated earlier. So we're going to do that. On Friday I will listen to the story of Airdrie. My understanding is that last year or somewhere thereabouts municipalities were given a choice: do you wish to continue the way you're going, or do you wish to divest the EMS piece? My understanding – and it could be different on Friday, when I hear it from them themselves – is that Airdrie chose to divest.*

Mr. Anderson: Sounds like you've been talking to bureaucrats at Alberta Health Services. That has nothing to do with the reality of the situation.

Given that Albertans have already paid for the current call centre's dispatch infrastructure, ambulance units, and staff, how does the minister justify building new infrastructure, hiring new staff, and refusing to compensate municipalities for the money they have invested so that their residents have high-quality and locally run emergency response?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, again, I'm open to listening to Airdrie's story on Friday; that's why I'm going down there. My understanding is that as this whole issue was being discussed, it was determined that ambulances were more part of the health system than they were part of the municipal system, so the choice was put on the table. I've enunciated that one group chose to divest. There are 20 or more others who are doing something different. We've got a number of different options on the table right now.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this government's commitment to socialistic centralization/control of everything is totally out of control. Given this government's desire to centrally plan and run everything it sees, can he tell this Assembly what will happen to valued locally run organizations, like STARS, who deliver much-needed air ambulance services across Alberta? Are you going to take them over, too?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, STARS is in good shape. They're doing very well. They're doing tremendous work. They're saving lives. They're improving lives. They will continue to do that.

With respect to the ground ambulances, Mr. Speaker, in the previous system, it's important to note, they were restricted by geographical boundaries. Those that have since been implemented now are not, which means that the ambulance closest to the scene of need will be dispatched under the new model once it's fully implemented.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Royal Alberta Museum

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, $83 million in capital funding is budgeted for the Royal Alberta Museum over the next three years. According to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit there are no plans for how that money will be spent, whether it would be a new facility or collections or whatever. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: when will the minister produce a plan, a timeline, something on where the $83 million in funding for the Royal Alberta Museum will be spent? What are you going to do with the money?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's decision on the Royal Alberta Museum will be guided by our desire to do what's best for museums and for Albertans. Part of the capital plan still includes the federal contribution. Over $200 million has been committed to the museum project at this time.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much. Back to the same minister: how much of the $83 million in funding for the Royal Alberta

Museum is from the federal government? The Member of Parliament for Edmonton Centre has distributed flyers claiming that the federal Tory government has given $85 million for the construction of the Royal Alberta Museum. So whose money is this?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we have been having discussions, and there has been extensive discussion of the contribution that the federal government is going to do. That announcement has not come forward, and if the MP from that area is out with brochures, well, I'm very happy to hear that.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Back to the same minister, then: given that the government has been fooling around with our museum long before they could use the recession as an excuse for doing nothing, what is the real problem here?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear, if I have to restate what I have said before. Part of the capital plan very much includes what the federal contribution is. The capital plan includes $200 million, and we are currently looking at several options for the future of the museum. As I said before, there have been a lot of discussions, and there are still discussions to take place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Emergency Unlock Service Fees

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. I have a number of small businesses that operate in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne who provide emergency unlock services for people who have locked their keys in their vehicles. Your proposed licensing fees that are being considered are regressive. They are very high, and they make delivering this service cost prohibitive for my businesses. Will the minister consider lowering or abolishing this fee?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I don't think I can consider lowering the fees, Mr. Speaker. For the information of this House, they are $500 a year. Those fees were set in consultation with the industry, and they're designed to be cost neutral to the government. However, I can advise the hon. member that in certain circumstances the registrar can consider an exemption to the fees.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that answer, what are those certain recommendations that you may make to these operators that are listening to my question here today? They're looking for the forgiveness of that fee.

Dr. Morton: Make the local MLA pay.

Mr. Oberle: Well, that is one option, Mr. Speaker, offered by the minister of finance.

Again, this is designed to be a cost-neutral program. The fees were set in consultation with the industry, and there is widespread support from the industry for this legislation, for those fees. Small businesses, if they can show that they perform these services on rare occasions, may apply to the registrar for an exemption. For example, this could apply to a single tow truck operator where unlocking vehicles is not the primary function of their business. I think that covers many of the issues that the hon. member speaks of.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that answer, and that will help. On the bigger picture I think the regulatory burden is antiprogressive, it's regressive, and it doesn't stand for our competitive model that we're looking for. Will you reverse this decision?

Mr. Oberle: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker. This legislation was developed in consultation with the industry. It follows legislation and regulations we see developing in neighbouring provinces. It's designed to provide safety and security to our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mayor of Calgary asked for and received increased borrowing powers for his city and actually for all municipalities because this government failed to make good on their $1.4 billion infrastructure funding promise. Now, I'm sure the Minister of Municipal Affairs would like to spin that as a good-news story, but in fact this is yet another example of the provincial government happily downloading costs onto cities and towns and counties and municipal districts. To the minister: will the minister commit to covering the interest payments that municipalities will now have to pay to complete their capital projects with their extra borrowing?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that we had a lot of past dialogue on the MSI funding, and we've always been very, very open with municipalities that the funding would flow through. We're still committed to the full $11.3 billion, but in the agreements with each and every municipality it was always subject to my availability of funding that I could turn over to the municipalities. So the decision that the city of Calgary needs to make is up to them. We've given them the flexibility to make those decisions that meet the needs of their residents.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, since this appears to be a new working relationship between the province and the city of Calgary, I wonder: is the minister also reconsidering his government's lack of support of the airport tunnel?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, last year the city of Calgary received $115 million. We've added another $139 million to the MSI funding for a total of $254 million. They are over the next few years expected to receive $3.3 billion in MSI funding. Those dollars are left up to municipalities to decide their priorities, and it's up to them now to use that funding for the tunnel if they choose.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in 2005 the Ontario government committed $30 billion for infrastructure over five years, a funding program that they completed in only four, by the way, why is keeping an $11 billion over 10 years promise so tough for this government?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the $11.3 billion is only one program that's used to support municipalities. There are a number of us as ministers here that provide funding to municipalities. To use only $11.3 billion is not fair. There are considerably more dollars that flow through to municipalities from this province than what he alludes to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation Appeals

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Industry Task Force, or ITF, represents approximately 40 per cent of the employers in Alberta who are covered by the Workers' Compensation Board. Recently they have been looking to streamline the appeals process and management. The ITF would like to see the role of the employer appeals adviser come to fruition. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Appeals Commission reports directly to you, will you implement the role of employer appeals adviser?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Workers' Compensation Board, as the name would indicate, is designed to compensate workers for loss of income and to rehabilitate them back to work as soon as possible. It's meant to be a nonadversarial process. However, injured workers, even though many encounter the system only once or at a time when they're suffering from an injury, do need assistance with appeals, and there's a very good process for workers to appeal their claims.

Whether there is a need for appeal advisers now for employers I will answer in my second response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. My next question is to the same minister. I'm told that WCB account managers have been identified as being possible resources for employers during the appeals process. Are the WCB account managers capable of performing the extra function?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, whether they are or aren't capable of performing that function is one question. The second question, the most important question, is whether there is truly a need to create an office of appeals adviser for the employers. It is meant to be a process that is not litigious, that is nonconfrontational and nonadversarial, but it is something that I'm willing to take into consideration and look at whether there is a bona fide need for such.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. My last question is to the same minister. Are you concerned at all that small and medium employers often do not participate in the appeals process as it can be very intimidating for the uninitiated?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult for me to guess how many employers are not participating by virtue of the fact that if they're not participating, I don't know about them. The fact is that the system is not supposed to be intimidating. It is supposed to be, as I said, nonadversarial. But I will look into the need, and if indeed there is a need for such a service to be provided, I will consider it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, $316 million in education property taxes was collected in the city of Edmonton in 2009. That is a $55 million increase since 2005, or an over 20 per cent increase. My first question is to the minister of finance. Does all the money collected for education property tax in a municipality in any given year stay strictly within that municipality, or is it pooled by the government?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows the answer to that question. Of course it's pooled. For the 15th year in a row, I believe – I'll check that – property tax mill rates were lowered, but if the assessment went up, the net amount paid could have gone up in some areas, depending upon higher assessment.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if taxes were going only one way – and that's down – in this province, why did the education property tax in Edmonton increase by 20 per cent in five years, or over $55 million? Put it on the record.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm worried that the hon. member may have begun his St. Paddy's Day celebration a little early. I just gave the answer to that. If the assessment goes up and even if the mill rate goes down, you can still get a net increase in dollars paid.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, tax increases are not a laughing matter.

Again to the minister of finance: can the hon. minister guarantee that all the money collected in education property taxes remains in the municipality where it was collected to fund public education? You're collecting more money in Edmonton and forcing schools to close. Answer the question.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, sometimes on St. Paddy's Day, in addition to the green beer, there are scrambled eggs as well, and that's what the member is doing. He's scrambling about 12 different facts. I've already given him the facts. Just keep them straight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past number of months and again today at AAMDC's forum I received a lot of negative feedback from municipal officials, dispatch system operators, and concerned citizens regarding this government's decision to centralize ambulance dispatch services throughout Alberta and especially in northern communities. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are we centralizing ambulance dispatch services given that the decentralized system served the needs of my northern communities extremely well?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, as I think I indicated earlier, we're about halfway through that centralized process of dispatching. What I did was I discussed this matter with the folks at Alberta Health Services. I asked them, now that we're halfway through, if they could just suspend any further consolidations until we've had a chance to do a little bit of a review, see how things are working. I'd be happy to re-review what he's just mentioned – and that is the situation out in Yellowhead – to make sure that the services being provided are being provided safely and on a timely basis and with the greatest of efficiency of care for the patients that might be . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister answered my second question, that he will revisit the decision to return the dispatch service to Yellowhead county. My question would be to the minister. When can we receive a decision on this and proceed as quickly as possible?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I just want to be clear that I don't mind reviewing any situation. I mean, part of the job of a minister is to always look at that. Sometimes things are planned one way; they might come out a little bit differently in the other. We're hoping to not have to reverse any of those decisions – obviously, they were thought through quite carefully – but there are a few bumps that have been incurred along the way.

Now, I think the centralized model needs to be given a chance to work, and that's what we're doing with the first 17. The remaining 18 are where we're going to put a little more emphasis to see what we've learned from the first 17, but it doesn't mean that there can't be a little bit of crossover between the two.

The Speaker: Hon. member, an additional question?

Mr. Campbell: No questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Health Care Workforce Labour Utilization

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many other jurisdictions, we're facing some significant pressures within our health care system, and solutions are neither quick nor easy. It cannot be solved by simply hiring more bodies. One of the challenges at the forefront is labour utilization, particularly with nurses, and their self-regulated professional association has made a number of suggestions. My question is to the minister of health. How are you working with professional associations in the health care community to assess labour utilization and create an environment where the training matches the responsibilities?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, what we're doing is working in a very teamwork fashion. For example, we've recently established an Interprofessional Health Collaborative to look at how to better educate our workforce in terms of interprofessional practices. The collaborative is made up of people from postsecondary, from Alberta Health Services, from Covenant Health, employers. There's another one involved there that I just can't spot. Some private employers are involved as well. Some of the things they're looking at are potential curriculum redesigns and other practicum site issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of health: what changes do you have in mind to better encourage collaboration and integration of the roles of our health care facilities rather than segregation of these roles?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of the collaborative will be to look at possible propositions with respect to how we might shift the education and the health sectors toward better collaboration and better integration of effort. This is very much just in its initial stages. We're currently developing a specific work plan for the group. There will be more information on this available very soon. Primary care networks would be one of the initiatives, one of the myriad of issues that different health professionals work very collaboratively on, and there are other examples.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental, again to the same minister: is your department able to measure optimality in outcomes and labour utilization, and if so, what processes are in place to do this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think everybody in the Chamber and everyone listening, in fact all Albertans probably know that Alberta has been long respected for being a national table leader when it comes to issues like this, specifically with regard to how we can to the fullest extent possible utilize our health workforce's educational capacities better, its skills, and its experiences as a core strategy of moving forward as we work toward the Premier's vision of having the best performing publicly funded health care system in Canada. Next week, in fact, ministry and employer representatives from across the country will be gathering in Vancouver to share some of those best practices and measurements and promoting optimal workforce utilization.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Professional Corporations

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year this government made a significant step forward in allowing some professionals to benefit from professional corporations. British Columbia and Saskatchewan allow their professional corporations to have investment companies and family trusts as shareholders in their professional corporations. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: when will we have legislation allowing for investment companies and family trusts to be shareholders in our Alberta professional corporations so that Alberta professionals are once again placed on the same footing as our western neighbours?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think all members on this side of the House would share with the hon. member in the fact that we all want Alberta to be not only competitive but the most competitive province in Confederation. However, I must say that the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, I believe, was proclaimed just some two weeks ago, so I would suggest to this hon. member: let's give this act a chance to even be implemented, see how it works, and if indeed there is a need to modify it sometime in the future, let's consider it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we consider looking at these changes, is there a need for other government departments to work with Alberta Employment and Immigration to effect these changes?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, not only is there a need for all departments, but there's a need for all members of this House. If you're hearing that there are concerns with the act as it becomes implemented, do definitely let me know. Naturally, all ministries that deal with professional bodies such as the ministry of health and our Attorney General, that deals with the legal profession, would be some of the ministries. And definitely finance. I imagine that, ultimately, there would be some impact on the ministry of finance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. And thinking of the impact on the ministry of finance, my final question is to the minister of finance. Will these changes to the rules for professional corporations have any financial implications for the province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might begin by pointing out to the member that in assessing the competitiveness of Alberta vis-à-vis B.C. and Saskatchewan on this matter, you don't just look at the question of trust. You look at the overall tax structure. I'd remind the member and all members that Alberta's single-rate tax structure is the lowest top marginal rate of any taxes, lower than B.C.'s, lower than Saskatchewan's. We have no provincial sales tax, no capital tax, and no payroll tax. Let's look at the big picture when we talk about competitiveness.

Now, with respect to changes, Bill 53 cost us about a million dollars to implement. We haven't done the calculations yet on the change that the member is inquiring about.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness wishes to supplement an answer given earlier in the question period. As per our policy, I believe that it was in an exchange with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, who will then be given an opportunity for an additional question.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I indicated that the city of Airdrie had divested itself. In fact, the decision has been made to divest themselves, yes, but it doesn't have an effective date until July 1, so it's not to be misconstrued. I want to make it clear, too, that the divestiture occurred after the contract didn't work out between them and Alberta Health Services. They came to some agreement – at least, that's my understanding – but I didn't want to leave a misimpression of the date of the divestiture. The effective date is July 1 of 2010.*

Mr. Anderson: Well, the reason that they've divested, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta Health Services has said that they have to purchase two more fully staffed ambulance units in order to comply with newly imposed AHS regulations. Minister, did your bureaucrats tell you about that? It doesn't sound like it.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that Alberta Health Services has brought in some new standards in some cases, and perhaps that's what's being referred to as regulations by another name. We'll review that, I'm sure, on Friday. It's important that as we look at this whole piece, we don't compromise patient safety or Albertans' safety in any way by putting too much pressure on one staff who are working in EMS and see that we leave somehow inadvertently no staff working in the fire and rescue side. We're working through those issues.

The Speaker: Hon. members, with that last exchange there were 119 questions and answers today. Twenty individual members were recognized: nine from the Liberal opposition, two from the Wildrose Alliance Party, one from the NDs, and eight from the Progressive Conservative caucus.

In 15 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had indicated that the Home Educators of St. Albert were going to be in our gallery, and indeed they were. I wanted to take this opportunity to read the group leaders' names into the record. They were Mrs. Kim Fisher, Mr. Glenn Fisher, Mrs. Adriana LaFrance, Mrs. Dawn Engler, Reverend Garry Engler, Mrs. Sherry Morrison, Mrs. Kathy Put, Mrs. Vivian Long, and Mrs. Barb Duteau. I know that they are still within our building, and perhaps they would hear the thunderous round of appreciation for their visit.

Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to advise this Assembly today that March 14 to 20 is being celebrated as Agricultural Safety Week across Canada. In Alberta agriculture is our largest renewable industry. I would like to encourage all Albertans to recognize Ag Safety Week and look for ways to participate. Plan-Farm-Safety is the theme of a three-year Canadian ag safety campaign, and it focuses on the importance of having a farm safety plan.

In Alberta we promote farm safety through a number of initiatives and a variety of awareness programs during Ag Safety Week and throughout the year. This week the government of Alberta announced that it is providing $715,000 to ag societies to help them develop farm safety programs in their communities.

Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development's farm safety program works in partnership with rural community groups, industry, and other rural partners to deliver prevention programs that address farm safety awareness and workplace safety best practices. For our government farm safety is a year-round priority.

Agriculture and Rural Development's Safety Up! awareness campaign is targeted at new and young farmers. The Farm Safety Club educates children aged four to 12 years of age about safe behaviour on farms and works with 4-H to promote ag safety to its members. ARD provides $120,000 to the Alberta Farm Safety Centre to support the safety smarts program, an in-class presentation to rural schoolchildren to increase knowledge and awareness of safety issues on the farm. This program, Mr. Speaker, reaches 50,000 students per year.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I call on all Albertans to promote and be aware of farm safety this week and to reinforce good farm safety habits all year long.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Fay Meikle

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday Canada lost its oldest veteran. Fay Meikle passed away on Monday at the age of 105. Born in Oklahoma in 1904, Fay was two years old when her family pulled up stakes, headed north, and settled in Regina. Fay moved to Taber in her 20s and enlisted as a Wren in the Women's Royal Naval Service in 1942. In fact, her son, John, joined the navy at the same time, the very first mother-son enlistment in the Canadian navy. Fay served on a number of ships during the war and received the Canadian volunteer service and war medal.

After the war Fay worked as a librarian for the Taber school division for over 20 years. She was quite a Renaissance woman, greeting Prince and Princess Takamatsu of Japan at the opening of Lethbridge's Japanese gardens, participating actively in the Taber arts and crafts club, reading, dancing, weaving, singing, and travelling the world. She spent the last years of her life at the Extendicare in Lethbridge. I was very privileged to have known her.

I feel tremendously honoured to have been asked to speak at Fay's funeral on Saturday in Taber. She was a remarkable woman who made tremendous contributions to her nation, her province, and her local community. As we honour Fay and her contributions, we should also honour all of those who have served in our armed forces from Confederation to today, upholding Canadian values, defending human rights, protecting the innocent, and setting an example with their commitment to honour, duty, and loyalty. We owe everything to Fay and veterans like her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Olds College Partnerships

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Olds College has had some tremendous success in forming partnerships over the years with various businesses, industries, organizations, and individuals, all for the betterment of their students and our future economic prosperity in this province. Past partnerships include Henry Heuver, John Deere Ltd., the town of Olds, Chinook's Edge school division, the Calgary Stampede, the University of Alberta, and the Olds College Alumni.

Each year they celebrate their latest partnership success at their annual gala, which was held just this past Friday. This year's 2010 partnership of the year is the heavy equipment industry. As Chairman Bill Quinney so aptly stated: there are few groups that have had such a powerful, influential impact on Olds College in such a short period of time.

Mr. Speaker, it all started when a local construction firm approached Olds College with a need for a heavy equipment operator training program. It was soon realized that they were not alone in their need, that the need was industry-wide. Since the beginning five years ago over 38 companies and dozens of individuals have helped to expand this program to make Olds College a leader in heavy equipment industry training.

To date 213 graduates have completed their training to help replenish an aging workforce and fill many of the new positions created in Alberta's vibrant economy. Many of these graduates come from a wide variety of settings, including aboriginal and Métis origins as well as both male and female genders. Industry has been a true partner, assisting financially as well as with equipment donations to give students hands-on learning. The Olds College program has now grown to be province-wide, as they are now expanding to northeastern Alberta as well as into the Calgary region.

I'd like to invite all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating the heavy equipment industry as Olds College partner of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been watching and listening to this government for too long, and they are tired of the talk. They say one thing, and they do the other. Albertans are asking: why doesn't this government produce a sustainable budget? Does this government know what it means to be competitive? Do they know what a level playing field is? Does this government know what a true balanced budget is: cash in, cash out? Does this government know what an unfunded liability is? Does this government know what carrying charges are? Does this government have any plan, other than to buy now and let the next generation pay later, for the $6 billion plus teachers' pension plan, which remains unfunded?

The situation we find ourselves in is pitiful. This government is not prioritizing and budgeting for our children. They are not building a better Alberta. They are continuing the PC way; that is, pretend to consult, power and control at any cost, centralized power and decision-making and the money. This government's defence on the balancing of their budget has all the drama of Hollywood and its stunts. If the cost of capital infrastructure is revenue neutral, why not build 20 more diamond overpasses? Their excuses are as pathetic as the stars of Hollywood who are arrested and charged with shoplifting, and their defence is that they are not guilty: we have the money to pay for it. This government is not prioritizing and budgeting for our children and their future. This government doesn't just fail to plan; they fail to think.

On a positive note, Mr. Speaker, happy birthday to my daughter, Janna Jade Hinman.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Capital Region Board's long-term growth plan. This plan was developed with the foresight of mayors and reeves from 25 municipalities in Alberta's capital region. The growth plan for the capital region, which expects an influx of about 600,000 new residents over the next 40 years, will manage the impact of development on land, water, and air; will promote the efficient use of land; and look at conservation and stewardship on private and public lands.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings from constituents today. The first is from Pat Melnyk. She was very concerned about the food quality and hygienic care at the Royal Alex that her mother and her husband received at recent stays there and also concerned about the lack of long-term care beds available for seniors such as her mother. That's the second time I've heard stories like that this week.

My second tabling is from Rayn Fraess, who is very displeased with the royalty framework, feels that the oil industry is based on a nonrenewable, limited resource, and it needs to be done at a good price today or they will be back in the future, with no choice in the long run. He is also particularly concerned about land reclamation.

Finally, an e-mail from Mike Smit, who is a PhD candidate in computing science at the U of A, with great concerns about funding to universities no longer being competitive Canada-wide, especially for top-notch students. We're having trouble attracting them given the cost of living. He came here four years ago because of the tuition cap and feels that that was a promise that has now been broken or has a large enough loophole to drive an oil tanker through.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Meryl Rowbotham, a teacher with the Edmonton public school board. She writes that the students in her school have recently been involved in several charitable projects, including raising donations for the Food Bank and for Haiti. She asks that the necessary level of education funding be in place to maintain a high level of quality education for the students.

As my second tabling, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 50 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which has gathered signed postcards from approximately 2,500 Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is from Maureen Adachi, and this is a letter that I received electronically regarding Alberta Hospital. Maureen Adachi would certainly like to see it functional.

The second letter I have for tabling today is also regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton, and it is from a constituent, Sarah Fraser. She also is expressing her concern about the government's long-term plans regarding Alberta Hospital.

I have permission to table these two letters.

My third tabling is information that I have acquired regarding Imperial Oil's plans to move up to 200 modules that are manufactured in South Korea through Montana to the Kearl oil sands project in northeastern Alberta this year and next year.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, I just want to remind hon. members that on April 12 and 13 we will be hosting our annual MLA for a Day program for young people in the province of Alberta.

Interestingly enough, although this program is cosponsored by the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command of the Royal Canadian Legion, to date we have received 56 applications from 40 different constituencies. There are 83 constituencies in the province, so I've sent a memo to those members of the Assembly from whom we have not received an application. If you wouldn't mind, if you have some time, just check it out with some young people in your area if you're one of those who does receive a letter and basically encourage them to apply. It seems that a number of schools, a number of teachers don't seem to advise their students of these opportunities, which is a strange item, considering everyone's concern for the promotion of democracy.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 10
Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment
Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security on behalf of.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to rise today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to move second reading of Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, using the civil forfeiture process, this legislation has proved to be an effective crime reduction tool. The act allows the Crown to restrain and seize the illegal profits and property of crime and compensate Albertans victimized by criminal activity.

A recent Supreme Court of Canada decision called Chatterjee recognized the validity of civil forfeiture legislation. Chatterjee involved a constitutional challenge to Ontario's civil forfeiture act. The Supreme Court ruled that Ontario's legislation was constitutional and that it was within provincial powers to enact this legislation. It also recognized that crime imposes substantial costs on provinces and provincial resources. The court determined that it would be out of step with modern reality to conclude that provinces must shoulder the costs of crime but cannot seek to suppress it.

On the heels of Chatterjee, Mr. Speaker, the amendments being proposed will expand the scope of the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. These proposed amendments will allow the act to be used for broader purposes, including compensating public bodies such as municipalities for the costs of crime, allowing for the seizure of property that may generate little or no compensation to victims but that serves other purposes such as depriving criminals of resources, allowing dangerous or illegal property to be modified or destroyed, and expanding the powers to make grants to community-based organizations in order to prevent crime.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments will allow costs to be awarded against the Crown when restrained property is ordered returned to its owner. This follows the advice recently given by the Alberta courts.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will allow the civil forfeiture process to continue to make crime unprofitable and will expand the range of victims who can be compensated due to the harm caused by crime.

On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General I urge all of my colleagues to support the bill, and I look forward to hearing comments during second reading.

At this time I'd like to move adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11
Witness Security Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act.

It is my pleasure to rise today to speak about Bill 11, the Witness Security Act. This legislation will complement the current federal witness protection program by establishing a provincial witness security program. This will provide another tool for the Crown and local police agencies to provide security for witnesses.

Investigating and prosecuting gang cases is becoming increasingly complex. When individuals are unwilling to come forward and give evidence out of fear of retaliation, it adds an extra challenge. One of the things that we've heard from police and the Crown is that there is a need for this type of program at the provincial level, where short-term protection could help move an investigation and prosecution forward. Alberta's law enforcement agencies and the Crown are working extremely hard and deserve all the means possible to do their jobs.

Witness protection is an indispensable tool in the investigation and prosecution of serious gang-related crimes in cases where there is a threat to the safety of the witness. Other provinces have already established their own witness security programs, and a provincial witness security program will help support Alberta's commitment to reducing gang-related crime and to making our communities safer.

I urge all members to support this important legislation, and with that I'd like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12
Body Armour Control Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading on the Body Armour Control Act.

Rising levels of gang-related violence have recently resulted in heightened concerns about public safety. The Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics reports that Alberta had the second-highest provincial homicide rate in 2008, and approximately 25 per cent of all gang-related homicides in Canada occur in Alberta. Because of the inherently dangerous nature of the gang lifestyle, gang members often wear body armour when they engage in various forms of criminal activity, including drug trafficking, drive-by shootings, and even public executions.

The proposed legislation would allow the police to seize body armour from individuals who do not have a permit or are not exempt from the requirement for obtaining a permit. Police officers, peace officers, emergency medical service providers, Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission inspectors, licensed private security guards, and others who need to wear body armour to do their jobs would be exempt from the requirement to get a permit. Individuals holding a valid firearms permit will also be exempt. Other individuals may be issued a permit on the basis that they have a legitimate occupational or personal safety reason to wear body armour.

The proposed legislation defines body armour to include garments or other items that are designed or adapted to protect the wearer from a weapon or other object used to cause serious injury or death. The proposed legislation does not apply to safety equipment used in sporting and recreational activities, nor does it apply to safety equipment worn to protect against workplace injuries; for example, safety equipment worn by loggers or meat cutters.

The permit system will be modelled on the licensing scheme contained in the Security Services and Investigators Act. Several provisions in this proposed legislation are modelled on that act.

Applications will be processed by the registrar designated under that act, and applicants will be subject to rigorous criminal record and background checks. Violations of the act will be punishable by a fine or a short custodial sentence or both.

The goal of this proposed legislation is to restrict the ability of violent criminals and known gang members to possess body armour while ensuring that law-abiding Albertans have access to this equipment for occupational or personal safety reasons.

The passage of this legislation would also advance one of the government of Alberta's five strategic priorities, to promote strong and vibrant communities and reduce crime so that Albertans feel safe.

I encourage all members to support Bill 12, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, amendments to be offered? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. We'd been given a different order. We had the order as bills 4, 6, 8, and then 1. This has been changed today? Okay. Let me just dig that stuff out, then. Hang on.

The Chair: You can ask the Government House Leader to change the order.

Ms Blakeman: No. That's okay. I'm pretty fast on my feet.

The Chair: All right. Then we'll proceed with Bill 1. The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Let me fish the bill out here. When I spoke in second reading, I raised the issue of the current concern about the competitiveness of the film sector in Alberta. Just to recap very briefly the issues that I was raising, really, we have two objectives, or I hope we have two objectives around film in Alberta. One is support for our indigenous productions, you know, support for development of scripts, of story ideas, hopefully our stories but not necessarily. With that are things like the support for the producers – they can get access to workshops at the Banff television festival, for example, and other workshops that are run – plus keeping film workers, including actors, technicians, artisans, here in Alberta so that they're available to work on this generally lower budget but indigenous film stream.

We do have a particular film strategy here which does allow for majority Alberta-owned productions, which are a minimum 51 per cent Alberta ownership and majority financial and creative control, to be eligible for a 27 per cent grant program back on the amount of money that they have spent, and that's capped off. The total fund is some amount that doesn't come to mind. It got cut this year. We just don't have enough money in this fund to be able to give everybody that 27 per cent, for example. There are enhanced eligibilities. If, for example, the production employs Albertans in three or more of the creative positions or two or more creative positions plus trainees, they're eligible for up to 29 per cent. That's what we call stream 1.

The second objective that we have here in Alberta, or at least I hope we have, is competitiveness for the non-Alberta, nonindigenous productions; in other words, the ownership of the production is less than 51 per cent Alberta owned. We've ended up with two streams in that one. One is sort of a hybrid, and the other one is definitively targeted towards out-of-province, generally big-budget Hollywood movies, if I can call it that way.

The hybrid was intended at one point to help us develop Alberta film producers. I would argue that we have done that. We've got very strong Alberta producers with lots of experience behind them now, and I want to continue to support Alberta producers. Don't misunderstand me here. I'm not trying to take anything away from them.

What I am trying to do right now is address the problem we're having with competitiveness with that larger stream in bringing in the Hollywood productions. What they've asked for, basically, is a bump up of the percentage that they would qualify for. The percentage I was addressing earlier, that 27 to 29 per cent, is the highest percentage that would qualify, and then it drops down from that. The stream 2, the equal or minority Alberta ownership, which is that hybrid one, is 25 to 27 per cent, but by the time you get to stream 3, all other eligible productions, you're into the 20 per cent range. If they do the enhanced eligibility, they could get up to 22 per cent.

We're just not competitive. In B.C. they recently raised their film tax credit from 25 to 33 per cent. I've heard from a lot of people involved in the film sector in the last couple of weeks, and I am shocked at how few of them have had work in Alberta over the last year, and almost none of them have work lined up for the next year. That competitive edge that we had – at one point we were just below B.C. in attracting outside production here into Alberta. Remember that for a small investment on our part we're getting a return somewhere between $6 back per dollar invested and $10 back per dollar invested depending on which formula you want to use. So it's great return on investment, but it also employs Albertans.

I just had an e-mail from a friend whose wife is a producer, and this is not small stuff. She was assistant director to Ang Lee on Brokeback Mountain. This is not small potatoes. This is big Hollywood stuff. She was assistant director on that, and she's now gone to B.C. to look for work. So there's a highly qualified director, producer, organizer, film worker who has not worked in Alberta and is now going to B.C. to look for work and is leaving her family here to go and do it.

When I look at this Alberta Competitiveness Act – and I know that it was really structured around the oil and gas sector, which we know is really important in Alberta – as I started to go through the technical document, the Project Committee Final Technical Report on Alberta's Natural Gas & Conventional Oil Investment Competitiveness to the Alberta Department of Energy, and the glossy brochure that the government put out called Energizing Investment, I've gone through the criteria there, and a number of things have popped out to me where I went: yeah, well, I would argue that the film community qualifies for that. When I start looking at stuff like, you know, government revenues, the energy industry has been the single largest contributor to government revenues in Alberta over the last 10 years. Well, the film community has been a pretty large contributor as well.

You know, when they move in and shoot a film, especially these big Hollywood budgets, I mean, they're coming in with millions and millions of dollars. Let me put this in context for you. A small budget film, an art film, that won the Academy Awards has a teeny budget of $11 million, okay? So even what we would consider – to me, $11 million, I'll never see that in my life. That's a big budget to me, but that was considered small budget. You look at the budgets in things like Avatar or the guys running around, shoot-'em-up, car chase kind of stuff, they're into the $100 million budget range.

Mr. MacDonald: Brokeback Mountain: how much was the budget for that?

Ms Blakeman: I don't know, actually.

When they come into Alberta and we can lure them into Alberta, they are dropping millions and millions of dollars in our economy that came from outside and get left here. The stories I've told of, you know, a props buyer or set dresser who walks into the antique shop in Nanton and basically buys the shop out, drops $20,000 cash that day and walks away: you know, it really matters to us. That's money that's left in our small-business hands. It's left in our workers' hands, who pay taxes, who belong to their community leagues, who volunteer.

My friend, again, the one that's gone off to look in B.C., volunteers for her community league. She works for some of the charities in town in her spare time. Her two kids go to a local school. She's part of our community.

So what we've been asking for, talking to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, is that there is an enhanced rate that's available to those big budget films. What kind of jobs are we really talking about? Well, it's things like accounting, art and production design, construction, costumes, first aid, craft service, which is essentially food, greens, the grips and the riggers, hair, lighting and electrics, makeup – a number of those people came and sat in the gallery here last week – paint, paramedics, props, script, continuity supervisors, set decoration, sound, special effects, tutors for the kids that are on a set. You get IATSE local 669, international photographers, and you've got all of these lists of people that work in video and electronics and your director of photography, commonly known as a DOP, your first and second camera assistant, your stills photographer, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

You're into ACTRA, which is my union of actors, the association of Canadian television and radio artists.

An Hon. Member: You're still in the union?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I'm on withdrawal. I'm still a member of that union.

The Teamsters, local 362, do a lot of driving around. Just let me stop here and say that the teamsters driving around is the worst that this sector gets in creating greenhouse gases. This sector is green economy jobs. They are creative jobs. They are knowledge-based jobs. So, you know, the worst that they get is the car exhaust from the teamsters driving everybody back and forth, including people and equipment.

Other people that work in that sector are from the Directors Guild, for example.

More than 3,000 creative cast and crew work in this industry across the province, and they're not working. I mean, I met with these people in Calgary. They've continued to send me e-mails and Facebook and Twitter and everything else. They haven't drawn a paycheck in Alberta except for, you know, one or two. They maybe worked for a month in Alberta. You know what? These people are good. They're good enough that they're getting called away to work in other places. So we're training people to go and work for our competitors.

Where are we losing business to? We are losing business to New Mexico, which will fill in for all those westerns that we used to get and draw them in. They've drawn them into New Mexico now. They're offering a better deal. They are more competitive in this sector, so that's where the big-budget westerns are going. All of the big-budget westerns that are being filmed this year are being filmed in New Mexico. We're losing big-budget films to Saskatchewan, and we're losing a whack of business to B.C.

I'm so frustrated with this. It's a green economy. It's making sure that Albertans work and their taxes come back into the coffers of the government. And who's paying them? It's money from outside. When I look at what's important here and what's in this book, they talk about, you know, revenues. They talk about taxes. Well, there you go. We pay people. They pay taxes into this system. We talk about changes and challenges in developing our resources. Well, there's the challenge. We can't compete anymore because of the percentage that's in place.

We've had the industry send a couple of signed letters and recommendations to the minister in which they're suggesting how they could be helped. One of them is combining the streams 2 and 3 so that those big-budget films get a better percentage. It doesn't necessarily have to be combined. It just needs to be a better percentage. You can see what we're up against in B.C. They're killing us, absolutely killing us. So is Saskatchewan, and so is New Mexico. They're wiping us off the planet here. They need the stream 3 funding percentages lifted up into that stream 2 level. Or, if you want more business, raise it even higher than that, and we'll get it.

Now, there's also been funding that has been cut to the Alberta film development fund. That's where we help our local people develop those stories and assist our local producers. There's been a cut in that. I understand, you know, that we all had to take a hit because of where we are with the budget. But this one can make us money. This one can keep Albertans employed. So maybe we need to have another look at that.

I'm just looking for the suggestions that the community had given and what could be helpful here. They were asking for enhanced eligibility for key positions. I listed off a bunch of different people who got work in this sector, and I'd sort of indicated that you could get enhanced eligibility if you hired more of them or included more in that category. But what they're suggesting is that we have additional incentives to hire more Albertans in key creative roles and expanding what we're listing as a key creative role, so adding in things like production manager, costume designer.

We have some really good costume designers here. Here's another example: Wendy Partridge ran one of the biggest costume shops in Canada, and she ran it out of Calgary, and she has closed it and left the province.

Mr. MacDonald: She didn't move to Edmonton?

Ms Blakeman: No, she didn't. She left the province. Honestly, she was one of the biggest costumers – like, of the films that I shot way back when I was still really active in this community, she costumed every single person in the production. So she was a big, big costume house, a big costume designer. She's gone. That was a lot of money. She hired a lot of local people as well as other artisans to work with her.

Production designer, which is different from – there are all different categories of designers; just trust me on this one – an art director, and increasing the number of performers that they would consider in lead positions from two to three.

Also, to look at a regional bonus. Now, we're aware that often the films that come into Alberta are actually shot in rural Alberta, so they're a huge bonus for some of our smaller towns, like, for example, Fort Macleod. In Brokeback Mountain there are a number of scenes that if you know Fort Macleod well, you recognize Fort Macleod. Actually, they have a tourist business now where they take people around to where certain scenes were shot. It really helps us if we can get those film companies to come and shoot in certain regional areas.

They were asking for a regional bonus to see a short-term benefit through the shooting schedule and the amount of money that's spent while they're shooting. But then that longer benefit is for tourism. So a regional bonus would be very helpful, and they're suggesting a bonus of 2 per cent when a production works outside of the established Edmonton and Calgary studio zones. Well, that's rural development. That's exactly what that is. That would be very helpful because there are some really beautiful, wonderful places in Alberta that are very scenic.

As I talked about before, Alberta has some unique things, like the quality of our light. We can compete with other places on a lot of other levels. We're getting killed, absolutely killed, by the incentives that we are not able to provide. So if you can make our incentives the same or a little bit higher, we can compete. We have the talent. We've got the experience. We've got the trained people to do it. We've got the creative stories to do it. We've got the scenes to do it. We've got the light to do it. We compete except that what we've got for incentives now is just tanking us.

The minister has worked a lot with the local producers on the issues, and we thank him for that. I encourage him to work more with the union side and the guild side, which is representing the workers. I've listed a number of different ones. It just strikes me that when we're looking at something like Bill 1 and Alberta competitiveness, you know, here's the future. We've got Richard Florida telling us all the time: creative thinking, creative classes. We've got other future thinkers and futurists that are saying: knowledge-based economies are where we've got to go. Here it is. I'm giving it to you. It's on a platter. They're green jobs. It's money that stays in the province that comes from outside of the province. This is low-hanging fruit. It's low-hanging fruit for green economies. It's low-hanging fruit for competitiveness. We just need the focus and the thinking on it.

I've talked to a couple of the members of the front bench there in trying to get them onside. I flagged it specifically today to the money guy. So I'm hoping that I can convince you to look seriously at this. If you want to ask me questions, please do. I have, as you are used to with me, many, many different documents here. I'm happy to talk about it or to set you up with somebody in the industry. It just strikes me that there's real potential here. You understand that from the oil and gas sector. I just watched you walk through it with your competitiveness strategy for the oil and gas sector. You guys get this, but you should be able to get it beyond the oil and gas sector. I think you can.

Thank you very much for that opportunity to lay this argument out again. I look forward to some pickup on this conversation, and I vote for support.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the hon. member. There's no question that this particular industry is one that you are very familiar with and very passionate about. I respect that.

There's no question that you can make very compelling arguments for just about any industry. We do look at the one side, and we have seen and I know you are aware of some of the discussions that are happening in the United States right now. California saw a leakage of the movie industry around, and now they're saying: "Well, wait a minute. What have we got to do to get them back?" Yet it is very difficult for a state like California, who's squandered pretty much their opportunities right now, to tell folks: well, we have to send home a whole bunch of schoolteachers, we've got to cut our state staff down to working a few days a week, but we're going to give a little bit to the film industry to get them back.

When the film industry showed up in Hollywood just a few weeks ago, with the megastars and the billions that the movies make, people say: "Wait a minute. Why am I, Joe Q. Public, greeting people daily at the Wal-Mart to give my tax dollars to an industry that seems to do pretty good?" That's a real basic question that you have to answer every time you take tax dollars.

While I can appreciate the argument used, that, well, if you spend one, we can show – I think even our documents agree that the benefit to Alberta is in excess of $100 million for what we've invested. That argument also can be taken over and show how much we benefit from the arts and the cultural things that we support in a small way and the multiplier effect in a community. So I don't disagree. But every dollar we spend comes from a taxpayer, and when you take a dollar out, it also has the effect of taking a dollar from someone who can't spend it on something that they choose to be directly spending it on.

It is a little troubling to see, you know, that you say that we're losing it to Saskatchewan and British Columbia. I met Premier Wall yesterday in Lloydminster, and I can tell you that the discussions they're faced with in their government right now are extremely difficult. They, too, have seen so much of their potential financial stream disappear that they're going to be faced with a very difficult challenge. We know that Mr. Campbell came immediately back after his election and restated their budget, showing them to be in extremely difficult states. They are some $30 billion in debt.

While not disagreeing that there's opportunity here, it is difficult for me to understand how provinces can borrow and pick an industry like this to support from that position. It shouldn't be about a race to the bottom.

I had an opportunity years ago to visit a set that was the filming for Open Range, a Kevin Costner production. While they appreciated the incentives and stuff they had – and I don't disagree at all on the expertise in the film industry in Alberta and the staffing and that talent. No questions, I think, from anybody on that, that we've got some of the best. He was here because at that time we had a 69-cent dollar. This was a film that he was a shareholder in. He said, "You know, if I had my choice, I'm a patriotic American, and I would far rather film this in Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, but for 69 cents on the dollar I've come to Calgary." They loved it. It was a huge selling film for the scenery and that in Alberta, all of those benefits. Obviously, they came back for Brokeback Mountain.

Yes, I accept your arguments that there is a multiple benefit to it, but let's just look at some things that we support. Apparently, this has been brought to our attention many times by you as being inappropriate use of taxpayers' money: Horse Racing Alberta. Now, you know, actually, that we don't give them one cent. They get to keep the dollars that they raised as their share of the slot machines on their horse-racing facilities. It isn't supported by the taxpayer by one cent, yet as the hon. members know, it has been raised in this House time and time again: why are we supporting Horse Racing Alberta? They wouldn't argue that it supports 7,000 or 8,000 jobs in that industry. Without going into: how many different spinoff jobs are there from it? We don't know. Obviously, it's politics, and I can accept that. But the fact is that we don't give them a penny;

we let them keep the money they raise in their slots. And for that we're taken to task here by those who wish to remain less informed.

3:30

The other thing that you need to talk about is really kind of: if you like hockey, it's okay; if you don't, it's not. A couple of years ago Mr. Manley, I think, proposed a $20 million credit for NHL teams. Now, I don't think there's any question that when there's an event at Northlands, I think around 1,200 people go to work that day. Northlands is one of the busiest arenas in North America, so probably 260 days. Now, I don't know if they use all those people, but with hockey games and with parking and pizza cooking we stand up here and say: "Boy, that's a really good thing. We need to give Mr. Katz a little bit of help with his taxes so that he keeps the hockey team here. And the folks that own the Calgary Flames."

Would we get into that discussion about how important the spinoff dollars are around those industries? Or is it easy enough to say: "Wait a minute. That's providing opportunity for multimillion-dollar-a-year players to do what they love to do. We're paying them too much money. People don't have to go see them. It's completely voluntary. If you can pay $136, whatever the ticket price is, and if you can pay that much for adult beverages and pizza, that's your choice." You know when you go into it that a tremendous number of spinoff jobs are created from having two NHL teams here. I know that if you went to Winnipeg and asked people on the street, "Do you regret losing the Winnipeg Jets?" they'd say, "Absolutely." They'll do anything to get them back.

So the identity of your province, what you sell: yes, it's in the movie industry; yes, it's in the hockey industry; yes, it's in horse racing. You've got to sometimes put the knife on the cake and cut it. You've got to balance things. That's what we can do right now.

I do accept your arguments that we do have the expertise. We do have some of the most talented, the most creative people in the country. We have all that, but I think that you've got to take all of the opportunities we've got, put them in the same shaker, shake out the real facts, then make your decision and go forward.

I'm going to thank you for staying on this and for pushing it. It is a part that I think as we go forward as a province we will develop, but I think we'll develop from a position of being fair, being low tax, creating the environment so that business wants to come and stay here, making sure you have the transportation opportunities to and from Alberta and within Alberta, making sure that we don't unduly hamper productions that want to come to Alberta, really doing the things that we do for all the other businesses. From that point on I think you'll develop a really solid industry that is built on real dollars and not some tax ones.

Is there an opportunity to work within the system? I hope so. I hope that our financial opportunities expand, that we are able to look at these and take a really good Alberta and make it a lot better.

I accept your arguments, but I will say that just because one is very passionate about movies, there are many other cultural and artistic opportunities in Alberta that would think they are more important. I think you have to keep that at the base of the argument.

I do appreciate the opportunity.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you wish to continue?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please. Thank you so much. I really appreciate the President of the Treasury Board listening to me. Just one last pitch on this one. Even if we put no money into this, no extra money, if we change the way it's set up, that will still help us because this is time sensitive. Soon we won't have the people living here anymore to be able to do this. That makes it harder to attract people. So there is a time sensitivity to this.

If we're able to make some changes, the changes I suggested – upping the percentage of qualifying revenue on those streams, allowing for the key positions to be included in the way it's calculated, and looking at the regional bonus – that's not changing the amount of money. If you can help the minister of culture with this, that will make a difference for us. At this point if that can happen soon, we could probably still land one or two big-budget films for the fall. We're not going to get spring shooting now, and we're not going to get summer shooting. We might get fall shooting if we moved fairly quickly. This is stuff you can do without putting any more money in there.

That's what I'm encouraging. Clearly, I'd like the money. I mean, I'm not kidding you. I'll ask for it officially: I want more money in that fund, and I want the money restored. Really, what they're asking for right now is the change in the percentage for stream 3. They're asking for the recognition of those other key positions to be considered for the enhancement, eligibility, and the regional bonus. That you can do without any more money.

I'll just make one last pitch on that one. I think Alberta needs to move forward with competitiveness, looking for competitiveness advantage in more than just the oil and gas sector. I really appreciate the willingness of the front bench to listen to me on these arguments. I'm . . .

An Hon. Member: Speechless.

Ms Blakeman: Well, no. I'm just wondering if I should argue about horse racing again.

Mr. MacDonald: Just tell him it's in the grants of public accounts. It's not in contracted services. [interjection]

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Why don't you do that?

Well, it is a special deal, right? The horse racing and the way they get the money is a special deal, and they could choose not to have that special deal for that particular sector. Oh, now I will get e-mail from people far, far away chastising me for not being supportive of horse racing. I'm just correcting him. Every time he corrects me on the record, I'm going to correct him back.

This is a special deal to allow them to get that money. Thank you very much for considering that. I'm just going to put the bug in his ear about the changes that can be done without adding money to that fund, and of course I'm asking for more money.

Thank you, all, very much for considering that. I really appreciate it.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on this? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Alberta needs to move forward with competitiveness. Couldn't agree more with that. I was just reading an article in the National Post from yesterday or the day before that talked about the competitiveness of Alberta and the lack thereof. It talked about what they termed the Wildrose effect and how this government finally has done one of the first legislative things to increase competitiveness in Alberta, one of the first fiscally responsible things since the 1990s. Boy, is that ever the truth.

This government has really done a job on our competitiveness. It was on cruise control from about 2000 to 2005 or so, and then it just fell off a cliff at the end of that. We've been going downhill ever since. I think of that energy competitiveness review and think about the number of jobs that were lost. You know, the government's comments on that are: "We need to move on. We need to move forward." They're right. I mean, we do need to move forward. There's no doubt about that. Obviously, we don't want to stay where we are. It's not in a very good place.

What they fail to talk about or recognize still is the incredible damage that they've done to our international reputation on competitiveness, the incredible damage that they've caused the Alberta job sector. These are Albertans that have lost their businesses. You know, I have a friend in the President of the Treasury Board's home riding. He's my uncle, actually. He's a trucker. He did oil and gas trucking. He's on the verge of losing the truck that he owns because he can't find the work in the oil and gas sector that was there. There's no doubt that commodity prices had something to do with that. There's no doubt. There's also no doubt that a huge part of the industry coming to a standstill or falling off the cliff, so to speak, has been because of this government's bungling of the royalties.

They were warned. They were absolutely warned. They were warned by people in their own caucus, at least a dozen of them. That's a fact. We all know that in this room, you know, who have been in the caucus there. This warning was given clearly. They knew before 2009. On January 1, 2009, when the new royalty framework came into effect, they knew about shale gas, and they knew about the game changer that it was. That was knowledge in the industry at that time, and there was report after report and presentation after presentation given to government, yet they stubbornly moved ahead with an absolutely harmful policy.

Thankfully, they've gone back and are starting to correct their mistake, but they won't admit that they made a mistake. They won't admit that they were wrong. They won't say they're sorry, and they won't promise that it will never happen again. Those things were very much missing from the competitiveness review.

I hope that this Competitiveness Act that we have before us will give the government a chance to make sure that we don't make the same mistakes, that we're actually always going in an upwards direction, always making sure that we're more competitive, not doing things to fulfill some kind of weird socialist dream: you know, everybody is going hold hands, and we're going to take more from corporations, businesses, and individuals, and everything is going to be great.

No, it doesn't work that way. People leave when they're taxed to death. Industry leaves when they're taxed to death, and that's exactly what happened. That means we all suffer. With deficits we can't pay for our health care, can't pay for education and these types of things. We all suffer when we drive out industry that way, when we raise taxes, and that's what this government did.

I do congratulate them for, although they won't admit it, at least coming back and stepping back from their obvious mistake. I would note that they still didn't get it right. I noticed that the president and CEO of EnCana was in the media yesterday. I guess they've done the analysis on the new royalty framework. They still don't have the curve, so there's still some uncertainty, but they've done an analysis, and they've found that even still – even still – Alberta will not be as competitive as B.C. or Saskatchewan or many U.S. states like Texas, Montana, and others.

Because of that, to quote the president and CEO of EnCana, they're increasing their investment this year in natural gas from 4 and a half billion dollars to $5 billion, so another $500 million. The vast majority of that will still not be invested in Alberta. It'll be in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Texas because that's where it is more competitive to do business. So of that $500 million of investment very little will be spent in Alberta. That's the situation we've gotten ourselves into.

The government is moving in the right direction, but again, hopefully, this Competitiveness Act will give them the tools they need to realize that there is still a lot of work to do. I sure hope they get the curves right, and I sure hope they get it right moving forward.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about the film industry. She's absolutely right: we're not as competitive in the film industry as our friends in B.C. or Ontario. Now, we definitely haven't rearranged the tax rates, et cetera, on the film industry in the wrong direction recently, but we haven't done anything either. I think that what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying is: look, if we're going to try to discuss what we're going to do to make the energy sector more competitive, then why wouldn't we do that for all sectors, the film industry being one of those? This province is obviously much more than just energy. We all know that, and we've got to make sure that we're all working to make all industries competitive, including the film industry. So I really appreciated those comments.

Personal and business taxes. We talk a lot about the Alberta advantage, Mr. Chair, and we talk about how proud we are of it, although we changed the slogan of Alberta to freedom to choose – what is it? I don't know. Anyway, we've changed it. It used to be Alberta advantage. Albertans kind of chose that one for themselves. We've decided to change that.

Let's talk about the Alberta advantage. Do we still have the Alberta advantage? I don't think we do. I think it's eroding every day. There's no doubt that we're still more advantageous from a tax perspective than a lot of jurisdictions, but we haven't made improvements in that area for a long time. Because of that we're essentially falling backwards, back to the pack, and we will be surpassed.

In British Columbia, Mr. Chair, if you make under $115,000, which is – oh, I don't know; what is that? – let's say 90 per cent, 95 per cent of the population, something like that, it is more tax advantageous from a personal income tax perspective to live in B.C. than it is to live in Alberta. Does that help us retain doctors? Does that help us retain health care workers and teachers and people like that? No, it doesn't. So we've got to make sure that we're doing a better job of making sure our personal income taxes are more competitive and more in line with the best in our country, which right now is B.C.

With corporate taxes, same thing. We have not lowered that rate for a long time, and other provinces are catching up. New Brunswick has a plan in place where corporate tax will be coming down to 8 per cent eventually.

Again, we need to be looking at this and making a long-term strategy for how we're going to grow the heritage fund, how we're going to save the heritage fund and use the interest from that heritage fund every year to offset a reliance not only on oil and gas revenues but also on personal and corporate income taxes so that we continue to get people into this province working and paying taxes and growing that pie, as they say, so that even though we're taking a smaller slice, we're taking a smaller slice of much more. That's kind of what we're trying to achieve.

The other problem that we're running into, Mr. Chair, is that we're kind of facing a real big problem here because of this government's financial mismanagement. They love to say how great they've done in managing the finances of this province. Well, there's no doubt that their predecessor administration did have their moments where they did balance budgets, and they did put money away. But the current Premier and the President of the Treasury Board and the finance minister and people who've been in charge, the previous finance minister, seem to be taking claim for stuff that they weren't in charge of and they didn't do.

Since they've taken over this government – and democratically. When I say “take over,” since they've been elected and appointed to the positions where they are now, they can claim nothing in this regard. They have done nothing to make us more competitive. They have done nothing to save for the future at all, zero, zilch. I just think it's funny that they keep saying: we've done a great job. No, no. Some of your predecessors did a good job, some more than others; some years were better than other years. But it wasn't this administration. It wasn't the Premier. Since they've taken over, we've done nothing but overspend, lose our savings, and go down in our competitiveness nationally. You know, I think it's funny that they keep taking credit for other people's successes and then blaming everyone else for their mistakes. That's not something that they should be very proud of.

The other problem is, of course, that if they continue down this road and they continue to overspend and they continue to not save and continue to not have a savings and spending control strategy, there's going to be another cliff that they hit. And when they hit that cliff, what's going to happen is that they're going to have to slash core social programs that we all rely on: health, education, seniors' benefits. That train is coming down the track right now if we do not get our spending under control.

Who's going to pay the bill? Are the people over here going to pay for it? No. It's going to be my kids. It's going to be their kids, my grandchildren, their grandchildren. They're the ones that are going to have to be sitting with a bunch of social programs that they can't afford to pay for, an infrastructure that they want to maintain that they can't afford the upkeep on.

That's why we're saying over here in the Wildrose that it's a good idea to start thinking about implementing a long-term savings and spending strategy that will make sure that we leave to our kids a better future and programs they can pay for and infrastructure they can pay for. That's the whole point. That's what sound fiscal management looks like. It's not an ideological thing. You know, I credit the Liberals for talking about a savings strategy. They've been talking about that for years. You would think that fiscally conservative people, you would think that fiscally conservative governments would actually try to at least be as fiscally conservative as the Liberal Party, but I guess that's too hard for them. That's a huge problem that we have.

What we need to be looking at is a diversification strategy, not picking winners and losers, Mr. Chairman. I hope this competitiveness bill will allow us to set up some sort of body that will help us look at the question of diversification. It's not about picking winners and losers and throwing money – a hundred million dollars here, $200 million there – to try to guess what the next big industry is going to be. Things change every day. There was just an announcement today that they've found a way to turn coal into petroleum at $18 a barrel. I mean, this is big stuff. Stuff changes all the time. We can't be picking winners and losers when things are so fluid.

What we need to be doing is growing the base, growing the base of the heritage fund to the point where the interest thereon will allow us to have less reliance on oil and gas revenues as well as on personal and corporate income taxes. That was the dream. That was the vision of Peter Lougheed. That's why he set it up. We've got away from that vision. We need to get back to that vision because it was the right vision, and it's just as applicable now as it was back then.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll sit down. I've said in the past that I will support this bill because it's going in the right direction. I don't like the direction we've been, but I'm seeing signs that we're starting to turn the corner, and I think that that's a positive development. So I will be supporting this bill.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman. It does bring some questions to the table. I would have to question, you know, that if a government was pretty much destroying a province for the last, oh, 20 years or so, from the '90s on till now, particularly from '93 to 2003, if you were in a province like that and the government was just about doing everything wrong it could possibly do – kicking out business, tripping little old ladies going across, everything the government could do wrong, as a matter of fact so bad that you just can't even imagine all the horrible things that they were doing – could you imagine that somebody who knew all this, who was in that province watching it being destroyed right before their eyes, would want to run for that party? Honestly, wouldn't you say, “Well, if that's all true, if that's all true and the government is pretty much on autopilot – they've completely lost the way, they don't know how to save, they don't know any of that – I don't want to be a part of that?”

That would tell me he had two things in mind. One, a lot of this information isn't necessarily true and it's come to the top of that person's list lately, or it would be one of extreme opportunism. Wouldn't you think: I can't get elected in Alberta on a hundred per cent negative stuff, so I maybe just better kind of think this through; if I can get elected to that party, then I can do something else. Mr. Chairman, I'd ask the hon. members. I think it was Mark Twain that said: I don't want to be a part of any group that wants me. Well, that's true also.

Mr. Chairman, what on earth do you suppose would drive somebody who knows so much about how bad a government is to seek nomination, go out and knock on doors and try to get elected for the very party that they're saying is destroying the province? That's incredible. Maybe other people find that incredible. I find it incredible.

Mr. Anderson: I'd love to respond to that. I don't know what it has to do with Bill 1 – we're talking about competitiveness and tax competitiveness – but that's all right. You know what? As the hon. minister he just has to learn to clean his ears out a little bit, Mr. Chair. What I said is that up until his administration – his Premier's, current Premier, in 2006 – up until that time the PC government had had its moments. It had done a reasonable job or a very good job, depending on the year. It kind of fluctuated back and forth but reasonably more good than bad, for sure. Now, 2006 came, and in came the current Premier, followed by his President of the Treasury Board and the finance minister and his illustrious chief of staff. Since that time this province has been going like this.

Now, when I ran for office, I ran as a Conservative, a fiscal conservative, Mr. Chair. That's what the flyer said: conservative. I'd go and promote for my constituents fiscal accountability, savings for our children. That's what I campaigned on. This government has gone running in the opposite direction, and my constituents were disgusted with them. They're not disgusted with all the backbenchers; there are a lot of good ones, a lot of MLAs or private members. Not disgusted on that but very disgusted with the administration itself and the direction that it was going.

You know, I concede, Mr. Chair, that I was a little bit hoodwinked, for sure. I thought that this Premier would govern in a conservative manner, that he'd be fiscally responsible. Absolutely.

But that is certainly not what happened in the last two years, and it's shameful. I know that the President of the Treasury Board is feeling a little bit uncomfortable in his own skin right now with the job that he has done, but in two years we will see how this all comes out in the wash, for sure. We'll see what happens then.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I must say that it surprises me not a whit that that hon. member's constituents are disgusted. I would have to ask him: maybe it might not be a bad idea to come clean with his constituents and table the list of school projects and health projects and highway projects and other spending that he asked to have cancelled in his constituency so Captain Regressive over there could save the province and its budget deficit.

This government has done right by the people of Alberta, Mr. Chairman, and there is nothing more to add to his comments.

The Chair: Hon. member, I think Bill 1 is about Alberta competitiveness, so let's focus back.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Competitiveness Act, Bill 1. This is a good question, and it was a very shameful comment that the member made prior to this, but that's all right. He's above that, and it's disappointing to see him lower himself to the hon. President of the Treasury Board's level.

That said, what I would suggest we do as a province to be more competitive, to make sure that we remain competitive is that instead of talking and making arguments like that, which are very left-wing, socialist arguments, that if we can't build everything today, if we can't build everything right now, seniors will be out on the streets, children will be running through the streets unattended by their parents during school hours – it's just unbelievable, Mr. Chair.

Any business owner knows that you have to live within your means. You have to. Any person who does a budget knows you have to live within your means. You can't have everything you want right now. It's just simple. Instead of spending twice as much as the next closest province on infrastructure, maybe only spend one and a half times as much. These are the things that we could be looking at to be more competitive, to make sure our spending was kept in check. We don't need everything right now.

There are multiple roads in the county of Rocky View, for example. We can delay that a year and a half, two years. Absolutely, we can do it. That would save us $40 million right there. Done. The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration has said: consider it done. I think he's alluding to the fact that now that I'm over here, he would love to make sure that we were punished and that the citizens of Airdrie-Chestermere are punished because of that decision. That's how this member plays politics, and that's fine. The point is that we've got to get back in this province to being more competitive in the long term, and the only way to do that, Mr. Chair, is to have strong fiscal planning for the future so that we don't leave our kids bankrupt. That means that we don't need everything right now.

Thanks.

4:00

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to speak on Bill 1?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I listened with interest to the previous debate. I realize that some people may not have linked that discussion to Bill 1, but certainly I did because it is a form of competition to hear the hon. Member for Peace River and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talk about their views and compare their views.

However, I have some issues around this bill. I am not convinced it's necessary, but when we talk about competitiveness – and we spent a lot of time this afternoon talking about the oil and gas industry – I have some views that are certainly different than previous speakers'.

But before I get to that, I would like to express my gratitude publicly to the hon. President of the Treasury Board for his willingness to always participate in debate and discussion in this House. I think that's important in a democratic institution, and the Treasury Board president is always willing to debate and discuss issues. I appreciate that. I had a question earlier in question period, Mr. Chairman, and I had initially, I must confess, planned to ask the hon. President of the Treasury Board about education property taxes. Then I thought that we've been neglecting the finance minister, and I should ask him some questions about finance. After the response I got, I was disappointed that I had not done what I had initially planned, and that was to ask him some questions.

This is about competitiveness, but it's within the province. Perhaps I can get an explanation from the Treasury Board president before we conclude debate on this issue. Now, as I said earlier, in 2009 the city of Edmonton paid $316 million in public, separate, and undeclared tax allocations for education property taxes. Five years before, the public, separate, and undeclared portion of the property tax in the entire city was $261 million. That's an increase of $55 million over that period of time, or slightly more than a 20 per cent increase, in the education portion of property taxes.

The government's consolidated financial statement indicates that for the year 2008-09 we paid $1.4 billion in education property taxes across the province. The issue has been raised by taxpayers in the city as we progress through these public school closure debates throughout various parts of the city. Property owners are curious not only about how much tax they pay in their respective neighbourhoods but the total amount that's paid in the city. Are they getting education support from the taxes that they pay in their local public and separate schools within the city?

My question would be, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. President of the Treasury Board: what percentage of the money collected, in this case $316 million in the city of Edmonton, is going to the separate and public school boards? When it is pooled, if it is all pooled in one pot, what portion of this $316 million is going to other jurisdictions across the province or other municipalities that don't have the same property value assessments that we have in the city of Edmonton? To cut to the chase: are education property tax payers in the city of Edmonton subsidizing schools in other jurisdictions with this $316 million allocation for 2009? If the hon. minister would clarify that, I would really appreciate it. Certainly, the minister of finance couldn't – I'm not going to say "wouldn't" – answer earlier.

While the Treasury Board chairman is organizing his notes, I certainly would like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Earlier we had a discussion in our caucus about royalty rates and which direction we should go and what we should do. He pointed out that we needed to look at some of the financial statements of various players in the oil and gas industry since 2009, when the new royalty framework was implemented, and what exactly has happened since. I did that. There's quite a range of royalties now being paid. This is before the changes that were initiated last week, Mr. Chairman.

Royalty rates, if you compare them to, you know, percentage of production value, certainly have gone down. There are various companies, and I could certainly list them off, but you can look on any Internet site, and you can see for yourself that royalty rates have gone down.

Now, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere mentioned EnCana. I think that at this time I would like to note that I looked at the third-quarter 2009 interim report of EnCana Corporation. They're talking about operating upstream. For those who are interested, this would be page 2, I believe, of their interim report. "This reduced production was partially offset by lower royalty volumes in Alberta due to price sensitive royalty rates." The price-sensitive royalty rate that was initiated seems to have lowered the royalty volumes.

EnCana would be one of the companies that's aggressive in their pursuit of opportunities in shale gas, not only, as I understand it, in the Barnett shales in Texas but also in New York state according to information that I have. Some of the rights there are much more expensive than what they would pay in this province, but they don't seem to have a problem with that. Some of the royalty rates that are charged down there are a lot higher than they would be paying in this province. I would like to point that out in a debate on the competitiveness of this province. With its oil and gas royalty rates and the regimes and the overall combined tax take, I don't think we're as uncompetitive as some would make us think.

Now, Cenovus, in the third-quarter 2009 interim report for EnCana, is an offshoot or breakout or spinoff of EnCana. It's their oil business.

Cenovus plans to invest about $700 million in Canadian Plains natural gas and oil production which is expected to generate strong operating cash flow, estimated in the range of $1.9 to $2.3 billion in 2010. These assets are a reliable source of free cash flow that will help fund future growth of enhanced oil production.

Before hon. members get too excited about our royalty rates and our tax structure, we should get an idea of exactly what this group means when they say "free cash flow."

I could go on here. I would like to point out also that when the competitiveness study was done on the oil and gas sector, there were a number of meetings held back in October. Certainly, the President of the Treasury Board wasn't there. But one of the documents that I got off the Internet from October 1, 2009 – and it was a huge breakfast meeting that occurred in the Viking room of the Petroleum Club in Calgary. There were over 30 senior representatives from the oil and gas industry there.

It was pointed out that "there was concern that there may be proposed royalty alternatives in the report, and it was clarified that this is not the case." So I'm led to believe that in October there was concern that there would be proposed royalty alternatives in the report, and it was clarified that it was not the case. That would lead me to believe that people were satisfied with the royalty rates. Now, I could stand corrected on that, and I would appreciate members' views or opinions on this.

Now, also, at a breakfast meeting on September 29 – and this is the financial sector talking about the competitiveness study. This was in the Presidents room at the Petroleum Club. I'm sure the President of the Treasury Board has been there, and that's part of his job. I've got no problem with that. The views on Alberta's competitiveness in the future: this is one of them:

The royalty structure is viewed as affecting Alberta's competitiveness, but it is not considered the most important factor (commodity prices and capital costs have a much greater effect). There is a need to determine which factors are in control of the GoA and which are not.

So it seems to me that there was a consensus that it's commodity prices and capital costs that are causing us some difficulty at this time, not the royalty rates. Now, that was pointed out to us by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and I appreciate that.

Before I conclude – and hopefully I can get a chance to get some response from the President of the Treasury Board to my questions on the competitiveness of the education portion of the property tax across this province and who pays what for what reason – I would like to ask hon. members to take heed of this operation that's being planned in Montana to ship these large steel-fabricated modules from South Korea across the Pacific, up the Columbia and Snake rivers to Lewiston, Idaho, to be put on trucks and slowly moved over to Montana, up through Montana to Sweetgrass, and then on to the Kearl oil sands project.

I don't think that is in the long-term interests of this province. I think it's very difficult for us to compete. Hon. members say that we're out of the business of being in business, and then we bring up: well, the horse-racing business is special; we're going to look after them. I think what we have to do in this province – and this government has to do it – is what's in the best interest of the citizens.

Having all these modules constructed offshore at a time of high construction unemployment in this province is bad public policy. We are the ones that are providing the tax concessions and the royalty concessions to these energy companies. As much of the work as possible should be done and completed in this province. Also, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to watch the progress of this project. We need to ensure that this is not a trend. Many of the steel fabricators – I phoned one here yesterday afternoon, and they said that they're slow. That's how they described it: their work schedule is slow. So they could use some of this work.

Mr. Chairman, before debate is adjourned, if the President of the Treasury Board has some answers for me, I would really appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: The hon. member has mentioned the number $336 million for the public school board support from the city of Edmonton. In context, Mr. Chairman, we collect just about $1.6 billion in the total year. In '10-11 that was $56 million more than before. Well, I'm talking overall. So the simple fact is that the assessment increased to do that.

We are projecting 2 per cent growth in that assessment over the next two years, but we're reducing the mill rate 13.5 per cent, so there is no inflationary creep into the school board numbers. There was a discussion over the years. We said that we were going to freeze the education portion, not at $1.2 billion, at the rate it was. So growth, new homes offer new sources.

Of that $1.6 billion that we collect in school tax, $947 million is from residential or farm and $645 million is from the nonresidential, the factories and businesses. Virtually, you'd have to look at it from the point of view that you're providing the Edmonton public school board probably a fifth of the funding. It's at one-tenth of what we spend on the operational part of schools, not including the capital, just on running the school system in Alberta. The only way that Edmonton public schools isn't getting very good value is if they had less than 10 per cent of the students in Alberta, which you and I know isn't true.

Ms Blakeman: Adjourn debate?

Mr. Snelgrove: Oh, I'll be happy to do that. You bet. Thank you.

I'd be happy to take the hon. member out one day near whatever particular day he celebrates most vigorously and go over some of the tax issues that we may have to settle.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall the progress on the bill be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 6

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much. Here we are: committee debate on Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010. I said in debate on second reading that this is a good bill. I just had a few questions that I wanted to put on the record at committee, and depending on the answers to those questions, I suspect – I don't think these are hugely difficult questions; I think I'll be satisfied by the answers – that I would certainly be happy to support this bill.

I do think in principle that it's going in exactly the right direction, but I do have a few questions, if I could put them on the record. I would draw everybody's attention to section 11.3(1), delegation by local authority. This section enables a local authority to confer powers to a regional service commission, a joint committee, or to another local authority as in the case of a summer village.

A few questions around this. What exactly will be the relationship between regional service commissions, emergency management agencies, advisory committees, local authorities, and the provincial government? Whose ultimate responsibility will disaster response be in Alberta if there is a failure? You know, we are dealing with human beings here, so failure is a possibility. If there's a failure to respond adequately to an emergency, who will be held responsible, and what will the penalties be for inadequate response? I'm not expecting that to happen, obviously, Mr. Chair, but we've got to cover all the bases here.

Given that this legislation offers better protection for search and rescue workers from liability actions, as it well should, what assurances will this legislation provide to Albertans, however, that proper action will be taken to mitigate damage from emergencies? We have seen problems in disaster response when there are too many organizations involved without appropriate leadership, thankfully not in this province, to the best of my awareness, but the most, I guess, egregious and tragic example that I can think of right now on the North American continent is Hurricane Katrina.

Is this organizational structure the best for Alberta? With so many different groups potentially involved in emergency preparations and response, how will co-ordination be guaranteed? I recognize that at some level this holds out the promise there could be fewer organizations involved, but there still are a number, and there's co-ordination needed. Will additional funding be needed for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency to try to co-ordinate so many different levels of organization for emergency response?

I wanted to talk as well about liability protection for emergency service providers. This is the section that protects employees of the minister, local authority, and search and rescue organizations from actions in negligence. The condition, of course, is that so long as these organizations and people of these organizations are acting in good faith, then they cannot be found negligent. This protection is already in place for municipal employees. It was extended to include firefighters in the fall session of 2009. Protecting search and rescue organizations and search and rescue workers from lawsuits is clearly important. I don't dispute that at all.

However, with greater protection against negligence lawsuits there is a greater responsibility to be adequately equipped, trained, and financially supported. While not meaning to question the level of training and equipment and support that exists today – we always want to make a good thing better – what will this government do to ensure that these organizations are adequately equipped and their employees trained? Will this government fund these organizations better so that they can be adequately equipped and trained or more adequately equipped and trained? For example, why is the Alberta Emergency Management Agency budgeted to receive almost 1 and a half million dollars less in this fiscal year upcoming than was budgeted for the fiscal year just ending?

There were some rumours kicking around that the province was considering covering third-party liability insurance that's needed for search and rescue operations, so why did the government choose not to fund third-party liability insurance? Possibly the answer to that question is: hon. member, you shouldn't believe rumours, but I'll put it on the record anyway. What are people supposed to do if they are hurt during a rescue due to negligence? Is there any recourse to compensation, or does the good faith provision completely negate that? If it does, then what was the rationale behind that?

Those are the questions that I have, Mr. Chair. I look forward to some answers, and we shall move on from there. I know that may seem like quite a few questions, but in fact I think this is a very good bill in principle, and otherwise I have no problems with it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in this House on behalf of the Wildrose Alliance caucus to speak in support of Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act. One of the things I do believe this government, this House, but especially this PC government has done a very good job on for a very long period of time under the Attorney General, the Solicitor General as well as the Solicitor General's predecessor and going back is protecting the safety of Albertans. They're very much on top of this file and are doing a very good job. This is the next step in that.

Passage of this bill will extend much-needed protection to our valiant search and rescue workers. The noble work they do will be recognized by this bill, and it will also allow for the sharing of resources among our smaller Alberta communities.

The natural world is a wonder to be explored, but it is sometimes, of course, dangerous as well, as dangerous as it is beautiful. Alberta is home to Canada's worst tornadoes. In 1987 I remember very well living on an acreage just outside of Sherwood Park and being very frightened. I was just 10 years old then, and I still remember those big, massive hailstones pounding into the side of our home and the windows. Of course, I was lucky, as were, obviously, many of the people in this room who I know have similar scary stories, but 27 Albertans did die in that horrific situation, and many more hundreds were injured.

In the midst of that devastation, though, Mr. Chair, emerged heroic search and rescue efforts from our search and rescue workers. These brave people act in good faith for the common good and safety of all Albertans. The harm caused by these kinds of tragedies and disasters is minimized by our search and rescue workers. These courageous people are often volunteers, devoting their personal time, equipment, and, tragically, sometimes their lives for their fellow citizens. Who could forget the incredible heroics of the search and rescue workers at the World Trade Center site, for example, and the incredible work they did. Many of them right now are actually suffering because of those efforts with different health issues, cancer, and lung issues, et cetera. These are very dangerous positions, just as dangerous in many regards as our firefighters and police officers have to face.

But sadly, Mr. Chair, some people are ungrateful for these efforts. Sometimes search and rescue workers, putting their lives on the line for others, are being pursued in court for negligence. Very, very ugly that people would do that, and it doesn't make me feel very good to be a lawyer when I read about some of these things. I see the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs is not here anymore. I'm not implying for a second that he was one of those lawyers but that he is one. Anyway, we must, of course, legally protect . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, avoid mentioning . . .

Mr. Anderson: Oh, he is here. Sorry.

The Chair: All right.

Mr. Anderson: It took me by surprise because I was looking, and I thought I was going to see him.

Anyway, obviously, we must legally protect those that save us from danger. Extending the good-faith liability protection already enjoyed by firefighters is one way to do this. Without such liability protection the cost of search and rescue will continue to increase every year, and so will the premiums search and rescue organizations are forced to pay. These premiums are now the biggest barrier for these volunteers. In fact, some of these societies have now disbanded because the financial strain has become too great.

This bill, of course, addresses the gap in this existing legislation, which is why our caucus supports it. We must provide the security to those that give hope and safety to those of us who are in the most dire of straits. That is why I and the rest of the Wildrose Alliance caucus support this legislation and would like it to be noted in the record.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak as well to Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010. This bill would ensure liability protection for search and rescue workers and organizations.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we depend in our society here in this province very much on each other. One of the things that strikes me and gives me hope about the future of Alberta is its history of mutual assistance and co-operation between individuals. Sometimes we forget that Alberta has a very strong tradition of co-operation and assistance. It's not all simply people looking out for themselves and not for their neighbours. It's, in fact, quite the opposite. The fact that Albertans volunteer in great numbers and volunteer even to the point of putting themselves in harm's way in order to protect their friends and their neighbours is, I think, something that's a hallmark of our province.

I regret very much that sometimes people who do that, acting in good faith, are then seen as a legal target for someone who has suffered an injury or a loss as a result of the tragedy or the difficulty that they got into in the first place, whether it would be, you know, a fire, an accident, or any number of other things. It's not, in my view, fair that people who in a voluntary capacity or in a professional capacity came to that person's assistance should be seen as a financial or legal target of the person who suffered the injury.

I think this change is beneficial. It will eliminate the chilling effect that these lawsuits have had and may have in the future on individuals who want to make a contribution, who want to provide assistance to their neighbours when they are in trouble. I think that this bill actively promotes the spirit of co-operation and mutual aid that has been such an important part of the culture of our province over decades as opposed to the view that we saw in the bill we were just debating, Bill 1, which seems to imply that competition is the only driving force in Alberta society. That may be the view of some members and parties in this House, but in fact the history of Alberta is quite different. The rise of co-operative organizations was a very, very significant part of Alberta's history, and I think that is well reflected in the search and rescue organizations. They're certainly a very important part of that.

I think the bill actually strengthens the parts of Alberta that I appreciate the most and will ensure, I think, that people are more likely to get the kind of assistance they need when they're in times of trouble. I just want to indicate then, Mr. Chairman, that we are supportive of this bill. We think it's a good bill, and I hope that all members of the Assembly will support it as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to make a few comments in response to Bill 6, Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010, in committee here today. First of all, I'd like to thank all the members who participated in second reading for their supportive comments. I'd like to thank the members who just participated in committee as well for their supportive comments.

The importance of Bill 6 to our emergency management system cannot be overstated. The importance of getting this type of system right was tragically illustrated last week, when two Albertans lost their lives and many more were injured in an avalanche near Revelstoke, B.C. Survivors told emotional stories about being swept down the mountain and of the chaos and panic that soon followed. More lives may have been lost if it were not for the emergency first responders that quickly converged on the scene. RCMP, aerial, avalanche, ground search and rescue, dog recovery teams, emergency medical services: they all worked tirelessly, Mr. Chair, together to ensure that survivors were rescued and that the injured were treated.

The incident near Revelstoke clearly shows how first responders provide critical and timely emergency services. It's because we know the importance of the services they provide that we are introducing changes in Bill 6 to strengthen the emergency management system and support our emergency partners across the province. Bill 6 extends the good-faith liability protection currently provided to municipal firefighters to search and rescue workers and their organizations while they're providing emergency rescue services under the act, Mr. Chair.

Alberta search and rescue workers contribute daily to the safety and security of our communities. I know the hon. member for I believe it was Calgary-Currie brought this issue up, and we the Alberta government provide great resources to training search and rescue volunteers, Mr. Chair. Every single year I believe we provide grants for training of search and rescue volunteers.

Another amendment will focus on the language of the act to change the current negligence standard for providing emergency services to one of good faith. This matches the language found in the Municipal Government Act and other Alberta legislation. This will provide an additional legal protection to the minister, local authorities, and their agents and help limit their exposure to lawsuits because claimants will have to prove bad faith. Again, as the Member for Calgary-Currie talked about, Mr. Chair, this is a deterrent. This will not completely prevent lawsuits. This is merely a deterrent. If somebody has a truly valid lawsuit, they will be able to pursue their legal claim.

Finally, Mr. Chair, changes to the act will focus on enabling regional emergency service delivery and will allow communities to work together where – and this is the important piece – it is effective to do so. Administrative, financial, and training burdens placed on municipalities could be reduced by centralizing service through regional committees or commissions.

Now, again, it's important to mention that that particular piece has come from the communities. There are currently two pilot projects, one in Beaver county and the other in Grande Prairie, to develop a model of regional service delivery. Municipalities in both regions have been working closely with the agency and with each other to develop an effective system. These projects have been of significant interest to other municipalities in the province, who could then consider similar arrangements. Mr. Chair, it's very important to mention that these ideas came from the community, from people that are working in the area.

During second reading a few members had some questions and asked whether people who suffer from damages caused by a search and rescue operation will no longer be able to seek damages. Mr. Chair, I want to make this point again: search and rescue members will be protected if they are acting in good faith in performance of their duties. The onus now is on the complainant to show that the searcher was acting in bad faith to collect damages. They still have their protection, and the individuals that are being rescued still have a degree of protection as well, but they have to prove that the searcher was acting in bad faith. It's important to note that the amendment, as I said, doesn't remove the right to sue. It merely adds a little more protection for people who provide emergency services out of the goodness of their heart and to the best of their ability.

Another member, I believe Edmonton-Strathcona, had a similar question in relation to other agencies and businesses that may also have liability protection, such as guides and outfitters, and whether a person suffering an injury will have any recourse to collect compensation. Any person or organization who is acting under the authority and direction of the minister is protected when they are performing those duties. So there are two parts there. One is that they have to be acting under the authority and, the second, under the direction of the minister to be protected.

For example, a guide who is asked or directed to guide a search and rescue team into the wilderness would be protected. The broadcasters who air public warning messages would be protected. A firm that is asked to provide equipment such as a bulldozer is protected. The key here is that the government has asked for and knows what services are being provided and what the risks are.

Mr. Chair, these are absolutely important amendments. Further, the Member for Calgary-Currie focused somewhat on the good-faith piece, which I've talked about, and the training piece, which I've also provided some light on, the fact that we do provide resources for training and that every single person, I'm told, that goes out on one of these operations has some training.

On the part of the regional emergency service delivery, folks on the ground are saying that instead of having somebody that has emergency management as a part of their title but only does it at the side of their desk, this will give people – municipalities, summer villages, et cetera – the ability to come together and say: why don't we have one person that looks after emergency management, on a full-time basis perhaps, for all of the municipalities? But, again, it's up to them to come up with the ideas and work with us to see if there's a fit.

With that, Mr. Chair, again I'd like to thank very much all members that have spoken in favour of this great bill and for their recognition of the wonderful work that is done by our search and rescue volunteers. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Seeing no other members who wish to speak on this bill, the chair shall now call the question on Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010.

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 4 Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure today to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 4, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010. I appreciate the support that has been received already for this bill in second reading. Maybe I'll just repeat a little bit about what this bill is about. It's pretty straightforward and simple.

In June of last year the federal government changed some of their legislation which relates to the transportation of dangerous goods. Our government feels as though it's very important to ensure that our legislation in Alberta is harmonized with the federal legislation for a couple of reasons. One reason is to achieve continuity and some standardization across the country. So whether goods are being transported within a province or across provincial borders, those people who have to transport them and comply with regulation have a standard set of rules to follow. Secondly and very importantly, we want to make sure that Alberta preserves its jurisdiction over the handling of dangerous goods. We see it as being very important for our people to be able to interpret and enforce the rules that are in place.

The changes are relatively minor and administrative. There were some comments that were made, some concerns that were expressed in second reading, and perhaps I could just address some of them. One of the things that I heard was that there was some concern and maybe even some suspicion that the reason for some of these changes was to cut costs, to save on staffing. There was also some question about enforcement. How are the rules going to be enforced? Again I just want to say that this is really a refreshment of the existing rules. We already have staff in place who are enforcing these rules. So that's not really an issue, the issue of needing more staffing.

As a matter of fact, it's interesting to note that Alberta is unique in that we have our own inspectors who are interpreting and enforcing these rules. Across the country Transport Canada has 35 inspectors, and those dangerous goods inspectors are responsible for the inspections and enforcement in all of Canada, all the provinces and territories except Alberta. In Alberta we have seven inspectors and a chief inspector, so a total of eight inspectors, who are dedicated to ensuring the safety of Albertans. So staffing to enforce these regulations is really not a concern. It's already in place. I would submit that we are, really, better positioned than most in terms of resources.

Another issue that was raised in second reading debate was relating to time limitations. There was some concern about the time limitations that are going to be in the new set of regulations. Presently section 23 says that no action can be taken beyond two years after an offence is alleged to have been committed. The change does not exactly mirror the federal legislation, but I would again suggest that there are good reasons for that.

It differs a little bit from the rules that are being used by Transport Canada. They say that the period is five years from the date of the offence, but they seem to interpret and consider the date of the offence to be the date when it is discovered. For the sake of clarity our legislation, this bill says that the limitation will be the later of two years from the time an offence is alleged to have been committed or two years from the day the evidence of the alleged offence first came to the attention of the director. That is a clarification. The other thing that's important to note is that the two years is consistent with other provincial legislation such as the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

There was some comment made regarding appeals from administrative penalties. In the bill the Alberta Transportation Safety Board will be handling those appeals. There was some suggestion made that one might not be able to get a fair hearing if they were in front of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. I just want to say that this board already handles appeals that relate to the Traffic Safety Act and the Railway (Alberta) Act. They are an independent board. Their members have to follow a strict code of conduct. Any suggestion that one would not be fairly dealt with by such a body is really unfounded and even unfair.

On the question of the administrative penalty, that is also something that is new. Some of the comment that was made in debate on second reading was that the $10,000 maximum is too high. Some suggested it was too low. A couple of things to point out about that. The intent of this administrative penalty is not that it would be used in all cases. It's really meant to be for the day-to-day kinds of noncompliances that often happen. It would be kind of too bad to have people spending a lot of court time and using up the court resources for what would be considered, perhaps, less major incidents, but it's important to note that there are other provisions still in the act – for example, in section 30 – where because of major noncompliances the courts can handle the prosecution.

An example was given of the Wabamun Lake incident by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. A serious incident like that would likely be a situation where it would probably not be appropriate for the administrative penalties but for the more serious penalties, which can still be handled in the courts.

There was a question about whether or not this legislation gives the authorities the power to stop illegal or unsafe operations. I would refer the hon. member to section 12 and section 18, which do give that kind of power. So there are still plenty of teeth, I would suggest, in the existing legislation. It's not all in the bill. The bill is just making some fairly minor changes, but the existing legislation has that kind of power to make somebody stop an activity that is causing damage or is seen to be a risk.

Again, these rules already exist under federal legislation. We are not increasing regulatory burden.

I should also mention that Alberta Transportation partnered with Transport Canada in consultations throughout Alberta and, in fact, across Canada when these changes were being considered. Industry in Alberta is aware of these changes that are being proposed, and they are in support.

With that, I would just like to thank all members for taking part in the debate. I urge all members to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I was listening to the comments from the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I appreciated that he took the time and effort to respond to some of the issues that I and others raised in second reading. I rise today – and I'm not sure if the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose is aware of this or not – to move an amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-McCall. That amendment is at the desk with the Clerk, and I'll just wait for it to be distributed.

The Chair: We'll wait for the pages to deliver the amendment, and then we'll continue. This amendment is now known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, continue with amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 4, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010, be amended as follows: (a) sections 14 and 15 are struck out, and (b) section 16(b) is amended by striking out the proposed clause (u.3). There are, of course, reasons for this amendment, and I want to review those for people to consider as they weigh whether to vote in favour or not of this amendment. What we want to do with this amendment is strike the section that deals with the time limit for prosecution, which is section 14, and the section that deals with administrative fees, which is section 15. Then there's a bit of a housekeeping change that would then need to be made to section 16.

Now, the concern with section 14 about the time limit and the reason that this amendment proposes striking that out is that the time limit will stay at two years but that it will be two years after either the day of the last offence or the day on which evidence of the alleged offence came to the attention of the director; i.e., the director of the dangerous goods and rail safety branch of Alberta Transportation, whichever is later.

We've come upon, as we've done our due diligence on this legislation, some concerns and controversy around this. For example, I'm told that if it were five years after an alleged offence had occurred but that the offence just then came to the attention of the director, then someone can be still prosecuted for the offence. I guess the question really arises, as it's been put to us: do we as an Assembly really want companies or drivers or people to be liable indefinitely? If an offence occurred 10 years ago and it only came to the attention of the director last week, then there would be a liability risk there, you know, and there is a point at which that just perhaps isn't reasonable or isn't fair. It also opens up a bit of a grey area about problems with proving exactly when the director was alerted to the offence. So there are issues here, and it just seems prudent to us to amend the legislation so that those issues don't arise.

One of the background or underlying concerns with this is that this particular branch of Alberta Transportation we consistently hear is inadequately staffed. If they don't have sufficient inspectors, if they're not out there doing their jobs enough, then often they're not going to find offences in a timely manner. If they had sufficient staff to actually be actively policing in a way that would catch offences, then they don't need the legislation that basically lifts any time constraints on this. We're hearing over and over that Alberta Transportation isn't staffed enough and that this legislation, Bill 4, is trying to sort of work around that by opening spaces or increasing time frames so that a small staff has more opportunity to do a job that they should really be doing in a timely fashion if it was sufficiently staffed.

The second part of this proposed amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-McCall is to strike section 15 of Bill 4. Now, section 15 is something that we ought to think about quite carefully. I'm sure the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who is, after all, a thoughtful man, has probably considered section 15. When I look at section 15, the very first paragraph, page 8 of Bill 4, the following is added after section 30:

Administrative penalties

30.1(1) Where the Director is of the opinion that a person has contravened this Act, the Director may, subject to the regulations, order that person to pay to the Government an administrative penalty in the amount, not exceeding $10,000, set out in the order.

I will stop quoting there because section 15 goes on at some length, and all I need to do is read that one paragraph to raise the concern. There are actually a few concerns here.

This sets up a kind of quasi-judicial process and makes the director, in this case a civil servant, a kind of judge. It says in this legislation – and I want to repeat this for all MLAs to hear – “where the Director is of the opinion that a person has contravened this Act.” Let's think about that phrase for a minute, Mr. Chairman. We're basically creating a kind of judicial power for a public servant. We're not saying anything in here about what evidence is required, what appeals are required, what else is involved here. We're just saying that if it's in the opinion of the director that somebody has broken the law, then bingo, that person can be fined. That's, I think, a worry, something that we need to be very careful of.

If we didn't have this section 15 – in other words, if we voted to accept the amendment that I've proposed on behalf of the Member for Calgary-McCall – it wouldn't mean that we've gutted the legislation. Under current legislation there are substantial penalties, and there are provisions in there for how to handle offences and fines and so on. So I'm just raising a red flag that we need to be very careful as a Legislative Assembly of creating these kinds of powers and this sort of authority outside of the court system. I think that's the spirit in which this amendment is proposed.

I am also concerned that through section 15 as it's proposed, we are creating administrative penalties up to $10,000. What, Mr. Chairman, is an administrative penalty? You know, we're telling this director that he can impose an administrative penalty of up to $10,000. What's the difference between an administrative penalty and a fine? If somebody wants to appeal this penalty, what do they do? Does this mean that maybe somebody can actually trade off and say, “Well, you know what? I'll pay the $10,000 administrative penalty and then I won't have to go to court” when the risk of going to court might be $50,000? Maybe they ought to pay $50,000. In other words, is there a sort of get-out-of-jail-at-low-cost opportunity in this?

There are just a whole bunch of questions around section 15 that we're hearing concerns about, and as we've thought about them, we thought we should bring them to the floor of this Assembly so that all MLAs can give this serious thought. As far as our research shows, there's nothing in the federal legislation that would necessitate administrative fees and penalties and that sort of thing. We feel that the standard of proof of a contravention of the act should be greater than merely the opinion of the director and that, frankly, a proper judicial process is perhaps wiser in this case. There simply is room for misuse and abuse in both directions here, we feel. Things could be too lenient; things could be too tough. So there is a real concern with this. That's why this amendment proposes to delete section 15.

As a consequence of those changes, we would then have to delete section 16(b)(u.3), which simply says, “respecting administrative penalties.” That would have to be pulled out because if we abolish or strike out section 15, then there would be no administrative penalties. At least, that's my understanding of it, Mr. Chairman.

I think that with those comments I've sketched out the reasoning that my colleague from Calgary-McCall wanted this amendment moved. I know it's brought forward by that member in good faith after consulting with various stakeholders. I look forward to any debate on the issue, and I'll do my best to either respond to or to take note of the concerns that might come forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On amendment A1. Any other debate? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and also the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for the thought that they've put into this and for their input and comments although, regrettably, I can't agree with the proposed amendment.

Basically the amendment is addressing two things, the issue of the time limitation and the issue of the administrative penalties. On the issue of the time limitation any time you have a limit by which something has to happen, you know, there can be differences of opinion as to when the clock starts running. Even if we were to accept the amendment and go back to the current wording, which says, “2 years after . . . the offence is alleged to have been committed,” we would still have the issue of: well, when did that happen?

Keeping in mind the nature of what we're talking about here – environmental problems, spills, and so on – I think our government wants to make a strong statement that we will be aggressive in enforcing this legislation. We have a high expectation of people who are handling dangerous goods. I think we want to err on the side of being able to protect the environment. It's quite plausible that there could be situations that would remain hidden and undetected for a length of time, so to have a fairly tight, narrow time frame would not be in the best of interests of protecting the environment.

In the federal legislation my understanding is that the interpretation given by Transport Canada in enforcing their legislation is the same as what we are now going to say in black and white in the bill: when it “first came to the attention of the Director.” I cannot accept that this is an issue of staffing at all, keeping in mind, again, that our resources for enforcement of these types of things are stronger, it would appear, than anywhere in Canada when you compare 35 inspectors for all of Canada, excepting Alberta, and eight for Alberta.

It's a fair comment to say that evidence may disappear or that it may not be available after a longer period of time, but there is discretion in terms of prosecuting. Like with any offence, if you don't have any evidence to go on, you're probably going to be on thin ice in terms of prosecuting. Those would be my comments on section 14.

Section 15, the administrative penalties. Once again, these are intended to be for less serious offences. Some attention was given to the first line of that section, about the opinion of the director. Well, I would submit that for any prosecution somebody has to have an opinion that an offence has been committed, whether it's a police officer having reasonable and probable grounds or a health inspector. Somebody has got to have the opinion and then carry on with the prosecution from there.

Also, there is an appeal process. If the director has been too aggressive, the person charged with noncompliance does have the right to go to the Transportation Safety Board. My understanding is that there has been good consultation with the industry. It is my understanding that this is something that the industry supported, and I can see why they would. If the only option is to be charged and have to go to court, have to spend a lot of money on legal advice and lawyer representation, we can't have that. You know, it seems like a good option, for things that are more what would be described as minor offences, for there to be another venue to have those issues heard and, therefore, be more user friendly for the industry, I would suggest.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General on amendment A1.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked a question relating to the difference between an administrative penalty and a fine, which I think is somewhat relevant to how I feel about the current amendment. I'm asking, as the member is a lawyer, if he could clarify that. My understanding would be that an administrative penalty is one levied by an administrator who has determined that you're in violation of an act whereas the fine would be the result of a court case. Because it's an administrative penalty, it does not mean that there's no appeal. There always is an appeal. It's just that an administrator of a program has determined that you're in violation versus a laid charge in a subsequent court action. Am I right there? Is that the difference?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. Certainly, there is an appeal from this administrative penalty. Absolutely no question about it. Some people might want to call it a fine. I don't know that really in substance, you know, it makes a difference. The fact is that the bill says that an administrative penalty can be levied and that you have a right of appeal to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board.

The Chair: On amendment A1?

Seeing no other members wishing to speak, the chair shall now call the question.

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to get on the record on Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010. I heard the introductory remarks from the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright here, and I appreciate that. I know these are more or less just housekeeping changes to parallel federal amendments. This is an amendment that is done annually in this Assembly. There are some changes, though, that are slightly different this year, changes to functional currencies to allow a corporation to file tax returns in the currency of its accounting records. There are changes to the federal fairness provision which will allow the minister to waive interest or penalties in certain situations and clarification regarding refund interest rates of close to 50 per cent.

Now, we do know that the Alberta Corporate Tax Act is generally amended every year to ensure that Alberta maintains a fair and equitable and competitive tax regime. As I said, there is sort of a routine list of amendments here that are mostly housekeeping in nature, but the minister of finance reviewed the measure and changes that affect a corporation's ability to keep its accounting records in American or Australian dollars or British pounds or euros, whatever. That certainly has been discussed in debate to date, and I think that's an agreeable measure.

A second change that our research indicates in this legislation, of course, is bringing everything in line with the federal fairness provisions, allowing the minister to waive interest and/or penalties in certain situations. For example, when a taxpayer requests a reassessment under the fairness provision, the minister will now be able to waive interest and penalties in appropriate circumstances at the same time the reassessment is issued. When the legislation was amended several years ago, as I understand it, the minister's ability to waive at his or her own volition was unintentionally removed. If that was an error or an omission, this legislation certainly corrects that.

Mr. Chairman, the third and last point I would like to put on the record at this time concerns corporate refund interest rates. In Budget 2010 refund interest rates were reduced by 50 per cent for all prior periods and going forward. While these rates are set by regulation, the regulation-making authority in the act has been amended to ensure that it is clear the new rates will be made applicable to prior periods. I was looking at the fiscal plan. There can be significant changes in amounts refunded. This is, hopefully, an amendment that will strike the right balance.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, corporations will now be able to file their returns in the currency they use in their accounting books, ministers will be allowed to waive interest or penalties in certain situations, as we talked about earlier with the federal fairness provisions, and the refund of interest rates and overpayments of corporate taxes.

With that, at committee, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I appreciate the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright's due diligence and the fact that he was willing to provide this information to our research staff. I'd like to say thank you for that. Hopefully, this bill will become the law of the province, and we can continue with some of the lowest yet fairest tax rates in the country.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased today to rise in Committee of the Whole. The hon. member did an exceptional job of, essentially, summing up the legislation. I guess I just want to reiterate for the record that generally every year the Alberta Corporate Tax Act is opened up to bring forward amendments that are typically just to ensure that our legislation aligns with the federal legislation and to deal with any, generally minor, amendments but consequential to the tax act.

Among the three measures that are of significance, of course, as was mentioned by the hon. member, is section 2 of Bill 8, which amends section 4.01 of the Corporate Tax Act. It says that if a corporation keeps its accounting records in U.S. or Australian dollars, the British pound, or the euro, it's known as a functional currency. Changes to the federal legislation required the province to make changes to our provisions this year. The one policy difference, however, that will remain between Alberta and the federal legislation is that when the functional currency reporting was adopted by Alberta last year, the taxes payable would be converted at an average exchange rate over the entire year while the federal legislation chooses the date when payment is due. So we're maintaining that consistency.

The second measure of significance that's being adopted, Mr. Chairman, is section 9(1) of this bill, which brings Alberta legislation in line with the federal fairness provision. The provision that the minister was able to waive interest and penalties under appropriate circumstances was accidentally removed. This is going to be reintroduced into the legislation.

The third measure of significance, Mr. Chairman, of course, comes out of Budget 2010. Refund interest rates are being reduced by 50 per cent for all pay periods and going forward. In comparing our interest rates with the commercial bank rates, it was determined that Alberta's refund interest rates on overpayments for corporate income tax were far too high. It was a little bit like the old provision that it was sometimes easier to leave your money with the government, that paid you a higher interest rate than the bank would even pay you. It was more like an investment. So reducing our rates by 50 per cent is a middle ground between the bank rates and what we had utilized before, and this strikes a fair balance for the corporations and the tax dollars that will be paid on those interest payments.

That summarizes the bill. I look forward to any questions that may arise here in Committee of the Whole. I will be happy to answer them, and I encourage all members to continue to support this into third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on this bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. One thing that all parties in this Assembly can agree to is the need to modernize how elections are governed. We can also agree that the rules need to be clear, they need to be enforceable, and they need to be nonpartisan. As I begin, I want to point out the parts of Bill 7 that the Wildrose caucus is able to support, and then I can move on to some of our concerns.

First, I believe it is important that the Chief Electoral Officer is the one who appoints returning officers, not the party in power. This change is important.

Second, Bill 7 changes the way enumerators are appointed, and when you also look at the safeguards regarding the electoral list that Bill 7 hopes to put in place, these two combined changes are a very positive step. The quality of our elections will succeed or fail based upon the quality of our voters lists, and we need to make sure that we have the very best people to help us with the development of these lists.

Third, Bill 7 broadens the investigative powers of the Chief Electoral Officer. This, too, is an important step forward although these powers and enforcement capabilities should go further. It is also important for Elections Alberta to open up the advance voting process further. People make so many decisions based on convenience and ease of access to goods or services. Let's make it as convenient as possible.

There are a number of other changes that Bill 7 proposes, Mr. Chair, and I will not go into all of them. I do, however, think it is important to focus the government's attention on areas that will cause Albertans a great deal of concern. In a lot of areas the government did the bare minimum, and the bare minimum is not what Albertans want.

As the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere will touch on, Albertans have been asking for fixed election dates for years. The government believes it should have special rights to call an election when it is politically convenient. As you know, Mr. Chair, municipalities in Alberta have fixed election dates. On the third Monday of October every third year voters go to the polls to elect their local government. This has been extremely effective in Alberta and other jurisdictions because voters know exactly when a municipal election will take place. It is disappointing that this government has not implemented fixed election dates, and it must be part of any changes to our election acts.

It seems strange that this government has not been willing to create a truly independent election office that is fully capable of enforcing the rules. It also seems strange that the new Chief Electoral Officer thinks his role is to simply enforce the rules and run elections but not encourage people to vote.

In terms of accountability, Mr. Chair, it is the position of our caucus that all reports of the Chief Electoral Officer should come to the Assembly. These reports should be presented to you and then given to the elected Assembly. We are responsible for setting the rules that govern elections, and the final accountability for the effectiveness of Alberta's election system ultimately falls on each of us. If the Chief Electoral Officer is not made directly accountable to this Assembly, then this government, or any government for that matter, can decide to remove someone from this important position as they choose.

Mr. Chair, why didn't the government get it right and make sure that the Chief Electoral Officer put new rules in place for scrutineers or to allow for fines and/or penalties to be imposed for breaches of this act?

Finally, Mr. Chair, an issue that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore has more recent experience with, which is the formation of new parties and donations to new parties. While the government may say that people have the freedom to set up new parties and to voice their opposition, the reality is that the current political and party system makes it very difficult for people to do that.

Why does Bill 7 not include a provision that allows people to make a contribution towards the formation of a new political party, and once that party is recognized and formed, why can't a tax receipt be issued? People can make contributions towards charities and not-for-profit organizations in advance of their formation, and once the organization is legally incorporated and recognized, the appropriate receipts can be issued for tax purposes. Why is this government so afraid to give people the ability to form political parties that more closely represent their views?

Why does this government ignore democracy by making it virtually impossible for opposition parties to succeed in this province? If this government is truly conservative, then it shouldn't be afraid of the marketplace or afraid of new ideas. If the rules are reasonable and allow people to get together, then they will rise or fall because voters will not give them money. Without support from voters, they will not have traction. Let voters decide, Mr. Chair, not obscure rules or unreasonable barriers.

As members of the committee looking at the electoral boundaries adjustments have noted, they were given orders to increase the number of MLAs. They were not given the ability to ask whether or not more MLAs were needed, whether fewer were needed, or if the solution was simple, to redistribute the boundaries. More MLAs is not the answer to better representation.

I work hard for the people of Calgary-Fish Creek, Mr. Chair, and not once – not once – have I heard people in my constituency say that they want more MLAs. Never. I would be willing to wager that if we looked at reducing the number of MLAs, then there would be massive public support.

In closing, Mr. Chair, we are all here to represent the people we serve. Bill 7 does bring forward some good ideas to improve our election acts and laws, but the government falls short on the changes needed to overhaul our election system. We have laid out the improvements that we believe are important and will provide more openness, more accountability, and more transparency to our election process.

Mr. Chair, a quote that I like from a candidate at the University of Waterloo is about freedom: freedom is when the people can speak; democracy is when the government listens. We're willing to work with this government to improve Bill 7 to be more representative of what constituents and voters are telling us. We can only hope that the government is willing to listen and work with us. Albertans deserve nothing less.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Matters of election acts have always been of interest to me, particularly in my previous career, where I had the privilege of representing some people in this respect. We've already heard some interesting debate on this bill during second reading and from the previous speaker today, and I look forward to further discussion today as well.

Without a doubt, this is complex and vitally important legislation that we're talking about here, and it deals with a process fundamental to our democracy. It's something I think all of us have in mind when we talk about this, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure my hon. colleagues are ready to discuss, so I'm just going to briefly reiterate some of the main points of Bill 7, as I had discussed with my colleague the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

The Election Statutes Amendment Act will, among other things, give all eligible inmates the ability to vote at future provincial elections by way of a special balloting process. It will also authorize the Chief Electoral Officer to appoint returning officers and require each returning officer to personally hire the enumerators, eliminating any perception of political involvement in the appointment process. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I've already written one constituent of mine who expressed some concern about this during the last election.

It would also eliminate restrictions for those who may use an advance poll. It will increase options available to voters to identify themselves. It will improve third-party advertising legislation. It will give the Chief Electoral Officer the additional power to investigate perceived violations. It will allow for the exploration of new technologies. Last but not least, it will allow for a pilot project to test the early opening of polls. We all know that people do have busy lives these days, and if we want to increase voter turnout, we need to make it more available to the average person.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation of itself makes rather important changes to this type of essential legislation while, at the same time, it deals with the integrity of the vote and the electoral process. I would encourage all members to support Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I look forward to the remaining debate today and other days if necessary.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise in this House and speak to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act. I've organized my comments today into three parts. First, I want to discuss our province's current democratic deficit, and then I want to discuss how Bill 7 attempts to address this deficit. Finally, I'll suggest some additions to Bill 7 with an amendment that would work to improve our democracy and improve this bill, Bill 7, as we move forward.

Mr. Chair, Alberta has a rich and proud history of producing great men and women to champion the democratic causes of Senate reform, government accountability, and women's rights, just to name a few. It's a history that we can all be proud of. Sadly, however, as a province we have failed to show leadership on this issue in recent years. Politics in our province has evolved into a process that is almost completely undemocratic.

For example, there are very few, if any, real free votes in the Legislature. The Premier and a small group of mostly unelected government officials make almost every decision on virtually every issue in government. The peoples' elected MLAs, on the other hand, generally have little, if any, real input into the decisions that impact the lives of those they represent. If an MLA contradicts the party line, he or she is sanctioned and disciplined. We saw this with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We saw it also with the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Most MLAs, I would say, if not all, on that side of the House know that what I am saying is true.

This democratic deficit is bad enough, but it has been made worse by a lack of transparency and accountability by our current government. Government documents are difficult and expensive to publicly access. Cabinet sets its salaries behind closed doors. Billion-dollar government contracts are awarded without tender, as in Bill 50. Approval for infrastructure projects is often politicized. Budget deficits and other important financial information is underreported. And a culture of fear and intimidation keeps potential whistle-blowers from stepping forward.

Mr. Chairman, I left the PC Party for many reasons, but none were larger than this: the current state of our democracy is unacceptable. It is shameful. It is a mockery of the sacrifices that have been shed in its defence, and it must change, either by this government or, if they are unwilling, the Wildrose will happily take up the cause. Predictably, this lack of democracy and transparency has resulted in poor government policies, exceptionally low voter turnout, almost universal cynicism towards elected officials, and a feeling that the average Albertan has no voice or influence on issues that affect them personally.

When only two in five people choose to vote in an election, you know we have a very, very big problem. I am assuming Bill 7 is an attempt to address this issue. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it doesn't do so very well at all. It tinkers with the system. There are some improvements, no doubt. But it leaves out all of the important things that could really make a difference in returning our province to a strong, democratic jurisdiction. I expected more out of this Minister of Justice, and so did Albertans. What we got was very, very disappointing, in my view, with this bill.

One of the left-out recommendations was that of fixed election dates. Our neighbours to the west, in British Columbia, have a fixed election date law. They have been followed by Ontario and Newfoundland, and now many others are contemplating it as well. Our government? Not a chance. Apparently, this government does not see the need for fixed election dates. Apparently, they think it's fair for a sitting government to be able to plan for an election to the very hour it is held but to allow the opposition parties to be kept in the dark. They don't see a problem with that. How pathetic that they would be so worried about maintaining a tactical advantage over the opposition for their own good rather than levelling the playing field for the sake of a more democratic province.

The Chief Electoral Officer also made a recommendation to prohibit government departmental advertising during elections. Obviously, having the multimillion-dollar Public Affairs Bureau working 24/7 to flood the airwaves with ads and communications that make the governing party look good is another unfair advantage the government has over opposition parties during elections. I guess this advantage is also too difficult for the government to give up.

Then there is the long list of democratic reforms the Wildrose Alliance would suggest be added to this bill to strengthen our democracy. We would institute fixed election dates not only for general elections but also for Senate elections. We would implement direct democracy legislation enshrining voter recall and citizen-initiated referenda. We would restore the role of an elected MLA by mandating that all votes, every single one, in the Legislature and caucus be free and transparently reported to the public: no more fear, no more intimidation and decision-making behind closed doors, just total transparency and accountability. Our democracy is hurting, Mr. Chair. The government can deny it all they want. They can justify their actions until they're blue in the face, but it matters not. They know what we all know: our democracy needs an overhaul.

Alberta is the home of Senator Bert Brown, that courageous man and constituent of mine who plowed "triple-E" into his wheat field to help inspire a movement that is only now being realized. This is the home of Preston Manning, a man decades ahead of his time and one of this nation's greatest ever defenders of the wisdom and democratic rights of the common man. This is the home of the Famous Five – Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby, and Nellie McClung – who stood up against what was then the conventional democratic wisdom that only men should be able to vote. Their brave stand altered the course of history for the betterment of our province and for our nation. Ours is a legacy to be proud of, Mr. Chair.

It is time this PC government either commit to follow our province's tradition of democratic pioneering or continue on their present downward course towards replacement by a new group of elected representatives who will.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would propose the following amendment. I believe you have the copies. Would you like me to wait?

The Chair: Yes, hon. member. Wait for the pages to distribute the amendment.

This amendment is now known as A1. Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, please continue on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: I'll read the amendment into the record. I would like to introduce to the House an amendment. I propose that section 89 be amended to change the proposed section 44.1(1)(g) of the Election Statutes Amendment Act by striking out subclause (iv).

What this amendment is intended to do, Mr. Chair – again, right now the government departments are allowed to advertise during an election period, so they can put out into the public airwaves and on television and in the newspaper all of the great things and the great announcements on infrastructure and things like that that obviously always seem to come right before elections. Usually they're reannouncements of things that have already been announced.

In any event, I will say that this is definitely not the only government in this land, this nation of ours, that does this, but it sure doesn't make it right. It doesn't seem right to me that you can have a government basically spending, frankly, millions of dollars on saying how great the government that was just in power preceding that election writ being dropped is. I just don't think that that is a proper use of taxpayer funds. It gives an unfair advantage to the sitting government. We're really only talking about four weeks here. Surely the government can wait on trying to promote what it's doing for Albertans for four weeks while the parties debate the issues and Albertans are discussing the issues.

We have all these campaign finance laws. They're good laws, and we should respect them. This is almost a little bit of a loophole, so I would hope that we could end that practice as we move forward.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The hon. member raised a number of issues in his speech prior to tabling this amendment, as did the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, a number of problems with the bill. Now we have before us an amendment. It escapes me, I suppose, as to how this amendment fixes some of those issues. I wanted to read into the record some of the issues the member alluded to and my concerns with them.

First of all, the member and also the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talked about fixed election dates. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talked about these being very effective in reference to fixed election dates with municipal elections. I wonder if the hon. member would care to share with us exactly how they're being effective because no evidence or numbers were provided in either her speech or in the hon. member's speech. Maybe we might want to do that by comparing, say, the voter turnout in the last municipal election to the nearest provincial election. You know, that might be a useful statistic to compare. I don't think that "our neighbours have one" is a very compelling argument for why we should have a fixed election date.

It's amusing that the hon. member mentioned the great, great people that have gone further nationally in politics in our country. I've got to tell him that I don't think I'd agree with the list. He did mention one of them that went off to Ottawa that was going to install fixed election dates. I'm wondering if he could share with the House how that turned out.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talked about: no constituent has ever said that we should have more MLAs in our province.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, please.

The Chair: All right.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) would be applicable here, but relevance. We're dealing with the amendment, not the bill.

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Chair, I wish to explain to possibly one of the most irrelevant arguers in the House that the member has tabled an amendment for a number of stated reasons. I'm asking for some clarification on how the amendment addresses those reasons. I think it's highly relevant.

The Chair: I've heard the debate from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and then the hon. Solicitor General on the point of order, and the Solicitor General responded to the point, so there is no point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Back to that, I don't doubt for a second that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek works very hard to represent her constituents, but I'm not at all surprised that they haven't ever asked her for more MLAs or asked her to represent to our government we should have more MLAs. I can tell this hon. member that, in all honesty, my constituents have, and it's not just because of my performance as an MLA; it is because it is very hard to represent one's constituency in certain constituencies. For me to travel from my home in Peace River, never mind getting to my home in Peace River from Edmonton, for a meeting in Rainbow Lake is a 900-kilometre round trip. If I go to Zama, it's about a 750-kilometre round trip; 150 kilometres of that is gravel road. It's hard. My constituents are concerned about representation at Edmonton, and I'm glad we're adding more MLAs.

I want to correct, I think, a misstatement on the part of that member. He talked about cabinet setting salaries behind closed doors. I think he should visit the legislative act and understand the terms of reference of the Members' Services Committee. The cabinet salaries are set by the Members' Services Committee. They're right in the members' services handbook. He may want to look that up.

The last one. You know, plucking some of the democratic tools here, we talked about voter recall. First of all, that has been tried and I think in many instances proven ineffective or unworkable. It was another one of the promises of one of those guys that we sent to Ottawa that the member mentioned. I just wonder: if we were to implement such a thing in Alberta, would that apply to members who – I don't know – cross the floor, for example? Just wondering.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, responding to those points.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I thank the Solicitor General for his comments. You know, I don't dispute that he's a good MLA. I know he's a good MLA. He works very hard for his constituents. He's a very good minister. I've always found him to be a competent and articulate member of this House. I don't think that the view of not having more MLAs has anything to do with whether he's doing a good job or not. Some people would say that we need to readjust the boundaries and try to stick as close as we can to one person, one vote, but that's a back-and-forth argument. I see there are good arguments on both sides. I definitely would say that to you.

With regard to voter recall, you know, and citizens' initiatives I think that they're definitely worth a try doing. I don't think that we should look at the California model, where you get 2 per cent of voters on a petition and you can get a citizens' initiative on a ballot. Then you get, like, 20 things on a ballot. I agree that no one wants that type of circus. But I think that if you increase that to 10, 15, or even 20 per cent, if there was really an issue that was just burning Albertans – it was just driving them nuts, and the government wasn't responding to it – they could organize and bring that forward. I think that that's a worthy goal. It would be another way of bringing people into the process.

With regard to my own floor-crossing, I feel that an MLA is accountable to his constituents first and foremost, and I felt that I could represent them and their interests better in opposition. But I'll tell you right now that I have no problem going on the record and saying that if the Premier would like to pick a date, sometime in the fall or whenever, I would be more than happy to step down a month before that election date and hold a by-election any day, any time. He picks, and I will step down the day before the writ is dropped as long as we can come to an agreement. The reason I wouldn't want to step down is because that would leave me – I mean, I know the government, surely, would not hold an election in Airdrie-Chestermere, definitely not right now. They would like to probably draw that out for six months. If they were to hold it right now, I'm very sure what the result would be. I don't think that's very fair.

But if the Premier and the government feel that they would like to take me up on that, by all means just name the date. I'll step down a month before, and we'll have an election. I'd love to do it, just would welcome the challenge.

I would also say that the reason voter recall is important is because, look, we all need to be accountable to our constituents. Every one of us needs to be, between elections as well as every four years. I don't think anybody in this Chamber would be recalled right now because we don't have any criminals among us that I know of. We don't have people that are, you know, doing things that are just ridiculous, et cetera. Well, maybe ridiculous policywise but not in their personal affairs. I would say that I think that people would survive.

Anyway, that's just my response to the hon. minister on those points.

5:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It was my understanding that in committee we take turns speaking and that back-and-forth conversations are not part of the rules.

I want to speak to the amendment on the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would have the effect of prohibiting government advertising during an election period. I can think of no reason not to pass this amendment. I believe that it is very clear that the temptation to use the taxpayers' money on the part of governments – and not just this government, I hasten to add, all governments – is just too great. To suddenly increase spending on advertising, on television, and through other media extolling the virtues of the government and what it's doing, how great the province is, how everything is sweetness and light is, I would dare say, the norm in this country, not just in Alberta but federally and probably in every other province, and it is fundamentally unfair.

When you use the resources of government, which is the taxpayers' money, to try to tip the balance in the favour of the governing party, it is an undemocratic thing to do. It weakens the democratic process by making it less fair. So, Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has put forward an excellent amendment, which I believe we ought to support.

There are a number of other changes to this act that I think could be made to strengthen it and to strengthen democracy. There are steps in here, in this bill, to control third-party advertising. To allow a private or special interest with lots of money to attempt to shift the balance during an election is also undemocratic. The government has seen fit to provide regulations with respect to that, and I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that in principle the two are very similar. Third parties using money to influence the outcome of elections favour those organizations with lots and lots of cash. Normally they would be corporations, but in some cases they could be other types of organizations.

We did see an attempt in the last election by a group of organizations to try and shift the balance in that election to them, and it backfired. It backfired. I'm convinced by that experience that, in fact, it's prudent and democratic to place those restrictions because I think an election period, Mr. Chairman, is between the political parties and their candidates and the voters, and everybody else should stay out. This is a time when we take our message to the voters at the door or through advertising on television or otherwise and try to persuade them that our principles and our policies and our candidates are the ones that they should vote for. To have some special interest with pocketfuls of cash trying to interfere with that process is wrong.

There is a time when the politicians are accountable to the people that elect them, and that is in an election time, so I think that it's wise to limit third-party advertising. I think that it is wise that we have restrictions on the amount of money that different organizations can donate to political parties. That's become part of our political principles for a number of . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but Standing Order 4(3) requires that I interrupt to rise and report automatically without having to put the question.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 6, Bill 4, Bill 8. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 1, Bill 7.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Those concurring with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 18, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. We give further thanks for the gifts of culture and heritage which we share. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chers collègues, j'ai le plaisir de souligner aujourd'hui la présence parmi nous dans les tribunes d'un groupe de 11 élèves de l'école La Mission, une école francophone de St. Albert. Ces élèves sont accompagnés par Mme Micheline Spencer, leur enseignante. Je demanderais à ces deux groupes de se lever afin de recevoir la chaleureuse et traditionnelle bienvenue de cette Assemblée.

[Translation] It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce a group of 11 students from l'école La Mission, a French school in St. Albert. These students are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Micheline Spencer. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [As submitted]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I probably fractured my French in that, but I'll go to English now. It's also my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 45 grade 6 students from Vital Grandin elementary school in St. Albert. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Courtney Hooper and Mrs. Pat Tymkow; two assistants, Mrs. Karen Cabot and Mrs. Diana Yakymyshyn; and three parents, Mrs. Sharryl McArthur, Mrs. Serena Shaw, and Mrs. Gingrich. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My third introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a friend and colleague of mine, the executive director of the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association, Mr. Brian Munday. I'm not sure if he's in the public gallery or the members' gallery, but if he is here, I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. M. le Président, c'est un plaisir pour moi to introduce the students, des étudiants de l'école Boréal de la ville de Fort McMurray. Also with them today are professeurs Mme Boudreault et M. Lauzon. I would ask them to rise and receive the very traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a delegation from the Ladies Orange Benevolent Association. They are at the Legislature today as part of their visit to Edmonton to attend the 89th annual grand lodge sessions. It is an honour to introduce this delegation as it is led by my aunt, the Right Worshipful Grand Mistress of Alberta Mrs. Marie Bradshaw of Innisfail. Accompanying her is a delegation that includes guests from across Canada, including the Most Worshipful Grand Mistress of Canada Mrs. Marilyn Erwin of Frankford, Ontario.

In total there are 27 ladies from Alberta, Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia joining us today. The Orange Order is Canada's oldest fraternal order. They focus their efforts on helping children and seniors. Their mission statement is: working together for the betterment of family, community, and country. Mr. Speaker, I will now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had a hard time convincing this person to be present in the Assembly so that I could introduce him. So I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Stephen MacEachern. Stephen has his BA honours in political science and has completed his coursework on his master's degree, also in political science. I'm a bit mischievous because I always like to take political science students and have them work in my constituency office just to show them what really happens. I'm very fortunate that Stephen has been working as the constituency manager in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre since the summer and has committed to stay with me through the next election. At this point I would ask that Stephen MacEachern please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House. God knows, he deserves it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of postsecondary students, who are here as my guests, from the Legislate This! rally that's taking place outside the Legislature. My guests are concerned that increased education fees will create even more barriers for students looking to obtain a postsecondary degree and threaten to undermine the quality of education offered for years to come. I'm pleased to have my guests join us today and participate in our democracy. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the Edmonton Arts Council and the 11 recipients of the award for cultural diversity in the arts. The Edmonton Arts Council is a nonprofit society and charitable organization that supports and promotes the arts community in Edmonton. The cultural diversity in the arts awards program provides 12 awards of $7,500 each to encourage and support Edmonton artists from diverse cultural backgrounds.

The recipients in this program come to Edmonton from countries around the world and demonstrate a strong dedication to continuing their artistic practice in their new home. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have the award winners here as my guests today, and I'd ask that they rise as I call their names. The recipients of the awards are Valerie Mason-John, Reni Ferreira, Chika Udok, Jinzhe Cui, Punita Chohan, Tsehay Debebe, Gordana Zivkovic, Iryna Karpenko, Jaamac Jaamac. As well, from the Edmonton Arts Council Laurie Stalker, Sally Kim, Katia Michel-Wasney, Alison Turner, James DeFelice, and executive director John Mahon. Would you please join me in congratulating and welcoming these guests.

Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1966 the United Nations declared March 21 the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This Sunday our province and nation will join communities around the world to commemorate this important day by recognizing the harmful effects of racism and promoting respect, equality, and diversity. Unfortunately, even in this day and age the reality is that racial discrimination still exists.

While we may not be able to completely rid the world of racism and discrimination, we recognize this special day and every other day of the year as a celebration of our diversity over supremacy and our acceptance over rejection. Our March 21 workshops, presentations, competition, and other activities will help Albertans recognize the important day and identify the role they can play in tackling racism in their own communities. I'm pleased that the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit, through the human rights and citizenship branch, has played a supporting role in some of the events.

However, it's important to note that although we are celebrating this day in various forms across the province, the movement to eliminate racial discrimination is a year-round initiative for many organizations. With this in mind the Alberta Human Rights Commission offers programs and resources to raise awareness and helps Albertans resolve human rights complaints.

In addition, the commission has championed and promoted the coalition of municipalities against racism and discrimination initiative in Alberta. There are over 30 communities across the country that have signed on. Alberta now has nine municipalities, which makes the largest number of municipalities of any province in the country. This initiative guides municipalities in following key principles to help build communities that are respectful, safe, and welcoming.

The Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit also assists Alberta organizations to undertake initiatives to build inclusive workplaces and communities and to promote equality for all people through the human rights, education, and multiculturalism fund.

Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, March 21, I ask the members of this House to join me and communities throughout the province in taking action against all racial discrimination and encourage fairness for all citizens. We need to continue our vigilance.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is astonishing that even in the 21st century people will judge others by superficial traits like skin colour or the shape of someone's eyes or the sound of their accent or things like sexual orientation, yet such differences are still used to justify actions from the horrifying to the banal, from genocide to discriminatory hiring practices to social exclusion to hurtful jokes and slurs.

No matter what our ethnic background or skin colour we've all seen racism in action either within ourselves or from friends, neighbours, family members. When someone acts on a racist thought, there's only one correct thing to do: speak up firmly, immediately, and with conviction. Education, acceptance, and understanding are tools we can all use to bring racism to an end one moment at a time.

In recent days I've been fortunate enough to attend a number of events held by organizations who've developed some very on-point, practical ways of ending racism. I attended the interfaith coalition's annual seminar and banquet, for example, which brought together representatives from different religions to hear speakers with a powerful but simple message: treat people of different races just as you treat someone of your own race.

Changing Together, on the other hand, performed a day in the life of an immigrant last weekend, a powerful Ajoka theatre performance that drives home how everyday racism can do lasting damage.

I also helped hand out awards at the Black History Month last weekend and will be attending the Centre for Race and Culture's banquet on Saturday night. I have to say that a number of my colleagues in this Assembly joined me at various events that I've already described. Even as we speak, that organization is running workshops for citizens of all kinds, anyone who wants to end racial discrimination.

I'd like to join the minister in recognizing the importance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. The educational and community initiatives he has outlined perform important work. But if we really want to end racism, we need to look within ourselves, to examine our own prejudices, and speak out whenever we see the injustice of discrimination, no matter how small the infraction may seem.

There should be zero tolerance for racism. If we keep working together with open hearts and genuine goodwill, then one day our children will, as the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. hoped, "not be judged by the colour of their skin but by the content of their character."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the House for unanimous consent for the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to respond to the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll ask one question with respect to this request. Is there any member in the Assembly who would oppose recognizing the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to participate? If there is, simply say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. March 21 has been declared the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. As many members of this Assembly will know, Canada was one of the first countries to sign on to the United Nations declaration, which was established to commemorate a dark day in history. On March 21, 1960, 69 peaceful protesters, including 10 children, were horrifically gunned down as they protested in Sharpeville, South Africa. Since the Sharpeville massacre the world slowly came together to not only demand an end to apartheid but to root out racial discrimination and heal the divisions that exist in our society.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, racism and discrimination rear their ugly face from time to time. We all know someone who has suffered at the hands of another, whether it is because of our gender, our race, our sexual orientation, our religion. I could go on and on. While our society is built upon the principles of tolerance for different ways of doing things, different approaches to solving issues, or different perspectives based on our human uniqueness, we cannot and should not tolerate racial discrimination. People have lived and died for the freedoms that we enjoy, people have lived and died to change the way society works, and people have lived and died to be treated with dignity and respect.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the day when racial discrimination is a thing of the past. As we near the international day to end racial discrimination, I encourage all Albertans to reflect on what they can do to help build stronger relationships with one another that are based on human dignity and respect.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent from the Assembly to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to respond.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a request for unanimous consent to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to respond. I'll simply ask one question. Is any member in the Assembly opposed to granting unanimous consent? If so, simply say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to rise and speak about the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, on March 21. The United Nations designated March 21 as a day to remember the 200 people who were shot and the 67 who died in what came to be known as the Sharpeville massacre. Those people had gathered to peacefully protest against South Africa's apartheid regime. They died because they confronted the overt racism of their country's political system with a simple act of civil disobedience, a challenge which the state answered with violence.

Thankfully, in Canada we've eliminated these types of overt racism from our legal system and have established racial equality as a Charter right. However, we are still a long way from abolishing racism from our society.

Just as damaging to society as overt, intentional acts of discrimination are the sometimes unintentional consequences of adverse effect discrimination, sometimes known as systemic discrimination. We see it in the overrepresentation of indigenous people in our prisons, we see it in the overrepresentation of indigenous children in government care, and we see it in the overrepresentation of visible minorities in low-income groups.

To address the continuing existence of racism in our society, the system itself has to change. Unfortunately, we move in the wrong direction when we cut support services for immigrants, like we did in the last budget. One of the best tools for creating equality of opportunity in our society is our education system, but we risk cementing the income gaps that already exist when we put higher learning that much farther out of reach for low-income Albertans by raising tuition rates. Instead of tearing down the walls that divide people, we build them up when we bring in foreign workers on a temporary basis rather than providing them with the opportunity to live here permanently and fully integrate with our society.

We urge this government to make the legislative and administrative changes necessary to eradicate racism and ensure human rights for all. The authority, the remedial options, and the resources of our Human Rights Commission must be significantly increased.

I call on all members of this House to join me in renewing our collective commitment to working with groups such as the Centre for Race and Culture and many others in working to eliminate racial discrimination in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I seek your permission and the permission of the House for the independent Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, a multiracial workplace, to briefly express his concerns?

The Speaker: We can do that. We do have one difficulty with respect to the standing orders. The standing orders say that question period must begin at 1:50, but I will ask the question. It deals with a unanimous request to the Assembly to basically permit the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to participate in the response to the ministerial statement. I'll ask one question. If any member is opposed, simply say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.
1:50

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also want to say today, on the comments that have been made, that it's a special moment for me as an independent member to applaud all elected officials in this Assembly and all four political parties that have spoken on such an important cause. I congratulate each and every one of them for the very positive comments that have been made today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electoral Boundaries

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September a backbencher stated publicly that Executive Council had determined that there would be two seats in Calgary, one in Edmonton, and one in Fort McMurray. Lo and behold, that's exactly what the Electoral Boundaries Commission report recommended. Yesterday the Premier revealed that the reason for adding four seats to the House was to protect at least three rural seats which would have been redistributed, maintaining an imbalance weighted toward rural Alberta when the population is in the cities. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier promoting a disparity in the value of votes between rural and urban Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Legislature amended the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act to establish 87 ridings.

Speaking to the urban-rural, it is quite ironic because it wasn't that long ago, when I asked the capital region to get together and form a local governance board, that I was accused of the opposite, of supporting urban over rural. This is finding balance in the province, looking at the increase in the population, over a million since 1986.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the Premier. Well, over 80 per cent of Albertans live in cities. Does the Premier not understand that a major reason for low voter turnout is that people feel their vote doesn't count? In Alberta, if you're a city dweller, your vote does count for less than a rural vote.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I disagree. There are rules, as all members in the House are aware, that are established, some in part by previous decisions of the Supreme Court. There are rules established by the Constitution. The commission followed those rules, very transparent. Their report is out there for the public, you know, to bring about their suggestions on boundary changes. It's by law that we have to do it before every third election, and we're following the law.

Ms Blakeman: To the Premier. Albertans have categorically rejected the logic that four new MLAs are worth the millions of dollars of increased costs. Why doesn't the Premier just admit that these new seats are only necessary for maintaining a rural power base?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe we're so fortunate to live in a democratic country and a democratic province. But if that's the case, if it's a matter of cost, then I would assume that the Liberals will be phoning the Prime Minister and saying: "Please don't give three more seats to Alberta. Even though the population has increased and the differences between east and west, please, it's a matter of cost, so don't give us any more representation."

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

PDD Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition has appealed to this government to treat vulnerable Albertans, including PDD, with humanity. The minister says that cuts are not trickling down to vulnerable people, but PDD-funded agencies have notified us that they are facing cuts from $30,000 to $140,000. There is no amount of administrative efficiencies that can be found that will prevent these cuts from harming the lives of people on PDD. My questions are to the Premier. Why is this government doing another round of cuts on Calgary region PDD service providers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're fortunate as the province of Alberta that we saved during the good times. We have a cash surplus fund that's set aside to cushion the blow on the significant reduction in our revenue. One of our commitments, of course, is to ensure that we support the most vulnerable. PDD, persons with developmental disabilities, are a part of that group, and we're doing whatever we can to ensure that the services that they have will continue to be provided.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the Premier: given that before the new fiscal year even starts, several Calgary area service providers know they are facing cuts for next year's programming, why does the Premier continue to deny that government budget decisions will result in less service delivery to vulnerable Albertans? Of course it will.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister has all of the detail with respect to region to region. She will be able to answer that question.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our budget that's being debated right now, we have kept our budget level. Certainly, that's going to create a situation where we need to find efficiencies. We have asked our regions to help us find those efficiencies, and I believe that the regions are asking the social agencies that work with our PDD clients to help us find those efficiencies with little or no impact on our clients.

Ms Blakeman: Again back to the Premier: why does this government want to quietly cut the number of people on PDD and leave them with no grounds for appeal? The regulation covering PDD appeals states that a decision to amend a contract with a service provider is exempt from appeal. If the government makes cuts to PDD service providers and the service providers then have to cut support hours, there's no recourse for anyone affected.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this situation at all. I believe that there is an appeal process. We have special, separate PDD appeal boards to handle situations just as have been described here. I will look into this fact, but it's something that I'm not aware of.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, when someone living with severe mental health issues gets hospitalized, voluntarily or not, they often have to leave their residences and all their stuff: clothing, furniture, teddy bears, dishes, cooking condiments, their pillow, everything. After three months their AISH is terminated, and their belongings are gathered by the landlord and thrown out. Just when they need stability and familiar surroundings, they start over with nothing. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Has the minister considered a need for a trustee-like agency to intercede on behalf of individuals, give notice, pack things up, store them, help people maintain some stability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When our AISH clients are being served in our hospitals, whatever hospital that may be, their needs are being looked after and taken care of. There is a period of time when their placement in AISH is held, and after a certain period of time in the hospital the AISH itself is put on hold. But when those people are back in the community, we have a quick response for them to regain their AISH status.

Ms Blakeman: No. They lose everything, including their AISH.

Back to the Premier: given that AISH will only cover a one-time moving fee and a one-time damage deposit, would the Premier consider asking the minister to provide additional coverage on a case-by-case basis for those with repeated hospitalizations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget in that particular area has been increased three years in a row. Off the top of my head I don't know the full increase, but we've supported clients very well. There are some issues that perhaps we can look at. Of course, we'll look at what is available and deal with the issue at hand.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the Premier. Well, here's something else for you to look at. Given that after age 65 AISH benefits cease and CPP benefits are lower and do not include a drug plan, would the Premier through the minister consider a top-up for previous AISH recipients once they pass the age of 65?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that just speaks to the program that we have for AISH clients. As a result, if that is true what the member has said, that just shows the size of our program and support for our AISH clients. The other thing, though, is that we are reviewing the whole social area because there are so many different silos there, based on age, based on the community that you live in. We're trying to gather it all together under a one-window approach so that we improve the type of service that we provide for AISH and all those requiring social services.

Senate Appointments

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, my constituent Senator Bert Brown and many other Albertans have long championed the cause of an elected Senate, and that day is now very close. Yesterday the Premier was unclear on when he will call a needed Senate election in Alberta. If he waits until 2012, Alberta will be underrepresented in the Senate starting in 2011. Given all the federal issues we're grappling with, this is not in Alberta's best interests. To the Premier: will you commit to holding Senate elections prior to Senator Banks' upcoming retirement in 2011 to ensure Alberta continues to be fully represented in Ottawa?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in my answer yesterday I said that we have three choices. We either proceed with an election in conjunction with the municipal election this October, we can hold an independent election, free standing, sometime in 2011, or wait till 2012 for the provincial election. I mentioned to the member yesterday that if you want to approve an increase in the budget for Municipal Affairs to put the names on the ballots, then tell us that today, and we'll make the necessary accommodations.

Mr. Anderson: We've got more than enough fat to pay for $3 million for a Senate election.

Given that holding stand-alone elections prior to 2012 would be far more expensive to the taxpayer than holding them in conjunction with municipal elections and given that waiting until the 2012 general election would mean Albertans would be underrepresented in the Senate, will the Premier commit to holding the Senate elections in conjunction with upcoming municipal elections in October?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, there is a lot of, you know, demand for the few dollars that we have available, and this is a discussion that we're going to have as a government.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Premier, I think you're stalling.

My final question is this: is this PC government actually considering undermining Albertans' democratic and constitutional rights and all the battles we've waged on Senate reform because they're worried they might lose the Senate election to the Wildrose Alliance? Is that the reason?

Mr. Stelmach: I don't know who is even going to run for the Senate position. There are a number of names that have to be on a nomination list. There are a whole bunch of things that have to happen. This is not in terms of a political party. This is a Senate election, a candidate for Senate, and we want to of course have the best representative for the province of Alberta to represent us in the Senate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the NDP probably won't be having a candidate in that election.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Mason: In 2007 the Premier told Albertans, and I quote: the royalty framework is here to stay; $1.4 billion, 20 per cent. He defended sliding scale royalties because they would capture more money when the market was strong and adjust for a weaker market when necessary. Well, Mr. Speaker, here we are two years later. The market isn't as strong as it was, but what's really weak is this Premier's leadership. Why has the Premier sold out the majority of Albertans, whom he promised he would get a fair share for?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are significant market condition changes on the North American continent; the price of natural gas has dropped substantially; huge, huge supplies of natural gas in shale: these are all issues that have come forward over the last two years. We've taken a lot of time to work with industry, to look at all of the data that was given to us, and we made a decision. It's not just the slice of the pie. It's growing a much larger pie, and that is the intent of the competitiveness review.

Mr. Mason: That's Belinda Stronach's economic theory at work here, Mr. Speaker.

Given that Albertans own the resource and the Premier promised it would bring in an additional $1.4 billion a year in revenue and given that last week's flip-flop will see that number rolled back by almost a billion dollars, why won't the Premier admit that he cannot be trusted to fight for ordinary Albertans when big oil threatens to take its political contributions elsewhere?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, I think that just the way the question was posed shows a total misunderstanding of how royalties are calculated. As I said before, it's to get the industry back on their feet, to start developing the resource. If they don't develop the resource and the gas stays in the ground, there are no royalties paid. There are none.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the finance minister admitted during his estimates that the province does have a revenue problem and given that the Premier has committed to give $2 billion to industry for carbon capture and about a billion dollars a year in cuts to royalties, will the Premier finally admit that he has sacrificed the public interest, that he sacrificed billions in revenue, and that he has now broken his biggest promise of all?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the $2 billion we have set aside for carbon capture and storage is to ensure that we protect our marketplace. As you know, on the issues that we're facing not only on the North American continent but from Europe in terms of amount of carbon produced and all of those things, we positioned Alberta very well. It's not that the money has been spent, but we have set it aside to ensure that we proceed with some of the carbon capture and storage projects and protect our marketplace, and that's very, very important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education equals economy. Three years ago this government promised stability in postsecondary education for a decade. Instead, students outside this House and across our province are seeing their bursaries dwindling, their debt growing, their fees rising, and could face tuition increases in the thousands of dollars next year. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: how can this minister justify down-loading postsecondary education costs, especially on middle-class families, that are already stretched too thin?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, over the last five to six years our operating grant increases to postsecondaries have been more than 42 per cent. I don't believe there is a jurisdiction in Canada that has put the amount of capital into spaces and access that this government has. In fact, today, even during these economic times that we have, we're over a billion dollars in capital infrastructure going in the ground as we speak, and that is a commitment to education and postsecondary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the lowest postsecondary enrolment, and it will get worse if these hikes continue. When the minister reaches a decision on tuition hikes, will he bring those increases to this Assembly for a vote so that Albertans from every riding in this province know where their member stands on affordable postsecondary education?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking about tuitions. Tuitions in the province of Alberta are capped to the CPI. They will be approximately 1 and a half per cent across the board across the province. There are some instances where the institutions approached us and said, "We think you made a mistake when you froze tuition in 2004," another good policy decision by this government taken in 2004. At the time it was the right thing to do. But did we review all of the tuitions across all 3,700 different programs and offerings? We did not, so there may have been some anomalies. We're looking to correct the mistake that may have happened to protect the CPI cap going into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that promises in this province seem to have time limits. Will the minister at long last spell out a firm timeline for when he will make these critical financial decisions, or is he intentionally trying to run out the clock on the spring sitting of the Legislature?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was available at our estimates. I recall that during a couple of the 10-minute periods during our estimates he didn't want to do the banter back and forth but simply read from a sheet a whole list of questions, which department staff are spending a lot of time on looking at how we're going to answer. It would have been a great time for him to ask that exact question, about where we're going with the budgets and how we're doing these things in terms of the market modifiers that have been presented to us. As I've said in this Assembly before, we will be making those decisions within the next few weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Patient Safety Report

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents do not need to be protected from the truth. They know that there are problems with our health system that need to be addressed, yet the Health Quality Council of Alberta released very limited information on the review of serious incidents at Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary last year. Now, the Minister of Health and Wellness said that he would ensure that the full report would be released within 10 days. To the minister. Today is day 9. Are you going to keep your promise?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly am. I said that the Health Quality Council of Alberta, working with Alberta Health Services, would release the full public report within 10 days. Earlier today I actually presented a copy of that full public report to the Clerk of this Assembly, and it will be tabled here today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Our government believes in and has been very vocal in support of open government, so why was the full report not released last week? They've had it for months.

2:10

Mr. Zwozdesky: I believe I indicated last week in this Assembly that there were some confidentiality issues that both the Health Quality Council and Alberta Health Services were still addressing. That is very necessary because whatever information gets released to the public, as you would know, Mr. Speaker, has to combine a number of considerations. One of them is the Alberta Evidence Act, and the other one is the Health Information Act. That has now been satisfied, so the full public report is being released today.

Ms DeLong: To the same minister: can we count on all of the Health Quality Council's recommendations being included in this report, and will they be implemented?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the entire bevy of recommendations from the Health Quality Council is included in this full public report although a few of them may have been combined under one title. But they're all there.

Regarding implementation, I can tell you with great assurance that Alberta Health Services has already taken some very positive steps to ensure that those kinds of unfortunate mistakes do not happen in the future. Patient safety, patient quality of care are two very fundamental goalposts for our health system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MLA Remuneration

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The order in council on April 30, 2008, setting out the pay for Conservative MLAs to sit on internal cabinet policy committees, Treasury Board, and Agenda and Priorities was issued one month into the fiscal year. This should have only made members eligible for 11 months of pay, but records indicate they were paid for 12. To the President of the Treasury Board: why did the government pay last year $42,000 to give PC government members retroactive payments for sitting on the internal cabinet policy committees?*

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'll look into the statements made by the hon. member, and I'll report back to the House.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate that from the President of the Treasury Board.

Now, again to the hon. minister: given that the government set the fee schedule on April 30, 2008, one month into the fiscal year, why did the government give PC government members one month's retroactive pay also for service as parliamentary assistants, cabinet policy committee chairs, members of Treasury Board and Agenda and Priorities under that fee schedule?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I presume they sat on the committees, and work isn't interrupted. I committed that I will look into it, and I will report back to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that cabinet ministers and the Premier did not receive retroactive payments with their deal, which was set up two months into the fiscal year, who authorized these retroactive payments for all these PC government members?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have said – and I have lived up to everything I have said in here before – that I will look into the matter, and I'll report back to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Continual Urban Crime

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently there has been a series of violent robberies and assaults committed at all transit stations in Edmonton. It is getting out of hand, and this is unacceptable to my constituents. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: what is the minister doing to ensure that people who have committed violent crimes will not reoffend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a serious matter, and we're finding that one of the reasons that the government needed to introduce the safe communities initiative was to get to the root of some of these causes. While we haven't been able through the police in this city to identify at this point in particular who the perpetrators are with respect to this incident and a few other incidents, what we do know is that very often we find there are youth who get involved in high-risk activity, they get in contact with the justice system, and they keep being rotated through the system without dealing with the root causes of crime. We've got to find ways, as we are doing through our safe communities innovation fund, to address youth at risk, to develop mentor programs, and to deal with addiction issues in youth.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister. It's my understanding that time and time again it is often the same individuals who consistently are threatening the security of our communities. Can the minister explain this?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, while we can't speak to who may have been involved in the most recent incidents, what we do know is that we do have situations where a number of times we do know that there are prolific offenders who are involved in what is considered to be continual urban crime.

There is an initiative that has been started in partnership with the Edmonton Police Service – and they've been leaders in this, Mr. Speaker – in dealing with prolific offenders so that in cases where we do know that there are people who are repeating the same crime over and over again, sometimes involving violence, we're able to focus our prosecutors, our bail packages, and our police on those.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister. We know that oftentimes individuals committing these sorts of senseless acts are fuelled by a drug habit which is, of course, rooted in organized crime. Can the minister tell the Assembly how her department is addressing some of these issues on a preventative level?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member makes the very good point that very often when we have this cycle, it does involve people that are committing crimes because they have addictions, to try to find money to buy drugs, that are very often being sold to them by organized crime. It's a continual cycle. It's one of the reasons that the government developed an Alberta gang strategy. We look at all the pieces of this cycle. We try to provide education and awareness, we try to provide intervention and assistance for addicts, and where that's not possible, we then enforce and prosecute.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Budget Debate Process

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children and Youth Services must believe that debating the budget at a rate of $6.1 million per minute is sufficient for holding the government to account for how they spend taxpayer dollars because last night the minister refused to respond in writing to questions that were not answered during the debate. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how exactly does debating $6.1 million per minute reflect accountability for how taxpayer dollars are spent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, I really enjoy Committee of Supply. It's one of my favourite committees, actually, that happens with the Assembly because you do get to discuss budgets, business plans, the policies. I know that over the years you as well enjoyed that committee just as much as I do. Last night in this committee you'd be interested in what happened. There were 12 pages of questions that this member expected I answer within the first 10 minutes. I did explain to the member that he has his process; he can submit questions, do whatever he likes in that manner. I had mine, and I answered the questions fully.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, it is on the record that I asked for questions not completed to be submitted following debate.

How is it a reflection of an open and transparent system when the government limits debate on the budget to three hours regardless of whether or not there are further questions to be answered?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the other processes that I think we all enjoy here in the Assembly is the one where people can provide written questions to the Assembly. I can tell you that this member may do that in the future if he does have questions that he would like to have specifically answered in writing through the Assembly. I will look at that time as to whether or not I will accept those questions. Also, the member can ask me in writing, or, hon. member, you could actually sit down and have coffee, and we could discuss some of the issues that you'd like to discuss.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It would be a very long coffee break.

Given that the opposition asks questions of the government so that we can respond to Albertans and hold the ministry to account, will the minister provide written responses to the questions raised in the budget debate last night, as has been done in the past?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I answered that very clearly last evening to this member. I believe that the questions that were submitted in the way that the member chose to submit them, to that extent – I think there were approximately 100 to 200 questions over three 10-minute periods.

An Hon. Member: It was 75.

Mrs. Fritz: Oh. Whatever it was, it was extensive.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you this: I made it very clear that the questions would be answered fully at that point in time, and I believe that I did do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Quality Monitoring

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents, like all Albertans, value the quality of the province's water bodies. They are very concerned about reports that the water monitoring budget in this year's budget is being cut. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. With the focus of many jurisdictions squarely on Alberta's environmental performance, why would this minister even contemplate reductions in water monitoring?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a couple of things abundantly clear. First of all, there is a reduction in the amount of budget that we have allocated to water monitoring, but the reason is because we're taking a much more strategic approach to how we do that monitoring. There is absolutely no reduction in the amount of monitoring that is associated with any emergencies, any hydrometric monitoring such as flood forecasting, water supply outlooks, water management, or long-term river monitoring. There is a reduction in the areas where we've seen little or no change over long periods of time.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that every Albertan has the right to expect that their water supply will be of the highest quality, how will the minister ensure that monitoring reductions will not adversely impact the quality of Albertans' water supply.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have extensive water monitoring that takes place in areas that have industrial development or areas that have municipal and agricultural monitoring. What we're dealing with here are very remote areas where the monitoring of water is done to establish whether there are long-term trends. What we're doing is not eliminating the monitoring but reducing the frequency. So if there was monitoring that was done on a six-month basis, it might now be done on a 12-month basis. The long-term trends are still intact.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that monitoring is much more sensitive in certain areas than others – and I'm thinking particularly of the oil sands regions – how can the minister ensure that the necessary monitoring will continue to be done in this area?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member and I can assure all Albertans that this is not one of the remote areas that I was referring to earlier. In fact, we already have in place 11 monitoring sites that are on the Athabasca River. We have a program that audits the monitoring data that's legally required by the operators in that region. That is in addition to the 100 water quality stations that are operated by our partner in the region, the regional aquatics monitoring program, RAMP. There is more than adequate opportunity for Albertans to be aware of the water in that region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the NDP released government documents showing that 74 per cent of inspected employers who hire temporary foreign workers are violating their rights. The Minister of Employment and Immigration's callous remark that this is somehow good news shows just how out of touch he is and all but sanctioned the abusive employers who take advantage of the vulnerable. My question is for this minister. How many Alberta employers have to get caught violating this government's employment standards legislation before you'll admit that this is actually a bad-news story and that the government has some real work to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first make it perfectly clear that there's nothing callous about my comments. Perhaps what is somewhat unbecoming of a member of this Assembly is to twist numbers and present them as one thing when they really represent something else. Seventy-four per cent is the number generated (a) following a complaint, where we verified a complaint, and (b) our random inspections of employment are sort of like checkpoints. Our individuals who do the inspections know where to go, and they know where the areas of issues are, and that skews the results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that with the random checks there was still over 50 per cent violation and given that well over half of those violations against temporary foreign workers involved employers ripping them off by failing to pay them and given that the minister seems to think it's good news if a worker gets shorted $50 here or $50 there, why won't the minister abolish this abusive program and tell foreign workers that if they're good enough to work here, they're good enough to live here?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, let's again try to deal with facts for a change. First of all, Mr. Speaker, this is not a provincial program; it's a federal program. This shouldn't even be asked in this House. We have no means of abolishing the foreign worker program. It's a federal program. We have no means of opting out of it either because there is no possibility for provinces to opt out. Now, we also have no choice on whether these workers stay or don't stay over here because visas are issued by the federal government. Perhaps she should speak with her friend Ms Duncan, the MP, and have her ask the question in the House of Commons.

Ms Notley: Given that $50 might not be much money to a cabinet minister who earns in the neighbourhood of $150,000 a year and given that it's a lot to a worker who's been lured to Alberta by this ministry with plans to send money home to an impoverished family, will the minister please define his threshold for exploitation and say exactly how much money needs to be picked from the pocket of foreign workers before he considers it a violation of their rights?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to this member, there's nothing that she can teach me about the life of an immigrant and tell me what is and what isn't important to an immigrant. She would have had to live for the last 40 years in my shoes.

Any dollar is important to every worker, and our ministry not only enforces employment standards for immigrants, but we also enforce them for all Albertans. Every employee deserves to be paid every dollar. That's why we're there, that's why we collect the dollars, and that's why we make sure that workers are treated fairly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Lethbridge Health Facilities Security Services

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services is ending the long-term security contract they had with the Corps of Commissionaires in Lethbridge. The commissionaires are a nongovernment, nonprofit organization consisting of ex-military and ex-police personnel who have served their country and communities, and they have been highly respected since 1925. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: how many positions will be lost by the commissionaires in the Lethbridge area because of this change?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what Alberta Health Services is doing is trying to ensure that every medical facility that comes under that particular purview will have some form of security of access to it. Under the current model, unfortunately, that's not the case. So there is a positive side to all of this, and we'll be watching it very closely to make sure it works out that way.

Ms Pastoor: Well, it'll be the same question: how many are going to be lost province-wide? These are people that rely on these jobs.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll try and get that level of detail for the member, but I think what's important to remember here is that the safety of patients, the safety of workers and other professionals in the system has to be respected. When you have a system that perhaps falls a little bit short of that, which is the current case, you have to move to something new and different and better, and that's what's being attempted here.

Ms Pastoor: Ex-military and ex-police couldn't do it.

Why did the Health Services Board choose Paladin Security over the nonprofit commissionaires? Is this another instance of it only being all about money?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the security is of primary concern, and that's one reason why as many security cameras as possible are going to be installed under this system.

With respect to the exact numbers of FTEs I will undertake to provide that information. I assume it's available somewhere, and I'll get it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Assistance

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture has faced more than its share of challenges in recent years, including drought, market restrictions, and high costs due to regulations. Beef producers in my constituency are feeling the pressure and asking tough questions. My first question is to the minister of agriculture. Is the AgriRecovery program designed to offset the loss that cattle producers are facing as a result of last summer's drought, and will the producers in my constituency be eligible for AgriRecovery funds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to point out first of all that the AgriRecovery program is, in fact, a federal program, and it's in place to address situations where significant and unique disasters occur. We are, I can assure you, working with the federal government right now on the AgriRecovery assessment for our province. I speak with the minister on a regular basis, and we will try to get a resolution to this as quickly as we can.

Mrs. Leskiw: My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What is being done to reduce the costs the beef producers are facing as a result of the added regulations?

Mr. Hayden: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are working on trying to reduce the regulatory burden that producers face. We have allowed grants for specific programs with respect to the transfer of livestock. That is going to help them in some ways. We are also working on a number of areas where we can reduce through good planning and research the cost of feeding livestock. We work with them on an ongoing basis.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next supplementary is to the same minister. Producers in my area are skeptical about the role of ALMA. Has ALMA produced any positive results, and if so, what are they?

Mr. Hayden: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, ALMA is about a year and a half old now, and I'm very pleased with some of the things that have taken place this early in their mandate. One of things that I'm proud of is the work that they've done working with the federal government in opening markets in Hong Kong. They have a number of programs that have been able to help us leverage money for research and for improving the quality of what we provide in this province, something to the tune of $97 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

2:30 School Utilization Formula

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Early in May officials from Alberta Education will present to school board chairpersons and school superintendents the province's new provincial school utilization rate. These changes are a very long time in coming, and I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Education for coming forward with these new provincial utilization rates. [some applause] It's certainly about time. Now, my first question is to the Minister of Education. How will the new provincial utilization rates work for public schools located in maturing neighbourhoods? These schools were built 50 to 60 years ago.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I'm a bit at a loss to understand what he's talking about. There is a review of the utilization rate happening, and there will be some further discussion with the stakeholders in the system about that utilization rate process, but nothing has been completed in it. I'll check to make sure that something isn't being hidden from me, but I'm not aware of it being presented as a fait accompli to the system in May.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That surprises me because your colleagues are so enthusiastic over these changes.

Again to the Minister of Education: will the minister ask Edmonton public school board to delay the school closure process that's proceeding now until parents and taxpayers can see the full impact of the province's new school utilization formula?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is following the same tack as his colleague from Calgary-Varsity and, actually, quite misunderstanding the process. The school utilization formula really has nothing to do with the discussion that's happening with respect to schools in Edmonton or other jurisdictions. School boards have to determine what facilities they need and where they need them to provide a good educational program for the students in their area. He probably, actually, should be looking – and maybe I shouldn't tell him this – at the plant operation and maintenance process because that has much more to do with the funding we give them for the operating of the schools than the utilization formula, which is really just one of the characteristics for determining whether new schools will be built.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Certainly, to the hon. minister, I'm not going to tell him what kind of surplus Edmonton public had last year in their operating budget because he may want that back, too.

Again, how are communities facing school closures supposed to have confidence in this process when the minister is admitting that the rules will be changed after decisions that affect five central neighbourhoods are made, and these decisions could be the closure of their vital public schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, obviously, wasn't listening the last time, so I'll basically just repeat it again. The utilization formula that's utilized has really nothing to do with the school closure process that school boards are engaging with. What has more to do with it, perhaps, is the plant operation and maintenance formula, which gives them the money that they need to keep schools operating. What they're really trying to determine is how they can make sure that they give the best educational opportunity to students in their jurisdiction without running excess facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Capital Region Municipal Planning

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta recently adopted the capital region growth plan. Plans are one thing, but Albertans are more interested in actions. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is this plan really going to help the capital region, and how?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This plan will have lasting benefits for all of the region's residents. It's a very solid plan that will eliminate duplication amongst the municipalities. It will co-ordinate and help co-ordinate essential infrastructure investments and, no doubt, help to attract a lot of investment in the region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second question to the same minister: when the board was first established, our province was in a very different economic climate, so is this plan still relevant?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, the capital region needs to look ahead. We expect over 600,000 people and new residents over the next 40 years in this region. This plan sets the standards for smart development, planned growth, and a greener, more co-ordinated approach to land use. Our Premier's vision was to create a stronger region that builds on current and future economic opportunities, and that's exactly what the capital regional plan is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question also for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The Calgary Regional Partnership is preparing a similar plan for the Calgary region. Can the minister please provide this House with an update on the Calgary metropolitan plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. The Calgary Regional Partnership has submitted its plan, and our government is currently reviewing what has been presented. I just want to reiterate that regional co-operation is a priority for our government and that these plans will contribute significantly to the success of our communities and throughout the whole province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Energy-efficient Personal Transportation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's approach to energy efficient vehicles such as Segway is out of date. These vehicles are considered to be safe by the federal government but are roadblocked by provincial red tape. To the Minister of Transportation: why have these carbon friendly modes of transportation not been legalized?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think he's talking about Segways, and that's a two-wheeled vehicle. It's also a vehicle with no type of lighting, no type of anything on it, so how do you mix that up with traffic and big vehicles and say that they're safe? We've run some pilot projects. There are some different police departments in Alberta that are using them right now, but when you mix them on sidewalks with people walking – these vehicles go up to 20 kilometres an hour. We just haven't found a safe place to be able to license them to have them run.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that these vehicles meet Canada motor vehicle safety standards and are already enjoyed in other jurisdictions, why hasn't this been a priority for this government?

Mr. Ouellette: Boy, I absolutely don't know where he got that information from because the information that I have does not have them licensed as a motor vehicle anywhere in Canada, Mr. Speaker. But there have been a few places that have done pilot projects, like we have said, and we're a leader in that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given all the rhetoric from this government about environment, when will this government allow these environmentally friendly modes of transportation onto Alberta's streets?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, till they can meet national vehicle standards, we can't allow them on the streets. The only rhetoric that I ever hear is coming from the hon. member over there that doesn't listen to the answers to the questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Temporary Foreign Workers (continued)

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that there are questions being raised regarding temporary foreign workers not receiving the wages they are owed, the fact remains that these workers are not being treated very well. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: what is the minister doing specifically to protect temporary foreign workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Well, first of all, let's get the record straight. A majority of Alberta employers who employ temporary foreign workers are good employers. Many, many employers use foreign workers, so it would be very unwise and unjust to brush all employers with that same reputation. The fact of the matter is that we do audits, but we do targeted audits. We provide information in many languages in writing. Mr. Speaker, you may find this very interesting: we actually take calls in more than 170 languages to listen to complaints.

Mrs. Sarich: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: is it true that temporary foreign workers will be sent back to their home country if they speak up for themselves regarding issues that they may have?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we encourage them to speak. As a matter of fact, we have campaigns asking not only foreign workers but all Albertans to inform us if there are issues relevant to any abuse of workers. That's why we print materials in several languages. That's why we have telephone lines and websites. So that's not the case. Whether they choose to go back to their country of origin, that's an issue that they have to raise with the federal government. I think that this is the best place to live on the planet. I choose to live here, but I can't be pompous enough to assume that everybody will stay here. They have that option.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that there are questions being raised regarding the cutting of budget to employment standards inspections, how can this minister justify the cuts that are being made in this particular area at this time when we need to ensure temporary foreign workers and all Alberta workers are being treated fairly in the workplace?

2:40

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, that's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. We've gone through estimates already, and I can tell you that one department in the ministry that has received zero cuts – zero – is that particular department. Our field officers are out there in the same numbers as they have been in the past, and they are doing their inspections, and they're doing that very diligently. Let the message be clear to any employers who may be listening: if you do not adhere to Alberta laws and rules and if we find over and over that you are breaching the rules, you will find yourself in court, and myself and our Minister of Justice will look into this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Wildfire Season

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this week's rural municipal convention the Whitecourt-St. Anne leaders expressed concerns to me about dry conditions for landowners and managers. My questions are all to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given such dry conditions within Whitecourt-St. Anne, why is the forest tanker base not opened at the Whitecourt airport?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is, of course, that April 1 is officially fire season. We do have a situation across the province of Alberta, particularly in northern Alberta, where our moisture levels are low, about 80 per cent of average. What we're doing at the moment, of course, is exactly as the member has indicated. We're staffing up our 13 forestry bases, where we operate manpower from, and the 14 tanker bases across the province of Alberta, including the one in Whitecourt-St. Anne.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's March 18: five forest fires already in Alberta. Are you ready for a busy season?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely we are ready for a busy season. I have to say that right now, as we're here having the debate, there are a number of young folk – well, not even so young – that are being qualified or requalified to go out as front-line workers to attack these forest fires when they occur. Again, the member is absolutely correct. We've got a 50-hectare fire burning in Swan Hills . . .

The Speaker: I know.

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, you know.

. . . and there are a couple of smaller fires that are in the Whitecourt region. We're very aware of this, and we are preparing, and I believe that we'll do a very good job this year on that particular issue.

Mr. VanderBurg: My final question to the same minister. Many fires are caused by landowners that pay no attention to fire bans. Are you going to be recovering the money from those landowners that start those fires?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is yes, under certain circumstances. As we know, particularly if you're looking on occupied public land, if you have a situation where you have occupied public land and the occupier under normal circumstances is not the one – is not the one – who is responsible for a fire, there is some opportunity there, I think, for us to take a look at those situations and be fair about who is the responsible party and who should bear the cost.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 114 questions and responses today. Nineteen members were recognized: nine from the Official Opposition, one from the third party in the House, two from the fourth party in the House, and seven from private government members.

Might we revert briefly to the introduction of visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour and privilege for me to advise the House that we've been graced today with the presence of one of our Olympic gold medal winners, Mr. Marc Kennedy. Marc Kennedy, who I claim to be from Edmonton, Alberta, who curls as the second for the Kevin Martin gold medal curling team, which has made Edmonton, Alberta, and Canada proud, is here with his wife, Nicole. They won the gold medal this year at the Vancouver 2010 Winter Olympics and made us all proud.

I should mention that this is not their first victory, of course. They've won at least two Briers that I'm aware of and a world championship.

I would ask Marc Kennedy and his wife, Nicole Kennedy, who needs to be recognized as well – we all know that in the business we do and, obviously, in the sport they do, to be excellent at anything, you need the help of your family and you need support. [Standing ovation]

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Here I was ready to yell, "Hurry, hurry, hurry" so we could get our Routine in before 3 o'clock.

Fire Services Exemplary Service Medals

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate Mr. Richard Kadlec, Mr. Mel Roberts, and Mr. Tim Vandenberg, who live in my constituency, for being nominated and invited this year to receive Canada's fire services exemplary service medal. This prestigious award recognizes the men and women dedicated to preserving Canada's public safety through long and outstanding service.

Created on August 29, 1985, the fire services exemplary service medal honours members of a recognized Canadian fire service who have completed 20 years of service, 10 years of which have been served in the performance of duties involving potential risks.

Being nominated for this medal is an amazing honour, and these three Albertans deserve all the recognition and praise that this nomination brings with it. Without hesitation these men have risked their lives in order to protect others. I would like to thank these brave men as well as all firefighters for their courageous efforts and dedication to this province. Words alone cannot describe our gratitude.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alberta Land Surveyors Act Centennial

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, March 19, marks the 100th anniversary of royal assent of the Alberta Land Surveyors Act. Introduced by the hon. Jean Leon Côté, a Dominion land surveyor and MLA for the riding of Athabasca, this legislation established the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association as one of the very first self-governing professions in the province of Alberta.

In 1910 land surveyors applied their skills to mark out the boundaries of homestead lands and the lots of the growing cities and towns using steel tapes and transit, drafting all their plans by hand, and doing their calculations with the assistance of logarithmic tables. Does anybody remember log tables these days? With today's electronic distance measuring equipment, global positioning systems, and hand-held computers the same job can be completed in a fraction of the time without the back-breaking labour of cutting out every single line and the intricacies of determining direction by astronomical observations.

The first president of the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association was William Pearce, from Calgary, known as the czar of the prairies. He pioneered land settlement and irrigation in southern Alberta. Other prominent land surveyors of that era were Lionel Charlesworth, the province's first director of surveys and the deputy minister of public works, as well as A.O. Wheeler, a pioneer of photogrammetric surveying, Alberta-British Columbia boundary commissioner, and founding president of the Alpine Club of Canada.

Land surveying is critical to the identification of properties. The Torrens system of land registration was adopted by Alberta and led to the creation of one of the most secure methods of registering land boundaries in the world. Property owners in Alberta can be assured of the integrity of their property boundaries because of the work of Alberta land surveyors in establishing the cadastral framework so essential to the efficient operation of the Torrens system at land titles.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:50 Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is farm safety week. Every worker deserves equal protection under the law. But paid farm workers are excluded from occupational health and safety legislation, and they're not covered by workers' compensation, despite what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said yesterday, or by labour laws. Farm workers need and deserve these protections. Nineteen workers died in 2007, 23 in 2008, and when the 2009 numbers are released, I have no doubt that the numbers will be comparable. These are deaths that better regulations and legislation could have prevented. Such recent deaths were caused by all-terrain vehicle rollovers; others involved falls, incidents involving livestock and heavy equipment. All of these incidents could have been prevented had health and safety regulations been posted.

Aside from the deaths, there are hundreds of injuries on farms every year, causing avoidable human suffering, economic losses, and additional costs to the health care system. This administration's addition of funds for farm safety education may help reduce some of the danger, but nothing can replace the protections offered by inclusive worker safety legislation, especially considering that the farm accident monitoring system is voluntary, leaving many, many farm injuries unreported. How can we know if these education programs will work if we don't even know how many accidents are taking place?

Alberta's safety legislation must be rewritten to include paid farm workers. These citizens have the same right to a safe workplace, and they deserve the same protections as any other worker. I call upon the Premier to direct his ministers to fix the appropriate legislation. One more farm death is one more too many.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Budget 2010

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 9, 2010, Budget 2010 was tabled by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. The budget strikes the right balance between finding savings and protecting priority programs and services. Actions taken in Budget 2010 position Alberta to have the strongest financial position of all provinces heading towards recovery. We will have the most innovative and competitive economy in Canada, we will have the best health care system in the country, and we will have the newest and the best infrastructure in North America.

The Bank of Montreal has positive things to say about this budget. They call our ability to reduce the budget deficit in fiscal year 2011-12 to $1.1 billion "an impressive improvement." The Bank of Montreal also points out that there were no new taxes and that Albertans continue to pay the lowest taxes in Canada. Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Montreal also shares Budget 2010's forecast for recovery, notably in Alberta's resource sector thanks to improved commodity prices, stating that the bank also sees that on the horizon. They believe that our real GDP will grow by 3 per cent in 2010, outpacing the national rate, and we will outperform the national average over the medium term. They deem the budget's forecast of 2.6 per cent growth in 2010 and average growth of 3 per cent through 2013 to be achievable.

Mr. Speaker, striking the right balance was not easy. The Minister of Finance and Enterprise has said that everyone has been asked to give a little, but by giving a little today, we are building the foundation for a more prosperous tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Sylvan Lake Pond Hockey Tournament

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to give recognition to a wonderful event that took place last weekend in Sylvan Lake. This was a true Canadian event. The second annual Sylvan Lake Pond Hockey Tournament took place and was a huge success. A number of special guests joined in this year's event, including the Hanson Brothers and Denis Lemieux of the movie Slap Shot, former NHLers Marcel Dionne and Charlie Simmer, and Canada's ultimate hockey dad, Walter Gretzky. The number of teams participating also grew significantly, from 23 teams last year to 55 teams this year.

This was a tremendously successful event and a lot of fun for all those who took part, both players and spectators. It was a great day. This is what Canada is all about. The night wrapped up with an awards banquet, complete with autograph sessions on sticks, pucks, movies, and other paraphernalia. All funds raised from the event go to support minor sports in Sylvan Lake.

Next year the town of Sylvan Lake invites all Albertans to come and enjoy the Sylvan Lake Pond Hockey Tournament.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Lyndon Rush

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to recognize one of our local Olympic athletes, Lyndon Rush. Last month Lyndon and teammate Lascelles Brown secured a bronze medal at the 2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics in the four-man bobsled. Lyndon drove the sled that secured Canada a bronze medal and was only one one-hundredth of a second shy of beating the silver medallists.

While all Canadians were extremely proud of these two athletes, central Albertans were particularly pleased to see a local boy win a medal. When he is not bobsledding, Lyndon works in Red Deer as a commercial realtor. We are proud that Mr. Rush calls central Alberta home.

I'd like to extend my sincere appreciation to all of our Canadian athletes but especially our local champion, Lyndon Rush, for his hard work, dedication, and commitment to excellence. Congratulations on your extraordinary achievement.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the outstanding accomplishments of Lyndon Rush at the 2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2006, before the royalty framework was overhauled by this government, former Premier Peter Lougheed told Albertans that we need to start thinking and acting like owners of our natural resources. He was talking about fair royalty rates for our natural resources, resources that belong to all Albertans, not to oil and gas companies.

At first this government seemed to be listening to the former Premier's advice. They made a commitment to increase royalties by $1.4 billion per year. They said that they were going to take their time to get it right. But faced with growing political pressure from industry, this government has since retreated on their commitment seven times. First, Suncor got a bitumen rollback. Then there was a deep drilling rollback, followed by Syncrude's bitumen rollback, which was followed by a rollback for new wells. Then royalties were capped at 5 per cent, and previous rollbacks were extended. All together these rollbacks cost taxpayers $2 billion. Last week's rollback will cost us another three-quarters of a billion dollars in 2012 alone.

Desperate to regain favour with the oil and gas industry, this government refuses to stand up for Albertans. A recent Environics poll shows that 58 per cent of Albertans oppose royalty rollbacks. Clearly, the majority of Albertans are thinking like owners. What they need is a government that will act like owners.

Alberta's NDP is now the only political party defending Alberta's fair share. We will continue to stand up for the rights of Albertans, the rightful owners of these valuable and nonrenewable resources.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I am happy to present a petition signed by a number of people who are very much against the transmission line bill and the repercussions from that.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 13

Securities Amendment Act, 2010

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010.

Alberta and all provinces and territories except Ontario made a commitment to ongoing securities regulatory reform under a 2004 memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. This bill will build on this work as well as assist Canada in meeting its international commitments in the wake of the global financial crisis. Bill 13 supports Canada's international commitments in two key areas: first, supporting Canada's conversion to international financial reporting standards, or IFRS, for public companies on January 1, 2011, and, second, proposing the use of a new regulatory oversight framework for credit-rating organizations that is in line with international standards. Other amendments to the act will strengthen regulatory enforcement and ensure that Alberta's registration regime continues to be harmonized with that of other Canadian jurisdictions.

As the second-largest capital market in Canada it is important that Alberta continues to show global leadership and keep its legislation as up to date as possible through ongoing reform. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I chose deliberately not to interrupt the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, but under Standing Order 7(7) at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily Routine shall be deemed to be concluded, and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the House consider granting unanimous consent to complete the Routine today.

The Speaker: There is a motion put forth by the hon. Government House Leader to complete the Routine. If any member is opposed, please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Bill 14

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010.

An administrative amendment is needed to correct an unintentional change to section 162 of the Traffic Safety Act. Section 162 of the Traffic Safety Act deals with the allocation of fines. This administrative amendment will restore the previous funding to the Traffic Safety Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of over a thousand letters and messages from parents and children living in my constituency. Due to the volume of the documents they've already been deposited with the Clerk. The majority of these letters are from the Rocky Ridge Royal Oak School Committee, pleading with the provincial government to approve provincial funding for the building of new public schools in Calgary, which will help eliminate the one-hour commuting bus ride that middle school-aged children are currently made to endure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you. I'm very happy to rise today to table the capital market reports on Budget 2010, which is done by Dr. Sherry Cooper, who is the chief economist of BMO Capital Markets.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two documents from the Ministry of Employment and Immigration itemizing labour standards and workplace safety compliance rates among Alberta businesses that employ temporary foreign workers. These documents relate to the questions asked earlier today by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 34 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which has gathered signed postcards from approximately 2,500 Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Further to one of the questions that I asked in question period today, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a 2010-2011 service provider agreement budget allocation which clearly shows a downward adjustment of $121,264.47. All that money is not going to people on PDD in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. They're both from constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and they're both tablings that I'm doing with permission. First off, Marie O'Brien is writing expressing her concern about the future of Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Carole Aippersbach is also very concerned about the direction this government is going with Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Ouellette, the Minister of Transportation, responses to questions raised by Mr. Kang, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall; Mr. Hinman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore; and Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, on February 22, 2010, Department of Transportation main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Zwodzesky, Minister of Health and Wellness, a report dated March 17, 2010, entitled Quality Assurance Review of the Three Medication and One Expressed Breast Milk Incidents at the Alberta Children's Hospital, Calgary, Alberta, prepared by the Health Quality Council of Alberta.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Government House Leader to share with us under Standing Order

7(6) the projected government business for the week commencing March 22, with government business commencing March 23?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was thinking that we might run out of time for this today and end up where we were before without having to go on the record.

Bills 13 and 14 were introduced today, and I anticipate bills 9 and 15 being introduced for first reading on Monday. That being the case, I'll make mention of them later on in the week.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The idea of reducing red tape and promoting efficiencies is a wonderful concept. Unfortunately, this bill fails to provide that. Like its predecessor Bill 1, the lobbyist registry, it lacks the mechanics, it lacks the teeth to accomplish the intent.

In the case of the previous Bill 1, the lobbyist registry, it was easily circumvented by having a minister or a member of the government approach the industry whose services were desired and simply not bother to report. In the case of the competitiveness bill there is no timeline, there is no check-off to indicate what progress has been made, and I have great sympathy for our poor finance minister, who has received no funding to ensure that this bill is carried out.

Unfortunately, it does not get any farther than the intent indication and has no ability to actually be carried out. It can be proclaimed, but without the tools necessary to create the efficiencies desired, we have no idea whether the government is getting back into the business of being in business or shortcutting the business of business. It's unfortunate.

I would hope that future so-called Premier's flagship bills will be able to be actually realized and create the efficiencies that this bill fails to create. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a great concern to me that we have as our flagship bill Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. I feel that I need to stand up and address it once more. It's interesting that it's somewhat like the Hollywood star, as I said yesterday, who's been caught shoplifting. They want to plead innocent: "Oh, no, no. I've got the money in my wallet. I'll pay for it." The only reason why this government is bringing in the Competitiveness Act is because they've been caught. We've lost the Alberta advantage. We're no longer competitive. Now they're making the declaration: oh, no, we're competitive. They need to make the statement. They're trying to put out the advertisement to say that we're competitive when we're not.

You know, I'm surprised that in the act it wasn't included that we're going to have a new minister, the minister of competitiveness. To expand on that, it goes back again to the time when we had a minister of government efficiencies. I asked the question at that point: well, if there's a minister that isn't efficient, that isn't competent, why not replace them with someone who is?

Again, I'll say the same thing about Bill 1 being the flagship bill. If we're not competitive, let's do something about it. Let's not stand up and say: oh, we're competitive. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has brought up the last three times how much flip-flopping this government has been doing. I want to change that a little bit. It's not that they've been flip-flopping; it's that there has been one flop after another. It's just flop, flop, flop. We have to ask ourselves: why are they doing this? It just seems that it's more about political pressure and not economics, that the economics are driving the political pressure.

I want to talk about a few of the other flops that this government has had. They put out the message to the different regions in the province that we're looking at a police academy: "Put together your lobbying, your interest groups. Let's see what you can produce, and we're going to select one and produce a police academy." Some of those communities spent a lot of time, a lot of effort. [interjection] I believe I'm talking about being competitive, and I'll wrap it up, and you'll understand here as I go in there. They put in a lot of effort and time, and they were very competitive in their bid on how we can improve our policing in the province and why we're looking at that, only to have another flop with nothing happening.

The reason why I'm bringing these things up, Mr. Chair, is because if, in fact, the rules are always being changed, people don't want to bother putting their money or their time or their effort into competing. Can you imagine if every time there was an Olympics and the host country that's playing hockey knew four years in advance that we're going to change the net size, that we're going to change the puck size, that we're going to change the number of players on the field, and the other countries that are going there don't know about that? They show up at the Olympics only to be told: "Oh, here are the new rules. What we have is a net that's two feet bigger." It's going to very quickly be to where countries aren't going to be bothering to go to compete because they don't know what the rules are.

This is a problem that we're having here in Alberta. The rules are always being changed. The policies are being changed. Their vision is being changed. Therefore, industry, business, workers, all of those people, say: I don't know that I can afford to set up shop there because I don't know what's going to change next. We've gone through it, you know, with performance pay. Duckett says yes; the new health minister says no. Centralized dispatch service: stalled halfway through. Looking back, it's destroying the competitiveness in this province. This is about being competitive, and when we're changing the rules, we're no longer competitive.

To stand up and to pass Bill 1 is a mockery to the competitiveness and the Alberta advantage that we used to have here in this province. We need some real changes. We need to get back on track and to apologize and say: we were wrong; we've done this. The best example and the most crucial at this point is in two areas. Our health care system is in shambles. It doesn't have the competitiveness it needs to be innovative, to change, and to move into new directions because they don't know if the rules are changing.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I appreciate the passion you have here, but we're debating the clauses. During Committee of the Whole we're debating the clauses of the bill.

Mr. Hinman: It's Committee of the Whole, I thought.

The Deputy Chair: We're in Committee of the Whole. Go ahead.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. To go on, what I'm concerned about is that we're passing a bill here stating that we're going to be competitive, but when you look at it from the outside, we're not. I'm going to say that in the health care system innovation is allowed and comes forward because areas can compete if they have a new idea, if they're allowed to make a change.

It's interesting to me that in southern Alberta there's a doctor who's brought in a new technique for dealing with varicose veins. That's very problematic for people that have that, the pooling that is going on. The old way is very painful. It's a long, drawn-out process where people are off work for six to eight weeks. They've got a new, innovative technology that has treatment with laser. People can literally walk in and walk out. That would add to the competitiveness because our workmen's compensation and the cost to workers and people's time off would be enhanced. Yet that area is not allowed to do it because we have to wait for the approval of the central health board now to say whether they can do this or not, whereas at the local level they would bring it in, they'd treat their patients, and we would be moving forward. Mr. Chair, it's just very disappointing that we have a government that wants to use the flagship bill to say that we are competitive. They're denying that we have the Alberta advantage.

I want to go back to something that they've gone back to, and that is the royalties on the oil and gas. The problem that we're still missing on all of this is that people that want to invest and who think things have been corrected here are looking for two key things. One is an apology saying that we were wrong, and two is to say: we're not going to change it again as soon as times get better. This government continues to say: oh, it's because of the economic downturn and the low prices that we're changing this. What message that sends out is: when it gets better again, you can't trust us because we're going to crank it up again. They need to say: "No. We understand that by lowering, we're more competitive. If we lower the royalty rates, we can be more competitive. If we lower the cost and the regulations and reduce the redundant ones, we can be more competitive."

Dr. Brown: How low would you go, Paul?

Mr. Hinman: It is an excellent question: how low should we go? This is like flying. There's a balancing act, and I'll try and do this simple so that you can understand it because it's obvious you don't. It's talking about growing the economy. [interjections] Otherwise, you wouldn't be: flop, flop, flop. If you understood, you would have changed it before January 1, 2009.

The way you balance that is that you look at your income, your revenue from your various sources. If personal income tax is going up, if corporate income tax is going up – and I'm talking the revenue, not the level that we're charging – if our resource revenue is going up, it means that we're being competitive, and what you want to do is grow the economy. But if you tax too much and you see revenue going down, you realize that you're overtaxing. If, in fact, we lower taxes to the point where revenue is not going up and increasing, then you know what? We're a little bit too low here. We need to raise it up.

We've gone way past the tipping point on overtaxation, and we've affected our economy. We've affected our ability to compete around the world. We're losing industry. We're losing jobs. We're losing the opportunity to upgrade our own resources here. And why? It's because of the regulatory and tax burdens that we've put on our industry and our workers. They can't compete in other areas of the world.

It's a mockery to say that we're going to pass a bill and be competitive when everything else that we pass is not competitive. We need to stand up. We need to look at the economics and realize: how do we grow the economy? How do we ensure that we have an arts program here? As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has been so passionate about, how do we attract and get the arts and the film industry back to Alberta? We punish them and say: oh, we're not going to give that tax incentive to be here. We need to look at the taxes, realize it's a problem, whether it's in the filming, whether it's in the oil and gas, or whether it's in agriculture, and not do things that are prohibitive to business and workers going forward.

Mr. Chair, I cannot support this bill. If we're really serious here, I'm wanting to see Alberta do better. Bill 1 should have been an important one on accountability of government. They talk the words; they never walk the walk. The only way we're accountable is when we have recall. That's what Bill 1 should have been.

I'll sit down, and I hope that I have a few questions. Throw them at me because accountability is on recall. It's not accountability to say: we're raising taxes.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Ms Blakeman: No one wants to take him up on his invitation? Okay, then.

I just wanted to make a couple of observations that aren't intricately tied to the film or the arts competitiveness. When I first heard the name of this bill, I thought: "Well, that could be interesting. That could be quite hopeful, actually." At one point what we'd been considering on this side – actually, I think we'd put it forward, but it didn't get a high enough draw – was the idea of a red tape commission that would look at how we could get rid of some of the overlap and duplication in the way people that come into the government stream have to deal with it.

I'll just give you one simple example from my sector, which is not the business sector. It's the NGO sector. You know, if you're applying for grants or for program support from different departments, you are doing completely different applications. In most cases they're asking for the money to be reported in different ways. Some of them want advertising included in printing and brochures, and some of them want it pulled out, so you end up producing four, five, six different versions of your financial statements in order to satisfy. Now, that doesn't help you produce whatever it is your producing, whether it's a play in a theatre or widgets in a manufacturing company. You're just spending a bunch of time shuffling paper around, and for what? You accounted for how you spent the money. All you're doing now is playing some game of how everybody wants it differently.

On the other side, the bureaucrats' side, they say: well, we're interested in whether you've met the environmental concerns or whether you've met this and that concern, and that's why we want you to pull things out differently. But I think that's exactly the kind of job that a red tape commission could be looking at, especially if they look cross ministry. There's certainly an opportunity to streamline applications, and I know that the minister of culture has talked about doing that in his department, and if he can do it, the rest of you can do it.

The second observation that I had. I've grown up in Alberta. This is a cyclical economy. We are overly invested in the oil and gas sector, and because of that, our entire financial security swings back and forth with what's happening in that sector. Right from Lougheed's days that's been much talked about, with many attempts to think about diversification. I would argue that the government continues to be too closely tied with that oil and gas sector because all the initiatives they come up with are tied right back into that sector. They're not stepping far enough out to be innovative; for example, my argument about investing in the film fund and the kind of competition that that would allow us to have and to be competitive with some of the people that we're losing film business to.

Recently the dean of the School of Business at the U of A, a former MLA from this Chamber, said: "You know what? We need to quit worrying about this, recognize that we're a cyclical economy, and deal with it."

An Hon. Member: Fair enough.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Fair enough. But I still think we should be diversifying. I still think we're way too closely tied to oil and gas. I still think that that causes trouble for us, not because we're going to run out of it in our lifetime or far enough ahead that we'd be really worried about it but because others are going to stop buying it.

There is a war on carbon. There is a different attitude toward whether we're going to power everything in our lives through a carbon-based source. That's why I think we need to diversify more and to take that seriously. But I think it's an interesting proposal from Dean Percy that we deal with the fact that we're in a cyclical economy and put things in place to help us weather that a bit better and not have to be on the top end of those pendulum swings.

You know, we had an economist as our Leader of the Official Opposition at one point, Ken Nicol, and he's the one that proposed what we called a stability fund and the government now calls the sustainability fund. We owe a lot of thanks to that man because that's why the government has got the sustainability fund that they have in place now. That's where the idea came from.

I just want to refute, with great respect and affection of course, the previous speaker in that I think we're in trouble with constantly racing to the bottom in where we're getting our revenue from.

When you look at where our revenue streams are from for the amount that we expend in our budgets, the money that we collect every year from traditional sources of corporate and individual income tax, from fees and services, supports two-thirds of the money that we spend, and then we supplement the last third out of our nonrenewable natural resource revenues every year. So the arguments fall flat with me when I hear things about, "Oh, we've got to do things for the next generations and our grandchildren's grandchildren," because, frankly, it doesn't stand up. Right now we're sucking stuff out of the ground – be it gas, conventional oil, or oil sands – as fast as we can do it to supplement today's budget, this year's budget, not even anything going forward but now.

And if – actually, not if but when that carbon-based subsidy, the carbon-based economy that subsidizes a third of the money that we spend, disappears or gets less on us for whatever reason, we're in serious trouble. I think we need to be exploring alternate forms. This argument that we've always got to have lower taxes, lower taxes is problematic, especially if we lose that other income source.

You know, where am I getting these ideas from? Well, it's from the people that I represent. They're the ones that come forward to us and go: we're really worried when we see that this is the money that's supporting the government programs and services, that we're shorting it every year, that we can only support two-thirds of what we're spending. What it says to them is that we're going to have cut and cut services even more, even more, even more.

People consistently say to me: "We don't want our services cut. We expect government to deliver certain services for us, and we want those services provided. We want them provided well. We don't want crappy quality. We don't want corners cut. We want good services, and we're willing to pay good money for them." I was surprised, believe you me, because everywhere I'm bombarded with this: oh, yeah, lower taxes, lower taxes; that's what everyone wants. But that's not what people are saying to me. They're saying:

we want good government programs and services, and we're willing to pay for that, and we understand that we can't keep subsidizing every year with those nonrenewable resource revenues because either we'll get less nonrenewable resource revenue or other people won't buy it from us, and the effect is the same.

Part of that is something that we've currently got before us in a court case, that is turning up in films around the world, that is coming before us over and over again in our daily lives; that is, people struggle with how this government chooses to react to environmental protection issues. Over and over again I've said that what I see is a government that keeps trying to talk their way out of this rather than take action as their way out of this. I'm no happier than anybody else when there's a film being shown in England called Dirty Oil and people are flocking to see it. I know the effect that's going to have on my province.

But, on the other hand, I'm hard-pressed to turn around and say: well, here's the concrete action that my government is taking. I mean, the Minister of Environment and I spent most of an hour, almost my entire budget debate, with me trying to draw out of him exactly what the cumulative effects targets are and exact details, and he couldn't give me anything. He could barely tell me how much money there was that was actually spent on different parts of this department.

I think there's a real issue around that. People keep looking to us to see what action we're taking, what we do, not what we say. I think that is included in this bill. Actually, Mr. Chairman, when you look at this bill, it's three pages long. It's a pretty thin bill. In fact, despite what we've all been talking about here now for several at-bats with this bill – we're now in Committee of the Whole – all this bill says it's going to do is put together or establish a board or a committee or a council or something or authorize a provincial agency, and they can, you know, appoint other board members on to it, and they will get additional powers and duties that they need to function to carry out the purposes of this act. Then there's a long mandate that this board is supposed to look at and accomplish and then report back. That's all this Competitiveness Act is.

For all the other things we've talked about here, if you actually read the act, all it's doing is establishing a council. It's giving itself a mandate to, you know, accelerate the implementation of government of Alberta initiatives to increase competitiveness. My little note on the side is: how? Well, I didn't hear that get answered. You know: share a strategy, develop a benchmark, report publicly, communicate. But these are not action words. They're talky words. They're "say" words not "doing" words. There are things like: "develop strategies and initiatives to encourage innovation and to develop and adopt technology." You run through that list of things: "increase Alberta's competitiveness and productivity of individual economic sectors." How? There's almost no detail in this.

You know, earlier today I introduced the man who is the manager of my constituency office. I first met him when I went to a university class, a political science class, and talked to them. I talked about the fact that, you know, all of the bills that were coming forward now were shell bills. There was no detail in them. There was nothing in there that you could really make the government stick to because it basically authorized the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is really cabinet, to do whatever they wanted and then gave them the power to make regulations to do whatever they want to change it.

That means that it doesn't come back into this Assembly. It's not talked about ever again in here. You see, the way it works is that whatever's done by this Assembly has to be undone by this Assembly. But all of the bills that we look at now are two and three pages long, with the exception of the elections act, Bill 7, but that's coming and then it's humongous. They're two or three pages long, and they basically, you know, empower the Lieutenant Governor in Council or empower the minister as assigned by the Alberta Act to carry on and do whatever they want, and nothing comes back before this House. Soon our sittings get less and shorter and shorter and shorter because there's no business that's required to come back before this House. It just gets done by the government, and do they do that publicly? Well, no. They go behind closed doors.

To me, this is really a number one rhetoric bill. It's allowed the government to give us a lot of rhetoric about what they think competition is or it should be. Frankly, it's allowed us to stand up and talk about what we think it should be, although I think my argument was particularly potent and pithy and I'm expecting that it will be carried through because I was darn good in making my arguments.

That is the fault of this bill. I just don't see the inspiration. You know, this represents to me the government scrambling to try and find its way and to try and figure out how to deliver something. Really, I don't think this is going to help them in the end, and I'm disappointed that this was the best they could do for a flagship bill.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Hinman: I guess I just wanted to comment on a few of the statements by the good Member for Edmonton-Centre and a few of her ideas because if we really want to be competitive here in Alberta, there are things we need to look at. It's interesting that this government – I don't know that they understood, but they gave the grant to say: you know, if we allow capital cost allowance and capital to come in for our oil sands, that'll be good for the province. Yet they don't seem to understand that if we do that for other businesses, it would be good.

If we want to diversify, as the good member is talking about, the first thing we need to do is diversify the incentives, whether that's the film industry, whether it's agriculture, whether it's new technologies, the computer business, communications. If we want to have the incentive and be competitive here in Alberta, we need to lower those taxes so that people can come in, those jobs can be created, and then we go forward from there.

I think that the good Member for Edmonton-Centre would also agree with our party, the Wildrose, as well as the Liberals in that the revenue that's come from our resources has not been saved at a proper rate. What we need to have done is to set a goal and say: well, there's $12 billion that we're reliant upon in order to balance our budget each year from these resource revenues. If over the years the average is 6 per cent return on investment, to be competitive and to be able to ensure that we have the revenue coming in, we should have a goal of $200 billion being in the heritage fund, that would generate $12 billion that would replace the revenue from our resources.

I very much agree. We've been speaking on this for a long time as well, that we can't be competitive if we're not sustainable. The budget that has been presented by this government I believe the last five times – the finance minister says this spending can't continue, it's not sustainable, and this is a one-time increase of 9 per cent, 12 per cent, 17 per cent. That undercuts our ability to be competitive with other provinces and other jurisdictions because we continue spending more than we have for sustainable revenue. I agree very much with the previous member that we should be looking at what our budget is that we can afford to spend, prioritize and realize that, and not be dependent on a nonrenewable resource with no contingency plan.

Again, their sustainability fund, which to me is nothing more than a political slush fund, where they can use it when they get into trouble – but to think that it's gone in two or three short years to me is the equivalent of someone who's been working for years in a great job. Let's say they've been making $90,000 a year, maybe $150,000, but they've only been able to save a small percentage of that, and then because of the industry that they're working in being lost, the best job they can now find is maybe one-third of that level. So they say: "Oh, no problem. I've been saving for the last multiple years. I will continue with my lifestyle, the way I spend money, what I'm doing because I'm sure that within two or three years I'm going to have a great new job again, and my revenue is going to go back up" rather than taking a real close look, realizing we need to be competitive, and saying: "Okay. What nonessential services could I be eliminating?" So such things as: why would I spend $2 billion on storage when, in fact, we have a problem in health care and education and services and infrastructure?

We need to prioritize that money and realize that when our revenue has decreased, we need to really take a close look and say: "Okay. What are our priorities? Where do we put those things? Where do we put our tax dollars so that we ensure that we're going to have a vibrant economy when we come out of this?" If we have a major debt when we come out, we're not in a good position. We're not as competitive. We need to make sure that we're looking at those long-term problems and not just the political popularity of spending from a political slush fund, calling it a sustainability fund when, in fact, if things do not turn around, this spending is not sustainable. Many of the areas that they're looking at are not sustainable. The size of government should be reduced.

In committee the other night I was speaking to the minister of housing, and I said that, no, I don't believe in the duplicity that we need on the provincial level and at the municipal level to deal with the homeless and doing those things. We're not being competitive. We're not using our tax dollars wisely if, in fact, we say: oh, we need to have a level of government at the provincial level as well as the municipal level, with both having a 10-year plan to eliminate it. Well, who's really being effective when they're running their own simultaneously?

There are just so many areas that we see a deficit in the true nature of being competitive. That's allowing the entrepreneurs, the people with the ideas, to come in and not be looking at burdensome taxes, not be looking at regulations that don't allow them to set up here, yet they can set up in Saskatchewan or B.C., or it's going to take two years to get an okay to go ahead with a project here in Alberta whereas the other jurisdictions in six months are able to put that through.

Those are the things that are just common sense. It's the role of government. They should be doing those things and not saying: oh, we need to pass a bill to make sure that we're competitive. We should be looking at those things. This idea of rolling back after two and a half years: our royalty was wrong. The downturn in the economy was there in December, October of '08, yet they went full steam ahead and said: "Oh, no. We can go forward on this. We can allow this."

It's interesting that I've had some comments also about being competitive in our education system. I think that this is an area we can turn and look at. Because we allow charter schools and private schools and other ones to compete with our public schools, what we have is an incredible competition to say: okay, what do we have to do to offer people a better education? Because there's competition in our education, I believe the level and the quality of our overall education – public, charter, private, nonprofit, all of those – is going up. We can't be afraid of competing in saying: oh, all the money, all the monopoly has to be in one area. We have a great opportunity to be competitive. We've got the people. We've got the resources. We've got the universities. We just have so much here in Alberta, but what we don't have is a government that's competitive at the provincial, at the country level, and certainly not on the world level.

Again, the lack of thought is astounding when they go through. I guess I still will go back to the big issues. They announce a new drilling incentive for the 1st of January in November and then wonder why nobody is drilling for a month. Like I say, the lack of thought on their policies is just astounding, whether it's in health care, whether it's in education, whether it's in the judicial. They just do not seem to think: "What are the consequences? What are we trying to achieve? Are we going to be competitive?" It just seems like: "Oh, the wind is blowing this way. It's popular. Let's jump on this. Let's spend some money here, and isn't everybody going to be happy?" Then the money is gone the next day, and they say: "Oh, how are we going to get back? Oh, we didn't think about that."

So we're caught in a hole, and once again we're not being competitive. We've lost industry out of the province in the last year and a half, and I contribute much of that to the tax level in our province and not being able to compete with other jurisdictions. We need to be looking at that. We need to have a sharp pencil.

This is no different than going to put in a bid, whether we want to be competitive, and saying, "Okay; bring forward your plans on how we're going to produce energy and electricity here in the province" versus a government that says: "Oh, no, we need $15 billion in infrastructure. We're going to give it to these two companies." There's no competition in that. It's just a handover, a declared crisis. Again, are we going to be competitive in four years from now, when we have high-cost electrical lines that aren't serving their purpose? It's going to decrease our competitiveness. Where are we going to be? Is the logging industry going to be able to compete? Are we going to be able to do those things?

Again, I'll repeat that this government continues to pass rules, regulations, and legislation that is undermining and continuing to erode the Alberta advantage that we once had. We need to do better, but we don't need Bill 1. We just need a government with some common sense and some economic understanding.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very briefly, we cannot be competitive in this province as long as the rules are set outside by the global economy. Unless we get rid of our dependency on oil and gas nonrenewable resource revenues, the rules will be set outside by the global price of oil or the price of gas. The key way to become competitive is through education. It's through diversification. It's through innovation and technology.

The most important resource that Alberta needs to be fostering and supporting is the area of education. Unfortunately, at this point we're hardly competitive. Yes, we have some very select students who do well in science and international math exams. But considering the fact that a third of our students fail to complete high school in the prescribed three years, with larger numbers of ESL students failing, the fact that only 52 per cent of the fastest growing portion of our population, First Nations, manage to pass high school in a five-year period, we're not being competitive either externally or internally.

What this government needs as sort of a backstop for the competition is the notion of a savings plan. The hon. members have previously talked about the sustainability fund and whether it's being used for its true purpose as a backstop or whether it's just used for political convenience.

It's extremely important that priorities be established if we're going to be competitive. This government chose to make dramatic cuts to advanced education, dramatic cuts to Children and Youth Services, crippling cuts for persons with developmental disabilities. If we do not invest in our significant resource – and that's our human capital – we're going to continue to ride the roller coaster of boom and bust. We can get off this roller coaster if we backstop, as I say, with appropriate saving strategies.

Now, we have long stood by the notion of setting aside 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenues beyond the rainy-day fund concept. We've said, for example, that we'd like to see 35 per cent of that 30 per cent set aside to create postsecondary endowment funds. These would backstop our postsecondary system, whether it be technical or academic, and create the savings account. We'd be able to use the interest garnered to continue to provide stability and predictability for postsecondary institutions rather than looking at large increases to tuition or nonacademic fees.

Also, we've suggested that 35 per cent of that 30 per cent be set aside to build up the heritage trust fund. Until we have a degree of self-sufficiency to weather us past the point of our nonrenewable oil and gas dependency, we're going to continue to be caught up in this cyclical global circumstance.

Another 25 per cent of that 30 per cent we've suggested investing in infrastructure. Now, the government has acknowledged at this point in time that the cost of labour, the cost of materials is 40 per cent lower. If we're going to be competitive, we should be attracting our own industries to create the needs we have, whether it's large-scale work in the oil sands, which is currently being sidetracked to South Korea, whether it's our failure to upgrade bitumen, which is being sent, along with jobs, south of the border. We cannot be competitive if we don't realize a refinement of our own natural resources.

The last 5 per cent of that 30 per cent set aside would go towards art and culture, creating a predictable, sustainable industry such as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has put forward with regard to the film industry.

These are all realizable objectives providing we have a formula, providing we evaluate, providing we have timelines, and providing we have designated funding.

In the various budget committees at which I either directly participated or served as a vice-chair, there was a reluctance to have markers, to create expectations, to deal with timelines, to evaluate how far we've gone. If we don't evaluate along each step of the way, then we're never going to get where we need to be.

Now, Alaska has provided dividends for its citizenry based on oil and gas. Norway has been extremely successful. In terms of competitiveness, most provinces believe in a progressive tax system, which provides competitiveness throughout the rest of Canada. It's funny that we in Alberta seem to think we've got it right. Our idea of right is punishing the middle class at the expense of the individuals at the top end of the scale. Yes, wealth creates wealth, but if you don't have an educated workforce, if you don't use the potential of the First Nations, with their significant growth rate increase, then we're not going to have that competition.

We have the made-in-Alberta potential, but this business of just continuing to lower taxes, which ends up reducing services – you can't have one without the other. Mr. Chair, this competitiveness bill is ethereal. It's conceptual. It has no mechanical evaluatory system to make sure that we get where it's intending to take us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 1, Alberta Competitiveness Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? The motion is carried.

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A1. Are there any comments, questions, or anything else to be offered on the amendment to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Why, thank you so much, Mr. Chair. Yes, I do have something to offer on the amendment that is before us, amendment A1. What I'd like to offer is a subamendment which is already at the table, and I'll allow time for it to be distributed.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has proposed a subamendment to amendment A1, and we'll take a moment to let the pages circulate this.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. We're in Committee of the Whole, at which point you can discuss the bill clause by clause, word by word, or present amendments. We currently have an amendment on the floor which is an interesting one. Just so this is in context for everybody, we have an amendment, moved by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, in section 89 of the bill, which actually appears on page 70 of the paper bill if you're following along. Section 89, which includes all the stuff about part 6.1, third-party advertising, proposes that in the proposed section 44.1(1)(g) it strike out subclause (iv).

So what the heck does that mean for anyone following along at home? Okay. What we've got here is third-party advertising. Section 44.1(1) starts giving a bunch of different definitions, which you always do – right? – so everybody knows what they're talking about. We've got, you know, (a) is advertising account, (b) is election advertising, and blah, blah down to (g), political advertising. This, my friends, my colleagues, my dears, my wonders, is the heart of it. This is the nub of it. Under subsection (g) we have “political advertising” means advertising, for which there is or normally would be a charge.” Then there are subsections under that, so read carefully. Stay with me on this one.

Then it gives the exceptions, where it wouldn't be considered political advertising, and it includes “the publication without charge of news, an editorial, an editorial comment, an interview,” et cetera. Subsection (ii) is “the distribution of a book” for which there is no commercial value, or it's sold for less than commercial value. Sorry, it's not that there is no commercial value; it's sold for less or given for less than commercial value. Subsection (iii) is “the transmission of a document . . . by a person, corporation or group to its members” who have given permission for things to be sent around to them; in other words, e-mail.

Then here is the good part. Subsection (iv) is “advertising by the Government in any form.” This is the proposal that’s put forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to be exorcized from this, to take it out. That’s the amendment that’s on the floor. Think about it, folks. Sorry; by folks I mean folks at home. You’ve got a government that’s been in place for 40 years. It has developed something called the Public Affairs Bureau, which is its marketing arm, its sales arm. It controls everything. It writes all the speeches for people. It writes a good number of the questions that you hear asked by government members here in the House.

An Hon. Member: No.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I’m getting noes from the other side, but wink, wink, nudge, nudge, now, now. We know it’s different. They do all the media and press releases and that sort of thing. They’re immensely powerful and all-pervasive because members from the Public Affairs Bureau work for every single government department.

It’s just always interesting how things that most people would consider as the government actually being partisan – we’ve had stuff go on for so long in this province that everybody just shrugs and takes it as normal. Well, doing something over and over again doesn’t make it normal. We have things like the Premier paying for a television spot in which he gets to do a speech, but there’s no opportunity and certainly nothing in the Official Opposition budget – I can assure you of that – that allows the Official Opposition enough money to go out and buy an equivalent spot to be able to negate or talk back or have any kind of public debate or reaction back to the paid statement. Anywhere else that would be regarded as absolutely off the screen, but here in Alberta it’s accepted. The public year after year pays hundreds of thousands of dollars for the Premier to go out and do a special statement that is not able to be countered by anyone else, and that’s considered normal.

So the idea that we would now have a government who during a provincial election can continue to do these kinds of things and advertise itself – and there’s very little distinction in Alberta between the government and the political party which its members come from, and there are very few people who actually are left in government that understand those distinctions. It tends to be just sort of an assumption that it’s going to glide on and nobody will have a problem with it.

We’re very interested in supporting this amendment, but we thought – you know what? – there are a few things that you need to take out of that blanket deletion. Our subamendment that you now all have in front of you essentially strikes out that same clause but substitutes in its place that we would not allow any advertising by the government except to allow “advertising by the Government required to address public safety, the provision of adequate health services” – for example, the kind of notices that we saw around H1N1 or that we would need to see around vaccination clinics available for children and that kind of thing – and, of course, “to communicate employment opportunities to the public.”

This is the subamendment that we’ve put forward because we think it’s a good idea to not have a government, particularly one in this province, that does not distinguish between government and the political party from which its members come – that’s not distinguished here in this province. Therefore, really, the government and that same political party shouldn’t be doing any advertising during a writ period.

There is a recognition that some things that are important for the health and safety of citizens need to go on, and part of it is continuing to recruit people to work in the civil service, which is an honoured profession and which we do not talk about enough as politicians, how much we value the civil service, because they do most of the work that makes us look good, frankly. We need to be able to continue to recruit people to that through that time period, but also we need to be able to do advertising and purchase advertising so that we can notify people of various health issues that they need to be aware of and public safety: occupational health and safety notices, shutdowns of various things if public safety is involved, et cetera.

So we’re very interested in supporting the amendment that was brought forward, but we think it was just the teeniest bit short sighted and needed to recognize that some things do need to go on. I hope I can get everyone to vigorously support this subamendment when they get an opportunity to speak to it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it is 4:25.

Ms Blakeman: No, it’s not. One minute.

The Deputy Chair: It is 4:25. Where I’m looking at it, it is.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen and young people, today we will be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some distinguished Albertans, distinguished leaders in their communities and in our community, leaders of the Alberta First Nations in our province and the president of the Métis Nation in our province. We have with us today Grand Chief Charles Weaselhead, grand chief for Treaty 7; Grand Chief Eddy Makokis, grand chief for Treaty 6; Grand Chief Allan Adam, grand chief for Treaty 8. As well, we have Rose Laboucan, deputy grand chief with the education portfolio for Treaty 8; Audrey Poitras, president of the Métis Nation of Alberta; and Gerald Cunningham, president of the Métis Settlements General Council of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, they're with us today because we're having a meeting this afternoon of our First Nations, Métis and Inuit Education Partnership Council, a very, very important partnership council that's come together to provide leadership for education with respect to First Nations and Métis and Inuit students in our province. We will be meeting with them this afternoon. Later on today I'll be tabling two historic documents that pertain to that meeting, and I'll elaborate then.

I would ask these great leaders in our province to stand and receive the warm welcome and thanks from this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program, seated in your gallery: from Priority Printing Limited Mr. Tim

Downey, president; from Access TV Mr. Lloyd Lewis, vice-president and general manager, CTV, and Mr. Eric Rice, production and interactive; from CKUA Radio Network Mr. Ken Regan, general manager, and Mr. Paul Moulton, chair of the foundation, and Ms Katrina Regan-Ingram, director of marketing and sales; from the Rotary Club of Edmonton Mr. Jack Clements; finally, Mr. Ron LaFranchise, volunteer. The School at the Legislature program gives grade 6 teachers from all over our province an opportunity to relocate their classrooms to the Alberta Legislature for a week. I would ask all our guests now to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you today to the members of the Assembly 26 grade 6 students from Trinity Christian school in my constituency. They're accompanied by their teacher, Miss Cheryl Barnard, and 10 parent helpers. They got in their vehicles today and came up those icy roads, and they're here to see what we do. I'd ask if they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a special group from Boyle school in my constituency. When I first saw this group a few weeks ago in their class, a young Peter Mischuk asked me the question: what's it like to be in the same room as the Mace? It certainly is an honour and a privilege to be in the same room as the Mace and represent my constituents and my students, and I'd like to thank Peter for reinforcing that to me. Peter is joined by 23 other students and six leaders: Darrell Bergmann, Emily Thomson, Stacey Welsh, Jeff Scammell, Barb Sullivan, and Nancy Amero. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions with your indulgence. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Roger and Jann Beer and their daughter, Victoria. The Beer family own a small farm near Rivière Qui Barre in the Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency. Jann and Roger have educated their two children at home. They enjoy their horses and other pets and are actively involved in the Morinville Alliance Church, which my wife and I also attend. Victoria would like to someday compete in the equine competition at Spruce Meadows, and I think that with this young lady's determination she will do that. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise now and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is one that, in my nine years of being in the Assembly, I believe is the first time I've had the opportunity to do this; that is, the Beer family is accompanied by my partner of many, many years and my partner for many, many years to come. In fact, we're celebrating our 30th year this year.

Mr. Snelgrove: She was five.

Mr. Horner: She was five, yes.

She's also going to be a grandmother in May this year, which I think is fabulous. Of course, it means that I'll be living with a grandmother, but that's okay. Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour for me to introduce my wife, Rose, who is also in the members' gallery. I'd ask her to please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two Edmonton public school board school trustees, Catherine Ripley and George Rice.

They're both on a new standing committee of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta called the Intragovernmental Political Relations Committee. It's a committee rooted in the strong belief that respectful working relationships between provincial elected officials and local school board trustees will lead to enhancing public education in our local communities. I'm certain that all MLAs will be hearing from the committee and from these two trustees, and I'm sure that they will welcome input from MLAs with respect to that relationship.

I can tell you that after 30 years of knowing Trustee George Rice – he was actually my wife's first school principal when she joined Edmonton public – and a somewhat lesser time Trustee Catherine Ripley, who was the chairman of the Whitemud Coalition of Schools some years back, they have excellent working relationships and excellent ability to promote public education. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.
