misconduct that is the equivalent of a great big sieve. All kinds of things will slip through this, and the government has not been prepared to accept some of the amendments that have been put forward, some very minor amendments.

People who fail to participate, follow process, or conduct themselves in an appropriate manner may get their appeal dismissed. It narrows severely the categories of people who are eligible to bring forward appeals and excludes others who may have an indirect relationship or have a specific interest in ensuring good conduct on the part of the police. In doing so, it will permit misconduct by police to go ahead and to continue without being effectively challenged. That's why I compare it to a sieve.

I think that it's very important that we have the highest standards. I know that one section in particular, section 45(4), provides that the chief of police may dispose of a complaint if he or she is of the opinion the grievance is not serious. Mr. Speaker, it's really shocking.

It's interesting that amongst all the bills that we've debated – and there has been a particularly bad batch in this session, in my view, Mr. Speaker – the government has been seemingly most determined on pushing this particular piece of legislation through the Assembly. This is a bill designed not to hold police accountable, to provide every possible opportunity for the police or the chief of police or the system as a whole to avoid accountability and to leave wrongdoing, which occasionally occurs on the part of police, uncorrected and certainly unpunished. For that reason, I believe that the Assembly ought to pass this reasoned amendment and not give the bill third reading because of the reasons that I've stated.

I think this is a very disturbing piece of legislation because it seems to so deliberately provide the police with opportunities to avoid accountability. If that's the objective of the government, I wish they would just say so and we might know why that is. But in the absence of that, I'm certainly going to give this amendment my full support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a) for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I wasn't going to speak to this, but the remarks from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood got me thinking. You know, I guess it would be six years ago that it would have been unbelievable for people to think that police would search a database for a personal reason – it would just be unthinkable – or that police would deliberately follow a prominent individual home trying to catch them drinking and driving. It just could not happen. No one would believe that those kinds of shenanigans would go on in a police force from a metropolitan area in Alberta.

I mean, granted, we've all read the books of the New York police and the Chicago police and the L.A. police and the different times they've gone through, where they seem to have become rife with corruption, and all kinds of terrible things happened, and they got themselves straightened out. But it was just far beyond the realm of possibility that any of our police services would ever step outside of or even stick a toe across the line, yet in the last 10 years we've found out that they can and they did. They did do things that were not acceptable.

When it was first raised that this was a possibility, that somebody started talking about that, we'd say: "Oh, absolutely no way. That's totally ridiculous." In fact, the first police officer that looked at it did dismiss it, and that rolling through is a big piece of why we have this legislation in front of us today, because people didn't accept it. They would not accept the police investigating themselves.

I around that time was the Official Opposition critic for the Solicitor General and Justice, and I remember asking question after question and making public statement after public statement that they had to have independent oversight and an independent complaints system because it didn't work for either side. If an officer was cleared by his own people, nobody would believe that he was truly cleared; it was all an inside job, and it was all done with a wink and a handshake. No one would believe it, which is terribly unfair to someone who should be cleared. You know, if they've gone through the system, we should believe that person is innocent and get on with it or that they were found guilty of something.

Our world has changed a whole lot in Alberta in the last 10 years around police complaint processes. I'm pleased to see that we got to where we did with the act that's before us, but in reviewing what I've just gone through in the last couple of minutes, I thought: is this really the best we can be? Is this the best we could achieve with this amending act? Because, really, it's been my experience that once an issue kind of rolls through, it comes to the attention of government, they deal with it, they bring forward an amending act, they pass it, and it's a good five years before you can get the issue back up again. So if it wasn't perfect the first time you passed it, you're going to have to live with it for at least five years and more likely 10 and in some cases longer than that. Is this really the best that we could be? Did we really achieve the balance we were trying to achieve? Did we achieve the credibility that we were trying to achieve for both sides involved here?

I think that based on all of the things we've learned – and, particularly, we have to be very careful about complaints being dismissed – we could do better. I'll certainly support the reasoned amendment brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing none, on the amendment, the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to rise on this, but now I feel compelled to based on the comments I've heard from the three members over there, most recently from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Through the course of the debate in talking about police forces, we have referred a number of times to incidents. I believe in most cases those were hypothetical incidents, for instances. For example, what if a policeman did this, or what if a complaints director did that? It's useful, of course, to use hypothetical examples and to underline a point for whatever reason we might do it.

But the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in her last speech brought forth a couple of examples that may not have been hypothetical incidents and said that there was a time we couldn't have imagined those happening and that now all of a sudden they're happening. I would pose the alternate to that, Mr. Speaker, in that it's possible there was a time that they were happening and we didn't know about it and, might I point out, that because of the legislative framework we already have in Alberta, we now know.

In those particular incidents, if that member was referring to particular incidents, there was a complaints process and officers were disciplined and charges were laid and heads rolled. They went through the process. That was proof of the system working, not proof of the declining state of our police forces in the province. Quite the opposite, I am intensely proud of the police forces and their conduct and, at least in part, of the oversight mechanisms that we have in place today, that strike what I think is the appropriate balance.

We have the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's pretty fair to say that I do not agree with the amendment, which would say that the bill is contrary to the public interest and will jeopardize access to justice, procedural fairness, and fundamental principles of natural justice. Clearly, I don't agree with that. I think it enhances an already solid complaints and police oversight system. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out a couple of examples of where it worked very well, and we get examples every day of where it worked very well.

It adds to an existing complaints process speedier disposition of complaints. I must say that contrary to a din of complaining about our oversight process, the only complaints I hear about are people wondering why it takes five years or more to get through a complaints process. I agree with that. Justice should be speedier than that. I think it's a system that will be speedy and will be seen to be fair as well as be fair, in reference to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments. It introduces a new, maybe emerging concept of alternate dispute resolution, which is very timely and will be very effective in this case.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood painted us as not being open to any amendments at all. I count three amendments that were passed by this House, only one of which was offered by myself, by the government party. Whether they're minor or not, two amendments were accepted over there. So the math is not quite right.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I'm clearly – very clearly – not in agreement with the amendment or the wording of what the opinion of this House would be. I just simply do not agree with it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in regard to the amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I have to get on the record that I don't support his amendment. I can tell you that having had the privilege of being the former Solicitor General from 2001 to 2004, I found it a great privilege to be able to serve and work with the police and peace officers in this province. I can tell you that 99 per cent of them do a very, very good job on behalf of the citizens of Alberta.

Like any other profession there are a few bad apples in the police force – very, very few. Even 1 per cent might be stretching it a little bit. I can tell you that over the recent years since I've been there, you can see how the police chiefs in this province are dealing with them. We have a complaint process in place. We have the Law Enforcement Review Board in place.

I truly, truly believe that the police officers and peace officers in this province do an incredible job under very, very difficult situations, so I want it on record that we will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Mr. Mason: I just wanted to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek if she feels that, you know, a good bill dealing with checks and balances with respect to police – that is to say, the ability of citizens to bring forward complaints of misconduct – that should be easily dismissed on a number of pretexts and, in particular, by a chief of police who might determine, as the act says, that the particular complaint is not serious: is that really the kind of limitations on justice for people who may have been mistreated that we want to see?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, in the time that I served, from 2001 to 2004, and from 2004 till 2010 under the current Solicitor General, I can only tell you that the police that I'm familiar with in this province and the chiefs – and I've been honoured to be able to keep in touch with them and know them very well – take seriously every complaint that they get. They look at it, they look at the complainant, and they look at the investigation of the police officer. Honestly, Member, I've never really seen anything that you may be saying.

There are some frivolous complaints, obviously, and those have to be dealt with, and the complaints that you're probably referring to are dealt with very seriously by the police chiefs. I'm sorry. I just support them.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'll just bring one example to the hon. member's attention. I think this was probably before she served as the Solicitor General. There was a case in which a police constable in the Edmonton police force, who happened to be the son of the chief, tasered a passed-out man named Randy Fryingpan multiple times while he was in a vehicle. That resulted in a complaint which was dismissed, and ultimately the complaint process completely broke down. There are other examples as well.

Obviously, most police officers are respectful and responsible members who carry the enormous powers that they're given on behalf of all of us very well. But when something occurs, then there needs to be a fair process. Simply saying, "Well, I know that all police chiefs are, you know, good guys or good gals, and they really wouldn't do something" doesn't fit the bill, as far as I'm concerned, with respect to what we need in this legislation.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate where he's coming from. I am aware of that incident, and I don't believe it was under my tenure. I can tell you that that was then, and this is now. The chiefs in this province have worked very, very hard, when you have incidents like that, to correct those incidents. We've had the previous Solicitor General from Calgary-Fish Creek, Calgary-Buffalo, and then it was, I think, Stony Plain, and now we've got the new Solicitor General.

That was a very rare incident. It was brought to the public. It obviously put some onus on the police chiefs in this province in that Albertans are not going to tolerate that. They want to see incidents like that dealt with. You now have the ASIRT team, that has been called in to deal with serious incidents if a police officer is involved. So while I appreciate the incident that you're using that I think was probably in the year 2000 – and I may be stretching my time – or even in '99, it's a good lesson. It was a lesson well learned by the police chiefs in this province. I think they can only get better and continue to do a good job on behalf of the citizens of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek a question. I believe that in her comments she said that this was a rare incident, where an issue like this was reported. By your comment are you saying that it's all right that it rarely happens? [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the amendment. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this has been a really interesting discussion tonight. If we look back to why this legislation has been introduced, we know that in this province we have had a very strong record of dealing with police discipline. One of the reasons that we've had that record is because of the close partnership between this government and chiefs of police across this province. There's always the opportunity, no matter what we're talking about, to find those incidents where there's been a problem. That's the nature of what happens in policing, in justice, sometimes in government in general.

Mr. Speaker, what legislation is supposed to do is to continually improve the process. What we know is that through the work that's been done by the Solicitor General in consultation with chiefs of police across this province, with police commissions across this province, with people that are at the moment working on this board, we are continuing to create a system that allows the public to have even greater confidence in police disciplinary measures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening we heard the Solicitor General refer to the fact that when particular incidents happen, we now have a system where the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team would be brought in or perhaps where criminal charges might be laid. What we have in this province is an entire umbrella of opportunities for members of the public to see the chiefs of police take the discipline of their officers very seriously. When we talk to people in communities across this province, they have confidence in their police officers. They have confidence in their chiefs of police. I think their chiefs of police take that confidence very seriously. It's one of the reasons that we're able to create a partnership where everyone can have confidence in what this legislation does and in what we're trying to achieve.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to offer a comment and a question to the hon. Minister of Justice. I want to quote from Justice Dixon in Gabrielson versus Hindle of 1987. The judgment says in part that police forces are given a very special niche in our society. They represent us in the protection of our property and our well-being from abuses and ravages of those who commit crime. They are given special powers and a corresponding standard of conduct is demanded of them. Police powers are to be used intelligently, fairly, and without rancour or favour.

I won't read the rest, but it concludes: "With all privileges," meaning privileges of the police, "go responsibility."

I really wonder if the Minister of Justice feels that it's enough to say that we have a wonderful relationship with our police chiefs and that our police chiefs are wonderful police chiefs and that they do a good job and that they take everything seriously and that, therefore, we can have a system of recourse for citizens who are not treated properly or legally by the police that is so full of loopholes and opportunities to dismiss legitimate complaints. Simply, the question is: do you really base law on that? Do you really say that we don't need, for example, to have laws against certain kinds of activity because, you know, we really trust the people that are involved not to do it? Does it not simply negate the whole basis of a legal system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not quite sure where the hon. member was when I was speaking, but that is not what I said. What I said is that we have a legislative framework in front of us that creates a system of laws that people in this province can have confidence in. Our whole foundation of democracy and public accountability is based on our legislation. We have a system where we introduce laws. We set out rules and expectations. We expect people to honour those laws. We do our very best as a Legislature, as we have done, to make sure that this covers exactly what it needs to cover. Ultimately, at the end of the day, as the hon. member referred to, if there are issues, they will go to court.

I am not for a moment suggesting that this is some hollow piece of work or that we don't need to have this legislation. We need this legislation. It's good legislation. One of the reasons we know it's good legislation, Mr. Speaker, is because we have consulted on this legislation. We have consulted with police officers, with members of the community, with stakeholders, with victims' groups. This is good legislation. It will stand up to the test. There are not loopholes in this legislation, and it should be passed.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, just a comment. It's beyond me that the minister thinks that there are no loopholes when the police chief can simply dismiss a complaint that he or she feels is unreasonable. That's absurd.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments?

Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 27 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Now, we go back to the bill, Bill 27, on third reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to move on behalf of my colleague the hon. MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona that third reading of Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010, be amended by deleting all words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010, be not now read a third time because the bill fails to provide for improved procedures for complaints concerning police officers and police services."

The Deputy Speaker: We'll pause for a moment to have the amendment distributed.

We have an amendment here. It's now known as amendment A2, and it is a reasoned amendment.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please continue.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of my comments from the previous reasoned amendment will apply as well to this one. This one is a little more specific, saying that we not read the bill at third reading because it "fails to provide for improved procedures for complaints concerning police officers and police services."

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to quote from a letter that was sent to the Minister of Justice by David G. Chow from the Calgary law firm Molle Roulston Chow. I'm just going to read a section of his comments with respect to the bill into the record because I think these are quite on point and probably a lot more eloquent than I could provide. Mr. Chow says:

I start from the proposition police are employed in a position of trust. Given police are equipped with weapons, special equipment, powers to interfere with a citizen's liberty through detention and arrest along with the authority to exercise tremendous discretion enforcing a seemingly endless sea of laws, there is perhaps no greater fiduciary [duty] than that owed by police to the citizens they serve . . .

With all the privileges [that police have], there must also be accountability.

Section 38(1) of the Police Act . . . recognizes the special role of police in our society. According to s. 38, every police officer has the authority, responsibility and duty to encourage and assist the community in preventing crime and to encourage and foster a cooperative relationship between the police and community. This cannot be merely a high sounding objective, it must be meaningful.

He goes on to say:

I fail to understand how legislation insulating police who abuse their authority from a citizen's complaint encourages and fosters cooperative relationships between the police and public. The very existence of an open, tolerant and reasonably flexible citizen's complaint process supplies a valuable safeguard against abuses by those acting in the line of duty. By significantly diminishing the ability of a complainant to lodge and/or maintain a grievance through a principled citizen's complaint process creates a reasonable apprehension that Government is prepared to protect law enforcement from having its excesses scrutinized by those empowered to defend the public interest.

The irony is Government exists to represent the public interest; yet the Alberta Government tables legislation which arguably offends its public interest mandate.

Why is the Alberta Government interested in insulating police from accountability?

Though the [Criminal Trial Lawyers Association] has succinctly and effectively expressed many of my concerns, I am compelled to add a few additional comments.

With respect to section 20 of the Police Amendment Act, 2010, it stipulates a wide range of circumstances whereby a complaint can be dismissed. An action can be dismissed if a complainant "fails to attend", "fails to answer questions", fails to produce an item required; is "unable" to participate, "refuses" to participate, fails to "follow processes" or fails to conduct himself or herself in an appropriate manner.

It does not take a particularly active imagination to envision a plethora of reasonable circumstances to justify any combination of "failures" that may now result in the dismissal of a complaint. By way of example, perhaps the complainant is remanded in custody? Perhaps the complainant has somehow been rendered incapacitated such that he or she cannot participate? What if the complainant has been incapacitated as a result of the actions of police? Perhaps the complainant is out of the country or cannot produce an item required due to an unfortunate event, such as fire, flood, theft or the seizure of materials by police who are the subject of the complaint? Perhaps the complainant has been accused by the police of a crime and must now exercise his or her Constitutional right to silence?

Though I could certainly compose a much more exhaustive list of examples, I think the point is made.

The fact that an action may be dismissed if a complainant fails to conduct himself in an appropriate manner is highly problematic; for there is no rational nexus between the conduct of a complainant in a proceeding and the alleged police conduct underlying the accusation. An unruly complainant may nevertheless have a highly legitimate grievance. To dismiss a justified grievance simply because a complainant somehow offends a Government tribunal, or falls into error adhering to process is antagonistic to the notion that the conduct underlying the complaint ought to be determined on the basis of all available evidence. In criminal law, courts consistently refuse to permit form to rule over substance; yet it appears the Alberta Government is prepared to protect law enforcement in precisely this manner.

Section 42

Section 42.1(1) unreasonably restricts the class of complainant. A complaint may now only be brought by a "person" who was the subject of the conduct complained of, an agent of a person who was the subject of the conduct complained of, or a person who was present at the time of the incident and witnessed the conduct complained of, or a person who was in a personal relationship with the subject of the conduct complained of and suffered loss, damage, distress, danger or inconvenience as a result of the conduct.

This class limitation unduly restricts other persons or organizations acting in the public interest from launching a justified grievance. There are many reasons why the subject of the conduct complained of may not complain. Perhaps the target of the police conduct is afraid to lodge a complaint? Perhaps the target is accused by police of a crime and due to the practical realities of criminal justice, will not file a grievance out of fear police will place undue pressure on Prosecutors to pursue conviction in an effort to protect themselves from sanction through the citizen's complaint process? Though I am certain you will dismiss the latter example, my experience suggests police interference is a legitimate concern.

Whatever the case, it is ironic that the legislation effectively prevents a myriad of public officials, who represent the public interest, from lodging a complaint on behalf of the people whom they serve.

By way of example, Government employs Crown Prosecutors to act in the public interest. What if a Prosecutor became aware of information justifying a hearing into police misconduct? By operation of s. 42.1(1), absent authority to act as an agent, Crown's are incapable of filing a grievance because they do not fit into the class of persons entitled to make a complaint. Similar logic applies to any number of other groups acting in the public interest. These groups include police and other law enforcement officials, civil liberties organizations, the CTLA, city Alderman, a Mayor or even the Attorney General of Alberta, the Solicitor General of Alberta or the Prime Minister of Canada. That the Prime Minister of Canada or the Minister of Justice of Alberta (or others) would have to obtain specific authorization to act as an agent for an aggrieved party in order to advance a public interest complaint is not only absurd, it is inconsistent with the function of public office.

In the words of the CTLA, "[t]here is no basis for this [amendment] other than to disenfranchise those who are powerless to complain or afraid or who otherwise will not complain".

Section 43

Section 43 stipulates that if a complainant refuses or fails to participate in an investigation the commission may dismiss the complaint. Though I appreciate dismissal due to non-participation is permissive, the amendment is nevertheless impractical and arguably draconian in scope. As aforementioned, there may be any number of justified reasons explaining a complainant's non-participation in the complaint process. What is troubling is that a complaint can be dismissed even where evidence demonstrates the grievance to be justified. This defies both logic and common sense.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to leave out some sections here as they don't pertain to the amendment specifically. The letter concludes:

At the end of the day, I question the Alberta Government's motive for the amendments. Politically, morally and legally, it is inconsistent to our purportedly free and democratic society to enact laws shielding law enforcement from accountability. This is what Bill 27: The Police Amendment Act 2010 accomplishes.

Though I [am] becoming more inclined to think our legal principles are little more than high sounding, yet empty and meaningless rhetoric, I nevertheless naively believe, as Ritter J stated in R v. Cornell, [2009] . . . that "Canada is not a Police State". When my Government proposes brazen laws such as Bill 27: The Police Amendment Act 2010, it becomes increasingly more difficult to hold fast to such naivety.

Mr. Speaker, I think that letter speaks volumes with respect to some of the specifics related to this bill. I completely concur with the author's contention that this is a bill designed to lessen the accountability of our police forces, and for the life of me I do not understand why this government is taking that direction. Given all of the difficulties that we've seen over the years in the public cases that have come to light, of which I've given only one example tonight, it really speaks to the importance of making sure that citizens and people acting in the public interest have access to an effective and flexible opportunity to bring police misconduct, where it does exist, to a satisfactory conclusion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A2. Please go ahead.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I, too, will speak to the amendment brought by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. He's brought up some very good points there. Most of those points relate to the fact that our police officers hold a very high and honoured position in our society. When they break their trust and when they overstep their bounds, there have to be rules and regulations in place where people can go to at least be heard and to have justice be done.

This act goes a long way in taking away some of those rights, in taking away the ability of people to get a fair hearing and a fair opportunity to be heard. The member did an excellent job of pointing out that sometimes in society things go off the rails, that there are bad things that happen even with an organization as honourable and well respected as the police. When that occurs, we have to be there to provide opportunities for civilian oversight, for the police to be held accountable. To have any ability for them to do their jobs, this is for their benefit as well. If people lose trust and faith in the police, they lose trust and faith in their government, and by extension they lose trust and faith in democracy. So that's why bills like these are important.

In my view, we are better off erring on the side of caution by allowing for more cases to be heard. I heard earlier that one of the things that the hon. minister heard in his travels was that, well, they wanted a case to be heard in quicker than five years. I agree that that's far too long. But the answer is not to make the process easier; it's to make the process better.

Either way, we need to then hire more people to do some investigative work. Give the LERB or other institutions the tools necessary to complete investigations inside of two years or less, to go forward and say, "We're going to invest in protecting the public," not simply ignore what is happening and say, "Let's try and get rid of a few malcontents" because it's easier. No. In my view, that's wrong. In some cases you can see where in the name of expediency and in the name of getting things done a little quicker, this government has cut corners. I believe this bill was brought in to cut corners and to not allow for people to be heard, to maybe keep some complaints down, for them to deal with the complaints process more quickly.

But that's not what this bill should be about. This bill should be about letting people be heard. That's why I agree that this is a bad bill that is going in the wrong direction in terms of civilian oversight and in terms of protecting our police officers, protecting the public confidence in our police officers. The police officers do, in turn, that service to us to allow for a democracy, to protect us from people who – there are some not very nice people in this world, and they do sometimes some horrible things, and we need the police to protect us from them.

That is all well and good, but at the same time we need an avenue where people can be heard, and this bill is taking away that avenue.

Given the importance of police, the importance of citizens wishing to be heard, I support this amendment and thank the hon. member for bringing it and would encourage all members to support it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 27 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We'll go back to the bill. Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any amendments or questions to be offered? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to have the opportunity to rise and speak in committee on Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I'm very frustrated by this bill because I as the Environment critic and my caucus do not object to carbon capture and storage or carbon capture sequestration per se, but we're very uncomfortable with this bill for a number of reasons. Let me just go through some of them.

The Minister of Energy in his opening remarks in second reading talked about how the International Energy Agency in their report from October of 2010, Carbon Capture and Storage: Legal and Regulatory Review – I'm sorry; I don't have the Hansard, so I don't have his exact remarks, but he gave me the impression that this was a stamp of approval from this agency. I asked him for a copy of the report, and he was kind enough to provide it for me immediately. Then, being the difficult gal that I am, I actually read it. You know what? It actually doesn't provide a stamp of approval. It's an arm's-length observation of how it has gone in different places.

I just want to quote from the article on page 9. This is talking about just generally gaining public acceptance. It's a little paragraph on how sometimes that's not as easy as it looks. They're using Germany as an example here.

Germany provides a striking example of the impact that public opposition can have on CCS regulatory frameworks. The German federal cabinet approved a draft CCS law in April 2009. Public consultations, which had begun before the cabinet's approval and continued with the German federal parliament into May, highlighted concerns over the risk of leakage, contamination of drinking water, safety and liability, and land rights. This led first to the inclusion in the draft law of a "sunset" clause, requiring the law to be reviewed in 2015, and then to the law being postponed until after the German federal elections in September 2009. The new government expressed its intention to implement the CCS law promptly in its coalition agreement of October 2009, but has acknowledged the importance of public acceptance. The draft law is [now] being amended to enhance the rights of site owners and emphasise that CCS must be technically proven before it is commercially applied.

Very interesting what someone a little bit ahead of us but not that far ahead of us has been going through.

I looked at what it had to say about Canada and Alberta. In fact, it talks about: "The federal government has the ability to regulate greenhouse gas emissions under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, 1999." Well, yeah, it could be read that way. It goes on to say that overall the government supports the approach to climate change through harmonization of climate and energy policies, particularly looking at the United States.

I looked for the section on Alberta, and it says, "Alberta has well-developed regulatory frameworks in the oil and gas sector that are applicable to CCS projects." Well, again, yes, but the government is actually having to enable itself to enter this. So we had previous legislation which set out the money part of it, and we have this bill in front of us, which is actually setting out how it would enable this to happen.

Then it talks about that the Alberta CCS Development Council, with members from industry, academia, and government, concluded in its March '09 report that the regulatory preparedness was well advanced, and then it makes a number of recommendations on how outstanding issues such as pore space ownership and long-term liability could be addressed. So this is actually a straight-across review of what's going on. It isn't a stamp of approval by any means. It just says that this is where it's at, not as the minister was, I believe, trying to get me to believe.

When we look at the particulars of the bill, the first time I spoke to this, I spoke about — one of the areas that I'm truly conflicted about is contained in this bill, and in fact I just referred to it because it's around the ownership of that pore space. This is where I'm conflicted because I have some problem with the government kind of swooping in and taking something that people had for a long time believed they owned, and no one had disabused them of that belief. Now, when it gets important and/or it has money attached, the government says: well, no, actually we're taking all of that. So this is specific to the pore space.

I do believe generally in as much as possible communal ownership of our natural resources. It also makes sense to me that we would share, that all Albertans would share in this ownership, and it wouldn't be owned by a few people who happen to be standing on the right spot of land at the right time in our history to be able to derive economic benefit for themselves only from this process. This is where I struggle with this, because I'm not really comfortable with just coming to somebody and saying: "You thought it was yours, but — ha, ha; guess what? — it's not. We're taking it."

On the other hand, this is a newly discovered source of revenue, it's a newly discovered source of energy, and that is something that should be shared. I'm not comfortable with the way this has been directed. I think I'd be more comfortable if it acknowledged some sort of expropriation and it acknowledged that that's, in effect, what it was doing or if there was some compensation. I admit that when you start looking at compensation, it could become overwhelming to the point where everything stalled. I do believe that CCS is a useful tool but one tool, not the whole darn thing.

What I keep seeing this government doing is: "No problem. Keep doing what you're doing. Business as usual. Drive your cars like crazy. Don't stop whatever you're doing now. Don't worry about conservation. Don't worry about alternative energy. We're not going to fund any of those things. But, hey, we've got this be-all and end-all where we're going to capture the carbon and stuff it underground. If we're really lucky and in the right place, we're actually going to use it for enhanced oil recovery. If we can get it stuffed down in the right place, it's going to get underneath the oil and push the oil up that we haven't been able to recover." I just think: hmm, that's not quite the way I'd like to go about things in Alberta.

I've thought about this quite a bit, and I think that supporting the bill demonstrates a support for some things that, again, I don't think are right and things that I'm struggling with accepting in this bill; that is, the government's decision to accept long-term liability, which is totally unknown in scope, on behalf of Albertans without acknowledging the amount of security that will be provided by the industry. The government said: well, in order to get industry involved in this and get them onboard, we're going to accept the long-term liability.

Well, that also means they're accepting risk for Albertans. I don't see any good explanations of how much risk or liability they think they're going to be accepting, just: come on down; we're going to accept it. I think this is where we as legislators have to be careful what we commit ourselves and what we commit future legislators to on behalf of the public. Because this is still fairly unknown, I'm not convinced that we won't be incurring a huge liability on behalf of current and future Albertans.

Let me go to the next stage of that. Based on the kinds of reclamation costs that we have seen thus far, I would argue that this government is never vigorous enough in setting out what kinds of money can be collected and put into a fund to pay for future reclamation. We have the example of how much Syncrude spent on its one acre of land called — no one around me remembers. They spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on that one acre of land. Yet the amount that they collect per acre from most involved in the industry is in the tens of dollars, not the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Right there we see a huge disparity between how much it actually costs today to reclaim land or to reposition it or to return it to something that's useful, however you want to describe that, versus in today's dollars how much we're collecting. There's a massive disparity there. Assuming that the government is going to keep operating the same way, we can expect that disparity to again show up in things like CCS and other kinds of resource development that they're involved with for any kind of reclamation or restoration.

Orphan wells is another one, and that's a perfect example of how stuff gets away from us. Again, it never occurred to people that companies would go bankrupt, they'd get bought, they'd get bought again, they'd split, they'd merge, they'd get bought again, and somewhere down the line everybody forgets where the wells were for, you know, company A now that you're in subsidiary M. They seem to have lost track of this. Now the liability is carried by Albertans to be able to reconstitute this. I just think it's very problematic, and I'm not willing to support that assumption that is in this act that the government should accept that long-term liability.

Secondly, the collection of the security that's meant to cover those costs of reclamation. What we're doing today is grossly insufficient, and I don't see a commitment to increasing that or to making it more reflective of the actual costs of reclamation. That's the second reason.

The third reason is the long-term costs associated with captured carbon. I've had this disagreement with people pretty close to me where I've said, "Oh, jeez; I still think it's unknown," and as soon as I said that, people jumped on me, saying: "No, it isn't. We've got something happening in Weyburn, Saskatchewan. We've got something in Texas. We've got something happening all over the place, and it's all great." But none of these have been operating for very long. I think the longest one we've got is 20 years or maybe 30, but lots of them are much less than that.

In going through this report, that the Minister of Energy was kind enough to give to me, from the International Energy Agency, a surprising number are passing legislation and starting to get into this now. The number of dates that show up as 2009, 2010, expected to pass legislation in 2011 as this review looks across the world is very high, and when you do find an older piece of legislation, it's like I referred to in the Canadian example. Well, yes, it's environmental protection law, which can be used in certain circumstances to apply to CCS.

The fourth example is the issue I talked about of the government's removal of landowner rights. The pore space is what we're talking about here. Doing it without any kind of compensation really rankles me.

Lastly and, I think, most important is the fact that this is enabling legislation that is a shell bill, so we're getting no details in here. Everything is about: it's being decided by the minister. It all comes back to the minister, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or whoever is empowered by the minister. Everything else is going into regs. I just think that with something this big, this new, and this important, it should be coming out of this Chamber, not out of a government cabinet discussion.

You know, the golden rule is very helpful here, Mr. Chair. I know it never crosses the minds of my hon. colleagues opposite that they would be sitting over here some day, but use that golden rule and think about how happy you folks over there would be if I got to make all of those decisions behind that same door over there. I don't think you'd be very happy about that. You'd be wanting it to be discussed in here and to be able to bring in the opinions of your constituents and to be able to hash it out on the floor here. I don't think you'd be too happy about me making those decisions behind that closed door over there, with you having no input. So the golden rule is very interesting to apply and see how it fits. I don't think that one would fit all that well with you.

Because of those issues – well, I'll be interested to see the rest of the debate on this particular bill, to see if anybody can convince me otherwise. To my mind, there are too many things stacking up against support of this bill and not enough stacking up in favour of supporting the concept of CCS. It doesn't mean that I don't support the concept, but I really have trouble with the implementation of it, the way this particular government is going about it with Bill 24. So I look forward to the give-and-take of the Committee of the Whole debate on this bill, and I will take my seat and look forward to the issues being brought forward by others.

Thank you.

9:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. On the bill at this point. This really is an important bill for Albertans. There's no question that this is one of those bills that the government has brought forward that's going to have long-term impact on Albertans, Alberta taxpayers, and on those people who own the land. This bill is about basically expropriating the rights of pore space from surface owners and saying: "Well, don't worry about it. Everything will be okay. We're going to take on the liability. It's nothing to concern yourself with." Everything in the world points to that there is a lot to be concerned about.

It's interesting that just this past month the Shell carbon capture project in Barendrecht, Holland, was cancelled even though 90 per cent of the cost was paid for by the Dutch government. The Dutch were giving a subsidy of $100 per tonne of carbon dioxide. My question would be for the Minister of Energy. Why are we giving a subsidy of nearly $850 per tonne of carbon dioxide? The math doesn't add up. The carbon capture math of this government is drastically different than the math of other countries. Holland was offering that $100 a tonne subsidy, which paid for 90 per cent of the project. Why is this government paying $856 per tonne for the project here? Shell is a leader in marketing carbon capture and storage projects around the world. Why would this government offer eight and a half times what the Dutch government offered and almost eight times the cost of the project that they're working on?

This government is giving to a few companies interested in the carbon capture rather than to a level playing field. But carbon capture projects are being killed around the world and could derail CCS entirely. The citizens of Holland, Germany, and the United States are speaking out against CCS. To the Minister of Energy again: why would we be expediting this bill through the House when the science is definitely not proven? The citizens around the world are speaking out, and the giving of a gift of $850 per tonne to a few chosen companies is very concerning.

The Chicago Climate Exchange will be closing its doors on November – well, I think it did a couple of weeks ago. Again, we have to ask: what's happening here? We've been talking about climate change. This government has said that this is our solution to climate change and those people that are speaking out against it. But, boy, in the last year, since the Copenhagen accord, things have really changed.

I'd like to read an article from the National Post by Adrian MacNair on the 26th of November, 2010. He talks about three kinds of people on the Internet that you don't want to have a conversation with. He says:

The last – and in my opinion the most fervent – believers are those who worship at the altar of anthropogenic global warming. These people are so obsessed with their cause you get the sense they would imprison unbelievers if they had the power. And that's certainly been suggested by some of the high priests.

Otherwise likeable, ordinary folks can turn suddenly pretentious and indignant if you so much as joke that a cold snap in Vancouver means global warming went on vacation. This is an affront to their very belief system, and they will quickly remind you that global warming can result in more snow and cold just as readily as it can result in more drought, desertification, sand storms, windstorms, pine beetles, floods, forest fires, and earthquakes.

It isn't that I'm surprised anyone would believe in man-made climate change. It's a readily accepted theory by a majority of people and the scientific community. I would, however, caution that we continue to use the word theory in discussing the topic.

"I don't believe in global warming, I believe in the facts," the zealot will pontificate proudly.

Well, sure, but that depends on what sort of facts you're presenting. It's difficult for a lot of people to believe the hype about global warming when scientists consistently get their predictions wrong. And sometimes the scientific community doesn't just get it wrong; they don't even come close.

Scientists had been warning for years about the extinction of salmon in British Columbia. In 2007 senior fisheries biologists in Ireland predicted pink salmon stocks on the mid-coast could soon be expected to collapse into localized extinction because of sea lice infestations.

This year 34 million salmon returned to the Fraser River for spawning, turning science on its head and leaving the prognosticators running for their labs. Experts who had predicted 1.5 million salmon or less were left more than a little puzzled.

It's now suggested many of the salmon extinction reports were spread by activists hoping to damage the concept of B.C. salmon farms for moralistic reasons rather than scientific ones.

The green fundamentalists who call for an immediate restructuring of post-industrialized civilization to cater to their theories are absurd individuals. They will shun you for disagreement, and even blacklist you for the audacity of unbelieving. I have met more humourless, fanatical, devoted environmentalist demagogues than I have of the religious equivalent.

Curiously, the punishment they promise unbelievers is death by flood, drought or starvation. It's like reading the book of Revelation.

The best thing to do when somebody goes on about the Armageddon is to smile, nod approvingly, and change the subject. Otherwise you risk the possibility of being called a heretic and burned at the metaphorical stake.

I have a live and let live attitude. If you want to believe that glacial meltwater spells the doom of the planet, so be it. Just don't force me to wear the uniform and march in the parades with you.

That was by Adrian MacNair, a very interesting article in the National Post.

Mr. Chair, there are a lot of questions right now. What's happened, again, in the last year with the facts that have come to light is rather scary when we look at what's been presented in the past and what we currently have before us in this bill, again declaring that if we don't do something right away, the glaciers are going to melt, the sea waters are going to come up, and the world as we know it is going to come to an end.

It's interesting, again, when we look at what's happened. England is a classic place that we can look at because they've been working quite diligently on this. Their leader over there said that they were going to do something about it. They were going to spend a lot of money. That's starting to fall apart over there. The people are starting to realize, you know: how much can we afford to spend on that?

I'm just trying to find the data on England. I think it was a hundred billion dollars. Here it is. The IPCC is the United Nations body that in 1995 allowed a single activist scientist, Ben Santer, to rewrite part of the key chapter 8 of the second assessment report, Detection of Climate Change and Attribution of Causes, in alarmist terms, changing a previous wording that had been agreed to among the other scientific authors. The rewriting was undertaken in order to make the chapter agree with politically contrived statements in the influential summary of the policy-makers – garbage in, garbage out – applied to computer modelling endeavors, applied to the economic studies that purport to give policy advice against the threat of future climate change.

How effective? According to the article in the Times of London, September 30, 2008, the U.K.'s plans to cut carbon emissions by 20 per cent by 2020 would reduce the world's temperature in 2100 by four ten-thousandths of a degree centigrade. Now, one might argue that it's still worth while. If everyone in the world did it, that might add up to something. But here's the number you need to begin your additions with. This plan is expected to cost as much as £100 billion.

Mr. Chair, as we look at this project and what they're trying to accomplish with Bill 24 and the $2 billion that the government has put into carbon capture and storage, we find that it's an immense expense. The question is: how much good are we going to get out of it? I mean, earlier the opposition members talked about that by 2015 we'll be storing five megatonnes. According to their statistics and many other researchers in 2005 there were 240 megatonnes of emission. That means that we will store a total of 2 per cent of the emissions if everything goes as planned.

I have to say that I'm not impressed with the payout and the tremendous expenditure of taxpayers' dollars. I am a little bit curious about how many emissions will be created by the storage process. I've talked about that before and the fact that many of those emissions that we can't capture and store come from vehicles. Even on a provincial scale the amount that will be stored is not that impressive considering what else we could do with this money. What's even more humbling is the amount that we think about, the increases, coming out of growing economies like Asia.

But we're hardly alone in pursuing expensive projects for the sake of greenwashing our government's record. Again, I referred to England and to Europe, the money that they're spending there, and a little bit about the Royal Dutch and what they're trying to do in Rotterdam. It's interesting when you look at that because Royal Dutch Shell really has been the leader around the world in carbon capture and storage.

I just want to go a little sideways here for a minute. We're talking here about carbon capture and storage.

Ms Blakeman: A minute?

Mr. Hinman: Well, then I'll come back.

Ms Blakeman: You were going sideways for . . .

Mr. Hinman: For 11 minutes, 32 seconds.

Ms Blakeman: That would be right.

Mr. Hinman: CCS is a long way from the government's hope of recapturing – I can't remember what they were saying. Is it a hundred billion dollars in oil, they think? Or is it $10 billion? What did they say in this project? I think a hundred billion. The point they talk about, though, is enhanced oil recovery, which is very different than carbon capture and storage and how much we can put in. Often many members refer to the Weyburn enhanced oil recovery, and that's very different, where they actually have a very metered effect on how much CO₂ they're putting into the fields to flood that to enhance the oil recovery. The two projects often seem to get combined into one, that it's the same, and it isn't. Carbon storage is extremely different than enhanced oil recovery.

It's interesting. If, in fact, enhanced oil recovery is cost-effective, we would never need to subsidize any of these oil and gas companies because they'd look at the cost of injecting the compressed CO₂ versus the recovery. The government talks about the huge multiplication factor and how much money they're going to make. Well, if they're making that, whether it's a 30 per cent royalty – I'm not sure where it's going to be in the future – well, then, that would have to relate to corporations that are making huge profits.

Mr. Mason: Profit is not a dirty word.

Mr. Hinman: That is correct, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, profit is not a dirty word. That's what makes the free world function. We can do our philanthropy for those areas of the world that have dictatorships and other tyrannical leaders that are suppressing the people there and their rights.

It's interesting, to go back now to Rotterdam, that the residents and the town officials are opposing the plan, citing safety concerns and the project's experimental nature. An independent panel appointed by the national and provincial governments to assess the project said in April of last year that the plan sufficiently addressed safety concerns. The bill, again, doesn't. The people rose up there, and that now has been cancelled in an area that has been leading the world. Again, that was carbon capture and storage.

A major concern is and will continue to be: will this really remain stored under the ground with no worries? Most places in the world now are saying: "Well, gosh. If we're going to have to take on the liability, I'm not sure I want to do this." The sad part about this bill is that it's about confiscating the land of Albertans to pump CO₂ under their houses or their property. How is this kind of story going to reassure them? The fact of the matter is that when that CO₂ gets down into the storage facilities, if it comes in contact with water, it becomes an acid and starts to eat away at the cavity in which it's being stored. There are just many, many comments that have been discussed. Again, we don't know what the long-term effect is there.

It's interesting that Bill 24 talks about: oh, this storage is permanent. I think it's anything but permanent. It's just got so many questions and concerns for Albertans other than the economical ones. We need to really address and ask those questions. One of the points that this bill addresses, and whether properly or not is why we're debating this, is the clarification over ownership of the pore space in which the sequestered carbon dioxide is injected. It's just our case that this is wrong for the government to confiscate this and say: don't worry; everything will be okay.

Allocation of long-term liability for the intended permanent sequestration of CO₂, again, the intended permanent sequestration. Who is going to have the long-term liability? Again it's going to be the taxpayers here. Does it address the disappearing corporation and the creation of a postclosure stewardship fund? You know, we've got the orphaned well fund. Many people will argue that it doesn't even come close to the actual cost of if we were to clean up all the orphaned wells. What kind of a cost and how dangerous would it be to in fact put this into the ground and then wonder: well, what's the cost when the first leak appears? What's going to be the cost? What can happen? We know that death is certainly imminent if you're around and you get a blanket of CO₂ hugging the earth's surface where you're trying to live.

Mr. Chair, there are just so many concerns that need to be addressed in this bill and, again, questions that haven't been answered. That's probably the biggest disappointment that I've had in this government in the time that they've looked at this. What I would consider the duty of the government and the Energy minister is to actually produce the research papers, the reasons why, the cost-effectiveness, the economic cases of all of these things to say: look; this is where we expected to go. Yes, there are numerous reports, and there have been lots of studies done on this, but they're not complete. They usually actually end up creating more questions than answers that we need to look at.

I talked earlier about and I'll repeat it again because one kind of forgets all the studying and the notes done versus what we've presented here in the House but that we really want to look at cleaning up our atmosphere and the pollution – you know, the SO_x, the NO_x, and VOCs, the volatile organic compounds – that we know without a doubt the problems that these substances create when they're put into our atmosphere. We know currently that there is a huge spread, I guess I want to say, on what we're releasing into our atmosphere if we run combined-cycle natural gas generation versus the old coal plants that we have going here in the province, that are currently producing 60 per cent of the electricity in the province. We should be looking at major ways of cleaning up our industrial plants rather than looking at a small area where we're going to spend billions of dollars and not know if we're going to make a change in the temperature in the earth of less than four ten-thousandths of a degree in the next 50 years.

When we look at the balance on many of these things, we fail to ask the real question: is this the wisest and best place to spend taxpayers' money? It just seems like we're blinded by that, that that isn't something to even consider, that all we need to do is push ahead and say that we're going to capture all of the CO₂ when, in fact, we're not able to do that, and to act like: "Well, now we're the heroes here. Look how much money we're spending." And bragging about it. This government is notorious for bragging about how much money they're spending on hospitals, the new beds they're building, how many miles of roads they're building, overpasses they're building, but they fail to ask the question: are we getting value for our money?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm always fascinated by the speeches of the hon. members for Calgary-Glenmore and Airdrie-Chestermere when it comes to the question of climate change. You know, I think it's an alternate world view, and in the past I have called it akin to the Flat Earth Society. But there were three breathtaking logical lapses in the hon. member's last comments which I want to address. Then I'm going to introduce an amendment because I agree with them that this is a pretty bad bill, and we need to oppose it.

The first one is that because you call something a theory that it isn't proven, and that's not necessarily the case. If he doubts, for example, the theory of gravity, I would invite him to take a step off a very tall building and see if, in fact, the theory of gravity is merely a theory because it's called a theory, that it's not necessarily true. This argument is often used to counteract or argue against the theory of evolution as if it was not essentially true and proven because it's still called a theory. Science has a couple of meanings for theories. One is an untested hypothesis, and the other is a body of well-formulated and proven ideas that explain in a very reliable way certain phenomena.

He's also argued that because science can be wrong and scientists can be wrong, we therefore cannot accept scientific advice or scientific predictions. He used, for example, some misses in terms of predictions for the salmon run on the west coast. It is logically not correct that because science can be wrong, it therefore is completely unreliable and we can't depend on it. Certainly, in this case I think there is plenty of good science to indicate that the theory of climate change is correct, that it is caused by human activity primarily. I think the consensus among scientists is overwhelming.

The third point I'd like to make is – and I don't want anyone to interpret this as an argument in support of this bill or this carbon capture and storage project – the sense that because something has a very small, incremental impact that it's not worth doing. That has to be measured against the impact of not doing something. In this particular case it means, essentially, the deaths in future generations of billions of people and perhaps unforeseen consequences in terms of that.

Certainly, the glaciers are melting. Not universally but in almost all places, certainly in Canada, glaciers are melting very quickly. I invite the hon. member to pay a visit to the Columbia Icefield, between Jasper and Banff. When I was a small boy, my family visited that. I can see how much that glacier, one of the major glaciers in the Rocky Mountains, has receded just in the time between when I was a small boy and today. I know that's a long time, but in geological history it's a fraction of a second. You can see relentless loss. In fact, I think the hon. member's riding is on the Bow or the Elbow River, which is glacier fed, and the glacier, I believe, that feeds the Bow River has a life expectancy due to climate change measured in a very small number of decades. Then there are going to be some serious water shortages in southern Alberta. The glacier that feeds the North Saskatchewan River has, I think, somewhat less than a hundred years left before it's gone, and the North Saskatchewan River will then become a seasonal river, with very low flows except in the spring. These impacts are very severe.

The question, though, is whether carbon capture and storage is the right way to go, and I don't think it is, Mr. Chairman, because you're not really getting at the problem. I have put my views on the record a number of times with respect to that.

As much as I enjoy all of my colleagues' company, it's not my intention to do so for six or eight hours from this point, so I would like to put my amendment on the floor so that we can debate it, and I can go home. This has to do with the information that you're allowed to have as a result of the application of this act. As it now stands, information required under this act – that is, reports that are required to be filed with the government – are not FOIPable, and the people don't have access to it. Now, this is a small point, but I believe that people should have access to information, and it should not be exempted.

I'm going to move on behalf of my hon. colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 2(18) by adding the following after the proposed section 114:

114.1 Notwithstanding section 50 of this Act, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act applies to a record or other information collected or generated under this Part.

I'll provide that to the table.

The Chair: We'll pause for a moment for the amendment to be distributed.

This amendment is now known as amendment A2.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Well, the amendment is that we amend the act in section 2(18) by adding the following, numbered 114.1, under the proposed section 114: "Notwithstanding section 50 of this Act, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act applies to a record or other information collected or generated under this Part."

The purpose of the amendment is to ensure that certain reports filed by lessees could be obtained through a freedom of information request. Section 50 of the Mines and Minerals Act exempts most information obtained under that act from the FOIP Act.

This amendment would add to section 2(18) of the bill, which begins on page 10 and continues to page 18; 2(18) would add part 9, entitled Sequestration of Captured Carbon Dioxide, to the act. Within that part lessees involved in CCS projects are required to file a number of reports with the government, reports which would not be available to the public through FOIP. These reports are under the proposed section 115(3)(a) on page 11. A lessee who has entered into an agreement to drill an evaluation well shall "submit a monitoring, measurement and verification plan."

Similarly, in the proposed section 116(3)(a) a lessee who has entered into an agreement to sequester carbon would be required to submit the same type of plan.

Finally, lessees would be required under the proposed section 120 to submit an application for a closure certificate.

Mr. Chairman, I will argue that there is a clear public interest in knowing the particulars of plans dealing with CCS projects. Members of the public should be able to make a request for access to such plans under the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and I would urge all hon. members to support this amendment so that that goal can be accomplished.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A2.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I think this is a good amendment because from the reading I've done, public buy-in, public trust, is a big part of the success of this.

I actually would have said that they're just supposed to post it or put it online. I don't know why we always allow stuff to be hidden, and then we allow for a FOIP to be put in place. It's just faster and cheaper if we just put it online, where people can go and see it for themselves. I mean, what's the big secret here? If this is a good system and it works, post it.

At the very least allow for members of the media, members of the opposition, members of the public, members of the industry to be able to apply through freedom of information and protection of privacy to get some of these plans so they could see exactly what was happening with the monitoring, measurement, and verification plan or that the plan, in fact, had been approved or that the reports that were expected for monitoring, measurement, and verification had been submitted or that the work requirements had fulfilled the agreement.

That's all perfectly reasonable, and that's what appears under this bill's section 2(18) under the sequestration of captured carbon dioxide, part 9. It appears between definition sections 114 and 115.

If you go on, section 116 is talking about agreements that grant the right to inject this, and the lessee of an agreement shall obtain a well licence and should in accordance with the regulations submit monitoring, measurement, and verification plans. They have to comply with these plans that have been approved. They have to provide reports. They have to fulfill the work requirements. It's the same checklist that appears in each case and, again, under section 120, which is the closure certificate, showing that they have complied with the requirements there. All of that should be readily available. Again, I would argue it should all be posted on the website, but at the very least it should be available through FOIP so that anybody can see what's going on here.

You know, having just gone through a review of the FOIP Act, one of the excuses that's used for not giving people faster, better information is that it's onerous for the group to try and find that information. One of my suggestions was: "Well, make it easier to post it on the website, and then everyone could see it, and it doesn't cost you any money to go looking in the boxes in the basement for it."

Yeah, I'll happily support this amendment. I think it's a good one, and it's certainly doable. It's all about transparency and accountability, and it allows the public to go searching themselves and finding out how things are going with these implementation plans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: On amendment A2, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I would like to speak in favour of A2 as well. I'm not sure; I think that perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is the one that's stuck on the flat earth, but that's all a perspective view. When it comes to openness, accountability, and transparency, I think that we can agree that it's essential for a free society to have freedom and access to that information. It's a concern, especially when this is such an unknown.

The monitoring of what's happening needs to be there, Mr. Chair. What causes the problem is when people can hide the fact of whether there has been a leak or whatever is going on, where the trust of the people in a government is lost. It just makes good sense in a democracy to ensure that the people are informed and have access to all this information.

I would have to agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I would even have to agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre in that it should just be publicly posted. We shouldn't have to be filing for information all the time. She rightly mentioned – and I believe she sat on that committee – that the privacy act is overwhelming. They extended the time that the Privacy Commissioner can react from 90 days, I think, to a year because they can't get the information that's being requested out quick enough. We don't want to continue adding to that problem and costing more money to hire individuals to be retrieving this information to produce it for reporters, opposition, the public at large.

Mr. Chair, I hope that the government will accept this amendment so that we can ensure that the public and all the people of Alberta are able to follow and see the results and what's happening with CCS if, in fact, the projects go ahead.

The Chair: On the amendment, any other hon. member? The hon. Minister of Energy on the amendment.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to get involved in the debate on this amendment because I don't want to drag it out any longer than I have to. By the member's own admission he wanted to speed up the process so he could go home. I'm disappointed that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood won't be around for the remainder of the debate on this bill if that's what, in fact, he is proposing to do.

I would encourage the Assembly to not approve this amendment, Mr. Chairman. There are a couple of things that are being asked for here. We have to remember that this legislation before the House today is enabling legislation that in all cases involves a partnership with the private sector. These are projects that require technology that may be very much proprietary to the participants and the partners in these projects.

We have made it very clear that there are a number of routes that we will undertake to ensure that the progress on these projects is well defined for the public and for members of this Assembly. There is no need to establish this in legislation.

With those few words, Mr. Chairman, I would encourage the Assembly to defeat this motion and grant the member his wish that he can go home.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just on that, to the minister: is it not the case that proprietary information is already exempt under provisions in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, that may very well be the case. As I said, we will be more than happy to ensure that the information of government will be provided.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm always delighted when the Minister of Energy engages in the discussion. I always find him quite knowledgeable about his area and certainly lively.

Where exactly in the sections that have been talked about covered by FOIP would the proprietary part come out? When we talked about the lessee of an agreement under section 116, "submit a monitoring, measurement and verification plan for approval," where in there would be the proprietary information exactly? So you submit, you comply with, and you provide reports on a monitoring measurement and verification plan. Where in there, exactly, would you be giving away proprietary information?

The other section where this came up was around well licences and approval of the board under the Oil and Gas Conservation Act prior to drilling or using a well for the purposes of this section. Again, the lessee, in accordance with the regs, is to submit, comply with, and provide reports on monitoring measurement and verification plans.

The final section that was covered by the request was under section 120. This is a closure certificate showing that the lessee has complied with section 119, which is cessation of injection, that they've complied with the reclamation requirements, and that all abandoned wells and facilities have been done in accordance with the requirements. Then we get into the closure period and the conditions specified in the regs and that it's behaving in a stable and predictable manner. So where in those three sections would you be giving away proprietary information?

Second to that, you know, one of the things I've learned since I came here is that there's a difference between the process and the ingredients; for example, what is used in the fracking substance that's injected. In the States they require you to say what's in it but not the recipe, how the components are mixed. Fair enough. At least you know. You can read and see whether they used diesel oil or not. But you don't know – that's like saying, "Here are the ingredients to Kentucky Fried Chicken," but it doesn't tell you how to mix it, in what proportion, so you're not going to end up with the same recipe. That's the second piece of this. If the minister objects to this on the grounds that it's going to interfere with proprietary information, where in here is the proprietary? Secondly, who's to say that the proprietary information can't be given in a way that gives us the information we need without jeopardizing their actual recipe? If I can use that wording.

Thank you.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A2.

Mr. Hinman: I guess I'd just like to get up and speak once more because I was disappointed to hear the Energy minister say, "Let's just go to the question," rather than answering the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

This isn't a problem about proprietary information. This is the government again not doing its due diligence in producing legislation that ensures the safety of Albertans in the storage of CO₂. This is the crux of the problem with this bill in that we don't know what it's going to do. We need to monitor those facilities, and it needs to be public. I would sure like the minister to get up and answer the question on proprietary information because that was not the intent of or what is going to be affected by this amendment. I would hope that they could come up with a plausible explanation rather than "Let's just vote on the question" so that everybody can say yea and not think about it anymore.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We shall now go to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Back on the bill and the multiple problems of this bill again, I guess, to address a few of the concerns of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood before he leaves, this is very much the untested hypothesis that we're talking about on CCS. I need to ensure that you realize that. The astuteness of the member to say that the glaciers have been melting in his lifetime – I think almost everybody in this House realizes that the entire province, down to the southern region, was covered with a glacier and that for millions of years it's been receding. That isn't some new science that realizes: oh, my goodness, it's been receding. I mean, it's been doing it for millions of years, and we're at that far end of the cycle. In the '70s – I know the hon. member is old enough to remember the '70s – we actually thought the glacial period was turning around and we were going to be covered in ice again. Those scientists at that point had their hypothesis that this was the dilemma we were in.

So it is an unsettled science. As much as I read in the National Post article where Adrian very much is concerned about the zealots on this and the ability to challenge, there have been more and more scientists who have come out and spoken out against the problems of just reacting to this in a simplified manner and saying: oh, no, it's anthropogenic. The climate is changing; there is no denial of that. The Earth has gone through constant change in climate.

I spoke last time about the 900 million year chart of the Earth and how it goes through a cycle every 150 million years. It's been well documented in the cycles that go on here on this Earth inside the Milky Way Galaxy, so it's just ridiculous to think that all of those other things have no consequence anymore and that it's just the anthropogenic CO₂ that's coming out.

What we really need to be doing here – and again this is a dilemma with the bills that this government continues to bring forward. They're ill conceived, they're poorly thought out, and they don't look at the long-term consequences. You can go through bill after bill that this government's been passing. They are not in the best state that they should be, or perhaps more importantly, most of these bills should not even be in front of the House to be passed in this fall session.

It's very disappointing that this bill wasn't brought forward in the spring for Albertans to have a longer time to address it. But at this time, because there is very little question that this government is pushing this through, what we'll try and do is amend a bad bill that is not going to protect Albertans or the future and at least start by correcting some of the terminology and the problems with this bill.

I would like to propose an amendment at this time to Bill 24.

The Chair: We shall now pause for a brief moment while the pages distribute the amendment. The amendment is now known as amendment A3.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I propose that the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 2(2)(c) in the proposed clause (y.1) by striking out "permanent" and substituting "long-term."

In here it says that sequestration means permanent disposal. That simply isn't true. I mean, even going back a year and a half ago, in The Economist – I can't remember whether it was March or April – they talked about a 100-year lifespan of many of these storage facilities, and they estimated that 60 per cent of the CO₂ will have escaped within the next hundred years. I think that that's quite striking, to think that we would spend that much money for possibly a 60-year cycle. The point is that there are very few things that are permanent when it comes to building or containing or storing.

That's one of the problems with the nuclear industry. How do we permanently store the nuclear waste? There has been lots of debate about this, and now we're looking at declaring that we're permanently storing the CO₂. Mr. Chair, it's just one in a long list of problems with this. The question is: is there such a thing as permanent storage for CO₂? Are these caverns beneath Alberta, in the pore spaces that we have, a facility that we could possibly call permanent storage?

I think at this point I'll sit down and, hopefully, listen to the Energy minister and see if his response is amiable or whether he's opposed to this as well, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wish to join in the debate on amendment A3?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I won't disappoint the hon. member. What's very clear in this bill, Mr. Chairman, is that it is the intention of this government. We are not skeptics, like those who sit in that end of the Chamber, who believe that somehow this storage is going to be leaking in 60 years. We believe it is permanent, and that's what it should say in the legislation. Members should defeat this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on amendment A3.

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just looking to see if anyone is saying anything over there now. They're pretty quiet. The Minister of Energy just simply said "skeptics." He's a politician, not a scientist. Clearly, we are not skeptics; we are pragmatists. We believe in what we're listening to and what we're hearing from our constituents. I'm proud to say, unlike the Minister of Energy, who can't say it, that my constituency is the oil sands capital of the world. In fact, I'd encourage him to visit. Maybe he can learn something from what's going on there. Actually, I have to credit the member because he did come. During the petroleum trade show he did come out for an hour or two. I guess that was good if you like an hour or two.

Having said that, I want to say that we are not skeptics. We are practical, we are pragmatists, and we believe in Mother Earth. We listen to our constituents. Mother Earth, by the way, was created by the Creator, believe it or not. Mr. Chairman, we are not skeptics. Contrary to what was being suggested by the Minister of Energy, nothing could be further from the truth.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A3.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I find it really funny whenever a cabinet minister gets up and says, "we believe." Like, all 67 in lockstep: we believe. It really is like a little church group over there; it's really quite something. I would hope, in fact I know, that there are many people over on that side that are very much skeptical of the debate, so for this minister to put words in the mouths of other members by saying “we believe” is really quite rich, as scientifically gifted as the member is, of course.

I know this is going to be a foreign concept for the minister, but in the Wildrose we have free speech and free votes and the ability to think freely. We actually have many different viewpoints in the Wildrose. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has a viewpoint. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has a different viewpoint on this issue, as does the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, as do I.

For example, I would describe the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore as truly a skeptic of the science. I would say that I am much more open to the idea. I think that there is a case to be made that carbon dioxide is affecting the planet's temperature. However, I do feel that there is a very robust debate going on as to the extent of that effect and as to whether the things that we are doing here in the province of Alberta, in Canada, even in North America will have any material effect whatsoever on curbing greenhouse gas emissions.

Now, I hope that doesn't make me a member of the Flat Earth Society because there really are a lot of smart people that – you know, some of those smart people are in the U.K. Royal Society. They just released a really good report if you have a chance. Obviously, it's one group of scientists' viewpoint, and those change. The IPCC has a different viewpoint, and there are other groups that have different viewpoints.

Obviously, the Royal Society is a very respected scientific organization in the world, and they've kind of gone through and they've said: okay; here's the science, with all of the media reports and all of the faulty reports, frankly, that have come out of the United Nations on climate change – it's not all aspects but some aspects – and all the debate about the e-mail, climategate as it's called, where there were obviously some untoward things going on, at least at that university, one of the foremost universities on climate change, East Anglia.

The Chair: Hon. member, may I just draw to your attention that this is Committee of the Whole? We talk about details of the bill, and there's an amendment here.

Mr. Anderson: Why do you always – man, I was just getting revved up. This is good stuff here.

Well, anyway, on the amendment, we're talking about permanent versus long term. Unless we have an understanding, why would we want to permanently store something that may not be hurting the planet? I want to go back. That's where the relevance is. I want to make sure that there's an understanding of where my viewpoint is, whether there's any need to have permanent storage, whether this is, in fact, a harmful gas.

Going back to what I was saying, you have the Royal Society, that has this literature, and it actually goes through and says: here's where the science is clearly settled, and then here's where it's generally settled but where there is some debate as to extent, et cetera, and then here's where science is completely unsettled on climate change. It's a great document, and I think that, absolutely, the Minister of Environment should definitely read it. But there are a lot of areas where we need to learn more.

I hope that we don't fall into the trap in this Assembly of trying to pigeonhole people into certain belief systems, which is clearly not true and clearly disingenuous. I think everyone should account for how they feel personally about a subject or what their studies have shown them. You know, I really enjoy this subject. I enjoy learning more about it. I enjoy all the different viewpoints on it.

One of the things that is very uncertain according to the Royal Society is the extent to which global warming is happening. I believe it is occurring. I do believe that man is one of the causes of it, but the extent is extremely uncertain. That's, actually, in both the IPCC report as well as in the Royal Society report. They give the thing where they predict that in the next 100 years because of global warming it will increase anywhere from 1.5 degrees to seven degrees Celsius. I mean, that's a huge, absolutely monstrous variation, that shows just how unsettled the science is around that issue. They say that in the next 20 years it's likely to be anywhere from 0.2 to 0.4 degrees Celsius, and then it will speed up after that. I mean, they're the scientists. I'm not. I'm just reading what they put in front of me. That's all I can do.

As a politician and as someone who has to sit in the House and try to contribute to decisions made by this House, I feel that it's important that we get a little bit of control and start thinking a little bit more clearly about what we are talking about here. We're not talking about a science that is totally settled. There are a lot of different questions. Before we jump into the arena and before we start using words like “permanent” and so forth, before we start spending massive amounts of money and so forth on something like this, I think we should really start thinking about: is this the right use of taxpayer money, or are we completely overcorrecting or going down the wrong path, doing something for no reason just to be seen to be doing something?

If you think about it, if the variation is 1.5 to seven degrees over the next hundred years and Alberta is responsible for 0.01 per cent or something like that of the Earth's greenhouse gas emissions and with China doing what they're doing, just throwing massive amounts of coal plants on, and India and everyone else, the emissions are just going through the roof. Why are we spending such an exorbitant amount of money on a technology that may not even work on the scale that this government is saying that it can be used for? Why are we taking on all these costs?

I would say that I think what's more important is that we use our time to think about ways we can cut greenhouse gas emissions and do so in ways that won't just cut greenhouse gas emissions but also will cut other pollutants as well, NOx and SOx and particulates of all kinds, all kinds of things that we should be looking towards, and I don't see this as being a way of doing it, certainly not an economic way.

If we're going to spend $2 billion on this permanent solution, as it says in the amendment here, I guess I would ask: why don't we spend it on something that's actually going to help the province economically and help the individual person in society in our province to, you know, be more productive and to have more utility; for example, mass transit? There is a way we can cut greenhouse gas emissions. We can cut other emissions. We can unclog roads. We can accomplish different things with that. Incentives for retrofitting our houses to be more energy efficient, to use less electricity and natural gas: these are common-sense solutions. I think that the money that we're spending on this would be far better spent on the things that I mentioned rather than pumping CO₂ into the ground. I think that's a gross misuse of taxpayer funds, and it's a bit of a pipe dream.

The funny thing is that even if we capture every last particle of carbon, it isn't going to make a lick of difference in stopping the 1.5 to seven degree greenhouse gas that is happening. Until China and India, those guys, get on board, it ain't going to work. People say: we'll make the technology here, and then we'll expand it to China. I don't know. I mean, it just will not happen. It will not happen unless it's economically viable because that's how the world works, and economically viable is enhanced oil recovery.

From the amendment, Mr. Chair, using some of this permanent CO₂, to pump it underneath there and get the oil out of the ground: well, if that is economic, great. Then companies should be able to afford to do it by themselves. They don't need a grant from the government. If it's economic, great. They can do that, and they can recover it and all that sort of thing. But if it's not economical, which this isn't, which is why we need to provide a big granting program, then why are we doing it? Why is government getting in the business of being in business and saying: we're going to put in this investment because we're going to get all the money back in royalties? Well, no. Since when? Then we may as well just take over our entire oil and gas industry for that reason. I mean, it just doesn't make any sense. [some applause] Well, yes, one member is in favour of that, but the rest? Well, maybe two, maybe three or four. Who knows?

I think most members in the Assembly would agree that that's a bad idea. Government just should not be in the business of deciding what technologies, et cetera, are going to be used to extract our resources, especially if they're not proven on the scale that this is being contemplated and especially when public opinion has so clearly shifted against these types of projects.

I mean, if the NDP, you know – actually, I'm not going to speak for the Liberals on this because I'm tired and I can't remember where they are on this issue. I know where they are on CO₂; I'm just not sure about the carbon capture and storage thing. I'm sorry. I have to be reminded by one of the members over there. But the Wildrose and, I know, many of the members – I mean, we agree that this is a bad bill. This isn't the way to go. Even though we're coming at it from two different angles, reasons why we don't like it, we still believe it's a total waste. If it was such a good environmental idea, you'd think these guys would be running all over the place saying: oh, wonderful. But they're not, and neither are we because we think it's a bad idea as well. It's a waste of taxpayer money, and it does nothing to help the environment. It's not practical.

I think we need to make sure in this Assembly that we don't judge people and say: "Look, this is the way that group thinks. They're cynics. You know, they're all just cynics." No. There are many different, varying degrees of where we're coming from on this, but one thing we do all agree on – I know that – is that government should not be subsidizing industry to the point of $2 billion to do what industry should be able to do for itself if it's economically viable as is claimed. That's something, I think, we can all agree on.

Do we need to move forward on doing things that are going to cut emissions, greenhouse gas emissions and all other emissions? Absolutely. At least, I believe that. But I think that this is just the absolute wrong way to do it.

With that, Mr. Chair, I wanted to make sure that it was on the record that we have a diversity of opinion in the Wildrose caucus on the subject. We have the ability to openly vote and freely vote in the way that we feel is appropriate. The one thing we are unified in: this is a total and complete and utter waste of taxpayer money for absolutely no reason.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had some good progress and discussion on this bill this evening. Given that the hour is approaching or encroaching or moving forward, let's say, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would now move that the committee rise and report Bill 24.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly now adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 30, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly RCMP Deputy Commissioner Dale McGowan, who is in your gallery today. Deputy Commissioner McGowan was recently appointed commanding officer of K Division in Alberta and, as such, is responsible for all RCMP operations in Alberta, including the RCMP as Alberta's provincial police service. He was born and raised in Edmonton and, since joining the RCMP in 1978, has served in a variety of senior positions in Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and all three northern territories. He brings a wealth of operational, northern, and First Nations experience, and I look forward to working with him to continue the excellent relationship we have with the RCMP here in Alberta. With the Deputy Commissioner today is RCMP Inspector Glenn de Goeij. I ask them both to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly a very distinguished group of Albertans, all of whom have been associated in one way or another with naval service in Canada. This group is representative of the Jenny Wrens of Edmonton, the Edmonton branch of HMCS Nonsuch, and the Royal Canadian Naval Association. I've asked them here today so that as an Assembly we can show our gratitude to them for their selfless contribution to Canada and assist in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Canadian navy.

Mr. Speaker, these distinguished guests, five veterans among them, are seated in your gallery, and I would ask that each stand as I call their names: Lieutenant Commander Frank van Staaldin, commanding officer, HMCS Nonsuch; Lieutenant (Navy) Tim Cusack, executive officer, HMCS Nonsuch; Captain (Navy) Glen Power, retired, past commanding officer, HMCS Nonsuch; Captain (Navy) Edward Brownfield, retired, past commanding officer, HMCS Nonsuch; Lieutenant (Navy) Jim Humphries, president, Naval Officers' Association of Edmonton; Mr. Gordon Wright, president, Royal Canadian Naval Association, and World War II veteran, who served in the Battle of the Atlantic; Ms June Greig, secretary/treasurer, Royal Canadian Naval Association, area division for prairies for the national association; Mrs. Hazel Juchli, president, Jenny Wrens of Edmonton, and World War II veteran; Mrs. Ruby Marles, member of the Jenny Wrens of Edmonton and World War II veteran; and Mr. and Mrs. Warren and Jean Urquhart, representing the Royal Canadian Naval Association.

Mr. Speaker, these guests are seated in your gallery, and I'm very proud to introduce such a distinguished group. I'd ask that all members join me in providing them the traditional warm welcome of our House. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House guests from the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They are 33 wonderful students filled with passion for education from St. Anne Catholic elementary school, where with pride they emulate their school motto, The Little School with a Big Heart. I know from meeting very briefly today with these great kids and their adult helpers and teachers that this is absolutely true. It's my pleasure to introduce who's in the gallery, beginning with teachers and group leaders Mrs. Amber Morgan-Manchuk, Mrs. Sylvia Prodor, Mrs. Isabel Dennis, Mrs. Oksana Marchioro, Mrs. Margaret Gagliardi, and Ms Aurelia Uarsama. I would now ask the students of St. Anne school to please rise along with their teachers and parent helpers so that we can give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are many terrific schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. McKernan elementary/junior high is among the best. It has produced at least two of the current members of this Assembly and at least one former member of this Assembly. It's a very accomplished school. We're visited today by 35 visitors related to McKernan, two classes of students. There are three teachers – Mme Jasmine Kinjo, Mrs. Stephanie Garcia, and Miss Michelle Villetard – and two parent helpers, Ms Andrea Smith and Ms Anita Lum. I welcome them to this Assembly and hope that that school continues to produce many fine MLAs. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 28 visitors from Belmead elementary school in Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd like to ask Mrs. Lisa Zimmer, Ms Pat Sachse-Brown, principal, Mr. Darrell Cass, Mr. Ramsey Albert, and all the students to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special guest who is here from India, Mr. Manjinder Singh Chaudhary, who is secretary in charge of the frontal organization of the Punjab Pradesh Congress Committee. He is visiting Alberta for the first time. He is accompanied by some very special guests from my area – Mr. Dave Purewal, Mr. Paul Hundal, and Mr. Harinder Kailay – who are showing him around our beautiful city and our province. I would ask them all to be warmly greeted by the Assembly on this special occasion. Welcome. Ji aian nu.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour today on behalf of our Deputy Premier to introduce a group of eight members of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS as it's known, representing over 70,000 students from the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I ask each to stand and then at the conclusion the warm applause, please, of the Assembly. May I introduce Hardave Birk, CAUS chair and U of C Students' Union vice-president external; Keith McLaughlin, CAUS vice-chair and University of Alberta Students' Union vice-president academic; Nick Dehod, University of Alberta Students' Union president; Lauren Webber, University of Calgary Students' Union president; Taz Kassam, University of Lethbridge Students' Union president; Aden Murphy, University of Alberta Students' Union vice-president external; Andrew McIntyre, University of Calgary Students' Union government relations adviser; and, last but not least, Duncan Wojtaszek, CAUS executive director. Ladies and gentlemen, our wonderful student representatives.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to select one individual out of the group that was just introduced. I don't know if it's appropriate or not, but I'd like to introduce her again. Her name is Lauren Webber, and she happens to be my daughter. She's the president of the University of Calgary Students' Union, and I'm quite proud of her. Hello, Lauren.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a baseball coach I had the privilege of coaching a lot of fine young people, and four of them are with us today in the members' gallery. It's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature these four young men. If they would rise as I call their names and then remain standing. Clark Banack, from just north of Camrose, is just finishing off his PhD in religion and political thought in Alberta and has a particular interest in rural politics. Ryan Falk, from Ferintosh, now living in Edmonton, works for Service Alberta, and I'm very pleased to see that he is a team lead on collections, so he's trying to keep us in the black. Jason Buzzell, who is our American import, actually came up here to play hockey. He's got a degree in journalism from the University of Nebraska in Omaha and is a linesman in the Alberta Junior Hockey League. And my son, Hans Olson, has a degree in philosophy from Augustana in Camrose and is working for the Alberta Council for Global Cooperation. He's a filmmaker. He studied in Vancouver and Toronto, and he's now my roommate. He's moved back home to Alberta. If you would all, please, give them your warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four members of the CCSVI Edmonton organization: Tanya Allen, Lorraine Bodie, Brenda Requier, and Warren Stefanuk. Sadly, three of these individuals have been directly affected by multiple sclerosis and one has a family member affected by the disease. They are here today to urge the government to fund CCSVI clinical trials for over 11,000

Albertans who suffer from MS. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Wayde Lever, president of the Wildrose Alliance Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood Constituency Association and our candidate in that same riding. Wayde currently serves as the chairman of the Innovative Housing Society of Canada and has been an active member of the community, volunteering with the Cerebral Palsy Association, Artspace Housing Co-op, and the Canadian Burn Foundation. He has resided in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for over 13 years and is proud to call Edmonton home. It is my pleasure to welcome Wayde to the Wildrose Alliance team. I would ask that all members offer him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly representatives from local lodge 99 of the International Association of Machinists & Aerospace Workers: Neil Rudiger, president; Rick Arsenault, directing business rep; and Kevin Clark, business representative. My guests are here today representing the 40 maintenance workers at the Calgary Stampede who exercised their democratic rights and joined the machinists' union local 99 on April 8 of this year. This small group of employees is looking for a fair and equitable collective agreement that reflects the western values and heritage of co-operation. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and they've risen. I would now ask the Legislature to provide to them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a visitor from Lebanon, Mr. Yahya Ammar, visiting family and friends. This 83-year-old soldier turned historian, author, and poet is fluent in three different languages: Arabic, English, and French. He authored several books on the history of the Middle East and wrote many passionate poems, including one for the city of Edmonton. During a short visit with this wise man last night he told me that he strongly believes that Alberta is the best place on earth in which to live, work, and raise a family. My guest today is accompanied by Mr. Kamal Amar, Mr. Waseem Jabre, and of course my friend and the friend of the hon. Minister of the Employment and Immigration, Dr. Ziad Aboultaif. They're all seated in the members' gallery. They have risen, and I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Canadian Naval Centennial

Mr. Horne: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. A few moments ago I introduced some very distinguished guests who are in the House today to help commemorate the Canadian naval centennial. Fellow members will have received a naval centennial commemorative pin on their desk as they came into the House this afternoon.

The centennial is an extremely significant milestone both in our navy and in our nation's history, Mr. Speaker. Events across Canada over the past several months have focused on honouring the proud past of the navy, showcasing today's navy and, perhaps most importantly, highlighting the very important role the navy will continue to play in Canada's future.

Although we are a landlocked province, Albertans, including our guests today, have a proud tradition of service to Canada through the navy and naval reserve over many decades. HMCS Nonsuch, the Edmonton division of the Canadian Naval Reserve, has seen several thousand naval volunteers pass through basic training since the White Ensign was first run up in Edmonton in April 1923. While the idea of sailors in Edmonton was unheard of at the time, the leadership and determination of the late Lieutenant Commander Athol Blair MacLeod, a veteran of the First World War, resulted in the establishment of the Royal Canadian Navy Volunteer Reserve Edmonton Half-company. Since that time the sense of duty and willingness to sacrifice all on the part of all who have passed through Nonsuch has continued to make Alberta and Canada proud.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask my fellow colleagues to join in honouring all of these sailors as well as thank all the individuals in the organizations that they represent for their courageous work, for their dedication, and for being such a tremendous example to us all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health System Governance

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it remains an honour and a privilege to be a strong voice for the people of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. It is said that we can all learn from history. This past week what started as an ER crisis evolved into cookiegate, followed by the ejection of the only ER doctor, the MLA from Edmonton-Meadowlark, and that was after a two and a half hour meeting with the Premier, then the firing of CEO Duckett, and the resignation of not three but four superboard members.

I quote one board member, Dr. Andreas Laupacis, who said: it's also my impression that the blurring of the boundary of the superboard and the ministry of health creates confusion of who actually is making the decisions. Quite an indictment, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans don't embarrass easily, but this week took the cake. As I reviewed feedback from my constituents, I feel there is a need to offer something positive and hopeful. As the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere often says, I've never seen Albertans more engaged in provincial politics than they are now. There is a sort of political renaissance going on in every corner of our province, and as embarrassed and disappointed as our government has made us feel, I'm equally proud of how we are seeing Albertans reunited and responding, our true bosses.

There is a movement sweeping our province right now, and the reason is simple. Albertans want their MLAs to work for them. They are tired of their MLAs placing loyalty to their political party line over loyalty to the very people they're supposed to serve. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has not forgotten who his bosses are.

It is said that you can measure the character of a person not during times of comfort and convenience but, rather, during times of challenge and controversy. This week, like most Albertans, we witnessed a rare display of character, and it's a shining example that surely will lead to a more true representative and democratic province.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The secret document which revealed plans to bring in two-tiered American-style health care that we released yesterday is dated July 12, 2010. The minister of health was on the job at that time, so there's no way he can pass the buck on this one. To the Premier: the minister of health is quoted in the media as saying, quote, I want to make it clear that this is not my document. End quote. How will the minister substantiate his statements? Or is the minister saying that this scheme is being hatched right under his nose?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to take that question. It's a simple statement of fact that it is not a document that I authored. What it is is a document that reflects concerns, opinions, and comments from Albertans, and inasmuch as there are some things in there that we looked at and decided not to do – specifically, I went out and said that I'm not going to do this – we have to listen to what Albertans have to say.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess all of us are wondering why it was kept so secret for so long. This document is dated four months ago and clearly shows that the government is planning to open the health care system to private insurance and private delivery. How can the minister explain the contradiction between himself and the Premier on what purpose this document has?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no contradiction whatsoever. What would be the point of releasing a document that you're not going to implement? There are parts in it that are okay, and there are a lot of parts in it that aren't. We're not going to put stuff out there that possibly might contravene the principles of the Canada Health Act or that might contravene current Alberta legislation. There's just no point to doing that. Why would you fuel that speculation?

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans did not go into an election asking for the failed experiment we have today with the Alberta Health Services Board. This secret document reveals that this government is going to betray Albertans again after the next election. Will the Premier commit right now that he supports a publicly delivered, single-payer health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think we've made it very clear and the Premier has made it very clear. We are not looking at anything to do with a two-tiered system in this province. We are firmly committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act. That's why we want to get that legislation through and done with. Let's get on with that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of health said, "The role and the mandate of the Alberta Health Services Board is very clear." But Dr. Andreas Laupacis said he resigned because of, quote, increased blurring of the roles between Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness. End quote. To the Premier again: how does the Premier explain this conflict?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is a roles and mandate document that is coming forward that will put even more clarity to the issue. The simple fact is that as the Minister of Health and Wellness I am ultimately responsible for what goes on in health. I will take that responsibility and I will take that accountability because that's what Albertans expect. They also expect action. That's why we released . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Ken Hughes last week said that Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness need to clarify roles and responsibilities, but the minister of health says everything is clear. Again to the Premier: who is out to lunch, the board chairman or the minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's clearly understand here. There are two arms in health care. One of them is the department. It deals with health legislation, health regulation, health policy, strategic directions and so on, the global budget. The other arm is responsible for delivering it. That's called Alberta Health Services. They have their own structure. They have their own committees. Both arms report to the minister of health. I don't know how many more times people want me to explain that. Ultimately I am the elected person who is responsible. That's just simple straight fact.

Dr. Swann: Simple straight fact to the minister but not to his board chairman. How does one explain that, Mr. Minister? Dr. Laupacis also said that the minister of health delayed the release of strategic documents for months. For example, the 2010 capital health plan for Edmonton and Calgary is still stuck on the minister's desk, and 11 months are gone. Will the Premier admit that political meddling by him has brought this plan to its knees?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've only been in the job about 9 months, not 11. I don't know where he's counting that all up. Ten months. Sorry.

The point here is that we do have a strategic capital infrastructure plan. We rolled out the first part of it in July. It's about $2.4 billion, and as I've indicated, I will be rolling out the Edmonton and the Calgary plans very soon.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To my former partner and colleague, the Minister of Health and Wellness. On July 5, 2010, you and your DM and ADMs approved the leaked document Alberta's Health Legislation: Moving Forward. Later your current PA presented it to all government MLAs, where the controversial items of phase 2 of the Alberta Health Act were discussed: from changing legislation from prescriptive to enabling, putting everything under regulations, private insurance, and physicians opting out based on the Chaoulli decision. At what point after my removal was the decision made to not move forward with this strategic policy?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which particular meeting he's talking about. The leaked document is dated July 12, and I wasn't here at that time. The point here is that there's a lot of input that that hon. member provided, and for that we thanked him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that on March 2, 2000, Bill 11 was first read into this Assembly, claiming to ensure the well-being of the public health care system in the province while helping to reduce wait lists, what is the difference between Bill 17 and Bill 11 and the third way?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what is infinitely different today than some of the past historic moments the member may be reliving is that we now have a five-year funding commitment, and today in this province we have a five-year action plan with very detailed, specific performance measures that will improve access to the health system, that will reduce wait times, that will give us greater stability in the system, the best ever and the first of its kind, the most ambitious and the most aggressive agenda in the history of this country.

Dr. Sherman: To the same minister. Given that on page 26 of Alberta's five-year action plan mid- to long-term goals include phase 2, changes to regulations, policies, and to the Public Health Act, can you honestly say, Minister, that the third way is DOA, or are you actually just keeping it on life support until after the next election?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many more times we have to make this clear. There is no agenda of that sort whatsoever. There are opinions that were expressed by Albertans, and they were put forward in a very open, honest fashion. Just because some Albertans may have opinions different from some of ours, it doesn't mean they don't deserve to have them reflected in a document for consideration. We considered them, and we decided against some of what they asked for. I don't think that that bears any further clarification.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alberta Health Services Board

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday a fourth member of the AHS board resigned. Why? Because of, and I quote, interference from the minister of health in the AHS board's decision about how to deal with Dr. Duckett. The minister of health keeps saying that AHS is an arm's-length board that makes their own decisions. Two arms, neither of them knows what the other one is talking about. Then yesterday the minister confused us again, saying that the board will respond to the minister when it is required. To the minister of health: is the board independent or not? Which arm are we talking about?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the board is, has, and going forward will always be arm's length, but they report to the minister. It's in legislation. I don't understand why somebody is questioning the legislation. If you want to change the legislation, then stand up and say so. The fact is that the lines are very clear.

The other fact, Mr. Speaker, is that I have worked with the board chair and with the board to make some important decisions together. Why? Because we have a five-year funding plan that is very different than not having one and then looking for $1.3 billion in savings.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are tired of listening to this minister, so let's try one more. Okay. You seem to think that it's best to leave things up to the experts who know the most about health and administration, but clearly you can't help but interfere. Will the minister admit that the resignations are at least partially his fault? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what people choose to do as individuals is totally up to them. That is absolutely fundamental, and I respect that. But when you're talking about moving ahead and moving forward, what Albertans want is what we released today: this document, the 5-Year Health Action Plan, that talks about what we're doing. It's time for less talk and more action, and the hon. member might want to observe that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans want is the truth. Clearly, having one board in Edmonton making all the decisions is too tempting for any minister to keep his nose out of it. Independence is impossible. Will the minister admit that decentralized boards would be more independent and would save him from the temptations that he can't resist?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear that the Alberta Health Services Board was established by ministerial order under the Regional Health Authorities Act, and it's very clear that it is accountable to the minister for the delivery and operation of the public health system. And that's what they're trying to do: operate the public health system. They get their money – guess from whom? – from the taxpayers. Guess who has to sign off on that budget? I do. I'm accountable for it, and so are they for delivering and operating within those parameters, and they're doing a pretty good job of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

2:00 Publicly Funded Health Care (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister is not a doctor, but he could sure play one on TV. Yesterday a document was leaked outlining the PC government's political strategy for privatized health care. This government has twice been re-elected by denying its true intentions regarding privatization of our health care system. Now their plan to do it yet a third time has been exposed. My question is to the Premier. Why don't you just admit that Albertans cannot trust this PC government with our health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to take that question for the Premier because the answers are just very straightforward, and the member knows this. What they can rely on is for this government to continue addressing their priorities. What are those priorities? Improve our access, reduce our wait times, build a first-class health system, give us the best performing system in Canada, and that's what we're doing. That's why I keep showing these documents, because people want action already. It's enough of this rhetoric. Let's get on with the plans. That's what we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if people really want action, they're going to have to elect a new government. Mr. Speaker, this minister announces and reannounces and reannounces money, commitments to hire people, all kinds of targets that are supposed to be met, and nobody, frankly, believes it anymore. The document shows that the government wants to have private insurance, delisting of services, private delivery, and physicians opting in and out of the public health system. Why should people trust this government to protect their health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is because we've proven ourselves, and we're going to prove it again. That's why we released and made public this five-year plan for performance measures and performance targets. In here you will find 50 different performance measures, which are public, that the folks of Alberta can look at, can monitor, can track, and which Alberta Health Services will report on every quarter. Nobody else does that except here in Alberta, and that's trust.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, nobody trusts this government to do what they're saying they're going to do. It's obvious that they can't be trusted with respect to the health care system. I want to ask the health minister why he thinks that the five-year plan and the five-year funding plan are going to last any more than a year and a half, which is about when the next election is. Once the election is over, those promises are gone.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is that this started with a five-year funding commitment, the first of its kind in Canada. We've got that. The next step is to put in place the action that shows you how we're going to use that money. We've done that today. Then we have the performance measures, and people will be able to track this. It has nothing whatsoever to do with an election. This is a five-year plan for performance targets in 50 different cases, showing you cancer care, showing you continuing care, showing you acute care, showing you emergency department wait times, showing you access to various surgeries, and slicing the wait times . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Health Care Workforce Supply

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago Alberta Health Services was short 1,400 nurses. Last year it cut 450 more at a cost of $24 million. Now they say that they're hiring 500, which means that today we are still almost 1,000 nurses short. To the minister of health: how can the minister claim any credibility on this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the member didn't read the rest of the sentence in Hansard. What we said was that there are 500 more nurses being hired just for the 360 additional acute-care beds that we're adding.

Let's not make any mistake about it. Registered nurses are an important part of our overall system, and the total number who graduated from training programs in our province was increased by more than 20 per cent over the last four years alone, and there's more good news on that front coming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister of health is starting to sound like a broken record here. We need to see some concrete results in our ERs to cut wait times now. To the minister of health again. Alberta Health Services said that because of the hiring freeze last year “many of these vacancies will need to be filled in 2010/11 in order to maintain service levels.” Will the minister admit that we are in this mess because of his hiring freeze?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is no hiring freeze. In fact, what there is is a very good, concrete commitment and accord between Alberta Health Services and the nurses’ association, and that says that they will be hiring 70 per cent of all nursing graduates in this province. It’s a phenomenal commitment. Why? Because they’re needed, and they’re doing an outstanding job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Albertans are sick and tired of listening to promises. To the minister again: will the minister be honest and admit that there is still a terrible shortage of nurses in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I’ve always said that we could hire more nurses, and that’s one of the reasons, I’m sure, why Alberta Health Services took the big, bold step that they did. We also need more doctors, but we need to remember that we are training more doctors. We are increasing more first-year spaces. In fact, over the last few years that number has increased by 50 per cent, so good headway is being made. Why? Because we have a five-year funding commitment now to do it, and it’s working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Beef Exports to the European Market

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can we change topics? My questions are for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. A restrictive 11,000-tonne quota shared with the United States, restrictions on the use of growth promotants, and the high European Union tariff have combined to make the high-value European Union beef market very difficult for Alberta producers to be competitive in. I understand that Canada has recently gained duty-free access to the EU for a 20,000-tonne annual quota. Can the minister of agriculture please tell us how this increased access impacts Alberta beef producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This new arrangement is for a 20,000-tonne hormone-free beef export into the European market duty free. Just to give an indication of the effect on the beef industry, which is mostly housed in Alberta, we’re looking at probably a savings of over $10 million because of the duty-free designation, that will go into the pockets of our industry. It’s very significant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This expanded quota is a marked improvement, but further expansion of a quota will attract more higher volume Alberta players into this market. Do any of our competitors have this kind of access to the EU? I ask the minister: is there an opportunity for this quota to increase in the future?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, absolutely, there are increased opportunities. We do have competition, as we always have, globally, and when you talk about the European Union, it’s the United States and Australia. But we know that we’re going to have an additional 3,200 tonnes’ access this year, and we know that by 2012 the increase will be between 4,600 and 4,800 tonnes of duty-free beef going into the European Union. Our business will be able to go after that, and we know we’re going to get a very good chunk of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a significant quota. Market access is a federal government responsibility. I ask the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: what can Alberta do to support federal government efforts to increase these kinds of international market opportunities for Canadian producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that it’s just very important that we’re supportive of the efforts of our federal government and Minister Ritz. We’ve shown that just recently with our meetings with industry in Japan and China. When you go into China and you meet in cities that exceed 50 million people and over 24 million people in Japan in a matter of a few days, the markets are unbelievable, the potential is great, and we’ll continue to work with our federal government to increase that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Long-term Care Beds

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m sure that I don’t need a preamble about health care beds in this province. To the minister of health: according to the new five-year plan, of the 1,300 continuing care beds that you have been talking about, how many are actually long-term care beds, the type of bed that front-line professionals have identified that we need in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don’t have the exact number in my head right now, but there are a number of additional beds that are being added. Many of that number will be long-term care, and others will be a different type of bed. There are so many beds right now, so many different numbers right now, so if you want the exact number, hon. member, which I gather you do, I’ll undertake to try and provide that to you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This minister’s continuing care strategy states that it’s the goal of this government to cap the number of long-term care beds at 14,500. How can the minister deny that that policy has directly contributed to the ER bed crisis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it’s true that there are some people in acute-care beds who need to be moved to transition beds and from transition beds out into the community. That’s why we’re building somewhere around 1,400 different or new spaces this year. Eight hundred of those have already been built, another 500 or 600 will be built by the end of March, and the following year another 1,100 will be built and the year after that probably another thousand or so.

Those are the targets that we've set, and to the best of my knowledge we are on track to accomplishing them so that seniors can age in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the same minister. We're not talking about the same thing. I'm talking about long-term care beds. How can the minister defend capping the number of long-term care beds in this province when right now there are a thousand seniors waiting for long-term care and the seniors population is increasing daily?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, just to be a little clearer on that, let's understand that when we're talking about these 1,400 spaces, there's a new way of thinking about what kinds of spaces they're going to be. Instead of moving people from supportive living to designated assisted living or vice versa and ultimately to long-term care, under the continuing care strategy we're simply building spaces so that people can age in place, and the services will change to meet them in their homes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Despite the economic downturn many of my constituents are having difficulty securing enough low- and semiskilled workers to keep their businesses operational. However, the process of retaining good workers from outside of the country is burdensome and very difficult for small-business owners to navigate. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is the minister doing to ensure the workforce needs for our small businesses are met?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be clear that this government's number one priority is to employ Albertans and Canadians. That means that those who are unemployed we're matching with employers through our labour market information centres. We have 59 of them throughout the province. To those who are underemployed and not working to their capacity we're providing a variety of educational upgrading programs to link them with employers. This is our strategy for our local unemployed Albertans, matching them with the workforce.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that Alberta still has a strong need for permanent and not just temporary workers, why is the Alberta immigration nominee program only able to support 5,000 immigrants per year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That is, I agree, a very good question. As a matter of fact, there is a need for temporary workers when temporary projects exist or seasonal projects exist, but frankly Alberta needs permanent foreign workers, workers that can settle over here, bring their families over here, buy cars and houses over here, Mr. Speaker, and not leave our communities with transient populations. That is why I have negotiated an increase to a cap of 5,000. It's nowhere near being enough, but it is a federal cap that's put on Alberta of 5,000. I hope that increases because we need permanent foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: given that our cap is the same as many other provinces' despite a drastic difference in labour needs, what is the minister doing to advocate for Alberta's businesses to ensure we have the workforce that our economy needs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have communicated very clearly to our federal counterparts that we do have a need for permanent foreign workers, that the temporary foreign worker program, although designed for the purpose that it was designed, has served us well. The demographics of our province, of our country clearly show that we will be short thousands of workers into the many years to come, and we will be convincing our federal counterparts that we should consider more of a temporary, economically based immigration policy as opposed to the transient policy we have right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Transparency is important. That's why Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness are inviting you to track the progress being made at some of the province's biggest and busiest emergency departments." To the minister of health: if transparency is important, why is the information on emergency department wait times prior to November 2009 not posted on the Internet for people to see? What are you hiding now?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I wonder how deep he had to dig for that question, Mr. Speaker. If you want something very specific that goes back a year or two or three, I'll be happy to feed that into Health Services and see if they can provide the answer.

The thing is, Mr. Speaker, that there were nine different health regions. They all had different systems. They all kept their own information in their own ways, and bringing all of that together has been quite a challenge and quite a chore. But I'll do my best to see what I can do for the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can progress be tracked if you do not post on the Internet information gathered on emergency room wait times prior to November 2007? Why did you suddenly pick November 2007 to start your wait time list on the Internet? What are you hiding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm not sure exactly which website he's talking about, Mr. Speaker, but I will have a chance to look at that, I'm sure.

What's important here is that we have all the transparency people need. It's the key performance measures, and in there on page 4 is a good statement about how we're going to reduce the length of stay for patients in emergency departments. The targets are very clear.

If the member would like to look at that – I just released it today – I think he'll be quite pleased with what he sees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is transparent, certainly the citizens of this province see through his lame efforts to defend the government's record on promoting and enhancing public health care. Now, I know you took this question under advisement yesterday and you promised me information today, but will you put this information on the website before the end of this week so that Albertans can see how their emergency departments have been performing since 2002, when the doctors first started to complain?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall saying that I'll get you an answer in 24 hours, but I do recall saying that I would take the question under advisement, and I will. I will look at it, and as soon as I can, I'll get back to him.

What's important right now is that people want action on emergency rooms, and that's why we are setting some targets in here that will report publicly – they already do – on the busiest site aggregate basis and on an individual site basis. That's good transparency, and that's darn good accountability, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Bail System

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I heard from constituents that were upset that a man in Whitecourt-St. Anne, who has been accused of second-degree murder, has been granted bail by a federal judge despite the opposition from a provincial Crown prosecutor on the case. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell me why an accused murderer would be granted bail for merely $5,000 even though the provincial Crown thought he should be kept behind bars?

The Speaker: Whoa. I'm not sure if this matter comes under the subjudice rule. Interestingly enough, the only person I can ask for clarification of that is the person to whom the question is addressed. The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're correct. I won't speak to the specifics of this. What I did want to say today is that we know that our Crowns work very hard to make representations to the court. We also know in those cases that it's entirely within the court's decision as to what recommendations they will take.

Our concern as a government is with respect to the tests for bail. The tests for bail are set out in the Criminal Code. We've made it very clear to the federal government that we think those tests need to be changed. We think there needs to be much more consideration given to whether or not the administration of justice is brought into disrepute with respect to bail, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I'll be more general. Does the minister think that it's fair that people accused of serious crimes are granted bail so that they can walk around freely, possibly putting people, innocent people, at risk?

The Speaker: If we deal with policy, fine. Opinion is not really that important.

Ms Redford: And it is only policy, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear that within Canada we have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. People are presumed to be innocent until they're proven guilty. That is why we have a bail process in place. Our view as a government is that that process works. The independence of the courts is critical; however, we do think that within the legislative framework federally we could look to changing that bail test.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, a clarification on process. Can the minister tell me if a provincial Crown can appeal a bail ruling to have it overturned or at least a fine more fitting to the seriousness of these charges?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, again with respect to process, in extraordinary cases it is possible for the Crown who is arguing that case to make the determination that they do want to appeal a decision of the court, as the Crown can with respect to anything. Again, they would look to whether or not it is in the public interest to do so and whether or not they would likely be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Phase 2 is out in the daylight now, and this government's secret agenda to increase privately funded health care has been exposed. This agenda explains what is an otherwise unfathomable level of incompetence in running our public health care system. The Tories are determined to ruin the public system to set the table for private, American-style health care. Will the health minister quit treating Albertans like we were born yesterday and admit that his leaked document describes a plan to put one over on Albertans after the next election?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of talk about agendas. Let me tell you what the real agenda is, never mind the speculative inaccuracies coming from the opposition. Our agenda is, among other things, to reduce wait times for hip surgery by 60 per cent; to increase the number of people that we're able to move from hospital beds into community care beds, when they're eligible, by 68 per cent; to add 65 more mental health staff in schools and in clinics. If time permits, I'd like to go on. Those are just some of the agenda items that we have to improve health outcomes for Albertans.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, he may have an agenda, but we have a record: two and a half years of the Premier ignoring the concerns of ER physicians, a political agenda to open the door to more privately funded care, a broken promise on long-term care, cruel neglect of the mental health system, and now a provincial health board that cannot function. Will this minister admit that he is just the latest entry in a parade of Tories, almost a minister a year for the last four years, directed to distract this public from the PC plan to undermine and dismantle our public health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we're doing exactly the opposite of what those accusations are. We are making significant improvements to speed up access to the system, to reduce wait times. For example, the wait times for cardiac surgery are going to be reduced significantly. The wait times for knee replacements, the wait times for hip replacements, the wait times for cataract surgeries, the wait times for scheduled surgeries, the wait times for cancer treatment from referral to start-up: all of these things are part of the key performance measures and action plan. That's what people want. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you go forward with your question. Put your hand on the shoulder of the person to your right to settle him down. Okay? Go ahead.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the government has spent the last four weeks ineptly rolling out an exact replica of phase 1 of this government's allegedly abandoned plan and given that not once in the course of their consulting and their announcing and their ribbon cutting did they ever mention opt-in and -out capability for doctors, delisting, or private insurance funded health care, will this minister admit that even the most reasonable of Albertans simply cannot ever trust a single word on health care by this minister or any other member of this government ever again?

Mr. Zwodsky: Mr. Speaker, what a bunch of nonsense. I've already clarified that there are opinions from Albertans that were part of a survey. They inputted, and I've said which parts of that we're not going to follow. There is no privatization occurring. We are strongly committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act, and we're even more committed to helping Albertans access more continuing care, to helping them access more home care, to access more children's mental health care, and I could go on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Film and Television Support

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been months since the minister of culture intervened in a panel at the Banff TV festival to declare that his ministry funded crap. The minister later claimed that he did this to encourage discussion. To the minister of culture. Since the Banff TV festival is an international forum to pitch projects to buyers, I'm wondering if the minister can answer this skill-testing question on whether the comments resulted in more projects or less projects being picked up or shot in Alberta this fall.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to say that it resulted in more projects being shot here, more opportunities for people to come here and scout in Alberta because people from Los Angeles, Europe, British Columbia, and Ontario want to come to a place where we value quality of production over number of productions.

Ms Blakeman: Eh-uh. Sorry, Minister. There were fewer.

Given the loss of work for Alberta film and TV workers, from eight crews working in Alberta five years ago to two and a half crews barely working now, and given the exodus of our workers to B.C. and other provinces, can the minister explain why Alberta is training film and TV workers for our competition in B.C.? Please explain.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we sat here in this House last March, and the hon. member told us all that the film industry in Alberta was dead. This past summer three Los Angeles producers came to see me in Calgary to ask about different productions. We have one U.S. production, AMC's Hell on Wheels, that we hope to get green-lit in the next couple of weeks, and we'll start production here next spring. That will go on top of Heartland, that we have here, and Blackstone, that's being filmed here in Edmonton. We also have the Sam Steele movie for CBC that will start here next spring.

Ms Blakeman: They didn't shoot this year, honey.

Back to the same minister. Given that there is no movement on a Calgary film production studio, that the minister didn't even know there was an Edmonton production studio, and that there have been no new incentives to encourage investment, can the minister tell us of any positive changes in this area under his watch other than some that may come in the future?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the other member has been doing, but we've been sitting down with the Alberta Film Advisory Council, which is a combination of unions and guild representatives. It's film producers, it's the film schools, and there are film commissioners. We have worked together in two particular instances. We're focusing on innovation and competitiveness. We've looked at changing our film development fund to make that more enticing. We're in the top five most competitive jurisdictions in North America. We are working now to get a combination agreement with our unions and guilds so that we are competitive with other jurisdictions. We have worked on training on 3-D technology. We brought 120 people from our industry and representatives from the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Review of Government Programs

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the head of the Treasury Board. Reviewing government programs not only helps us ensure effective and prudent spending; it also helps us foster a culture of innovation, where we see continuous improvements. We need to review programs to ensure they are actually solving the problems intended in the most efficient and cost-effective manner. Will the minister look at enacting a policy whereby all government programs are reviewed annually?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General does review all government expenditures. More importantly, in December of 2006 this Premier asked me to set in place a process whereby we could review our ongoing expenses to make sure that our expenditures were not only achieving what they were intended to but that we were getting good value for our money. Since then we've implemented five or six re-engineering projects, we call it, to make sure that we're not duplicating program delivery.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has your ministry enacted any policies to investigate and eliminate old, unused, or irrelevant programs as well as programs that overlap or are duplicates; that is, where two programs are trying to achieve the same outcome?

Mr. Snelgrove: Exactly, hon. member. Certainly, last year alone in our budget we saw the amalgamation of 70-some municipal grant programs down to 23. We've seen the development of issue-based funds, where we bring ministers together. And we've had tremendous success in tackling the issues of homelessness and safe communities. We as a government have understood that we need to remove the duplication both internally and to our external partners that help deliver these goods. We have also achieved considerable financial savings besides the operational savings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister for the last time: how do we measure the success of such reviews? Are the people involved in the program reviews actually independent of the people delivering the programs?

Mr. Snelgrove: It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because it's easy to identify the savings. In the first year alone we looked for $240 million; we found nearly half a billion. Last year we found over $700 million. Probably more importantly, we consult with the groups that the government deals with on an ongoing basis, in the spring and the fall, and we ask them: are we still achieving the goals you expect from us with your tax dollars? Those consultations have been extremely successful in telling us that we are on the right track.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Health Services Performance Measures

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Titanic sunk, and many lives were lost. Despite the committee of captains saying that all is well, the superboard is sinking. Five officers have jumped into lifeboats in just the last week. There's nothing honourable about leaving the patients to go down with the ship. To the minister: given that today's plan still has a superboard in place, how does it not allowing funding to follow the patient? Why should we trust that your latest plan is going to steer us away from the iceberg?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is: because the plan announced today focuses on what I've said at least four or five times already. It focuses on improving access, on reducing wait times, and on building the best-performing health system in Canada. It takes a good, solid strategy to get there. We've spent several months working on that strategy. It's now ready to be further implemented, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They've been saying that for two and a half years with no changes.

Albertans have lost trust in our health minister and his system. Now they're being promised a 50 to 60 per cent improvement, with a 6 per cent funding increase, without changes in the system. To the minister. What are you really going to do: lower your targets again, increase your funding again, or are you going to do both?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I'll tell you exactly what we're going to do, Mr. Speaker. We're going to add more beds. We're going to have some facility expansions. We're going to build some new facilities. We have over 1,000 health care facilities on the books or being built right now for over $5 billion. That's what we're going to do, keep doing that. We're going to develop a provincial plan for cancer. We're going to develop a mental health strategy for that area. There are a lot of things that we're doing, and most of those are well along the way.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward many good suggestions on how to improve ER care here in the province, and this government has treated him shamefully. Yesterday the House's ER doctor asked for an apology from the health minister's parliamentary assistant. Today Albertans are calling for a public apology. When is this going to happen?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans are more focused on action than they are on words right now, and they need to see that. The sooner that we can get on with that agenda, the sooner you're going to see all of these things start to occur, the reductions in wait times. I mean, these are serious and very significant moves forward, and that's why Albertans want to hear about them, not about the rhetoric and the innuendo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Charitable Tax Credit

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of media reports recently about pressures on nonprofit organizations due to the sluggish economy. Representatives from these agencies say that growing demand amid stretched fund resources will only worsen without greater investments of dollars and volunteers. It's certainly something I'm hearing in my own constituency. My first question to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: how is the government's charitable tax credit actually encouraging giving?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know and understand that things are tight. A recent StatsCan survey showed that Albertans had given $1.25 billion to charities in Alberta in 2009. Unfortunately, that's down 9 per cent from 2008. We're supporting Alberta's giving through the enhanced charitable tax credit. Through the tax credit, which is worth over $80 million a year, we're encouraging Albertans to give more. If you give over $200, you will get a 50 per cent tax credit. If you give under $200, you get a 20 per cent tax credit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: in these more difficult times what effect is the community spirit program actually having?

Mr. Blackett: Well, in the last couple of years, Mr. Speaker, the community spirit donor program itself, in addition to the tax credit, gave $38 million to 3,238 different charitable organizations. One example: the Central Alberta African Centre in Red Deer opened an office to ensure better access to new immigrant services. This program helps small, medium, and large organizations, and it's providing much-needed dollars for much-needed organizations to make our communities stronger and safer, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Board Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, November 22, the Minister of Education informed the House that it's, quote, not his problem that school boards were not able to budget properly because of this government's mixed signals on funding staff wage increases.

However, the Auditor General has been saying for four years that the department needs to provide trustees with more timely, accurate financial information. To the minister: why is this government still taking school boards on wild financial rides instead of implementing the Auditor General's recommendation from 2006, which is still outstanding today?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there were no mixed signals to school boards. Prior to the budget we talked about the need for us to do value reviews and make sure we were spending the resources that we were granted in the appropriate ways. On the day of the budget I spoke with school boards, and I indicated to them that we had a firm commitment to meet our commitment to the average weekly earnings increase. The money was not in the budget, but they had the commitment from government that it would be there and they should plan on that basis. The fact that they chose to plan on a different basis was what I was referring to as not my problem. The clear signals were there. They chose . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given that chronic budgeting problems in the Northland board had been in AG reports for years, did the department's failure to work with the board set Northland up to be fired by this minister?

Mr. Hancock: That's a very unfortunate characterization. The department did not fail to work with the board. In fact, there has been comprehensive work with the Northland board over years that can be clearly demonstrated.

Mr. Chase: It's another case of: off with their heads.

Although the results have left much to be desired, the government likes to boast about its five-year funding model for health care. So will the government commit to multiyear, stable funding for school boards?

Mr. Hancock: A very interesting concept, Mr. Speaker, and one that I have been trying to explore in the context of discussions that we're having with school boards and the ATA. But it is a bit of a different situation when you have 63 school boards plus charter schools plus private schools that have public funding and a number of different things that have to be funded within the system. If there's a possible way to achieve that goal, we're certainly prepared to look at it, and we'll certainly talk with school boards about it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With construction set to wrap up next fall on the northwest Anthony Henday Drive project, motorists in Edmonton will be turning their attention to the final eight kilometres of the Edmonton ring road and completion of the northeast section. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. When will the province finally move forward on the final section of the northeast Anthony Henday?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that a considerable amount of work is already under way so that we can move forward on that final leg. My department is finishing up the preliminary engineering work, we're completing the land assembly for the project, and we're working on the utility and railroad. I can tell this hon. member that the Anthony Henday will move ahead.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with a city councillor last week, and he informed me that it was put on hold. Can you explain that to me? I've got a document here that says that it's going to be finished in 2015.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have always said that we were trying to complete that full ring road in 2015. There have been different challenges with budgeting and getting all of our engineering work and all of our fundamental stuff put together. I think what he's talking about is that there has been an announcement that there was going to be a $7 million reprofiling, but that absolutely is not delaying the project. To put this into perspective . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that construction costs are going down and labour costs are going down, wouldn't it be prudent to work on those final eight kilometres and get the job finally done?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been trying to tell this hon. member that we are moving ahead. Almost 90 per cent of the Henday will be free flow and open to traffic next fall. All five of the interchanges on southwest will be complete, and the northwest will be also complete, so 90 per cent, and that will be a $2.5 billion investment into the ring road.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why does the minister continue to exclude paid farm workers from even the most basic employment protections available to all other workers in Alberta? The Liberal opposition has been asking this for years. We have yet to get a clear rationale.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will know that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development has undertaken an initiative where he will be drawing advice from those they're actually seeking to protect, from farmers, to advise us what is the best kind of coverage that would work for them, whether education would satisfy them. You will hear from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development in due course of what the outcome will be.

Dr. Taft: Well, back to this minister, who is after all responsible for worker safety. Given that the last farm safety report took almost two years to complete and given that 13 people died in farm incidents in 2009 alone, how long will this new consultation take before we see action? How many more people are going to have to die?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, this member knows the answer to this question very well because I had a private discussion with him just a couple of days ago. I made it very clear to him that our priority is to keep our farmers in Alberta safe. At the same time we have to make sure that we put in a process that actually achieves that goal. This process will be derived from consultation with farmers. They will be providing us with feedback on what kind of protection they want. Keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that there are challenges because the majority of farms in Alberta are still homesteads, where families actually not only work but live. It's a unique environment that will require a unique solution.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. We have temporary farm workers, sometimes including innocent children, who are paid to work on farms in Alberta. Does the minister see these temporary farm workers, including their children, as workers who are undeserving of the same rights as other paid workers in Alberta? That's how they're getting treated.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, every Albertan is deserving of protection, and that's what they are getting and will be getting. But the member just identified the challenge. A farming environment is not your regular, standard industrialized environment. You have family members working. You have relatives working. You have neighbours helping neighbours. It is not the standard work environment, so we will be seeking advice from our farming community to tell us what type of assistance they can receive from the Alberta government to make sure that they stay as safe as humanly possible.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, and there were 112 questions and responses.

I'd also like to advise the members of a point of sadness with the passing of Mr. Aleck Trawick, QC, on November 20, 2010. Mr. Trawick served as the fourth Alberta Ombudsman from October 1, 1987, to September 15, 1989. I know you'll join with me in extending sympathy to the Trawick family.

Statement by the Speaker

The Talking Stick

The Speaker: I have something to show all members. I have a box. Boxes are really quite interesting. When you open the box, you find a carved instrument, and it's called the talking stick. Let me read the description of the talking stick. For centuries – not days, centuries – talking sticks have been used by the west coast First Nations during potlatches and other ceremonial celebrations, symbolizing the sacred power and honour to speak uninterrupted. It empowers the speaker to speak honestly and truthfully from the heart. The talking stick also serves as a reminder to witnesses of their vital role of listening thoughtfully. When it is passed, the honour is then transferred to the next speaker. The talking stick teaches us to honour the sacred point of view of every living creature. This has been known to wise people for a long period of time.

We'll now continue with our Routine in a matter of seconds and move forward with Members' Statements.

Chateau Estates Access Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 I learned of a long-planned road closure. With the ring road construction access to 84th Street N.E. was to be closed from 16th Avenue, directly impacting the residents of Chateau Estates. I remember the first meeting I had with the community, a Friday night leading to a long weekend, and approximately 100 people showed up. I let my constituents know that I would put everything I had on the table trying to find a solution because this issue meant more than just road access to a community. It meant a community that often felt forgotten would once again believe that someone was standing up for their interests.

Through much discussion we succeeded in delaying the road closure until 2009, buying some time to come up with better solutions. Other levels of government were not willing to join us in finding a solution or, for that matter, helping pay for it, so we as a government needed to do more. After months of work with Alberta Transportation they purchased land to create a solution for Chateau Estates residents. Range road 243A was going to be built. But as we all know, the road less travelled is often the road with many obstacles. As construction was about to get under way, Alberta Transportation was told conventional methods to build the road would not be an option due to gas lines on the land. Consultation with gas companies resulted in the moving of gas lines and revisions to construction plans, which meant a delay of approximately one year.

It was cause for great excitement earlier this year when the road construction finally began, and we had hopes of having the road fully paved by fall. However, Mother Nature had other plans. Heavy snowfall delayed the paving, once again causing delays. So I once again stood up in the Legislature to be a voice for my friends in Chateau Estates and got agreement from Alberta Transportation that the road would be opened temporarily as a gravel road.

Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted that this road is now finally open. My constituents in Chateau Estates have what they deserve. [Mr. Bhullar's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Cardston Elementary School Choir

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and share with this Assembly some exciting news from my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. Earlier this summer the Cardston Cavatina Choir was awarded first place at the National Music Festival in Montreal. This is no small feat. Before they could even present at this festival, they first had to compete provincially against all the talented singers here in Alberta. I am very proud of these youngsters, especially since one of them is my grandson, Dylan Strang.

Mr. Speaker, competing at this level required a tremendous investment of time and effort. The students practised weekly and sacrificed much of their personal time for the cause. It is very uplifting to see the results of hard work and dedication, and I guarantee that the students who made up this choir will take this lesson with them throughout the rest of their lives. I would also like to acknowledge and thank all the dedicated teachers and instructors who put in the time and effort to teach these talented students. Without their effort and support, success would not have been possible.

To win this event, members of the choir sang two songs: J'entends le Moulin, a French-Canadian folk song, and Kyrie, a Latin piece. I find it astounding that these children can speak French and Latin much better than I so that they could recite these songs in both languages. I also find it astounding, Mr. Speaker, that because this group could not travel to Montreal, they won this national award by sending in a video recording.

I congratulate all of these students and wish them all the best in their future endeavours.

Thank you.

Audrey Anderson

Ms Calahasen: We all have movers and shakers in our constituencies, people who care, people who move mountains for what they believe in. Gift Lake school teacher Audrey Anderson is one of these people.

She put a lot of time and effort to ensure that students at the small Northland school division school would have access to computers and modern technology. She was passionate in her view that children be introduced to these tools early in their lives so they can use them to further their education and be competitive wherever they went in life. So she went to work finding patrons, and she hit the jackpot from the Belinda Stronach Foundation, which donated a computer for every student in Gift Lake.

Not only did she find computers; she also volunteered her time on a special committee to ensure that a Métis perspective was represented in the educational software provided on these computers. Thanks to her, students now have programs to help them learn about aboriginal music and sound terminology, along with 25 books written by First Nations, Métis, and Inuit authors that are a valuable addition to the traditional programs.

These laptops will ensure that teachers like Audrey will be able to combine the power of technology and education and will also ensure that the Métis children at the Gift Lake school have the same opportunities as all children in this province and in Canada.

Congratulations, Gift Lake school and especially to Audrey Anderson for all your hard work. I wish you and your students continued success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Legal Aid

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An unjust society. Our troops around the world are fighting for and protecting human rights, freedom, justice, and peace. Although we as members of the Legislative Assembly paid lip service to child and spousal abuse by declaring November Family Violence Prevention Month, the family litigation advocacy association, FLAA, indicates that there is another type of war taking place right here in Alberta that isn't recognized. The Alberta government's refusal to fully fund legal aid means drastically reduced access to legal counsel. Poor remuneration for legal aid lawyers allows those with the means to purchase enhanced legal services.

Alberta families are suffering from years of legal abuse over custody, access, child maintenance, support, divorce, division of property, and injury damages. They have lost their freedom to move on with life beyond abusive partners. They are trapped in civil wars perpetuated by criminally convicted abusers. As a result their children have never known peace.

Mr. Speaker, without sufficient provincial government funding to support qualified legal aid, the Alberta government continues to be an accomplice to a system that allows litigants with financial means to stalk their victims through the court for years. This government has an obligation to ensure that vulnerable Alberta families can protect themselves both from within and from our court system. The adage that justice is blind should not be applied by extension to wilful government neglect.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Bill 217

Election Statutes (Electoral Reform) Amendment Act, 2010

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Election Statutes (Electoral Reform) Amendment Act, 2010. It will be known as Bill 217.

The central purpose of this private member's bill is to ensure that Albertans are provided with the fullest opportunity to participate effectively in political life. The right to vote is enshrined in Canadian law as both the greatest responsibility and the most cherished fundamental right for citizens in a democracy. It's also been strongly defended by the courts, who make it clear that the right to vote involves more than marking a ballot; it involves the administration of the entire election process. I hope the measures contained in the bill such as fixed election dates and expanded access to polling stations can further these ends.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 217 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bill 230

Anti-Idling Act

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 230, the Anti-Idling Act.

The goal of Bill 230 is to take a simple and straightforward province-wide approach to reducing vehicle idling times and, therefore, vehicle emissions and greenhouse gas emissions, especially by encouraging drivers to turn off their engines when their vehicles are not in motion. Vehicles will be limited to idling for three minutes in any 60-minute period. Emergency vehicles and public transit vehicles are exempted, and all vehicles are exempted when the ambient temperature outside the vehicle is lower than minus 23 degrees Celsius.

Bill 230, if passed, is proposed to come into force on January 1, 2012, after which time excessive idling would carry a fine of $100.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 230 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table the 2010-2011 second-quarter update on the fund. Copies of this report have been distributed to members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition received in my office. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take all necessary steps to ensure the appointment of the candidate for alderman who placed ninth in the general local election of October 18, 2010 in the City of Lethbridge to the position of Alderman for the City of Lethbridge, including all the rights and privileges of that position. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per my pledge in the Assembly on October 2, 2007, half my indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank in southern Alberta until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. I'm tabling the required five copies of my letter and donation that will clear it up to the end of this year. In September it was the Lethbridge Food Bank; in October, Coaldale Food Bank; in November, the Interfaith Food Bank; and December will be again the Coaldale Food Bank.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings on the theme of organizations working in Alberta to eliminate poverty. I have the requisite number of copies of the program of the Aspen 2010 annual meeting and HOPE awards to table today. Aspen supports Calgary and area children, youth, and families who are living in vulnerable situations, with the vast majority experiencing poverty-related challenges, and I'm very grateful for the work they do that makes Alberta a better place.

Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of tablings from the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families: a journal that is put out twice a year and copies of the 2009 annual report.

Mr. Speaker, I have copies from an organization, Habitat for Humanity, that through leverage can turn a dime into a dollar.

I have, again on the theme of poverty, five booklets, Dashed Dreams New Realities: Calgarians Talk Frankly about the Impact of the Economic Downturn.

I have five copies of Poverty Talks! that is trying to make a difference in the lives of Albertans.

I have five copies from Goodwill Industries of Alberta, an organization that for 20 years has been working and turning over their funds to support mental health initiatives.

I have two sets of copies of, first, Make an Impact: Pair Up from Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Calgary and Area '08-09. I also have another handout, entitled Share a Little Magic, which also comes from Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

I have, I believe, completed my tablings. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings at this time: the requisite number of copies of a letter from a constituent of mine, Brenda Mackie, to the health minister and the former CEO of Alberta Health Services, dated November 3. Brenda is a constituent, also the chair of the Community and Partners Advisory Committee of the Hotchkiss Brain Institute in Calgary. Her organization partners with ARBI, the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, which helps rehabilitate individuals who have suffered from traumatic and nontraumatic injuries. Her letter is inquiring into why ARBI does not receive any funding from Alberta Health Services.

I also have the requisite number of copies of a letter from another constituent, Rona Altrows, actually an e-mail which she sent to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit detailing her concern with the announced termination of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts artists and education program. The program cuts will affect many of her colleagues if, in fact, they go forward.

Mr. Speaker, I am retabling a letter that I tabled last week, I believe, from Marjorie McIlveen regarding seniors' benefits. We're tabling this letter again because the first time it was denied because it was not signed. This letter is now signed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am tabling today with the House a letter of resignation received November 24, 2010, from Mr. G.B. (Gord) Button, the Alberta Ombudsman. The resignation takes effect May 31, 2011.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first tabling is an article I've referred to, Preserving the Right to a Fair Trial: Stelmach Government's Changes to Legal Aid May Leave Thousands of Low-income Albertans out in the Cold.

My second tabling today is a letter to Mr. Don M. Herring, president of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, that he received from the hon. Minister of Energy. In my opinion it appears to be a rude and offensive letter, but we'll leave that to the people who are looking at it in the tablings.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, proceed.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a colleague of mine from the Royal Alex emergency department, Wilf Mackie. Just as sometimes people would think that the health care system is on a ventilator and a respirator, Wilf is a respiratory therapist, and many times we rescued very sick patients in the middle of the night. He was kind enough, he and his colleagues, to help us out and do the job of saving the lives of hard-working Albertans. I would ask Wilf to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 17

22. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had a considerable amount of debate on Bill 17, and that's only appropriate because Bill 17 is a very important bill. It had a considerable number of hours at second reading and, I think, some thorough discussion of its principles. We then got into Committee of the Whole, and as House leader I endeavoured to ensure that we had a sufficient amount of time available for every concern that members of the House might have to be addressed in Committee of the Whole. In fact, by my count debate carried on for over 27 hours last week continuously, not continuously on Bill 17, I hasten to add. You know, there was a brief break in there to discuss another bill.

We did spend a considerable amount of time in committee. In fact, we dealt with two amendments fairly thoroughly. Then the third amendment came to the table, and that amendment we dealt with for hours and hours and hours and hours. In the context of that discussion it became very clear that the House had no desire to move off that particular amendment. [interjection] One of the hon. members opposite says that that's because it's important. But if one was to go back and read Hansard, as you admonish us to do from time to time, Mr. Speaker, you'd find that they dealt with it with very little importance for most of their debate.

Most of the salient points can be made in any debate in a good 20-minute speech. If you can't do it in 20 minutes – and sometimes, I admit, I can't – sometimes you need a second 20 minutes. We've had opportunities for every member of the opposition to have many 20 minutes on that. It's patently obvious, if for no other reason than because it's been stated by members of at least one of the opposition parties, that they have no intention of ever getting to a vote on that particular section. They've also moderated that in some other statements to say that they had no intention of getting to a vote on that particular section unless we agree to vote in their manner. Neither of those are particularly appropriate statements to be made. Both of those indicate that it is time for us to move on.

I'm moving this motion so that we can come back into debate on Bill 17 in committee. There, of course, will be time for debate on Bill 17 in third reading, but in committee there's an hour proposed so that we conclude the points that need to be made and vote on the bill in committee. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask for the support of the House.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 21(3), the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on this matter.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is a sad day. I won't say that it's a pleasure to stand and respond to this motion for closure, otherwise called time allocation, since it proposes to prematurely end an important debate on an issue that is of vital importance to Albertans and is in the midst of a crisis, but respond I must.

Mr. Speaker, there are many ways to derail democracy, and this government has a long, long list of ways to deal with this. This health care debate really is much more about public trust than it is about the specifics of this bill or the amendment that's been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It's really about whether this public and these members representing the public of Alberta can trust that this government has the best interests of Albertans and the understanding and the competence to deal with this in a way that will serve the public interest. Clearly, we do not believe that it is there yet. They have not been willing to reconsider the amendment. They have not been willing to reconsider the bill. They have not seen the wisdom of changing the health care system in ways that many experts and much evidence is suggesting would actually deliver the goods on the ground.

The other side of this question about trust has to do with trust in the democratic process and the willingness of this government to cheapen democracy and to diminish the input from not only the opposition members but the public in meaningful ways. The intimidation that has grown to be a norm in Alberta and the culture of silence on the other side in relation to dissent and challenging the decisions of the leadership of this government have become mythic in this province. More and more people are deciding with their feet and, unfortunately, being blamed for not being engaged in the so-called democratic deficit that this government puts onto individuals rather than taking responsibility itself for creating a climate of fear, intimidation, cronyism, and a lack of real accountability to the very people that voted for them.

There are token consultations, of course, and increasingly it's being shown to be a sham, especially when we look at what's happened to our health care system, with petition after petition on how to improve the health care system, how to improve its accountability, clarify roles and responsibilities, deliver health care in the regions, where people can actually respond and address pressing needs there. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this government has lost it. It's putting forward a half-dozen time allocation motions in 30 minutes, a clear sign the Premier doesn't want to listen to anyone except a close circle of friends and cronies, the people who directly profit from the mistakes and bad policy of this government.

In the middle of the health care crisis, you've chosen not to listen to a respected emergency room physician, instead booting him out of caucus for standing up for Albertans. You've chosen not to listen to my own emergency plan for the emergency room, instead releasing yet another toothless plan to develop a plan that will be forgotten along with the other plans collecting dust over many years. Considering the information released to the public yesterday, don't expect Albertans to believe your fairy-tale nonsense. You're so frightened of the public that you're champing at the bit to get out of the Legislature and retreat to home.

Mr. Speaker, this administration doesn't have a divine right to govern. Alberta is not a one-party state, yet that's exactly how the Premier and MLAs are behaving, with contempt for democracy and the people of Alberta. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has crafted an amendment that could significantly increase accountability for emergency room wait times, an amendment that could strongly motivate senior management and government to actually improve the situation in ERs and work together to do so.

But, of course, this government hates accountability, as witnessed by this motion for time allocation and five others brought forward today. The idea of healthy debate is one in which the Premier and his ministers get to call the shots and avoid answers: if you don't like it, get the hell out. Clearly, the fact that your hidden agenda to privatize health care has leaked has scared the daylights out of this administration. We should be in here debating the document, one that threatens a treasured Canadian institution and puts the health of Albertans at increasing risk.

But all that can happen here is denial, dissembling, and ducking for cover. Alberta Liberals and, I dare say, the members of other opposition parties and our independent members believe in democracy with room for dissent. Progressive Conservatives believe in covering their butts when the going gets tough. You have the power to shut down this debate in the Legislature, it's true, but that's where your power stops. Outside of the dome, back out in the real world, the debate continues around every kitchen table in this province. You can do your best to punish and threaten and suppress debate inside; you can't stop the rising tide of Albertans who have lost confidence in this government's ability to manage public health care among many other services. You've lost the moral authority to govern.

[Government Motion 22 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Chair: We have one hour of debate. Any interruption is still within the hour.

On amendment A3 of Bill 17 the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise once again to speak in general about my support for this bill, Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, and in particular to address comments referred to during the debate on the amendment. I also want to just clarify a little bit about what the bill proposes here as it touches on this amendment because I know some members have had some angst with respect to where this particular amendment might go and what it might encompass.

As all members of this House know, Bill 17 has been arrived at as the result of more than a year-long conversation with Albertans from all parts of the province. It's true that during that time we heard a lot about emergency rooms, and that's what this amendment talks about. It's also true that we heard a lot about other things. In fact, that's what the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health set out to do in 2009 and concluded with our government accepting all 15 recommendations of the Putting People First report, that came out on October 20.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

In that respect, Mr. Chair, we were well aware of some of the pressures and the crowdings that have occurred in some of our acute-care hospital emergency rooms. That's why it's important to get on with the action that people want. That's why today I released the 5-Year Health Action Plan and along with it aggressive performance measures that talk about exactly this point, and the point is with respect to the lengths of stay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you would know from the item that we discussed earlier today that it's important to have such performance measures, and it's important to have them in a place and in a form where they can be addressed and where they can be updated and where we can perhaps shoot for new targets without coming in and taking up the Legislature's time to do that.

We want to have in our plan with respect to the length of stay, which is what this amendment is all about, a specific target that deals with the percentage of patients treated and discharged from the emergency department who do not require an overnight stay. In many cases they refer to this as being the four-hour stay. I can tell you that we're working very aggressively on improving that right now. That's why the new protocols have been brought in, Mr. Chairman. That's why the new performance measures have been brought in. That's what Albertans want. They want us to address this aggressively, and we are doing that.

Albertans also told us a lot with respect to what was working well in other parts of the health system. In particular, they talked to us about what needs to be improved and what kind of new health legislation should be brought in. That's why we're bringing in this legislation at this time, because among many things it helps empower and engage people in an active, meaningful discussion with respect to health care. It shouldn't be lost on people that more than 3,000 people were consulted and had input into this Putting People First report, including the people that live in about 23 communities plus numerous other communities. More than 1,500 completed online surveys were recorded, and more than 80 organizations provided written submissions, and many of them touched on the issue of emergency rooms, such as this amendment refers to.

I'm recounting a little bit of this history, Mr. Chairman, just to emphasize to you that Bill 17 really is the voice of thousands of Albertans being reported through this legislation. It's important work that has given us greater understanding of what Albertans expect from their publicly funded health care system and what we as a government are doing to make it even stronger.

In a nutshell, we're talking about Bill 17 in its entirety, not just with respect to one amendment that looks at just one aspect of the Rubik's cube of health but with respect to a set of principles that are described quite vividly in Bill 17 and will help us deliver a better health system overall. In fact, the bill does recognize in writing our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act while including a set of our own made-in-Alberta principles, principles that describe the kind of health system our Alberta people want now and going forward.

That's why we're proposing in there establishing a health charter, that will set out even more clarity on principles and responsibilities with regard to the health system. It talks about establishing a health advocate to resolve citizens' concerns with the health system as they relate to the health charter that is forthcoming. Within that context they will have yet more opportunity to talk about lengths of stay in emergency rooms or access to a specialist or access to cancer treatment start-up after the point of referral. That's why those kinds of discussions have to be assured so that people can have their ability to input, and that's probably the single most important part of this bill, to have a clear direction with regard to the engagement process, Mr. Chairman, a clear engagement process that allows Albertans an opportunity to provide meaningful input, not just on emergency room wait times but on everything to do with health care.

The next phase of our ongoing work is to conclude this debate on Bill 17 so that we can get on with the action, Mr. Chairman, and we can get on with the specifics of all the good stuff that I announced today. What is it that people want? They want improvement of access to health care in general, they want reductions in wait times, they want a strong, confident health system that will be there for them today and tomorrow and for generations to come, and a large number of additional things as well. That's what this Alberta Health Act will do. It will allow us to turn the page and get on with things.

I can appreciate why some members on the other side are trying to stall things and everything else. It's only that they don't want action taken because they know that the action I outlined today, for example, and the actions that Alberta Health Services through their health providers have been tracking and working on for the past number of months are all being accomplished. They're moving forward.

In that respect, I want to just address this issue about some of the lengthy stays. Some of those lengthy stays, Mr. Chairman, have to be examined in terms of what's causing them. We've already talked about the overcrowding pressures in some emergency rooms in some of our acute-care hospitals in this province and what has to be done about it. That's why 100 of our top administrators, our top health care providers – the doctors, the nurses, and others involved in the delivery of health care – met for a whole day, on November 19, to address ER protocols, which is exactly the thrust of this particular amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment was the subject of great discussion, in fact, with respect to lengths of stays in emergency rooms. We have to look at those beds that are occupied now – specifically, I'm talking about acute-care beds – those acute beds that are perhaps occupied today by individuals who could be and should be in a different form of care setting such as a long-term care bed or a designated assisted living bed or some other form of supportive living bed in general, some kind of a continuing care bed that could well be outside the hospital setting.

That's why it's so important to understand the commitment that has been given and the action that's already been taken on opening up more beds in the community. Approximately 1,400 more this year will be opened. That will address the overcrowding pressures. But we're also going further. Through Alberta Health Services we'll be opening another 360 acute-care beds in the hospitals. There are more transition beds being added. There are more medical assessment unit beds, more medical observation unit beds, however you want to call them and classify them. The point here is that many, many more beds are being added to address the overcrowding that exists in some hospitals.

Secondly, they're still talking about the best way to implement the new discharge policy that has been discussed. Again, these changes can't happen that quickly, overnight, but they are happening as fast as they can. The new CEO for Alberta Health Services, Dr. Chris Eagle, who has 33 years of experience as a medical doctor and about 20 years of experience within that of leading health care administrative teams and so on, is doing his best to ensure that these targets are met. Once they are met, Mr. Chairman, you will see reductions in the lengths of stays in the emergency rooms, and that is the central part of all of this.

We know that there are concerns that have been raised that impact this decision and what the role will be of the health charter, how it interfaces with lengths of stays, how the role of the health advocate will interface with the amendment that's on the floor. We also know that meaningful input, which is guaranteed in the bill once it is passed, will also impact lengths of stays in our emergency rooms. It's in that respect that Bill 17, in my view, provides a very practical recourse for a number of issues, including the comments that were made about the health charter that is forthcoming – it still has to be designed – including the health advocate, whose position, I've indicated before, will be similar to but not identical to the Mental Health Patient Advocate's job description.

What we're getting here is a bigger picture of a large number of issues, not just the ER issues. The ER issues are critical – of course they're important – and nobody from this side of the House has said anything different. We understand that, and we're actively pursuing what we can to help strengthen the emergency room scenarios.

Just a couple of quick comments about future decisions that will have to be made and future directions that we'll be going in. As I indicated, Mr. Chairman, I think I answered 30 questions on health care today, and many of them touched on future directions. I want to just assure everybody that those future directions include the strong performance measures that I've alluded to. Without having to put them into law, they will be there along with the other suite of performance targets. In total, we have about 50 new performance targets coming forward that talk about what this amendment talks about: wait times being reduced in ERs, wait times being reduced to see a specialist, wait times being reduced to get into continuing care, wait times being reduced significantly for hip replacements, wait times being reduced for cancer care. There are 50 different performance measures in this document that was released by me and Dr. Chris Eagle today.

The important thing about that, particularly when it comes to the point that the amendment is talking about, which is with respect to the emergency rooms . . .

Mr. Mason: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Mason: A point of order with respect to relevance. First of all, the government has limited remaining debate on this amendment to one hour. Now the minister is proceeding to talk about other matters and to use up a great deal of time in doing so.

There was also a list that was left from the debate that is not being adhered to. I would just request that the chair ask the minister to wrap up his remarks and let other members use what little time there is to actually debate this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, yes, you're quite correct. But no lists are kept from previous days. I have a list from today that has been set up, and I'm working off that list.

Hon. member, please keep your comments relevant.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. Mr. Chairman, I believe I've tied back to the amendment on about 15 occasions so far. I haven't been counting them.

Debate Continued

Mr. Zwozdesky: The point that I'm trying to make here, Mr. Chairman, is that this is not just about emergency rooms. This is about a Rubik's cube of health care delivery that impacts emergency rooms. Beds in acute-care settings impact that. Transition beds impact that. Community care beds impact that. How much service people are getting from home care impacts that. The number of doctors in the system impacts that. So there's a wide range of latitude here.

I've listened very carefully here in the House or in the privacy of my office to some of the meanderings from the other side, and I want to make it quite relevant here that the principles that we're talking about here are important – of course they are – but they're not just restricted to one single part of the system. Emergency rooms, as doctors would tell you, are impacted by a variety of issues, all of them to do with health care, obviously. That's why we're putting into legislation things like the commitment for greater consultation, and that is specific also to other parts of health care. The emergency rooms: with the particular amendment before us and the lengths of stays, that's an important thing that Albertans want to have more say in. And guess what? They're going to get it – they're going to get it – and they're also going to see it.

That's why it's important for us to understand that this amendment is a good amendment from the standpoint of the thrust and spirit of it, and we've included it and incorporated it elsewhere. It's just that it doesn't belong in law. As I indicated before, you can't have this kind of an amendment going into law for fear of some of our doctors or nurses being put under pressure that they shouldn't break the law and perhaps rushing a treatment for a patient that's come in with a legitimate concern. The doctor or the nurse doesn't need to have this kind of legal issue hanging over their heads in addition to the legal obligations and the moral obligations and the Hippocratic oath obligations that they already have. If you take a look at the risks and dangers of putting something like this into law, that would be one significant factor.

Another important factor for not putting an issue like this into specific law, Mr. Chairman, is that you would have so many issues going forward to the courts that you would have the health system, potentially, in the court system more than it is out there serving the public. We wouldn't want that to happen. I know that there are jurisdictions who have tried this and floated the idea out and wound up backing off it. I want to make it very clear that I understand the importance of having performance measures, performance targets, and so on. That's why we've put them into the performance measures document, which I released today.

It's important to note, too, Mr. Chairman, that many provinces have had this discussion. It's important to note that the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians has had a large role to play in this respect and that they are trying to get more provinces onside with some of their national benchmarks. National benchmarks do exist in many cases, and that's an important feature of the system as well. But there are other cases where no national benchmark has yet been agreed to by all provinces; at least, that's my understanding. As a result of that, we have to proceed very carefully and cautiously here, too, because we are tied to a larger body here going across Canada.

My final comments, Mr. Chairman, are just these. There are always going to be more and more debates held with respect to health care. There are always going to be more concerns raised with respect to the length of stay as this amendment talks about. What I'm trying to give people a level of comfort on is that while this amendment is not something that I can support into law, I certainly support the thrust of it in another location. It belongs in policy and it belongs in performance measures and it belongs in the action plan, and we will aggressively pursue that.

Specifically, we're going to set targets so that we see improvements rather immediately. That's what the emergency protocol meeting was about. I helped prompt that meeting because I connected with the board chair back in October, following my meeting with the head of emergency services for Alberta. We talked about the length of stay, which is exactly what this amendment is about. But this amendment also talks about unnecessary resources being allocated. It talks about unnecessary deaths and unnecessary harm. Well, those are givens, Mr. Chairman. Those are givens. You don't have to put that into law. Those are givens. That amendment doesn't have merit, in my view, for the reason that it's already accounted for.

Let's talk about the second part of the amendment a little bit more here before I just conclude. We are going to see aggressive targets that will lead us to what I think the mover of the motion has asked for, and that is a target that would have as many people, even up to 90 per cent, or what's called the 90th percentile, accessing services from treatment and discharge for minor cases within a four-hour period to those that are more complicated and do require an overnight stay to perhaps up to eight hours.

Then I've indicated with respect to the lengths of stays that this amendment talks about that that information will be reported publicly, Mr. Chairman. It will be reported in an aggregate sense in terms of the busiest sites, the busiest 16 sites in the case of the four-hour measurement, also on an individual site for that particular performance measure, and the busiest 15 sites in the case of the eight-hour example I gave as well as a reporting of all individual sites.

So are there issues here? Of course there are. Are there some problems? Of course there are. Are we dealing with them? Yes, we are. It's just that for the reasons given, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support this amendment going into law. It's already in other parts of the document, and I would say thank you to the House for understanding that and for understanding also why I'm not able to support it going into law. I'm firmly in favour of it going into our performance measures and targets, and that's what we've done.

Thank you very much for your attention, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As Leader of the Opposition I feel it incumbent to make my statements again on the record. I'll be very brief. I want to focus very specifically on the amendment and say that this amendment is really about holding a government accountable. We've had two years of chaos, confusion, suffering, and preventable deaths in the system, and this amendment is going to hold the real parties accountable, the Premier and the minister. Of course, they don't want to accept accountability for this. They haven't done so before this. Why would they embrace legislation that would force that to occur?

Imagine if you could, Mr. Chairman, a child in emergency with an injured leg sitting beside a woman in emergency who is bleeding, sitting beside an older man who's had a partial stroke, sitting beside a middle-aged woman who's had a fever for 24 hours, sitting beside a middle-aged man who has just had the most severe headache he's had in his life. All these people are sitting together, waiting and waiting and waiting, in some cases in such discomfort that they are affecting the emotions of the people next to them. Health professionals are going in to see these people, trying to cope with the stress and discomfort or pain or need for urgent care, and it's not happening. The anxiety, the fear: imagine that these people are your family members.

This is what we're talking about, Mr. Chairman. We're talking about real people suffering real consequences from the lack of understanding and commitment to the health care system as it is today. Two years with no improvement in these very fundamental parts of the system, no improvement in family doctor access, no improvement in home care services, no improvement in long-term care facilities so that we still have people that should be in long-term care taking up beds in hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, this is about accountability. This amendment is really going to for the first time get beyond numbers and plans, plan after plan after plan, which we have seen in this House and beyond this House without results. It's saying to the government: you are responsible. This minister is responsible and this Premier is responsible for a system that is totally broken down in providing the basics of care to Albertans. That is what this is about. It must be supported in order to hold us accountable as legislators, especially those who make the rules here.

Mr. Chairman, I can't emphasize enough that this would make an important difference to a system that has lost all credibility not only among professionals, who are at the end of their ropes, but among the populace, who no longer have confidence in the ability of the government or the system to provide them with their most basic of needs.

I encourage people to the utmost to ensure that this amendment gets passed so that we can, indeed, look Albertans in the eye and say: we are setting targets, and we are going to hold each other accountable for them. We are not going to continue year after year after year changing and lowering the standards, as we have seen in this latest plan today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak again to amendment A3 to Bill 17. As we know, there have been a number of speeches on this over the last little while and, I would say, some very important points made by members on all sides of the House. I'd like to take a few moments to talk about some of those and, in particular, to explain why as important as I think measurement and monitoring of performance are in relation to this amendment, I also think that we can't lose sight of the fact that there are a number of factors, some of which have already been discussed, that are, in fact, the root causes of some of the lengthy emergency room wait times we've seen across the province.

To begin, with respect to the amendment, Mr. Chair, I guess we have some disagreement, obviously, around the House as to whether legislation is the right place to establish such targets, but I think where we appear to be in agreement is that these targets are all important. They're all important not only for the question of wait times for emergency room services, but I would argue also that they are equally important for other key access points in the system. Some of these have already been mentioned: access to family physicians or primary care teams where they are available; access to continuing care; access to mental health services; access to services which have a direct impact on the social determinants of health, so for people who are homeless, access to homes and to support for their needs once they have found housing; access to income support services. All of these things make a very important contribution to the length of the wait times that Albertans may encounter in their emergency rooms.

I would be the first to say, Mr. Chair, that certainly based on feedback from my constituents and feedback received during the consultation that led up to the development of Bill 17, emergency room wait times are among the highest concerns of Albertans, particularly in our larger urban centres. I must also tell you that at no time did I encounter the suggestion that we enshrine targets in legislation as a suggested solution from anyone that I talked to over those few months.

In fact, what people called for – and this is certainly outlined in the Putting People First report – was attention to the various factors that I just mentioned, primary care probably the most important. I visited a number of rural communities, smaller communities across the province where because of a lack of family physicians or, where physicians exist, a lack of appropriate clinical facilities for them to practice within, a large number of people reported the need to use the emergency department as a way to access family medicine.

While it obviously caused all of us great concern, Mr. Chair, I think what was more illuminating was that Albertans also reported that they were aware that the use of the emergency department to access primary care was not an appropriate use of the emergency department. While many reported having no other option, again going back to my earlier point about the root causes, a number of them also suggested that they would prefer to see government focus on expanding access to primary care than setting hard-and-fast targets, which they felt, at least at this point, we would not be in a position to meet. I think that's another area that we need to look at a little here.

While the notion of enshrining targets in legislation I think would be an extremely important symbol to Albertans – and I think some other members of the House have presented arguments as to why that might be a good idea – I think what Albertans are looking for and what the minister is endeavouring to deliver here is some concrete action around the factors that contribute to those long emergency room wait times.

In addition to the measures that he's just reviewed – the addition of 360 more hospital beds and 3,000 more surgical procedures, expanding Health Link services, the addition of additional continuing care spaces – I think, Mr. Chair, that we do need a discussion about how our continuing care system is structured and whether it is providing sufficient capacity to meet the needs of people, particularly those who are waiting in acute-care beds.

Back to the amendment. In terms of other root causes that are being addressed, the addition of 65 more staff to work in mental health and addictions programs in schools and clinics and the increased focus on wellness, which the minister talked about extensively – my position, then, with respect to the amendment, Mr. Chair, would be that an integrated approach to these kinds of initiatives and others is what is going to actually drive an improvement in this all-important measurement of the performance of our health care system.

The other thing that I think should be pointed out with respect to the proposal in this amendment is that when we look at what we would be enshrining in legislation if this amendment were to pass, essentially what we would have available to us is an entitlement or a right provided for in legislation. You know, to go back to some of the arguments that have been used about other aspects of Bill 17, I can't foresee what possible recourse would be available to people in the event that in some part of Alberta those wait time targets could not be met as would be prescribed by legislation if this amendment was in fact approved.

This brings me to the question then, Mr. Chair: what is actually being proposed for inclusion in the bill through the amendment? What we have proposed for inclusion is, in fact, as far as I understand it and it's been explained to me, the gold standard in terms of clinical practice guidelines for the treatment of patients in emergency rooms. That goes to the maximum waiting times that are proposed by this amendment. Again, this document was developed by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, but if you have the opportunity to look at it a little further, you'll see that there are other protocols that are included in that document, things that have to do with the assessment process and the triage process for patients when they come into the emergency room, things that have to do with the appropriate review of patient needs and of opportunities for appropriate referral to other parts of the health care system where those needs can be more effectively met.

In fact, the solution, Mr. Chair, in my view, would not be the enshrining of those maximum wait times, as important a symbolic gesture as that may be. I would agree that it might be considered a very important symbol to Albertans who have encountered very long waiting times. The real solution, I think, is a determined effort to look at the areas that I mentioned, the areas that drive ER wait times – principally primary care, continuing care services, making some improvements in those areas – building on the things that have already been announced and, in fact, not proceeding with what I would call a right-space solution, which would be the approval of an amendment as proposed, as this one is, as part of the bill, but a practice-based solution that is supported by adequate resources, of course, that is supported by the recognition and the adoption of appropriate evidence-based clinical protocols that are recommended not by government but by health professionals, by practitioners who have reviewed evidence, who have refined procedures, and who are in a position to speak with authority on such matters.

Then, of course, the third area. I think the minister has embarked on this today. The third thing we would need to do, as opposed to what's been proposed here, is to make the commitment to appropriately measure the right things, monitor and publicly report on our performance and commit ourselves to learning from that measurement, and truly enter into a system that is focused on continuous improvement. A lot of that job, Mr. Chair, you know, notwithstanding the important symbol that this amendment might represent for a lot of Albertans – those things are actually driven by a commitment. They are driven by a commitment by government, by all members of this House. They are driven by appropriate and meaningful engagement of front-line health professionals in looking at the issues, in determining what the best approaches should be.

I've always been, you know, a firm believer that we can't do enough in terms of consultation with the people that work in our health system, both the regulated professions that deliver care and all of the other employees who support them. There are many, many support workers who work in that regard.

I think that going forward, while I can't support the amendment as proposed, what I certainly can support, Mr. Chair, is a much more extensive discussion of the guidelines that have been proposed for inclusion in Bill 17, meaningful and ongoing engagement with not just physicians but other health professionals that work with physicians to support them in delivering emergency room care. While we have some good performance measures that have been laid out here, I think those, too, should be the subject of continuous discussion and refinement and would play a part in the solution as opposed to legislating the maximum wait times that are proposed here, a think-through supported by consultation of our whole continuing-care system, looking at the need or the unmet need, as may be perceived, for long-term care beds but also looking at the whole continuum of services that need to be provided.

You'll recall, Mr. Chair, that the report that is the foundation for Bill 17 talked a lot about a system much more focused on the needs of people and families and communities as opposed to institutions. Unfortunately, the amendment as proposed, as I see it, while it may be an important symbol in the short term, would ultimately just serve to reinforce the current bias in some of our legislation toward meeting the needs of an institution. A number of hon. members in the course of this debate have talked about their considered reading of the varying experiences with this type of legislated wait times in other jurisdictions. We've heard various accounts of some success and also, certainly, some failure and some concern about, in order to assist and having to adjust itself in order to meet these stringent targets, perhaps not doing the best that could be possibly done to meet the needs of all patients who present for treatment.

These are all very important considerations, I think, going forward. How do we do this? I say again that I don't think we do it by legislating a static target for all time. I'm not disputing the fact that we need to have these targets. This is probably the best possible target we could look at, ultimately, as things begin to improve. This is without question the gold standard that's been set out. But to legislate that at this point, Mr. Chair, would do a couple of things.

First of all, I would suggest that if this amendment were to pass and the bill that it's meant to amend were to pass, we would be in a position here very quickly, upon royal assent, where we have committed ourselves as an Assembly to some wait time targets in law that I'm not convinced we will be able to achieve, certainly not right away.

One of the good things about the debate on this amendment, I must say, has been the very thorough vetting of this issue of emergency wait times and the things that drive it. It has been a very good and thorough vetting of the need to do a better job of engaging directly with physicians and other health professionals, not necessarily by politicians but by the organization that delivers Alberta Health Services, by the colleges that govern our health professions, by the professional associations, by researchers, by all of those, Mr. Chair, who actually have a stake and have some capacity to help us achieve such an important goal. That would be one of the things I would offer in terms of concerns about the amendment as proposed passing.

I guess the second thing is just what it might lead to, Mr. Chair, in terms of legislating maximum wait times for other procedures. There was an initiative in this regard that was launched a few years ago by the federal government under the then minister of health, who attempted through discussion and consultation and consideration of evidence to actually work to try to achieve national consensus on maximum wait times for a variety of services, including elective surgeries like arthroplasty, hip and knee surgery, cataract surgery, cardiac bypass surgery, and many other areas.

You know, I had the opportunity to follow those discussions and to attend a couple of the meetings. I can tell you from listening to other provinces that have perhaps in many ways, I guess at least in terms of health care dollars, less capacity than Alberta to deliver on a commitment to national wait time targets – at the time I can recall hearing about their concerns and, too, those within our system, as fortunate as we are, at least from a dollar point of view, to have the resources to allocate to health care. That's about 41 per cent of our operating budget at the moment, Mr. Chair.

The other concern I would have is whether we could make a commitment that the achievement of these guidelines could be equally delivered in all parts of our health care system. Just going back to my initial point, you know, I did visit a number of rural communities where the emergency department, unfortunately, is functioning in large part as the family practice clinic for that community because of things like lack of physicians and lack of facilities for physicians to practise in.

I think all of these things, Mr. Chair, for me would point to a need to work on a few things; first of all, looking at not just the formal adoption of these guidelines by either the government or Alberta Health Services as our commitment – I think they're a worthy target that we should work toward – but looking at other wait time targets that we need to establish. Some have been announced, I guess, by the minister today, and people will take the time to review and determine whether those are appropriate.

Looking at how we better engage health professionals in the kind of robust discussion that as elected people we've been able to have over this particular amendment I think has been very helpful, but I'd be the first to admit, not counting the number of members in this House who are health professionals, that we need to hear from a lot more. They want us to hear from them. There was certainly no greater lesson than that in the consultation process over the spring and summer.

The third is that we really need to get our heads around what we can do in primary care. The Putting People First report proposed that the proposed health charter include a commitment that all Albertans would have access to a primary care team. By virtue of being residents of Alberta, Albertans should have access to a primary care team, including a family physician. That needs to be part of the discussion before considering an amendment such as this, I would suggest, Mr. Chair.

Then the other area I mentioned that I'm hoping to have some time to talk to people about and to roll up sleeves and work on is that whole area of continuing care and whether the range of services that we currently have in place is actually meeting the needs of people and actually achieving what we have committed to do, which is to assist people to age in place.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Chair, I don't believe that the amendment as proposed will achieve the sorts of objectives that I've talked about. I'm willing to acknowledge, of course, that it may be to many Albertans an important symbol of a commitment to act on a very urgent issue, but I do not believe that the government would be in a position to be able to be accountable at this stage in time should the overarching bill pass this House. I really don't believe that we've had the level of engagement and discussion with the people who actually deliver the care to justify the amendment. For those reasons I also see risk to the passage of amendment A3.

Mr. Chair, those are my best arguments in terms of acknowledging the merit of the concept but also some of the risks and some of the opportunities we need to pursue to be able to actually deliver on a commitment like that. I hope, regardless of the outcome of the debate on this amendment, that this discussion will in fact lead to serious consideration about how these guidelines are formally integrated into the health care system and that it will lead to a discussion about what other sorts of targets we need to establish, what the evidence should be to support those targets, and how we're going to orchestrate the mechanisms in our health system to measure and monitor and report on the performance.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm honoured and humbled to rise and speak to a very important issue to all Albertans, to my family, to every health care worker, and to myself.

I'd like to start off by talking to you about the filibuster. In ancient Rome one of the first known practitioners of the filibuster was the Roman Senator Cato the Younger. In debates over legislation he especially opposed, Cato would often obstruct the measure by speaking continuously until nightfall as the Roman Senate had a rule requiring all business to conclude by dusk. His long-winded speeches were an effective device to forestall a vote.

In this case Raj the Younger wasn't attempting to forestall the vote on the amendment. The point was actually to improve the bill currently before us. Cato made use of the filibuster in 59 BC in response to a land reform bill, and in the end Caesar, who needed to pass the bill before his co-consul took possession of the fasces at the end of the month, immediately recognized Cato's intent and ordered the lictors to jail him for the rest of the day. The move was unpopular with many Senators, and Caesar, realizing his mistake, soon ordered Cato's release. The day was wasted without the Senate ever getting to vote on a motion supporting the bill, but Caesar eventually circumvented Cato's opposition by taking the measure to the tribal assembly, where it passed.

Mr. Chairperson, the reason we're talking about this very important bill is because I was in Dr. Paul Parks's position, and I had brought this matter up to the hon. Member for Sherwood Park when she was the Minister of Health and Wellness. My colleagues before me had brought this matter up in 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005. In 2007 we worked with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. We achieved some short-term gains, but the hon. member was busy passing Bill 41, beating up the doctors and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and dropped the ball. All of these 322 cases and these deaths have been under the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was his executive assistant.

Then, come 2008 and the election in 2009, we had a decent health care system, that was jackhammered by the hon. Member for Calgary-West. The health care system became worse.

That sequence of events led to Dr. Paul Parks writing a letter on October 8 to the Premier saying that the emergency medical services are on the verge of a catastrophic collapse. This is after letters were written to all these ministers and reassurances were given. Announcements were made in my home of God knows how many long-term care beds to address this issue. Mr. Chairperson, God knows what's going to happen after 2011.

We have made the largest investment into health care in the largest economic downturn in history. Part of the things that led me to speak out was when Dr. Paul Parks spoke up. My friends and family members and I became aware of many bad outcomes and deaths, and I had a moral and an ethical duty and a covenant as a physician to inform the public. Those who manage the system and run the system were a threat to the public safety of the emergency medical system.

How did this happen? The problem really is that our seniors have inadequate home care and home supports, so they plug up our acute-care beds. The number of ALC days in acute care since 2006 has gone up at a 60 per cent rate, which in turn leads to admitted people plugging up the emergency department, which in turn leads to sick people plugging up the waiting rooms, which in turn also leads to a whole ambulance fleet waiting metres from care with sick patients for hours on end until the patients decompensate, which in turn would lead to no ambulances on the street to respond to urgent 911 calls. We recently have had red alerts in not only Edmonton but Calgary and rural Alberta, which in turn also led to record numbers of sick patients leaving without treatment.

I counted about 80 patients six weeks ago at the Royal Alexandra hospital alone: two stabbings, six major traumas, six suicidal patients, four overdoses, three miscarrying mothers, six elderly men with crushing chest pain and two elderly men who were unable to urinate, four seizures, God knows how many children with fevers, and God knows what their diagnosis was. These were people who left without treatment.

Mr. Chairperson, the health care system is broken. This government broke it. This minister has done his very best. I worked with him. The previous minister smashed it. These are the problems.

Secondly, the problem is that we have a 16 per cent readmission rate. Once you go through that whole tortuous journey, you actually get started again 16 per cent of the time because there is no family doctor to follow up with. We have a broken primary care system. This government broke it.

What brought me to this point? It was a sequence of events that all occurred at the same time after Dr. Paul Parks's letter. I had to read in the newspapers who the four new board members were. As the parliamentary assistant I did not have the opportunity to say if there was a good idea or a bad idea. Secondly, all these performance measures were brought up at a last committee meeting before they went to caucus. The one performance measure that should be the number one performance measure for a system was worth 5 per cent of it, hugged, buried, deep within the document. I did not agree with it. It was brought back from caucus. I had no input into it, still have had no input into it.

By 2012 the length of stay was supposed to be eight hours at the 90th percentile before the big bailout of billions of dollars. That goalpost got moved to 2015. That measure got reduced to 60 per cent and by mixing in the top 15 sites. The hon. member from across the way raised legitimate concerns about the Foothills hospital. The care for those patients will be no better because the data will be diluted by the fantastic work done in Lethbridge and in Medicine Hat.

We've had deaths and bad outcomes for years on end. Health care staff have been afraid to speak up. If they speak up, they get hammered. You know how I know this? I spoke up 11 years ago, and I got hammered, just like I got hammered now. This is the same old movie. What they do with anybody that complains is predictable. They either find something that you did wrong and try to take your licence away, or you get upset and then they say that you're crazy. This is an old, boring movie, Mr. Chairperson.

We've had an emergency debate that was rejected. Then we had an emergency debate that was accepted. Mr. Chairman, we have many other amendments that need to be debated. We've only worked for five weeks in this Legislature, after the biggest pay raise in history for the cabinet ministers. Albertans expect us to earn our wage for an honest day's work. Can we honestly tell them that we have done that after the largest pay raise?

We've had a CEO that was fired. We've had four board members that have resigned. The confidence in the health care system is in the boots. The morale of front-line staff is at 25 per cent. I think the front-line staff, starting with this one right here, are sick and tired of the gibberish and the gobbledygook and the rumours and the innuendos. We've had a leaked document to privatize health care. When the Premier said that the third way is DOA, it appears that it's alive and well, and we have all seen it in caucus, behind the scenes.

We've had billions of dollars. Not only that, but more importantly there are a hundred thousand health care workers, from cleaning staff to nurses and doctors and paramedics and firefighters, working hard each and every day while 3.5 million Albertans wait metres from care with their family members. Mr. Chairman, the number one perception of the health care system of Albertans is their experience in the emergency room, and the second is access to a family doctor.

Mr. Chairman, if we don't look at past mistakes – we've had many mistakes. The Health Quality Council hasn't been called in to do a system review. If this was the airline industry and the patient was an airplane, we would have an airplane crashing every 15 minutes in this province.

I would have to say that as a doctor we have a mental health certificate form when you're a danger to yourself or others. I would have to say that the decisions made by this government, which I was a part of, are a danger to themselves and to patients. That would be reason to certify this government under the Mental Health Act to Alberta Hospital Edmonton. But guess what? There's no room. They were going to blow it up.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about solutions. Solutions are very simple. One is: let's work on the output of health care. Let's concentrate on home care, home care, and home care, and home supports. Let's call in those nurses that were recruited that were turned down, bring them in as nursing aides. Let's call in the Red Cross or the Victorian Order of Nurses. We have one of the most underresourced home care systems in the country despite the recent investment. We need to do better. Let's keep seniors in their own homes with their own family members.

Let's invest after that in subacute care, rehab care, palliative care, hospice care. Let's allow our seniors to die with dignity with their loved ones around them, not in a waiting room metres from care, half-naked in a skinny little gown, as the world walks by.

Let's not examine our children in tents anymore. It's not an emergency problem. This is a health care system problem that manifests itself in the emergency room.

Then let's concentrate on long-term care beds. If we need any acute-care beds, let's do the acute-care beds, but first let's get the bed blockers out.

Secondly, let's concentrate on input. The real problem is that we have too many sick people because of our broken primary care system. That's the underlying problem. We need to get these primary care networks. Patients who are discharged from hospital must be the first ones rostered on. Maybe those patients should be worth a hundred bucks a pop, and money should follow that patient into a primary care network because they're likely to get readmitted. You know why? They have no family doctor to follow up with. Let's roster them into the PCNs first. Let's get those seniors whose family doctor is retiring or is sick – maybe 75 bucks a pop – a family doctor and a PCN second because they are likely to get admitted. Those with two or three chronic diseases – you know what? – let's get them rostered third because they are likely to get admitted.

The healthy patient in Edmonton-Whitemud, which is probably a doctor married to a doctor, with three healthy kids: they've got lots of money. They're healthy as can be. You know what? They probably don't need a primary care network in that area because they are all health care professionals anyway, and they're doing the right thing.

It's the inner city that needs the resourcing. It's Edmonton-Meadowlark, where all the seniors are, that needs the resourcing. It's rural Alberta. It's Bonnyville. It's Cold Lake. It's southern Alberta. Let's concentrate on wellness: school place, workplace, and community-based wellness and especially injury prevention.

So input and output, then lastly is throughput. Throughput is where the performance and accountability measures come for those who work in and administrate and run the health care system. There is no legal liability with this legislation. The fact that we have these airplanes crashing every 15 minutes, that is what causes legal liability. To sue the health care system: there were six major lawsuits settled with the Calgary health region two weeks after I became the parliamentary assistant because of delays in care. This will actually save on legalities. This is not a wait time guarantee for patients that will sue; it's actually a performance measure for those who do administrative work in health care. Members on the other side are mistaken.

Today if we had an advocate, they would get at least 2,000 to 5,000 complaints a day. With these performance and accountability measures let's fix up the system with the toughest accountability measures in the nation, and then bring in the advocate. You're going to need a thousand advocates to deal with all of the complaints that we get today.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to talk about mental health. Everyone's talking about mental health, and I'd like to change the conversation from my mental health. To be honest, I've admitted that, of course, I'm crazy, you guys. I gave up a world-class career to run for politics. I fully admit that I was crazy as hell to do that. Guilty as charged.

But I'll tell you: I ain't stupid, and I know what I'm talking about. Nobody over there has listened, and they've got to listen now. There are a lot of well-meaning people over there, but to be honest, they have no clue about what's going on in the business of health care because they have no health care background, just like I have no clue about what's going on in the oil industry. Anything I know is the result of what other health care workers have taught me. I do not have the arrogance to say that I know everything, but I do listen, and I listen a lot to those who know what they're talking about.

Mr. Chairman, this is a sad day for Alberta. A province that prides itself on excellence chickened out – it chickened out – on being excellent. We settled for probably not even second best, probably not even third best. Some other province is actually going to do this before us. Dr. Chris Evans, who is the head doctor in the nation, is the one who worked on these measures, our homegrown guy. Must some other province do this?

I'd like to read quotes by Gandhi. My grandfather was his friend. They freed a nation.

Non-cooperation with evil is a sacred duty.

You assist an evil system most effectively by obeying its orders and decrees. An evil system never deserves such allegiance. Allegiance to it means partaking of the evil. A good person will resist an evil system with his or her whole soul.

Nonviolence is the greatest force at the disposal of mankind. It is mightier than the mightiest weapon of destruction devised by the ingenuity of man.

You must be the change you wish to see in the world.

Whether humanity will consciously follow the law of love, I do not know. But that need not disturb me. The law will work just as the law of gravitation works, whether we accept it or not. The person who discovered the law of love was a far greater scientist than any of our modern scientists.

Mr. Chairman, I challenge all of my friends here to put their partisan beliefs aside. There's no possible way a hundred per cent of the people on one side can agree. All of these folks from the left and the right and the middle and the centre and the independents have all come to agreement – in fact, one of these people may actually form the next government – and they said: we're willing to be held accountable by these performance measures. I challenge my colleagues on the other side to have the moral courage to show leadership and stand up for what they believe in, for what is right, for what is just, for what the doctors believe in, for what Albertans deserve, for what all those patients deserve. I challenge you to vote your conscience and vote for your constituents.

May God bless Alberta. May God bless us all. Thank you so much.

Ms DeLong: I want to say thank you very much, first of all, to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark because I think that he has added an awful lot of emotion to this debate. I believe that as Canadians we tend to be a little too acquiescent, so he has added emotion. But as the government . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, but pursuant to Government Motion 22, agreed to on November 30, 2010, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be put to conclude debate on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the following questions.

[Request to report Bill 17 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

5:20

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report Bill 17.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please take your seats.
The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 17. I wish to table all copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and to move third reading of Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, we've now had over 30 hours of debate and time spent on this bill, and I know that we will have yet another two hours or more as we go through the final stage, or what is called third reading. Bill 17 responds to the principles that Albertans told us that they want to see enshrined in legislation that would guide actions and decisions in our health system. The principles, acknowledged in word, in deed, and in law, reflect and acknowledge our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act and also to a set of made-in-Alberta principles, principles that are progressive and that reflect Albertans' values.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, the proposed bill will require the minister to establish a health charter that sets out principles and responsibilities within the health system, establishes a health advocate to resolve citizen concerns with the health system as they relate to that charter, and provides for public input in the development of health regulations under the act.

We have spent a lot of time listening to what Albertans said they want in their health system and how they want to be involved in decisions about their publicly funded health system. This bill as proposed, otherwise known as the Alberta Health Act, will allow us to deliver and to address those expectations. Bill 17 is an integral part of our ongoing work to build the best performing publicly funded health system in Canada. My Department of Health and Wellness will lead the work to establish the health advocate I referred to and to finalize the health charter in consultation with Albertans. I'm looking forward to more public discussions and to more input as we complete this important work.

Our next steps will be to validate that charter, once it's arrived at with the people, and ensure what was first proposed in the document Putting People First as presented and advocated to me by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. This will involve input from the public and from key stakeholders, and it will also include health providers and numerous health organizations. Following that feedback, Mr. Speaker, the health charter will be finalized, and it will be made available to the public, but I want to stress that the public will be involved in the design and development of that particular charter once we conclude this debate and get started on it.

Health professional regulatory bodies will also be required to align their bylaws, codes of conduct, and operational guidelines to be consistent with that charter.

The health advocate will be established at the same time, prior to the implementation of the health charter. The health advocate will address citizen concerns that relate to the health charter and will report annually to Albertans through the Minister of Health and Wellness. The health advocate should be in place by the end of 2011 or sooner if possible.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has set out a bold vision. As I've mentioned numerous times, that vision is the best performing publicly funded health system in Canada. This bill, once it's passed, finalized, and brought into law, will help us get there.

Earlier today, alongside the acting CEO from Alberta Health Services, I announced our concrete commitment to Albertans to achieve that vision. This plan that I announced today, called Becoming the Best, outlines five key strategies to drive improvements in our health system, improvements that this bill pledges to see through.

Those five strategies include improving access and reducing wait times, providing more options for continuing care, strengthening primary health care, staying healthy, and building one health system. Under each of these strategies we outline where we want to be in year 1 of the plan, in year 2 of the plan, in years 3, 4, and 5 of the plan. Our five-year health action plan, Becoming the Best, is a serious step toward what Albertans have asked for, and that is action. That action plan is accompanied by specific performance measures, which have been talked about with reference to this bill even just earlier this afternoon. This means that we're going to have a health system that is more focused than ever before on the things that Albertans have told us they want from their health system.

This bill, Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is about many things, and it includes, as referenced on page 2 of the Bill, "reasonable access to timely and appropriate care." It enshrines that accessibility to publicly funded health services, and it says that it will be based on need, not on ability to pay. I want to repeat that. It enshrines that "accessibility to publicly funded health services is based on need, not on the ability to pay." So anybody who is out there telling you that there is some agenda to the contrary is wrong. There is nothing to do with privatization here. There are no hidden agendas. There haven't been any, and there won't be any.

Albertans have told us clearly what they want. They want shorter wait lists, and that's what they're going to get with this action plan, shorter wait lists for key hospital services. That's one reason why we're opening 360 new hospital beds as part of this plan.

Albertans want more access to primary care. That means expanding the current 38 primary care networks, and we'll do that as well.

Albertans want more access to continuing care. That's why we're opening 1,400 or so new continuing care spaces in the community.

Albertans also want more focus on wellness, which is why I'm hosting Alberta's first-ever wellness forum in Edmonton starting tomorrow for three days.

Albertans also want one health system, and that's one reason why we're expanding our current electronic health records system and establishing a patient portal to deliver on that promise as well.

On the topic raised in the bill that deals with access, we will have better access to key services like emergency, like surgery, like cancer care and continuing care. The announcement I made today, which flows right out of this bill that we're debating here today, outlines the most ambitious, the most aggressive, and the most comprehensive set of commitments to improve health access in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and it's backed by a solid plan to deliver on those commitments. For example, during the course of the five-year funding plan, that I announced today with CEO Dr. Chris Eagle from Alberta Health Services, here are some of the things we are going to do to "strengthen the overall health and wellness of Albertans," to quote from the top of page 2 of the bill we're debating.

We're going to reduce wait times for hip replacements by more than half, from 35 weeks last year down to 14 weeks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, sir. I think this relates in that the hon. minister is talking about his five-point plan that he introduced today. He's not really talking about the act and what is implemented. I think we heard a lot about a plan, but it's not about the act. I don't know. Maybe I was mishearing you. Maybe, if you do that, that would be fine. On the act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. I don't know if it was a question of mishearing, but perhaps I didn't make it as clear as I would have liked to. I'm quoting the act itself.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, continue on.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. It says on the top of page 2 of the bill that we "should strengthen the overall health and wellness of Albertans," and I'm telling you now some of the things we're doing to deliver on that. I'll be as brief as I can, Mr. Speaker, because this is a very comprehensive set of things we'll be doing.

I was saying that we're going to reduce wait times for hip replacements by more than half, from 35 weeks last year down to 14 weeks during the course of this plan. We're going to reduce wait times for cancer patients to see an oncologist by two-thirds, from seven weeks down to only two weeks over the course of the plan. We're going to reduce the amount of time that seriously sick patients – and I'm talking here about patients who require hospitalization, otherwise known as an overnight stay for one or more nights – spend in emergency. That will be a maximum of eight hours before they move to a hospital bed. That means having 90 per cent of patients admitted to an overnight bed within that time frame as compared to 38 per cent last year, and this applies to the 15 biggest emergency departments. That's all about access, Mr. Speaker, as referenced here in the act on page 2, four paragraphs from the bottom, "that Albertans [will] have reasonable access to timely and appropriate care," and it goes on.

It also means that those patients who do not require hospitalization but have gone to an emergency room for whatever reason should be into and out of that emergency room and on their way back home within four hours if they don't need an overnight stay. Again, that's all at the 90th percentile over the course of the plan.

Our goals here are in line with the standards set by Canadian physicians, and in several cases, Mr. Speaker, we plan to exceed those national standards, and we've debated some of those national standards here as part of our discussion.

Under the issue also of a person's physical, spiritual, and mental health, as referenced on page 2 of the bill, two paragraphs from the bottom it says that "Alberta's health system recognizes that health encompasses a person's physical, spiritual and mental health, from birth to the end of life."

I want to tell you that with respect to the physical side Canada's orthopaedic surgeons have said that hip replacements should be done within 26 weeks. Our target is to do far better than that. We're targeting 14 weeks. Similarly, regarding radiation treatment, the provinces have adopted a common goal of four weeks to start radiation after seeing an oncologist. Alberta has also adopted a target of a maximum of four weeks to see a radiation oncologist; that is, after referral from a general practitioner. Now we're stepping that target up to two weeks.

Regarding ER targets, which was the subject of an amendment pertaining to this bill not long ago, it's important to note that our emergency targets are the same as those in Ontario, for example, where 90 per cent of patients who are in need of an overnight stay will be admitted within eight hours of first arriving in the emergency room. If they don't need an overnight stay, they will be seen, and they will be discharged and sent home with proper care having been given within four hours. Our wait times at present are actually slightly better than many provinces', I understand.

With this new plan and now that we have the new act going forward through the final stages, we will see the improvements that we seek. That's what this bill is all about, Mr. Speaker. It's a bill that talks about how we can help Albertans navigate the system. That's why an important part, to me, of this bill, other than what I've already mentioned, is on page 9, where it talks about public input. It's important for Albertans to know that any time we are addressing some of these issues I've just talked about, the more comprehensive ones, the more substantive ones, there is a clause – well, it's more than a clause. It's a significant amount of text dedicated to public input.

I just want to refresh people's memory quickly on it. On page 9 it reads:

14(1) Neither the Minister nor the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall make any regulation under this Act unless

- (a) the Minister has published a notice of the proposed regulation on the public website of the Minister's department,
- (b) the notice complies with the requirements of this section,
- (c) the time period specified in the notice, during which members of the public and stakeholders may submit comments, has expired, and
- (d) the Minister has reported to the Executive Council in accordance with subsection (4).

(2) The notice referred to in subsection (1)(a) must contain . . .

And it goes on to say:

- (a) a summary of the proposed regulation and the proposed text of it;
- (b) a statement of the time period during which members of the public and stakeholders may submit written comments on the proposed regulation to the Minister and the manner in which the comments must be submitted;
- (c) any other information that the Minister considers appropriate.

It's very transparent. It's very inclusionary.

I'll just close by saying, Mr. Speaker, that this act will help us move the system forward to where we believe it needs to go. It needs to go to where people can better understand what we're trying to do to improve it, it needs to go to where the public has continued, meaningful input in the dialogue and the discussion on things that are of critical importance to them, and it goes to where we as a government are accountable for it, where we have made the approach through a very open form of dialogue, engaging Albertans, and it speaks to our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act and to those principles of highest regard in the minds of Albertans.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat so that others can comment, and I would ask everyone to please now allow Bill 17 to be moved and adopted and passed in this Assembly so that we can get on with the actions that were announced today and with the performance measures that need to be met tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have a list of people who sent me a note: in sequence here the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Varsity, Calgary-Fish Creek, Edmonton-Meadowlark.

All right. We go through the parties: the Liberals, the WRA, and the NDs in sequence – right? – and then back to the government. Opposition, government, but in the sequence I just said about the parties.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, has been touted, trumpeted by this government as the cure to what ails the system. However, it offers nothing in terms of timelines or targets, nothing in terms of financial commitments. The escape clause is: over the course of the plan. The escape clause is "that the Minister considers appropriate."

Rien, nyet, nada, nothing is being promised. Targets can be changed. Timelines can be changed. Any of the requirements can be left to ministerial discretion. How is this going to move us from where the destruction of the system began back in 1993-1994? I don't see it. Simply coming up with numbers – for example, the Sesame Street number of the day brought to you by the minister of health is five, so we keep hearing about five this, five that, five the other. This is a wish rather than a plan. There's no commitment, no obligation. Publishing notices is the lowest form of consultation.

Basically, the bill has two parts. It has a patients' so-called bill of rights or a charter of rights, and it has the provision for a patient advocate. Health advocate is the other terminology used. But the health advocate has no power. The health advocate can bring something to the minister's attention, but there's no requirement that whatever is brought to the minister's attention actually gets fixed. I would suggest that we're starting off with a health advocate who has been fixed to begin with. How is that health person going to accomplish anything other than raising an issue that can be filed in that file 13, the round one at the end of the desk? The patient advocate has no power, so let's get rid of the idea of a patient advocate. Unless you have a patient advocate who reports directly to this Assembly, as has been the case that we have asked for, for the children's advocate to report directly, reporting to the minister, potentially behind closed doors, serves no purpose.

Now, the biggest problem with this whole bill is what the minister has referred to as a charter or bill of rights. It's actually, Mr. Speaker, a bill of wrongs. What we have here are wishes that we're going to improve cancer care, wishes that we're going to improve home care, but there are no commitments. We've already seen the minister move from targets established at 90 down to 60. Why should we trust this government to move forward? Forget the fourth way. The document that was revealed to the Liberal caucus and to the NDP caucus and to the Wildrose caucus is actually the fifth way. Premier Klein tried his third way; it didn't work. The government has fiddled and fuddled for two, two and a half years with the superboard – we'll call that the fourth way – and now we're into the fifth way.

There is nothing in this circumstance that increases the number of front-line workers, for example. Without an increase in front-line workers, without a requirement of guidelines and standards, as was proposed in amendment A3, there is no way of evaluating that you've actually hit this imaginary moving target that's been set forth. There is nothing in this new act in terms of increasing the number of staff within the emergency circumstance to prevent, for example, the suicides that we've previously seen. When those approximately 300 reports that were given back prior to the 2008 election were provided to the then minister of health, that was from one hospital, Mr. Speaker. We have hospitals throughout this province that have similarly ugly lists of patient failures, and it's not the fault of the front-line staff; there aren't enough of them.

Now, we have talked about the need to cure the problem. We've suggested that if you started the emergency care provisions and worked backwards, that would be part of the solution. This government has played musical beds for, basically, 16 years. With the blowing up of the General, with the loss of the Holy Cross and the Grace, we lost capacity. We lost beds. With all the beds the hon. minister of health has promised, we'll be barely over half the number of beds we had back in 1994 with a population towards a million less or, not to exaggerate, at least half a million people less.

Until there is a financial commitment by this government to increase the number of seats at university for training medical professionals, a requirement to hire the graduates – not 70 per cent of the graduates. This system needs every single graduate that has the academic requirements to fulfill the positions. It's not enough to operate on a 9 to 4 system with the exception of emergency. As the Liberal plan called for, we have to extend the hours of diagnostic testing. We have to extend the hours of laboratory test results.

There are simple things, Mr. Speaker. When we discharge a patient from a bed, we need an orderly in that room immediately cleaning that bed, preparing it for the next patient to come along. We need home care, not promises of home care. We need funding for home care, and that home care will gradually help relieve the pressure on the emergency system.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister of health talked about increasing the number of primary health care networks. Well, that requires having a sufficient number of doctors to operate those primary care networks. The reality, despite what was said in this House yesterday by the minister of advanced education, is that the government is reducing the number of seats for doctors, not only for doctors trained in Alberta, but they've reduced the number of accreditation spots for foreign doctors from 60 to 40. There is nothing in Bill 17 that guarantees that within such-and-such a time, with such-and-such an expenditure we're going to have the medical staff necessary to provide that relief.

This government has gone through a series of failed experiments, and what they've come up with is this rather thin gruel, this promise that things are going to be better: trust us. Yet while they're saying, "Trust us," we've got a document that's talking about delisting of services. We've got a document that's talking about having doctors with one foot in the public system and one foot in the private system but publicly funded.

The minister talks about his upholding of universal health care. The key component of universal health care is publicly delivered. So what are we to believe in terms of plans? Are we supposed to believe Bill 17? Are we supposed to believe in the July 2010 document? How many plans over the next five years, Mr. Speaker, are we going to see revised? How many targets are going to be reduced? The reality is that if you keep reducing the target, if you keep reducing the goal, eventually, probably sooner than later, you're going to meet it.

Albertans do not want a reduction in services; they require an increase in services. Mr. Speaker, in our plan we said: utilize the existing beds that we have. Take them out of mothballs. That requires hiring the staff to support them. We've talked about opening as opposed to closing long-term health care centres such as we've seen in Red Deer. The reality is that the equipment exists. The diagnostic equipment exists. The beds exist. We have trained individuals within this province who we could hire tomorrow, who are qualified and would be glad to be a part of the system even as it fragments at the top. These people on the front lines at the bottom of the system have the capability, with the proper governance, to bail the government out in its failures. But that doesn't show up in Bill 17.

There is no guarantee that by Christmas, for example, the long-term beds are going to be there and in place and staffed. I said long-term care beds as opposed to assisted living beds. Mr. Speaker, there is no guarantee even that Caritas, that was supposed to be finished in the summer, is going to be finished before January. That's another example of a target being moved, being moved, being moved. We're about to enter into the flu season. Is the government going to erect another soccer dome in front of the Stollery hospital and call it a treatment centre? Are we going to have the MASH units bailing us out?

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal plan called for an immediate medically trained and understanding team to create the solutions. Bill 17 is about widespread, loosey-goosey motherhood: we'll meet in five years. What we need is a medical team right now saying: "Okay. Here's the problem at the Misericordia. Here's the problem at the Foothills. We need this number of staff. Here they go. Let's knock down those wait limits." We need consequences for the government, not for Alberta Health Services or the superboard, if the fleeting goals are not met. There is nothing in Bill 17 that has a consequence for the health minister if the targets aren't met.

Mr. Speaker, when Bill 17 gets passed, without amendments such as A3 to provide standards and guidelines, we are not going to be any appreciably better than we were before. All we have is rhetoric, unsupported, unqualified rhetoric. I have no desire to add to that rhetoric. I'm looking for results. I'm looking for standards. I'm looking for guidelines. I'm looking for measurable results. I'm looking for commitments. There is nothing in Bill 17 as it stands that would provide myself or any Albertan assurance that when they need health care, there will be a family doctor available, that the office will be open sufficiently long for them to go there instead of going to emergency. There is no guarantee that there will be urgent care centres that are properly staffed so that I or my loved ones don't have to show up at emergency. None of the proposals, the seven solutions, that the Liberal plan provided are raised in this Bill 17.

Trust is gone, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 17 is a very important act as we move forward in ensuring that we have the opportunity and the ability to take what is an excellent health system in the province today and build on that excellence to ensure that we have an excellent health system for Alberta and Albertans tomorrow.

We spent a considerable amount of time in this House debating the bill, over 30 hours. However, unfortunately, most of that time was spent discussing an amendment about emergency wait times. The House has very rightly agreed that the bill has fundamental importance but that emergency wait times, while extremely important, do not belong in this particular bill. Emergency, while important, is not the whole system. The challenge is not the expansion of emergency, but the challenge is to deal with the whole system. That's what Bill 17 is about: building a very strong foundation to take the excellent health system that we have today and to continue to build it into an excellent health system tomorrow.

I have much more to say, Mr. Speaker, with respect to Bill 17, but the time will probably not allow us to get into it. So at this point I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

24. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's just sufficient time remaining to conduct this piece of business. It's clear from the debate that happened earlier with respect to this particular bill, Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, the five hours and 17 minutes that have been spent in debate on it, that members of the opposition have no intention of passing it out of committee. In fact, we've been asked to deal with it by way of providing the appropriate motion, I think was the term that was used by the House leader from the Wildrose Alliance. The appropriate motion is now here, and we're asking them to support an allocation of time in committee so that we can deal with it further.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for the opposition to speak on this motion. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down.

Mr. Anderson: Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: There is a standing order here, Standing Order 21(3), that a member of the Official Opposition may respond for five minutes, so an hon. member of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Where does one start when, clearly, although this is certainly how the rules are played in the House, everyone on every side, of course, tries for the advantage? However, I do believe that perhaps five hours isn't enough. Maybe we should have more. Maybe we should have more time to speak to other people outside of this House that would like to perhaps give us more information.

I still think that the bottom line and the crux of this whole matter, no matter which way you cut it, no matter whatever you say about it, is closure. Filibustering is a very difficult thing to do. It's certainly more successful when there are larger opposition numbers; however, it is a legitimate method whereby people can try to stall a bill and, in fact, hope that perhaps that bill could be lifted off the table and sent back to committee so that it could be reviewed. Clearly, if people are willing to stay up for 30 hours, someone is behind that idea to say: no, don't give up; keep working away on it. Hopefully, the light would be seen and the bill would be perhaps sent back and reworked.

I'm not just speaking about Bill 17, which had closure, or Bill 24, which had closure. I believe Bill 28 will probably have closure as well. The whole point of it is that these are games. These are games that are played, and they actually can be named games, but truly they are legitimate ways of the opposition being able to say to the government: no, you guys are wrong; don't walk over us. Listen to what we're saying. See if we can't work together to make the bill better, which is what the opposition would try to do, or, in fact, as I've said, pick it up.

It's also the government's ability to call for closure. Again, that is part of the way the House is run. It does boil down, unfortunately more often than not, to partisan politics, and that is a shame. We really should be working together in here.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

Mr. Hancock: I move that we adjourn until 7:30.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Any comments or questions to be offered to this bill? We are speaking to amendment A3. One hour. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, members, for that. I am pleased to rise in support of Bill 24. I think we have had some good discussion about this bill, and I want to focus on some of the items I have heard during previous debate to address some of the concerns or misunderstandings that have been expressed in this Assembly.

I think there were two major issues that have been identified to which I would like to speak. The first is Bill 24's pore space ownership clause. Let's be clear, very clear. The amendment to declare pore space ownership does not change the definition of land ownership. One member said that landowners have ownership from heaven to hell. In reality we know that's not so. In fact, in most cases there are different surface and mineral rights owners. Even putting that aside, surface rights owners have never been able to lay claim to something they can't practically use. For example, if they truly owned to heaven, no airplanes would be able to fly because landowners would have had the power to stop them or charge them rent. The reality is that ownership of pore space has never been resolved by the courts or in the Alberta Legislature. This bill makes it clear.

Some members question why this bill doesn't focus on taking pore space under Crown land only. At this point we cannot be absolutely sure the best storage sites are only on Crown land. To ensure that the most appropriate site is chosen, we need to have access to more pore space, not just some of it.

Clarifying pore space ownership and accepting long-term liability for the injected CO₂ were recommendations made by two expert panels, the provincial-federal EcoEnergy Carbon Capture and Storage Task Force and Alberta's Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council. Again, let me be very clear. If landowners owned the mineral rights under their land, this legislation does not change that. Landowners still have all the authority to those rights, and this will not change. Companies will still be required to negotiate with landowners for surface access to their land and will be compensated fairly. This also has not changed. Before applicants are given access by the minister and, again, by the Energy Resources Conservation Board, they must demonstrate that the project will not impact resources such as oil, gas, and coal.

I would also like to clarify that this bill does not allow companies to inject whatever they want, whenever they want, as one member stated. The intent of this bill is to facilitate the injection of captured carbon dioxide and, certainly, not "whatever."

Let's talk about taxpayer subsidy for a moment. Some are saying that CCS is a new taxpayer supported industry. It is expensive to implement new technology, and CCS is expensive. The project proponents are investing hundreds of millions of their own dollars into these projects, so industry is clearly committed to the advancement of CCS. Let me repeat that. Industry is investing hundreds of millions of dollars. This is not a handout. This is a partnership between government and industry investing in a technology that we fully expect will be viable and effective. In fact, just yesterday the global carbon capture and storage initiative, which is funded by the Australian government, announced that it is committing $5 million to one of the projects we are currently negotiating a grant agreement with.

When I was in Europe in March, I toured many countries pursuing CCS, including Norway, the U.K., and Germany. There is considerable interest in these countries in what is happening here in Alberta relative to CCS, and actually they not only congratulated but commended our government and the Canadian government for our leadership in CCS. Naturally, people are very interested in technological advancement, not just that which can make carbon capture and storage possible on a commercial scale but technology that can bring down the cost of CCS.

There is also a lot of interest from abroad in how Alberta is going about the implementation of CCS. What will the rules and the regulations be? How will we regulate the industry? These are the things we're talking about with Bill 24 and amendments. We're talking about the fundamental things that need to be in place as we move toward putting shovels in the ground.

Be assured that our $2 billion financial investment in CCS is being made with the future in mind. CO₂ used for enhanced oil recovery is expected to create up to $25 billion in royalties and taxes for Alberta. Not bad for a $2 billion investment. This is not a made-up number by government but an estimate from the Alberta Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council, a consortium of experts.

We just have to look to Saskatchewan to find the world's largest enhanced oil recovery project, which has been in operation for 10 years. The project at Weyburn has been piping CO₂ in from North Dakota and using it to revive an aging conventional reservoir. In fact, this project has extended the life of the reservoir by at least two decades and has helped produce more than 1 million barrels of oil. This project has been monitored by CCS experts and teams around the world, and there have been no safety or leakage issues, nor have there been any issues with the pipeline that runs more than 300 kilometres through two countries. In fact, there are more than 2,400 kilometres of CO₂ pipelines in operation in the United States today.

This is an opportunity for Alberta to develop and refine its expertise in CCS, a technology being pursued world-wide. We want to be leaders in the technology and then share our knowledge with the world. That will result in tremendous economic spinoffs like highly skilled jobs for generations to come, and that is the payoff for Albertans, as one member wondered about.

Greenhouse gas emission reductions and increased revenue to pay for health care and schools and other services so that we can enjoy an opportunity to become world leaders in a technology being pursued around the globe: I must say that I think this is a terrific payoff and good leadership, just as we had strong leadership with Premier Lougheed, when we originally explored and developed our oil sands.

I have heard a number of members talk about the overall cost of the $2 billion CCS program. Some members think there is a better way to use the money. One member suggested getting rid of greenhouse gas emissions by spending the $2 billion purchasing coal plants in the province and shutting them down. That would force us to move to renewable sources of energy, which is not bad. That would also force us to lose 60 per cent of the electricity capacity in the province, resulting in instant price hikes to consumers. Frankly,

I don't know of any coal plant for sale in Alberta as they are owned by private industry. In fact, a coal plant – that's one coal plant – can't even be built for $2 billion. So is that a reasonable, logical step to take to reducing greenhouse gas emissions? I would have to say not.

The time to act is now. The International Energy Agency says that there will be a 70 per cent increase in the global cost of emission reductions without CCS. Carbon capture and storage is the only technology currently available in Alberta to address large-volume emissions. The IPCC says that the cost of building and operating CO₂ capture systems will fall over time as a result of technological advances.

One of the most sensational arguments against CCS is to compare it to the unfortunate event in Cameroon, where CO₂ erupted from a lake, killing 1,700 people. To compare the leading-edge technology of CCS to an unfortunate event caused by Mother Nature a quarter-century ago is incorrect. There is just no comparison. There will be an extensive measuring, monitoring, and verification of all injection sites in Alberta. Any release of CO₂ would quickly be detected and remediated. This was not the case there when the incident occurred.

It is also important as we discuss CCS to talk about exactly where it would be injected. Water sources are typically a couple of hundred metres below surface, well above CO₂ injection depths, which are expected to be as deep as two kilometres. Projects must ensure long-term protection of these shallow aquifers. Alberta's geology is uniquely suited to the safe storage of CO₂ in deep formations. This province's long history of oil and gas exploration provides a wealth of information about deep oil and gas reservoirs and geological formations that can be used to store CO₂.

A detailed review of regulations around CCS will begin in 2011 to ensure that safety and environmental outcomes are achieved. It will be completed long before large-scale injection begins in 2015. Alberta is leading the way on CCS, but we are not alone. Countries all over the world are pursuing this technology. The United Kingdom, Norway, the United States, China, and Australia all agree that CCS will mitigate greenhouse gas emissions. There are other projects happening around the world, two in Norway alone and another in Algeria.

The second major issue that I see in our debate is that of long-term liability. The province is proposing to take liability for the CO₂ only after the companies have proven it is stable and behaving as it should. The time period required before government will take liability has yet to be worked out, but I expect we are talking about having decades' worth of information and not months or years. Through its existing regulatory framework and the proposed legislation Alberta will impose very strict monitoring requirements on large-scale CCS projects. It would be irresponsible for government to not take liability. Who would be responsible if these companies go out of business? Remember, we are talking about storage of hundreds and thousands of years.

Dr. David Keith from the University of Calgary rates the overall risk from stored carbon dioxide as relatively low and said that experience with storage of more than 100 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, mostly in Texas, bears that out. Dr. Keith also says that should a problem arise, it will do so in the first decade, so it will be up to the operator to fix.

The Crown is taking long-term liability for the CO₂ many years after injection has been completed. Insurance products for CCS projects under construction and operation are available for companies to purchase and have been since January 2009. Bill 24 ensures that CCS operators will finance a fund which will pay for ongoing monitoring and any remedial work.

CCS is an important tool we can use to secure Alberta's place as a responsible energy supplier, but we will move forward carefully and prudently. Albertans were encouraged to give feedback to Alberta's climate change strategy, which developed the province's long-term goal to address climate change. It is expected that once the process required for large-scale CCS projects is determined, it will be similar to the one in place for oil and gas development. The operator will be required to inform the public and receive feedback on the project.

We are moving forward with this technology and are excited about the possibilities that lie ahead. Alberta's pioneering spirit ensures that we are doers, and we are not watchers. All we have to do is look at our oil sands industry, which is unique in the world. Because government and industry embraced and acted on that vision decades ago, Albertans today continue to enjoy a terrific standard of living without paying a high level of personal income tax that would otherwise be required. Albertans also enjoy the plentiful social programs funded by government, in part thanks to the royalties from this resource.

Mr. Chair, the time for CCS is now. I fully support Bill 24 and encourage all members to fully support it as we move ahead with this game-changing technology. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. We're on an amendment, correct, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A3.

Mr. MacDonald: Amendment A3. Okay. I can appreciate that. I didn't hear a word on the amendment in the hon. member's remarks, but that was a fine speech. I appreciate her support of carbon capture and storage. We first talked about this in the Legislative Assembly close to eight years ago, Mr. Chairman. I for one think it is part of the solution to our fight against greenhouse gasses.

How will amendment A3 change this bill? That question remains to be answered. The difference between permanent and long term as defined by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is not really going to change the intent of this bill in my view. Certainly, the intent of this bill is to put some rules around the liability issue. Whether it's permanent or long term, regardless of how you describe it, it is to put some liability rules around the issue of CO₂ storage.

I have had a look at the debate so far, and I'm disappointed that in Hansard I'm not getting any information regarding comparisons to other jurisdictions. The hon. member talked about Cameroon. Certainly, other hon. members have talked about Weyburn, Saskatchewan, and what's going on there. We have a pilot project going on east of Joffre. We have the Norwegians. We have the Americans that are doing some work. [interjections] Yes, the Norwegians. The Norwegians, hon. member, are doing remarkable things with CO₂ sequestration, as they are with their royalties.

An Hon. Member: They're remarkable people.

Mr. MacDonald: They are exceptionally remarkable people. They have collected over $500 billion in 14 years in their savings fund. We, Mr. Chairman, have over 30 years, 35 years of history collecting royalties on our energy resources, and we have $14 billion.

Dr. Morton: Because they don't have Ottawa picking their pockets. What about those transfer payments?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, a former member of the federal party, who is the current financial guy in the province here, is talking about how the federal government is picking his pocket. Well, he should stand up once and for all for Albertans whenever we get to the negotiations . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. When we get to the negotiations on the Canada health transfer, I certainly hope he stands up for Alberta, not his right-wing cousins from the University of Calgary. Let's make sure you do that, sir.

Now, when we talk about CO₂ sequestration and the future it has, it does have a very bright future in this province. The hon. member spoke about CO₂ sequestration and how the oil revenue has improved the standard and quality of life in this province, and she's absolutely right. Where CO₂ will come into play in this province is in enhanced oil recovery. Drayton Valley, for instance, is a very mature, established oil field. Hopefully, some of the formations there that have not been swept with a water flood in the past could be used for CO₂ sequestration.

But we have to be very careful with this bill. There are liability issues here that have yet to be addressed in this Assembly, in my view, in the discussion of this bill. We have to be very careful. We have to answer the question about the liability, of course, of the transportation system, the gathering system of the CO₂ from the source to the final well where it is going to be sequestered into a deep formation. We're going to have to clarify the issue around water. I don't think the deep formations are going to affect drinking water, but I think we need some more testing done to make sure, really sure that we're not affecting our water supplies.

Now, CO₂ is already a commodity; it's a tradable commodity. It's sold across the border from America into Canada for the Weyburn sequestration projects, and there doesn't seem to be any problems in Weyburn. Mr. Chairman, to point that out, at Weyburn the monitoring using seismic pressure and geochemical techniques indicates that no leaks had taken place even though more than a thousand wells, dating back to the 1960s, were present within the Weyburn field. This is an important finding because abandoned wells are thought to be an important potential leakage path for CO₂. That's what they've discovered to date in Weyburn. We know that EnCana's oil production in Weyburn has increased significantly on a barrel-per-day rate

The Americans – and I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this – have released a carbon capture and storage interagency task force. In February of this year President Obama alerted the heads of 14 executive departments and federal agencies, establishing this task force on carbon capture and storage. The goal in America was to develop a comprehensive and co-ordinated federal strategy to speed the commercial development and deployment of clean-coal technologies. The task force, co-chaired by the Department of Energy and the Environmental Protection Agency, was charged with proposing a plan to overcome the barriers to the widespread, cost-effective deployment of carbon capture and storage within 10 years, with a goal of bringing five to 10 commercial demonstration projects online by 2016.

Now, as this bill was being drafted in Alberta, this task force delivered a series of recommendations to President Obama. I'm sure the hon. minister of Finance is a big fan of President Obama. [interjection] I shouldn't have brought that up because I already knew the answer.

This is what the Americans have done. I heard the consultation process explained by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, but on the issue of liability, when it starts, the issue of how this industry fund is going to work, I'm still not satisfied that we have an explanation. We've got to get this right because if we download or transfer all the liabilities onto the taxpayers very quickly, anything could happen. I'm not going to say it will happen, but it certainly could happen. We've got to make sure that we have the issue of long-term liability and storage frameworks in place.

There are a few options for us to consider. We can look at what's going on now in this bill, and we can leave it alone. We can just ignore the amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and carry on as usual. We can look at this bill, and we can say: "That's it. We're going to be content with that." The Minister of Energy is going to write the regulations, and we're going to hope that there's no long-term liabilities. We already know that there are significant liabilities left to the taxpayers and to the citizens of this province as a result of abandoned oil wells and gas wells and compressor stations, batteries, gathering systems, liabilities that are measured not in the millions but in the billions of dollars according to the ERCB. So we have to be very careful about this.

Now, will we have limitations on claims, and what will those limitations be? That's another question I haven't heard in any of the discussions here. The creation of this industry finance trust fund is to support long-term storageship activities and compensate parties, as I understand it. How exactly will this work? What types and forms of losses would be allowed to be withdrawn from this fund? Again, we have to be very careful.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the latitude you're giving me on this. I know we should be on amendment A3. We should be talking about the difference between permanent and long term, but we're looking, really, at whether it's a long-term liability or not. That's what we're doing.

Now, the transfer of the liability from the operator to the taxpayers is essentially what we're going to get here after the site closure happens. There are rules and ifs, ands, and buts. But that's what we're going to get. I'm not convinced that this bill in this form – I'm a fan of CO₂. I think it is an answer to part of the problem with CO₂ emissions and how we control them. But I'm not so sure that this bill is drafted to protect owners, taxpayers, in this province. I'm just not convinced of that, Mr. Chairman.

Different jurisdictions have different ways of looking at this long-term liability transfer. Who will ultimately have complete financial responsibility? If one of the hon. government members would answer this in the course of the time we have left – I know we're dealing with closure, and I know time is limited, and I know it's precious. Who will have financial responsibility for the post injection site care? By that, I mean that after the CO₂ is injected, the well is sealed off – and hopefully there's going to be no CO₂ migrating up through the formation into the atmosphere. I can't see it, but we've got to make darn sure that that's not going to happen. In this post injection site care who's responsible? Is it the owner or operator, or is it the citizens? I don't think this bill satisfies that. I think that's very important, Mr. Chairman.

I don't know exactly how this long-term liability transfer is going to work. Are we going to have a certificate of completion, where the operator of a sequestration site can transfer title and liability to the province after demonstrating to an agency – in this case I'm going to pick the ERCB – that the site is stable for a certain period of time after the last CO₂ has been injected and the site has been closed? Who remains liable? For how long? Ten, 20, 35 years?

I would like to know which jurisdictions have accepted liability for pilot projects within their borders. I would like to get more information from the Alberta Research Council on exactly what is happening with the pure CO₂ stream that's coming in at Joffre and going into the existing oil field just to the east. I would like to know what EnCana thinks about what's going on in Norway.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to remind the House again about how much money Norway has in their bank and how little we have in our bank. What exactly are the Norwegians doing right with their CO₂ sequestration in the North Sea? Those would be some questions I have.

Dr. Taft: They're sequestering all their money down there.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is absolutely right when he says that not only are they sequestering CO₂; they're sequestering their money. The $500 billion is, I think, over 1 per cent of the entire equities traded on the globe.

I don't want to be accused of getting off track. [interjection] They're your friends. You deal with them. They're from the Calgary school, and so are you. You're a proud graduate of that school, sir.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members that if we pass this bill, we have to make sure that in the future our grandchildren are not scratching their heads after they're left with another enormous environmental liability. I think this bill should be set aside. I think there should be a committee of this Legislative Assembly, perhaps one that one of these fine gentlemen chair. They could have a look at the recommendations that have come from the American task force and compare what the Americans are contemplating doing and what we are doing with this bill. I think that would be an ideal project for one of these policy committees, and they could report back to this House perhaps next spring.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and cede the floor to another hon. member. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to offer my support for Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. We've had some very spirited discussion relative to both the specifics of the bill and to its merits. Bill 24 will set in place some of the framework required to move forward with commercial-scale carbon capture and storage.

There are some people in this House who do not believe that we should move forward on carbon capture and storage. They just don't see the value in it. It's consistent for these people to oppose legislation that establishes the conditions to implement something they just don't seem to believe in. But they should believe in CCS, if for no other reason than that carbon capture and storage is an excellent long-term investment for this province. CO₂ used for enhanced oil recovery, or EOR, alone is expected to create up to $25 billion in royalties. Mr. Chair, that's $25 billion with a "b" as in beautiful. As the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has stated, that's not a made-up number by government. In fact, it's been computed by a consortium of experts, the Alberta Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council. We can rely on that number.

We just have to look a little bit east of here to the land of my birth, in Saskatchewan, to find the world's largest enhanced oil recovery project, which has been in operation for over a decade. A lot of people don't know that, but I know that because it's very close to my hometown of Yorkton, Saskatchewan. It's in Weyburn. A lot of folks find it hard to believe, but Beulah, North Dakota, has been piping CO₂ there and has been reviving this aging conventional reservoir. It's going to extend the life of the reservoir by over 20 years, and it's helped produce more than a million barrels of incremental oil. Mr. Chair, we just can't ignore that kind of success story.

Here in this province for Albertans a scenario like this would mean that roads and pipelines and other infrastructure already in place will have their useful lives extended, and that would mean continued prosperity for the communities and the residents near those fields here in Alberta.

Back in Weyburn – we can learn from them – the project has been monitored by CCS experts and teams from around the world. These aren't just local folks, even though they're completely capable. They have all found that there are no safety or leakage issues, as even the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has agreed. There haven't been any issues with that pipeline running more than 300 kilometres, through two countries. I think I've heard before that 2,400 kilometres of CO₂ pipelines are in operation in the U. S. today alone.

Mr. Chair, back here in Alberta we've made great strides to advance alternative renewable energy sources. We haven't been resting on our laurels. I think it would be good for other jurisdictions to know that not only do we have oil and gas; we've got 700 megawatts of capacity of wind-generated electricity, and we're upgrading the transmission system to allow even more in the future. We also have a bioenergy program which Albertans can be extremely proud of, and it's generating another 300 megawatts of electricity.

This is all completely pertinent to amendment A3. There are considerable achievements, and there are going to be more as we go forward. But I know when people talk about A3, they're wondering: what can we underline? Despite all of this and similar achievements elsewhere, the world's going to continue to depend on fossil fuels for many, many more years to come and likely decades. Mr. Chair, it's a fact of life. When we burn fossil fuels, we get carbon dioxide. Another fact of life is that this province is blessed with an abundance of fossil fuels, and specific to carbon capture and storage it's coal and oil. Many people are starting to understand as well that the second point we need to underline pertinent to A3 is that Alberta is also blessed with the perfect geology in which to put the carbon dioxide back underground on a permanent basis.

As certain members have been quick to point out, when we get started on the development of carbon capture and storage technologies, there's going to be a significant financial investment. It includes large amounts from private industry. Mr. Chair, these firms will need to answer some very basic questions for their shareholders before they can commit to spending money on CCS technologies.

The first question might be: if I'm going to pump liquefied carbon dioxide deep underground, from whom do I have to get permission? The answer to that would be the owner. This bill provides certainty as to who that owner is and should put the minds of opposition, media, and all others to rest. It is indeed the Crown, the people of Alberta.

Let's be really clear on the question that's been raised in the House around property rights. Bill 24 has no impact on ownership, ownership of land or mineral rights ownership. Mr. Chair, pore space exists in the absence of minerals. Any mineral right will be exactly the same the day after this bill is proclaimed as it was the day before the proclamation.

Then we ask the question: how does this pertain to A3 when it comes to landowners? Well, when it comes to this amendment, again this will not create a change. Landowners who also own minerals rights will continue to own those rights. But, as I've mentioned, pore space exists in the absence of minerals. I learned that in grade 7 science, but in grade 7 I wasn't a landowner. The question is: does this amendment affect the rights of the landowners; does that mean landowners won't receive any compensation, Mr. Chair? No, it doesn't mean that at all.

Firms that pump carbon dioxide underground will require an above ground injection site, and just as if they were on someone else's land drilling for oil and gas, the firms will have to pay the landowner a surface rights fee for the injection site. The landowner will continue to have the right to negotiate that fee directly with the company, to seek an arbitrated fee through the Surface Rights Board, and if they're unsatisfied after that, they can seek leave to appeal in the courts.

What we're talking about are tiny holes in rocks where there are no minerals. They are deep, potentially kilometres under the surface of the land. So a company which is preparing to invest tens or perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in CCS would also sensibly want to know what the rules and regulations are. Bill 24 and this amendment enable this government to create the framework for large-scale carbon capture and storage, including policies and regulations needed for this technology to be developed over the next couple of years, long before injection begins.

Finally, Mr. Chair, any company investing its shareholder dollars into CCS obviously needs to understand the technology and the rules and regulations, but they also need to understand the short, medium, and long-term liabilities. That's perfectly reasonable. It's responsible. It's expected. It's the expectation of this bill and this amendment, which respond reasonably and responsibly to exactly that.

The legislation states that while a company is pumping the carbon dioxide into deep underground formations, that company is responsible to ensure that the entire operation is safe and secure. It's the right thing to do. Additionally, the legislation states that once a company has completed pumping the CO₂ underground, they must continue to be responsible for the project until such time as they can satisfy the regulator that they've continued to scientifically monitor the sequestration using the best available technology and methodology and that they can demonstrate that the sequestration is secure.

It's very much how we regulate surface disruption of Crown land. If you disturb Crown land in the course of taking minerals out, you have to reclaim that land once you're finished. You don't get to decide as a company what constitutes proper reclamation; the people's government decides. The company would remain liable for that disturbance until the government is satisfied that the land has been reclaimed to the very high standards that Albertans have set.

It will work the same way for sequestered carbon dioxide. The government will set the standards for injection, the standards for monitoring, and the standard of proof required to show that the injection is stable and secure. It would be irresponsible for the government to not take liability. Who would take responsibility if these companies went out of business? Remember, we're talking about storage for hundreds and thousands of years.

David Keith, a doctor from the University of Calgary, rates the overall risk from stored carbon dioxide as relatively low and said that experience with storage of more than 100 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, mostly in Texas, bears that out. That's not from us; that's from Dr. Keith. I haven't spoken to him about the amendment, but his comments that apply to A3 would be that should a problem arise, it'll do so in the first decade, so it would be up to the operator to fix, which will put the minds of the Albertan taxpayer to rest.

The Crown is taking long-term liability for the projects only, most likely decades after injection has been completed. However, it's worth noting that insurance products for CCS projects under construction and operation are available for companies to purchase and have been since January 2009. Bill 24 ensures that CCS operators will finance a fund which will pay for ongoing monitoring and any remedial work.

Mr. Chair, countries from all over the world are pursuing this technology: the U.K., Norway, the U.S., China, and Australia. They all agree CCS will mitigate greenhouse gas emissions. There are other projects happening around the world, two in Norway and another in In Salah, Algeria. What we have with Bill 24 is the instrument to make Alberta a global leader in CCS technology.

I offer my full support and encourage all members to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. There are two main concerns that I'm hearing from Albertans about this bill: one is the erosion of property rights in this province; the other is the government wasting money on things that are not priorities for Albertans.

I'll just say a few words about the first point. Whether it's Bill 19, 36, 50, or other outrageous bills from the last few years or this session's 26 or 29 or this one, Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, the government keeps passing laws that remove the little obstacles that are in their way for the minister doing what he wants to do but which trample over the property rights of Albertans. The main point of property rights is that they protect people from the government, not that they protect themselves from each other. But this government continues to ignore this basic fact.

This bill is the clearest example of confiscating property of citizens even if it's not the most upsetting. Pore space isn't something that people have thought much about. Many probably don't even know if it's under their land. But it's obviously worth more than people realize because the government is suddenly putting a value on carbon storage. Even if the value is somewhat artificially inflated because of the scheme the government is insisting on pursuing, it is still of value and it still belongs to the landowners.

The government wants to begin storing things in these spaces. Now, if they respected property rights, they could try to keep themselves to Crown land or only use space on land where they are given permission. But that's a hassle, and this whole project is inefficient enough already. So what does the government do? It removes the hassle that individual property rights could pose. It simply declares that it owns all pore space, not just in a certain area but everywhere. It's that simple. Everywhere in the province it all belongs to the Crown. As the owner the minister of the Crown can pump whatever he wants into it, whenever he wants, and you have to take it that way.

Many speakers in the opposition have pointed out that the idea that landowners own the land below the surface isn't a matter of interpretation, Mr. Chair; it's established in common law. This government is confiscating property without compensation. As we so often see, they are putting all of the powers that a minister could possibly use into his hands and are eliminating opposition. It's undemocratic, and it's wrong. That's the property rights side of this, and that's very important. It fits with an utterly disturbing pattern that this government has embarked upon over the last few years.

But, of course, sometimes the government needs to compromise individual property rights for the sake of important projects that benefit Albertans. That right should still be respected in that those affected should be compensated. When there is some great public good, like a railroad or a highway or even power lines, if we actually needed them, we can't let one stubborn person hold projects for ransom when the province really needs them. We should have the due process of the courts, Mr. Chair. The carbon capture and storage project does not at all seem to benefit Albertans. Therefore, in light of it being the reason for the government to confiscate all of the pore space in the province, I'll turn in the second part of my speech to a summary of some of the obvious problems.

I've been hearing concerns from many Albertans about whether the carbon capture plan really makes sense economically, environmentally. The town of Barendrecht, Holland, was supposed to have a carbon capture space put under part of their own town. The citizens didn't want it. They weren't sure about this unproven technology and just didn't think it was worth the risk, so they exercised their democratic rights and held a municipal plebiscite that forbade Shell from going ahead with a project that would store CO₂ under the city in two former natural gas basins. Citizens in Holland and Germany as well have had their chance to oppose projects happening in their backyards.

Under this bill, as is far too common, Albertans will have no such recourse against the minister's discretion. The Shell carbon capture project in Barendrecht, Holland, has other interesting insights that cast light on the flaws of this government's plan to capture and store CO₂. As in Alberta, because this is not an economically feasible project that an independent company would invest in, the Dutch government was subsidizing most of the cost. Actually, they were subsidizing 90 per cent of it. Here in Alberta our government claims that they will be subsidizing no more than two-thirds of the cost. Sounds like a deal. It's not. Even at 90 per cent Shell told the Dutch government that it would cost them approximately $100 a tonne for carbon dioxide. Here in Alberta Shell is telling our government that their two-thirds subsidy will work out to $865 per tonne. I find it hard to believe that this project costs more than 10 times what it costs to do in Europe, Mr. Chair.

It makes me wonder if this is another case of this government failing to do due diligence with these big companies, kind of like when they went to TransAlta and said: how big do you need your lines to be? They'd come back and ask for the moon to start their negotiations, only to have the government turn around and say: okay. Whether there's a similarity or not, I've never heard an explanation as to why this government is approving a subsidy more than 8.5 times larger than the Holland subsidy. In fact, Rob Seeley, general manager of sustainable development for Shell right here in Fort Saskatchewan, stated that it costs $80 to $140 per tonne to build one of these CCS systems. The Alberta government instead is claiming that it costs $1,300 per tonne.

How did the government end up with a number that is 12 times what Mr. Seeley estimated? Who in this government approved this Enron-like overvaluation? It really seems like there's a shell game going on somewhere here, Mr. Chair, but we can never get to the bottom of it because this government is so secretive. As my colleagues have pointed out, carbon capture projects are being killed around the world, yet here we are clinging to this idea.

Just this weekend Kevin Libin in the National Post wrote an article talking about how obsessing over carbon is not nearly as cool as it was a few years ago. Even Greenpeace and Al Gore argue that this kind of project is a waste of money and can never be competitive compared to all of the other things that we could be doing. If so many are turning against it, why are we going ahead? The vice-president of Shell himself was quoted as saying:

Carbon capture and storage is presently generating costs but yields no revenues. It is one of the few technologies that is entirely climate change driven. Without policy intervention to create a market price for CO₂, development and deployment of CCS will simply not happen.

The Canadian and Alberta governments announced that they would spend a combined $865 million to help Royal Dutch Shell build commercial-scale carbon capture and storage for Alberta's oil sands for a project that will store 1 million metric tonnes of CO₂. This government could have bought an equivalent amount of credits on the Chicago exchange for $50,000. Maybe that would have helped keep the exchange afloat, for whatever that's worth. If the rest of our projects are as efficient, then the $2 billion would work out to about $130,000 worth of credits in the defunct exchange that they set up in Chicago. If the world market wouldn't even pay $200,000 for carbon we're storing, why are we forcing Alberta taxpayers to spend $2 billion to store it?

The only answer is that this government is so desperate to be politically correct, they are willing to pay any cost for this CCS. It was a very politely fashionable concept a few years ago, when they embarked on it, but as my colleagues have been explaining, many commentators are pointing out that this is falling out of fashion as even the environmentalists realize that it brings so little benefit for what it costs.

These are some of the kinds of questions that I've asked and I'm concerned about for my constituents especially. Albertans know we need to have a strong environmental record, but they think clean air and water and beautiful parks for recreation are what the priorities should be. That's why the government heard from so many Albertans on Bill 29 but will never hear about the support for this boondoggle. They aren't persuaded that this huge undertaking is going to make a meaningful contribution to the planet. They worry that it's a huge expense, and the idea of tanker trucks driving around the province to put plant food in the ground raises a lot of questions. How much energy will be used to separate the gases? How much will be used to compress it? How much will be used to transport it? I'm opposed to this bill because, like citizens across Alberta, I am very uncomfortable with it in the ground and taking away from our property rights.

I'll repeat my call, instead, for a world-class symposium so that we can have the proper, informed discussion that this deserves. Then, hopefully, we can make a better decision about the most effective and responsible things Albertans can do to protect our environment and make the most of our resources at the same time.

Mr. Chair, the most important thing that we can do is to continue studying this problem. There are many scientists on both sides talking about CO₂, talking about the cost of storage and what we can do. I very much agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in that this bill should be set aside, as was Bill 29. That would be the right thing to do. It would be very easy to bring forward a couple of pilot projects that we have, as pilot projects and not all inclusive.

The most important thing that we can do if we're really concerned about the environment is to move to a cleaner fuel, a one-carbon fuel, natural gas. There are many new and exciting ideas on what we can do with natural gas versus the burning of long carbon chains like diesel and coal. We need to be looking at this. If we're going to spend $2 billion, the question that we should be asking Albertans is: is this where you want it spent? Do you want it spent on carbon capture and storage? I believe the resounding remarks coming back from Albertans would be saying: "No. We haven't studied this enough."

Mr. Chair, with that, I'll sit down and allow someone else to discuss it. This bill should be following Bill 29, should be pulled aside. We could do some more studying and listening to Albertans on how they want to spend our ever short dollars that we have in the province of Alberta, running a $7 billion cash deficit.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert on the amendment.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak on a very specific issue that's been raised a number of times in debate on this issue, and that's the concept of the ownership of a parcel of land. The heaven-to-hell concept has been raised in a number of issues. It's called the infinite carrot, where you, in fact, own from heaven to hell, right to the centre of the Earth. Now, that's basically the concept of land ownership. The Crown was the initial owner of the land, and the Crown is the only absolute owner of land today. Land ownership can be equated to a bundle of rights.

Mr. Chair, am I out of order on this?

The Deputy Chair: I'd like you to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Allred: What is the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Striking out "permanent" and substituting "long-term."

Mr. Allred: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I guess I'm out of order, then. [interjections] Keep going?

Mr. Chairman, a number of people have raised this issue, and I think it needs to be clarified. As I indicated, the Crown is the absolute owner of the land, and the Crown initially owned all the land from heaven to hell. The Crown at various times granted land. Initially they granted the whole parcel of land, but the Crown always retains certain rights. The Crown has the right of taxation, police power, the right to expropriation, et cetera.

By the end of about the 1890s the Crown decided that mines and minerals were very valuable, particularly coal initially and later petroleum and natural gas, so the Crown in grants after that period of time withheld those minerals. Now, they didn't withhold all of the land under the surface. They only withheld that parcel of coal that was within that infinite carrot or that oil that was within that infinite carrot, et cetera. We've got a system of split titles, where we've got a lot of confusion in the issue. At an even later date the Crown decided to retain gold and silver.

Now, the issue of airspace has also been mentioned. Yes, you own the airspace. However, we all know that planes fly over our airspace all the time. That was the subject of a court case. I believe it was called Lacroix versus The Queen in 1954. I'll just quote from the case. "It seems to me that the owner of land has a limited right in the air space over his property, it is limited by what he can possess or occupy for the use and enjoyment of his land." I would suggest, Mr. Chair, that this bill, that grants the Crown ownership of the pore space, is analogous to that ownership of the airspace. If you can't use it, you can't really, effectively, own it. You can't possess it, and you can't occupy it.

Mr. Chair, just to sum up, landownership, as I indicated, is really composed of a bundle of rights. As I indicated, the Crown owns all the sticks in the bundle of rights and has absolute ownership. They can give out certain sticks in that bundle, so to speak. They can give out mines and minerals, as they have done in the cases I've mentioned. They can give out leases, or an individual owner can give out leases or life estates or easements, et cetera.

I just wanted to clarify that, Mr. Chair, because it's come up a number of times during the debate, and I think it needs to be clarified. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It's an honour to follow the Member for St. Albert. The Member for St. Albert stated that the Crown historically owned lands from heaven to hell. The question regarding amendment A3 to Bill 24 is: are we going to hell in a handbasket? That's kind of what amendment A3 to Bill 24 is all about. My Wildrose colleagues there have no doubt that not only are we potentially going to hell with Bill 24, but we have no idea how long our period in purgatory is going to be, and that's part of my concern. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talked about potentially decades before the government assumes the responsibility of the pores underground throughout Alberta.

My biggest concern with this bill has to do with liability. We know, for example, that the government has committed to invest $2 billion worth of taxpayers' money in this particular undertaking. We do not know to what extent they'll be successful. Using the example of what has happened with orphaned wells and the insolvency associated with a number of companies, particularly foreign-owned companies, what's to say that if certain companies experience recessions, Norway with Statoil excluded, how do we know that they wouldn't simply pull out and leave us literally holding the CO₂ bag? I'm concerned that we don't have a sense of what the actual liability is. So much of this is a trust, and we know for a fact with regard to orphaned wells that what the government is requiring is basically 10 cents on the dollar to be set aside. We have seen with the development of the oil sands . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but pursuant to Government Motion 24, agreed to November 30, 2010, which states that after one hour of debate, questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the questions to conclude debate.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we rise and report Bill 24.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

23. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I need not reiterate, I don't think, much of the discussion of this afternoon. Suffice to say that with debate this afternoon there is well over 30 hours of debate on this bill. The bill, as members opposite have pained to observe, is not a very big bill, but it is a very important bill. The opposition has very clearly indicated and said on the record that they would like us to bring the appropriate motion to deal with the bill because it's the only way that they would allow it to be dealt with.

It is a very important bill. It should be dealt with, and I would ask members to support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 21(3) the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the concern, as always, is how much time is sufficient to solve a problem. Now, I'll use the analogy of thieves in the night, a shadow of darkness. I would rather be debating this bill during the daytime, during a thoughtful period, but I am aware of the reality that we can do nothing to Bill 17. The amendments have been rejected by the government. The government is committed, come hell or high water, to push this thing through, and they have the majority, given to them by the people of Alberta, so it's going to happen.

But, Mr. Speaker, the democratic process is being subverted by this need to have a four-week session, to push things through the evening to the point where last week it became absolutely ridiculous. I agree with the hon. Government House Leader that any thought of decorum was potentially lost. Because it's only 8:30 tonight, we're actually rather civilized, and it's my hope that that civilized attitude will continue, but it does not take away from the fact that we have been short shrifted on the amount of time to come together to create a bill that would actually have consequences, timelines, standards, and guidelines. Bill 17 doesn't do it, but we might as well get on with the process.

I mentioned previously this afternoon my concerns over the document Alberta's Health Legislation: Moving Forward. I don't know which document the government is talking about when it talks about Bill 17. It was the other document, a Bill 18, that's going to be introduced in the springtime to further push privatization. There are so many unanswered questions, Mr. Speaker, and not sufficient time to hold the government to account.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 23 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:37 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: A reminder, hon. members, that the debate will conclude at about 10:50.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon in debate I think I finished by saying that access to emergency in the health system, while important, is not the whole system. The challenge is not just simply the expansion of emergency or dealing with the issues in emergency although those are very important; the challenge is to deal with the whole system and the needs of the whole system.

I want to start by saying: let's be perfectly clear. I think there needs to be, after all of this discussion, a statement made to Albertans that really sets the record straight. The Alberta health system is a fantastic health system. In Alberta we have top facilities, we have leading-edge equipment, and most importantly we have some of the finest health care professionals in the world. We can be truly proud of the capacity, the ability, and the comprehensiveness of our system.

There are issues, of course, and those issues need to be dealt with. But it's also important to focus not just on the immediate issues, while they are important, but on the long term and the big picture to create a framework for a system going forward that will enable the system to continue to adapt to meet the challenges of change and growth. That is, of course, where the issues come from.

This province continues to grow, and population continues to shift both in terms of demographics and geographics. This puts pressure on parts of the system in parts of the province. People age, and as we age, our health needs grow. As we discover new drugs, new techniques, and new technologies, we can do more things for more people, and we do, and we want to.

In just the last 13 years that I've been in this House, the number of MRI machines, for example, has grown from somewhere close to zero to somewhere over 50. Every time we've added an MRI machine, up until recently at least, the lines didn't get shorter; the lines got longer because each new MRI machine that came in had new abilities, new capacities, and could be used for more things. Many thousands of MRI scans are now done each year. For many years we've been doing more hips, more knees, more hearts, more of everything in this system by an exponential growth factor. By any measure the system is responding exceedingly well, but again there are issues that need to be dealt with. There's no question about that.

The population that can be treated in our health system has grown not only because our population has grown but because of new techniques, new technologies, and drugs. You can now do major surgery on 90-year-olds that you never used to do on anybody over the age of 70. In just the past month Ray Nelson from Lloydminster passed away. He was, I think, aged 78 – it might have been a little older – when he had a heart transplant. In my short lifetime, Mr. Speaker, we started on doing heart transplants, and now we're doing them as almost routine procedures on people who never ever would have had that available to them and many other types of surgeries and many other types of treatments. So the population that can be treated has grown.

As we continue to improve, we'll continue to have problems that need to be addressed. And as we continue to improve, we need to ensure that while we address the immediate issues and pressures, we ensure that we have a comprehensive and nimble approach, a strong framework on which to build the next health system, build on the excellence we have today for excellence we can have tomorrow.

That's where Bill 17 comes in, Mr. Speaker. Bill 17 helps to create that new framework so that we can build on that excellence that we have today and the excellent work that's being done today by health care professionals, so that we can focus forward on a sustainable, accessible, publicly funded health system that provides quality care on a timely basis to Albertans without regard for their ability to pay. The act provides for a number of things, Mr. Speaker, that are very important as we build that long-term framework.

Principles. It's important for any future decision-making and any future decisions that those be founded on basic principles, and those principles are set out in the proposed Alberta Health Act.

The creation of a health charter to create a clear understanding of what Albertans can expect from their health system and what each of us has as responsibilities within that system: very important.

The appointment of a health advocate to assist persons who have difficulty with the health system. There will always be people who have difficulty with the health system. No system can do everything perfectly, so when there are problems with the health system, when there are problems that a patient has, they need to have a clear way to have those problems solved and resolved in an easy way. A health advocate is a very important addition to the system to make sure that people know exactly where they need to go if they have problems with where they are in the system or the service that they get in the system or their access to the system.

Roles and responsibilities. We've talked a lot about roles and responsibilities in terms of the fact that we have a health board and what its roles and responsibilities are. Under a new health act we'll be able to clearly delineate the role of the department of health and the ministry of health and the role of the health board. And that's important. It was important when we had nine health boards; it's important when we have one health board. It's important because there are issues of policy and direction which are clearly the purview of the province on behalf of the citizens of Alberta.

Then there's the board to implement those policies, to make sure that they adhere to infection prevention control standards, for example, that they adhere to the policies and directions that are set on behalf of Albertans by the government through the ministry. There are distinct roles, and those roles and responsibilities need to be clearly understood.

The Health Act provides for reporting. It allows the minister to request of health providers, whether they're inside the publicly funded health system or otherwise, if they're paid for with the public dollar, to require that they provide certain data and information, and that is important. It's very important. It's appropriate because if we want informed decision-making, it has to be data based and, if necessary, ensured that appropriate data is collected and that data that's collected is used appropriately.

Nonidentifiable information can be utilized in health planning, but it can also be utilized in accountability for the system. Decisions can be made on the basis of the best data, and appropriate nonidentifiable data can be reported to the public for transparency and openness with respect to systems performance.

Most importantly, Bill 17 provides for public input and involvement in future regulation and development.

Mr. Boutilier: Who wrote that for you?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo asks who wrote this for me. I can assure him it's in my own handwriting.

Mr. Boutilier: Did you write it, Dave?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, I did. I wrote this all by my little self.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: What's important is that all Albertans want to be involved in writing the next chapter, so that piece in Bill 17 is very important, the commitment that regulations under this act will be discussed in public with the public before they are approved. That discussion with the public, obviously, Mr. Speaker, will be done in an informed way and in a responsible way and in a respectful way, not at all like the debate we heard from the Wildrose earlier in the Chamber.

All of those pieces in the Alberta Health Act, Mr. Speaker, provide us important fundamentals for the future. The minister of health today laid out more groundwork by publishing Becoming the Best: Alberta's 5-Year Health Action Plan and accompanying performance measures. This five-year action plan deals with a wide variety of matters within the health system.

Mr. Speaker, this takes us forward, but it's not the whole picture. Bill 17 recognizes in its preamble that Albertans want "reasonable access to timely and appropriate care, including primary care." Primary care is an essential piece going forward. Primary care networks are well advanced in Alberta but with much more to do to ensure that primary care networks are available to all Albertans, that primary care networks are established in a way which allows for and ensures that the wide variety of health care providers and caregivers that we have in this province can participate at their highest level of ability and capacity, and that the focus of primary care be on helping Albertans stay healthy and to manage their chronic conditions. In other words, to help Albertans stay out of the acute-care system rather than being the gateway into the health care system.

There is simply no question that if we want a sustainable, affordable acute-care system that is there for every Albertan on a timely basis, when they need it and with the fullest range of capabilities and leading-edge care, most of us have to be healthy most of the time. We'll never be able to afford a health care system which allows every Albertan in the door all the time; therefore, it's incumbent on us to focus on prevention, to focus on health, to focus on keeping ourselves healthy, and to focus on primary care accessible to all Albertans, which will assist us in managing chronic conditions, which will assist us in keeping ourselves healthy rather than focusing on how we get into the acute-care system.

That means that where possible, and there are times when it's not, we must . . .

Mr. Boutilier: But "I" wrote this stuff.

Mr. Hancock: I did write it myself, and I can't read the darn writing.

There are times, of course, Mr. Speaker, that through no fault of our own we come down with illness or trauma or disease, but where possible we must take responsibility to be as healthy as possible and have those primary care networks there to support us in staying healthy and, as I said before, to manage our chronic conditions.

Primary care networks, as I've said, can help us with chronic conditions and staying healthy, but they also have other important opportunities and functions. In geriatric care, for example, I have personal experience with my own family. I've been to emergency many, many times, and I've stayed overnight in emergency. It's not a pleasant experience, and it's not what we want for our parents as they age. I don't want to go through that again, quite frankly, and we shouldn't have to because for most in many, many cases, certainly in many of the times that I was there, emergency wasn't the place where we ought to have been; it was the door in to have certain procedures done. But if we had the kind of primary care networks and the kind of support systems to those primary care networks that I'm talking about and that we've been talking about in this province, we would be able to deal with many of those conditions that our aging parents have outside of emergency, with a lot more respect, quite frankly, and dignity. That's what we need to look to to build on the system.

Albertans need to have early access and preventive access to mental health care and community treatment. We have examples already of primary care networks that have psychiatrists and specialists in mental health attached to them.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes for questions and comments are available. The hon. minister of health under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Zwozdesky: If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud would just elaborate a little bit more on some of the experiences that he had in emergency, that he referred to, which is one of the major performance target areas that we've had. It's generated a lot of debate in this Assembly. I don't mean to take too much time. I just wondered if he had some suggestions on what we might do to make that experience better than he has experienced through the pain and suffering that he may have had himself or through pain and suffering that some of his relatives may have gone through.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have so much more to say, but I'll leave that for another day, and I will answer the hon. member's question. I was in emergency a number of times with my mom because she had a congenital heart condition, and oftentimes we attended in emergency because that's where we were told we needed to go so that they could deal with the buildup of fluids and those sorts of things. It came to a point where I believe I could have done that process myself, but I wouldn't dare. The reality is that there could be a geriatric care area where you could go for that kind of care. You could set that aside with its own special entry model and deal with people on a much more timely basis and with a lot more dignity.

Quite frankly, there's a hallway at the Royal Alex that I was going to put up a sign in because that was my mom's parking spot. That's not what we want to do in the future. There are issues we can deal with in terms of making it possible for greater so-called throughput, and that's important, but it's also important to understand who needs to go to emergency and why and what we can do, particularly in geriatric care. There's a lot more that can be done if we focus on how to do that properly and if we focus on the patient, the dignity of the patient and the procedures that need to be done that are not emergency procedures but are very important and need to be done on a timely basis.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and former health minister this. I, too, was in emergency during the time when you were the health minister. I was working in emergency along with the 300 emergency doctors and the thousands of emergency nurses. Those 322 cases that became public were from a two-week period at the University of Alberta hospital. My father nearly died in the emergency department during the election. He spent 10 days in the ICU because he waited eight hours in the waiting room for care. Those 322 cases were from a two-week period at one hospital alone, under your leadership when you were the health care minister. Having understood the issue and being a family member of an ailing parent, did you call in the Health Quality Council? What did you do to improve the situation other than to beat up the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the AMA over Bill 41, over a minor infection prevention matter, which is an important issue, by the way?

The second question. The primary care networks are a good thing, but are you aware that of the $149 million spent, there are only 425 full-time equivalents, allied health professionals, which works out to about $352,000 per allied health professional? The people that really need to be rostered into the primary care networks are the poor and the vulnerable, especially the ones in the inner city. They're actually not rostered onto them. They are the ones admitted to acute care, and 16 per cent of the time they end up back in acute care within seven to 14 days. Are you aware of that? You as the minister were in charge of those primary care networks, and that's currently what's happening. The people that are rostered are all the people in Edmonton-Whitemud and Calgary-West.

So if you could answer those two questions: what did you do as minister, and did you call the Health Quality Council?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer the questions. The hon. member already knows the answer because he was with me when I went to meet with both the Calgary health authority and the Capital health authority and encouraged them – I more than encouraged them; I perhaps even browbeat them a little bit – to establish the full capacity protocol which that member brought to my attention as an appropriate way to deal with that kind of an issue on a short-term basis as we dealt with the long-term issue. So he knows full well that I was there making a difference in emergency at the time that I was health minister, and I was doing it with his advice and direction in terms of what we should be doing.

With respect to that system, the hon. member will also recall that that particular time that he spoke about, in February, it was the middle of flu season. Capital health put up the emergency response tent in their parking lot at that point in time, right in the middle of the election. So there was no secret about what was happening. It was being done in full sight of the public, and we were dealing with the issues in emergency at that time.

With respect to the rostering of members the hon. member is actually very correct on that. We need to make sure that everyone is allowed the opportunity to be rostered to a health authority on a voluntary basis, if there's one available to them.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I have found this whole debate fascinating. I sometimes think that I'm here but not really here.

You know, it's interesting. The former minister of health from Edmonton-Whitemud had the opportunity to fix the system. The former minister from Sherwood Park had the opportunity to fix the system. The former minister from Calgary-West had an opportunity to fix the system, and now the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has an opportunity to fix the system because, quite frankly, we still have a broken system.

I'm saddened to be speaking once again on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, which is cut short by a time allocation that the government has put forward. I've stood in this House over and over debating, and I've spent hours and hours listening intently. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has provided a solution to the crisis we are facing in our emergency room, as has the Wildrose caucus. The amendment, that was defeated, included the guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care, and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur, with some straightforward criteria that had to be met.

Bill 17 the way it is written talks only in the preamble about reasonable access to timely and appropriate care. Albertans want the wait times in legislation, not performance measures on a piece of paper. If the government is transparent, accountable, and serious about providing the best health care in Canada, then put your money where your mouth is and put it in legislation. The minister goes on to say that while there is nothing wrong with legislated time frames, the court system would become more involved than it already is. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark indicated that four conditions must be met for a successful lawsuit.

Mr. Speaker, where I'm struggling and, more importantly, what Albertans are saying is that if the government is serious about fixing the system, they first have to acknowledge that it is in crisis. We have heard from the health minister, and not only does he disagree that we are in a crisis, but he also doesn't believe that the health care system is broken. Since October 25 the Wildrose caucus has continually asked the government pointed questions, which they respond to by saying that they don't know. They dance around the question. They continue to repeat answers that are irrelevant to the questions, and I could go on and on.

Albertans want answers, and they want to know numbers, like how many net new acute-care beds there are in the health care system and how many beds have been closed. They want to know how many family doctors there are in the province and why it is so difficult to find one. They want increased home care and want to know how many nursing beds are available. They want to know how many long-term care beds are available, and they want our beloved seniors to quit being nickelled and dimed to death.

The government's own documents indicate that Alberta's health system is highly complex and confusing. People have difficulty accessing health services, and their own public service feedback indicates significant skepticism and mistrust of government. It goes even further to say that the Alberta Health Act is not on the public's radar and that wait times and access to family doctors are the number one concern and the number one priority of Albertans. What is interesting here, Mr. Speaker, is that the government's own MAC committee also recognizes that wait times and access to family doctors is the number one priority of Albertans. Now, once again the government has evoked time allocation on an amendment that Albertans have clearly articulated they support.

Mr. Speaker, in my 15 years in this Legislature I can't remember an amendment that has pulled at the heart of Albertans this much. Not only are they upset about how the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was treated; they are appalled at the government refusing to listen to a front-line, well-respected emergency physician. What is and has happened to this individual is criminal; nothing more, nothing less. You know, when an issue is resonating with Albertans, they let their own MLAs know by the phone calls, the e-mails, tweets, Facebook messages. They stop you on the street asking and questioning: why is the government doing this?

The government pretends everything is all right. While they can live in their la-la-land, Albertans know differently. Albertans are tired of the government not listening. Albertans are tired of the government's gobbledygook. Albertans are proud people. They want their MLAs to do the job that they were sent to do. They want their MLAs to listen and to represent their views. They want their MLA to stand up on their behalf, for them and their loved ones. What is truly sad, Mr. Speaker, is that the government has let the people of Alberta down. That is not acceptable.

I was in the government, Mr. Speaker, for many years. I know how they act, I know how they bully, and I know how they intimidate. I know how they always feel that they are right and that it doesn't matter what Albertans want or think. I left that government on January 4 of this year because I couldn't pass the mirror test anymore. When you have trouble not being able to look in the mirror anymore, it's time to move on. My role as the MLA for the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek is to represent my constituents, and as a member of the PC government I couldn't do that anymore. Ten months ago I stood before the press and I stood before Albertans, telling them why I was crossing the floor for a number of reasons, health care being one of the top priorities.

Today, Mr. Speaker, is a sad day for Albertans, it's a sad day for democracy, and it's a sad day for health care in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing no one, the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to rise this evening and to speak on behalf of the government on Bill 17. When I review the Alberta Health Act, it seems like for the past 13-plus years that I have been a member of this caucus in this government, we have been waiting for just such an act that clearly identifies principles, access, reasonableness, the Canada Health Act, and rolls into one piece of legislation a framework that Albertans can rely on to deliver health. Surely, there can be no better act of a Legislature than to pass a framework in support of the health that we hope to have for our families and for our loved ones and for our communities as a whole.

Within this act there are words in the preamble such as enhancing the health and wellness and the quality of life of Albertans, that is influenced by their economic, social, cultural, physical, and spiritual contexts. I'm especially proud that the word "spiritual" is included because in my background training as a nurse at the Holy Cross, spiritual was a great part of what we talked about when we talked about the health of an individual and recognized that it was integral to the health of the individual. This Alberta Health Act enshrines that, that our system should strengthen the overall health and wellness of Albertans.

Clearly, a good part of this will involve the public education of Albertans on how we can best take care of our own health. Surely, access to our facilities would improve if Albertans right from day 1 were taught about keeping themselves well, keeping themselves safe, and keeping themselves in a position of maximizing their potential. It's great preventive medicine to teach a child how to cross the street safely, how to wipe their nose, wash their hands, and care for their own, immediate person. As we grow to adults, to keep care of each other is a very important thing. Our legislation contradicting smoking is a direct path of where this government intends to go. In other words, try to compel people who have not their best interests at heart to really take a look at the net impact not only to themselves but to their community and fellow man of doing those kinds of practices that are deleterious to their health.

The act speaks of individuals, families, and community receiving quality health services that are safe, and safe is an important element of why we have the Health Quality Council and why so much of our direction in hospitals is dedicated to making hospitals make health care facilities safe.

That Albertans have reasonable access to timely and appropriate care, including primary care: clearly, since the time we had the hon. member now with us as our representative in Washington working on establishing primary care networks, the primary care networks are singularly one of the beacons of light that this government can look back on to say that we have advanced this considerably, and in doing so, we have provided people access to care that would not otherwise have it.

When we talk about publicly funded health services based on need and not the ability to pay, here enshrined in this Alberta Health Act is clearly the statement that I think Albertans can rely on to look at the fact that this is a publicly funded health system, not contingent on their capacity to pay.

Again, the reference to physical, spiritual, and mental health, Mr. Speaker, mental health is hugely important and hugely influential on the overall health of the individual. I am glad now to note that we have a mental health advocate office to look after the very particular needs that we have to emphasize in culturing a society where mental health is consistently looked after in the proper fashion, where treatments are available, where early identification and triage are successfully put in place so that people with mental health issues can receive their services.

Where it discusses health services being delivered in ways that understand the experience, recognize perspectives, and respond to the health needs of individuals, Mr. Speaker, this is consistent with the legislation for family supports for children with disabilities, recognizing the potential, recognizing the need, recognizing the unique characteristics of individuals, recognizing the unique characteristics of families and communities.

This act talks about long-term planning, innovation, adaptation, and continuous improvement. One of the reasons why I think this particular piece of legislation is a quality framework is that the canvassing that was done by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has set the stage for us putting in place something that can be continually evaluated in terms of a future charter, in terms of health decisions, financial stewardship, and the allocation of those resources.

The definitions, Mr. Speaker, are most appropriate, talking about promoting and maintaining physical or mental health, preventing illness, diagnosing, treating, or rehabilitating, and taking care of the health needs of the ill, disabled, injured, or dying.

Mr. Speaker, I've spoken many times recently about the issues for my mother, and I'm very happy to say that her experience in the Foothills hospital was one of genuine caring, expedient action, and the most appropriate kinds of delivery of service imaginable. She has commented many times about the professionalism of the staff, the capacity they had for calming her down even though she went through a series of tests and X-rays. Even though that evening it was very busy in the emergency department when I found her, she was magnificently cared for by quality and caring staff. We can do no less than to offer an act that will enable us to perpetuate this kind of opportunity.

The advancement of a health charter contained within this act recognizes that health is a partnership among individuals, that families, communities, and health providers must work together with the government and acknowledge the impact of the individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the system but must not be used to limit access to health services. I think that admonition is a reasonable caution for whomever is in the position of evaluating the individual's health status so that, in fact, the charter itself becomes something that we can rely on as something that sets the highest possible standards and does not diminish in any way the opportunity an individual would have to access the proper services.

More than that, review of the health charter at least once every five years is a responsible opportunity to measure the performance, to look at the performance measures, the regulations, to review them to see if they're still current and relevant. I think this is extremely important, Mr. Speaker, because Alberta geographically is the size of three European countries, has many remote spots, has many places where service delivery may not be as easily accessed. I think the health charter, with the principles enshrined in here considerate and concurrent with the principles in the Canada Health Act, behooves us to look every once in a while, at least every five years, to make sure that we are staying current with new technological advances and that we are providing the best possible health service.

The advocacy contained in this act, the appointment of a health advocate: we should do not less. We should in fact make sure that there is somebody to whom complaints can be leveled if there is a belief that the health service provided is not contingent with what this health act outlines. That person, following a review, must report. That particular acknowledgement that the advocate shall prepare and submit a report summarizing the activities will in fact assure that this is transparent, that the people of Alberta have an opportunity to review what the advocate has said and whether or not the particular roles and responsibilities of the health act have been maintained.

Again, this particular section strengthens the health system in Alberta because it assures, beyond the people that are charged with the responsibility of delivering health to our citizens, there is somebody that is monitoring that health, somebody that is acting as a sober, cold-eye review of whatever complaint is brought forward and considers carefully not only the acknowledgement within this act but the Canada Health Act to make sure that we are accountable, that we're dealing with it in a comprehensive fashion, that reasonable access, above all, is maintained.

Now, I do agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who acknowledges the two issues that I think are uppermost in the minds of the people in my constituency: access and how long they have to wait for service. I recognize that putting in place this act in itself will not accomplish all of the things that the health minister, that the people in the health care delivery mode have to do, but it gives some type of framework and guarantee that this province means to service the public health system in the best way possible. It acknowledges the need for looking at access as a primary portion of it, and the principles and the performance measures that have been further expanded on in the five-year action plan that the health minister has delivered today fit contiguously into the cycle of the health act, setting out a broad-stroke policy document with principles, with wait times, with assurances to Albertans that we expect to see some results within the next five years.

Mr. Speaker, there is an expression. Rome was not built in a day. I am absolutely convinced as a Member of this Legislative Assembly that if I were to return here in 15 or 20 years, there would still be significant conversations in this Legislative Assembly about health care. Why? Because that will always be what we cherish the most as a society. That will be the hallmark of how Alberta either performs better or at least as well as the minimum standards that are established in Canada and perhaps even the world.

Mr. Speaker, at the time that I was privileged to be in the health file, I remember a physician relocating back to Oxford to look at the alma mater that he was trained at and to contemplate whether or not he could do more there to deliver better management of strokes and various circulatory issues. The framework that he established here and that we ultimately expanded upon for stroke treatments and early diagnosis in Alberta has made us leaders in the kinds of things that we deliver for people who have suffered a stroke or people who may be in need of receipt of some kind of medication or medical treatment throughout Alberta to assure that they get the best opportunity to maximize their return and rehabilitation.

We have made strides step-by-step, stride-by-stride, and we have been acknowledged for the many things that we have done to improve the system. I have a hope, when I read this Alberta Health Act and contemplate it in the Canadian context, that a great part of what we will do in the years ahead is to enable the minister as the appointed and elected leader of the health care delivery system to expand upon the research and development that will further improve best practices in the health management of our system and also on the individual's health and wellness. When we look at the kinds of things that have been delivered today in the five-year action plan, I respect and believe that that will take place.

The ministerial regulations here are not a large, lengthy list of what the minister may do. It is, in fact, in the broad strokes of this health act that we find the real truth of the publicly funded system that the minister intends to deliver in this piece of legislation.

One final comment, Mr. Speaker, relative to public input. Again, if we came back here 10, 15, 20 years from now, we should be proud that we are encouraging public input not only from the complaints management position of the advocate but from the opportunity to continually inform ourselves either through the website or new technology that will enable us to learn more about the health system, that will enable us in the future to manage our own electronic health care record. My hope is that my grandchildren someday will look at their own electronic health record, see how they've performed, be able to weigh the evidence from one year to the next, not only their weight, what their dietary implications would be, but be able to measure it against performance measures that would be posted that would have been approved by perhaps the College of Physicians and Surgeons, that would talk, in fact, about the kinds of things that would make them a healthy, well person.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the hon. member, a former health minister: is there anything in Bill 17 that enables them to do something that they already cannot do? This is such a hollow bill. What is in here that is one thing that is essential to their five-year action plan or anything else that they could not do without this bill?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that this sets the framework for a charter, something that has been long a subject of debate here. What people have been asking us for is the opportunity for that public input. Yes, we could do it, I'm sure, without a bill, but this bill strengthens that, gives people the right.

I'm just going to answer this way. After we passed the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, people wept. People who had children that needed supports wept because they could finally look at not just one line contained in some bill on child welfare. It spelled out clearly what they could expect as families. This spells out clearly what people can expect in a public health system that we would deliver. It also acknowledges the minister's role in making sure that a health charter would be provided, that public health would be there, that public input would be there in a way that I think Albertans are expecting. I think Albertans are expecting this. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency I think they're demanding it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar under 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the citizens in the constituency of Sherwood Park are demanding is a hospital. Now, the minister indicated in her remarks that Rome wasn't built in a day. Well, Sherwood Park has been waiting years for a hospital. You were talking about reasonable and timely access to care for all citizens, and you also mentioned that, certainly, citizens in Sherwood Park want access to the system and do not want to wait a long period of time for service. My question to you would be: why is there not a public hospital in the constituency of Sherwood Park after so many years of promises?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, to be germane to this particular piece of legislation, this speaks to the broader health context. I would say that initially, in 1977, there was a study done, and it was determined that likely Mill Woods would have the greater numbers of population, and population projections and demographics at that time precipitated that the Grey Nuns hospital as it currently stands would be built. It's only in the last few years, when we've had expanded population, that the study that was then done by Capital health implemented a different type of acknowledgement of the birth rates, the demographics, and the population east of Edmonton and acknowledged that because of the attendance area there may be reasonableness in building a different type of facility.

Mr. Speaker, if I could invite the hon. member, phase 1 of that facility is already up. There are at least frameworks there of steel, which gives me great hope that the emergency services and access to the emergency services in my community will be more evidenced than, let's say, 10 years ago. Ever since the tornado ripped through that green space, we've had certainly a lot more interest in a facility there, and we have actually seen the beginnings of that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Sherwood Park for her remarks. My understanding is that she was a nurse years ago, and as a nurse she should know that on the front lines talk is cheap and that we're more interested in action. I heard the hon. member speak when I was at the AMA forum in 2006, and I was really encouraged by the words, but I was disappointed by the action.

On the spiritual side what we've recently done at the Royal Alex hospital is that we fired God's representative, Dr. Neil Elford. We fired the Provincial Health Ethics Network. We fired the ethical and the moral people in the health system. The front-line staff have a major mental health problem. Twenty-five per cent morale is in the absolute boots. Rome wasn't built in a day, and the health care system wasn't torn down in a day.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join the debate, this very limited and abbreviated debate, on Bill 17 in third reading. I have to say that when I think about Bill 17, my first thought, of course, is that it's a very empty piece of legislation and that it's in many ways exceptionally meaningless. In fact, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore asked a very excellent question when he asked the previous speaker what exactly it is that this act allows someone to do that couldn't be done before because, of course, it is meaningless.

That being the case, why, then, are we so concerned that the government has chosen to limit debate on this bill? I will say that the reason for that is because at the eleventh hour, much to the chagrin of this government, the actual explanation for the role and the meaning of Bill 17 was leaked and became apparent to Albertans. With that context now in place the significance of Bill 17 becomes greater. Unfortunately, at the same time that that new information inadvertently has come out, much to the chagrin of this government and despite their attempts to keep this information away from Albertans, the government this very day has chosen to limit debate on Bill 17.

It's really frustrating, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's disrespectful to all Albertans because, quite frankly, the information included in the document Alberta's Health Legislation: Moving Forward is the kind of thing that Albertans deserve to have substantive and substantial debate on in this Legislature, not to have the rules of closure and bully through this act and try to get out of the Legislature so that they don't have to talk about this document. That's not what Albertans want. When this government did their consultation this summer on what Albertans wanted, I'm pretty sure that Albertans did not say: "Put up a piece of fluffy legislation. Don't tell us what's behind it. Bring down closure if that information happens to get out." I'm quite sure and I can say with some certainty that that is not what Albertans asked for.

Now, many people have said already that what Albertans actually want is a functional health care system. It's truly unfortunate that we're not able to say that that's what they have right now, but we're not able to say that. I believe that the reason we have so many challenges within our health care system is because this government is actually quite interested in creating an appetite for more private delivery and more private funding within the health care system, and I've thought that for a very long time.

I have to say – I mentioned this in question period today – that the level of incompetence that this government has demonstrated in the management of our health care system is unfathomable. One cannot imagine how you could accidentally make as many mistakes as this government has made. So when it becomes the case that it's not just a 50-50 flip of a coin – will they get it right; will they not? – that, in fact, they make mistakes that are against all odds, then you think that there has to be something more to it. This document, Alberta's Health Legislation: Moving Forward, is in fact the explanation for what it is the government actually wants to do.

This bill, originally perceived by most engaged Albertans to be something that was nothing but an empty shell, a bit of fluff, something put together by the government in a desperate attempt to regain some level of public trust in their administration of health care, does in fact have a very clear purpose, and it's set out in this document. The purpose of this bill, Bill 17, is to, quote, build public confidence because one thing that this government heard about this summer was that there is no public confidence in the health care system.

How are they going to build public confidence? Well, in Bill 17 we have some vague principles saying that we are in support of the Canada Health Act. That's just great except that any health policy analyst knows that the Canada Health Act is only one of a number of acts that protect Canadians from having their health care system privatized. Just as important to that scheme of protective legislation is a whole series of provincial acts. These are the provincial acts that the government is not committing to. These are the provincial acts that are touched on by this document. These are the provincial acts that the government plans to change after the next election to open the door to more private delivery and more private funding of health care in Alberta.

That principle, that statement, "We commit to the Canada Health Act," is somewhat duplicitous because the fact of the matter is that most people know that that is not the full answer to the question. The government knows that it's not the full answer to the question, but they are not telling Albertans that fact.

What else does this Bill 17 create? Well, it creates a patient charter. You know, I have to say that I listened with much amusement over the extended debate about the amendment that was put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. All government members got up and said: oh, we couldn't possibly include in the charter this issue of wait times because, you know, that would just grind the system to a halt. But that was, really, a truly duplicitous argument because we all know that this charter is in and of itself meaningless. It has no force and effect. It's not enforceable. It doesn't have any legal authority. Like this whole act, it's meaningless. It's fluff. It's PR. That's all it is. It's just another part of the build public confidence piece that someone in the PAB cooked up together with whomever in the ministry of health.

Also, this act is supposed to lay out a scheme for further public engagement. Well, that one, Mr. Speaker, really got me giggling. Here's the scheme for public engagement that's set out in this act.

The minister will give notice of no less than 30 days, and then the minister will tell cabinet that he gave notice. Then the minister will go ahead and change the regulations to do whatever the heck he wants. Well, let me tell you that that is not what Albertans perceive as public consultation. That's notice that we're going to do something that you don't like, and you don't have any guaranteed right to say anything back or in any way to hold us accountable for what you tell us. That's what that is. That's not consultation; that's nothingness. Moreover, it's such a meaningless, laughable system of public engagement; the only thing that makes it more meaningless and more laughable is the provision which allows the minister to waive it. That's as close as this act gets to providing for any kind of engagement. It's as empty and as meaningless as the rest of the stuff in this act.

What's important about this act? Why do we care if it's so meaningless? Well, here's why we care. This act according to this document is, in fact, phase 1. When you have a phase 1 and you get through phase 1, then you have to be worried about what's going to happen when you get to phase 2. Well, phase 2, my friends, is where the rubber hits the road. Phase 2 is where this government plans to put one over on Albertans. Phase 2 is something that this government will not have the courage to bring forward or admit to Albertans until after the next election. That is very clear.

Phase 2 includes opt-in, opt-out privileges for physicians. Let's just be clear. Having a privately funded parallel system does not magically create more doctors. It does not magically create more nurses. It does not magically create any of that. What it does is that it allows doctors to practise in both. So for those doctors who decide to put a few more hours of the day in the private system and for whomever can afford to walk into that private system, they get their services first.

The public system is starved. The public system gets less. The services that we've talked about being so inadequate, the pain and the suffering that we have heard about in excruciating detail over the course of the last few weeks: it gets worse, Mr. Speaker, if possible. That's what happens when you allow physicians to opt in and opt out of the public system, to do both.

What else are they talking about doing? Well, they're talking about coming up with evidence-based assessment to decide what the real essential health care services are. Well, we all know. Again, anyone who followed the debate through the Romanow report and the Mazankowski report knows that's the crux of the matter. If this government starts giving itself permission to delist services, those services that are delisted become privately funded. This is not rocket science, folks.

If there comes an agenda to limit the scope of publicly funded essential health care services, the remainder becomes privately funded, which is only available to those with the resources to pay for it, and the rest of us will just have to do without. That's the direction this government wants to take Albertans in through phase 2, and it's wrong. I would suggest that not coming out openly and talking about this with Albertans is dishonest. All members of the government who had anything to do with this document should be apologizing to Albertans for the dishonesty which is inherent in this document.

What else does this document talk about? Well, we talk about exploring new benefit models for providing those not quite essential health care services. What that means is coming up with private insurers to insure things like – hmm, let's think about this – somebody making you a meal when you're in long-term care because you can't possibly get out of your bed. Well, we know now chiropractic is already off, maybe physiotherapy next time, maybe more eye exams, maybe speech pathology services for children under 12, maybe dietitian services for diabetics who are in long-term care. Who knows the plethora of services that this government could decide are only partially essential, that would benefit from an alternative model of insurance?

All of that means more money out of taxpayers' pockets to pay for health care that we as a community, as a province, as a country have always all believed ought to be something that is equally available to all of us at no cost. That's what this government wants to do, and that's what's included in this document, and that is what this government plans to follow up this meaningless, fluffy piece of legislation with. So that's why it matters.

The other thing that, of course, the government wants to do and has talked about in this document is this idea of changing the rules so that more public dollars can go to undesignated, unregulated facilities, again, something else which is currently monitored or overseen by the Hospitals Act, another one of those pieces of legislation that this government intends to deal with after the next election, Mr. Speaker. After the next election, not before, because they wouldn't dare go to the public with this agenda right before the next election.

Well, guess what? It's out now, and the most they can do right now is try to pretend that it's not their document, that this document with government of Alberta written all over it by people within the ministry of health, not Alberta Health Services, not that amorphous little board that they sometimes have control over and sometimes don't have control over. No, no. This is from the department of health, that which is directly accountable and responsible to the minister of health. They created this document with these ideas inside it.

I've listened to the minister of health try to suggest that he had no idea, that it wasn't his document, that they weren't his ideas. Well, that is the most ridiculous thing I have ever heard, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely ridiculous. Either the minister is in charge of his ministry or he's not.

Based on what this province and the people of this province have told this government over and over and over again about their opinions with respect to the privatization of health care, if staff within the ministry of health are coming up with a 40-page PowerPoint presentation on how to privatize health care and the minister of health doesn't know about it, well, then that sounds to me like the most ridiculous waste of wages, and in fact those folks ought to be fired, but I suspect they were only doing what they were asked to do. But someone ought to go, probably this government.

You know, I guess that at the end of the day we have staff sort of arbitrarily creating this document, and we have the minister of health suggesting he didn't know it was there, that it was actually just sort of a combination of ideas that people gave to the government. Then, of course, the now parliamentary secretary of health, who was actually overseeing that collection of ideas – well, it wasn't his document either. Everyone is throwing the document around like a metaphorical hot potato. But, really, you can dance around it all you want. You can come up with five-year plans and 10-year plans and performance targets and new beds and old beds and net beds. Then you can turn around and not make your targets. You can delay your targets, and you can lower your targets, and you can reprofile your hospital openings. I love that one. I loved it when I heard the minister say: we're reprofiling the opening of that hospital. Good Lord, the words that the PAB comes up with. It is unbelievable the way they redefine language. It's really quite a work of art. They can say all those things, but it doesn't matter.

Albertans told this government they wanted their health care fixed. Albertans told this government they wanted long-term care beds. The government broke their promise. They wanted home care; the government isn't even spending the money they've dedicated to it so far. They didn't want their nurses fired; they wanted them kept. They wanted more acute-care beds, not less, and they want mental health addressed once and for all because this is one of the biggest issues causing problems in our health care system throughout.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Five minutes are available under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member. We're looking at closure here by this government, not only on this legislation but on two other bills as well. When the count is done, this government will have used closure six times in scarcely more than a day of legislative debate. We have the Health Services Board, where four of them have resigned. We have emergency room doctors who are pointing out how this government has mismanaged the system. We have billions of dollars in deficits as a result of health care mismanagement. We also have, incredibly, a document which you referred to, and you correctly referred to it. But do you find it suspicious that now we're having these closure motions, yet the government saw fit in July of this year to have a secret consultation process regarding public health care and the future direction that we're going in?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, hon. member. I would say that I find it incredibly disingenuous, and I would say that the government has completely lost touch with what their relationship should be with the voters of Alberta. I suspect that their current polling will tell them that that's really true if it wasn't already true and that they're going to have some real difficulties. But, you know, hon. member, I have to say that it doesn't surprise me. It does not surprise me. This is a government that's been in power for 40 years, that has completely become so enmeshed in its own need to justify everything that it does, it can't distinguish reality from mythology.

They've got their Public Affairs Bureau, that just recharacterizes the truth and spins it around and around and around, and I think the people whose heads spin the most probably are most of the members over on the opposite side. They've lost touch with what's real and what's, in fact, just a PAB document. But I will say that it doesn't surprise me because that's the way this government has been operating. It is – and I will say it again – the most secretive government in the country, and it is a government that is dedicated to undermining our public health care system, and it's a government that is deathly afraid of coming clean with Albertans about that agenda. It has once again, very cynically, decided to move forward on an agenda which is very much in opposition to the majority of Albertans' beliefs behind closed doors.

So, hon. member, I will say that it is unfortunate, but with this particular government it is hardly surprising.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand this evening and speak in support of third reading of Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. I'm going to cover a few areas, but I'd like to begin by thanking the literally thousands of Albertans who participated in two important consultation processes over the last year and two months.

The first process was under the auspices of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health, which I had the privilege to co-chair. That work paved the way for a broader consultation with Albertans that took place over the last spring and summer. In fact, that subsequent work provides the detailed foundation for the Alberta Health Act bill which is before the House at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take a minute and acknowledge the effort and dedication that was exhibited in every corner of this province by people who chose to participate in this process. Not surprising, I'm sure, to any of us in this House, the process confirmed that publicly funded health care, our public health care system, is indeed our most important public good. Albertans view it that way now, they have always viewed it that way, and they will continue, I believe, well into the future to regard the excellent health care system that we have here and the dedicated professionals that deliver the care as really in many cases the most important thing that we can possibly strive to achieve and to improve as a society.

Now, that said, there were some strong messages from Albertans through these two processes as well. You know, in previous discussion on this bill I have talked about the legislative framework and the reasons for looking at the legislative framework as a basis to set a foundation for the future and to provide some parameters that would guide the continuous improvement of our health care system.

I just want to mention again, Mr. Speaker, you know, that legislation does not stand alone, as we all know, as the only basis to look at the quality of our health care system, but it does play an important role, as does the Canada Health Act, as did the Health Insurance Act of 1935, which was passed in Alberta, the first kind of such legislation in the country. It does stand as a very important statement of what we believe in as a society when we talk about health and health care, because both are important, as one of our most valued public goods.

That message was delivered loud and clear by Albertans over the last several months. When we initially began the consultation process, you know, we mentioned that while we're looking at legislative change, legislative improvement as part of this process, it was also accompanied by two other key initiatives. Improvements in the delivery system we've talked about and have had some really good discussion about the need for open and transparent performance measures. The minister has released some of those today. There is a very high demand and, I would say, a very high level of knowledge, very sophisticated knowledge on behalf of the people that we spoke to in the consultation process, basically saying: you are not going to be able to effectively manage what you cannot measure. In part, you know, I credit their messages and their suggestions as put forward in the Putting People First document as also being able to have an impact on that area of the delivery system and how we go about making improvements.

The second area. I think, you know, as a society we have been perhaps preoccupied with the question of funding for health care. I say "preoccupied" in a sense not because financial resources are not important but because Albertans recognize two things. One is numerous attempts over the years to find a magic bullet, to find one approach, one fix to the issues in health care. What they told us quite convincingly and quite strongly right at the beginning of the consultation was: "We're not interested in a search for a magic bullet. Neither are we interested in a debate about the right amount of money the government should be spending on health care." People would frequently say to me: "Well, whether you ask me if $10 billion is enough or $15 billion or $20 billion, I'm not going to know that answer. I'm not interested in cost. What I'm interested in is value. If you're going to talk to me about the third initiative, which is the legislative framework for health, then I want to focus on that question of the value that we are getting for the resources expended, both financial and the very precious resources that are in the form of the health care professionals that deliver care." That was an important message, and I believe that the spirit of that, which is documented in the report, is reflected in this bill.

So I want to expand on that a little bit, Mr. Speaker, as part of my argument as to why I'd encourage hon. members to support the bill. The first is that attitudes toward health and the purpose of a publicly funded health care system, I believe, have changed. Our current legislation, which is dated, much of it, from the 1960s and earlier, focused on the health care system as it existed in the early days of medicare, the years around 1962 in particular. That, of course, was when health care consisted of physician services and hospital services largely based on the principles of insurance, so basically ensuring that no citizen would suffer undue financial hardship as a result of their inability to pay for health care services.

Well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker – and the Alberta Health Act bill before us bears this out; Bill 17 bears this out – that Albertans have a much broader view of both the purpose of our health care system and what it should consist of today. You know, we've talked about questions around specific services that are included under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act bill and things that are listed and things that may be delisted or have been delisted in the past. I can tell you that Albertans are very interested in accessing the services that they need. But their predominant concern – and it's something that's spoken to extensively in this bill – is as the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations said: it's to do with access; it's to do with getting in the front door of the health care system.

I'm sure we've all heard from constituents the frequent comment that, you know, the system works great once you can get into it. The debate over this bill and the amendments that were proposed to this bill have, I think, illustrated very well that point over the last few weeks.

That begs the question, Mr. Speaker, then, of how using legislation we show that we are focusing on the things that matter most to Albertans, not in terms of immediate decisions, decisions that are important and that have been made and will continue to be made around things like increasing continuing care bed capacity, having proven evidence-based strategies to deal with things like emergency room wait times. Those are all extremely important. We heard about those in the consultation. But Albertans were very interested in not what does the government stand for, but what do we as a society, what do Albertans as a people stand for when it comes to health care. The answer was that we stand for a system that recognizes health in the true sense, that is well-being, as being the most important, the primary purpose of having publicly funded health care in Alberta or, in fact, anywhere in Canada.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, the bill before us speaks in the preamble and in other places in the bill to questions such as the need for an integrated approach to policy development in the health care system. That means being willing to look at education and housing and income support and all of those other things that have a very direct bearing on the health status of our people at the same time as we're talking about the bricks and mortar of the health care system, which, I believe, we do a lot. We probably do more talking about the bricks and mortar than we talk about the social care in the truest sense.

Albertans through the consultation and as reflected in the bill talked about the need for things like spiritual care, consideration around end-of-life care issues, better primary care, looking at how we integrate the public health care system with services in housing and income support and other areas. They talked about the health of this generation and, most importantly, of this bill being able to provide hope for better health for the generations to come. That is one of the foundational elements of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and why it is important, perhaps not for the immediate discussion of the issues of the day – we've had a long vetting of those over the last couple of weeks – maybe not as important to those questions, but certainly very important in terms of establishing clearly where we in 2010 stand as a province and as a people and, most importantly, what we are prepared to do and stand for in terms of improving the health of the generations to come, including the children and grandchildren of the members here and of the people that participated in the process.

That brings me, Mr. Speaker, to some other feedback from the consultation, and perhaps it will explain to some extent questions that have been asked about what is not in this bill. It was very clear when we began. We asked people, quite frankly, as part of this what they were open to in the future if we were going to be developing overarching legislation that would guide decision-making, that would set clear parameters in terms of principles and a patient charter. When we asked them about those components of this bill, we had an obligation and a duty – and we did so – to ask them what they are open to and what they are not open to.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it was very clear – and it should be a surprise to no members in this House – that the majority of people that we spoke to are not in favour of additional privatization of the health care system. You know what? There are no avenues that open that in this bill. In fact, there are some very stringent restrictions in this bill that would not allow the consolidation of some of our existing legislation or future legislative changes without consultation. There's nothing in this bill that allows a Minister of Health and Wellness to unilaterally by ministerial order or by order in council amend any existing legislation and move what's in statute today into regulations tomorrow. That is not enabled by this bill in any way, shape, or form.

Albertans were very clear that they want above all engagement and dialogue. As the individual that had the responsibility of leading this process, I believe that we have begun the process, Mr. Speaker, of moving from conflict about health care, at least in terms of the discourse in the community, to true dialogue about health care. Maybe we should take a moment to reflect on what the bill might do to enable that in the future.

Now, there's been some criticism this evening about the provision around consultation, that would require the minister to provide notice, consult with Albertans about proposed changes or new regulations, and to consider the feedback that is provided. While I can agree that in and of itself such a mechanism may not adequately reflect the spirit that we want to employ when we conduct dialogue in the future, it is nonetheless a very important development in health care legislation in this country to have such a requirement placed in legislation. That is in direct response to the wishes of Albertans.

In the report Putting People First, that supports this legislation, we do see some suggested principles to guide consultation in the future. In very practical terms, Mr. Speaker, what do people want? Well, what they don't want is to be asked to pick from two or three options in response to a problem that they've had no involvement in framing. What they do want is to be actively engaged in a discussion about what the problems are, to have the opportunity to reflect those issues, those challenges and the opportunities in the context of their own community, not just the province as a whole but what will work in their community and, most importantly – and I believe that we achieve this in the consultation process – that we reflect back to them after the fact what they said and we show them very clearly what impact that had on final decisions that were made. This is one of the transitions that I think will be enabled by the Alberta Health Act in the future.

The other area I wanted to just touch on briefly is – and we've talked about it a bit earlier tonight – this whole question of the health charter. Now, a number of hon. members have raised concerns about the provision that's in here for a charter not providing an enforceable charter. In other words, some surprise, I guess, that we did not propose in this bill a rights-based patient charter. [Mr. Horne's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We just heard a very smooth, shrewd, silver-tongued former deputy health minister, now parliamentary secretary to the minister of health, talk about Bill 17 and how important it is and how enabling it is and the consultation that they went through, but I'll ask him the same question. What they're really saying in all of this long-drawn-out speech is that for the last four health ministers we've failed Albertans. Now, though, we've gone out and consulted with them to listen to them and say: well, what promise do we need to do to put in a bill so that you'll have confidence in us? This is what they think this promise is: a flat, hollow bill with a charter and an advocate in there that is accountable to the minister.

What in this bill, Mr. Speaker, enables or changes anything that the health minister couldn't or shouldn't have already done? The last health minister wouldn't answer my question. I'll ask this one. What is one thing in this bill that they couldn't already do if they actually wanted to do it? They're all talk, no walk, no action. Why do they need to pass this bill on closure? There is nothing new in here other than a promise on a piece of paper that, like I say, Chamberlain would be embarrassed to bring home and wave to the people and say: oh, look what I've passed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the hon. member's question, if all one is interested in is changes to existing programs and services, if your focus is on institutions and the transfer of money and beds, I suppose that this bill in and of itself would not offer you a lot of reason to think that your particular expectations would be met. I believe that there are many citizens in this province who are interested in how we are going to approach building the health care system of the future, acknowledging the challenges that exist today and with every responsibility, of course, to deal with those challenges.

If you're interested in the future, if you recognize the complexity of the decisions that will have to be made in response to things such as our aging population and technology and other factors that influence health care, if you acknowledge that there are finite resources within which we must work in order to make all of this possible, and, most of all, if you want hope as a citizen of this province that you will actually have a say and have an opportunity for some direct influence in shaping that system, not only for yourself but perhaps on behalf of the aging parents that you're caring for or the generation that's going to follow you, then I think this bill has an awful lot to offer, Mr. Speaker.

I would be remiss if I didn't say that despite a lot of the challenges that we've talked about in the House and some of the minister's recent announcements designed to address those challenges, those came up in the consultations. Those weren't off the table, Mr. Speaker. Those were the first questions that we asked to try to get a sense of what was going on in each community.

The most important thing that we heard was that people want hope and they want engagement and they want involvement in shaping the health care system of the future. While it's true there was support for recommitting Alberta to the principles in the Canada Health Act, I think anyone who takes an opportunity to look at this bill, Mr. Speaker, will see that the additional principles that have been developed and proposed by Albertans through the consultation are an important reflection of where we stand as a society.

The principles that we want to see applied, that I would suggest citizens want to see applied and for which we as elected members of this Assembly will be held to account: they want to see those in writing. They want to see the mechanism for consultation in writing. It was the feeling of the majority of the people that participated that they wanted to see not a rights-based Charter of Rights and Freedoms type document, not a way to enable more litigation and more conflict in the health care system, but a health charter to chart the course for the future, Mr. Speaker. That is what the charter is all about, and Albertans were very willing to talk about roles and responsibilities in that context, both in terms of government, health providers, and also citizen roles and responsibilities with that very important provision, that the charter under no circumstances could be used to deny anyone care.

Mr. Speaker, these are important thoughts. This is the thoughtful consideration and investment of time of our people, and we should . . . [Mr. Horne's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured to have another opportunity to speak to this very important issue. You know, I'm not sure if I'm allowed to use this word. I should ask your permission. Am I allowed to use the word "malarkey" in this honoured, hallowed Chamber? I looked up the definition of malarkey. It means exaggerated or foolish talk usually intended to deceive.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I've heard a ton of malarkey in this House. I'm just telling you. I've heard a ton of malarkey behind the scenes. I've got a whole bunch of questions where I'm thinking: holy cow. My son is a 15-year-old. He loves Star Wars, and he was telling me about the Jedi Knights and the Sith. The Sith clouded what the Jedi would normally see.

I'll tell you that these are a couple of things that I've pieced together. I may be wrong on a couple of these, so other members may correct me. These are facts. First, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek was associate minister of health in the late 1990s, when the minister at that time was really interested in privatization.

Mr. Hinman: What was the name of the minister?

Dr. Sherman: Oh, geez, I have no idea. I don't think I was much interested in politicians at that time because they sort of wrecked health care.

He said nothing, didn't have the courage to stand up to say, "This is the wrong thing" at that time. Now he's the Minister of Health and Wellness, bringing Bill 17 and this document. I sat with him at a committee meeting, and I said: "Whoa, whoa, whoa. Hey, this is the third wave." The Premier said that the third wave is DOA. The previous Premier, Klein, had already said that we're not going to do this. The public already was banging on the doors of the Leg. I said: "You're going to get crucified on election day." They decided: "Hey, let's split it up. Let's do the good stuff before the election; we'll do the other stuff after the election." I was there. I was his assistant. I was there at caucus when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford presented this document to caucus. That's the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness today.

It is my understanding – and I may be wrong; I've been told this – that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had taken over the whole third floor of the Telus building when the whole Bill 11 debate was happening. He can correct me on that. And he's been on Agenda and Priorities. As a parliamentary assistant I never saw this stuff until the decision was already made.

In this leaked document the issues: the word "prescriptive" to "enabling." That's a very dangerous change to the public health care system. There's a reason Premier Lougheed, Premier Getty, Premier Klein kept that word in. That is such an important change, the word "prescriptive" to "enabling."

Secondly, there are reasons that most of these things are under the act, in the legislation, because health care is the most cherished thing that Albertans and Canadians find important to them. This is what differentiates us from our cousins south of the border. This is the most important value to Canadians. To simply put it under a regulation when it's holiday time – a minister gives 30 days' notice. When the whole province is working hard all year long and takes some summer holidays, they make a regulation change, and the minister and the bureaucrat of the day does God knows what to the health care system.

That's another very dangerous thing to the Canadian health care system. You guys on that side need to know about this stuff. You guys are sleeping at the wheel. I didn't understand this stuff. I thought: geez, I was clouded by the Sith. My son calls me the Jedi Knight.

The other issue is that the stars are aligned. Now the former associate minister of health and wellness, who didn't have the courage to stand up with the previous minister in the late '90s, has got the parliamentary assistant who brought up the Bill 11 debate.

The stars are aligned for this thing to happen. I've got nothing to do with this, guys. I had nothing to do with this as a parliamentary assistant. I heard about it. I advised the minister: bad thing for the election, that privatization stuff. The question is that I wish that somebody would actually be honest. If you want to privatize, just say, "We want to do it," and do it. Have the courage to actually bring it up and have a real debate on it.

Now, if you actually, really want to fix the public health system, all of those folks over there – there are two past ministers of health, a current minister of health, an ex associate minister of health, and a major adviser to this government for a decade – have not brought in accountability measures. Now we're bringing them in, and they're probably the most mediocre measures I've ever seen on the planet. You know how I know that? Because I just toured the planet. I've been to the top hospitals in Canada, the top hospitals in the U.S. I've been to the top hospitals in India. I just went to the top hospitals in the U.K., that have the top performance measures on the planet. I know this because I actually toured the planet, and I sort of know what I'm talking about. These are the guys who bugged up health care when I was working on the front lines. I'll take the words "bugged up" back. I apologize. Wrecked. Maybe "wrecked" is better. And the minister that smashed it: he ain't here.

The stars are aligned. The problem is that they've actually upset the right because no one has the courage to say, "Hey, we want to privatize it," and they've upset the left because we're not actually looking after the people that well.

Once they get in, they get great care, Mr. Speaker, without a doubt. We've got the best health care staff on the planet, and I think we'll all agree on that, the hardest working health care staff. You know what? I'll tell you that the evidence is that they're the most demoralized staff in the nation. It ain't his fault. It ain't his fault. It's you guys' fault, and it was my fault when I was there because I didn't have the courage to speak up.

Let's just stick to facts. Let's just stick to facts. Here are the facts. Dr. Paul Parks said that the emergency medical services of this province are on the verge of a catastrophic collapse. The CEO was fired. Four board members have quit. There's a major confidence motion here, people. The board that this government put in is just all resigning en masse. In fact, the funny thing is that it's actually the good guys that resigned. The good guys are actually the ones that resigned. The one doctor on the board resigned. Linda Hohol, a smart, bright woman, resigned. Tony Franceschini ran a very successful business. He resigned. The same government that designed the health care system and the board is the same government that intervened.

Geez, Mr. Speaker, I'm just telling you that it's just so hard sitting here. Yes, all the health care staff do have a mental health problem. They are all depressed. They are all depressed because of the decisions made by this government. No other government has been here. You can't blame anyone else. Here's objective evidence right here. This is why, when I sent that e-mail to the Premier, I wasn't kidding or lying. I apologized for hurting his feelings, but I wasn't lying.

I'll tell you why. This is from Alberta Health Services. The community long-term care access block: increasing ALC days in Calgary hospitals from 1999 to 2009. Under the previous Premier the number of bed days went anywhere from – in fact, they were actually down at the bottom when the previous Premier left in 2006, at 15,000 bed days in 2006-07. Have a look at that line. It's gone at a 55 per cent angle up. That's why people are dying in waiting rooms, because this government has failed the seniors.

The minister from Edmonton-Whitemud announced 600 long-term care beds in my home, and the other guy shows up – first, to be honest, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did the right thing. He did the overcapacity protocols. He's absolutely correct. He listened to us doctors. He did. I like that guy. That's why I ran for public office. He also announced all these beds. He had the workforce action plan to get more doctors and more nurses. He did the right things, but the other guy showed up, Calgary-West: let's cut the number of doctors, cut the number of nurses, stop building long-term care beds. Mr. Speaker, if that isn't schizophrenic, I don't know what is, seriously.

Now this other minister shows up, and this guy is doing the right thing, too, to be honest. He listened to me, and he's doing his best. He is, honestly. He's a good guy. I like him. Now we're hiring all the nurses and doctors again. Now we're in a big rush. Do you understand why the front-line staff are thinking: what the heck are you people in the Legislature doing? Do you understand why they're demoralized? You make a decision just before election to cheer them up. Then you make a knucklehead decision right after the election. Then you try to cheer them up with the gobbledygook and gibberish and malarkey and all this stuff, whatever you want to call it. This is a mental health problem that this government has, to be honest.

Mr. Speaker, you can censure me all you want. I can't take that back because that's what the front-line staff are saying. They say: you guys all deserve to be locked up in a mental health institution. But guess what? There are no beds. There are no beds. They were going to blow it up. They'd have to wait for God knows how many hours in the Royal Alex emergency department. My friend's brother hung himself, unfortunately, God bless his soul, and God bless his family. That's what front-line staff see, patients suffering metres from care, and they feel helpless.

I don't know how I can communicate in any other way. I've appealed to the humanitarian side of my colleagues. I've appealed to the evidence-based side of my colleagues. I've appealed to the common-sense side of my colleagues.

How about the money side? The hon. member over here, the Finance minister, must just be, geez, soiling himself because he's the one who's going to have the big deficit. Why? Because the number one cost expenditure is health care. It's not the policy and the legislation. We have to understand, people, that it's actually the mismanagement, the lack of understanding of what the underlying problem is, the acknowledgement that this government broke the health care system and just smashed it again. They broke primary care. They broke long-term care. This graph is proof. The hon. minister from Sherwood Park, when she was health minister: these decisions were made under her.

The hon. minister from Edmonton-Whitemud came in after her, and he made an announcement. He made an announcement, but I'll tell you: he didn't do anything about it. Then the other guy, Calgary-West, showed up. Well, he was at least honest about it. He wasn't going to build them at all. All of these members sat back quietly and let it happen.

I'll tell you that at CPC on Health, when this long-term care policy came up – I can't use this word. The letter starts between the letter E and the letter G. I told the minister of health: "I'm telling you that in the third year people are going to be dying in the waiting rooms. The emergency docs are going to go crazy. I'm going to say that I told you so, and I'm going to be hammering you." I told them this, everyone who was in the CPC on Health. This hon. member was there. Hardly anyone even voted for it. Wasn't that right?

Geez, I really don't know what to say. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs sat there telling me: "Look, Raj, nobody is listening to these speeches. The galleries are empty. When it really mattered, they were banging on the doors of the Leg., 10,000 of them, on Bill 11." I'd say, Mr. Speaker, that the Sith has pulled the cover over the eyes of the Jedi Knights, which are the hard-working Albertans, the 100,000 hard-working staff who bleed every day, 24 hours a day, while we sleep comfortably in our beds and snicker and cheer and slam our hands on the desks.

You vote for something you don't actually understand and you haven't even read, and you've got to whip the vote because you're going to lose your job and you're going to get chucked out if you vote against it. They're just shaking their heads.

I am not going to give you any inspirational speech here. I'm going to cut through the malarkey and just be brutally honest. I think this government needs to go

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has talked quite a bit about emergency wait times, and of course he's got a lot of experience with wait times. I know the previous speaker made the comment: once you get into the system, you get great care. I know I've heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark say essentially the same thing.

Something that really concerns me is that it seems that a doctor cannot admit a patient directly into the hospital. They have to go through emergency. I had a case recently reported to me where a patient came into a doctor, and he had broken his foot, and the doctor sent for X-rays. "Yes. You've got a broken foot. You've got to go to the hospital." He went to the hospital, he went to the emergency, and what did they do? They had to reX-ray the foot before they would do anything. Now, that seems like a waste of money, a waste of time, and causes wait time backups. Perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark could comment on what the situation is with having to go through emergency to get into the hospital for something that's referred from another doc.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for that very good question. In the CAEP document for health care to function appropriately we need some flexibility in the system, which is that you need to function at 85 per cent. It's just like a car: it shouldn't redline at 7,000 rpms; 5,000 is okay. So 85 per cent is the 5,000 level. Health care for the past, oh, geez, 10, 12 years has been redlining at 104 per cent capacity.

There have never been any empty beds upstairs on the ward to do a direct admit because upstairs is plugged up by long-term care patients, 20 per cent of the beds are, because of the decisions made in 2005-2006 by these ministers of health here. Because upstairs is plugged up, even the ER beds are plugged up by admitted patients. I have yet to admit a patient straight up to their room without coming through the ER, simply because there's no bed upstairs, hon. member, because they're plugged up by long-term care, the bed blockers.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I enjoyed the hon. member's speech. Specifically around this issue, now, I know the hon. member earlier said that he implored his physician colleagues not to go public – and this is leading up to the 2008 election – because he had been told that "if you bother the Conservatives, they will beat the heck out of you if they get lots of seats."

Now, it as been reported in a published newsletter that one physician leader says that they actually stayed quiet in response to a request from the minister of health at the time leading up to the 2008 election, which was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Did the hon. member hear such threats leading up, prior, and during the 2008 election from the health minister?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Under 23(h), (i), and (j), making allegations against another member, the hon. member is raising a question which has nothing to do with Bill 17 to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who can't answer it relative to the actions that I took as a member of the Legislature and when I was minister of health. It's totally inappropriate for him to be raising that question. If he wants to raise that question with me, he's certainly able to. He could have raised that question with me when I spoke earlier.

Mr. MacDonald: There's closure on it. You can't.

Mr. Hancock: No. You actually could have raised that question with me because I spoke earlier, and there's a five minute comment and question. It's totally inappropriate for him to be raising questions in this House tonight and making innuendoes about what I might or might not have done and casting aspersions on my character and ability.

That's the type of activity we talked about yesterday. That's the type of problem that we had relative to issues that were raised in the point of order yesterday, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker, while he ruled against that particular point of order, did agree that it was totally inappropriate to have that kind of drive-by smear and innuendo.

Now, I can tell the hon. member that I acted entirely appropriately during the last election. There was no secret about anything that happened. In fact, as I mentioned earlier in my remarks, there was an emergency tent put up at the University of Alberta hospital by the Capital health authority during the election to deal with issues around emergency. There was no secret about the issues around emergency, and there was no keeping the emergency docs quiet during the election. There was an emergency tent, a big tent put up outside the University hospital to deal with the overflow in emergency at that time.

So to suggest, as that hon. member is, that somehow I was meeting with and beating people down and intimidating them is an absolutely obnoxious and outrageous comment, and I'd ask that he be called to account.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to speak?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can understand the hon. minister's sensitivity, but certainly there's no point of order here. I refer to Beauchesne 496: "a Member may read excerpts from documents, books, or other printed publications as part of a speech" provided that there's no infringement of the rules. There's certainly no infringement of the rules here.

If you've got an exception, you call Mark Lisac from Insight into Government on a point of order. He's the one that's reporting this in his weekly newsletter published last Friday. If you've got a problem with that, you talk to him, not to me or other members of the House. The hon. member has every right to express an opinion on that question.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

You're finished?

Mr. MacDonald: You bet.

The Acting Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this point of order? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on the point of order.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, maybe I could clarify. When I was section president, I was advocating during the election campaign. I met a Mr. Jim Dau, who was the communications person for Premier Ralph Klein when the cutbacks happened. He sat me down at Century Grill and said: Raj, I've got to tell you that you don't want to criticize the Conservatives because they'll get you after the election; it's best to work with them. He advised me that he was working with the hon. Premier. He said: it's better to work behind the scenes.

Mr. Hayden: On the point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, we're speaking to a point of order.

Do you have another point of order?

Mr. Hayden: No. I'm just saying: on the point of order.

Dr. Sherman: In February 2007 I met with Capital health. As section president my colleagues had asked me: look, you've got to say something. I called it a crisis. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who at that time was executive assistant to the hon. minister, phoned me and said: "Raj, how come you're calling the media? I thought we had a deal here."

So I just thought I'd add to the point of order here. There has been intimidation of front-line staff any time you speak up.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, listening to this, it is my decision that the question that was asked was certainly not relevant to the bill. We will move on. Also a reminder that the clock does not stop while we're doing this.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Debate Continued

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak on Bill 17. A thing I'd like to talk about, that has been widely talked about in this last day or two in the House, is this issue of privatization. I want to read to all of you that are listening out there from page 2 of Bill 17.

Whereas policies, organization, operations and decisions about Alberta's health [care] system should be guided and measured and sustained consistent with the following principles:

that Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

I think the Canada Health Act says very clearly that we're not putting for sale signs up on our hospitals. We're not about to see who comes to my community, and the highest bidder runs the health care system. The day that happens, I'll be sitting right beside you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and so will many of you. Our Premier made it very, very clear that the system in Alberta will remain public and will remain strong. I see it right here in the bill, the bill that everybody is so afraid of: "Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act." Well, I think that lays that issue to rest, Mr. Speaker.

Another thing that I want to tell you about – and I know very well about the great staff and the dedication and the love and the caring that Alberta health care workers have given in the number of years that I've had the honour to use the system. I have a daughter-in-law that works for Alberta health care, and she, too, is frustrated. Not frustrated with Bill 17, she's frustrated with all the bad publicity and the BS that seems to have been overwhelming the great services and the work that they do.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to tell you that I've had the chance to use the health care system, and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark knows why. May 12, May 19, May 26 I was in the University hospital. June 2, June 9, June 16, June 23, June 30 I was in the University hospital. July 7, July 14, July 21, July 28 I was in the hospital. August 4, August 11, August 18, August 25 I was in the hospital; September 1, 8, 15, 22, 29, October 6, 13, 20, 27, and next week again.

You know, all I see is good work and darn dedicated people. Do they think the system can be better? Yes, they do. Do they want to work within the system to make sure it's better? Yes, they do. There's no greater place in this province than in this Legislature, in this government working with the opposition to create change and to create a better health care system.

I think that when we look at the opportunities that are in this bill, the health charter must "recognize that Alberta is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health [care] providers, organizations that deliver health [care] services, and the Government of Alberta," not solely the government of Alberta. The health charter must "acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health [care] system."

I heard many times the member from Calgary ask people that have spoken today: well, what is Bill 17 going to do for us? Well, I think the health care advocate is a big, big positive in this bill. You know, those of you that have health services in each corner of your city, there are lots of people that your constituents can go to. But in rural Alberta most times they end up at the MLA's office, and the MLA's office could use the Alberta health advocate. I will make sure that in order to carry out my duties as a representative from a rural constituency in Whitecourt-St. Anne, a health care advocate can exercise powers than can help out my constituents and people that are in need of access to the medical system.

I had the opportunity today to have lunch with a good friend of mine, and his two next-door neighbours are doctors at the Stollery hospital. They told him again and over and over again that there is no better place in the world – these are two foreign doctors – than to work in the Stollery hospital in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

You know, just recently in Whitecourt, a community of 10,000 people, we have 15 doctors, doctors from all over the world that have come to practise in a little community, in Whitecourt. I think that says a lot about the opportunities that these doctors had. They could have gone wherever they wanted, but they came to Alberta, they came to Whitecourt, and they came to serve the people of northern Alberta.

You know, there have been an awful lot of back-and-forth accusations. Nobody has ever, ever held a gun to my head in this caucus on which way to vote, what to speak on, and what not to speak on. I talk freely. I always have. At times I agree, and at times I don't agree. You know, sometimes democracy sucks, but I don't know a better system, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes you win, sometimes you lose, but all the time you do it with respect for your fellow colleagues on all sides of the House. You do it in here. The business is done in here, and the business is done with respect and decency to the office that each and every one of us serves.

Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the health advocate in this act and the way the health advocate can really serve each and every one of us that serves our constituents. Many, many times as an MLA in a small community it's frustrating when people are looking to you for help and advice and you don't know which way to turn. You have the minister's office and you have the other colleagues to turn to, and you have some contacts, but sometimes you need someone with that legislative authority, that authority that's given here in this bill, to act on constituents' concerns. It might be complaints, because not everybody has had a great experience, and it might be just to help get some access. Many, many times that's what I hear from constituents, the issue of access.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark spoke about when you're treated or when you have a parent or a child that needs health care services, the people that treat you do so with compassion, with dedication, with love, with great enthusiasm about their job. They care about their patient. I think that goes back a bit to the education system that we have here and the opportunities for young Albertans to become medical doctors. When we saw the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's guests here, it made me feel a little old when looking up at the group because they were about the age of my sons. I thought: what a great opportunity for young people to get involved in the health care business in this province and make a darn good living at it, too.

Further on I look into the bill, and we talk about the directions by the minister.

Subject to the regulations, the Minister may, by order, direct a regional health authority, a health provider, professional college or operator or any other person involved in the provision of a health service to do any one or more of the following as specified . . .

(a) comply with the Health Charter;

That doesn't talk about privatization.

Mr. MacDonald: No. But this document does.

Mr. VanderBurg: No, it doesn't. I'm talking about Bill 17, not about some document that someone may have discussed at one time. I'm talking about the bill that's in front of us, sir.

It also says that the minister may

(b) develop and adopt a charter, consistent with the Health Charter, specific to that person's role in the health [care] system.

I see a lot of opportunity to make and deliver a better health care system through this bill.

Will we in the future need more regulations and maybe miscellaneous amendments to this bill? I would say yes. My nine years here tell me that we evolve and technologies change and services change and expectations change. We know about the expectations of Albertans. They're high, and they deserve to be high. We're spending close to $15 billion on this health care system, I think a great percentage higher per capita than any other province. Should we get results when we pay good money? Yes, we should. We all work darn hard for those tax dollars, and Albertans deserve that service.

I want to talk a bit about the opportunities to keep people out of the emergency departments and talk on the wellness side. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark came out to my constituency, oh, I would say a year and a half ago, and the discussion we had with my constituents had nothing to do with wait times . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, but pursuant to Government Motion 23 agreed to on November 30, 2010, I must now put the question.

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move third reading of Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is a money bill. I've just noted it has to be moved by a minister.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nice catch by the table. My apologies to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I would move Bill 24 for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have concerns. I've expressed my concerns about the liability associated with carbon sequestration. I've mentioned that committing $2 billion is a tangible amount, but we have no idea what the cost of keeping the CO₂ underground will be. I would have preferred to have what I would consider to be a double-barrelled approach where rather than committing $2 billion to sequestration, which I hope will be partially successful as a solution for CO₂, I would have liked to have seen a billion dollars spent on Green TRIP initiatives, where we could see immediate results in terms of reduced traffic on highways, improved commuting, LRTs in major cities, and eventually – we don't have the money now – moving on the rapid rail transit, the equivalent of our bullet train, from Calgary through to Edmonton, with a significant stop at Red Deer.

Mr. Speaker, what I'm worried about is the technology and the advance, as the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar mentioned, the potential of liability being assumed decades from now. I've been asking myself: are we entering into a brave new world of technology, or are we continuing to fly by the seat of our pants, operating on a wing and a prayer? That's the whole question with regard to CO₂ sequestration. CO₂ is the equivalent of a genie in a bottle, which we hope won't escape, or the winds tied in the bag in Pandora's box that were released with dramatic consequences. Before I'm sequestered, I want to have sound scientific assurance that my grandsons won't be dealing with the fallout of another failed government experiment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move adjournment on Bill 24.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

26. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forth-with.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the third time, unfortunately, I've had to move a motion today with respect to time allocation in committee. Now, there's nothing inherently wrong with time allocation. Time allocation is actually a tool that's used in the federal Parliament rather regularly with respect to bills, setting out a period of time for debate so that there can be a planned process and allotted time for each bill that comes before the House. In our House we don't use it that way. We use it only sparingly, and we only use it when it's very clear that the opposition is using their tool, which is the abuse of time.

Clearly, on Bill 28, which I might remind the House is the Electoral Divisions Act . . .

An Hon. Member: Is it 28 or 26?

Mr. Hancock: It's Motion 26 with respect to Bill 28.

It's a very simple bill. It puts into effect the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. There's no issue with respect to the number of seats. That was decided in a previous bill that was enacted, yet the opposition wants to talk about the number of seats.

There's no issue about the boundaries. There's no suggestion that boundaries should be changed in the House. The DVD was filed. It was very clear that if people wanted to make adjustments to that, that should have been done when the motion was passed. Yet we have spent, by my calculation, six hours and 30 minutes debating the Electoral Divisions Act. Six hours and 30 minutes, Mr. Speaker. We had one amendment to the bill, which was quite an interesting and quite an appropriate amendment, and I was pleased to do a subamendment so that Dunvegan-Central Peace could be named Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley in recognition of a person who actually did serve with honour in this House, someone who died while in office in this House. That amendment was made, and it was quite appropriate.

Then we heard a bunch of scurrilous debate for a long period of time until the Wildrose members could discover how to put together an amendment, and they started running in an amendment that I think is the amendment that's on the floor right now. Obviously, it's to change the name to Calgary-Preston Manning. Who knows what the next one will be?

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear and the opposition again is on record saying that they want to debate this one forever. It's clear from the record. I'm not talking about all of the opposition, actually. The Liberal opposition hasn't done that; the NDP opposition certainly hasn't done that. But the Wildrose seems to believe that it's appropriate to take the Electoral Divisions Act and use it as a tool to disrupt democracy, and that just can't be allowed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to take this opportunity to get on the record that because of time allocation on the previous bill, I sat here for two hours and had no opportunity. I thought it was pretty rich listening to the Government House Leader speak about the abuse of time. What we're really seeing here is the abuse of power, the heavy-handed abuse of power.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, Government House Leader tonight, said that six and a half hours of debate was more than enough to cover this piece of legislation. Well, let's think about six and a half hours. Six and a half hours is less than one working day. Somebody goes to work from 9 in the morning until noon, takes an hour for lunch to go back at 1, you know, and before their workday is over, six and a half hours have passed. That's the amount of time that we've allowed for this debate, and the debate on this bill, Mr. Speaker, is important.

Admittedly, in the middle of the night when I was here a few days ago, some of the debate got a bit silly, but that's because we were forced to take it through the middle of the night, Mr. Speaker. Six and a half hours is not an abuse of time. I think it's telling, and I think it's important to think about an attitude that's become engendered in a government that's been in power for 40 years, that thinks that a six-and-a-half-hour debate – that's moving through first, second, and committee – is somehow excessive. This is not a minor bill; this is a significant bill. It will affect every single member of this Assembly, and it will affect every single citizen of this province.

I am disgraced by the kinds of comments I heard a few minutes ago, and I think this Assembly is disgraced by a government that has so often in the last day brought in time allocation, which is closure by any other term. Clearly, I'm unhappy. This habit cost me my right to participate tonight. I have sat here for two hours wanting to debate third reading of Bill 17 – I am the health critic – and I never had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, because of the heavy hand of this government. So I have no sympathy for the comments.

Mr. Hancock: That's not even true.

Dr. Taft: I am getting heckled by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and it is true. [interjection]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has the floor.

Dr. Taft: Anyway, I think that if there is a conscience over there on the government side – and I know in some members there is – I hope it needles them at least a little bit to think that in a democracy six and a half hours of debate on a major bill is seen as excessive.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 1, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Kaoru Ishikawa, the ambassador of Japan, who is accompanied by his wife, Masako Ishikawa. Also joining him this afternoon is Mr. Yasuo Minemura, the consul general of Japan in the Calgary office, and Kyoko Minemura, the wife of the consul general, as well as Yuji Sekiguchi, first secretary, embassy of Japan in Ottawa, as well as Naoki Sasahara, vice-consul, culture and information section, consulate general of Japan in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, we're pleased to welcome His Excellency to Alberta as we celebrate two important milestones in our relations with Japan. I had the honour of hosting the entire delegation for lunch today, and we discussed the fact that it was about 40 years ago that the Alberta-Japan office began its work in Tokyo promoting trade and investment opportunities in our province. As a result of the office's work Japan's JACOS was one of the first international companies to invest in our oil sands.

This year we also mark the 30th anniversary of our twinning relationship with the prefecture of Hokkaido. As part of this relationship Alberta receives a special adviser from Hokkaido every year to help develop Japanese culture and language programs for our school curriculum. We really appreciate the relationship that we have with Japan, and we look forward to many more decades of co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask that His Excellency and the delegation please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 13 representatives of the First Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. The commander-in-chief's unit commendation for 1 PPCLI battle group task force 1-06 was presented on November 29 by the Governor General, and these representatives were honoured here today at a reception attended by MLAs, hosted by myself and the Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Speaker, between January and August of 2006 Task Force Orion operated throughout southern Afghanistan with good success. Theirs was to be a transition mission, and as you will hear later today, this small force did the work of the much larger one which replaced it. The task force had over 100 contacts with the Taliban; 50 of these involved intensive firefights, complex battalion manoeuvres, and the use of artillery fire and support aircraft. Despite some very harsh conditions morale has remained very, very high. They inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy, and of course, as we all know in this Assembly, we lost some brave soldiers that year. Their sacrifice contributed to the success of that task force. To say the least, Canada is very proud of the entire battalion.

Our honoured guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I humbly ask that each would stand as I call their name to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly when they are all standing: Captain Dylan Dewar, Corporal Daniel Malho, Corporal Joseph Robb, Master Corporal Shane Stackpole, Corporal Kevin Koldeweihe, Corporal Dale Miller, Master Corporal Peter Chan, Corporal Adam Hilton, Corporal Alec Richard, Corporal Darren Lynch, Master Corporal William Tyers, Corporal Michael Mulesa, Corporal Adam Gee. Mr. Speaker, they have now risen in your gallery. I would ask that the Legislative Assembly give their warmest regards. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions for three very special guests seated in your gallery today. First, Mr. Kerry Diotte, who is no stranger to the Legislature and no stranger to many of us who are here today. As we're all aware, Mr. Diotte was a well-known journalist in our city prior to running for city council. Mr. Diotte was elected for his first term as a city councillor in ward 11 on October 18, 2010. Of course, ward 11 shares voters with my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Mr. Diotte, welcome to public office, and welcome to serving the great people of southeast Edmonton. At this time I ask Mr. Diotte to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, for my second introduction I have two school board trustees, who are also sitting in your gallery and who were elected on October 18 to serve southeast Edmonton as well. To begin with, Ms Leslie Cleary, the Edmonton public school board trustee for ward I. Ms Cleary had many years of experience in the nonprofit sector before being elected on October 18. Seated beside her is Ms Laura Thibert. Laura was elected as a Catholic school board trustee in ward 77 on October 18 as well. Laura brings a wealth of experience from the nonprofit sector and has been deeply involved in the community for many, many years. I look forward to working with all of my elected colleagues, and I ask at this time for both of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Dave Loken. Mr. Loken is the new councillor for ward 3 in the capital city of Edmonton, and ward 3 is part of the constituency of Edmonton-Decore.

As a new councillor Mr. Loken has taken on many new roles and duties, and one of these is as the co-chair of Edmonton Salutes Committee. He represents this committee at council, standing committees, and other public functions, which also included joining the military representatives today at the Alberta Legislature. Edmonton Salutes promotes and recognizes the importance of our local military and their contributions both at home and abroad. The ultimate goal of this program is to let our military personnel and their families know how important they are to the fabric of our community and how we truly thank them for their service on behalf of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask Mr. Loken, city councillor for ward 3, who is seated in your gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's definitely an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature 52 young people from Lorelei elementary school. I had the pleasure of visiting that class about a week ago as they're covering right now a social studies unit on government. I have to tell you that their level of understanding of our process and the quality of questions they had were second to none. Accompanying these students are teachers and group leaders Mrs. Ellen Aker, Mr. Mark George, and Ms Karen Mundorf. Also accompanying them are parent helpers Mr. Steve Abbott, Mrs. Zohreh Assi, Mrs. Catrina Fahie, Mr. Lem Mundorf, and Mr. Ed Remesz. I would ask them all to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's such a pleasure and such a joy to introduce to you and through you some of Alberta's brightest young students from my constituency. They are, of course, from Waverley elementary. They are here today to observe democracy in action, and in a moment I'm going to ask them to rise with their group leader/teacher Mrs. Flook and also their parent helpers Mrs. Davidson and Ms Woychuk. Would they all rise, and would the rest of us please applaud them for being here on this wonderful day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a bunch of enthusiastic students from St. Francis of Assisi Catholic elementary school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Kevin McGoey, Mrs. Audrey Fitzpatrick, and student teacher Ms Kelsey Kat. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the House three special guests sitting in the members' gallery today: Mr. Dick Chamney, an Edmontonian and the president of International Social Service Canada; Dr. Lorne Jaques, professor for the only international social work master's program in Canada from the University of Calgary's Faculty of Social Work; and Ms Brianna Strumm, graduate student of the international social work master's program from U of C and a social worker with the city of Calgary currently. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have my two constituency assistants in the Assembly today. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I believe my leg. assistant is with them: Wendy Pasiuk, Laurie Huolt, and Lindsay Cooke. If they would please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of representatives from the Canadian Federation of University Women, Edmonton chapter.

The Canadian Federation of University Women is an international group comprised of women who have graduated from any university. As a matter of interest, the Edmonton chapter celebrated its 100th birthday last year. In addition to having interests in a number of areas of public policy such as the environment, health, and many others, the group meets once a month to hear from significant speakers. They also provide on a regular basis resolutions to all levels of government and even have a voice at the United Nations.

These guests are seated in the public gallery today, and I would ask that each guest rise and stand as I call her name: Judi Cook, Gerry Cameron, Janet Clark, Jude de Almeida-Beaudry, Betty Gravett, Joy Hurst, Tammy Irwin, Alberta Boytzun, Shirley Shostak, Shirley Reid, and Jean Wells. I'd ask that all members of the Assembly join me in giving this fine group of women the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm truly humbled to recognize some of our country's great soldiers, the First Battalion of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. This Monday the unit was awarded the rare honour of the commander-in-chief unit commendation by our Governor General at Edmonton Garrison, and I was honoured to be in attendance.

They were recognized for exceptional determination and courage during relentless combat in Afghanistan from January to August 2006. During this time period the 1,200 soldiers in this unit, known as Task Force Orion, operated alone in southern Afghanistan in an area now occupied by over 30,000 NATO forces. Because of their determination NATO was able to assume command in southern Afghanistan and prevent the city of Kandahar from falling to the Taliban.

Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Premier mentioned, Task Force Orion was involved in over a hundred contacts with the Taliban, and this cost Canada the lives of 19 brave men and women, with another 76 wounded in action. One of these brave men was Corporal Bryce Keller. I had the privilege of meeting his wife, Sarah, his father, Mel, and his grandparents this Monday. It's unfortunate that Sarah cannot be with us today, but Corporal Keller's family exemplifies the sacrifice made by all the families of our lost soldiers.

They can take pride in knowing that the world is a better place for millions of people because of their sacrifice. As just one example, before Corporal Keller arrived in Afghanistan, there were only 1 million primary students, none of which were girls. Today there are 6 million students enrolled in primary school in Afghanistan, including 2 million girls.

Mr. Speaker, the Patricias here today are part of one of the most decorated military regiments in the Canadian Forces, with a proud history dating back to 1914. Their mottos – Once a Patricia, Always a Patricia; Valour and Pride; as well as their unofficial motto, First in the Field – will tell you all you need to know about these very special Canadians.

Alberta is very proud of our soldiers, and I'd ask all the members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating and thanking the 1st Battalion Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and their families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Rosza Award Acceptance Speech

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year I introduced Tom McFall from the Alberta Craft Council to you. He was the recipient of the top award from the Rosza awards for arts administration. Now, it's tradition for each outgoing recipient to report on their activities and successes during the Rosza year, and I wanted to share an excerpt from his speech with you as it outlines in his own voice the challenges faced by arts groups in Alberta today. From Tom.

This should be a joyous event, but I need to tell you, the worst part of the year started with the shocking news that the provincial government was cutting $5 million from its already meagre arts support. Five million may not be much in other sectors, but this is the largest funding cut in the 30 years that I have been working in the arts.

The entire arts sector, including all of the nominees tonight, is being hit hard. The Craft Council as well as the professional and community craft scenes are taking a major hit. The Alberta Craft Council board and staff and I are currently cancelling or postponing major projects. We have cancelled a large touring exhibition called Clay 2010. You could have seen it at the Triangle Gallery later this year. We are cutting national and international projects. We are postponing the search for a proposed Calgary location, and we are also cutting or delaying our provincial travelling exhibitions. One of these, for example, went to 22 locations from Milk River to Peace River and was seen by over 15,000 visitors.

I'm telling you this news at this event because, sadly and ironically, these cuts are to the Craft Council's most adventurous and outward-thinking projects, the very projects that last year most attracted the jurors of the Rosza award. Without these innovative projects I suspect the Craft Council and I would not have been chosen for this impressive award. As we collectively lose millions of dollars of provincial investment in the arts sector, at least, thankfully, we do have the Rosza award to honour, celebrate, and support excellence in arts management.

To close, I think – Laurie thinks – that this government needs to rethink its investment in the arts, quit cutting programs, and aim for economic diversity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

World AIDS Day

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in recognition of December 1, World AIDS Day. On this day every year we have the opportunity to raise awareness of HIV and AIDS, to remember those who have passed on, to be thankful for increased access to prevention and treatment, and to realize that there is much more work to be done to stop the spread of AIDS. Around the world people mark this day by wearing a red ribbon as a symbol of their solidarity for people living with HIV and AIDS.

AIDS was first reported in June of 1981. Globally by the end of 2009 approximately 33 million people were living with AIDS. Mr. Speaker, antiretroviral treatment can slow the course of the disease; however, there is no known cure or vaccine for AIDS and HIV at this time. Although the cost of antiretroviral drugs has fallen in low-income countries, the majority of the world's infected individuals do not have access to the medication and treatment.

Mr. Speaker, the stigma associated with AIDS can range from ostracism to violence against the infected individuals, which, sadly, creates obstacles for many people to be tested or to seek treatment. As a result, what could possibly be a manageable chronic illness can become a death sentence for the infected individuals and also perpetuate the spread of HIV.

Keep the Promise, Mr. Speaker, is a political commitment of universal access. Access to antiretroviral treatment is dependent upon access to quality primary health care where voluntary testing and counselling are available. This year's World AIDS Day theme is Act Aware. I would like to ask all members of this House to take some time today to reflect on the goal of . . . [Mr. Xiao's speaking time expired]

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Monday we tabled the government's strategy to privatize health care in Alberta. The government responded with the usual unbelievable denials of, quote, it's just a discussion document. End quote. And, quote, I never saw it. End quote. Since this Premier has totally lost the confidence of Albertans, I'm going to try to help him out with a statement I have crafted today and will send to his office imminently. Will the Premier in writing promise Albertans that a government led by him will never violate the principles of the Canada Health Act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the member already knows the answer to that question. We had 27 hours of debate on the health bill, and that is specifically stated in the health bill. I hope he's supporting the health bill. It's going to receive royal assent. That's just, I guess, part and parcel of the debate that went on in this House, that nobody really focused on the components of the bill.

Dr. Swann: Well, I didn't actually hear an answer to the question, of course, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Premier in writing promise Albertans he will not allow doctors to work in both the public and the private systems at the same time? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's most unfortunate, but we do have doctors that do opt out, and when they opt out, they stay out. That is a provision that's available to doctors today. The one thing that all members should focus on is that the bill that we've debated in this House says very explicitly that Albertans will have a say in the future direction of health care delivery in this province. That means any regulation changes will have to be posted on the website and discussed with Albertans. Albertans will have a say.

Dr. Swann: Well, again a bit evasive, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you'll agree.

Will the Premier in writing promise Albertans that he will never allow private insurance for medically necessary services? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, the legislation is very clear in this area. Some other level of government, especially the federal government, may bring about changes, but I can tell you that any changes – any changes – in terms of health care delivery the way we know it today will have to be discussed with Albertans. Albertans will have a say. But the most important thing is that at the end of the day we have to have the money in place. We've done that. We've opened up more long-term care beds, which has taken some pressure off the emergency rooms. Everything is moving ahead, the process. It's a good bill.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Governance

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. It's now clear that centralized decision-making has brought our health care system to a standstill over the past two years, from no health capital plan for Edmonton and Calgary to a strategic plan that has now been delayed for months. To the Premier: will you immediately shift more decision-making power to local authorities in the system until Alberta Health Services can be dismantled in an orderly fashion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, today we've got over a thousand projects just in health facilities alone totalling over $5 billion. To say that, you know, everything has come to a standstill – I know that we have two very good children's hospitals that are operating very efficiently. We have the Maz centre. We have one of only three burn units in the world, and it's here at the University of Alberta. We've got the virology lab. Li Ka Shing could have gone anyplace in the world and invested $28 million. Where did it go to? It came to the province of Alberta. To say that nothing is being done in health care is totally erroneous and quite mistaken.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I still don't hear any acknowledgment that the structure is the problem.

Mr. Premier, how are you going to put Humpty Dumpty together again without disrupting patient care? How are you going to disseminate decision-making to the regional level again? Do you see the problem, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I'm not worried about Humpty Dumpty; I'm not worried about fairy tales. But I am worried about how we deliver health care to Albertans. There's a good plan in place. The minister articulated the five-year plan this morning on radio; he had a news conference yesterday. That's a bold step together with funding that's in place plus the fact that we have listened to the AMA section of ER docs. They told us what to do: open up more continuing care beds and find the protocol to move those that are in emergency rooms and admit them to hospital. And we're doing that.

Dr. Swann: Well, if there's one thing that's clear, Mr. Speaker, it's that the structure cannot deliver on these plan after plan after plan. Unless the Premier is prepared to make some tough decisions, we're not going to get these goals met.

When are you going to put real decision-making power into the hands of those in hospitals that know the area, the needs, and know how to fix the problems?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the people that are working in our hospitals and our continuing care facilities are delivering. They are working very hard. The doctors, the nurses, the allied health care providers are the ones that are delivering the service. Most importantly, they know that the money is in place; they can plan for the next five years. They also understand the well-communicated plan to reduce some of the pressures in emergency rooms. We'll continue to ensure that we're bringing forward a good cancer strategy for the province. I mean, we're the only jurisdiction I know that has three additional radiation . . .

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Five-year Health Action Plan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll try a different tack and see if I can get an answer from the minister of finance. The five-year plan from the minister of health is filled with reannouncements, vague promises, holes, and contradictions. To the minister of finance: is it not true that documents on your ministry's website show that the new cancer clinic in Red Deer will be open in 2013?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the website says about the cancer clinic in Red Deer, so I'll have to take a look to get an answer to the member there. I'm proud to say that the five-year plan, the five-year contract, that this government has with Alberta Health Services is going to fund strong growth, responsible growth in medical services both on the service side and the capital side and implement the programs that the hon. minister of health has described.

Dr. Swann: Well, to update the finance minister on his own website, it does say that the Red Deer cancer clinic will be operable by 2013.

However, the five-year plan that was released yesterday by the minister of health reveals that the Red Deer health clinic will be open by 2015. To the minister of health: has the minister deferred the cancer centre in Red Deer, or is the five-year plan wrong?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. The cancer therapy corridor project for radiation is going ahead. We've already opened a brilliant, beautiful facility in Lethbridge where at least 600 people will be able to benefit from that service in their own community. We've announced that we'll do one in Red Deer as well. There's a design process that has to be worked through, and the Minister of Infrastructure is helping in that regard. So we'll have one in Red Deer as fast as possible. We'll also have another radiation therapy project in Grande Prairie.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really tough to get answers to basic questions in this House. I would hope that we can hold these ministers more accountable in the future.

We're getting very mixed messages on this critical area of cancer treatment, and this government continues to prevaricate. Is this government going to keep its plans straight for the Red Deer cancer clinic and build the faith that people of Grande Prairie will have their hospital with a cancer clinic open in 2014? It's been promised since 2007.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've announced and made it very clear that these projects are moving ahead as quickly as they possibly can. With respect to the Red Deer project to do with cancer care, we know that we have total provincial support of about $60 million in the budget for that, and it will be built as quickly and as soon as possible. You have to keep in mind that we have to . . .

Mr. Hinman: The Wildrose has been calling for a fee for service and a chief medical officer for every acute hospital with the authority and responsibility to operate our hospitals properly. When I asked the minister on November 22, he said that hospitals already have “a clinical lead and also a site admin lead.” In other words, there are people with local responsibilities that also have the local authority to act. This is false. Yesterday Dr. Eagle agreed with us, saying that we have to give hospital administrators more power to make decisions. What does the minister have to say for himself?

Mr. Zwozdesky: The statements that I made are true, and so, too, are the statements that Dr. Eagle made. It’s just well known that hospitals, acute-care hospitals, which is the subject here, have a clinical lead person. That’s a medical-type person, and they have a clinical lead administrator. Now, the question is that the responsibility and the authority need to be augmented, and we’ve said that we’re going to do that. What confusion could you possibly have in your own mind? I don’t know.

Mr. Hinman: No wonder Albertans are frustrated and confused. You’re frustrated and confused, and your administrators are frustrated and confused. It’s time to end the confusion.

The superboard is imploding before our very eyes. Even the people on it can no longer defend it. Dr. Eagle also admitted yesterday that the superboard has confused administrators, and he insisted that the system needs local innovation and autonomy. When will you dismantle the failed superboard?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the superboard, as he’s referred to it, is actually the Alberta Health Services, a single regional health authority. They are working very hard to address problems that exist in the system. That’s why we work collaboratively with them, with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, with the College of Pharmacists, with the United Nurses of Alberta folks, and also with the Health Quality Council to arrive at a plan. That plan, which talks about specific performance measures that address these issues, is right there. It was released yesterday. It will be followed, and it will make the improvements that we say.

Mr. Hinman: The evidence against this minister has piled up for weeks. Claiming to be blindsided by the ER crisis, he still hasn’t admitted how bad the problem is. He’s withheld information. In the last week he’s desperately turned to scapegoating his CEO and his parliamentary assistant. The best he can do is wave around a Christmas wish with a target that can never be met. The superboard is crumbling, and his reputation is crumbling with it. Even his bureaucracy has lost confidence in him. To the Premier: how long can you stand by this minister, and when will you replace him?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I’m going to stand with my minister and support him. You know why? Because, I think, all Albertans . . . [interjections] Sorry. I know this isn’t the normal behaviour.

The Speaker: Mr. Premier, you have the floor.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you.

The Speaker: Attention will be provided, or I will simply ignore those who are heckling in the question period rotation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. The reason I’m saying that I’m standing behind my minister is because all Albertans need protection from a member that just got up and said that what we need to do in this province is charge a fee for service when people enter emergency rooms. That begins to worry me, and I really want to know where that party stands in terms of this two-tiered, European-style health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood if you’re ready.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. Two days ago a document laying out the government’s secret plan to privatize health care was leaked to opposition parties. Everyone is denying paternity of this inconvenient new arrival, but I can tell you that the baby has a salt and pepper mustache, a cleft in his chin, and a talent for music and languages. The father is sitting right over there. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will you admit that you are the person responsible for this secret Tory plan to privatize our health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let’s be very clear. There is no secret plan. There is no secret agenda. There is nothing on the table whatsoever to do with privatization. There is nothing there to do with a two-tier system. What we’ve made very clear and what I would ask this member to accept and understand is that there are Albertans out there who have opinions of a wide range. Whether we like them or not, whether we agree with them or not, they deserve to be heard, and all that the document reflected is what was heard. Did we act on the things that were contrary to the health act? No.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark described how the Minister of Health and Wellness and his sidekick the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford were pushing this secret privatization plan through the Tory caucus. No wonder they tried to discredit him. To the minister: why don’t you admit that this is your plan and that you intend to privatize our health care system just as soon as you’re re-elected, if that happens?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, simply because all of what he just said is not true. There is no agenda of that kind whatsoever. Were there opinions expressed by Albertans? Yes, there were. Will there be opinions expressed again? Probably so. I don’t know. All I can tell you is that we have passed the health care act in this Legislature, and it is a good act that lays out the framework for improvements that Albertans are waiting to see. They want action, none of this rhetoric that they’re trying to spin from the other side.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I’ve read the summary of the public’s views, and they didn’t say anything that was in that document that you released.

Albertans simply cannot trust this PC government with our health care system. The minister’s so-called five-year plan is just another of his confidence-building measures intended to lull Albertans into a false sense of security. After the next election the government will again reveal its true privatization agenda. To the minister: after all the deception and incompetence your government has displayed on health care, why would anyone in their right mind ever vote for you again?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, because they know that this government has a solid plan to reduce wait times for hips, to reduce wait times for radiation oncologist visits, to reduce wait times for cataract surgery, to open literally thousands more beds to help, to hire more doctors, to hire more nurses and fix some of the problems that are there. That's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years multiple presidents of the Alberta Medical Association section of emergency medicine – amongst them Dr. Peter Kwan, Dr. Paul Parks, and myself – have written to this government and to this Premier pleading for urgent action on access to emergency services. This Premier replied on February 23, 2008, that our “Progressive Conservative government will work directly with emergency physicians to establish, implement and monitor appropriate benchmarks and standards for emergency services on a province-wide basis.” I understand this is actually question period and not answer period, but let's try to get answers here. Why did . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, sir. Somebody is going to respond. If it is the Premier, he is recognized now.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is referring to a document that was a letter that was sent to the doctors. This was during the election, and they wrote letters to all of the parties that had candidates in the election. We responded. We said that we'll increase the number of seats in training colleges for physicians. We said we're going to meet a goal of training an additional 2,000 nurses by 2012. We said that we will be building additional continuing care beds, and we've done that.

Dr. Sherman: Again to the Premier: given that you said, “We will utilize the AMA's Emergency Medicine Position Statement, including the recommended CTAS benchmark and recommendations for overcapacity protocols, as the foundation for the review, to be completed by June 30, 2008,” why did you promise immediate action and then ignore pleas for help from Alberta's emergency doctors during multiple crises only to respond now when your leadership on health care is in crisis? When was this review completed? If not, why not?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, there is no crisis in health care. There are, obviously, longer waiting times in emergency rooms. But, you know, I was just north in Falher and McLennan and Donnelly, and here were people that have raised issues saying: “You know, we need a few more ambulances. We do have additional space in continuing care. We could accept more patients. There are a number of doctors in McLennan. One will be retiring, and one will be moving to another position.” They raised those issues. Okay. So across Alberta we're trying to meet the needs of Albertans and provide equitable health care from one corner of the province to another.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that many senior citizens have contacted our office, even several seniors from Lamont, Fort Saskatchewan, and Vegreville, your constituents, who have expressed disillusionment with your government's handling of long-term care, the seniors' drug plan, and access to emergency services, what have you got to say for yourself about failing Alberta's most vulnerable citizens in their time of need, those Albertans who built this great province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can stand before this Assembly and say that there is no other jurisdiction in the country of Canada that does more for seniors, whether it's in all of the programs that we have to offer, all of the health services, the number of continuing care facilities that are being built, all of the attention that's being paid to seniors. We know that we are gaining about 2,000 seniors a month. We know that's going to be a huge demographic issue to deal with. In four to five years we'll be looking at about 4,000 a month. These are serious issues, but we're also trying to focus on all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. Edmonton-Gold Bar, you've been called.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I did not hear you. In 2001 in the famous firewall letter signed by the now finance minister, there was a proposal to have an Alberta agenda that included, among other things, withdrawing from the Canada pension plan and creating an Alberta pension. To the Deputy Premier: the minister of finance carries some serious baggage when it comes to the CPP, so will the Deputy Premier take charge and support expanding the CPP to assist workers by doubling their retirement benefits and enabling their employers to offer a decent pension plan so they can retire with dignity and respect?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the question is more directed to our minister of finance than it is to the Deputy Premier because the minister of finance is engaged in those discussions with our federal government as we speak. Perhaps the minister would like to supplement.

Mr. MacDonald: Dodge.

Now, given that at this time last year the former finance minister was in favour of expanding the CPP to take advantage of the Canada pension plan's investment success and, of course, its portability, is pension reform a matter in which we can expect this government to flip-flop from year to year and from minister to minister?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see that the Liberal Party is lining up with the Canadian Labour Congress in recommending doubling pension benefits.

Dr. Taft: Is that enough for the working man?

Dr. Morton: The working man. It's a job killer, Mr. Speaker. It's a job killer. [interjections] Every economist will tell you that if you want to create jobs in a recession, which is what a recession needs, more jobs, you don't raise payroll taxes.

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if we can sort of just quiet down his benchmate. So if you could just put your arm on his shoulder – okay? – and proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

What an elitist answer.

To the Treasury Board president. Given that the minister of finance has claimed that unemployment is high and even a modest increase in CPP premiums will kill jobs at the same time as we have the minister of labour, who has repeatedly said that job figures for Alberta are good and getting better, can the Treasury Board president tell us where this government really stands? Does this government want to allow workers to retire with dignity and respect, or do you want them living on baloney and bread?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, not only do we want them to be able to retire with dignity and respect; we want them to retire very financially comfortable. Isn't it amazing the bleak picture that they want to present? They don't even really seem concerned about getting Albertans to work. They're worried about their retirement. We're putting the province to work. We're leading the country in economic growth and jobs, well-paying jobs, where people have the individual opportunity to invest in themselves, in this province and to look after themselves in the future.

Small-business Tax

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, following on the theme of getting Albertans to work, Alberta has long claimed to have the lowest taxes in Canada. Manitoba now has followed on a plan to cut their small-business tax to zero. This is great news for that province. My question is to the minister of finance. Would lowering these taxes increase our competitiveness and reduce the tax burden on small businesses in this province? Will Alberta follow suit?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's, indeed, good news for Manitoba, and I extend my congratulations to Minister Wowchuk there, the Minister of Finance in an NDP government. It may be a teaching moment for the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that lowering taxes actually creates jobs. I guess the Liberal Party could learn that, too. But I would remind everybody that when you take all taxes into consideration, Alberta still has the lowest taxes on small business.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. Manitoba is a recipient of equalization and other federal transfers. By reducing the revenues, will they get more?

Dr. Morton: The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no. Equalization is based on a formula based on tax capacity, not the actual dollar value of taxes paid but on the tax base. In fact, by lowering the business tax, Manitoba's tax base should actually grow over the next few years and thus shrink its equalization payments. It'll create more jobs, which these people don't seem to understand.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, then, to the same minister. If Alberta reduced its revenues by reducing its small business tax, would Albertans get equal treatment on federal transfers, including the Canada health transfer act? I think you need to work a little harder on that, Minister.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, again the answer is no, which demonstrates the absurdity and the illogical character of the equalization programs. It punishes responsible jurisdictions that keep taxes low and attract investment. It rewards jurisdictions with high taxes. It pays people to stay where there's unemployment. That's why we're going to put this issue on the next agenda of the federal-provincial ministers' meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, not the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I know. You're so enthusiastic I'll gladly give you a spot.

Dr. Taft: I love it in here, Mr. Speaker. I am enthused.

The Speaker: You love it in here. Okay. I can give you this spot to question and replace Calgary-Varsity because you're chomping at the bit.

Parks Legislation

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were temporarily relieved last week when the parks minister acknowledged that more public collaboration was necessary on Bill 29 prior to its spring 2011 resurfacing. Two recurring faults of the bill were that it failed to recognize the primacy of preserving ecological reserves and wilderness areas over recreational parks and that it attempted to preempt public legislation by moving governance into ministerial regulation. To the minister: will your reintroduced bill enshrine this publicly demanded primacy in legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, we feel very strongly that the park legislation was heading in the right directions, but we feel like it could use a bit more work. We're back out in public consultation. I just want to go on record as saying that with the plan for parks and the legislation that we're proposing, really, not one inch of Alberta parks would have been less protected, but we recognize that there needs to be further reassurance of that. We're looking at some methods for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. There has to be a differentiation for ecological reserves and wilderness areas, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to grandfathering established park protection precedents in legislation rather than moving them into ministerial discretionary regulation?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're considering a few different options at this time, so I can't comment specifically. But we have been listening. We're working on this at this point in time. I think that when the hon. member sees us bring it back in the spring, he'll see some relief in this area.

Mr. Chase: Heaven be praised. Rather than limiting consultation to online surveys, will the minister commit to holding a series of well-advertised public hearings throughout the province prior to reintroducing a parks act in the spring?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been in three years of consultation. Is there more that can be done? Always. We're looking at different methodologies of doing that, but I will say that when we ask Albertans how they want to be consulted, their number one way is online. They're busy. They have busy lives, and they want to make sure that they have input as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Educational Outcomes of Children and Youth in Care

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Children and Youth Services and also the Minister of Education. Children and youth in care are a particularly vulnerable group of students who often have extraordinary needs due to their life circumstances. Significantly more children and youth in care drop out of school, do poorly on achievement tests, fall farther behind in school as they get older, and are less likely to graduate from high school compared to students in the general population. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: what is your ministry doing to improve educational outcomes for children and youth in care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the member. It is critically important that we assist our children and youth with the challenges they may face in school. Success in School for Children and Youth in Care, the provincial protocol framework, is a joint initiative between the Minister of Education and this ministry, and it requires that our caseworkers, our caregivers, our educators, children and youth themselves develop a plan that will assist them with becoming successful with their achievement tests and ultimately with graduating from high school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I'm very encouraged to hear about what this new educational framework is hoping to accomplish. Is there any evidence to show that this new approach will make a tangible difference in improving educational success for children and youth in care?

2:20

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, the protocol was based on stakeholder consultation. It was based on a review of research, current leading practices. There were four demonstration sites across the province, and the valuable information that came back to us, hon. member, shows that it does strengthen relationships for our children in care along with, as I said, the caseworkers and caregivers, educators, other professionals. We are planning to implement that protocol framework program across the province over the next three years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. There are a number of stakeholders who have the role of playing champions to this initiative for implementing the provincial protocol framework, including Alberta Foster Parent Association, Alberta Teachers' Association, and Alberta School Boards Association. Will you commit that you will keep these people that are closest to them involved in moving forward?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the collaboration that we have in this particular project has been exemplary, and we absolutely need to continue that collaboration, continue to involve the people who are actively engaged in the front lines, including foster parents, including teachers and schools. This has been particularly successful for schools because in the past it's been difficult to share appropriately the information that's necessary to ensure student success. Now under this protocol framework our teachers in schools are working collaboratively with social services, with health units, with others in the community to make sure that those students have every chance to be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Arts Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. What is the difference between Mile Zero Dance and Orchesis modern dance? Answer: the minister of culture will continue to fund Mile Zero but not Orchesis, which is affiliated with the university. Arts funding in Alberta is no longer about whether you're an artist but about with whom you associate or under whose roof you perform. My question is to the minister of culture. Does the minister not understand that cutting arts grants to artists in municipalities, universities, schools, and cultural industries is cutting funding to artists?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stood up here in the House the other day and talked about the fact that there were no plans for reductions to the artists and education program. However, we are in reality in the government of Alberta facing a $5 billion deficit. That's real money. We've made a commitment to health care. We've made a commitment to education. We all have to look at being fiscally responsible and take our medicine. That means not everybody gets to have the same programs year after year that they've enjoyed in the past. We all have to tighten our belts. The arts community, along with everybody else in our department, is going to have to share that burden.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but not along with everybody else in this government, so back to the same minister. Let's get some clarity. An e-mail from your director of arts development says, "As of April 1, 2011, the AFA will discontinue the Artists and Education program," and "No new grant stream will be put in place to replace [it] or the old Educational Touring grant programs." But Tuesday we hear this same director saying that they won't cut the program until 2012. The ministry has done this flip-flop before in other sectors, so what gives, Mr. Minister? In, out? Yes, no?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre should know, the directives come from the minister of the department, not from the director of the department. That directive had not come through me, was not issued through me. When I saw it, I said that we will not go forward with that. That's where it ends. That's what it is today.

Ms Blakeman: The minister is telling me that he doesn't even know what's going on in his own department. Okay.

Well, back to the same minister. Given that this minister has been on a rampage of cuts through the community series grants, artists and education, cultural industries, and grants affiliated with universities, that directly affect artists' ability to make a living in Alberta, why does the minister believe that other grant programs, unspecified, will cover artists who are cut off when no new money has been added to the department or to AFA?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is absolutely ridiculous. AFA has received a 55 per cent increase in funding since 2005. Look at other provinces across the country: B.C., reduction of 25 per cent; Saskatchewan, a reduction of 7 per cent; Quebec, a reduction of 7 per cent. We're paying 8 and a half billion dollars for their arts and all their other funding. Ontario, who is ready to rock to the bottom, no reduction. We are a fiscally responsible government, we will do things in a prudent manner, and our artists are very well taken care of.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I love December. There's enthusiasm. We're 24 nights away from Christmas, and we're starting to exude it here this afternoon.

The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Okotoks Water Licence

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now for some elderly calmness. The town of Okotoks is facing the most important water challenge of any town in Alberta. Development is on hold as the town grapples with finding additional water in a closed basin. The Minister of Environment has consistently indicated that safe, secure drinking water is of paramount importance. If this is the case, why has the minister allowed Okotoks to find itself in such a strained situation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very much aware of the unique circumstances surrounding the town of Okotoks. In fact, just last week this member and I met with the mayor, council, and administration to explore alternatives to deal with their situation. They have a very unique situation in Okotoks in that, unlike most municipalities, they have relied on very shallow wells to service the needs of the town. They are exemplary in their water conservation, and they have not applied for licences that they don't need.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The town of Okotoks has two water transfer applications before Alberta Environment requesting a net diversion licence. Since the town historically returns 80 per cent of the water taken, a net diversion licence would essentially triple the amount of water that these licences would provide. The town is waiting. The development is waiting. When can we expect a decision?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear to this member and to all members of the House: the minister does not make such decisions, nor should the minister be making those decisions. I have however been advised by the department that we do expect a decision to be made fairly quickly. The issue of the net diversion is problematic. While it's true that municipalities return water, it's in an inconsistent way, and it doesn't necessarily meet the needs of the river system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Okotoks is Alberta's fastest growing community in a region experiencing incredible growth. What is the Minister of Environment doing to ensure a long-term water supply strategy for the town of Okotoks?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the applications that are currently before our department are a short-term solution, and I really do hope that decisions are made shortly. In the long term – these are, in fact, short terms – I believe very strongly in the concept of a regional water system, and that regional water system is already under way in the Calgary region. I would encourage the town and I would encourage the Calgary Regional Partnership to proceed with a regional water delivery system.

Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, today I'd like some answers from the minister of health. Last week the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was not the subject of a demand by the College of Physicians and Surgeons for a psychiatric examination. This week he is. This request by the college occurred right after the president of the AMA was contacted by the parliamentary assistant of health regarding the health of the good doctor. This is inappropriate. I don't care what the intent was or wasn't. It was wrong on many different legal and ethical levels, in my opinion. To the minister of health: will he ask the parliamentary assistant to apologize to the member?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe this issue has been clarified sufficiently already.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: No, it hasn't.

Albertans are tired of the culture of fear and intimidation. We want accountability now. The doctor has been smeared, and I find it beyond belief that a former EA to a health minister, someone who's been around government for years, doesn't understand the inappropriateness and the conflict of interest so obvious to everyone else but him of calling the head of the bargaining unit for doctors, the AMA, in the middle of the night to share his concerns about the mental state of the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark. Minister, do you not see the obvious conflict of interest and inappropriateness of that phone call?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I was not involved in that, and I believe the issue has been clarified.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: One last time, Mr. Speaker. Many of us have had conversations with multiple members of the media and others that have told us that there is a whisper campaign coming out of this government that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is unstable. This is unacceptable in a free and democratic society. I'd like a promise from this minister that he will personally, if he is truly a friend of this doctor, investigate the origin of that whisper campaign, put an end to it, and have whoever was involved beg for the forgiveness of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Will he undertake that investigation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any whisper campaign. I don't believe there is any evidence to that effect whatsoever. As I say, the issue has been dealt with. Let's move on and get on with the improvements to health care that people want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mineral Development in the Eastern Slopes

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2002 residents near the Livingstone Range have been fighting against proposals for a heavy magnetic ore quarry. This spectacular, untouched piece of the eastern slopes is home to countless species, including elk, bighorn sheep, moose, and golden eagles. Any thought of development there should not even be considered. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that this same company has been applying to develop this quarry for the last eight years with no success, why would the minister consider it at this time?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the quarry in question has been under review for some time, and we believe that the process going forward would allow for proper exploitation of that resource. It's a required resource in the region.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the minister consider approving any development in this region when the land-use framework's regional plan, which is meant to determine the sustainable level of development, has not been completed?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I have addressed that situation a number of times in the House. The fact of the matter is that as we develop the land-use framework across the province of Alberta, which includes seven plans in seven different regions, you can't stop the province and hold it in abeyance and wait for the plans. We need to continue the development, and the plans will fall into place, and the developments will of course fit into the plans as they're developed.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been waiting years for the land-use framework, and it appears that we're going to wait even longer. Will the minister commit to a moratorium on the development in the eastern slopes?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is no. There are ongoing opportunities for development in the eastern slopes, and that, again, will continue. There are, of course, a number of regional plans in place, smaller ones that do protect certain areas in the eastern slopes now. We will respect those. But development will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Primary Care Networks

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health and Wellness recently released a five-year action plan on health. In there it highlights the importance of primary care networks for the access to and improvement of health care in this province. This really excites my constituents. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can you tell this House and my constituents exactly what role the primary care networks will have in health care in moving the system forward?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that primary care networks will be, I'm sure, for a long time a critical part, a very fundamental part of our health system moving forward. We have 38 of them right now. That involves more than 2,200 family physicians. That includes more than 2.5 million Albertans. Going forward, we'll be adding about 100,000 more per year until all Albertans have access to primary care team members within days, not weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is good news, and again my constituents certainly support this, but they're having a difficult time seeing the impact right now to their health care services. Are there any barriers that are currently inhibiting this crucial self-organization of health care professionals and innovation in primary care networks that would benefit my constituents and all Albertans moving forward?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if there are any barriers, they may be related to workforce recruitment, workforce retention. They could be related to scope of practice. They could be related to location. There could be a number of factors there that are being looked at. That's why our five-year health action plan has made a strong commitment to further expand our PCN network, to fine-tune it, to also look at innovation within it, and to help ensure that people across this province do have access to primary care in a much more fastidious and effective manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.*

Southern Alberta Flood Disaster Relief

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last three years the Ministry of Municipal Affairs has spent $41.5 million paying consultants. Perhaps I'm in the wrong business. With no public accountability flood victims in southern Alberta are still waiting for claims to be resolved. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Albertans have been promised transparency. When will the minister make the LandLink contract public?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the RFP process has certainly been public, and the contract is for considerably less money than what the hon. member is talking about. Over the next five years the contract stipulates that they would get paid, if they are working, $20 million. But we've got some positive news in the fact that about 94 per cent of all of the residential claims have been resolved. You know, we are open to doing reviews as required.

Ms Pastoor: Can the minister say when the last applicants will actually receive their support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, for the last 6 per cent of the residential applications, a lot of them are from the fact or on the basis that we're still awaiting some additional information from them. You know, some of the files are extremely complicated as well because there are a number of other agencies that are providing support to the applicants, and we are sorting those out. We even expect that in the spring some individuals may realize that they had not submitted certain parts of a claim or realize that they've experienced broader damage than in the past. We are open to accepting additional claims at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the victims were displaced from last June and that Christmas is three weeks away, what is an acceptable time frame for this resolution?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very good question. For those who were displaced, we are working with them directly. We're in touch with them on a day-by-day basis, virtually, and we want to ensure that what they qualify for under the guidelines, they get. You know, suffice it to say that we're still accountable to our taxpayers, and we have to follow some of the federal guidelines in all of this as well.

Workers' Compensation Payment Deductions

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's priority is in safety and accident prevention for workers, but unfortunately work-related accidents do happen. From my constituency office I learned that two injured workers received similar provincial WCB payments and similar federal CPP disability payments. One is allowed to keep both, and the other got CPP disability deducted from his WCB compensation. My question is to the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. On what grounds does WCB deduct federal CPP disability payments?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's impossible for me to comment on specific files that I haven't had an opportunity to even take a look at, but I can tell you that the Workers' Compensation Board is an insurance system paid for wholly by employers of Alberta. CPP, on the other hand, is a federal program to which employees and employers contribute 50-50. Those are two independent programs, but maybe I can comment on policy in a subsequent question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, WCB is a provincial insurance program paid by employers to cover injured workers, and CPP is a federal pension program paid by workers. These are two independent programs. My question to the hon. minister: why does WCB tie the provincial WCB compensation to the federal CPP payment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. Since, I believe, 1996 the WCB does not deduct any payments from CPP. As a matter of fact, it considers itself the first payer, so no deductions have been made since 1996 to workers' CPP payments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Injured workers are most concerned about their disability and deeply worried about their meagre income after the injury. The question is to the hon. minister. Are you going to look into this situation and rectify the unfair WCB payment deduction in some way?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, definitely, my answer to this member would be the same as it would be to any Member of this Legislative Assembly. If you have any files that require consideration, there is an appeal process built into WCB with an independent Appeals Commission, but if there are any issues of policy that need to be looked at, please make it known to myself. There is an independent board of governors, that is made up of employers and employees, that makes policies for WCB, and I'm sure we can direct them to take a look at this policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Home Inspections

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the '90s the Conservative government gave municipalities power over home inspections, but if a municipality isn't doing its job, the Minister of Municipal Affairs can take action under the Safety Codes Act. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why is the minister refusing to look into cases where residents are being taken to the cleaners because shoddy construction was not found during municipal inspections?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very good question. No doubt, over the last couple of years – and, really, some of the concerns go back as far as 2003 – a survey found that a small number of homes were built to code and that those homes built, for instance, with stucco were actually built to code. In the last few years it was our department – I've indicated that before – that initiated some of the studies. We're certainly looking at a range of solutions to this member's concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: how are the municipal inspectors supposed to do their job when the government report found that they spend half of their time in courts against shoddy builders?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are providing additional training and support to the inspectors, and we are working very, very closely with those municipalities that have the authority to hire inspectors to do the actual inspections themselves. There's no doubt that over the last year or so here, with the issues being brought up, the construction industry has been paying a tremendous amount more attention than they have in the past.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that finally something has started to happen.

To the minister again: how can the minister allow another sitting of this Legislature to go by without any action for home and condo owners on those shoddy builders? We should have some kind of protection.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we continue to look at the particular issues, and we are working at solutions to help Albertans have confidence in the construction of their homes. There have been a number of solutions that we're looking at to help improve both the accountability of the construction industry and to help protect the actual homeowners themselves.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in my rush to hear the question of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I denied the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill his third question, which I will now provide an opportunity for.*

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that in the minister's answer to my second question he indicated a number of barriers that exist to PCNs. What is the plan to break down these barriers so that PCNs can flourish in Alberta for the benefit of patients?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that there will be more people recruited, more physicians recruited. There will be more nurses recruited. We're looking at expanding the role of pharmacists, for example. There will likely be a greater role for nurse practitioners and so on. There are a number of actions that will come about now because of the five-year action plan, that I announced yesterday. There will be performance measures to track all of that, and a significant amount of money will go towards PCNs. We're spending about $1.7 million per hour on health care in this province, and some of that, obviously a large portion of it, will go to help address some of the issues you've raised. It's a very good question that you raised, so please take it back to your constituents that they have a commitment that will be expanding in that regard.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 18 members who were recognized today, 108 questions and responses.

Statement by the Speaker Introduction of Constituency Staff Hansard Transcript of All-night Sitting

The Speaker: I've placed on all members' desks a memo with respect to House introductions tomorrow. Because of the large number of constituency staff who will be here, I think it probably would be most effective and efficient if one introduction on behalf of all those is provided from the chair because otherwise we'll be into two hours' worth of introductions.

I would like to draw your attention to something else that might be of historical value to some of you, and that is the Hansard of Wednesday evening, November 24, 2010, issue 47, which is 132 pages long. This is the thickest Hansard in the history of Alberta going back to 1905. It is, in fact, 24 pages longer than the December 4-5, 2007, issue. You can all take it home. Multiple copies are available for your grandchildren and the like.

When there's great attendance in the House, I'd like to call on the Deputy Speaker to make a special presentation to the pages.

Page Recognition

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, each day of the session we are served by the tireless efforts of our pages. Daily they show patience and understanding of our demanding work in the Assembly. As the Assembly we would like to give each page a Christmas and New Year's gift to say thank you and to wish each and every one a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. One of the pleasant tasks of the Deputy Speaker is to present these gifts to the pages. These gifts are from the personal contributions of each member of the Assembly. I would like to ask Sydney to come and receive her gift and to help distribute the gifts to the other pages. I would like to ask all members to join me in showing appreciation to our pages. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

International Child Protection Initiatives

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spring of 2010 South Africa's government initiated a project to strengthen and improve child protection services. The project was supported by the United Nations and the Canadian International Development Agency, and Alberta was there and contributing. Graduate student Brianna Strumm commenced a 13-week internship with South Africa's Ministry of Social Development last summer to complete her advanced master's of social work degree at the University of Calgary. Brianna worked to compile child protection research from around the world so that best practices can be applied in South Africa.

Back here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, the University of Calgary offers the only international social work master's program in Canada. Instructing this unique class is Dr. Lorne Jaques, who strives to achieve integrity in his students' experiences. International Social Service Canada also played a role in Brianna's internship. Dick Chamney, another Albertan, is president of ISS Canada, and he made the South African connections that brought Brianna's internship to fruition.

International Social Service is an NGO headquartered in Geneva. Its focus is children and families in distress related to crossing international borders. ISS serves 50,000 people a year in 120 countries through a network of branches, bureaus, and correspondents. ISS Canada handled 250 cases last year, 53 for Alberta children's authorities. Almost all Alberta cases dealt with child welfare or child protection. Alberta cases in 2010 will exceed 60.

In May 2012 ISS International Council members from all continents will gather at beautiful Banff to pursue greater global collaboration supporting children and families at risk. Alberta is a global energy leader and has world renowned expertise in sectors like agriculture and health sciences. We can be proud to add that Alberta is also a leader on the world stage of child protection and social development, and Albertans like Brianna are on the front lines.

Thank you.

Absence of Democracy in Alberta

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, these are very dark days for our democracy: an emergency room doctor kicked out of the government caucus for standing up for the sick and dying; that follows the ejection of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for defending the interests of his senior constituents; smear campaigns initiated by this government about the reputations, health, and state of mind of political opponents; this House shut down by the government without opposition members even given time to speak or voice their final dissenting arguments on important bills; our Wildrose caucus of four intimidated and censored repeatedly by those who should be protecting our rights; our leader, Danielle Smith, being the only human on the planet that we are not able to quote as supposed free members of this Legislature; members of our political party fired and bullied for being a part of the resistance.

I ask the Assembly as we move forward, each and every one of us, to look in the mirror and decide: are we supporting this culture of fear and intimidation, or are we fighting against it? I give my thanks to the New Democrats, Liberals, and independents for courageously defending our democracy at every turn and defending the rights of those they disagree with politically. You are statesmen and -women of the highest calibre.

As I lay awake in bed at 1 this morning, for the first time I felt some fear creep in, fear of the powerful people who despise me and would like to find a way to silence me or tarnish my reputation. But know this: I will not be held silent. The Wildrose will not be held silent. We will fight every bully tactic and smear, every inch of injustice, and we know Albertans will support us and other opposition parties as we do. The night is darkest just before the dawn, and the dawn is coming.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday democracy was given a time limit. The voices of elected Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta were silenced in order to attend Christmas parties while we discuss the most important issue in one of the shortest legislative sessions in history. Albertans were told by the government: "Trust us. We know what we're doing. We don't need to talk about it in the House."

Trust, Mr. Speaker, is freely given. But once it is betrayed, trust is difficult to earn back. Albertans elect members to this Assembly to represent their hopes, to speak the truth, and to defend their causes. They are given the sacred charge of serving the public good, not their own political party's interest. The Old Bailey courthouse in London, England, has these words inscribed on its walls: "The welfare of the people is supreme."

I can think of no other place in this great province where Albertans' welfare is more in peril than in the emergency departments and the waiting rooms of this province. Our so-called leaders say, "It's not a crisis; it's not a crisis," yet our trusted and dedicated front-line health care workers cry for help, while facing a potential catastrophic collapse. Who can Albertans trust? Who can they turn to to speak the truth and defend the public good when the Premier broke his promise to the emergency doctors, to the vulnerable seniors, and to all Albertans who seek care?

In the last two weeks we witnessed elected members from all political allegiances on this side of the House put aside their differences to work together on the most important issue facing this province and nation, the delivery of health care. Not so on the other side of the House, where we saw dogged adherence to political ideology winning out over common sense.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful and optimistic. I'm hopeful that our new CEO of Alberta Health Services, Dr. Chris Eagle, has the expertise and leadership to re-engineer the health system. I am hopeful that the front-line staff, the dedicated staff will continue to go above and beyond their call of duty. Finally, I am hopeful because I know that Albertans are not easily duped and will follow their conscience when selecting . . . [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm rising to give oral notice of a motion for the introduction of Bill 223, the Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2010.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bill 220

Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the Official Opposition you don't get to do this very often, so I'm very pleased to be requesting leave to introduce a bill, being the Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. It is Bill 220.

Mr. Speaker, tailings ponds are the centre of our international environmental black eye. As an Albertan and as a legislator I really want to see some concrete steps taken to stop creating tailings ponds and to eliminate those that we have. I think those steps include some very direct action around transparency and accountability.

Part of what Bill 220, the Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is looking to do is to create a reporting requirement around ERCB directive 074, which would cover an instance of an operator failing to meet the reduction that is stipulated in directive 074; any example where a project has significant changes to the overall tailings management plan, whether or not this requires an amendment to a previous approval; any amendment that has been granted by the board to a plan for a dedicated disposal area, an overall tailings management plan, or an annual tailings management plan, and the reasons for granting that amendment; and any instance where an operator has failed to meet or submit an annual tailings pond management plan.

As part of that I think it's very important that this report, when completed, should be completed no later than a set date; I happen to have chosen September 30. The annual report must be presented to the minister, who then must table it in the Assembly, and that makes it available to all Albertans who want to be able to check what's happened there.

Further, in the act I'm seeking a section that would disallow any amendment or repeal of directive 074 unless this is very well publicized, and I've set out a number of steps that they could go through that. Actually, I've used some of the government examples around consultation, so I'm sure they'll be very accepting of it. This amendment would be publicized, and it would include a public consultation process that could be followed. Again, the information would be submitted in a report, the report would go to the minister, and the minister would table it in the Assembly.

In addition, any noncompliance would be noted, especially if that noncompliance is related to the phase-in sequence of reduction in fluid tailings or the overall tailings management plan by an operator. The board would not allow an amendment or a change in any of that unless they can demonstrate extraordinary circumstances. I would argue that some of what we've seen thus far would not have fit under that definition. Notwithstanding anything else, any information that is submitted by an officer around compliance issues with directive 074 may be made publicly available.

I'm pretty excited about this as you can tell, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad to get the opportunity to ask for first reading of Bill 220. I look forward to everyone having their own printed copy in their hand so that they can go out and talk to their constituents about it. Gee, I'm hoping we won't adjourn tomorrow and I'll have plenty of time to debate it in this Assembly before Christmas.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 220 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table five copies of the 2009-10 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy annual report. This is the 15th annual report on the operation of this act. The report summarizes the activities related to the FOIP Act and outlines significant accomplishments for the 2009-10 fiscal year. The report includes statistics, showing the number of requests made to the Alberta government and local public bodies and the response times. Alberta's Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act came into effect in 1995. Since then provincial government bodies have responded to 34,600 requests for information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make two tablings, please. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a petition urging the government to "include Complex Decongestive Therapy in the list of accepted therapeutic procedures covered by Alberta Health Care." CDT is an effective means to manage lymphedema, which is a progressive disorder. The petition has 201 signatures.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of 190 letters signed by Albertans concerned about proposed changes to our health care laws. They ask that the government instead consider ways of strengthening the public health care system such as pharmaceutical reforms, primary care reforms, and more prevention and promotion. These letters were received prior to the news coming out earlier this week.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 7(7) at 3 o'clock I must advise the Assembly.

That being the case, then, before we go to Orders of the Day we must deal with a point of order. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Members' Statements

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose on a point of order during Members' Statements, which I admit is most unusual. In fact, in our practice we normally don't rise on points of order under Members' Statements, but it is allowable under Beauchesne's, and I'll provide citations. I rise under 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," and also under Beauchesne's 374: "Pursuant to Standing Order 31" – that's of the federal House – "Members other than Ministers may make . . . statements . . . The Speaker may cut off individual statements if improper use is made of the Standing Order."

Mr. Speaker, members' statements are a wonderful instrument in this House. It's an opportunity for members of the House, private members of the House who come and serve their constituents to bring forward issues of constituent concern, to raise issues of policy and then make a two-minute statement. Our normal practice and our agreement since we instituted these in the House pursuant to a House leaders' agreement a number of years ago is that they would be an unfettered opportunity for people to make statements about things. We've had wide utilization of that. In fact, we've had utilization that's even breached some of the provisions in Beauchesne's, which suggests that poetry shouldn't be allowed, but we have in fact allowed poetry.

But, Mr. Speaker, there has to be some element of legality and respect in those statements. What we heard from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere today were statements of fact which were allegations, which were smearing members of this House in saying that, basically, a smear campaign was done against another member. What he was doing was using an opportunity, an unfettered opportunity, to state as fact on the record of the House things which are not fact, and there's not been any evidence that those particular instances have taken place. He's had plenty of opportunity to put the evidence forward if there is any evidence, but that hasn't been put forward.

I don't at all wish to stand in the way of that member or any other member making a heartfelt, impassioned plea for any matter of public policy, any matter on representative constituents, any matter that's of public importance to Albertans. In fact, the two-minute member's statement ought to be there so private members of this House, whether opposition or on the government side, can make exactly those statements. But, Mr. Speaker, they ought not to be used in a manner where no response is allowed or provided for, to provide for unmitigated smearing of the character of members of this House. That's, in fact, what he did today. When that hon. member suggests that all members are involved in smearing another member or raising those sorts of issues, that is inappropriate. The hon. member ought to know it. He talks about morals and ethics. He should use them.

The Speaker: On this point of order, Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here we are again. We debated something similar, too, yesterday or the day before. I forget. It's all a blur now. I think you can see why I made the member's statement that I made. Just the fact that I can't stand in this hall without a member from that side, the hon. House leader, making a case for what I can and I cannot say – it's absolutely amazing that he can't see, in my opinion, his hypocrisy in that.

He says that I slandered all members. What's so ridiculous about that statement, Mr. Speaker, is that I clearly did not slander all members. I simply said that there is a whisper campaign. My questions today, in fact, asked the minister to find out who was involved in that smear campaign. I've repeatedly in this House, as has the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, as have multiple people on this side of the House, told of conversations that we've had with reporters. We've seen the letter from the president of the AMA, clarifying what happened that night. These things have happened. These are matters of fact.

Now, I agree our interpretations of the facts are very much different – no doubt about that – but they are interpretations of fact. We feel very strongly on this side of the House that what we are saying is true. I need to go over the text of what I said because the hon. member is saying that I've somehow smeared the members. Okay. I'll speed up, Mr. Speaker.

The one thing he specifically mentioned was that all members were slandered. This is what I said: "Smear campaigns initiated by this government." Now, government does not just include, as the good member knows, all MLAs. It includes the people that work for the MLAs. It includes the staff in the Premier's office. It includes the Public Affairs Bureau. It includes anybody in government, okay? When I say government, that's who I'm talking about. It might be MLAs. I sure hope that it's not.

I'll tell you one thing. There is a smear campaign going on right now on that good doctor, in my opinion. I think the facts point clearly to it. Whether it was MLAs, whether it's staffers for MLAs: that's the question. I still hope that the government, the House leader will look into that. I really do hope he will.

I did also refer to that I felt a little bit of fear last night over some of the, I guess, perceived enemies, the events that have happened, some of the acrimonious things that have happened. As someone in opposition you feel somewhat vulnerable. This is new to me. I've never been in opposition, obviously, and I feel somewhat vulnerable, not necessarily from individual MLAs over there, but things have been said that have made me feel very vulnerable, not so much in this House but outside this House. That's a very real fear for me.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just ask that you please protect my right to speak in a member's statement of matters of opinion and interpretation of events and not allow this hon. member to curb my ability in that regard. Thank you.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

Hon. members, I am prepared to deal with this. This concept of Members' Statements originated out of a series of negotiations that took place in late 1993. I happened to be the Government House Leader at the time at which negotiations were held with the House leader of the Official Opposition, Grant Mitchell. We agreed on some 100 changes made to the standing orders. This thing was implemented. We also had one-minute recognitions as well. Then over time House leaders have come together and basically said: "Well, okay. Fine. The members don't want to have the Recognitions thing. We'll go essentially to a two-minute member's statement proviso." Which we did and which we conduct today. We've even increased the numbers of them from the handful of members' statements there were to six or seven at a given time.

When I introduced this in 1993 and at subsequent times after 1997, when I was elected as Speaker, there were some principles that were enunciated. Those principles, just to repeat them: number one, that there be given as wide a latitude as possible with respect to members' statements, that members would have an opportunity to stand in the Assembly and to provide a statement in the widest possible latitude, period; number two, we would ask the Speaker never to interfere and intervene and not deal with a point of order about things that are said in a member's statement. Point number three was that members would speak on policy issues and with the highest civility and the highest decorum and not bring in personalities and personal attacks on other members.

This is not the first occasion on which members have intervened – and this has happened on both sides – and basically said: "Speaker, let's have a point of order. Tell somebody they've got to sit down. They can't deal with it." I want to respect the principles that were enunciated and that we have followed in this Assembly with respect to members' statements. I want to repeat again that there should be as wide a latitude as possible provided, that the Speaker should not deal with points arising out of members' statements, but that the members themselves have to discipline themselves with the civility and decorum that's requested and deal with policy matters and not personalities. Without that, it turns into a donnybrook, and the next day somebody else gets up and slams the person from the day before for two minutes about the irresponsible, universal condemnation of everybody and the euphoric enthusiasm to find conspiracy everywhere and that sort of thing.

We've heard the points. The Government House Leader is certainly within his rights to rise on a purported point of order and to raise the matters that he did. An opportunity was provided to the other individual, Airdrie-Chestermere, to deal with this. It seems to be a point of clarity with respect to this. Because of the tradition that we've really established in the House and the latitude given to members' statements, I will not find this as a point of order.

But, once again, I'll repeat what I've said before. Civility, decorum, respect are very important. This is not an opportunity for someone to personally attack someone else. If it is, I would strongly recommend to the members of the Assembly: eliminate Members' Statements from our Routine. I would stand up as the Speaker and say that. If it is to be negated by providing for a chaotic witch-hunting environment, that would be irresponsible. Civility, decorum, and policy, not personality, and things work.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Select Special Ombudsman Search Committee

28. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that a Select Special Ombudsman Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Mitzel, chair; Mr. Lund, deputy chair; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Hinman; Mr. Lindsay; Mr.

Marz; Ms Notley; Mr. Quest; and Mr. Rogers; for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Ombudsman and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.

- (1) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most current Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (2) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair.
- (3) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (4) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (5) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to move Government Motion 28. It's, unfortunately, necessary for us to proceed with the appointment of a select special committee because of the resignation of the current Ombudsman for reasons which were outlined in a letter, which I believe you tabled yesterday. Unfortunately, I had to give notice of this earlier. I think it's important for us to move ahead. Given that the standing orders provide for the session to end tomorrow, it was important for us to move ahead quickly to put in place a committee so that the work of the committee could be done and that an Ombudsman could be in place at an appropriate time to take over the important duties and functions performed by that office for Albertans.

I would ask for support of the motion.

[Government Motion 28 carried]

Time Allocation on Bill 24

25. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not delighted to rise to move Government Motion 25, but it is my duty to do so. I'm not going to repeat the arguments that I made in moving a similar motion yesterday. It is unfortunate that we've got to the stage in this House that we have opposition utilizing the time of the House to basically stop the business of the House and of government rather than to put forward a reasonable argument and amendments. That's what we've seen, in fact. I don't have the hours in front of me today in terms of how many hours we've spent in debate. Indeed, it may be inappropriate, as some have pointed out, to measure the sufficiency of debate by the number of hours, so I'm not going to go there.

I would say this. When there is a clear indication to the House – and we have had that from members opposite – that the only way in which the business of the House can progress is by allocating time to the rest of the debate, then it is my duty as House leader and the person who's charged with ensuring that the business of the House gets done from the government perspective to bring forward a motion to say that with two more hours of debate we should be able to cover all of the topics that are necessary to be covered if that hasn't been covered before. All members would then be aware of the amount of time they had and can direct their remarks accordingly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. House minister for that introduction. It does cause me some concern, again, that we're here today speaking on what is essentially a closure of debate in this hon. House on what is a very important bill going forward for the Alberta people.

Carbon capture and storage is one of those issues that will affect us for a long time. The government is spending quite a bit of money on this new and unproven technology and is taking on a considerable amount of liability. We see other places around the world where there have been some questions of whether this technology should be going forward. We see that in places like Germany and other places like that who are worried about the liability that's going to be undertaken and what pore spaces are actually supposed to be used for, whether CO₂ is actually going to be harbored underneath the earth and whether it's going to be successful to, I guess, reduce emissions going forward to combat global warming and all of those good things. It's necessary for us, looking at the importance of this bill, to give it time for us to speak on it.

It's also important for another way that I'm going to speak to this, the importance, actually, of the democratic process itself. Really, I think, if you look at it, the government has a large majority, and they can pass bills, you know, essentially when they want to. Allowing the opposition a full and fair opportunity to discuss things at various stages would be fine. I just don't think that in third reading we're getting a fair shake here. We could be spending more time in this House to allow this bill to be discussed. I think it's a heavy-handed approach that the government has taken in regard to this discussion, and I hope at some point in the future we can get on with having more debate, not less debate.

I thank you very much for the opportunity to say my piece, and we'll move on from here.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 25 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:18 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Totals:	For – 29	Against – 8

[Government Motion 25 carried]

3:30 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? May I remind everyone that we are on amendment A2 as proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, that amends by striking out "Calgary-Elbow" and substituting "Calgary-Preston Manning." Also, a reminder that the limit is one hour.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Funnily enough, this is very appropriate because we're talking about renaming a riding after one of the most, I would say, important reformers of democracy in our province's and in our nation's history, possibly not the most important but definitely one of the most important.

You know, I related a story in the wee hours of the morning about Preston Manning that I'll sum up. When we invited him to come speak at an event at the law school I was attending for a group that we had made – and I think the hon. finance minister actually spoke to that same group. He wasn't in the Legislature at that time. It was the Students for a Stronger Alberta, and he was our first speaker. Then we had David Kilgour in to talk about crossing the floor over the GST issue and how he stood up for his constituents on that. Then we had the minister of finance in to talk about all kinds of different things, Senate reform and other different democratic principles that he was very involved with promoting.

We had several others, but another one was Preston Manning. When he spoke, he spoke about the need for real representative democracy. It was funny. I thought he was going to talk about Senate reform because he was kind of known for pushing that idea very hard, as were many others, but he spoke about representative democracy and the importance of an MLA representing the interests of their constituents above all else. I got to thinking about that, and it really had an effect on my life and on my perception of politics.

These two weeks for me, personally, have been a very tumultuous couple of weeks, just seeing the very problems of our democracy on a very close and personal level and how we really have let our system become something that is almost a bastardized form of democracy. It has some elements of fairness and democracy in it, but in most cases it's not. We've fallen away from what representative democracy was meant to be.

I think of the writings of George Washington and some of the things that he said about representative democracy and how he abhorred parties and party discipline. He thought parties eventually would lead to the end of his new nation, the United States of America, the reason being that parties would take away the autonomy of an elected representative to represent his constituents before all else, that party welfare would be more important to them eventually than would the interests of their constituents. You know, that's a very serious thing, and I think we've seen that. It's not just this Legislature. It's the Parliament. It's other Legislatures. Certainly, other countries have the same issue.

I think that we do see instances where we still have that sort of representative democracy. You see that a lot more in municipal politics. You see that there are no party lines, so municipal politicians generally are responsible to their constituents only. They really do a good job, I think, generally speaking, of standing up for their constituents and what their constituents want. I'm not saying that we need the abolition of parties, but I am saying that we need to put parties in their proper place.

The proper place of a party – and I think Preston Manning would agree with this – is that it's a way to bring natural alliances together and to bring people with common causes together so that they can organize and move the agenda forward on certain key issues that are important to them. I think Preston Manning would say that parties should not be the be-all and end-all. Loyalty to party, loyalty to donors, loyalty to special interests, loyalty to lobbyists: those things shouldn't matter in the end. In a political sense, when you're talking about how someone votes, not even loyalty to friends should supersede that.

The first loyalty when you go to vote as an MLA should be: what is in the best interests of my constituents first and foremost? What is in the best interests of my constituents? What do they want? What is in their best interest? I believe our democracy right now, our system, is not about that at all. It's about supporting the party that you are a part of, and as long as those allegiances are aligned with the party, it works. When your allegiances come in conflict, it doesn't.

If there's one thing we learn from Preston Manning – and it's the reason I think we should name a riding after him – it's that loyalty to one's constituents is by far the most important thing that one should take into account when voting on a bill or when doing anything in government. I just hope that as we move forward, we can try to embody the spirit of Preston in that regard. That's why I think, again, Mr. Chair, that it would be a great idea to name this riding after Preston Manning. He understood this principle, and it's a principle that I think we should all work toward following.

I have a long biography here of Preston that I wanted to talk to you about. Maybe I'll talk a little bit more about the principles that he espoused and why I think it's important to recognize those principles that he had by naming a riding after him.

Over the last several weeks we've seen what happens when people are disciplined for speaking up for their constituents. It hasn't been pretty. No one can say in this House, I think, that they're happy with the way things have occurred over these last couple of weeks with regard to the doctor and, I think, even before with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I know that my decision to cross the floor was based almost entirely on the fact that I felt that I could not vote with the government on a variety of issues going forward, and I felt intimidated into doing so lest I lose certain committee work and so forth and lest I be disciplined in some manner. I didn't feel that was appropriate, and I couldn't go along with it anymore, so it opened up some of those kind of raw feelings.

At different events and things I've had the opportunity to speak with Preston and others about this and just have the counsel there, that understanding that: "Yeah; you know what? As long as it's being done, if you're doing what you're doing for your constituents, if you're doing what you're doing to remain loyal to them before anything else, then it's the right thing to do."

I feel very strongly, and, you know, it's going to be tough to reform this democracy that we have, because it's so entrenched. I'm not just talking about the governing party being around for forty years. That's not what I mean. That's part of it, but what I'm talking about is just that the whole system is entrenched. We saw that with Preston trying to change the federal system and how entrenched that was.

We're really going to have to work hard as a body here, as a group if we want to see the type of democracy that maybe he envisions and that, I think, I hope, many in here envision; that is, a democracy that puts loyalty to constituents first and foremost. It's a democracy wherein parties can work together and cosponsor bills and legislation regardless of whether they're in opposition or in the governing party, where all votes are free, unfettered, where the votes of nonconfidence in the government are separated from all pieces of legislation so that a government can't fall on a bill being voted down.

Think of the good things that could come out of that co-operation if people were free to represent their constituents, if people were able to work with members in different parties on cosponsoring legislation that they felt passionate about. It would change the whole dynamic. Of course, most legislation would still be spurred out of the Premier's office and out of his cabinet, but that would be fine. With a free vote at least you would have the ability as members to veto legislation that wasn't good. Absolutely. Those are the principles, I think, that Preston Manning espoused, the freedom to vote for one's constituents and the freedom of democracy.

One thing I loved about Preston is that he was never a bully. He was never someone that would stand up and try to bully someone into believing in his way or try to shut them up or try to shut them down. He wouldn't use any types of points of order or privilege or anything else to shut people up. He was very, very consistent, and he would always try to appeal to people's better sides, to their better angels, and try to convince them in that way as opposed to fear, intimidation, and so forth. To me, he was a true statesman in that way.

I think that it's entirely appropriate that we have the opportunity to sit here and discuss whether we should name Calgary-Elbow, part of his old constituency, falling in that constituency boundary that he used to represent, Calgary-Preston Manning, give it some meaning. Not that Calgary-Elbow is a poor name, but the feelings of democratic renewal and respect for democracy and statesmanship that are elicited in the vast majority of Albertans when you hear the name Preston Manning I think would be very well served and our democracy well served in naming this constituency after him. I'm sure he would never ask for such a thing. It would be totally beyond his character to ask for such a thing because of the humility that he has, but I think it would be a very noble thing for us to do in this House, to name this constituency after him.

Some of the other principles that Mr. Manning espoused, that I think will justify having a constituency named after him – it's just the effect he had not only on federal politics but on provincial politics. I mean, the coalition of fiscal conservatives, of kind of smaller government libertarians that he brought together became a huge part of the government of the day, the provincial government of the day. Many great members of the PC Party during the late 1980s and 1990s came from that movement that was started, and it affected a lot of the legislation that you used to see in this Legislature.

You know, I think of the 10 per cent flat tax that Stockwell Day brought through. A lot of those ideas were brought forward and inspired by that reform movement. [interjections] I guess the hon. members opposite don't feel as highly about Mr. Day as potentially I do, or maybe they do, and I'm misinterpreting what they're saying. [interjections] Mr. Chair, do I still have the floor?

The Deputy Chair: You still have the floor.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I was just checking.

I think that as we move forward, a lot of those principles were inspired by that reform movement, so a lot of our own legislation provincially was inspired by Preston Manning, maybe more so than many of the provincial politicians that were there at that time, potentially even more than former Premiers.

I think we need to not just recognize someone for their contribution as an MLA, as we have done in the past, but I think we should open that door more broadly to who the senior statesmen of Alberta are that made a huge difference in this province's history. That shouldn't just be provincial politicians; that should include federal politicians, and it should include other people that aren't politicians, depending on the contribution that they've brought. In any event, that's what I believe.

I would just say that if there's one principle that Preston Manning espoused, it was loyalty: do not misplace your loyalties. As a politician put your loyalties where they belong, and that is to the people that you serve, not to donors, not to a party, not to special interests or lobbyists but to the people that go into that booth and mark an X next to the name of a community member who they have entrusted to represent and serve and watch out for the interests of their family and of them personally.

It is that discarded principle that thousands of our countrymen have fought for and died for, millions more have lived for, and it is that principle that I believe we should be fighting to restore to its proper place in our democracy. Because of that, Mr. Chair, I think that renaming a Calgary riding that used to belong in Preston Manning's federal riding is a very appropriate way to recognize the incredible contribution of this man to our democracy, to bringing forward ideas that may have gone to the wastebasket but are now part of our society and are part of our democratic dialogue and, in fact, in the past have become policy of the government in power and in future will continue to become policy under potential future governments. I think that's something that we need to recognize.

A final point about Preston is that as much as he did belong to a party, this is a man that respected people from all party backgrounds. I think of some of his closest friends; Rick Anderson, for example, a well-known Trudeau Liberal who he brought over to be part of his group. He reached out to people beyond party lines and brought them into that reform movement. I think there is something to be said. That's the type of statesmanship I think we should reflect as well.

We've seen some of it this week. We've had the opportunity to see what it's like to work with other parties in a common cause. Some things aren't partisan, Mr. Chair, and that's what Preston, I think, really did understand, that there are some things that aren't left or right or Conservative or Liberal or Wildrose. You know, there's just a right way and a wrong way of doing things sometimes. No party has the corner on the market of truth and good ideas.

So I think that we need to reflect. It sure would be nice to change the rules in here to reflect that principle, to be able to co-sponsor bills with different parties across party lines and to be able to work together on common causes. Wouldn't that be an exciting thing to do? I think we'd get so much more done on health care, on finance, and on all of these things.

Congratulations to Preston Manning for being such a great man.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to say thank you to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for his comments on this amendment and, in a broader sense, on the bill itself. I think it's grand that this member has a particular affinity towards a past leader in the country like Preston Manning. I've only met Preston a couple of times, but he has had a profound impact on our province and, indeed, upon our country.

Similarly, there are other people that we also could look at that we as politicians in this era admire. The member mentioned that some members over here don't admire Stockwell Day. I really admire Stockwell Day, and his legacy of a flat tax and the lowest tax rate in the country is still with us today. In fact, that member was at a fundraiser of mine featuring Stockwell Day in 2008. There are also local people who we admire. He has mentioned, of course, Preston Manning, but people I admire include Jason Kenney or Ric McIver, people in my particular area.

Interestingly enough, the member has mentioned that the southwest area of Calgary was represented by Preston Manning. He's quite correct, it being Calgary Southwest. Well, at the same time, provincial constituencies are usually smaller, as they are in that case, so we could also name other constituencies. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore could want to name his constituency Calgary-Preston Manning. Even part of my constituency, a small portion, is in Calgary Southwest. Just some food for thought.

In a broader sense, Mr. Chair, a review of our electoral boundaries happens every two elections, and this is necessary because the reality is that Alberta is changing. Places like Calgary, where I'm from, grow exponentially over even a short period of time. In fact, in the period in which I've been in Calgary, it has increased in population greater than the size of Regina. That's quite incredible to look at as well.

So we take this opportunity to talk about some issues raised during second reading, specifically this amendment itself. With respect to the concern of adding four electoral divisions, one of which could be named Preston Manning, I want to remind all hon. colleagues that this was a decision of this Assembly in 2009, so there's been a significant amount of time in which to consult upon this issue. By passing Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009, this Assembly directed the commission to divide Alberta into 87 electoral divisions. Of course, this was previously 83.

Now, there are a few we've decided to rename, of course. Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley we've named after the late Grant Notley, something that I supported, someone who made a significant contribution to this province and who once sat in this Assembly. Calgary-Egmont, again, is being renamed Calgary-Acadia, and I think that reflects the modern reality. In fact, many people, Mr. Chair, would call me from the northwest part of the city, an area called Edgemont, thinking I was their MLA. This reflects the modern reality.

Calgary-Montrose has been renamed Calgary-Greenway; Calgary-North Hill – I said North Hill, not Nose Hill – has been renamed Calgary-Klein after the former Premier. We have the new Calgary-South East, and Edmonton-South West is new. Former Airdrie-Chestermere is renamed Airdrie. Chestermere-Rocky View. Fort McMurray-Conklin is one of the new constituencies, and the other new name I found was Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. So there's nothing wrong with renaming a constituency, and we've had some spirited debate on this floor here as well.

I do want to just address the issue of the number of constituencies, one of which could be named after Mr. Manning as the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has indicated. Canada's system of Confederation, Mr. Chair, is set up to recognize unique differences across the country. The tradition in Canada is effective representation, not absolute parity as we see south of the 49th parallel. The balancing of these interests is a delicate one. It involves examination in the depth of social history; it involves demography of communities and, really, a wide sense of criteria as well.

Now, of course, population and population density vary greatly from province to province, and each provincial government has a challenge to go and reflect that. But let's just compare ourselves to a few other provinces here. My home province of Saskatchewan has about 1.04 million people. I think it's hit a million people a few times; a few people like me keep moving out. There are 58 MLAs, so you're dealing with approximately 18,000 citizens there per MLA. Ontario has approximately 13 million residents and 107 MPPs, approximately 123,000 per MPP. Alberta, as we know, has 3.7 million residents, and we're now proposing 87 MLAs, which is about 42,000 per MLA, so we're somewhere roughly in between, Mr. Chair.

One other thing I also wanted to mention. I was just doing some quick math on this whole topic, and 1986 is the last time that the amount of MLAs was changed. In 1986, over 20 years ago, there were 2.3 million people in Alberta. So we had 83 seats then, 27,000 per MLA. In 2010 it's 3.7 million people with 87, so we're dealing with 42,000 per MLA. Even dealing with that, there are more people per MLA, including in constituencies urban and rural. That's an average. So a single benchmark like locking population to the number of residents doesn't work across the entire country, and the fact is that our country reflects that different things work differently in different parts of this nation.

Mr. Chairman, the Electoral Divisions Act is a vital tool for democratic process in this province. The province amends this every two elections, as I mentioned. Again, it reflects a modern Alberta. Albertans vote for the person they support in the area they live, and the fundamental democratic principle is that members are always aware, or should be, of the thoughts and concerns of the people living in the constituencies that we each represent. Of course, there are many ways to represent your constituents. You know, you could represent them in your caucus privately, you could advocate on their behalf through letters, you could represent them publicly.

In the past, for example, I've publicly voiced my concerns with government policy, and sometimes it has not been onside with my own government. Last year I was very outspoken about the government's response to the changing world economy. This year, fortunately, I have a chance to put this into practice in my own department. At the same time, I've also stood in this Assembly and stood against my own government's legislation. I did so earlier this year in a spirited debate on Bill 7. In both cases, though, I was not admonished publicly, I wasn't kicked out, I wasn't admonished behind closed doors or threatened with sanctions, and no one told me that the knives were out for me.

Mr. Chairman, I believe members in this House are hard working, and I believe that we all have the best interests of Albertans in mind. I'll give you an example. I think a good constituency MLA is the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I don't agree with him on a lot of things, but he is a good constituency MLA. The same with Calgary-Glenmore. I think he works really hard in his constituency. That's just a fact. We don't agree on a lot of things, but these are two members who work hard and who put their constituents first. The difference is that we don't single out members nor do we put blame on groups of people. The best of us focus on an issue without laying blame.

Now, Mr. Chair, there were some comments from hon. members with respect to the composition of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I'd like to underline that the Electoral Boundaries Commission looks at all of the names, they look at a variety and a number of factors, but the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act sets out how members of the commission are in fact chosen. Most other provinces choose their commissions in a very similar way. Indeed, I remember that when I was working in the Saskatchewan Legislature, it was done in a very similar way.

Bill 28 only addresses the placement of electoral boundaries and the names of divisions. I've dealt with some of the names before. We named divisions after certain leaders. Again, Edmonton-Decore was named after a former mayor and Leader of the Opposition from Edmonton, whom I didn't have the chance to meet. It's not about parties. We've recognized people who make contributions regardless of their partisan contribution.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has spoken, again, very highly of Preston Manning, and I think very highly of him as well. At the same time, Preston Manning also was a leader who had to invoke discipline in his caucus. I recall back to May 7, 1996, when I just had finished third-year exams, when I found out that the Member for Calgary Southeast, the area that I represent now, Jan Brown, had been booted out of the party. That was where he had actually put in some discipline as well. So leaders make discipline from time to time, Mr. Chair.

I also want to address some previous comments from Edmonton-Riverview on this amendment. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview in the debate on Government Motion 26, which was related to Bill 28, expressed what I would characterize as concerns with the length of time this House has dedicated to Bill 28 and its respective amendments. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview stated – and I'm quoting from Hansard – that “six and a half hours is not an abuse of time.” He went on to say: “This is not a minor bill; this is a significant bill. It will affect every single member of this Assembly, and it will affect every . . . citizen of this province.”

I would agree with the member that Bill 28 is indeed a significant bill. I would also agree with his statement that the bill will affect every citizen of this province. The hon. member and I do disagree with the length of time dedicated to the development of this legislation. The time allotted to Bill 28 may not satisfy the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; this is clear, again, from his statement from last night. However, days and months of work from Albertans across the province have been dedicated to the legislation before this House, and the Albertans who contributed to its development should be recognized. In no way do I want to besmirch the Member for Edmonton-Riverview by reading too much into his comments, but I do want to address the assumption that not enough work has been done on Bill 28, Mr. Chair.

As I and other members of this Assembly have stated, there's a long process to develop, draft, and debate legislation and amendments to expand the number of constituencies. This, again, occurred in 2009. There were public consultations throughout the entire province. After that there was a draft submitted with the names of each constituency, and then there was a final draft as well. I was once told as a junior lawyer that unless everybody is a little bit upset, you haven't done a good job. Well, no, this is not a perfect scenario, but I think that the people on the commission have done a good job with the names and with the boundaries, and I think that we should thank them for their service because I do think, Mr. Chair, that it's really a thankless job.

There was another process set out in legislation to create and appoint the Electoral Boundaries Commission. These great Albertans are selected out in the Election Act, and they go to all regions of Alberta. They solicit thoughts and concerns from Albertans on the shape and size of the electoral boundaries. I have to say that this isn't a job that I would want. The sessions and submissions were used to create the first draft of the report, which included the names of the constituencies, which led to the second report being presented in this Assembly.

This report led to a motion in this House, which included extensive and important debate. The discussion on the motion led to important constituency name changes. I dealt with some of those earlier. These changes included recognizing contributions of some great Albertans and some former political leaders. The interesting commonality between them all is not their party, not their ideology, not their particular views, Mr. Chair, but rather that they all served in this Assembly. The passage of the motion that led to debate on the bill is where we're at now in Committee of the Whole, the amendment from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Now, with respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, as I mentioned earlier, had some comments, and he's raised many points throughout this process. I do believe that there have been many opportunities for members to raise relevant points regarding Bill 28. I've heard some from the opposition that I agree with, I've heard some from the government that I agree with, and vice versa. That is honestly true. As the hon. House leader has stated last night, we've heard a debate that's very lengthy, very verbose. I think that we've had some meaningful comments, but there does come a point in time when I hear from members, you know, "We're going to continue debate until it gets to closure" – there is a balance in democracy. A great man named Morris Shumiatcher once told me that there are rights and responsibilities. With the right to debate, you know, we want to be responsible in that type of debate. At the same time, I don't think that it's out of line to ask for time allocation at this juncture.

There is also a difference, of course, in people's meaning of democracy. Many people say that it's undemocratic. In a lot of cases a lot of things can be undemocratic. Similarly, you can't say something is undemocratic just because it doesn't go your way. I've been part of many losing battles in my life and some winning ones too. But you know something? That's just the nature of democracy. It's majority rules, but we also try to protect the minority against the tyranny of the majority. I do think that we have made that appropriate balance in debating this bill and in debating this amendment.

So in the interests of democracy and developing electoral boundaries that reflect a modern Alberta, we should now move forward. We should move forward through this amendment through committee and through third reading. Bill 28, Mr. Chair, reflects the commission's report as amended by the Assembly and will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with its population and its current needs. With reasonable accommodation and also with pride we will honour two great Albertans here. Again, the difference is that these two great Albertans served in this House.

If we're going to name a riding after Preston Manning, I think we should push the federal government to do so on a federal level because he was always a federal politician. We've named Edmonton-Manning after his late father, Ernest Manning, a former Premier of this province, who sat in this Assembly for many years. At the same time, Mr. Chair, his son, as great a man as he is and as great a legacy as he leaves this province and leaves this country and his work with the Manning Centre for Building Democracy, he did not sit in this Assembly.

So I will not be voting in favour of this, but I want this House to know the great deal of reverence and the great deal of appreciation that I have for one of the great leaders of Alberta's history, Preston Manning. I do think that this is something that we should pursue on a federal basis: an Alberta riding, probably in Calgary, maybe a riding in Calgary that even overlaps the constituency that I represent. So I will not be voting in favour of this amendment, and I encourage all members to follow suit.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I've listened with great interest to the presenters who have gone before me, and I, too, shall now make some comments on the amendment to rename one of the constituencies after Preston Manning. It is with some note that we learned that Preston Manning has been an influence on Alberta in many things, and I think that goes without my saying here.

To reiterate what the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said, he was a democrat who really espoused representing your citizenry and voting as your citizens of your constituency wanted you to vote, that type of representation. Whether it always happened or not, that is another thing, but he at least espoused that principle. I'm sure that from time to time even the Reform Party had to go away from it to enforce party discipline. I know that for the majority of time he at least espoused that principle.

I think Preston's first election was in 1993.

An Hon. Member: It was 1988.

Mr. Hehr: In 1988. Thank you very much. I'm reminded there of the history of Alberta.

I think the initial Reformers ran on not taking their pensions. I'm not sure if I'm right – and maybe someone can correct me on this – but every last one of them took their pensions.

Mr. Anderson: Except for Preston.

Mr. Hehr: Are you sure about that?

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. He's the only one.

Mr. Hehr: Well, then, that's very good. That is one of those things. Then that is actually very good, a leader of a party who actually ran in that election on that and didn't take his pension. I'll tell you what. That's very honourable. That's actually very honourable.

I did listen to the comments from the hon. minister of housing, and he did point out the fact that most of the people we've been naming our ridings after in this House have been provincial representatives, people who have served in this hon. House. On that point we look at people who have been named before: Decore, and the new riding of Calgary-Klein. I supported that amendment because of Premier Klein's contribution to this province. Whether you agreed with him or not, he gave up a significant portion of his life to represent us on a provincial scale. That's why I supported that change to that riding.

However, given that Mr. Manning was a federal politician and did not serve in this House, I am going to vote against this amendment. I'm not taking anything away from what the man did or his service to this country and his contributions to the political landscape. In my view it would be unwise for this Legislature to do that and set that precedent.

On that point, I believe it's better to have a separation between provincial electoral districts and federal electoral districts, to make it easier for people to keep track of those things. In my view, muddying the waters by naming this after a federal politician would be a disservice.

On that note, I'm going to vote against the amendment and would encourage all members of this hon. House to do the same. Thank you very much, sir.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A2.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to rise and speak in favour of amendment A2. I find it almost humorous that the minister of housing would say that . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I must apologize here because from my view I couldn't see the hon. member stand up. The process is: opposition, government, opposition, government.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I'll be brief if you recognize me.

The Chair: No. Now I must recognize the government side so we follow the proper process. We will recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm grateful for the opportunity to rise today and join the debate on the amendment to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, being brought forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Mr. Chairman, when you look at the bill, it formally accepts and implements the revised names and boundaries of Alberta's electoral divisions. The bill as it is is the combination of a long and detailed process involving extensive debate, consultation, and public hearings. Before I go on, I would like to also take time to thank the Electoral Boundaries Commission for all the work they did in laying the groundwork for this important piece of legislation.

An Hon. Member: You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Berger: After all, this groundwork was extensive. You know, we can say, "You've got to be kidding," but they were all over the province. People were consulted, and people brought forward their submissions, both verbal and written.

When we look at an amendment to put a name in there, we have to go forward and say, as has been mentioned in the past: is this name that we're putting forward more to the line of a federal constituency or riding boundary? The great things that this person, Preston Manning, did for our province were as well for the greater part of the country. I would submit, in agreement with some of the earlier speakers, that we would be better off to lobby federally, when we come up with more ridings, that that name be given to one of those ridings. Respecting all the contributions, it was not just to the province of Alberta, but it was to all of Canada that Preston Manning has contributed and continues to contribute. I think we should honour that.

That is why I can't really agree with the amendment as offered because when we look at what was accomplished by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, it was not an easy task. The commission had the seven considerations that it had to take into account while plotting our new boundaries, and I think everyone in here probably knows what they included. One was the need for effective representation, without a doubt the most important consideration and the one entrenched in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It's not necessarily all about names, as in the amendment, but it's about the rights and the consideration of that in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Two, the need to address population density in Canada. We have a system where a vote in one area does not have to be equal to a vote in another but, instead, insists that they are not unduly disenfranchised. Once again, no mention of the name.

Three, to balance the common community interests, including Indian reserves and Métis settlements. After all, it is important that all communities be kept together. There, too, there is no mention of the names.

Four, the need to respect municipal boundaries wherever possible. Separating a municipality into several ridings could hamper the effectiveness of MLAs in meeting the needs of their communities. Once again, we're not talking about names.

Five, we recognize the challenges faced by the total number of municipalities and local authorities. After all, more municipalities mean more city councils, more school boards, and more interested parties to meet with. There again, no mention of the names.

The sixth, to work with geographical features like roads, rivers, mountain ranges, physical barriers, which are clear guidelines for electoral divisions. Once again, we are not speaking about the names. [interjection] Yes, there are mountains that we could name.

Seven, strive towards clear boundaries whenever possible. This reduces confusion. Names, I would submit, do definitely reduce confusion, and people get used to the names, and we do have to rename new ones and such things, but right now, as we speak to this, in those seven pieces there is no mention specifically of names or this amendment.

Now, if you look at the commission, it's remarkable that they were able to balance all of these often conflicting criteria. Without a doubt one of the greatest challenges faced by the commission was population growth. That was the whole purpose of this, not a name. Mr. Chairman, we all know Alberta has seen tremendous growth in recent years. We are, after all, a beacon of economic promise and prosperity, and Alberta offers a level of freedom not found in most places in the world. It offers a level of economic prosperity not found in most places in Canada. That's talking about the whole province, not the name of any one single constituency.

As a result of this, we have seen a huge influx of people coming to our province. However, this growth has not been consistent and even throughout the province. Without a doubt the largest growth has been in Edmonton, Calgary, and the central Alberta corridor. We don't change the name for that. It doesn't go back to that amendment either. These two cities as well as the municipalities which lie between have grown at an unprecedented rate.

Mr. Chairman, the unevenness of this growth has resulted in the situation where the Electoral Boundaries Commission was forced to redistribute the boundaries of several ridings throughout the province. The only way to balance this growth would have been to move predominantly rural ridings into one of the major cities. This shift would have been incredibly detrimental to people all over Alberta.

When you have three or four rural municipalities and maybe 14 small urban centres in a constituency, they all, too, would like to have their name in that constituency title, which is impossible throughout the province when you take the diversity of it with the amount of municipalities we all represent.

When you're talking about how many of these municipalities you do represent, especially in a rural constituency such as mine, and the different difficulties that each one is facing at the same time, you're never dealing with the same issue in the whole constituency. You may be dealing with a water system problem in the town of Claresholm. You may at the same time be looking at a waste-water situation in the Crownsnest Pass or even a highway situation in Pincher Creek. You're all over that, and amending the name doesn't help anyone, I think.

As it stands now, many of Alberta's rural ridings are already so large that they are challenging to represent effectively. If the commission was forced to remove a rural riding, it would force these already large ridings to grow and, effectively, remove any idea of having a local representative in the Legislature. Once again, when you get out into the rural ridings, they know the riding name, they know their town may not be a part of it or the former member or anything else, or even a federal member may not have his name in the name, which leads me to believe that we do have some provincial names incorporated but not federal. Appreciating the intent of the amendment, I still say that it's better left federally.

Now, when you look at the idea of having a local representative in the Legislature – it's something, I believe, I have first-hand knowledge of – Livingstone-Macleod was at one time three separate constituencies. After this is adopted, it will be over three and a half former separate constituencies. Because we were able to increase the number of ridings by four, we were able to address the growth of our urban centres while in some cases preserving the size of our already overstretched rural ridings.

Mr. Chairman, I'm proud that the Electoral Boundaries Commission had the ability to effectively recognize this and decided to make the recommendations that they did. Once again, their recommendations and the naming is a difficult thing, but we could amend this forever. I think we have to take into focus that we have given this adequate debate, and it's now time to move it forward. It has been stated in this House that this bill is being passed too quickly. This amendment is being debated. This bill is of importance and to some should have more debate and public input. I would argue, however, that the holders of this position misconstrue the purpose of Bill 28.

This bill is not about setting the electoral boundaries. If that were the case, I would agree that more consultation could be useful. This amendment is not about the boundaries. It's directly about the names. Rather, what we should be debating here is about accepting the electoral boundaries set out by the boundaries commission, accepting the names as we have brought it forward with no further amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the level of public input and debate was far beyond the level we see for most government bills not only in this province but in Canada as a whole. Contrary to the beliefs of a few, the bill overall, even with the amendments, has received much more than six hours of debate. Moreover, it received extensive debate at the local level, and I will say that names were debated. I know the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod was considered to be changed to High River-Macleod at one point. There were many people that came forward and said that that would cause a mix-up, so they went back to Livingstone-Macleod even though they changed the electoral boundaries and added a large part of Turner Valley, Black Diamond, and right up to High River.

People in all of Alberta, throughout the province, who wanted to participate did so either verbally or through written submissions, and there weren't that many directed to names, as this amendment brings. As mentioned, throughout their travels the commission met with stakeholders and community members from every corner. This included people who wanted more urban representation. For a new constituency I don't think names came into it at all. It was just creating the constituency in most cases.

It also included people who were concerned about the size of rural ridings. They, too, wanted to discuss names, but they wanted to keep their name in most cases. The odd one wanted to incorporate the name of a town within that constituency, make it more centric to that. It also included people who wanted to ensure that the traditional voting boundaries were upheld wherever possible. Travel patterns, school districts, the geographical boundaries, that I'd mentioned earlier, and a myriad of other issues were all part of what the deliberations were that the boundaries commission took in.

It was up to the commission to review all of these presentations and submissions and balance them with the proper population figures wherever possible. This, I submit, was a monumental task and one that I do not envy. I sat in on the hearings myself in Lethbridge and listened to the comments from the public, the mayors, the councillors, the rural reeves that came forward, and there I did hear questions on names, but it was keeping them the same, again. I've never heard anything since we started debating this from the public to come forward with any more names than what we discussed earlier.

Mr. Chairman, it's also important to note that this work was done in an impartial and nonpartisan setting. The commission was made up of people appointed by both government and the Official Opposition, and they had a mandate to serve the people of Alberta, not any particular political party. I don't believe that when we look at this amendment, we're looking at it from that position either. We're looking at it strictly on the names.

The commission's objectives were to create an effective electoral boundaries system that serves our needs not only now but into the future, 10 years into the future, until the next commission would be called into service, at which time it would be an opportune time to bring forward a name in advance, and this name may be one to bring forward at the time. But right now I believe Mr. Manning is best left at the federal level, and hopefully his name will be reflected and honoured through a federal riding name.

I also believe that with the shift in demographics, job opportunities, we may well see some of the rural ridings actually shrink geographically next time. That would be quite an accomplishment. If you walk down the members' hallway and look at the pictures, it's amazing when you take into consideration the population, the amount of members. But look at the size of the constituencies at the time. They were quite small, very small, to be exact.

In addition to creating electoral maps that address the needs of today, the commission had to look at the growth trends and figure out where the people were moving to and where the people were moving from. There again, we have this amendment for a name, but that isn't exactly what we need to be looking at. We need to be looking at this bill as it is amended to date. As I mentioned earlier, the seven considerations that the commission needed to address when plotting out the new boundaries were addressed, and those seven did not include any name issue. Now, I'm saying that they had to take all of these considerations and put them in place for not only right now but for the next 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the bill as it has been amended, without this current amendment that's offered, is the culmination of over a year of hard work by the Electoral Boundaries Commission and is indicative of the dedication these individuals put towards addressing their difficult task. Moreover, it is representative of all the submissions made by Albertans to the commission's hearings throughout the province. I don't believe that we need to continue to discuss and debate an amendment on a name change. In passing the bill without the amendment, we will recognize and thank the Electoral Boundaries Commission for their hard work, and we will position Alberta's electoral map for the coming decade.

Now, I would like to thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for offering the amendment. I believe that all of us in this House feel that that name is one that will be honoured in the future if this is the exact venue for that or by a federal riding or, as one other hon. member had mentioned, maybe there's a mountain at some point that becomes that name.

Mr. Lukaszuk: A new mountain?

Mr. Berger: A new mountain, yeah. Well, there are some that aren't named, actually, strangely enough. As well, there are even creeks that aren't named out there.

I want to thank the Electoral Boundaries Commission for all of their efforts. I thank all the Albertans who took time out of their busy lives to present a submission on this important topic.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude my comments on the amendment. I urge all hon. members to support Bill 28 but to not support this amendment as offered. I think we have debated this long enough now. It's time to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I will take my seat to hear the rest of the comments on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Well, it's certainly interesting with this closure of debate that's been brought in by the government how they like to talk and go on and on. The hon. member did a great job of saying he was closing but kept waiting to try and talk the clock out.

It is a fitting name. It's fitting to have it provincial. To say that it's because he served federally is very shallow, in my opinion. He's a true honour to all Albertans, someone that we can be proud of, just as the other names that have come forward. To say that, you know, the three names that came forward were fitting for debate but this one is not is another, I just think, error in judgment in what they're looking at.

Mr. Chair, Bill 28 did not do the best job about looking at the boundaries. I think the hon. housing minister spoke on that, the way his riding was being divided up. In Calgary-Glenmore to take Southwood out and put it across to Acadia doesn't make any sense, or to bring in Lakeview on the north across the reservoir. So I'd have to disagree with the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod in that he's in error in what he's looking at and didn't really look at the whole big picture.

The bottom line is that it's obvious this government and the members of this government have no respect for Preston Manning. I understand that. I'm sure they're going to vote overwhelmingly no, and I sure hope that they prove me wrong on that, Mr. Chair. He's a great provincial elected representative that we should all be proud of.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chair, point of order.

The Chair: A point of order, hon. member. Do you want to address it now?

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) the hon. member is imputing the fact that hon. members on this side of the House disrespect a true Albertan, someone who has spent a lot of time in political life, as have many of my relatives. I think the hon. member should retract that statement because almost every one of the colleagues that spoke said that they truly respected that individual, so for him to say it, it's a lie.

The Chair: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt. The one hour is up, so pursuant to Government Motion 26 agreed to on November 30, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be decided to conclude the debate on Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, in Committee of the Whole, I must put the following questions to conclude debate.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 28 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: You keep demoting me, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Government House Leader. Sorry.

Mr. Hancock: I hope I don't take a commensurate pay cut.

Mr. Chairman – or should I say deputy chairman of committees?

The Chair: Touché.

Mr. Hancock: I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 28.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 28. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

Mr. Denis: I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, we had a very spirited debate in first reading, in second reading, and again just recently in Committee of the Whole on this bill. Indeed, this bill goes to the very fabric of our existence here. We're all elected from a particular constituency to represent the constituents there. Interestingly enough, everyone here was elected under a party banner.

I'd be remiss if I did not mention just a couple of words about my own constituency and the name, which is going to be changed from Calgary-Egmont to Calgary-Acadia.

Years ago, Mr. Speaker, I went and met the former member from my constituency, a gentleman named Denis Herard. He held the constituency from 1993 up until 2008, when I was fortunate enough to take over. I asked him: who was Egmont? Again, I thought it was Edgemont not Egmont. He informed me that, in fact, Calgary-Egmont was named after the Earl of Egmont. I did a little bit of research as to who the Earl of Egmont was, and I'm advised that this individual actually owned a 28-room house on a site at or near what is now known as Southcentre mall, in the south portion of my constituency.

This riding, again, was named after the Earl of Egmont in 1971. I follow three great representatives who represented that area: of course, Merv Leitch, followed by a former Speaker, who used to sit in your chair, Mr. Speaker – his name was David Carter – followed by Denis Herard, former minister of advanced education.

A bit about the Earl of Egmont, to close off his legacy here. The property that this gentleman owned was owned by the Kelwood Corporation, which developed much of what's known now as Fairview in Acadia as well as Willow Park, including the Willow Park golf course, Maple Ridge, and Lake Bonavista, which is slightly outside of the constituency. I've been told that the Earl of Egmont himself actually lived, again, on Macleod Trail and Willow Park Drive S.E. According to the Calgary Herald report, the reporter met a fellow at a house and asked if the earl was around, and the fellow said that he was away. If I recall correctly, this was back several decades ago. So the reporter left, and the man was the earl himself.

My understanding is that there is only one part of this house that still remains, and that's actually the spiral staircase, which is in the Black Swan pub just in the constituency, across Macleod Trail from his home site. That's all that remains of the Earl of Egmont's home. You'd never know that there was a connection. I've actually never been there, and one of my staff this week was telling me I need some more hobbies. Maybe I should go there for a drink.

The earl is part of the history of south Calgary but also the rural south of the city. The great ranches of the Calgary area, including the Burns ranch immediately east of the Egmont ranch as well as the Cross ranch, tend to overshadow some of the characters who make up the history of ranching around Calgary, Mr. Speaker. Granted, this is one of the lesser players, but so were Sam Livingston, John Glenn, John Ware, the first African-American rancher, as well as many others who make up the history of Calgary. It's not without some regret that this name is actually leaving.

I can't say simply that all good things must come to an end. I do support the commission's recommendations to rename the constituency Calgary-Acadia. As I mentioned in many of my earlier speeches, one thing in the modern context of Calgary, there is a northwest community named Edgemont, which I believe is in the constituency of the Member for Calgary-North West. Our offices do get many calls for that. Many people don't know where Egmont actually is, and I do think Acadia reflects the modern reality of the constituency that I have the privilege to represent. A more practical and less romantic form of the name change is, again, that Edgemont is something that is just confused on a regular basis.

I do want to comment as well in third reading on the commission's report, which was tabled in the Assembly in June of this year. On October 26 a resolution was made in this Assembly, and the contents of the report were debated. All of the boundaries recommended in the commission's report were approved by this Assembly, as were the majority of names and electoral divisions.

There were, of course, some changes to the suggested names of electoral divisions. Mr. Speaker, these suggestions were made in order to better reflect the history and the context of these divisions as well as the desires of the constituents. There have been many submissions made. You can go to the website. The website will reflect that people from anywhere from individuals to organizations, community groups, even political parties have made submissions, and I would say parties of all stripes. These suggestions were made in order to again better reflect the history and the character of these divisions.

Some of the changes, again, we've dealt with. The electoral division of Strathcona is now named Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I see the member over there smiling at me. I see the electoral division of Calgary-Montrose is reflected by the name of Calgary-Greenway. Calgary-North Hill is now named Calgary-Klein, as I mentioned earlier. Dunvegan-Central Peace is now Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

I think that the commission has made a good estimation of what the constraints that they have are, mostly dealing with population as well as with density. Canada, in general, Mr. Speaker, is a very difficult country to govern, and Alberta is no different. We have two major centres, obviously Calgary and Edmonton, but the rural areas are important as well. Interestingly enough, my constituency you can drive across in traffic in 20 minutes tops – tops – and that's in gridlock Calgary traffic. I've heard from people, from the Member for Little Bow for example, who represents a very diverse constituency which takes many hours to drive across.

So we have to realize that more than population is at play here. It is important that we have adequate representation in both urban and rural contexts, but in a rural context you are also dealing with the accessibility of your member. That's something that we have to always consider. I bet you that several members from rural Alberta are just really grinning with Cheshire cat grins that a city boy like me would actually go and recognize that, but that definitely is the case as well. I'm happy that the Member for Little Bow actually does enjoy the golf course in my community. I'm sure that there are many in his community as well.

In conclusion, I just want to mention that Bill 28 reflects the commission's report as amended to this Assembly. This act will repeal and replace the existence of some names. Some new boundaries come into effect, again reflecting the changes in demography and population. Further, Bill 28 will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with population and current needs. Bear in mind that everything that we've said here and the commission's actual report will come into play again two elections from now, as the report for the 2004 electoral divisions does come in today.

So I will be supporting this bill. I encourage all members to do the same. I am happy to have been able to take a breath in this speech, but I also want to say, particularly, thanks to Matt Steppan from my office for doing some good work on looking into this bill and the need to have this passed so that we can have a representative democracy in Alberta in the next election and in the election after that, until this is revisited again.

I predict that in two elections, Mr. Speaker, we're going to have a very different discussion, but a lot of the same issues will be brought up. The Electoral Boundaries Commission, I would not want to be a commissioner here because the work that they do is quite incredible for this Assembly, for the people of this province, and I think we really need to have our hats off to the five members.

With that, I would move third reading vote of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak to this in third reading of Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. I was listening to the little historical vignette of Calgary-Egmont by the hon. minister of housing. I came forward that I have been in the Black Swan pub. I have actually been in that pub and had a beverage there, but I didn't really view the staircase that the Earl of Egmont used. It may precipitate another journey out there. I can tell you that this summer when I did go to the Black Swan I was with my new executive assistant, Brendan Wade, who was meeting some friends out there. Although they were a tad younger than me, I was convinced to go along. It was a wonderful adventure out to the hon. member's constituency.

Nevertheless, if we return to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, this bill was not without its controversy. We have added four more MLAs to the payroll here in this Assembly at a time that the coffers of Alberta may not be as full as they once were. With the addition of four more MLAs comes a price tag of roughly $50 million over the course of a four-year legislative term. That is no small price we're paying for the addition of these MLAs. In my view, we could have done this province a great service by resisting the temptation to add these new MLAs, by redrawing the map and sufficing with 83 MLAs. I think it would have allowed us to lead by example in this House by showing some restraint in a time of economic downturn. That, to me, Mr. Speaker, was very disturbing and actually something I was not too fond of when we saw the redrawing of this electoral map.

I'd also like to comment a little bit about the composition of the members on the commission. There's no doubt that these five members worked pretty hard. Two are selected from the government's side, and two are selected from the opposition's side, with one more appointed by, I believe, the Speaker. Nevertheless, everyone knows at the end of the day it's a 3 to 2 split. The redrawing of the map is not without its political considerations.

Mr. Hancock: The chair is a judge.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, I think it's fair enough. The person who got selected to chair the commission is a political appointment. For us not to say that there were political decisions made in the redrawing of the electoral map, in my view, would be ignoring the essence of what the commission was established to do.

On that note, you saw specific things that came back with different areas carved up in different fashions and in some very interesting ways. You saw after the initial draft especially the way Grande Prairie was initially redrawn with more of a city focus. Then to the howls and screams of many it got sent back to the drawing table, and it was redrawn in the fashion that may have been more appropriate to some political considerations. For us to deny that that happened and was happening throughout this process, in my view, would be naive. That is just a comment.

If we look at this going forward, this will set our boundaries for the next two elections. In my view, it also didn't do an adequate job in representing our urban constituents. If we look at the way the map was drawn, clearly one more seat should have gone to an urban constituency. If you look at the actual numbers that were drawn out, the natural constituency for this would have been Calgary. Instead, you saw different aspects. It saw rural Alberta rewarded in a fashion that did not necessarily reflect the population that is currently at play. I understand the arguments of effective representation. This map could have been drawn very easily to recognize the density of our populations in our urban regions and how they have grown significantly. It could have reflected that in a much better fashion.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we have gone up and down with this bill. It appears a fait accompli. My hope would be that in the future this become a less partisan process with maybe an independent panel set up to do this who simply goes by the numbers of where the citizens are and what actually would happen to take out the political considerations and eliminate the weird boundary redrawings and go forward on that note. Nonetheless, I thank you for your time and for allowing me to comment on this for the last time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the government side, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have some comments that I, too, would like to make on this bill, but at this time I would like to call for adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

27. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last of these, I hope, for a long time. Again, we've expended quite a considerable amount of time on electoral boundaries. It's an important bill, no question about that. But the clear indication from the Wildrose is that they wish to stop government business, stop the business of the Legislature, hold things in abeyance, and talk forever on the bills. That was a very clear indication on the record in this House. While I personally and I think every member of this Legislature believes that there should be fulsome debate, complete debate on every bill that comes forward, there is a time and place when one has to say: enough.

So I would move Government Motion 27.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the motion that's just been put on the floor regarding time allocation. I find it quite interesting that time allocation brings out the government members to be very verbose. Actually, they can go on for 20 minutes. Amazing. So in one hour we have the government for 20 minutes, we have the opposition for 20 minutes, and then the government for 20 minutes. Well, you know, that really isn't quite balanced, clearly a way of doing their own little filibuster within their own little time allocation.

It's interesting because we can hardly get a peep out of them during any debates on bills, and especially at 4 o'clock in the morning we hear nothing from them. But, my, time allocation and they're just popping up. Is it fair? No. Is it balanced? No. Is it democratic? Yes. Unfortunately, those are the rules of this House, and these are the rules that we play by on each side of this House.

It's a shame when the opposition has been told by Albertans that they would like to see what they feel is very, very poor legislation go back to the drawing board. I believe that the opposition doesn't stand up and try to filibuster for no reason. There is a reason. They've been told by other Albertans that they don't like the legislation that's coming forward, and it's our job to make sure that we try to persuade the government of the day that they should be listening to us more and that maybe that should go back to the drawing board.

I don't believe it's something that anybody really enjoys, sitting up all night. I know that the first time it happened to me I really was persuaded not to come in with my jammies, my fuzzy slippers, and my hair curlers in my hair. I thought I showed great restraint on that. However, we have had a few evening sessions since, so I realize what happens.

I do believe that by filibustering we are representing Albertans' voices, and I don't think that it should be dismissed as irrelevant. If the government would even give a wiggle on some of the conversations that the opposition does in a filibuster, paid attention, and actually maybe made some movement on that, then I don't believe that time allocation/closure would be necessary.

With those thoughts, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the question on the motion.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 27 carried]

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Chase]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and participate in third reading of Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. There has been a lot of vigorous and good discussion on this bill, and before I offer some of my perspectives, I would just like to take the opportunity to thank all hon. members for their participation in this debate.

I agree with the sentiment, surprisingly, from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that we are going to keep using power in this province. It's an undeniable fact. Albertans expect to be able to enjoy the conveniences of modern life. Mr. Speaker, those conveniences mean things like driving cars, using appliances, heat, plastics, electricity; you name it.

The great majority of all of this is derived from oil, natural gas, and coal. I recognize that in this House there may be differences of opinion relating to whether or not our reliance on this type of energy is a good thing, but the essential truth remains that we will continue to use these fuels well into the foreseeable future. Furthermore, this province is blessed by the fact that it contains some of the most abundant energy resources in the world. That means that Alberta's future is certainly tied to the continuing development of our energy sector.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that any member would dispute this. I am not implying that things will remain the status quo or that we will continue to develop our resources and market them without undue environmental consideration. I recognize that there is a global movement towards implementing green technologies and conservation into the energy mix. The world needs energy, but the question of what type of energy the world will use is a continually evolving concept. For now it would appear that while the global appetite for energy is ever-increasing, so, too, is the demand that the energy we use also become cleaner. The pursuit of carbon capture and sequestration technology is a part of our government's response to both demands. Alberta's future as a global energy provider is linked to its ability to create clean energy.

Mr. Speaker, on that note, I would also like to add that Alberta's two largest universities are also becoming hubs of expertise in this technology. In August the University of Alberta announced its reservoir experimental facility, also known as GeoREF. This facility will also allow for testing of carbon capture and storage and apply recovery techniques to unconventional resources. This facility is expected to open in June 2011 and will be one more reason for students to look to Alberta for postsecondary education.

The University of Calgary's Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy is also a key player in CCS research and education. The CCS research group has a number of projects on the go, including analyzing the costs of CCS and looking at legal and regulatory issues required to move large-scale projects forward. Obviously, there is a tremendous demand for CCS education, and Alberta is offering students and the world the opportunity to be on the rising curve of this technology.

Mr. Speaker, this government accepts that climate change is an issue. It accepts that the energy sector is vital to Alberta's future. It accepts that this province has a broad portfolio of energy resources that all have a role to play in our energy mix, and it sees carbon capture and storage technology as playing a huge role in both clean energy production and enhanced oil recovery. I would also add that regardless of where some members in the House stand with respect to the issue of climate debate, this global shift towards clean energy is undeniable.

Alberta needs to work in partnership with other jurisdictions, and the energy sector needs to continue to adapt with changing global realities. While there are some who would glean short-sighted satisfaction in taking a combative stance, any Alberta government that would actively deny the world's climate issues would risk isolating the province from its global partnerships and ensuring that Alberta's energy industry becomes obsolete. Any approach that would see Alberta address climate issues by relying on one or two principle energy resources is equally narrowly sighted and ignores historical precedent to the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, turning to some of the specifics of Bill 24, this proposed legislation is an important piece of the puzzle required to implement carbon capture and storage. Bill 24 makes clear that the government would assume the long-term liability for carbon capture and storage, and it provides clarity to industry with respect to the issues surrounding access to underground CO₂ storage. Some of the opposition I've heard on this bill relates to the issue of liability, and I would really like to take a moment to address that. The liability of carbon capture and storage projects is one of the more obvious impediments to the development of this technology. One of the reasons for this is because carbon capture and storage is a long-term, indeed, permanent concept, not a short-term one.

Within a long-term time frame projection for a carbon capture and storage project it is entirely feasible that some industry operators would evolve into other entities or may even cease to exist. That being the case, government is realistically the only entity with the capacity and durability to assume this liability. It should be mentioned that this liability will not be entered into lightly but will be contingent upon strict conditions related to the issuance of a closure certificate. Mr. Speaker, any potential lessee would be required to comply with all closure criteria and site monitoring prior to receiving their certificate.

In addition, government's ability to monitor closed project sites will be facilitated by the postclosure stewardship fund. My understanding is that the fund would be established through costs covered by an industry-generated levy collected during the operational phase of a carbon capture and storage project. It will be a key element in ensuring that the means to deal with any postclosure issues for a given project will be able to be addressed, and it adds additional security to government's assumption of liability.

Mr. Speaker, I'm treading on familiar ground that my colleagues have addressed, but I want to reiterate that I do not see this as assuming unnecessary risk. It is part of the package required for the deployment of carbon capture and storage technology. In fact, liability currently remains the biggest question mark for industry. By assuming it, government is ensuring that these technologies are allowed to move forward.

I also recall earlier in our discussions on this issue that an hon. member raised some questions regarding Joffre, and I would like to make a comment. I believe this was a reference to the enhanced oil recovery project in the Joffre-Viking field east of Red Deer, a project which began in 1984 and as of 2009 has stored approximately 1 million tonnes of CO₂ over the past 25 years. Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that 25 years is a long time. We obviously have experience and familiarity with this technology. It is not new or unknown.

Incidentally, other jurisdictions have also been pursuing similar projects. Case in point: the United States has over 90 enhanced oil recovery projects in operation. Most of these are based in the basin west of Texas, and others are found in Wyoming and Mississippi. In fact, CO₂ enhanced oil recovery makes up approximately 37 per cent of all U.S. enhanced oil recovery operations, and that number is expected to grow. I would suggest that many operators are comfortable with this technology.

In addition to the countries I visited in Europe earlier in the year and the U.K. and Norway, today I also met with His Excellency the Japanese Ambassador. He brought up the fact that Japan is also very interested in what Alberta and Canada are doing with regard to carbon capture and storage.

Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude by saying that I recognize that carbon capture and storage technologies are not the singular answer to a clean energy future and climate change. I do however believe that it definitely has a key part in a secure future for Alberta as a global energy supplier. It is also uniquely suited to our province in the sense that it creates further opportunities to better develop our conventional reserves through enhanced oil recovery. I know communities like mine in the Pembina cardium field certainly look forward to opportunities that would exist with enhanced oil recovery.

Members, I would encourage all of you to support this bill as I think it will make great progress for our province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it is in order, I would move to adjourn debate on this bill so that we can proceed with Bill 28 very briefly and that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona might be able to make comments on Bill 28 at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28

Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to members of the Assembly for allowing me an opportunity to get up and speak on this issue. While in Committee of the Whole this House passed an amendment to this act, Bill 28, to rename the riding of Dunvegan-Central Peace to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. As members know, I was not in the House when that vote was taken, as I believed it was more appropriate to recuse myself for that particular decision.

As well, members may also know that I spoke out in opposition to the renaming of the riding to Calgary-Klein, so I have to say that in considering coming forward to speak positively about the change with respect to Dunvegan-Central Peace, I was somewhat conflicted because it appears somewhat hypocritical on the face of it. Nonetheless, I concluded after considering it that it was such an important honour that I thought that the decision of the House warranted comment.

On behalf of my family, my brothers Paul and Stephen, my uncle Bruce Notley, my children Ethan and Sophie, I'd like to offer my sincere thanks to my colleagues in this Legislature for the honour bestowed upon my father in his memory. You should see me at a grade 6 graduation. It's much like this, actually.

Dad's first commitment was to the NDP. He was present when the party was formed. He ran as a candidate in the first election after the party was formed. He left law school to take on the role of provincial secretary when he was 23 or 24. He was elected leader of the party at the age of 28, and after finishing in fourth place in the area of Edson-Hinton, he was elected by the people of Spirit River-Fairview in 1971 at the ripe old age of 32.

My mom and my dad met when my mom started volunteering for the NDP. She finally attracted his attention when she made a deal with him. She would find candidates in Calgary at the last minute if he would take her out on a date. She did, so he did, and the rest was history.

I first met my dad a month after I was born. He'd been in Saskatchewan managing an election campaign for the NDP at the time. When my first brother was born, it only took a week for my dad to make it back from his political assignment. By the time my youngest brother was born, his time management skills, along with my mother's growing annoyance on this issue, had grown to the point where he was actually there for the big event.

My father's commitment to the NDP came from his passionate belief that the values and the policies of the party, simply put, would help the greatest number of Albertans the greatest. He was concerned about our environment and the future of environmental protection in the face of oil and gas development. He believed that Albertans needed to share in the wealth created by our resources, the resources Albertans owned. He actually wanted to see Alberta develop an equity interest in the oil sands, a decision that, had we made it at the time, would see Alberta's wealth from its oil and gas resources far exceed that of Norway or any other oil-producing jurisdiction in the world, rather than falling as far behind as we have.

He cared deeply for our system of public health, and he fought against the introduction of user fees and advocated for greater care for our seniors and for a provincially run pharmacare system. He advocated passionately for the interests of Alberta's most disadvantaged. Indeed, the day before his untimely death he had pressed the government on their treatment of a young indigenous youth who had committed suicide after years in foster care.

As much as the NDP tends to be seen as an urban party, my father was a tireless advocate for the residents of rural Alberta. Having grown up on a dairy farm just west of Olds, he made repeated calls for the government to support the family farm and its long-term sustainability.

Throughout his career in this Legislature my father either sat alone in opposition or, at the very apex of his career, when he served as Leader of the Official Opposition, he benefited from the Herculean efforts of his caucus of one. Speaking entirely objectively, I can say that one-person caucuses can be surprisingly talented.

Although the profound imbalance between government and opposition during my father's time in this Assembly created an almost folk hero-like image, I know that my father believed deeply that a more even balance between parties would have improved public policy substantially. I think it is only after the fact that we learned how effectively he was able to fill the role of an opposition 20 times his size to bring about moderation and increased thoughtfulness in the agenda of the government at the time. I believe there is a strong consensus that part of the reason he was able to achieve that was through his respect for this Assembly and his remarkable work ethic.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take just a bit of a moment to provide a slightly more informal picture of my father. People sometimes mistakenly associate the NDP with the notion of overspending. As we pointed out recently, a review of spending histories shows that NDP governments have actually balanced their budgets more often than any other political party in Canada over the course of the last 25 years. I think it's fair to say that had my father ever been elected Premier, he would have increased those numbers substantially.

On a personal level, his reputation for being tight with his money was legendary. There are copious stories about this particular personality trait of my father. However, I will share one with members of this Assembly, who may find, in addition to their shared history with my father on the basis of sitting as elected representatives in this Assembly, one other common cause with him. In particular, what I refer to is the likely level of annoyance experienced by government members opposite when they are forced to listen to me argue for more money for a worthwhile program in as public a forum as possible.

What happened was that I was going to college in Grande Prairie, and my father was travelling across the province doing public hearings on the issue of poverty. He went up to Grande Prairie. He was at the Grand Prairie motor inn, and I believe there were about 50 people there. It was sort of a hearing format, and everybody took turns talking about how their lack of money was creating hardship in their lives. He dutifully took notes, and the media was there, and it was a good event.

As the event was ending and people were just starting to file out, though, I stood up in the back row and said quite openly so everyone could hear: "Mr. Notley, I have a question. My father makes too much money, and I can't qualify for a student loan. We're into the third week of the month, and I don't have enough money to buy groceries, and I only have Premium crackers left in my cupboard. What should I do?" The staff who were with him at the time, both of whom ultimately ended up becoming members of this Assembly, Tom Sigurdson and Pam Barrett, pretty much fell over laughing. But my father, very concerned that the media was there, quickly rushed me out of the room in order to deal with my very public request at the time. Probably the thing that goes most to the heart of that particular characteristic of my father was that, bearing in mind that I'd just described how I only had Premium crackers left in my cupboard for the rest of the week, he pulled out a $10 bill and gave it to me and said: "That should do it. Out with you." You can trust me. Had he become Premier, there would be no deficit right now.

I suspect that the members opposite could easily find that much in common with my dad. When they start to feel a bit irritated with my opposition efforts, it's arguable they come by that sentiment honestly, as did I when it comes to my origin of my advocacy tactics.

Joking aside, I want to emphasize how important the Peace Country was to my father. After spending usually two weeks away somewhere else in the province carrying the weight of provincial opposition on his shoulders, he would come home, meet with constituents, and then relax for an afternoon in our home overlooking the Peace River. Dad would walk for hours around the Peace River hills on the side of the valley, thinking through policies and composing speeches, followed loyally by our pony, Billy, who seemed to think he was more of a dog than a horse. In short, although my father's reputation was established across the province, his heart had taken root in the Peace Country just up the road from Dunvegan.

I would like to thank the many residents of the Peace Country and from across the province who sent letters to the boundaries commission in support of renaming Dunvegan-Central Peace after my father. I would especially like to thank Mandy Melnyk for her energetic campaigning on this issue as well as Eileen Coristine, Betty McArthur, and the Macklin family.

Once again, to my colleagues, I personally appreciate the recognition accorded to my father through the amendment included in this bill. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Currie and also to all members who rose to speak in favour of this motion. I read their comments, and I very much appreciate them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a beautiful note for us to end the afternoon on, and I would therefore request the permission of the House to adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:31 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Chase]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this potentially final opportunity to speak on Bill 24.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, can you pause a moment? We've checked the record. Have you spoken? You must have. Yes. On the record.

Mr. Chase: You know what? I think I actually adjourned it yesterday. You're correct, Mr. Speaker. You can't fool the Speaker. Okay. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: According to the record the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity adjourned debate, and the hon. member for Drayton Valley spoke after him, so his turn has been taken.

From the opposition the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on Bill 24.

Mr. Hinman: On the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to get up and speak to this as there have been many frustrated opposition MLAs who haven't been able to speak on the different bills as you brought closure to them, seeing as how the government has been able to filibuster and use most of the time on this closure. They said that they refused to speak through the night, yet when they invoke closure, they immediately jump up and use the time. It's been disappointing. As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, it certainly doesn't seem right.

Anyway, CO₂. Bill 24 perhaps could be one of the most expensive bills that we're going to pass here outside of Bill 17, the health care act. The number one question that, I guess, as elected representatives we need to ask is: are we spending our money wisely? Number two is: are we actually protecting the environment and being able to pass on the beautiful province to our next generation, not only environmentally but fiscally as well? I would have to say that on both those questions this bill fails the test. Environmentally there are so many other areas where we could and should be pointing that kind of money if we're really trying to look at protecting our environment and going forward in the future.

You know, in the 2008 election, when I was discussing it with the Premier and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, one of the companies that I talked about was E-T Energy, quite the innovative private company. I was able to go up to Fort McMurray earlier this year and actually have a visual of it from the air. It's a very small bit of area. The CEO has spent over 20 years, Bruce McGee, trying to develop this, and what he says on the bitumen up there: we are the lowest cost producers out there and holder of the industry's most environmentally friendly technology.

This is the type of innovation that the Governor General talked about that Albertans are capable of if we ensure that we have a level playing field and if we put in the proper rules and regulations that direct that innovation to know that they're going to have that opportunity. They use electricity to heat the ground and extract the oil, and other than the fuel used to create the electricity, there are no more incremental gases after that point as they extract the oil from the bitumen. It's quite an innovative and exciting area.

I know that the University of Calgary has been working on bioenzymes.

My point, Mr. Speaker, that I want to bring up on this and why it's so important to realize these things is that, you know, if you actually put the proper regulations in place or have the proper vision on where we want to go, there are such great opportunities going forward.

Back in 2000, when the government had an opportunity, there was not near the interest in the oil sands. That was the time to set the regulations and even perhaps say: "You know what? We want to see some new innovative technologies that don't use SAGD or settling ponds." The people were out there moving and trying to develop that, but because we didn't put the proper regulations in on water use, consumption, and other areas, it was full steam ahead, no pun intended. The SAGD projects continued to come forward because that was the best at the time and the quickest way to extract it. Their growth was quite alarming to many environmentalists and those people that were against the oil sands to begin with.

When we look at CO₂ and the controversial question of whether or not this is the best way to spend taxpayers' money and the most environmental, economical, and clean way to go forward, I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that the answer is no on these areas. Just the extra energy that we're going to need to generate purely to compress and pipe and then pump down into the ground is 25 to 30 per cent. Many people talk about the energy shortage and the fact, you know, that we have this dilemma. Then why would we increase our consumption by such a huge amount when there are so many other ways to look at reducing it?

I've spoken many times about the importance of going to low-carbon fuels, and of course the lowest and the cleanest fuel is natural gas, or methane, a one carbon fuel. There's no reason why we can't look and ensure that we can point in that direction. I think Ronald Reagan coined it best: tax more what you want less of and less what you want more of. We can look at that. It's one thing to put a higher tax on high-carbon fuels, a lower tax on low-carbon fuels, if that's the direction we want to go.

You know, it's been a few years since I've checked the stats, but I believe there are 10 million litres of propane that are extracted and sold in the province here. That's more than enough to run our vehicles and our industry on. Natural gas, with the new technology and fracking: we've gone from what we thought was depleting in, you know, five years, 15 years at the height in July 2008 to where we're now talking 100 years again of this clean fuel.

What is the tax structure setup and what are the incentives on where we should be going on this? This CO₂ bill doesn't address that. It doesn't create a level playing field and allow the entrepreneur to get ahead by being what I want to call economically smart with their investment dollars. What this is doing is actually creating a surge in spending, and people wanting to trace and get after that say: well, if we could get, you know, 20 per cent or 30 per cent of our project paid for by the government, then this is a great way to move ahead.

These are all areas of concern, Mr. Speaker, on why Bill 24 should not be passed at this time. You know, the Government House Leader has said that we've talked at great length to this. He says that we're filibustering and wasting our time here and that we need to put in time allocations when these bills have barely scratched the surface. If we were really serious about a democratic process and serious about the future of Alberta, this is the type of bill that should be going to a committee.

It astounded me that this government saw the wisdom in withdrawing Bill 29 and saying: "You know what? We need to consult with Albertans. We need to do a little bit more. We haven't done a good enough job." Well, Bill 24 fits in that same category, and there would be nothing that would please me more than the government's Energy minister getting up and saying: you know, maybe we don't have this right. We don't need to pass this bill this evening or tomorrow in order for business to carry on in the province.

That's the other striking problem with all of these bills: Bill 17, Bill 24, Bill 26. They've brought them forward in this short session of the fall sitting and said that we need to ram these through like there's a forest fire, and we couldn't put up a plane unless we passed legislation to say: well, it's okay to go fight it. Business would carry on. It would actually carry on probably in a more sensible nature if we didn't pass this bill. But when this bill gets passed, what the government has done is say that we're going to spend money on this area because this is the technology, this is the direction, this is the hope for the future on CO₂ storage.

I would argue, just as I did with the new royalty framework, that it's going to cost us a lot. The longer it takes us to realize this, the more it's going to cost Albertans and the Alberta taxpayers before we back out and say: "You know what? Let's just have a level playing field."

If, in fact, there are companies like EnCana that want to run an enhanced oil system and set it up, let them do it. Let's go back to what worked so well with the development of the oil sands, and that was an accelerated capital cost allowance. They looked at it. I've forgotten the bill, whether it's under section 41 under the mining act. What they did is they incorporated the mining in Fort McMurray under the mining act rather than under oil and gas, and that changed the whole dynamics of all of a sudden becoming economically viable. We should be looking at that and new technology of being able to have all of those same breaks if, in fact, they could come up with some new ideas.

Like I say, E-T Energy is very exciting in the development that they've got there. There's some research that's gone on for some time at the U of C on bioenzymes and being able to actually inject enzymes that would release the bitumen from the sand that, again, is very clean. The toe-to-heel air injection has been developed. Again, there's a huge leap forward in new ideas on how we can continue to extract and use our energy here but in a very – what would I say? – enhanced environmental way. This is a huge step forward than what we've been doing with SAGD and with the actual mining and extraction that goes on there in the tailings ponds. Yet Bill 24 doesn't address any new, innovative ideas on what we're going to do here in the province.

One of the other problems, though, Mr. Speaker – and I've spoken on this several times, but I feel it's important to mention here at the last time being able to address this – is what we're actually doing with the pore space in the ground. With the province stepping in and saying that we now are declaring ownership on all of this area, we truly are infringing on property rights and, again, passing on that liability to the property owners rather than going through negotiations and being able to stop it, like they've done in several European countries at this point. They talk about Australia, Germany, and these areas that are doing it, but again if you look at the ripple effect, there are many areas also where they're stopping it because they're looking at the risk and realizing that: oh, there are some consequences here that we haven't looked at.

The liability, of course, is the big one, and I do hope that the government is right on this, that we don't see it coming down the road where it becomes a liability. We have so many gas and service stations where we've spent millions and millions of dollars because the owners have moved on, and this CO₂ is going to last a lot longer than the companies that put it down there.

It's interesting. I didn't have time to finish looking up the stats, because I wanted to do that, but I think that there are only, like, 17 companies that are still on the Dow after 100 years. We're talking of 100 years as a start point on storing this CO₂. I've referred to the article in The Economist where they figure that in 100 years 63 per cent of the CO₂ will escape at a rate of just 1 per cent per year out of the ground. To think that we've spent all this money and all this infrastructure on a temporary program for 63 to 100 years, it just really concerns me. Why this government would be so anxious to say, "This is where we're leading in the world; we're leading in CO₂ storage" – again, it's kind of misleading. We talk so much about CO₂ storage and so little about enhanced oil recovery.

This government has talked about, you know, that this $2 billion is going to be leveraged out to $25 billion. I have to question that. If we kept that $2 billion and put it in another area, what would we have? Fifty billion dollars? A hundred billion dollars? I just really have a problem when the government says, "Oh, this is a great business to invest in" and then puts the taxpayers' money in there. Whether you call it a Swan Hills debacle or a magnesium plant that just has a spark at the start, and then if you don't have your fire going, it's too late.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, fails to address the real problem. This is feel-good, put a bandage on it rather than actually curing the problem. Like I say, I'm disappointed that the government has refused to look into this or to, actually, you know, like we can do in committee, bring in some experts. Probably the most important thing that we could and should do is to have a world-class symposium, bring in the experts, and say, "What are the solutions? What are the problems? Do we really have the scientific information?" and not just take it from one source. Let's have peer review, and let's have the other side, the pros and the cons, who are against it.

I've spoken many times about – I don't know what the proper word is – the CO₂ conspiracy that's gone on. I mean, everything from the hockey stick, that a Canadian was the one who discovered that – you know what? This has not passed the test. The government or the courts in England were the first to strike it down when it actually came to court and had to have a decision on the actual facts. So with all of the things that have happened with global warming – the papers that went out but were never properly peer reviewed, the hysteria, the fearmongering that went on – we've made a knee-jerk reaction in saying that this is what we need to do, that this is where we need to spend billions of dollars to store this CO₂.

Mr. Speaker, the answers are not there. We're passing the bill here without the proper information, without the due diligence, without the consultation of experts, and all of those other ones that are out there, and this bill should be withdrawn by the government for the people of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: We have under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. You've pointed out examples of failure: the plant up north that was supposed to get rid of toxic waste; you talked about MagCan. Do you believe that the potential waste of taxpayers' dollars, as you see it, will go far beyond the $2 billion initial investment? Have you concern about the cost of keeping the CO₂ sequestered and the liability associated with it?

Mr. Hinman: I really appreciate the question, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. This is the problem. This, I believe, is going to be the biggest boondoggle that this province has ever supported. Once it's put in there, absolutely; I mean, there's no question. Yes, they say that for one, two, maybe three decades we're going to claim that these companies are accountable for it. You've spoken many times about the orphan wells, that the funding isn't there to really cover those, so the taxpayers need to cover this. This is a real concern on pushing these projects ahead, incentivizing them the way we have without really having those answers on the costs, the liabilities, the environmental damages that could happen. I just do not believe it's worth the risk. Again, like I say, if the risk is that the CO₂ is raising the Earth's temperature, then there are so many other areas.

Again, when you look at changing a coal-fired plant to a combined-cycle natural gas plant, I believe that it's a 40 per cent reduction in CO₂. Like I say, if we want to be innovative and look at those things, there are so many areas where we could and should direct this money, whether it's, you know, to put it into research and development of other ideas or to give tax incentives for people who can come up with an idea. The question is: is there a better place to spend this money? I truly believe there is.

The second question is that if we're going to spend that money, let's do it on actual research, on a real symposium where we bring the best of the world here, to Alberta, and say: what are we going to do about it? I mean, the government just spent $25 million to create prion research here in Edmonton. It's leading the world in the research to actually come up with solutions for misfolding proteins, whether that's Alzheimer's, BSE, chronic wasting disease. That's what we should be doing: looking for some real research to solve this. Instead, what we're doing is saying, "Oh, let's stuff this into the closet; let's put this into the ground." Then we can say that all is well when nothing has been solved. How are we going to reduce and be more energy efficient when, as I say, immediately we raise the consumption of energy by 25 to 30 per cent? There are just so many areas.

Hon. member, I appreciate the question. I think that it's a real concern. The liability and the cost are things that we should be addressing and not simply saying: oh, we've got to ram ahead; we've got to do this because the world is looking at us. The tailings ponds are what they're looking at. It's not the CO₂. It's the tailings ponds if it's the bitumen and the area. It's the number of cars that we're driving on gasoline and diesel. Could we and should we be changing it to propane and methane, compressed natural gas? There are so many more exciting areas that we could be addressing, but we're failing to do that.

I hope that answers your question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In terms of all the vehicle emissions, then, we have the belching from our coal-fired generation plants, which produce considerably more CO₂ than what is currently being produced.

Do you have concerns about the government being back in the business of being in business, and do you believe that the companies producing the CO₂ should be required to have matching funds? The people of Alberta have laid out $2 billion. What are the expectations for companies, in your mind?

Mr. Hinman: Another excellent question. Those other companies are matching or actually putting more money forward, I've been told. I'm not sure, though, if they're spending the government's money first and then theirs. But that's a real concern. Again, I've had so many people inundate my office with the connections of these companies, North West Upgrading, with this government and saying: why did they get this? I mean, what are the merits? That's another whole area on those 50 companies. Why did the government just pick four? If they had a tax incentive where they'd say, you know, "You get to keep your royalty," like they did with the bitumen, "at 1 per cent or 3 per cent until you pay out," it would be very different than actually giving them the money.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to, I guess, give my final argument on this bill. It's always nice to have an opportunity to give the final argument on a bill. I didn't have an opportunity on Bill 17 but will do so now with Bill 24. Actually, on Bill 17 I only had a chance to speak on the amendment, not on the actual bill. But I do now for Bill 24, and I'm thankful for that.

I have many issues with Bill 24. One of the biggest issues I have is with what was mentioned earlier, the government getting back into the business of being in business. Although the bill is about liability with regard to the CCS project, the whole concept of CCS and this idea that government is going to be giving some of the largest corporations in Alberta $2 billion in grants over however many years to pump CO₂ into the ground is a shameful abuse of taxpayers' money. Of course, they like to say, "Oh, we'll make royalties off the use of carbon capture and storage as it's used for enhanced oil recovery." Well, you know, that's a logic I would expect to hear from the two members behind me. It's a logic that says that government should somehow be in the business – well, I mean, we may as well just have a state-run oil company or something like that if we're going to do that. If what we're going to do is say, "Look, we're going to start funding businesses so that we can get more royalties," then why wouldn't we just take over the businesses entirely and just get all the profits.

The reason is because in Alberta we've taken a different approach. I think it's a business-friendly approach, and it's a better approach up until this point, with some exceptions along the way, that government should not be in the business of being in business. Where to place capital, what technology to use to get oil out of the ground, when that capital should be distributed or utilized or invested and when it is not to be invested, when it's a wait-and-see approach, et cetera: all those decisions need to be made and should be made by businesses, not by government. To invest $2 billion in this technology or in this initiative is to go back on that principle.

We've said many times that this government over the last several years has progressively become more of a left-of-centre party, a party that believes more in government intervention, in the government funding projects, funding corporations, grants to corporations, and grants to specific businesses instead of what a conservative, right-of-centre, free-market government would believe in, which is leveling the playing field for all businesses so they're playing on the same playing field so that the best, the cream of the crop, rises to the top and the businesses that are not any good fail and fail for good reason. That's what free-market principles are about.

When you pick winners and losers, like this government is doing, when you manipulate and you interfere in the marketplace, like this government has done with this bill with CCS and with other projects – you know, we hear all the announcements for all the corporations that have been given handouts by this government – it's just ridiculous. This government should be looking at: "How do we make the playing field for businesses more competitive? How do we do that?" If we're interested in doing so, what we should be looking at is our tax rates. We should be looking at accelerated capital cost allowances, which would arrive at the same policy objective if it is to cut greenhouse gas emissions. Well, why not? If you want people to invest in massive pieces of equipment, large pieces of equipment, then why wouldn't you implement tax incentives for all of industry to use? That would make it more tax advantageous and more profitable to buy new equipment to be used, say, in CCS.

But they don't do that. No. They pick winners and losers. They say: we're going to spend $2 billion, and we're going to pick who we give it to. It's a very left-wing, socialist mentality, and it goes against the principles that this province, I think, has been founded on, which is that we are supposed to be and we like to call ourselves a meritocracy. A meritocracy is one in which the playing field is kept level, and the best businesses, the best entrepreneurs, the best ideas succeed on their own merits, not because government has interfered and has invested money in their specific business because they happen to have the best lobbyists.

I was in government for two years. I know what it's like to be lobbied by these corporate interests. You know what? They can come up with some very compelling arguments as to why they should have money invested in their particular project or company. Very compelling. It's not a slippery slope. There is no slope. It's a straight-down cliff. Once you cross that line and you decide, you know, that we're going to pick winners and losers, you're automatically disadvantaging one business over another. You're automatically interfering in the marketplace, and it's wrong. It's not the way to go. That's just on the $2 billion invested in this piece.

Now, the next piece that I disagree with on this is the priorities. Not only are we in the business of being in business by doing this; we also have decided that this $2 billion is more important over however many years it is. Maybe it's 10 years it's going to be spent over; I don't know. It's unclear to this point. But we're also spending this money, and meanwhile we've got other needs that I believe and I think Albertans believe are far more important.

We have a deficit, a cash shortfall, of $7.7 billion. Part of that $2 billion should be apportioned to that to at least decrease the amount of our deficit and debt and lack of sustainability fund that we're going to be leaving to our kids because we can't control our spending right now. There's one example. How about schools? We still have a school infrastructure shortage. Shouldn't part of that $2 billion – obviously, not all of it but certainly a portion of it, even just $100 million or $200 million of it – be invested over that 10 years in new schools? That's more important to Albertans. How about more health care staff? Certainly not all $2 billion is needed, but isn't it better served there, where we have an emergency room crisis, where we have a family doctor shortage? Yeah.

It's about priorities, and this is just simply not a priority for Albertans. They say that we need to do it because our customers in the United States need it. They demand it. They demand that we have the CCS. They demand to see that we're becoming more green. Well, good grief. There has been a total rejection of that thought process, of that principle in the last election down in the United States. That type of socialist mentality, the greenwashing that was going on down there: that agenda was rejected out of hand. Now even Democrats down there are rejecting cap and trade and any of this green agenda that's going on with regard to massive wealth transfers and spending massive amounts of money on government-sponsored pet projects to artificially reduce greenhouse gases. That's been rejected.

Now people are saying: if we're going to go green, let's do it smart. Let's invest in things like mass transit. Let's invest in things like tax incentives to promote green retrofits and things like that. Let's do practical things that are actually going to help people in practical ways rather than pouring money into what they believe is a sinkhole and literally in this case is, essentially, a big hole in the ground. It's priorities. It is such a waste of money to do what we're doing in this regard, and I don't think Albertans will stand for it.

I don't think that this bill will do anything because I think at the end of the day this agenda will also be rejected by the people of Alberta. They will say: we do not want to spend money on this. And guess what? When the government pulls the plug on this CCS project down the road, whether it's a PC government or a Wildrose government or some other government, when that plug gets pulled because the people of Alberta demand it, $100 million or $200 million or $1 billion or however much has been spent will have been spent for no reason. A total waste of money: that is what will happen. I guarantee it. You heard it today. Five years from now we will look back and say: we wasted $500 million; oops. That's what it's going to be. There will be no fruits shown for doing this.

Now, that's not to say that CCS as a technology is not a good thing. It can be used for good purposes. It can be used for enhanced oil recovery, and when it's economically feasible to do so, corporations should spend their own money, make their own investments in using it for enhanced oil recovery, not put out their hands and get massive subsidies from the government of Alberta. That is not appropriate. It goes against everything that I thought Albertans and the Progressive Conservatives, at least three to four years ago, stood for. Ralph Klein: we're getting out of the business of being in business. And they did so. Well, yeah. Apparently it didn't happen, or it was forgotten in 2006, when new management came in.

The point is that on a go-forward basis I ask and urge the government to please quit pouring more money into corporations with grants. These are nothing but vote-buying schemes. They've got to stop. We don't need to be investing money in companies. It's got to stop. I think that the quicker we do that in Alberta, the quicker we will be able to balance our budget, the quicker we will be able to realize that we should be focusing our monies on leveling the playing field and creating an economic climate where all companies with good ideas can come and invest.

There might be a company out there that would have invested this money in CCS by themselves, but perhaps they won't now because their competitors, another big company in Alberta, have a hundred million dollar head start on them on the technology. Perhaps they won't invest in it anymore. When you interfere with the market, that's what happens, especially interfering in a way that is unnecessary, in a way that pits businesses against one another, in a way that picks winners and losers. It's a totally inappropriate, completely inappropriate, use of taxpayer funds.

For that reason and for the other reasons stated here tonight, I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. member, for your speech. I would just like to ask whether the hon.

member believes that climate change or global warming is, in fact, caused by human activity and what he feels about books such as The Deniers by Lawrence Solomon. I know the hon. member is incredibly passionate when he speaks about this area, so I would just like some context about what he thinks about human actions causing climate change.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Well, I appreciate the question. We talked about this a little bit during the all-night session that we had. I made it very clear. We have a very large diversity of opinion in our caucus on that. We have free votes, and we vote according to the way we feel. I know that one of our members doesn't feel that global warming is in any way caused, materially anyway, by man-made emissions.

Personally, my view is this: I think that global warming is occurring. I think that man is contributing to it through their emissions. I think that it has been significantly overblown. I think it has been significantly exaggerated, and I believe that's the vast majority of public opinion that's there. I think that we need to cut our greenhouse gas emissions, but I think that we need to do so in a way that is practical, that is going to result in utility for average people. Things like mass transit would be an example of doing it in ways that are going to decrease pollutants like NO_x and SO_x and different particulates, et cetera.

These are the things that I think we should be focusing on: retrofits for solar panels to make our houses more energy efficient, things that are actually going to make us more efficient, not random sinkholes like pumping CO₂ into the ground, which I don't think is going to do anything to solve our problems because it gives no utility to anybody. It's not advantageous to any Albertan. Not only that, but the money could be spent so much better on projects that would actually help workers to get to their jobs faster, help people to have lower utility bills, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. If I was going to spend $2 billion on environmental initiatives, that's where I would put it.

Now, of course, I don't think the people of Alberta want us to put it there right now. I think they want us to balance our budget, I think they want to make sure we have the right amount of schools, and I think they want our emergency rooms to work. That's where I think it needs to be put.

With regard to global warming, I think that if you look at the new report from the Royal Society in the United Kingdom, they do an excellent job of putting together a list of things in the global warming scientific field that are settled, things that are still being debated – there's some agreement, but generally it's still being debated – and then things that are unsettled entirely. Great report. Every member should read it.

That's not to say that they're infallible, that they're completely correct and that no other scientist has an argument. The fact of the matter is that there is no doubt that even the IPCC themselves and the Royal Society say that global warming over the next 100 years will be anywhere from 1.4 degrees to 7 degrees. Well, that is quite a difference. They don't know how much effect the sunspots are having and cloud cover and a whole bunch of other things that have really kind of thrown the doors to questioning open.

Hon. member, in answer to your question I do believe that the Earth is warming. I do believe that man is a contributing cause to that warming. I do think that that contributing cause has been greatly exaggerated and that governments have way overstepped their bounds, way overspent, and have made some very poor economic and social decisions that are going to have ramifications for years to come.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have zero seconds.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on the bill.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to join the debate on third reading of Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. As mentioned in second reading debate and Committee of the Whole, Bill 24 creates the regulatory clarity that is needed for Alberta to pursue carbon capture and storage technology. Specifically, this bill will allow the province to accept long-term liability for the carbon dioxide injected into the ground.

In addition, this act would establish a fund to pay for the ongoing costs of monitoring carbon capture projects. It is important to note that this fund would also cover the costs of any remediation of the CCS project if required. In addition, this fund will not be financed by the Alberta taxpayer but, rather, from the carbon capture and storage operators themselves. This legislation is needed to allow us to aggressively move forward with our carbon reduction strategy.

As members of this House know, in 2008 this government committed $2 billion towards the development and implementation of carbon capture and storage technology. Of this, $440 million was slated to be spent over the next two years. Mr. Speaker, this is a long-sighted investment, and it has helped to place Alberta in the global forefront of carbon capture and storage development. It demonstrates to the world that Alberta is committed to reducing its carbon footprint. Moreover, Alberta is committed to developing technology that could be utilized all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the oil sands are not the largest source of carbon dioxide in the world even though many groups would state otherwise. Rather, the bulk of carbon dioxide emissions come from the generation of electricity, specifically through the burning of coal. Coal is cheap, plentiful, and reliable. However, traditional methods for its consumption have been carbon intensive. Carbon capture and storage technology will allow us to more cleanly utilize this energy source while limiting the impact of carbon on our environment.

As the Member for Calgary-Glenmore commented on SAGD, I was left in kind of a quandary to figure out if he's not believing the technology of SAGD or just where he was going with that. The SAGD process itself can be completely carbon neutral if you're generating electricity with the natural gas that's burned and using the steam as a by-product to bring bitumen up from the ground. So I was kind of lost with the comments that were being made over there, but to say that SAGD is not a proven technology really left me in the dust.

In addition to carbon capture and storage, this bill also has the ability to help us expand our conventional oil and gas extraction process. Rather than pumping water or chemicals into our wells to extract oil, through CCS we are able to use a byproduct from the consumption of energy, carbon dioxide, to bring oil back up. CO₂ is a very effective agent to displace oil in porous rock, allowing us to more efficiently recover our natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council estimates that using captured CO₂ in enhanced oil recovery will help produce an additional 1.4 billion barrels of oil. Let me be clear. That is oil that could not be produced without using enhanced oil recovery. That incremental production is expected to generate up to $25 billion in additional provincial royalties and taxes.

It almost reminds me of when you've got three rounds left in your barley field. If you put in three gallons of diesel fuel, you can finish combining, but why do that? It's an investment in more carbon. You might as well as leave those three rounds out there. This gives us the ability to extract up to 70 per cent of the conventional oil that is still left in the ground. To me, Mr. Speaker, and the people I represent that is a great investment. It's a terrific environmental and financial return on a $2 billion investment. Before this technology can be used, however, we need to have the proper legislation in place, legislation like Bill 24. As mentioned, this bill will create environmental protections needed to ensure that our carbon capture and storage projects are safe now and safe in the future.

Without a doubt the most important aspect of this is the creation of the stewardship fund. Mr. Speaker, carbon capture and storage is a safe and proven technology that will have long-term benefits for this province, but as wise stewards it falls to us to ensure that Albertans remain protected from any eventuality. This means we must remain vigilant and monitor these projects to ensure they are not leaking carbon back into the environment.

I heard a comment the other night somewhere along the lines that we were going to collect 1 per cent of 2 per cent, which worked out to .001 per cent, but that if we had a leak, that would then blanket the Earth, and we would be in danger. Well, if it was such a minuscule amount to begin with, I don't see how the leak would ever be a danger, but I'll leave that as it is.

Let me be clear on two points here. Leakage is most unlikely to occur, and even if there is leakage, it would be very slow over time. Still, we must be prudent, so in the unlikely event of a leak there needs to be money in place to repair the project and limit the impact on the environment. Mr. Speaker, we have similar policies in place for our conventional oil and gas wells as well as for our oil sands projects. Bill 24 would simply continue this history of long-term environmental stewardship.

Mr. Speaker, like our conventional oil and gas reclamation fund, the carbon capture and storage stewardship fund will not be financed by the Alberta government. Rather, it will be paid for by the carbon capture and storage operators themselves. Industry will certainly benefit from the implementation of these projects, and they will also accept responsibility for the reclamation and monitoring costs associated with them.

The reduction of carbon in our atmosphere is important to this government, and while Alberta may not be the leading cause of carbon emissions in the world, it has stepped up and become a world leader in its reduction. We have done this by investing in carbon capture and storage, a technology that has the potential to reduce carbon dioxide not only in Alberta but all over the world. This is yet another example of how Alberta leads the way in environmental protection.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated before, Bill 24 creates the regulatory clarity on carbon capture which is required by industry. The amendments in this bill are required to facilitate the game-changing technology of carbon capture and storage. In effect, this legislation will set the stage for the implementation of this technology. I'd like to reiterate that in no way did these amendments change the definition of land ownership. Companies will still be required to negotiate with landowners for surface access to their land and will be compensated fairly.

With respect to these issues of liability I would stress that before applicants are given access by the minister and the Energy Resources Conservation Board, they must demonstrate that the project will not impact resources such as oil, gas, and coal. The province accepting long-term liability for the injected CO₂; it is the responsible thing to do. There will be numerous measures in place to ensure the CO₂ is secure and has been for years before the government will accept liability for it.

As our population and economy continue to grow, energy demand will continue to rise. We know it is not a question of whether energy will continue to be developed but how it can be developed in a cleaner, more responsible way. Carbon capture and storage is one tool in the tool box to fight emissions, and it is a game changer in reducing large volumes of emissions.

Mr. Speaker, governments around the world are exploring ways to support CCS, but Alberta is the first jurisdiction in Canada to move forward with legislative amendments to help facilitate this new technology. Alberta's spirit to achieve in many things, including CCS, will reinforce Alberta's image as a responsible energy producer. Governments world-wide are grappling with how to best deal with emissions.

The International Energy Agency, IEA, recently released a report outlining where 16 countries around the world are at in their pursuit of legal and regulatory requirements for this new technology. This document shows that we're not the only ones pursuing regulatory clarity. It shows that CCS is considered a viable technology world-wide, and many countries are moving forward with changes to facilitate it. CCS has long been a key component of the province's climate change strategy. The proposed changes to this act are necessary to ensure Alberta's continued leadership in CCS and responsible energy development, and it is an initiative that all Albertans can be proud of.

In conclusion, I am pleased to recommend to all of my colleagues to stand with me in support of Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Mr. Hinman: I'm pleased to be able to ask the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod a question. Being a former reeve, I know he's in touch with farmers, but his analogy – I'm sorry – went way over my head. I have never heard of the government needing to go out to farmers and say: here's some extra money to harvest the last three rounds of your field.

What is very interesting to me, Mr. Speaker, is that, in fact, this government is going to oil and gas companies. I understand that 70 per cent of the oil is generally left in the ground. They're not able to extract it. That's why enhanced oil recovery is so exciting for many of these companies. But is he really going to tell me that these oil companies wouldn't go in after that if, in fact, it wasn't economically viable? What farmer would ever leave 70 per cent of his crop in the field and say: oh, we want the government to give us a subsidy on our fuel so we can go out and get the last 70 per cent. I am just astounded with the analogy, to think that farmers would have to be encouraged by government with taxpayers' money to go out and harvest the last three rounds, let alone 70 per cent of the field. It's backwards. I'd like for him to please clarify why he thinks the government should subsidize industry to go get what they're actually producing. If, in fact, it was economically viable, they would go after it and extract it on their own, just as the farmer finishes the field on his own.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for asking that question. As many of you have probably realized, that's not the first thing that went over his head. Regardless of that point, the analogy I was making is for the Alberta government. If we have the ability to extract $25 billion more in royalties and taxes because of the 70 per cent that is left in the ground, then a $2 billion investment, to me, is very good money spent to access that $25 billion. I have a hard time with the math that the hon. member has done over there, but the comparison was not to say that government would pay for the farmers' fuel. It was to say that any farmer is going to go out and buy that last bit of fuel so he could finish harvesting his crop.

Now, I hope I've gone slow enough and clearly enough that that clarifies it for the hon. member. I'm sure it has because he is also a farmer, and I believe that his common sense has been fighting to come forward right now and think about this logically. Also, we are in opposition, so we have to have those comments back and forth. I can see that he's chomping at the bit to jump back up.

Mr. Mason: You will be in opposition.

Mr. Berger: Pardon me? He's over there with you, Brian.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair.

Mr. Berger: Yes. Anyway, I hope that generally puts it in perspective for the member.

I do have to say, Mr. Speaker, that as members of this Assembly we are here to do the best for all Albertans, not just one, another, or three over here or there. In my job representing the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod, I feel that an investment in the future of our oil extraction, when you look at 70 per cent of conventional oil still left in the ground, the way of extracting it through carbon as opposed to using water, like I would assume some people are saying is acceptable across the floor – I think this is a very wise use of carbon. It may take a little bit of incentive to say: "Here. There is that capability of withdrawing that much more in royalties." Over time that money will be well spent.

There was also another comment earlier on about investing in pipelines. I'm not sure if the hon. member would like to take out a map, but I would think he might find that there are quite a few pipelines already buried in Alberta that are no longer in use that could be utilized for moving carbon around. We're not talking about taking it from the vehicles and that type of thing. We're talking about single-source emitters, where it can be easily captured, sent down the pipe, sent to a hole that's no longer producing, pumped down. It releases the oil, brings the oil up. I'm having a hard time understanding why that would not be attractive to the hon. member . . . [interjections]

Mr. Hinman: I'll tell you if you sit down.

Mr. Berger: Actually, I have the floor right now, so I'm not sure that I really would like to sit down.

There are the comments coming out of the hon. member that he did not understand it, so maybe I should go through it once more very slowly. I can do this. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Berger: Maybe we need to go through it again. [The time limit for questions and comments expired] Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want a couple of things on the record. I have spoken to this before, but I would like to make sure that, again, I could say what I think. I listened to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar this afternoon, and I wasn't exactly sure that I understood what I thought my questions were. What I can't understand is that further down the road, actually, we say that it's safe. What do we know in a hundred years? Do we know that we're going to have earth tremors? We have no idea. So I don't understand.

As has already been mentioned, there will be CO₂ escaping and all those sorts of things. I don't think anybody can predict the future. But I don't understand why the taxpayers of Alberta should be the insurance company. Why is there not an insurance company? Has Lloyd's of London been contacted? Would they be interested in making lots of money off an insurance policy that would protect Albertans from a catastrophe that could happen with CO₂?

It's one of the points that I have been very interested in because I really don't think that we should be the insurance company. We insure our homes. We insure our cars. We insure all kinds of things if we're famous. Betty Grable insured her legs, and I do believe that it was Lloyd's of London that insured her legs. However, the point is that that's what insurance companies are there for. They do insure against catastrophic events. If they looked at it and they decided that, yes, it was worth their taking that risk, then, no, we Albertans should not have to pay for that. Again, I don't see why we are accepting the liabilities.

Just a couple more things. The CCS operator would be responsible for any mitigation work during the operation and up until the closure certificate has been issued by the province. But the time between the closure and the transfer of the long-term liability remains undefined. I really have a problem with why the taxpayer should be picking up that part of it.

We've seen in other security funds in the oil and gas sector that there's a potential that the fund would not cover the full liability. Again, an insurance company is going to weigh the risks. They're going to decide how much they are going to insure it for. If we insure our homes, then, yes, we put a value on it, and if something happens, that's what we get paid for it. But a good insurance company – Lloyd's of London or any of the big fellows – would have done the work that I think should have been done.

I want to know what that insurance is going to cost me. Yes, it says that the companies are going to be putting money into it, but it's for the mitigation and for the work that they will do to make sure that the CO₂ is safe in the ground. It's got nothing to do with a catastrophic event that could happen further down the road. By doing that, the industry is not liable for any assumption of the risk being taken by the government. Again, why should we be taking the risk as Albertans? We're not going to be making any money other than probably a pittance in the royalties, so why should we take that risk? Why shouldn't we be paying an insurance company to take that risk?

Mr. Speaker, that's my main concern. I just don't see why we should be taking the risk when insurance companies are there for that purpose.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has brought up another extremely important concept that this government seems to miss. I'm just wondering if the hon.

Member for Lethbridge-East understands the foolishness of the answer given by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. That's caustic, CO₂, and you need stainless steel pipelines. It's people like that that really worry me. If the government is in charge and says, "Let's pump CO₂ through these pipelines," then we're going to have all of these liability costs. Are you aware that CO₂ must go through stainless steel pipelines in order to be transported to its destination of use?

Ms Pastoor: Yes, actually, I was aware of that. I would hope that we would not buy our pipe through China. Why I'm saying that is because I bought something the other day.

Mr. Lukaszuk: A blender?

Ms Pastoor: No, it wasn't a blender. Actually, it was just a stopper for the bathtub. Off that was a chain that said: stainless steel. It was from China. The very first time it was exposed to water, it rusted. That's not stainless steel. So, yes, I am aware of that.

I think another thing is that if all Albertans looked at a map of Alberta and saw all the pipelines and all of the holes that are dug – actually, there probably isn't one square inch that either isn't sold or leased to oil and gas companies – they would be absolutely astounded.

But to answer the question, yes. Let's just not buy it from China.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: I don't have any questions, Mr. Speaker. She has answered them all, unlike the other side.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and participate in this discussion today on Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I'd like to take the opportunity to clarify some misconceptions about Alberta's leadership in carbon capture and storage. Alberta committed $2 billion to CCS in 2008. That said, government did not take $2 billion and put it in a bank account earmarked for this technology. This financial commitment, the largest in the world for a jurisdiction of around 4 million people, is a commitment that will be paid over the next 15 years or so.

The grant agreements government is pursuing with four project proponents ensure that payment to them is based on performance. None of that money will be given out until, first, the grant agreements are signed; secondly, the project meets the milestones outlined in the funding agreements; and, thirdly, the project submits a claim, which is verified. For the first 40 per cent of funding the Department of Energy receives security against the payment in the event it becomes refundable to the government. The next 20 per cent of funding will be paid upon commercial operations. The final 40 per cent of funding is paid out once over a 10-year period as CO₂ is captured and stored.

The reality is that this is a long-term commitment for the funding. There is no pot of $2 billion that we can just reroute to something else. Let me be perfectly clear. The money in the $2 billion CCS funding program has to be allocated through an open and transparent process. Industry is making investments into these projects based on this money, and any delay or reduction of funding would have a detrimental impact on this industry. It would impact our global reputation as a leader in responsible energy development, it would impact our province's long-term economic development, and it would impact our commitment to reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that Alberta is not the only government providing funding to this leading-edge technology. The federal government has also committed money to some of the same projects, and earlier this week the Australian government, through its Global CCS Institute, also committed millions to one of the projects. We like to say that Alberta is a leader, and in this case we've shown we're leading as other governments are following our lead.

I'd also like to shed some light about the application of this technology. CCS is not a one-hit wonder. This technology is applicable at any large emitter of greenhouse gas emissions. That means it can be used at cement plants, bitumen upgraders, coal-fired electricity plants: any large industrial emitters. To refine and hone our skills in the technology provides an opportunity for Albertans – that's Albertans, this generation and those still to come.

The World Coal Association says that coal fuels over 40 per cent of the electricity world-wide. That means the potential for this many existing plants to be retrofitted with this technology is tremendous. It also means new plants that will be coming online can be built with this technology. This is not only a game-changing technology for Alberta, Mr. Speaker; this is a game-changing technology for the world. We will be at the forefront, developing the know-how, the knowledge, and the skills, and we will ultimately be sharing that knowledge around the globe as greenhouse gas emissions are a global challenge.

Maybe it's easy to be short sighted and say that we shouldn't do this and we shouldn't do that, and we should spend the money on something else, but Alberta and Albertans are not short sighted. Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago the government of the day invested in natural gas infrastructure to take that waste that was being burnt at flare stacks and put it into pipelines, had the foresight and didn't have a party saying: don't invest in this, and don't do that. Well, they invested, and today Alberta has reaped the benefits of that investment for 50 years.

Where would this province have been if it hadn't been for that pioneering ingenuity, if we hadn't spotted that oil gusher, Leduc No. 1, in 1947? The province and its people embraced that new industry, Mr. Speaker, and look where we are today. That one well changed the course of history for Alberta and for Canada.

Let's move forward a couple of decades. That's when Great Canadian Oil Sands, now Suncor, started operation of its mine in 1967. Thankfully, these members weren't there saying, "Let's not do that either," because we wouldn't be there either, would we? The government of Alberta was as instrumental in partnering with industry then as we are today, Mr. Speaker, to ensure this valuable resource was developed, and today we're reaping the benefits of that.

It's now 2010. To me, it seems clear that history has proven that we Albertans are doers. Mr. Speaker, we take the initiative and venture forth into territories where others are afraid to go. We take that initiative. We are the best place in the country to live, the best place to invest, and the best place to do business. We know that climate change is real and that something needs to be done about it, and we're going to do it.

The world needs energy, but the question of what type the world will use is continually evolving with the concept. For now it would appear that while the global appetite for energy is still increasing, so, too, is the demand for energy that is also becoming cleaner. The pursuit of carbon capture and storage technology is a part of our government's response to both demands. Alberta's future as a global energy provider is linked to an ability to create clean energy. CCS will help us in our pursuit of wise energy production because the capture of carbon dioxide can and will be used in enhanced oil recovery. That process helps loosen the tough-to-reach oil from conventional reservoirs. Already, Mr. Speaker, oil companies are out there relooking at fields that have been closed up for a while to look at new and creative opportunities to help fuel the Canada of the future.

I would like to reiterate the point that CCS-related, enhanced oil recovery activities have the potential to create up to $25 billion in added royalties for our province, not to mention the jobs, the income tax, and all of the other benefits that come from that activity. That figure does not come from the government of Alberta; it comes from the Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council's future report, and I believe they're right. It is that consortium of experts who developed the blueprint for how Alberta could best implement CCS. Bill 24 is the embodiment of recommendations from that council. This bill ensures government assumes the long-term liability for carbon capture and storage, and it provides clarity to industry with respect to the issue surrounding access to underground CO₂ storage.

Mr. Speaker, to move forward with CCS, our government needs to assume long-term liability for the injection of carbon dioxide. We are talking about permanent storage. Not long-term storage; we are talking about permanent storage. Accepting liability for the injected CO₂ will be contingent upon strict conditions related to the issuance of a closure certificate.

In my role as parliamentary assistant in Advanced Education and Technology I have visited with the researchers at the University of Alberta and Calgary. I have been to their labs and met with the research scientists, with the postdoctoral and graduate students that are working in this very exciting area. We have talked about the monitoring programs that they are testing as we speak today, testing to make sure that they can gauge the effectiveness of the storage of our carbon dioxide. Mr. Speaker, these are some of the brightest and best people in the world. They are out there today in our universities, in our colleges teaching our young people, working with them, and generating real opportunities not for investment just in the future but today.

Our young people, Alberta's young people are working today in labs, testing and studying the rock structures, the impacts that CO₂ has on different formations and different rocks. They're looking at how it can be stored underground. Mr. Speaker, this is state-of-the-art work being done right here in Alberta. Some of the finest research is being done, and we're doing it. We're helping to invest in it through these funds so that we can create the environment, the economic development of the future. This is a wonderful opportunity for our province.

Bill 24 indicates that companies would be required to comply with all closure criteria and site monitoring prior to receiving a certificate. The bill also ensures a postclosure stewardship fund will be developed and financed by industry. This fund will ensure that any postclosure issues for a given project will be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill address what steps government needs to take very clearly, I believe this technology is one of the keys to securing Alberta's place as a global energy leader, and I support this legislation and would ask every member of this House to support it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a question for the hon. member. First, I find it interesting that when this program was first announced, the government talked about how it was going to be used for emissions coming from oil sands production. Only when we tabled a document later on, after the program had already been announced and $2 billion committed to it, did they finally realize that the intensity of emissions from oil sands production wasn't sufficient to make it effective, and it could be used, perhaps, for coal. That's the kind of foresight that went into this thing.

Does the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West really expect us to accept his characterization of this investment in carbon capture and storage as the equivalent of the Leduc discovery in 1947? Does he really expect us to see them as equivalent? Before he answers, Mr. Speaker, I will point out that, you know, it was oil companies that found oil that was already there. It wasn't something that was created by the government. I know that some believe that God created the oil for Social Credit and put it in the ground to help Social Credit. I think that was the prevailing view. Maybe the current view is that we're creating the CO₂ for the Progressive Conservatives. I don't know.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate those questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I think it shows that even the NDP were thinking about this and looking at ways that we could reduce carbon. The member mentioned that they had thought about using it on coal-fired electricity plants, and that's not a new idea. In fact, right now the carbon from coal-fired energy plants in North Dakota is being harnessed and has been for many, many years. It's piped to southern Saskatchewan, and it's utilized for enhanced oil recovery. So the idea that he had has been used for many, many years, and it's been unique.

You know, I do liken this to those other things in the past: the finding of oil in Leduc, the government's investment in natural gas infrastructure when people said they shouldn't do it – it has been one of the largest income sources for this province and our citizens – as well as the investment in the oil sands. What a wonderful opportunity that's created for Alberta. We're heading towards 3 million barrels a day on something that folks like this would have said we should never do. Mr. Speaker, this is a wonderful opportunity for our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest not only to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West but also to the WRA members. I listened intently to their differing opinions on climate change and their differing opinions on how things should happen from an economic perspective. I was also very interested in the Member for Lethbridge-West, who talked about the fact that the oil sands wouldn't have been there had it not been for government intervention in many ways in terms of the investment. It was also in terms of direct investment, hon. member, in research and development. [interjection] You should learn your history. [interjection] Hon. member, you should learn your history before you spout off. You should really learn a little more about it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Horner: The other thing that I would like to ask the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West to expand upon is a little bit around the — he comes from a community that has two academic institutions in it that are very involved in alternative energies. There is a relationship between what we're doing in CCS and alternative energies that we're investing in. As the hon. member mentioned, the Helmholtz institutes from the universities in Germany are actively engaged here.

Mr. Boutilier: Is there a question in there?

Mr. Horner: It can be question or comment, hon. member. Learn the rules; read the book. It can be both, hon. member. Learn the rules.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair.

Mr. Horner: Through the chair. Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

I think what I'd like the hon. member to talk about is: is that an area of research that is being intently followed, both in the applied and the basic, at the universities in Lethbridge?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the minister makes a very good point: that we also are investing in alternative energies, which are so critically important to this government. I am privileged to come from Lethbridge, where Lethbridge College has the only program of its type in North America where they train wind energy technicians. They train them for companies around the world. These young men and women are being trained and sent to Germany, to Finland, to the United States, and across Canada to help generate green energy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have on my list here the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise, and I thank the Member for Lethbridge-West. As much as some of his comments are open for interpretation, I would say that at least I appreciate his energy on such an important topic, specifically talking about my home, the oil sands capital of the world. Having had the honour of serving as its mayor and a city councillor and now as an MLA for four terms, indeed, I feel quite compelled to speak on such an important topic as Bill 24.

The reason I say that, as I look around the room at the hon. members, is that I find it interesting that as I stand here tonight, I stand as the only former Minister of Environment, who, in fact, in 2005 attended the IPCC in Buenos Aires, Argentina, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and addressed on behalf of the people of Alberta the topic of oil sands, not only the topic of oil sands and how it contributes to our economic well-being but also the environmental commitment that Albertans have. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the idea that was presented at the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change back in 2005 about CCS and technologies was more importantly about energy solutions, and energy solutions are more than just about CCS. That's where I believe the idea that was launched back in 2005 has gone so wrong.

That's why tonight I will be speaking relative to the weaknesses of Bill 24. Specifically, we have an opportunity, and it's an opportunity when it comes to: what are the energy solutions? It is perceived that CCS, carbon capture and storage, is one. But I recall speaking to the over 150 nations in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 2005, and it was clear that there is a multitude of solutions in terms of how we deal with climate change and global warming.

I do believe the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere rightfully pointed out that it's all a sense of contextualizing the issue of climate change because presently the idea of investing in technology with $2 billion, as much as that was an idea, it was never $2 billion, and it was never the idea of picking winners and losers. I believe that 53 companies showed an interest in sustainability and environmental protection, who participated in applying for carbon capture and storage — 53 of them — and it's my understanding that only four were selected.

Mr. Anderson: Three? Four?

Mr. Boutilier: Three or four. I stand to be corrected perhaps.

Mr. Speaker, that's where this has gone wrong. What about the other 49 companies that expressed an interest, that would have loved to have been able to participate but were not because it was only the government who chose the winners and the losers? This is the problem, the fundamental flaw, that goes on relative to how we expand our wings in terms of each and every one of us and the responsibility and the role we play.

It is wrong for the government to pick winners and losers. Bill 24 is about exactly that. They picked four, not 53. What about the other 49? I ask each and every one of you. Hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, what about the other 49? Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, what about the other 49? They were left out. They were left out. That creates uncertainty. That creates no sense of focus and fairness, not a level playing field. If you're a big company — and I will not mention any of the four that were selected because some of them are advancing. But what about the other 49 that you turned a blind eye to? That is what is unfortunate.

There was reference made to the Alberta Research Council, and as the Minister of Environment I visited on numerous occasions. I might add, Mr. Speaker, AOSTRA, the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, was a fine example of technology 30-some years ago that ultimately — and I see the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is shaking his head in acknowledgement, recognizing the history.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, in my view if we are to achieve the future, there are a few things we need to focus on. Right now China is behind us in technology. China is right now. But I want to ensure that my son and this man's four children and each of you with children, that our sons and daughters are going to be working at the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary as opposed to what may take place if we do not advance the future by ensuring all of those other 49 companies participate in the technologies of the future.

Way back when, when the technology of the oil sands was advanced, everyone was allowed to play in the sandbox. Now the government has chosen four. Why would you not participate with the other 49 that have been left out? You've picked a winner and a loser, and that is fundamentally wrong. In fact, I believe that the wings of expanding the sustainability file have been lost based on what this bill is not doing.

As we look, China 10 years from now will be ahead of us because one thing about their system: their system doesn't do a lot of consultation; they just move ahead. Ultimately, we need to ensure those other 49 companies are participating in the technology that will advance a greater cause than just the four that this government picked. That is fundamentally wrong. We in the Wildrose believe, Mr. Speaker, that all of those 49 companies should be participating as well, and the reason why is that we have a greater commitment to the environment and sustainability in dealing with the important issue of climate change and global warming.

I find it really interesting that as we look at picking winners and losers, that this government has done, it is a fundamental flaw in what is taking place under Bill 24. In fact, the Wildrose are not only down the road, like the government; we're around the corner. We're way around the corner because we are forward thinkers. We are future thinkers because we're thinking about our three-year-old children and your children. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is shaking his head. He has somewhat of a stunned look on his face, but I'm sure he is absorbing the technology and wisdom.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that, in my judgment, we as Albertans want a centre of excellence, a centre of excellence that we can export to the rest of the world. We can do that, but we cannot do it by just picking four companies. What about the 49 companies you all left out? That's what you've done, and that is fundamentally wrong. Rather than picking and choosing winners and losers, you've acted – it's almost like you've created an unlevel playing field that has been very unfortunate and I believe will delay the progress in dealing with the issue of climate change.

In the meantime, it's the issue of choices. Two billion dollars. What about our schools? What about our emergency rooms? It's an issue of leadership. True leadership is about making decisions and making the right decisions based on the values that Albertans have, and right now the decision you're making on the $2 billion is fundamentally wrong. We could have included all of those other 49 companies, but unfortunately you chose only four. So it is obviously more than just carbon capture and storage. It's also about the alternative energies that can be used in terms of advancing.

I want Alberta, not only my community and constituency, to be the oil sands capital of the world. It is my hope and prayer that in the future this province will be not only the oil sands capital of the world but the centre of excellence for technology in reducing CO₂ and in helping in a manner that we can share with the rest of the world to make it a better planet. That is true leadership.

Today selecting only four versus 49 that were left out of the game I believe is unfortunate. I don't know if it's intended or not, but that is the result. So an idea that was a good idea back in 2005 has been lost. You hear the A-Team. They say: I love when a plan comes together. This plan, unfortunately, has not come together because you left out 49 other companies, companies that wanted to participate, companies that wanted to contribute to sustainability in helping to reduce climate change and global warming.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that as we move forward, each of us has a responsibility. Those other 49 companies that applied, I can say I take my hat off to them because they have expressed tremendous interest in terms of wanting to advance. But the government said no to those other 49; they accepted only four. That's unfortunate. As I look around the room, I think all of us should be able to embrace that. Why wouldn't we use all of those 53 companies to be involved in this important initiative of technology, no different than AOSTRA was many, many years ago, that advanced the commitment of oil sands?

Mr. Speaker, in the oil sands capital of the world back when the generic fiscal regime was in fact put in place in 1997, when I had the honour of being mayor, we expected $20 billion over 20 years. What happened was that it wasn't $20 billion over 20 years. Ten years ahead of that it was actually $120 billion over 10 years. The infrastructure that we faced, no different than other communities are facing, was a direct result of the oil sands.

But I believe now more than ever before that those 49 other companies that the government has left out of the CCS program should have been included. That's what is different between us and them. We have policy alternatives that believe everyone should be participating. We do not discriminate in picking winners and losers. We want every single Albertan to participate from a consumption perspective as well as the roles we play in our own backyards.

Consequently, with tax incentives, similar to the fiscal regime, similar to what the tremendous positive result of our generic fiscal regime was, we believe the same framework could have been used for dealing with this issue, rather than you folks picking just four as opposed to the other 49 that you left out. You have to examine what criteria are determined for the four to get in versus the 49 that don't. The Wildrose would have ensured that the 53 are in there, not forgetting the objective of helping and reducing the issue of global warming and climate change.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's interesting to put this into perspective. Did you know that in the United States of America, with over 300 million people, the Obama government has invested $3 billion? This government, with 3.4 million people, has invested $2 billion. Consequently, it is clear to me that the decisions that are being chosen for this versus the issue of schools, the issues of ER lineups – it's all about a decision of choices. I believe that the choices that you made by excluding 49 other companies are fundamentally wrong. Your framework of policies is wrong.

Not only that, I'm very proud to say as a former Minister of Environment that back at the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change we talked about energy solutions, we talked about trilateral examples, and we talked about partnering. But we didn't talk about picking just one or two or three. We talked about everyone having a role to play. Unfortunately, that's where this bill has failed, and it has failed miserably. It has failed to embrace all Alberta companies and all Albertans, and my humble advice to this government is that, clearly, the idea that was launched in 2005 and 2006 has been lost.

Somehow you have strayed off the mark. For that I will only say that it is my hope and dream that my son and the children that we all have will be able to have a centre of excellence for climate change, for sequestration, for other alternative sources of energy when it comes to dealing with the issue of reducing CO₂.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo care deeply about the air that we breathe and the water we drink and the land we work. In fact, I remember often saying that we have a strong law. Well, I believe that excluding 49 companies has weakened the intent and the spirit of what the expectation of Albertans is when it comes to how we advance forward. I think each and every one of us may have different opinions on climate change and global warming, but I do believe that leaving out the other 49 companies that applied to participate is unfortunate.

That's why I will not support Bill 24, because of the fact that it is not inclusive. It appears to be picked by – I don't even know the criteria of how those four were selected, but unfortunately I believe . . .

An Hon. Member: I kind of have an idea.

Mr. Boutilier: Okay. I think we all may have ideas on how those four were selected. But, Mr. Speaker, I humbly believe that it's flawed, and it clearly should be all the other 49. Who knows? Maybe that 49 could go and be doubled, and maybe it could be 98. Who knows? It could be even tripled and so on and so forth. I believe that never was it intended – I can say that, speaking from my experience – that we would exclude anyone from wanting to participate in helping reduce CO₂ emissions. Everyone has a role and responsibility for doing that and we should expect no less in terms of the action.

As much as the idea was planted back when I had the honour of serving as the Minister of Environment for then Premier Klein, I want to be able to say, Mr. Speaker, that the idea that was first cast clearly has been lost. That's unfortunate. I'm proud to say the oil sands capital of the world is my home. Actually, it's a resource that's owned by all Albertans, but we can do better than what is taking place. That in itself is so important.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to the hon. member. [interjections] Pardon me, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the minister has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate they can't wait for the question.

I listened, Mr. Speaker, with great interest to the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo's comments on his time as the Minister of Environment. I can remember a lot of those discussions quite vividly and his support for things that would have included this investment. I also am curious that if all 53 projects, good or bad, were funded by the government of Alberta, wouldn't we then be accused of not doing our due diligence?

In fact, Mr. Speaker, these projects underwent a fairly rigid due diligence by not only industry and environmental experts but also some government folks as well on a committee. I'm curious, hon. member. Do you know any of those 49 companies that had a good enough proposal that could have made it through the RFP process? If so, why would they have not made it through the RFP process, which was open and accountable, as the hon. member knows because he was involved in some of that? That's the first question.

The second question is: the two companies that really were the founding companies in Fort McMurray and the oil sands development – I'm curious – is the hon. member suggesting that there was absolutely no government investment in or direction or control or ability to control those two that really developed the oil sands in Fort McMurray? I'm just curious about the hon. member's position in that respect.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thanks very much. The comments are very liberal of the Deputy Premier, but that's okay because, fundamentally, it's clear to me what the question – and it's very important for him to hear intently. This is about not picking winners or losers. This is about a level playing field where all can play a role, all 53. The question was why. The answer is simple. All should have been included, okay? Unfortunately, the government has chosen.

The government does not understand the idea of tax incentives. Do you not understand how you create an environment of certainty, an environment that will create that investment? I think they realize now that they've made a mistake. I think they have clearly realized that, my goodness, we could have had 49 other companies participating in advancing the cause of reducing CO₂. Unfortunately, they didn't think that way. They thought that those four companies were the best, and unfortunately that is not the case. It's a flaw because you have created an unlevel playing field.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. [interjection] I have been quite patient. Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member. In the course of his discussions with the local bitumen and synthetic crude oil producers in Fort McMurray has there ever been a price, a firm price, talked about for the capture and compression of CO₂ emissions? Could he please enlighten the House?

Mr. Boutilier: It's actually a very good question. Obviously, at the time of the IPCC, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, they made reference to between $15 and $30 that was actually being recommended. In fact, at the time companies like GCOS, now Suncor, that the Member for Lethbridge-West mentioned earlier, were trading on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange for $15. It's really interesting.

I can say that when we deal with the issue of cap and trade, one of the fundamental flaws of cap and trade is that we want to ensure that the technologies are invested in Alberta as opposed to going to other parts of the world. We don't want to lose that so that, in fact, my son and yours can actually be learning at that centre of excellence, which would be right here in the capital or in Calgary or somewhere else – who knows? – maybe even a university in Fort McMurray, right next to and adjacent to the oil sands, or through Keyano College. To the minister of advanced ed, Keyano College university might be a good touch when it comes to the centre of excellence in capturing and storing CO₂ and exporting that type of thing to the rest of the world.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona on the bill.

Mr. Quest: On the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of this bill. There's been some interesting discussion. There have been a few points that I don't think have been raised up until now. When we talk about carbon capture and storage, now, many of us think about these four projects currently in the grant agreement stage. I have to say that I'm a little bit confused. Some members from the WRA talking about – I think Airdrie-Chestermere was talking about: we should never ever be in business, never, never, never, never, never.

The point has been raised a couple of times . . .

Mr. Anderson: Here it comes.

Mr. Quest: No. I don't think we would have an oil sands industry today. So there would be nothing to talk about. Without the vision of a previous Progressive Conservative government 40 years ago . . .

Ms Pastoor: Peter Lougheed.

Mr. Quest: Peter Lougheed. Exactly.

I'm a bit confused because we've got Airdrie-Chestermere telling us that we should never be in business, yet we've got the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo telling us that – what is it? – 53 companies we should be in partnership with. I guess I just don't understand. Of course, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has mentioned that four companies were picked to get to the grant agreement stage through a very, very thorough process, RFPs and so on, to bring them to that position. [interjections]

But just to broaden out the focus a bit and speaking of education – and it sounds like we need some education in the room here – I'd like to address what seems to have been a bit of a math puzzle brought forward by some of the members in recent days. I have heard, just from looking at Hansard, that perhaps some members have talked about the government subsidizing CCS to the tune of $865 a tonne, which is a ridiculously inaccurate number. Alberta's commitment of the $2 billion will see the four projects capturing and storing over 5 million tonnes per year beginning in 2015, Mr. Speaker. Five million tonnes a year for at least 10 years, so 50 million tonnes of CO₂; the scale of this is incredible. If you divide the $2 billion by the 50 million tonnes that are going to be stored, it's about $40 a tonne, clearly a figure nowhere near what some people have calculated. It's time to get some facts on the table.

On the topic of money let me just say that the assertion that the government is confiscating property now without compensation is also absolutely inaccurate, Mr. Speaker. Surface rights owners have never been able to lay claim to something that they can't practically use. The reality is that ownership of pore space has never been resolved by the courts or in Alberta legislation, but this bill makes it clear. That's why we need this bill. If landowners own the mineral rights under their land, this legislation does not change that. Landowners will still have the authority to those rights, and that will not change. Companies will still be required to negotiate with landowners for surface access to their land, and they'll be compensated fairly, so that has not changed. Before applicants are given access by the minister and again by the ERCB, they must demonstrate that the project will not impact resources such as oil, gas, or coal.

Another point that was brought up this week was about how the fund financed by CCS operators would work and what it would cover. Those details will be worked out at the beginning of spring 2011 with a review of the regulatory framework. It's expected there will be a fee per tonne of CO₂ injected and that it would cover a variety of costs, including reclaiming and remediating orphaned facilities.

Another question was about the long-term liability transfer and how it would work, and that's come up several times. This is another detail that will be reviewed in the spring, and it's expected that tremendous technical data will be required. Most importantly, this review will be completed long before the large-scale injection begins in 2015. Alberta has a great deal of experience regulating what comes out of and now goes into the ground. In fact, our province's oil and gas industry has been doing enhanced oil recovery for years, and we've touched on that, Mr. Speaker.

Again, discussions come up many times about the money and how it can be used elsewhere. I believe the Member for Livingstone-Macleod brought up a little earlier that the province's revenues through royalties and taxation will be at least 10 times what our initial investment is. I think most of us in this room can do the math. Ten times: how often do you get an opportunity to get 10 times the return on your investment, Mr. Speaker? Why we're quibbling about this, I really don't know. I'm sure the WRA probably also understands the concept of investment and return. Again, I just can't imagine a better opportunity than what we have in front of us here.

There have been many similar smaller scale projects, so we're just doing this in a bigger way. I think many would be familiar with the project at Joffre. It was a pilot project in 1984, and then it was commercialized in 1991. It's the only commercial CO₂ enhanced oil recovery project in Canada, using industrial emissions coming from the NOVA plant. The captured CO₂ has helped give new production life to what once was an abandoned oil field. This has come up many times. It has helped to recover an additional 12 to 25 per cent of the original oil.

Well, with that said, I can't imagine why anybody wouldn't support Bill 24, Mr. Speaker. We know it's a technology that's being developed in other countries, we know that we'll be world leaders in developing this technology, we know it's great for our environment, and we know that our geology can fully support permanent storage. We know that we can become world leaders offering CCS education at our postsecondary institutions, and we know that we can become leaders in implementing these large-scale projects.

I second the comments made by my colleague the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy, regarding the body of expertise around CCS that's being built at Alberta's very fine postsecondary institutions. This has come up, and I would add to her impressive list the new centre for clean coal at the U of A and the development of geospatial expertise at the University of Calgary. In essence, we have graduate students studying at our universities who will have unique knowledge and experience that they can take into the workforce so that industry has the skilled workers they will need to put these technologies into action. We know that industry fully supports the technology as it is putting in hundreds of millions of its own dollars. I know this has come up before. I'm talking about industry doing it on its own. This is a partnership, Mr. Speaker. This is for everybody. Industry is heavily involved in this, very committed and hugely supportive of carbon capture and storage.

What we do know is that climate change is real, so we'll be assured that our $2 billion financial investment in CCS is being made with the future in mind. We want to be leaders in the technology and to then share our knowledge with the world. That will result in tremendous economic spinoffs like highly skilled jobs for generations to come. The time to act is now. Mr. Speaker, the time for CCS is now. I fully support this bill and encourage all members to fully support it as we do need to move ahead with this game-changing technology.

Again, I remember when I was a child, Mr. Speaker, in the early 1970s, and just reading even then about this new and emerging technology . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Are you ever young.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, I think.

. . . and the vision that this government had even then to develop what a lot of people really thought couldn't be done. Industry, as we know, moves around. Industry has many, many opportunities. I would think that exploring the option of . . . [Mr. Quest's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Strathcona. Pursuant to Government Motion 25, agreed to on December 1, 2010, the time for debate has expired. I must now put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today on this bill, which is Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. As was mentioned previously, this bill sets out the names and boundaries of Alberta's electoral divisions. Alberta is changing, and it's necessary to ensure the electoral map continues to properly reflect our evolving and growing province.

As I begin, I'd like to first thank the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission for its work to date. By name they are the Hon. Judge Ernest J.M. Walter, the chair of the commission; Keith Archer; Brian Evans; Peter Dobbie; and Allyson Jeffs. Mr. Speaker, I have met Judge Walter, and I want to express my further appreciation for him as a man of the people.

I will tell you a true story about Judge Walter that proves to you that he is indeed a man of the people. Judge Walter would travel to different jurisdictions to preside over the courts in his circuit. Each time, usually once every two weeks, he visited the constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul, there would be a group of seniors in the front row, who listened very intently to the evidence. Judge Walter would carefully make his ruling, and just after he announced his verdict, he would look over to the group of seniors. Judge Walter would then know whether he had made the right ruling or not because this group of seniors would either nod their heads up and down to show him they were in agreement or they would shake their heads back and forth from side to side to indicate they did not agree. Mr. Speaker, any judge who looked to a group of seniors to see if they agreed or disagreed with a decision that he made can indeed be considered a man of the people.

The commission's review of the existing electoral map and subsequent recommendations on the areas, boundaries, and names for Alberta's electoral divisions will help ensure that Albertans have effective representation in the Legislative Assembly. The work was extensive, beginning with the commission holding a series of public hearings across the province in September and October 2009. The commission received some very thoughtful comments from all corners of our province. We do indeed have a lot of people in this great province who are passionate about their communities and passionate about government representation.

I know all members greatly appreciated the input of Albertans who participated in the consultation process, and I, too, thank them for providing their feedback. I especially would like to thank the people of Red Deer; my own constituency association president, Duane Smethurst; and our board members who took the time to make a presentation on behalf of the city of Red Deer.

In May of last year the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act was amended to establish an Electoral Boundaries Commission. The act directed the commission, an independent body, to divide the province into 87 electoral divisions with a population within 25 per cent of the provincial average in a way that will ensure effective representation for Albertans. This is a critical point, Mr. Speaker, because Alberta's changing population distribution and densities, community interests, and other factors require us to periodically review and update our electoral boundaries.

Over the course of a year the commission travelled around the province and consulted with Albertans about this mandate. The commission reviewed the existing electoral map and made recommendations on the areas, boundaries, and names for 87 electoral divisions based on the latest census and population information, input they received from Albertans, and of course the applicable legal principles.

As I mentioned, the commission was mandated to divide Alberta into 87 proposed electoral divisions by taking the following factors into consideration: the requirement for effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; sparsity and density of population; common community interests and community organizations, including those of Indian reserves and Métis settlements; wherever possible the existing community boundaries within the cities of Edmonton and Calgary; wherever possible the existing municipal boundaries, which is what they did for the city of Red Deer. Although I lost two polls that were rural and highly supportive, I've also gained some other wonderful, thoughtful constituents from the neighbourhood of Deer Park in Red Deer.

Mr. Speaker, the last time the number of electoral divisions was changed was in 1986, and since that time Alberta's population has grown by approximately 1 million people. As our population increases, we must revisit the number of officials we elect to this Assembly. According to the official population list the population of Alberta has increased by 258,945 since the adjusted 2006 census. As a result, the total population that was considered by the commission was 3,556,583.

I'd like to address some of the concerns raised in this Assembly regarding the number of electoral divisions. The Electoral Boundaries Commission reviewed the existing electoral map of Alberta and made recommendations to the Legislative Assembly on the areas, boundaries, and names for 87 electoral divisions, four more than at present, based on the latest census and population information. Some members of this Assembly have indicated that Albertans are adequately represented by 83 electoral divisions and that the addition of another four would represent an additional burden. Mr. Speaker, the commission was indeed mandated to divide Alberta into 87 divisions but with a population within 25 per cent of the provincial average, and I emphasize this point: 25 per cent of the provincial average. Due to increases in population, it has been determined that four more divisions are necessary to reflect our population growth. We must ensure Albertans are effectively represented in our Legislative Assembly, hence the additional divisions.

In fact, population growth was identified in the commission's report as a future consideration.

If the population growth pattern of the past two decades continues in the future, by far the most significant issue for future Electoral Boundaries Commissions will be the effect of the concentration of population in the Calgary/Edmonton corridor and in the Grande Prairie and Wood Buffalo areas on the distribution of electoral divisions in the rest of the province.

The constituency that I represent is within the Calgary-Edmonton corridor, and it's identified as the economic tiger. It's important to my constituents that there is equitable and fair representation for all Albertans. I think it was the mantra of the original Boston Harbor Tea Party that claimed: no taxation without representation. Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that all Albertans are fairly and equitably represented.

The commission received well over 500 written comments on the interim report, and 117 persons addressed the commission in the April and May public hearings. Thirty-seven per cent of the written submissions were related to the interim proposed boundaries in the area of the county of Newell and the county of Wheatland.

Another 13 per cent were related to including the name Notley in a revised name for the Dunvegan-Central Peace electoral division. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of this Assembly that they were able to set aside partisan politics and rightfully recognize one of our most beloved and dedicated politicians, Grant Notley. We heard a beautiful thank you and tribute by Grant Notley's own daughter, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, a daughter anyone could be proud of.

Sixteen per cent of the written submissions were related to the interim proposed boundaries in south-central Alberta, 10 per cent of the submissions related to the Grande Prairie area, 8 per cent related to Calgary proposals, and, finally, 4 per cent related to Edmonton proposals. The remaining 12 per cent addressed other issues throughout Alberta.

Lastly, I address the concerns over the electoral name changes. I remind members that the commission's report was approved by this Assembly as were the majority of names of the electoral divisions. There were, however, changes to the suggested names of four electoral divisions. Mr. Speaker, those suggestions were made in order to better reflect the history and character of those divisions as well as the desires of their constituents. Specifically, the Assembly approved the following name changes. The proposed electoral division referred to by the commission as Okotoks-High River will retain its existing name of Highwood, the electoral division of Strathcona will now be named Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the electoral division of Calgary-Montrose will now be named Calgary-Greenway, and the electoral division of Calgary-North Hill will now be named Calgary-Klein.

I'd like to elaborate, if I may. As an hon. member pointed out, we have a long-standing tradition of naming some ridings for leaders of different political parties. Edmonton-Manning and Calgary-Lougheed were given as examples. To add my voice to the mix, I'm pleased the amendment was made to rename Dunvegan-Central Peace to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. Renaming Calgary-North Hill and Dunvegan-Central Peace clearly signals our deepest appreciation for the work of past leaders.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 28 will repeal and replace the existing act of the same name, and the new electoral boundaries will come into effect when the next general election is called in Alberta. Bill 28 will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with its population and current needs. We must keep pace with the growth of this province. We must adequately represent the geography and the interests of our citizens.

The decisions made by the Electoral Boundaries Commission were not easy ones and involved a very labour-intensive process.

The commission had to take into account a lot of different factors when rendering their decisions, factors that may be lost on some members of this House. But this isn't about numbers, Mr. Speaker. This is about representing the needs of all Albertans. The right to be heard is quintessential in this province and in Canada. Rural or urban, let's ensure that our people have a voice in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, today many of us met members of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, who have faced life-and-death decisions in Afghanistan and have committed their lives to the freedom and quality of life that we have as Canadians. Just as it is their duty and responsibility to protect our country and our freedoms, it is our duty and responsibility to live up to the gift of freedom that they protect by ensuring that all Albertans have fair representation and the right to be heard in this great province in this great country of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the very thoughtful words of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. She's always been a very thoughtful individual, and I thought her words were very appropriate.

I do have a couple of concerns, though, and I'd like to get her input and her feelings on them. As the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere we, of course, have a very large population right now, about 65,000 people in our riding, so we needed some boundary redraw. We had dozens and dozens and dozens of people make presentations. We had our mayor of Airdrie, aldermen in Airdrie, mayor of Chestermere, aldermen in Chestermere, our county. We had our trustees. We had many, many different chambers of commerce, et cetera, make presentations, and almost every presentation given – in particular the area residents around Chestermere and Langdon and Balzac, where you have the big CrossIron Mills mall, Beiseker, Irricana, and so forth – said the same thing: we don't want to get lumped in with the Calgary riding, of course, but we think that it would be appropriate for us to be part of an east Calgary rural area.

Generally speaking, it was going to be Chestermere-Strathmore. In fact, in the first report that was put out, Chestermere-Strathmore was actually the proposed riding. Unfortunately, what happened after that was that a document was put forward between the first report and the final report where the Deputy Premier put forward on his government letterhead a set of recommendations from caucus, things that caucus members had requested the ridings be changed to, and sent it to the boundaries commission. We've gone over that in question period; we don't need to rehash it here. But the result of that, whether it was that or something else, I found very interesting in that the boundaries in my area – even though the MLA and all the different individuals living in the area had made clear statements as to how they thought the boundaries should go and the first report reflected those statements, all of a sudden we got the final report, and it had changed. All of a sudden Chestermere was this weird, funky horseshoe around north Calgary. It kind of goes in between Airdrie and Calgary. There's a small little flick there for Balzac that's included, and it takes in west Rocky View, and then it goes down and takes in Chestermere and Langdon.

It was very confusing for the people in my community as to why that happened because there was really no reason for it other than it seemed clear to me that the submissions that were made, in particular by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks as well as others in the government that we saw, are the ones that seemed to get implemented in the final report.

Now, for myself anyway, I found that quite offensive. I found that it was a complete interference in a nonpartisan, nonpolitical process by the government. Even if it wasn't, the perception was pretty damning. I understand that you're happy with the boundary redraws, and I understand that most of the government members are happy with the boundary redraws. But you know what? The people of Airdrie-Chestermere feel that there was political interference, and I would like you to ease my mind and ease constituents about that situation.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I haven't looked closely at the boundaries of Airdrie-Chestermere, but I would say to you that this funky horseshoe thing that the member is referring to also happened in my riding as it is today. The funky horseshoe that goes around Red Deer-North is now going to be Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, so people who live one block from the city of Red Deer will have to now vote in the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake poll. So I would say to the member: please don't think that there was anything specifically against your riding of Airdrie-Chestermere because I suffer the same thing.

I would have to say that I don't want to second-guess the wisdom and whatever criteria our commission used because I think that our commission was made up of excellent members. Although some of us may not be entirely happy about what our boundaries are, I still feel that having the four extra electoral divisions is important to the people of Alberta since we've grown by 1 million people since 1986, which was the last time that the number of electoral divisions was changed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recognize, as did the hon. seniors' minister, that the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission did exactly what they were asked to do. They toured the province. They had representation from all parties in terms of the selection of the members, and they did the best job they could given the rationale that they were presented with. There's no doubt about their qualifications. The hon. member mentioned her fondness for the judge. We had great respect for the selection of Keith Archer, a well-known professor and environmentalist, who had both a rural, in terms of living in the Banff-Canmore area, and an urban perspective, having taught in Calgary.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is the representation by population aspect of things. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, I believe, mentioned the incident at the Boston Tea Party. No taxation without representation was the cry made when English bundles of tea were tossed into the harbour. My concern, however, is representation by population. The fact is that 80 per cent plus of Alberta's population lives in urban centres, urban constituencies. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out the disproportionate representation. He's in charge of an area that has 65,000 constituents, an extremely large constituency, yet in some rural areas the size of the constituency is almost one-third of what he is expected to represent. That suggests that some rural members are more worthy of representation, in other words a 3 to 1 representation for their population, than urban members are.

Regardless of that lack of representation I don't believe the answer, Mr. Speaker, is in expanding what I see as a dysfunctional democratic arrangement that we currently have. With regard to that dysfunction, it doesn't matter if you have 87 members or 83 members; it matters how you represent your members. What we have seen over the last two weeks in particular is a series of debates rushed through this House through the evening hours, the early morning hours, and there's not going to be an improvement in that process until there is a change either in government or a change in government attitude. My particular hope is that whenever the next election occurs, we will do a better job in Alberta with a minority coalition government than is currently the case with the federal government.

The electoral boundaries process expands the size of government. The expansion, Mr. Speaker, I believe is unwarranted. We have representation in our cities, whether it be Red Deer or Medicine Hat, our smaller cities, Lethbridge, and so on, Leduc being one of our newest cities, that have considerably fewer Reeves or councillors or alderpeople to do the democratic job, and they seem to do it well. Somewhere between the number of representatives in terms of MPs and the representation of alderpeople I think would be the right amount.

In Calgary-Varsity the population that I represent is in the area of about 45,000 to 50,000. That's the sort of average. Then the Electoral Boundaries Commission was tasked with looking at a certain percentage above, a certain percentage below. Just adding more people to a process that I am feeling is currently dysfunctional is not going to provide Albertans with an improved democratic experience. There will be people that are not necessarily as stretched as they were, as currently is the case for the representative from Airdrie-Chestermere, but will that mean an improvement in the democratic turnout when it comes to vote?

I would hope that that was part of the wisdom of the government in moving from 83 to 87, but in terms of government wisdom or lack thereof, we've seen various new Premiers come in and first decrease the size of cabinet and then increase it so that everybody had a job or everybody was the parliamentary assistant or the associate to or was on a committee, et cetera, et cetera.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission did what it was tasked to do, to find four more centres of population that the government felt were underrepresented. As I say, it's not the number of individuals represented; it's the quality of the representation they receive. Mr. Speaker, I believe the proportion in this House will change dramatically after the next election, and I am hoping that the coalition that forms the next government can create greater efficiency than what we have seen since Peter Lougheed left office.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A twofold question. I'm wondering whether this member would clarify his comments because he's insinuating that members of this Legislature that are not in cabinet or are not parliamentary assistants have no job, have no work. Is he implying that he actually, not being in cabinet and not being a parliamentary assistant, has idle hands and is not working? [interjections] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood obviously has no work because he's taking time heckling me right now.

Is he also insinuating that the opposition in this Legislature, being the WRA, the NDs, and Liberals, are about to form a coalition to take over the government, which would be very similar to what happened in Ottawa not too long ago and didn't work very well? I would like to hear about this coalition conspiracy that's going on in the opposition.

Mr. Chase: I would love to enlighten the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mind you, I only have about three minutes left to do so, and it's a rather impossible task, but I will start. I will start.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you saying that he's a slow student?

Mr. Chase: No. He's a teacher. I respect all teachers.

With regard to the representation, I hope the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration recognizes the difference in the workload of an opposition member. Whether it be a member of the NDP caucus, which has to divide up their portfolio responsibilities by two, or the Wildrose by four, or the Liberals by eight, the amount of effort that is required given our very limited caucus budgets is tremendous. To suggest that a Conservative backbencher has any type of the workload within the parliament – I'm not saying within their constituencies. Within our constituencies we all have a tremendous, important responsibility.

As to the coalition that you asked me to talk about, I said that I didn't want to see the types of coalitions of opportunism that had been formed in the federal government. If it was convenient, on one occasion the NDP and the Liberals would work together. Maybe the Bloc would join. At other times the Conservatives depended on the Bloc to push through a particular desire they had. Now, that was a coalition of opportunism.

My belief is that if you have a type of proportional representation, if you use the best thoughts from all parties – and, hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, I did not suggest that the coalition could not include Conservative members. I didn't say what the coalition would look like. I just said that there would be a coalition. Whether it's the health care crisis, whether it's the crisis in education, whether it's the crisis that we're experiencing with over 78,000 children living below the poverty line, Albertans have lost their patience with this government's inaction, particularly since 1994, so I believe we're going to see a wider representation from a variety of parties than the Conservative majority, that has dominated this province's governments for over 40 years.

Now, I am a big fan of Peter Lougheed. Peter Lougheed was a builder. He built schools. He built hospitals. He recognized the importance of investing in the oil sands, part of what we talked about in Bill 24 tonight. Unfortunately, we have not had that calibre since Peter Lougheed.

We have seen Getty do his best in a very troubled economic time. We've seen Premier Klein bring stable institutions of public support to their knees from 1994 to 1998. We have this particular Premier, who has yet to get a handle on education even though he had wonderful surpluses to begin his leadership. There is simply no kind of a handle on health care.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased to rise this evening and join in third reading debate on Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. Members may want to take a moment and fasten their seatbelts here because I'm going to race through some material that I think is important to discuss tonight.

It's a person's basic right to be able to vote in this country, and this bill, I believe, will help ensure that all Albertans have a voice that is heard and a voice that matters, Mr. Speaker. Five generations of my family voted in Alberta, one of the most cherished privileges that we have in this great province. I'd submit to you that in those earlier years that was about all my family had, that right to participate in our parliamentary democracy, to have representation, and beyond that, to have representation that they could meet with, that they could greet personally, that they could interact with, that they could explore ideas and their vision for Alberta with, not only what we'd become but where we would go forward.

Essentially, this bill will ensure that the electoral map continues to properly reflect the province's ever-changing population. As Alberta's population grows, so does the requirement to represent and accommodate this growth in the Assembly. This is why Bill 28 will divide the province into 87 electoral divisions, which, of course, is four more than currently in place in Alberta. The four additional electoral boundaries will include Calgary-Hawkwood, Calgary-South East, Edmonton-South West, and Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Mr. Speaker, the last time the number of electoral divisions was updated was back in 1986, 24 years ago. Since then, Alberta's population has grown by approximately 1 million people. These extra 1 million people deserve equitable representation.

Mr. Speaker, as members in this Assembly know, we are here to work for and represent our constituents. We work for them, and we are accountable to them. Alberta is a large province with a diverse landscape, population, and demographics. This diverse province and population means that many different opinions and concerns need to be represented through elected representation right here in this Assembly. A person's address should not affect their right to be heard. This is why more electoral boundaries are needed. More seats are required in order to give all Albertans a voice in this Assembly.

Furthermore, Bill 28 is consistent with the Electoral Boundaries Commission's report and reflects what Albertans said that they wanted. As a reminder to all members in this Assembly, the Legislature accepted the recommendations of the independent Electoral Boundaries Commission. Over the course of a year this commission travelled around the province. Twice, I know, Mr. Speaker, they visited Red Deer, once early in the process and later to discuss an interim report that was filed. They stuck to their mandate of reviewing all of the electoral boundaries throughout our great province. The commission received well over 500 written comments on the interim report, and 117 people addressed the commission in the April and May public hearings.

Bill 28 ensures that the commission's recommendations are adopted. I guess a question to members who oppose this bill is: why would we ignore the recommendations of an independent commission who consulted with Albertans for over a year?

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know too well what it is like to fight for a voice in Canada. As most know, the heavily populated provinces of Ontario and Quebec can often determine the outcome of a federal election even before the votes from the west are tallied. This has resulted in a scenario where people from the west have felt disenfranchised from the rest of the country. I probably could go on for hours on this matter, but that is a discussion for another time.

My point is that this same argument can be used here today with Bill 28. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how someone cannot support giving a voice and meaningful representation to Albertans. Bill 28 will provide more equitable representation for Albertans. It's plain, and it's simple.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition members' argument against Bill 28 is very shortsighted in the grand scheme of things. Opposition members argue that Bill 28 will increase costs as four more MLAs are required. Essentially, this argument comes down to not thinking that equitable representation is worth the small additional cost.

One of the things that has been ingrained in me, Mr. Speaker, over the years is that while we appreciate the value and the privilege of having a parliamentary democracy in Alberta, it's never been described as cheap. I believe that all Albertans would support the idea of investing a few dollars per Albertan per year to make sure that the integrity of the great sense of representation, the model that we've developed, is maintained going forward and never compromised by the ability to feel that Albertans are not provided with adequate representation. The benefits will definitely outweigh the cost in the short term and, without a doubt, in the long term.

Opposition members also sometimes argue that four new seats are not needed because new technology allows us to communicate with our constituents quicker and over longer distances. Technology has evolved, Mr. Speaker, over the years. In fact, in driving up and down many of the gravel roads in Alberta and the highways in Alberta, I can remember the days of communicating via pay phone. Yes, they had pay phones when I first started doing that.

An Hon. Member: How much was it for a call?

Mr. Dallas: I think it was probably a dime, hon. member.

I remember later on having a Bag Phone in my car—that probably weighed about 20 pounds; it only really worked when you were driving or parked in the median or at the side of a major primary highway, to be honest about it—and then the evolution of cellphones and that type of thing. Technology has evolved now, and certainly one of the things that as a representative I'm trying to do is minimize the amount of time that I'm spending talking on a phone while I'm driving even though I've had hands-free devices for a number of years.

You know, when I think about constituents and what their expectations are in terms of communicating with me, yes, we receive some inquiries where the constituent really is trying to secure some information, and providing them with a link to a website or being able to provide them with a document through the office or potentially receiving through the mail a letter or that type of thing is satisfactory. But far more often, Mr. Speaker, what the constituent wants to do is meet personally. They want to gain context on the kinds of policies and decisions that are being made, the legislation that's being enacted through this Legislature, and they want to interact in a very direct way. They want to meet.

Mr. Speaker, even though my constituency of Red Deer-South is entirely urban and I have the ability to do that, to attend small gatherings, to meet one-on-one with constituents, I know that the challenges in many parts of Alberta are significantly greater in terms of that ability. The distance to travel, the time that's involved to move around to the various parts of the province provide some very unique and distinct challenges to provide representation. I would suggest that contrary arguments to providing the additional representation are not particularly well thought out. We're able to communicate over longer distances with the phone and Internet, but really nothing replaces the expectation that a constituent has to provide face-to-face interaction.

Just imagine some scenarios that might evolve in the future going forward, perhaps a high school graduation where in expectation of their elected representative, their MLA, they receive their greetings by some type of a BlackBerry message or a voice recording or, you know, sending them a video on an iPhone. I don't think that replaces the kind of interaction that constituents are expecting. I fear that sometimes the movement towards technology like this will maybe serve to further disenfranchise voters and ultimately weaken our political system and the way that we do representation. Occasionally there is new technology that evolves that helps us communicate, but it also always comes with some challenges.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that Albertans would like to have a say in how their tax dollars are being spent. They can do that through this type of enhanced representation, and this government is not going to deny any Albertan that right. Bill 28 will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with its population and reflect Alberta's and Albertans' current needs.

The most important point is that this bill will add four more electoral divisions, which means equitable representation for all Albertans. This is a step that has not been taken in over 20 years and is one that is needed now. Bill 28 reflects the Electoral Boundaries Commission report as amended in the Assembly. The consultation and thought that went into this document are admirable, and I would like to take this time to thank the commission for their hard work.

With that, I'll conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker, and I urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Red Deer-South I have this question. I heard a speaker from the government caucus on the previous bill, on CO₂ sequestration, complaining about the $5 billion deficit that we have in this province and expressing a great deal of worry about having this $5 billion deficit. If that is the case, how can this government member now turn around half an hour later and say that we can afford to expand the size of this Assembly from 83 seats to 87 seats? Shouldn't we be saving money and reducing the size of this bloated Executive Council?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thanks, hon. member, for the observation and the question. I need to be a little careful with my math here, but I think that about 0.01 per cent of budget expenditures are involved in support of this entire Assembly. I know that there are some expenditures that are incremental that would perhaps be added to the Assembly in terms of the addition of four members, but I think the question is not: how much is the expenditure, and, you know, is it appropriate or not? I think we simply need to ask Albertans: what's the price of having a democracy that provides them with the representation that they're looking for?

Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that would be that Albertans would resoundingly tell us that they have an expectation that that expenditure, however small, however large it is, is the price of having an effective democracy in Alberta, and it would be a priority for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In terms of fairness of representation do you think it's fair that there are some rural constituencies under 30,000 and that we have Airdrie-Chestermere with 65,000? How is that fair?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's a great question, actually, from the Member for Calgary-Varsity, and I'd be happy to address that. I guess one needs to distinguish between the terms "fair" and "equal." I would suggest to you that Red Deer-South, while it's not quite the size in terms of the number of constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere, it is, in fact, prior to the adjustments that are proposed, one of the largest constituencies in Alberta. Even though I will deeply miss the loss of some constituents that are proposed to move to Red Deer-North, it will still be one of the largest constituencies. What I heard after the interim report was filed and the commission came back to Red Deer: throughout our community was a desire to make sure that the constituency was aligned such that representation was distinctly urban and was provided from the city as opposed to some of the opportunities to move the boundaries here and there.

As I alluded to earlier, Mr. Speaker, I know that some of these constituencies require virtually half a dozen hours to drive from one end to the other. There are some constituencies in our great province, in fact, where it's not even possible to drive to all of the constituents, and air travel and other modes of getting into remote communities are necessary. But that said, those Albertans are afforded and have every right to exactly the same privileges of meeting and interacting with and addressing their elected representative as any Albertan that happens to live in an urban area that has high population density.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have 35 seconds. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to dwell on that for just a second longer. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, when he was speaking, had talked about: it's how you represent your constituents. I just need to know from yourself, when you talk about representation, if you're taking into account access and opportunity for those individuals being able to see their representative?

The Deputy Speaker: The next hon. member to speak on the bill is the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've spoken a lot on this bill, obviously, or on a few amendments on it, anyway, over the last little while. I'd like to sum up my arguments for why I cannot support this bill. We talked a little bit earlier about what I think is some clear political interference that went into the report, from the first to the final report, of the Electoral Boundaries Commission in certain ridings, so I can't support it for that reason.

I can't support it for the reason that I do not feel that this province needs four additional MLAs. I do not feel it's justified to have four additional MLAs. I think you could redraw the boundaries appropriately, even out the constituency populations as much as possible, and that would have been fine going forward. You know, I would have had more of a stomach for four additional seats had I felt that the role of an MLA as it pertains to his role as a voting member in this House was legitimate.

The Member for Red Deer-South talked about a meaningful role for MLAs, having more meaningful representation, I believe his words were. That's right; we do need more meaningful representation. When I sit here and I look at the other side – let's just take four bills and use them as an example. Bill 43 from last year, the agriculture marketing act I think it was, something like that, essentially the check-off bill, where we talked about whether the check-off was mandatory or not, that you have to allow choice: that bill was passed. Now, however you feel about that bill, for or against it – I was in the caucus still, and I was for the choice. I supported the agriculture minister on that. That was my choice, and I voted that way in caucus and in this Legislature, and I stand by that choice.

I know for a fact that there were many, many, many members of that caucus, who I won't name because that's not fair to them, who clearly did not agree with that bill, and if they had had the freedom to vote on that bill, they would have voted against it. If you add up the people on this side of the House at that time and the opposition that were against it . . .

Some Hon. Members: Relevance. Relevance.

Mr. Anderson: How is this not relevant?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. I just want to read something here. Standing Order 23(c) says: "persists in needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session." Just pay attention. Things have been decided already.

Mr. Anderson: We're cutting off democracy in this House. You know, I hope I can represent my constituency here. I hope I can do that. Maybe I can't even do that.

I'll talk about it again: meaningful MLAs, meaningful representation. If we're going to have four more MLAs, you need to have MLAs that are able to freely vote, not act like trained seals. I know for a fact that there are people on the other side of the House that continually vote for bills in this House that they vote against in caucus, or maybe they don't even vote in caucus. It depends if we have a vote, like with the human rights tribunal. You remember that vote that never occurred.

The point is that they vote against these things in one area, and then they vote for them in another area. That shows me, Mr. Speaker, that it is not meaningful to be an MLA in this House, and that is wrong. It is absolutely wrong. If we want to have meaningful representation in this House, we need to have free votes, period, on every piece of legislation.

When you go into this House, you are the people's representative. Each and every one of us is the people's representative. We're not loyal to parties, or we sure shouldn't be. We're not loyal to donors or special interests or lobbyists. We're not loyal to the Premier. The reason we're not loyal to those people – we can be loyal to them, but they're not the ones that we are most loyal to. The people that we are most loyal to, most accountable to in this House should be the people that we represent, first and foremost. Now, if that loyalty lines up with loyalty to the Premier and loyalty to the party, great, but if it conflicts, our duty as members is to vote for what is in the best interests of our constituents, plain and simple. That principle has been entirely lost by this PC government. Look at the lack of democracy and bullying . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, please address the chair.

Also, hon. Government House Leader, you have something to say?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I rise on a point of order with respect to relevance, Beauchesne's 459. The point on relevance is very clear. The question before the House right now is Bill 28, and Bill 28 has a very succinct purpose.

Mr. Anderson: Why do we need more MLAs? That's the question I'm asking.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member shouts out: why do we need more MLAs? I would point out to him that that was decided when the bill was passed setting up the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The boundaries commission was established under a different act of the Legislature, and that act directed them to use 87 seats. So they had no choice. They came back with their report with 87 seats.

The effect of the Electoral Divisions Act that's before us today has nothing to do with whether there are 83 or 87 seats. It has nothing to do with what the hon. member is talking about. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: It has nothing to do with any of the things that he was talking about. That's a very interesting topic, and I would love to debate that hon. member on his topic about his particular relevancy in the process, how he can make a difference in the process, what advocacy inside a caucus and outside the caucus looks like. All of those things are very important things. How parliamentary democracy works is a very important topic, and I'd love to discuss that with him.

But what we're discussing tonight and the rules of the House relating to what we're doing tonight is the Electoral Divisions Act, an act which puts in place the report, the effect of the report, which was adopted by this House in a motion. All this act really is about is what the boundaries are for those 87 seats.

The hon. member may want to stray a little bit and talk about 83 to 87 seats. Nobody objected when he did that before in committee or anywhere else. Nobody objected to that. But when he talks about caucus and being part of a caucus, when he starts to make insinuations about what happened and what didn't happen when he was in caucus . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: . . . forgetting any of the morals and ethics that he might have had as a member of a caucus in terms of what gets discussed, knowing and understanding that when he makes insinuations about what happened in a caucus, other members of the caucus will not respond to those because they have honour and integrity and understand that being involved in a caucus means that sometimes you win and sometimes you lose. In fact, in this business if you bat .360 consistently, you ought to go to the hall of fame. He should understand that, but he doesn't seem to understand that, and he wants to drag it into debate on bills in the House on issues that have no relevance to what he's talking about. So, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that you call him on the point of order with respect to relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have something to say about this point of order? Go ahead.

Mr. Anderson: It is so absolutely amazing to me that we're sitting here after all of the bullying, after shutting down debate – shutting down debate – in this Legislature with time allocation, shutting it down, the undemocratic nature of this, and this member continues to call points of order saying, “Oh, you know, relevancy, relevancy” when we just allowed the Member for Red Deer-South, the Member for Red Deer-North to talk on this exact same subject. You know what? Great. That's great. I support that. That's democracy. That's debate. I've enjoyed the speeches.

I get up, and I make the government leader a little bit uncomfortable because he knows full well that I'm telling the truth, so he gets up, and he calls another point of order. Now, he can disagree with me, and I ask him to stand up and disagree with me when it's his turn to talk and tell me how parliamentary democracy works in his world. But in my world an MLA represents his constituents first. I wanted to make that clear as a justification for having four additional MLAs under this bill. I think that is not only relevant; it is pertinent to everything that has happened in this session during the last three weeks.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, the chair heard both sides of the point of order. What I have just read before regarding Standing Order 23(c): “needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session.” I would like to call on the hon. member to focus on Bill 28. Of course, you are free to represent your constituents' views and any other views of your constituents, but tonight we're talking about Bill 28. You still have time, so stay on Bill 28.

Mr. Chase: With regard to the point of order, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I already ruled on it. Please sit down. Thanks.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anderson: Maybe we should have another point of order. Let's do it. This government has once again shown that they are absolutely unwilling to allow free votes in this Legislature. They do it on every single bill, Mr. Speaker, every single one. They do it again and again and again. Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. Okay. Let's take a second to calm down and think. We are here to debate on Bill 28, and we have a limit of two hours to debate.

All right. I would like to remind the hon. member to stay on Bill 28. That's the subject matter today.

An Hon. Member: Let's hear about Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Anderson: Chestermere-Rocky View: let's hear about that, then.

You know what? I had a much higher level of respect for the House leader over there until this session. I thought he was a democrat. He is not.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, Bill 28.

Mr. Anderson: Chestermere-Rocky View. On the debate on Bill 28. One of the most ridiculous examples of not only the gerrymandering but of government interference that was put into this bill and put into the final report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission was, as I said earlier, the way that Airdrie-Chestermere was split up into many different constituencies. Now, electorally that did not hurt me, and it won't hurt me in any way, shape, or form, but I know very much that the people in my riding, especially in Chestermere, were very, very displeased. They put their input in there, as did Airdrie, as did many other stakeholders, and then the first report came out. That first report reflected the input of what the folks in my riding had said. Then afterwards, after the Deputy Premier sent his political, interfering letter . . .

Mr. Horner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There's a point of order to be addressed right now.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Horner: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. member has referred to allegations of gerrymandering. He has referred to political interference in a report which we've already decided on in this House. It's pretty obvious that his vision of democracy is only if it agrees with what his vision is, and it's pretty obvious that if the vote doesn't go his way, it's not democratic. We saw that when he was in our caucus, and it's obvious that he's got a revisionist view of history, as well.

Certainly, we're here talking about Bill 28. He's obviously taunting the chair. He's obviously trying to upset the proceedings of this House this evening. He's doing a good job of it. But, Mr. Speaker, he's not on the topic of the bill at hand, which is the democratic process and the parliamentary process in this Legislature. In his area of life, wherever he is, perhaps it isn't, but in this House, Mr. Speaker, he should be on the bill, on topic.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, stay on the bill. Rather than talking about individuals, let's discuss the bill which is on the table.

Mr. Anderson: You know, Mr. Speaker, democracy in this Legislature is dead for the time being. Dead. These folks over here are bullies. They are fearmongers. They hate dissent. They hate debate. They don't like people telling them what they . . . [interjections] No. This is on the point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I want to repeat again. Talk about the bill. Don't talk about this guy or these people and so on. Talk about the bill, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anderson: I do not support Bill 28 because it stems out of a corrupted process, and I will not support a bill that stems out of a corrupted process. It is corrupt in every single way, and I will not in any way support a bill that has come about because of an interfered-with process. I'm not even going to say who interfered with it. We'll just let the public make the connection. But I would say that it was interfered with by some unknown force, and I don't think that that was proper. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore feels the same way about how his riding was effectively, in my view, gerrymandered. Is that also subject to a point of order? No? Good.

Again, it's amazing that the only people in this House that don't understand how ridiculous, how undemocratic, how pathetic they look are the people over there. I know that Albertans are ashamed of them and disappointed in them. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that in 12 months this will be resolved, and there will be a lot of people not on that side and a lot of disappointed faces over on that side.

I will conclude debate since I cannot speak on anything actually relevant to this bill because I have been silenced by that group, who doesn't want to hear dissent, who doesn't want to hear anything but their own voices because they care only about themselves and clinging to power and will do so with everything they have left in their hands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Doerksen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is on 29(2)(a), and I do have some questions for the hon. member. I hope that you will allow me enough time to frame those questions because I have more than one. I have heard, as have other members in the House, some rather pompous comments about political interference, lack of democracy, and also statements about loyalty. I would ask the hon. member across the way, first of all, if the mandate and the carrying out of the Electoral Boundaries Commission did not in fact highlight the work of democracy in consultation with Albertans.

There were some comments made earlier with regard to potential political interference with regard to some rural ridings and some of the ways that they were divided up. If I look at the mandate that the commission was to work under, I believe that they actually responded very well to some of the comments of Albertans. In fact, in the Strathmore-Brooks constituency there was not an initial public consultation as there was in many other parts of the province. When you look at what the interim report spelled out, it actually divided that particular riding into more diverse disconnections than most other ridings in the province. In fact, when Albertans heard the interim report, 37 per cent of responses to the interim report came from the Strathmore-Brooks constituency. [interjections] Do I have the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has the floor. [interjection] Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has the floor.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I would ask the member across the way if he's actually read some of the comments that were put to the commission following the interim report and the response particularly from residents of Strathmore-Brooks, who made up 37 per cent of the responses to the interim report. My estimate of that – and I would ask the member if he wouldn't agree to some extent – is that maybe this is actually a triumph of democracy and consultation with Albertans. I would suggest – and it's reflected in the comments of residents of several constituencies and particularly the constituents of Strathmore-Brooks – that, in fact, they didn't respond to the initial invitation for responses because the riding that they resided in actually met the mandate that the commission had been given with regard to how they were to divide up the province.

To me, when I look at what the commission actually did, I would suggest that it is a triumph for democracy and consultation because if you look at what happened with regard to the whole mandate that they had, we know that the most rapid growth and the biggest population variances were either in or around our two largest cities of Calgary and Edmonton. There's no question that when constituencies are changed or altered, that creates some concern for residents, but it would just be logical, to my estimate – and I would ask the member if he wouldn't agree with that – that that's where some of the most significant shifts would take place and that in the more rural and diverse areas of the province that, in fact, are divided by natural boundaries like rivers and that kind of thing, similar to what happens in Strathmore-Brooks, we would try and it would be a logical effort to listen to what Albertans had to say and maybe adjust plans as a result of that.

I can say as a representative of members of my constituency that they felt the response to the interim report that came out as part of the final report actually left them feeling that democracy worked in this province and that there was a consultative process that could change, that when the interim report came out, it wasn't fixed in stone, that there was a process for that to be changed and that that process actually worked. One of my questions to the member across the way is: does he not agree that that's a plausible situation?

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I've used up the time.

The Deputy Speaker: The five minutes for Standing Order 29(2)(a) is up.

The next hon. member to speak is the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you wish to speak after, right?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to be able to rise and speak today on Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. I'm well aware of the purpose of this bill, as I'm sure all members of this Legislature are after our previous discussion and debate over its content and purposes. Bill 28, of course, sets out the names and boundaries of Alberta's electoral divisions.

I want to take this opportunity to commend the commission on its very fine work. As most, if not all, of us here already know, the commission was established in July 2009. It submitted its interim report as required on February 24, 2010. The commission then held an additional series of public hearings and considered well over 500 written submissions commenting on the interim report. The commission was required to submit its final report within five months of submitting the interim report. The commission completed its mandate basically in full when it submitted its final report.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize here the importance of the input of many Albertans who took part in the commission's process. Commissions such as the Electoral Boundaries Commission that have a mandate to hear from Albertans in some respects are only as effective as the people they hear from and the submissions they make. In this case I think most members of this Assembly would agree that the commission did a credible and thorough job in this report, and I think that speaks well to the quality of the submissions Albertans made.

With that in mind, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the many Albertans who took the time and trouble to share their thoughts and opinions with the commission. Public contribution to work such as the commission's is vital to a successful, full result, and in this case Albertans have through their submissions demonstrated once again their commitment to this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to extend my appreciation to the individuals and organizations that have provided submissions and made presentations to the Electoral Boundaries

Commission. I know one of the constituents of Calgary-Mackay spent many, many, many hours studying the history of the riding, the demographic makeup, the changes over time as well as comparing our constituency with other ridings in preparation for a very comprehensive submission to the commission. I also want to thank the members of the Calgary-Mackay association for also preparing and submitting a report to the commission.

I want to thank all the fine citizens in the Calgary-Mackay constituency for their valuable participation in this important public process. This kind of active civic engagement is absolutely critical in helping to sustain a high level of democracy, of democratic life in our communities and society.

Mr. Speaker, the contribution of Albertans symbolizes the importance of the commission's work to ensure Alberta remains democratically representative and effective. Proper and appropriate representation on the electoral map is fundamental to the proper and effective functioning of any democracy. For that to be true in Alberta, as has been observed already in this Assembly, it is necessary to ensure the electoral map continues to properly reflect the province's changing population distribution.

As a result of the fine efforts of the commission, the following name changes are proposed: first, Dunvegan-Central Peace to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley; Calgary-Acadia from Calgary-Egmont; Calgary-Greenway from Calgary-Montrose; Calgary-Hawkwood is added; Calgary-Klein from Calgary-North Hill; Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill from Calgary-Nose Hill; Calgary-Northern Hills from Calgary-Mackay; and Calgary-South East is also added.

The electoral map must also continue to reflect changing population densities as well as community interests and other factors, as the commission's report explains. Here I'm quoting directly from its final report.

The 2006 Canada Census resulted in an Alberta population of 3,290,350.

It was identified that three Indian reserves were incompletely enumerated, with the result that the provincial population was adjusted by 7,288 persons, based on data provided by Alberta Aboriginal Relations. Therefore, the total Alberta population to be used by the Commission based on the Census in recommending the boundaries of electoral divisions is 3,297,638. The issue of net undercoverage in the 2006 Canada Census, in the view of the Commission, has been addressed by the use of the subsequent Alberta Municipal Affairs information and, in any event, could not accurately be allocated to electoral divisions.

This was the number used for the householder distributed in September 2009 and subsequently adjusted with more recent sources of data.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's worth noting that the commission's report also confirms it considered more recent population information as follows:

Alberta Municipal Affairs annually publishes an Official Population List. When the Commission began its work preparing this Interim Report, the 2008 list was available and several of the larger urban municipalities had announced results of their 2009 municipal census. The Commission decided to use the additional population information to determine a "provincial quotient" and subsequently in recommending electoral division boundaries in municipalities where the additional population information was available in a format that permitted its use for these purposes.

The report goes on to say that the Official Population List identifies that 142 municipalities and the 8 Metis Settlements, representing more than 85% of the total provincial population, have taken a census subsequent to the 2006 Canada Census.

Ultimately, the commission determined:

The population of Alberta has increased by 258,945 since the adjusted 2006 census of 3,297,638. The total population being considered by the commission is 3,556,583.

Using all of this information, the commission found that the average population per electoral division is 40,880.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear from the above that not only did the commission do a remarkable job in accurately assessing the population figures on which to base its work; I think it also shows that the commission performed its work with great attention to detail. I for one am pleased to stand today and thank them for that.

I want to stay with the subject of the commission's work around arriving at an accurate assessment of Alberta's population. To do that, I will again quote from the commission's final report.

The Commission opted to use updated information because the 2006 Canada Census data are more than three years old. The authoritative source for updated information is the Official Population List published by Alberta Municipal Affairs. This list is normally published in early November. There was broad-based support for using updated data.

In order to meet its legislated deadlines, the Commission held its initial round of public hearings in late September and early October. In order to inform the public and provide time to prepare submissions, the information Householder was distributed in September to all Alberta households. At that time, the only population information available was the 2006 census information. Many people making submissions invested a considerable amount of time in analyzing this data as part of preparing their submissions.

However, between the preparation of the Householder and the start of the public hearings, the Commission did receive 2009 municipal census information announced by the majority of the largest urban municipalities. The major effect of this was a significant increase in the quotient from that mentioned in the Householder, which consequently outdated the analyses in the submissions.

There were also considerable technical challenges in incorporating the updated population information into the electronic mapping program which is designed for use with census data that contains a greater level of geographic detail. This was a particular challenge where a municipality is located in more than one electoral division.

If future Commissions plan to use updated population information, it would assist persons wishing to make submissions if the Householder is published once the updated information has been incorporated into the population data so that there is a common data base.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I think the above quotations indicate the scrupulosity with which the commission carried out its work. I think the quotations also speak to the commission's commitment to the accuracy of this work. Ultimately, I think both its scrupulosity and its commitment to accuracy demonstrate again why Albertans can be confident in the recommendations of the commission's final report.

Mr. Speaker, if I might add, the fact that the report can therefore be seen as so reliable is testimony to the integrity and commitment of the commission's members. I think it also speaks very well of the process Alberta uses to ensure balanced, effective, and fair representation on the commission. As we know, the commission was an independent body composed of five individuals. The task they took on was a huge one and one that must have seemed, or at least would have seemed to me, quite daunting. The fact that they fulfilled the commission's mandate and purpose within the allotted time frame is a credit to their efforts and abilities. I would once again like to offer my thanks to them officially on the record for the work they so ably accomplished.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to address another matter related to the commission's work, and it concerns remarks made recently by an hon. member of this Assembly. Some comments have been made that the amount of debate set aside for Bill 28 should be longer than six hours given its importance. Now, I want to make it very clear before continuing any further that I am a firm believer in sufficient and appropriate debate for any bill brought before this Assembly. I'm sure every hon. member who sits in this Legislature would agree with me that open debate and discussion in this Assembly is absolutely fundamental to the proper functioning of democracy.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Relevance. I mean, really.

Ms Woo-Paw: I think it's safe to say that the people of Alberta expect no less from us.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a point of order?

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. There's no relevance here at all, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. Continue on Bill 28.

Ms Woo-Paw: Continue? Okay. I'll finish. Thank you.

Each of us here carries a responsibility to our constituents of being effective representatives on their behalf in the Legislature, and being effective representatives means allocating and using our available time wisely and to the best effect. I want to say, then, that the suggestion that Bill 28 requires longer than six hours of debate because of its nature suggests internal failure to understand the process that Bill 28 is the product of.

I already stated earlier how well I thought the commission did this work, how I was proud to thank the commission's members for their very thorough and meticulous work. I also thank Albertans for their contributions to the commission as it solicited comments and opinions and suggestions from around the province. In that regard, it's also worth noting that the commission did its work and heard from Albertans over the course of an entire year. The final report contains their recommendations based on their extensive work. As the members of the Assembly know, the process the commission went through to arrive at those recommendations as well as the very nature of the commission itself, at arm's length from government, and this Legislature's acceptance of those recommendations when they were presented means that, basically, the rationale for prolonged and protracted discussion and debate would be repetitive and redundant.

I have faith that the intentions of the hon. member who suggested longer than six hours for debate of Bill 28 are good and well meant. Nevertheless, I think it's also important that he recognizes that the wiser, most judicious course would be to have this Assembly debate Bill 28 using the current allotted time. That time is absolutely sufficient for a bill that is based on recommendations this Assembly has already accepted.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks for five minutes of comments or questions.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that in the last question I raised, I guess I took too much time.

I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay for a very thoughtful contribution to the discussion around third reading of Bill

28. I would simply ask a question for clarification around the process that really makes up how the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission carried out its mandate and the total aspect of what involves a changing of the electoral boundaries in this province. Part of that process involved work with the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and I think the member very adequately explained that work.

Part of that process is also consideration of the report here in the House. I think the member very adequately spelled out the length of time that this Legislature has taken to discuss the bill, to discuss the report, and to consider amendments to the bill. I think that's an integral part of what we've ended up with in the end and the bill that we will finally vote on. I just want a point of clarification from the member: if that was, in fact, her intention with regard to the extensive discussion that we've had with regard to this bill, please.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this very, very excellent question. I wanted to profile the meticulous work that the commission had undertaken to not only hear from Albertans from all parts of the province, but they took the time also to look at the most updated data from the municipalities, which is critically important for a fast-growing, developing province like ours. The fact that they updated the data to ensure the ultimate distribution of the boundaries is important in ensuring that we have balanced and effective representation for our ridings.

So I want to thank the commission for their very thorough job and for taking the time to work it into the year-long process to ensure that they used the most updated data to ensure that the boundaries are designed and divided in a way that allows for the maximum effectiveness of representation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with great interest to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay as she was talking about the number of presentations that were made by her constituents in talking about the presentations that were made to the commission. I was wondering if she could expand on the piece about her constituents actually being a part of this very democratic process as we move through Bill 28.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I was very pleased to see the kind of participation from the constituents of Calgary-Mackay. Not only did the Calgary-Mackay association participate, but we had individuals from the constituency who took a lot of personal time to do a lot of research. I think it's partly because in a riding like Calgary-Mackay, which is about 30 per cent above the average size of a constituency in this province and is growing at a very, very fast pace, people are very concerned about the level of representation for their interests, you know, in terms of having adequate representation to ensure that the educational needs, the health needs, the social services needs of the riding are adequately addressed. People felt very strongly that they needed to participate and have a voice in this process.

In fact, I'm also very pleased to say that what they recommended to the commission was the final recommendation from the commission in coming out with a new riding called Calgary-Northern Hills. So I'm sure that the constituents who participated in this process appreciated the opportunity to have their voices heard and also to have their recommendations included in the final report.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have an opportunity even though we're under the time restraints of closure on this bill. I can't imagine how democracy is served. I heard many people try to defend democracy and explain how precious it is in this province, yet we're under a closure motion twice with Bill 28.

Mr. Hancock: It's a time allocation motion.

Mr. MacDonald: No. It is a closure motion, hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and you know it. You can call it what you want, but it's a closure motion.

We forget also that this process, Mr. Speaker, has been sped up by almost a complete year. If we were to look at the original legislation, it should be just a discussion on an evening like this on what the proposed commission should look into. But here we are because this is a government that wants the option of calling a quick election.

If we look at the 87 seats, we don't need that many, obviously. People are crying in here about the government deficit and, "What are we going to do about it?" and "Oh, my gosh; we have a $5 billion deficit." Well, you start with small things like reducing expenditures for MLAs. We could have lots of use for that money, but that's not going to happen with this big majority. They want a bigger government.

Other jurisdictions work quite effectively. Their representatives work quite effectively with much larger constituencies – much larger constituencies – some with close to 100,000 constituents. They manage. They do well. I can't understand or accept the argument made, Mr. Speaker, that we need more and that more is better.

Now, Mr. Speaker, also, we have to recognize that there are other things with our election system that we should be discussing along with this idea of having 87 MLAs. Our own constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar has certainly been changed again. It's been changed radically each and every redistribution. It's odd how our strongest polls are chopped off, and we move on. But we do our best, and it has been a pleasure, I must say. I'm disappointed that if this bill becomes law, we are going to lose the fine communities of McCauley, Commonwealth, Riverdale. It was an honour and a privilege to represent those communities in this Legislative Assembly, and I will continue to do so. But that is an example of how our district was changed.

I went to one of the commission's meetings. I respectfully waited. There was a gentleman that was in a hurry, a Conservative from rural Alberta. He had commitments, so I let him make his presentation first over at the Edmonton inn. I listened with interest to his presentation.

I also listened with interest to His Worship Mayor Mandel, the mayor of Edmonton, make a very rational argument. He presented his case very well, as I thought several other individuals did, to ask respectfully that not only should the city of Edmonton get back what it lost in the last go-round with redistribution but that we get one additional seat. That was not considered by this boundaries commission, and of course Edmonton is underrepresented in this Assembly under the current mathematics. That's a fact. The mayor made an argument. We made the same argument, but unfortunately the commission didn't see it that way. I know there's a delicate balance here, but this government discriminated against the city by taking the eraser to the electoral map in the last redistribution process and thinks that the city should be grateful for getting back what they took away in the first place.

Now, where should those seats be removed? Where there are significantly less people. We can put additional modest resources forward for those members, but there's no reason why urban voters and urban Albertans should be discriminated against. They're being discriminated against with this proposed legislation, that has been forced through this Assembly by closure.

We know this is not a democratic process. We know that on an occasion there was a member of this Assembly, a duly-elected member of this Assembly, who said twice that we were going to get four more seats. Four more seats. Guess what happened? The commission was struck. We get four more seats. That individual wasn't a member of this caucus, our caucus, or the New Democrat caucus. So figure it out. If people don't have confidence in this commission, you can see why. It was a predetermined outcome.

Mr. Hancock: The act was passed to make it 87. It wasn't predetermined. The Legislature determines that.

Mr. MacDonald: The Legislature. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, within an hour, by midnight, the law will be in effect. The process will have started that we're going to expand to 87 seats. In the precious time that I have, I'm not going to talk about the size of this government and the size of the Executive Council. We'll leave that for another time.

In our community of Edmonton-Gold Bar there are certainly reasons why the citizens are suspicious of this commission and this set-up in determining our boundaries. I'll go back to 2004. It wasn't the New Democratic Party, and it wasn't the Wildrose Party that had any trouble. It was the Conservative Party who had the unsavoury practice of asking homeless people to take out Conservative Party memberships for cigarettes and whiskey and get them to the nomination meeting. He laughs, but that's a historical fact. It's wrong, Mr. Speaker, but that's what happened.

What happened in the last election? The ballot box was taken from room to room in the Chinese Free Masons apartment complex, when it should have been placed at a table and people would come and vote if their names were on the list. If their names weren't on the list, then they would be sworn in. None of this happened.

Here we have two examples in the election of 2004 and again in 2008 of problems, major problems, major violations of the Election Act. This is what we should be talking about whenever we're talking about electoral reform and redrawing the map of this province. We should be talking about financial reform. Who gives what amount of money to whom? That's not: oh, we can't talk about that in this boundaries commission report. We can't talk about what the previous Chief Electoral Officer suggested to improve the voting process.

I would have to say, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that we should not be accepting the recommendations of this commission. We should not be forced by the act of closure to restrict and limit debate on this redistribution of the seats. I think it's amusing that we would consider that six hours-plus is an adequate amount of time to publicly discuss this matter. I think we are incredibly disrespectful of the taxpayers and the citizens of this province. I have not had one person approach me in the last couple of years and say that we need more MLAs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: None like you.

Mr. MacDonald: No, hon. minister of labour. What they have said to me is: why doesn't the minister of labour ensure that we have enough nurses trained to work in our emergency rooms? Why does the advanced education minister not have enough seats in our medical schools to ensure that we have enough doctors for both urban and rural Alberta? We don't have enough doctors. How come we can't afford hospital beds but we can afford more MLAs? That's what the citizens have told me that they would like to see accomplished by this Legislative Assembly, not the creation of more seats for MLAs.

In fact, they're very confused by the direction that this government has taken on this matter, very, very confused and very, very disappointed. Some have even suggested at the coffee shop in the Capilano Mall that this is a government that's completely out of touch. What the citizens, what the voters want is more emergency room doctors, more nurses to provide compassionate care. They want more teachers. They certainly do not want, no one has expressed, I'm disappointed to say, an opinion that they want more politicians in this province. They want politicians to work harder and ensure that the money that they contribute through their taxes is wisely spent. I can say that I have the view, as they do, that our money that we are making in a contribution to the Treasury is not being spent wisely by this government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity. I've been listening, actually, quite attentively. I managed to squeeze a word or two in between the member's debate, but what really troubles me – and maybe the member can explain it to me – is that a lot of insinuations have been made over the last couple of hours by the member from the WRA and now this member. One says that this whole process is a sham or is a joke, I believe was the term being used.

Now, this member more directly indicates that he feels that this commission was biased and that there was a foregone conclusion. Is he insinuating that Judge Walter was actually influenced by this government? He made comments about money exchanges, who gives money to him. Why don't the member and the other members have the fortitude and, instead of implying in roundabout ways, stand up and say what you're really saying? That's what you're saying. There's no other way of interpreting what you're saying, that Judge Walter was actually influenced by one or all members of this government. He was told what to do, and he simply tabled a report that this government told him to table. Is that what you're saying?

Somehow no one seems to have the fortitude in this House to stand up and accuse Judge Walter. We all know Judge Walter. He is probably one of our most renowned judges on the provincial bench, and the entire bench would be supportive of him. I imagine the entire bar of this province would be supportive of him. No one would have the fortitude to accuse the judge of it, and no one would definitely say that outside of this House, yet you're standing up, members, and insinuating that this report is biased and influenced by this government.

Let's be honest. This report was written and signed by this particular judge. If you have a problem with the process, if you have a problem with the report, what you're really doing is accusing the judge. Have the fortitude, have the honour to stand up in the House and say that. Or more, go outside of the House and say that. I don't hear you saying that, and you won't do it. You don't have what it takes to do that. You're just making insinuations, hoping to score some cheap political points, and you know that it's wrong. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of cheap political points, that's a cheap political trick right over there. At one point in his political career he won his seat by three votes through judicial inquiry, and he had to go three times through the courts to hold onto the seat.

No one, Mr. Speaker, no one talked about the commission. What we said, if he had been listening and not chatting with his colleagues, was that one hon. member of this House who is not a member of that caucus, not a member of our caucus, nor is that individual a member of the New Democrat caucus, said publicly twice what the commission was going to decide before the commission even had one meeting. You figure it out, hon. member. If you want to go in the gutter and you want to have all these innuendoes and these speeches, you go right ahead. You go right ahead. [interjections]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened attentively to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I never agree with a lot of what he has to say, but I really take exception to one thing that he had to say, and that was his comment about homeless people being influenced. Homeless people are entitled to vote just like any one of us. We have a homeless identification program, but even with that, you don't actually need identification to vote. I really take exception to this member's comments that they can be easily influenced or somehow that people are inappropriately abusing homeless people. I think it's ridiculous. Maybe he'd like to retract these statements.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have to give this member a history lesson. I don't know how much time I have left. It was the PC Party, when they were determining which candidate in 2004 they were going to nominate in Edmonton-Gold Bar. The PC Party had to overturn the decision that they made in a community hall because the party members did it wrong. You took people off the street, you promised them money, you promised them cigarettes, and you promised them liquor if they would take a PC card and go to a community hall and vote. It's you, sir, that should apologize and your party that should apologize to the homeless people. It had nothing to do with me. It's your party and how it's run, and it was run corruptly. Sorry.

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, you have the floor.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm rising on a point of order here. This makes allegations against every member of the government caucus that are completely unfounded. This member is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: There's no citation there. Mr. Speaker, again to the hon. member: before you rise in this House and bring this matter up again, please review the unsavoury history of your PC party in our constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, if there's any time left . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired] There's no time left.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, there's no time left. You are right, hon. member.

I hesitate to interrupt the hon. members here, but pursuant to Government Motion 27, agreed to on December 1, 2010, I must now put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:27 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

11:40 Recognition of Clerk Assistant and Director of House Services

Mr. Hancock moved that the Assembly recognize the work of Mrs. Louise Kamuchik, Clerk Assistant and director of House services, on her last evening sitting.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence, just prior to moving adjournment, I would like to beg the indulgence of the House in a motion, if I may, because tonight is, I believe, the last night that we are to be served in this House by Louise Kamuchik. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps fitting that today, being her last day, we sit until 11:40. Louise has been in this House, I think, for four late, overnight session-type sittings and has put in years of service with a fair, impartial, and very friendly demeanour. She's been most helpful. I've developed an immense respect for her over the 13 years that I've been here. This House has been very, very well served, as have the people around her.

The Deputy Speaker: I think our Government House Leader just moved that motion about Louise.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the motion?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

J'appécie beaucoup tout ce que vous avez fait pendant vos années de travail dans cette Assemblée. Nous, nous allons vous manquer. Ma femme et moi, nous avons apprécié tout ce que vous avez accompli dans votre tour de la Ville de Québec. Merci beaucoup pour votre service pour tous les Albertains.

[Motion carried unanimously]

Mr. Hancock: With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that this House do now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:42 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to introduce to you two gentlemen who are currently in the Speaker's gallery. The first gentleman is Giuseppe Filippo Imbalzano. If he would rise, please. Mr. Imbalzano is a retired diplomat for the government of Italy. He served in a number of postings throughout the world. A good friend of the province of Alberta, he served in this province as vice-consul for his government from 1991 to 1995. He is a commander in the Italian Navy Reserve and is here in Edmonton visiting with the honorary president of the Alberta branch of the Italian Naval Association, Mr. Vito Spadavecchia – if he would rise as well, please – who is a long-time resident here in the city of Edmonton and a good friend to all. He's a retired mechanical engineer with the Italian navy and merchant navy. Our guests are good friends of ours, and I'd ask that the members provide them with a warm reception here.

Hon. members, also in the Assembly today is a large group of individuals who play a key role in the democratic process in the province of Alberta. These individuals, 75 of them, are staff who work at our constituency offices. They often provide the first point of contact for our constituents, and they certainly represent our offices in this Assembly wherever they are. These special individuals are participating in the winter constituency employee seminar, which is an opportunity for all to visit and become updated in terms of what's happening. We'll receive them with great joy and honour this evening as I host a dinner for them. Seventy-five constituency employees from throughout the province of Alberta, your personal representatives: I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. It truly is an honour to start with an introduction of two individuals from Lethbridge College, Dr. Tracy Edwards and Mr. Randy Jespersen. Dr. Edwards is the president and CEO of Lethbridge College and chair of the Council of Presidents of the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes, otherwise known as AACTI, and she's doing a great job at the college and a fabulous job as president of AACTI.

Effective September 2010 Randy Jespersen was appointed board chair for Lethbridge College. He is a distinguished alumnus of the college and has recently retired from his position as president and CEO of Terasen Inc., primarily a natural gas utility and alternative energy service provider in British Columbia. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the experiences that he's had over his number of years have certainly endeared him to Lethbridge College and certainly made him one of their stars. He continues to have connections in southern Alberta, and each year you will find him in Taber, helping with harvest on the family farm.

Mr. Jespersen and Dr. Edwards will make a formidable team, I'm sure you would agree. They're both in the members' gallery. I see they've risen. I'd ask all members to give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have one other if I may. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members a group of gentlemen who this spring attended the St. Albert Housing Society's second annual homestyle breakfast. There was an auction held to see who would come and have sandwiches with me in the office and discuss things of relevance to Alberta. These gentlemen are Alistair Hazewinkel, director of finance, and Mr. Reid Lillico, president and COO of the Commonwealth Corporate Support Services Group Canada Ltd., otherwise known as the Commonwealth Group; Mr. David Woodman, regional managing partner of Meyers Norris Penny, consisting of 2,300 team members across Canada with their head offices in Calgary; and Mr. Bob Walker, vice-president of Ledcor Construction. With roots firmly planted in the oil patch, Ledcor is a leader in sustainable building practices and techniques and an entrepreneur in resourcefulness, accounting, and innovation. They are in the members' gallery, I believe, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of the Legislature here a friend and a business associate of my wife, Mr. Jim Shortt, who is a mortgage broker with Dominion Lending in Edmonton. He's a resident of Edmonton and a Rotarian. With him is my wife, Debbie, who is an agent with Dominion Lending. Mr. Speaker, should you have any borrowing needs, feel free to give them a call. I invite all to give them the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the staff of the government members' caucus. We are all dependent on our legislative assistants and our research and communications branch to help us navigate our way through sessions such as this one. I know that I speak for all my caucus colleagues when I say thank you for all the hard work you have done and continue to do for us. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [some applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of young people who are here from the Alberta Youth Congress: John Sulit, chair and CEO; Johnny Mio; Deseray Mason; and Stephanie Ross. They currently have started touring around Alberta from school to school, making presentations about the congress and bullying. The Alberta Youth Congress also believes that this province is the best place to invest in and has the best publicly funded health care system in Canada. They are seated in the members' gallery, I believe. I would ask that they rise and received the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very good friend to me visiting us here today, David Olson. David is my cousin, more like a brother, whom I grew up with. Thanks to great parents and great grandparents we had a fantastic childhood. He's been away from Canada the last 12 years working in the IT and communications industry in the Cayman Islands and the British Virgin Islands. It's great for me to have him here. I think he's in the members' gallery, and I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some members of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations. This council is co-chaired by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and myself. The council met this morning here at the Leg. to brainstorm some ideas that were presented a month ago with our counterparts from Saskatchewan. We're working hard to set directions for the years to come.

They're seated in the visitor's gallery, and I would ask them to stand as I introduce them. Dr. Ehor Gauk is past chair of Osvita medical project and a professor emeritus of pediatrics and neurology at the University of Alberta. Ken Korchinski is a retired vice-president and Edmonton regional manager at UMA Engineering. Mr. Korchinski is actively involved in initiatives to develop opportunities in Ukraine and Poland. Dr. Roman Petryshyn is the founder and director of the Ukrainian Resource and Development Centre at Grant MacEwan College and is instrumental in opening a Grant MacEwan office in Kiev. Ed Piasta is involved in the promotion and organization of business investment ventures in Ukraine both as a participant and as a legal counsel. Edith Zawadiuk is a director of Friends of the Ukrainian Village and past president of the Kalyna Country Eco-museum, and she's been involved in 4-H agricultural projects in Ukraine. I would ask the Assembly to give them a traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Connie Whiteley, Brian Johnson, and Yvonne Byer. These individuals have been directly affected by the shoddy construction of their homes and have been pressing the government for over two years to protect new home and condo buyers by implementing stricter regulations and making warranties mandatory. They remain hopeful that the government will catch up to the other provinces such as Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia and provide greater protection for its citizens. They have risen. I would ask all the members to extend the traditional warm welcome of this House to my special guests.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

International Human Rights Day

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. December 10 is International Human Rights Day and marks the signing of the universal declaration of human rights by United Nations members in 1948. The declaration arose directly from the experience of the Second World War and represents the first global expression of rights to which all human beings are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, each year a different focus is encouraged on Human Rights Day, and this year the UN has launched a campaign called Speak Up, Stop Discrimination. This campaign highlights and promotes the achievements of human rights defenders and encourages all global citizens to speak out against discrimination in all forms.

On Human Rights Day I encourage all Albertans to reflect on what we can do to prevent and stop discrimination in our communities. Discrimination based on race, gender, age, religious belief, sexual orientation, or any other protected ground is unacceptable in a free, fair, and democratic society. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's diversity is our strength. By combating discrimination and helping to build welcoming and inclusive communities, we create a society that benefits everyone.

It is important to note, however, that although we are recognizing this day, the effort to combat discrimination is a year-round initiative, and it's an initiative that involves not just organizations and levels of governments but every single human being and every single member of a free and democratic society. It comes from the core of every human being's actions. It's not a war against discrimination but a movement to spread love, peace, freedom, and respect from one human being to another human being. Such actions should not be left to just the top. These movements and the greatest human rights movements I've witnessed in my life have been on account of a single individual at a time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a shameful record, letting working people pay the price of unsafe workplaces. Too many workers suffer injuries or health problems related to workplaces, and far too many families lose loved ones. The NDP and labour organizations have raised concerns about this for many years. The Auditor General has made strong recommendations about how poorly Alberta does in this area. For those who work on farms and other agricultural settings, the story is especially terrible: 389 deaths, 62 of them children, over the past 15 years.

Many people have observed we seem to have tougher laws and penalties for farm animals being mistreated than we do for workers in that same location, but workplace dangers faced by farm and agriculture industry workers are amongst the greatest of any occupation. The astonishing thing is that there is no protection under the Occupational Health and Safety Act or the Workers' Compensation Act for these people. Only Alberta in all of Canada permits this irresponsible reality. A provincial judge has expressed concern about this in the course of an inquiry into a death, and last year alone 13 people died on the job on farms.

The recent announcement of this government that this shameful situation will be addressed by little more than education is utterly inadequate. Colouring books at community fairs and dust-covered posters at the local seed plant will not change what is happening. This government made nearly no effort to talk to actual farm workers before making its latest inadequate pronouncements. It's time to stop listening only to employers. Government has a duty to ensure that workers can have confidence that health and safety are not sacrificed so they can earn a living. Making occupational health and safety laws and penalties apply in the agricultural industry will be quite manageable for employers if there is a well-designed phase-in plan beginning with the largest employers.

Farm workers have the security of this protection everywhere else in Canada. Well-designed, comprehensive education is needed but not good enough. An advisory committee as a response to the unending record of death . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Raymond J. Nelson

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to a respected businessman, a visionary, a successful entrepreneur, a philanthropist who had a sincere passion for his community and his country, a family man, a community leader, a true Albertan, a mentor, and a friend. Many will remember Mr. Ray Nelson as the founder along with his brother of the Nelson Lumber Company and Nelson Homes.

Ray was much more than a businessman. He was a true humanitarian, giving of his time, energy, and expertise to many directorships. He never stopped thinking of ways to improve and grow his community. Ray Nelson was sincere in making his community a better place. Over the years his charity commitment and support extended as well to worthy causes and projects well beyond the borders of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Ray Nelson was a deeply spiritual man, often remarking that one could not serve God without serving mankind. He sought practical ways to exhibit his great passion and personal faith, including playing an integral role in the formation and ongoing success of the annual Alberta Premier's prayer breakfast. I had the pleasure of working with him on the prayer breakfast since 2001, so I am well aware of his past leadership skills and also his passion.

He lived by his own motto, that the greatest wealth is the freedom to choose. Ray Nelson chose to effectively bring worthy ideas to reality for the betterment of his fellow man, and he did so with quiet humility and integrity.

At the age of 79 he was the oldest recipient of a heart transplant. At the age of 84 he sold his shares in his business with a 10-year noncompete clause. Before he signed the papers, he looked up and said: you know, 10 years is a long time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

National Safe Driving Week

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 1 to 7 marks National Safe Driving Week and serves as a reminder to drivers to operate their vehicles in a responsible and safe manner. This message is particularly important now that winter has arrived and the holiday season is just around the corner. We all know that winter driving is perilous, with slippery roads and reduced visibility. In these conditions we need to leave earlier and slow down and not tailgate. Arriving five minutes earlier is not worth risking your life or the lives of others.

During National Safe Driving Week we need to make time to inspect our vehicles and ensure that they're ready for winter driving. By this time we should have changed to winter tires, if possible, and made sure our cars are equipped with roadside emergency kits if the worst were to happen.

This government has always taken the issue of safety on Alberta's roads seriously, but it also falls to individual drivers to make safe decisions on the road. I urge all Albertans to drive safely this holiday season.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to wish all of the Legislature staff, my colleagues, and all their family members a merry Christmas and happy holidays. I'm looking forward to seeing you all in the new year, the Year of the Rabbit.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Quality Council

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health Quality Council is the only body charged with measuring the quality and efficiency of the health care system. It's the only watchdog on the health care system, but it cannot initiate investigations at its own discretion. It takes direction from the minister of health. To the minister of health. In February the minister of health requested that the Health Quality Council investigate the botched H1N1 response. The report was supposed to be released months ago. How can you say that the quality council is independent when the report has been delayed for months by this government's meddling?

1:50

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely not true. I spoke with the Health Quality Council yesterday. They said they had just about finished their report, and it will be sent along very soon. I'd ask you to retract those derogatory remarks against the Health Quality Council, who's job it is to ensure that safety and quality are looked after.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council can only investigate at the request of the minister or the Health Services Board. Since Albertans want truly independent quality assessments, why will the minister not give them the power to initiate investigations where they see cause, such as the 322 cases compromised by care in one emergency room over one month?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council of Alberta is involved in many different ways: with respect to recent issues in emergency rooms, for example; the two reviews that are going on following some unfortunate incidents. They've been involved. They've had their input. They are highly respected and highly regarded in that way. The legislation at the moment stands the way that it is.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the minister we're talking to. It is quite within his realm to change that. It's clear that the Health Quality Council does not have the independence it needs. Will the minister build trust in Albertans and change the reporting relationship of the Health Quality Council so they report directly to this Legislature?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's a suggestion that I'm prepared to take under advisement, and I thank the member for raising it in a civil tone.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the minister of health said that he didn't author the document which reveals the government's real plan to introduce two-tiered, American-style health care. To the minister of health: why won't you reveal who did author this document that lays out the real plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I already said that that is a departmental document that reflected views, opinions, comments, and ideas by Albertans, so you might say that it came from a variety of sources right across the province. All that the department did was co-ordinate all of that, put it into one document, and said: here's what Albertans said. We looked at the document, and I said that there are things in here that we can do and things that we can't do. It's that straightforward. We can't violate the Canada Health Act, and we can't violate our own legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. [interjections] Did the hon. member for Edmonton-Centre want to do this question instead?

Ms Blakeman: It's coming.

Dr. Swann: My question is to the Premier. The five-year plan that was released by the minister this week makes reference to phase 1 and phase 2 of the Alberta Health Act, just like the leaked document. Both mention consolidating the five core health acts, but only the leaked document reveals the true intent of this legislative change. How can the Premier deny the solid proof of this long-standing agenda to privatize health care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 ensures that all Albertans will have their say in the health care system. That means that whenever any new ideas are introduced, they will have an opportunity to respond and to support or oppose any changes. I would sooner, you know, consult with Albertans on what they want to see in their health care system as opposed to dealing with various ideologies. I think this is an opportunity, a great opportunity, for all Albertans to get involved.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has said he will consult with Albertans before making changes to the health care system. What consultation existed before the 2008 decision to blow up the health care system and make the most radical changes to health care in our history? Actions speak louder than words. You, sir, have lost the trust of Albertans. You've certainly lost the trust of health professionals in this province. I believe you've lost the confidence of most of this Legislature. I will not give him the opportunity to ask another question . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the floor.

Dr. Swann: No further questions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, you ran out of time anyway.
The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what the public is looking at, that kind of theatrics. I can tell you that all the theatrics and all of the 27 hours of debate never moved one person through emergency any faster or provided cancer treatment any faster. We're going to stay the course, and we're going to get the job done.

The Speaker: Now, do I take it there is no third Official Opposition main question? Oh, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please.

Arts Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of culture yesterday argued that arts funding had been increasing. Given that two years ago funding was $76 million, last year the funding was $67 million, and this year it's $56 million, could the minister explain how this is an increase?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where she gets her numbers from. Look at Hansard. I did not say that we increased funding. We said that we have increased funding since 2005 to 2010. That includes the 16 per cent reduction that was dealt out in March 31st of this year.

Ms Blakeman: Sounds like a decrease to me.

Back to the same minister: given that the minister has reversed planned cuts to two programs, artists affiliated with municipalities and artists funded by the artists and education program, would the minister add two more programs to that list and reverse the cuts to artists affiliated with universities and the cuts to cultural industries?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, right now we are in the budget deliberation process through our caucus and with my government colleagues. We haven't made any determination about budget, but as the hon. member knows, we will give that information as the budget is brought forward. At this particular point in time we're not able to make that kind of commitment.

Ms Blakeman: Well, except you've already done it twice. I thought maybe you could do it a couple of more times.

My final question to the minister is: given that every other minister defends their department's programs, why does this minister of culture defend the cuts to his ministry's programs?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I defend our programs. Creative industries create $4.5 billion of gross domestic product. Our government contributes some $60 million towards arts and culture. We are the third-highest per capita contributor to arts of any provincial government in the country, third only to Ontario and Quebec. We support our artists. We had $200,000 towards our artists to give them a stage at the Grey Cup here last weekend. We spent $6 million in the Cultural Olympiad for the last three years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Care System

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this House the Premier told Albertans: "There is no crisis in health care." How the leader of this province can say something that's so out of touch with what Albertans are thinking is beyond my comprehension. I invite him to visit emergency rooms and our hospital wards with overflowing patients and waiting hours that are beyond belief in terms of the time. Will he look those patients in the eyes and apologize to them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I stand by my word. I said yesterday, "There is no crisis." There are challenges, obviously, in various components of delivering health care in the province, but to say that there is a crisis is a complete disservice to the hundreds of professionals that we have in this province that are delivering services every day. Every day people access emergency rooms, babies are born, cancer is treated, the shortest waiting list now for heart transplants or heart surgery: all of those things are very, very positive in the province.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, that explanation is just simply not good enough for Albertans. The only MLA who's an ER doctor had indicated that it was a crisis, other doctors have said it's a crisis, but you're in denial. You have to guard against self deception. All you have is a five-year plan, a Christmas wish list. I want to give the Premier, in fairness, another opportunity to retract his statement that there is no crisis in health care.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, to say that there's a crisis in health care ignores all of the good work that's being done in the province, whether it's at the Mazankowski heart centre, whether it's in all of the clinics that have been opened recently in Edmonton and Calgary, the two world-class children's hospitals. I mean, we're doing things there that other provinces just simply can't. People are coming here from other provinces for certain surgeries that can't be done in their province, and, like I said before, one of only three burn units in all of the world is here in the city of Edmonton.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in the newspaper the AMA's Dr. Paul Parks and Dr. Felix Soibelman wrote a letter that said, "The crisis has not abated." If the Premier is saying that there is no crisis and these leading medical doctors are saying that there is a crisis, I know who I would believe, and I think I know who Albertans would believe. To the Premier: are you prepared to stand by your assertion that there is no crisis in health care and tell Dr. Parks and Dr. Soibelman right here, right now that they're wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, there is no crisis. You know, just recently the Canadian Institute for Health Information released a report that reconfirms the fact that Alberta by far is the most attractive place in Canada to attract physicians. Over the past decade we've seen an increase in physicians, an increase of over 52 per cent. That's two and a half times more than the Canadian average. They're all coming here to the province because it is the most attractive place to perform their professional duties, right here in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Fall Session Encapsulation

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This very short session has been a disaster for this PC government. Despite emergency room doctors warning of an imminent collapse of emergency room services, Alberta Health Services' leadership falling apart, and massive confusion in the system, the Premier yesterday denied that there was a crisis in health care. My question is to the Premier. How did you get so far out of touch with Albertans?

The Speaker: Well, if this has to do with government policy, go ahead.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think today and the last few days there have been letters written to various newspapers, especially the Edmonton Journal. People have been watching the last couple of weeks in this House and disagree with some of the positions taken by the opposition. They have a job to do, I guess, but part of that job is not to create a situation where we put fear into people that they may not be able to access any health services in this province. We have a very good system. It needs improving. It will. We have the money in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This session has seen the ejection of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and his subsequent persecution. Albertans have overwhelmingly rallied to his defence and reacted to the government's treatment of him with disgust. My question is to the Premier. Why do you condone actions against dissident MLAs that most Albertans find reprehensible?

Mr. Stelmach: There were no actions against any MLA.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier is also out of touch with reality.

This Premier not only ignores the appeals of front-line health employees, expels anyone who points this out from his caucus, but he has imposed closure on debate in this session of the Legislature on more bills than in any other session in recent memory. My question is to the Premier. How did it come to pass that basic principles of democracy and decency have been so trampled as to be almost unrecognizable?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously, that member has a very short memory, but that's for him to deal with on his own. I can tell you that in the last number of weeks in this House there have been 27 hours of debate. I invite all Albertans to read the transcript of Hansard. Just read some of the things that have been presented by the opposition. I want to know where, in any of that debate, it actually moved one more person quicker through emergency or improved cancer treatment in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

New Home Warranty Program

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is failing homeowners on construction codes not enforced through a home warranty scheme that is both deficient and lacks financial transparency. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why are the financial statements for the Alberta New Home Warranty Program not available to the public, sir?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we're working hard to develop various solutions to ensure the integrity of new homes that are being built in the province. We want to ensure that new homes, basically the single largest investment that individuals will make in their lifetime, are being built right. We recognize that there are a number of solutions out there that affect a number of people and organizations, and we need to continue to work with them. Those include groups like homeowners themselves or municipalities or builders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister didn't answer my question. I was asking: why are the financial statements not being released to the public?

To the minister again: what was the Alberta New Home Warranty surplus last year, sir?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I will have to look at the New Home Warranty numbers. I'm not sure exactly where those numbers are, but those numbers should be available to the public, and I see no reason why they would not be released.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Out of the claims made, how many claims are paid out under the New Home Warranty Program?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that there are a number of claims that are being made against the New Home Warranty Program. Again, I don't have those actual numbers. We recognize that often individual actions within homes will trigger certain concerns within the home. Let me use an example. If somebody installs, for instance, a hot tub in a home without proper ventilation, they'll create some of their own . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Secondary Suites

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Studies show that increasing the supply of secondary suites can intrinsically address the availability of affordable housing, a game changer for the poor. However, the reality is that some residents have several concerns. As this seems to be an urban issue, what has the minister done to reduce the anxiety that some Calgarians have with secondary suites in their neighbourhood?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question for urban Alberta in particular. The issue of secondary suites has come to my office recently. First and foremost, I believe in the private property rights of the individuals who do own the suites but also of the neighbours. We are working with some municipalities on this issue. Let's face it, though. It's expensive to live in Alberta, particularly in the city of Calgary, and we need a variety of affordable housing options.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question to the same minister. A lecture on private property and agreeing that secondary suites are important for the rental market does not address the concerns local residents have regarding congestion and other issues. I ask you again: what has this minister done to overcome these concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, we are working with local municipalities, but this is largely a local issue to work out. We want to get out of the way and help local municipalities arrive at the solution that's best for them. Let's face it again. What works in Calgary might not work in Fort McMurray or in Grande Prairie or in Red Deer. You get my point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last question to the same minister. My alderman is concerned with the existing number of noncompliant secondary suites in our area. How does your policy on affordable housing encourage construction that is, number one, safe; number two, wanted by the local residents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. First off, we have an RFP process throughout this entire province. We're mandated to create 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012, we're doing so in an economical fashion for the taxpayer, and $97,500 is our average cost per unit. A few years ago the Ministry of Municipal Affairs actually underwent a safety code study from 2006, and we're working on these issues but on an individual basis that works for the local community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Government Employee Credit Checks

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Privacy Commissioner issued an investigative report finding that Alberta Justice had been conducting unlawful credit checks on its own employees without their knowledge or consent. To the Minister of Justice. Alberta's privacy law for government has been in place for 15 years. How could this breach have happened? Is it that you don't train your employees, or do you simply allow your employees to break the law?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'll say is that I have incredible confidence in the employees that work in the Department of Justice and serve this province. The second thing I will say is that the reason we know that this is a public issue is because this was part of the annual report of the Privacy Commissioner. It was a matter that arose out of normal operations last year in maintenance enforcement. It was brought to the attention of management and the Privacy Commissioner. We acknowledged the error immediately. We took every step recommended by the Privacy Commissioner to deal with it, and the Privacy Commissioner in their annual report actually said that we took all appropriate steps and had no further recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question again for the Justice minister: if your staff doesn't know that they can't surveil department employees without legal authority, what else don't they know? Are they also breaching the privacy of other members of the public?

2:10

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this will be a short answer. Maintenance enforcement does a tremendous job for families, people, and children in this province. It was an incident that happened, it was investigated, all appropriate steps were taken, and I have confidence in the people that work in my department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Has a full audit been done of your department to see whether any other privacy complaints have arisen?

Ms Redford: Actually, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had read the whole report and the recommendations, he would have seen that that was one of the recommendations. It was done, and we're fine, thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Separate School System

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A former education minister, David King, has launched a website and a petition calling for a referendum on abolishing publicly funded Roman Catholic and Protestant schools in the province of Alberta in favour of a single public system. The president of the ACSTA, and I'm proud to say a constituent and good friend of mine, has contacted me, asking the minister for his position. To the Minister of Education: can he please explain the history and constitutional rights of separate school boards in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, clearly, in Alberta Albertans have the rights to minority denominational education and minority language education, and that is described in and protected by the Canadian Constitution. We cannot compare different provinces in the country in that regard because different provinces had different educational systems in place as they entered Confederation, and as they entered into Confederation, the constitutional rights that their citizens had at the time were enshrined. So the 1905 Alberta Act enshrined those rights for Albertans, both minority faiths and minority languages.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is one out of three provinces in Canada with religion-based separate schools, so my next question to the same minister: is there any plan to look at changing ours, and is the minister in support of this change?

Mr. Hancock: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. We're not planning to change the rights of Albertans. That would require a constitutional amendment. There is no apparent interest in Alberta. We'll see what comes from Mr. King's petition, but I see no reason to change a system that is working very well. We are working at transforming the system to do even better in the future, but that change will not eliminate choice for Albertans to choose the kind of education that works well for their students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Mr. King criticizes the separate education system for the exclusion of children from classrooms and adults from the separate school boards based solely on religion. So my question is:

please clarify how our separate education system is, in fact, reflective of Canadian values like multiculturalism, inclusion, and diversity?

The Speaker: Is that opinion or government policy? Proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's actually also a matter of Alberta law. Section 3 of the School Act requires that every school in Alberta, all education programs in Alberta "reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others and honour and respect the common values and beliefs of Albertans." Also, in section 3(2) the School Act provides that the doctrines of racial or ethnic or religious superiority or persecution cannot be promoted in our schools. So we not only protect the freedoms of Albertans and promote the values of Albertans, but we also encourage the diversity of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

School Utilization Formula

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, to its credit the newly elected Edmonton public school board placed a two-year moratorium on school closures. The government's combined failure to update its school space utilization formula to reflect learning commission class size reductions and its ongoing refusal to either repair aging schools or build desperately needed new ones has contributed to overcrowding, unnecessary school closures, and school shortages in rapid-growth areas like Airdrie and Leduc. To the minister: when will you fix the formula?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are talking with stakeholders in the education system about our funding formulas. We're also talking about what kind of schools we should be building in the province for the future. It's all part of Inspiring Education, discussing what kind of education system we need to have to make sure that Alberta students are well prepared to be global citizens and local citizens, to be participants in the global economy and the local economy. That's the very activity we've been engaged in for the last two years. It's an ongoing process. There's no single point at which there's a light switch flipped and everything is perfect, but we have an ongoing discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think this government is having trouble finding the light switch.

Space utilization formula. Until such time as you fix the faulty space utilization formula, will you at the very least place a province-wide moratorium on school closures? They're directly related.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is under the delusion that the space utilization formula plays a large role in the process today. It does not. Since we brought in the class size formulas, in fact, a number of different things in the past four or five years, certainly, space utilization is one of the trigger points. We want to know how well a school board is using the physical assets that it has on behalf of the students in their jurisdiction before we add more spaces and places, but it's not the be-all and the end-all in the process. First and foremost, the safety of the students and the health of the students is there, and then accommodation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The space utilization is 10 years old. It doesn't reflect the Learning Commission's recommendations.

Given that there is a 40 per cent recessional discount on materials and labour, why aren't you finally addressing the $2 billion plus schools repair bill and building the new schools needed for rapid-growth areas such as Airdrie and Leduc?

Mr. Hancock: And Beaumont and Medicine Hat and Fort McMurray and a number of other places in the province. In fact, as I've said in this House a number of times, I've put together a plan that shows what we need to do in terms of new schools, in terms of improving the schools that are aging and that we still need and, yes, phasing out those schools which are no longer needed in the program. We're working with school boards to make sure we have the right kind of places and the right kinds of spaces. Then the next piece, of course, is to find the funding because Albertans are very interested also in the appropriate allocation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Private Vocational Institution Credits

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of Alberta students choose to attend private vocational colleges as a valid option for their postsecondary studies, an option that allows students to fast-track their careers. However, some of these students want to continue their learning at publicly funded institutions, but many cannot transfer the credits they earned in the private colleges. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Why don't publicly funded postsecondary institutions like the University of Alberta recognize credits earned at private vocational colleges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize private vocational institutions. They have a very important role to play in Campus Alberta. Access is very important. Choice is very important. Not all things fit all models of students; different strokes for different folks kind of thing. Students that are applying to a publicly funded institution have the opportunity to present their transcript. The institutions within Campus Alberta are the ones that determine whether or not the training that they've had at that private vocational school is applicable.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. I'm talking to a lot of my constituents regarding this, and they have concerns. Do you consider the training at private accredited vocational colleges equal to the training earned at publicly funded institutions?

The Speaker: Again, is that opinion or government policy?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, our department does monitor these private vocational institutions, and we also work with Campus Alberta to try to ensure that we have as much transferability within the system as possible. But remember. A private vocational institution is usually driven by training provided for the economy, for employers, for various other things. So the program, to compare apples to apples, sometimes is a bit of a challenge. The institutions will look at individual modules within those programs. Again, it's up to the individual institutions and students to do their homework.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: are there any plans to have private vocational colleges align more closely with the publicly funded institutions in Campus Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, we are working on that right now. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, who's the parliamentary assistant in this department, is actively engaged in reviewing the private vocational education programs within the province and within the system, and we'll be talking about that as a Campus Alberta group very, very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Long-term Care Beds

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's strategy to bury their agenda for health care privatization in more five-year plans isn't fooling anyone. If they really wanted to address ER wait times and health care chaos, they would add long-term care beds and somewhere between 500 to 1,000 mental health beds. It's clear that this government is more concerned with public relations than it is with doing what's right for Albertans in need. So how can the minister of health expect anyone to believe his plan when it ignores the two key issues of mental health and long-term care beds?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's very straightforward. We've worked out a plan that involves doctors and pharmacists and nurses and Health Quality Council people, and of course leading the charge was Alberta Health Services with my Department of Health and Wellness. The result of all of that and the result of listening to a lot of Albertans who said, "Build us more continuing care facilities" is why we're adding up to about 1,400 this year, next year another thousand, the year after that another thousand. It's a very aggressive and ambitious plan, probably the largest per capita in Canada.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, continuing care is not long-term care.

Now, Dr. Paul Parks stated that more than half of the people in acute-care beds in big city hospitals are waiting for long-term care, not other forms of continuing care. He affirmed what this party has been saying for years, that by offering chronically ill seniors only fancy condos with housekeeping, you ensure more chronically ill seniors in acute-care hospital beds. Why won't the health minister take the cotton out of his ears and commit to hard numbers for long-term care beds?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, some of the beds I just referred to are long-term care. Why don't they just be patient until they all get finished? In the meantime, let's also remember that we're increasing home care funding. One of the largest increases to any part of the Alberta Health Services budget is to increase it by 7 per cent, well over $400 million. When you put the whole picture together, they're spending about $30 million per day on health care in this province. Phenomenal.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, to the minister of health. Albertans deserve to know how many of the hundreds and hundreds of beds they keep bragging about every day are long-term care beds. If he cannot tell Albertans how many of those beds are long-term care beds, will he just give his job over to someone else who can?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it might be time for that hon. member to switch to decaf.

The fact is that there are some specific details that someone else asked for; I said I would try and get that information for them. Meanwhile, Alberta Health Services is compiling that information that was requested earlier, and as soon as they provide it, I'll try and give more detail. The important thing here is that we're building continuing care facilities, and we're having people stay there to receive the services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

AIMCo Investments

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AIMCo has assets under its management of over $70 billion. Twelve billion dollars of these assets are externally managed. Last year these externally managed assets shrank in value by over $542 million. By law the minister of finance is responsible for AIMCo, this Crown corporation. My first question is to the minister of finance. Given that this government signed up these external managers to manage this $12 billion pool of assets, why are their investment costs so high?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that, in fact, internalizing those investment decisions has significantly reduced the cost of outside consultants. If the hon. member consults the report more closely, he'll see that.

Mr. MacDonald: The report is right here, Mr. Speaker, and the minister of finance is wrong.

Given that this loss of $542 million was in the last year, how do you explain that AIMCo had to pay $169 million in total investment costs, much more than for the $58 billion that was managed internally?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the relevant figures are the reduction in external consulting costs, which have gone down repeatedly in the last two years that AIMCo has taken over.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, they're excessive, and the finance minister surely should know that.

Now, again, why would you give, specifically, a $25 million performance fee to managers who on their watch saw this pool of money shrink by over half a billion dollars? Why would they get a $25 million bonus whenever they did such a poor job of managing pensioners' assets and even this government's assets?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, again, the hon. member should read the report carefully. AIMCo in the 2009 year outperformed the market in all of its investment portfolios.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Road Density Thresholds

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Road density is frequently recognized in conservation circles as a canary in the coal mine for human impact on natural ecological systems and, likewise, an important factor in the recovery plans for both the grizzly bear and woodland caribou. All my questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister commit to this House that the road density thresholds will be taken into account in the development of the regional plans which are required under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that many factors relevant to environmental conservation would be taken into account in these plans, but the regional plans are high-level, broad-based plans, and they do not and will not get down to the level of dealing with things like road density. The regional plans will support the plans that we have with respect to the caribou and grizzly bear recovery plan that we have. Nevertheless, the species recovery would deal with road density issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister commit to ensuring that any road density thresholds apply to all linear features available to motorized vehicle use such as gated roads, cut lines, power lines, or decommissioned roads, not just open-route density?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't intend to create an across-the-board regulatory definition for linear features or for motorized access. It's very, very difficult. The thing for threatened species like the grizzly bear and caribou: it's better dealt with when we do this on a site-specific case. So there won't be a broad-based creation of regulatory definition for these linear characteristics.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: are there any barriers, financial or other, including all linear features, that exist for determining road density thresholds?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I think it's worth repeating that we're not going to create a regulatory definition with respect to thresholds at a broad level. If you look at motorized vehicle access, there are a lot of examples where the access needs to be there, and in certain circumstances it's impossible or very difficult for us to map the access capability of things like small motorcycles and that sort of thing. We'll continue to work on these things in specific situations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has failed in so many ways this year. Our finances are a mess, our health care system is crumbling, and they could not even negotiate a right-of-way so that southwest Calgary would actually have a ring road. My constituents of Calgary-Glenmore as well as the rest of the residents of southwest Calgary are upset with this government. They have failed them and demand this government get the job done right. Chief Big Plume has just been re-elected with a 90 per cent support. To the Minister of Transportation: are you going to reopen talks to solve the ring road dilemma, or have you simply abandoned this project?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very important project to this government, and it's very important to the city of Calgary. We're working in partnership today with the city of Calgary's transportation, and we're working on moving the project forward.

Mr. Hinman: Given the arrogance and the incompetence over there it shouldn't surprise us that you thought you could simply talk to the band council of the Tsuu T'ina and that that would be enough. Clearly, this has failed because you left the Tsuu T'ina people and their elders as well as the federal government out of the loop. Will you make some concrete plans to bring everyone to the table this time? Who are you going to invite?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, needless to say, this hon. member doesn't listen to anything we talk about on this side of the House, so why would he even deserve our giving him an answer? But because we're such good guys on this side of the House, I will tell him that we're working towards making progress, and I'm not going to second-guess what the city of Calgary and our officials are doing in bringing together a solution.

Mr. Hinman: He has no answer. He's incompetent, and he's arrogant.

Mr. Speaker, it is only when you are not sincere about negotiations that you will give up in hopelessness. That is exactly what this government has done. This process was flawed and weak from the start. Will the Minister of Transportation commit to fixing this problem, or will the residents of southwest Calgary have to wait for a Wildrose government to do the job and get it right?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, he doesn't even deserve an answer. You want to talk arrogance? We just heard arrogance coming right out of whatever you call his mouth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dual High School and University Credits

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Assembly has heard me speak on several occasions about innovation in education, ideas like dual credit and real-world learning opportunities. I have gone further and found a postsecondary institution willing to offer high school students in Forest Lawn and Lester B. Pearson free postsecondary courses. Will the Minister of Education assure me that these students will receive high school credit for these postsecondary courses?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, dual credit courses are actually a great way to encourage students to finish their high school and bridge to postsecondary. We know that 80 per cent of the new jobs coming forward in future years are going to require postsecondary education, so we want to encourage that. Of course, we're working on protocols relative to dual credit courses. We have some of them in place already, and we're working on doing more of them in our system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased the minister is willing to consider doing more of them. However, I would like to know whether, at present, this postsecondary that stepped up to the plate to offer courses for these two high schools, whether these students will receive credit for these courses.

Mr. Hancock: I'm not familiar with the specific circumstance, but I can say this, Mr. Speaker: we have a dual credit working group between Education, Advanced Education, and Employment and Immigration working on expanding the programs offering dual credit courses. Of course, it's a partnership between postsecondaries and high schools to do it. We do have right now a moratorium on locally developed courses for this year while we revise our curriculum processes under Inspiring Education, so there may be a problem in this year or within the next short while approving locally developed courses that are outside the current spectrum.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to hear that work is being done in this area. I would only wish that work would be sped up in this specific area so that students can get results sooner. We have a profound education system, so I would just want to make sure that we continue to have one of the best performing education systems in the world. To the same minister: what can the minister offer students in high school today if not these particular results?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, of course, that's one of the real challenges. As we're trying to redesign the education system to make sure that we have the education system of the future, we have to continue to do things today to help students today. I can commit to this hon. member that we're prepared always to look at any new and innovative way of providing better opportunities for our students. We'll look at any proposal that comes forward. While we have an overall moratorium on locally developed courses for this year, we're certainly willing to look at innovation on a case-by-case basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's seniors' pharmaceutical plan was announced in December 2008, changed in April 2009, and delayed indefinitely in March 2010. Seniors are still wondering when and if their medication bills are going to increase. To the minister of health: will you give Alberta seniors the news that they want to hear, that the seniors' pharmaceutical plan will be scrapped?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I met with a number of seniors and senior advocacy bodies. They asked us to hold back and have some increased dialogue with them, and that's what we're doing.

Ms Pastoor: Well, Mr. Minister, this is not Shumka, so I want you to quit dancing around the issue and show Alberta seniors that you really have been listening. Tell them today what's really going on.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I did. Thank you for referencing my more agile days. I feel pretty good today, too.

The short answer is, honestly, hon. member, just like I told you. There are some issues there that they wanted us to address, to have a little deeper think tank with them before we moved forward, so that's what we're doing. There are some regulatory things that might require some attention. There might be some legislative things that require attention. We've looked at that as well. In the meantime, seniors will continue to receive the outstanding coverage they have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the same minister. The idea really was not welcomed, and there was certainly a huge push-back from seniors. They showed their fear and their opposition. Will the minister admit that the plan was wrong and that something else should be thought about?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker, that's not the issue. The issue is that there are some issues that they have that they want to be further consulted on, and that's what we're doing. In the meantime, we've lowered the overall cost of drugs for people in various plans, and we will continue to address issues of efficiency through that method.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Public Library Services

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of our public libraries are the focal point of community life. In 2008 an MLA committee on the future of public library services in Alberta was created. After consulting 11 communities throughout the province, the committee proposed 18 recommendations, and the government accepted 15 of them. All of my questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Of the 15 recommendations that the government committed to, how many of them have been implemented?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the government has implemented several of the 18 recommendations. For example, we've significantly increased the operating grant funding to library boards, and we've increased the bandwidth to public libraries through the Alberta SuperNet, and we've taken a much broader leadership role in public library policy and planning. As a government we're developing an integrated library policy to guide decision-making, strategic planning, and investment.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, how will the minister ensure that the library experience continues to improve in our province so that Albertans can take advantage of the excellent library resources that our province has?

Mr. Goudreau: That's an excellent question. We're developing a provincial public library technology plan that will improve access and make more digital resources available. This way we can take advantage of technologies to improve service and reduce duplication. It's also worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that we're collaborating with key partners to increase services to print-disabled Albertans, our francophones, the aboriginal communities, and our new Canadians.

Ms Woo-Paw: My last question is to the same minister. How does your ministry work with other departments to support learning initiatives for children in Alberta?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, libraries are a key component of Alberta's strong communities, especially in tougher economic times.

We are working with other ministries to develop a provincial approach to better position publicly funded libraries to meet the needs of Albertans. Our vision is that all Albertans, regardless of where they live, work, or read, will have improved access to information resources and expertise from our publicly funded libraries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Grow Ops

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to realtors in my community, they've brought up the issue of sick houses created from marijuana grow ops in residential properties. All my questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Mr. Minister, what do we have in place to ensure the safety of these dwellings for home purchasers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as you may be aware, Municipal Affairs is represented on a cross-ministry working group through the safe communities initiative to address issues of houses formerly used as marijuana grow ops. Of course, houses used as grow operations create health and safety hazards that often require expensive remediation, and this working group is finalizing a policy paper and is considering a number of recommendations that will be passed on to us.

Mr. Weadick: Mr. Minister, some residents haven't had the luxury of knowing that the home they've purchased has been used for a grow op. What's your ministry doing to help mediate the health problems for these people?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the ministry is focused on ideas for improving building inspections and standards for remediation of grow-op housing. I can assure the member that remediation and enforcement along with health and safety are key areas that we are looking at very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an increasing problem according to our realtors, and it's growing very quickly. What is your government going to do about this problem?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we recognize that grow ops contribute to creating unsafe communities, and that's why we're taking a cross-ministry approach to ensure that this is given the proper direction it needs. My ministry along with Health and Wellness, the Solicitor General, Public Security, and Justice are working together on the best way to address a very complex issue.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, 114 questions and responses.

At 3 p.m. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor will visit the House, so we're going to just continue with the Routine forthwith without a break.

Members' Statements

St. Mary of the Lake Catholic School

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, every now and then we see gold achieved as a result of people working together. That's the case of one of my many schools in Lesser Slave Lake, and that's St. Mary of the Lake Catholic school, which has students from preschool to grade 12. Of course, they wanted to see their students be successful in all aspects of their lives. Despite all of its challenges this school took the view that its students mattered, that parents and the community needed to be involved and be active participants, and that the student's individuality and culture were celebrated.

And, yes, success. A recent survey by Alberta Education showed that St. Mary's students scored excellent in a number of areas last year: for being safe and caring, preparing students for lifelong learning, involving parents, and continually improving and achieving high scores on standardized tests.

To the board, the superintendent, the principal, the teachers, the parents, the Catholic community, and especially to the students, congratulations on achieving your academic goals. May you keep up the great work.

Thank you.

Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley Constituency

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, most people see this Legislature as a source of constant partisan attacks and bickering. That's the way our democratic system is set up, and to be honest, that's probably the way it works best. We're all here to reflect the diversity of our province, and we're not always going to agree. In fact, when we disagree, it's our sworn duty to fight for our respective positions with all our strength and ability. Yet at the end of the day we're all Albertans, and we share many goals and values.

Despite our bickering, sometimes this Assembly is home to some surprisingly touching moments of humanity. Yesterday, outside the glare of the television cameras for question period, I witnessed one of these moments. I'm speaking, in particular, of this Legislature's common desire to pay tribute to a great Albertan, Grant Notley, by renaming one of our constituencies in his honour. This could have easily degenerated into partisan manoeuvring, but in this case everyone recognized the value of moving forward together. Yesterday the actions of the hon. Government House Leader and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona moved me with their classy handling of the situation.

As we say goodbye to this place for a few weeks and prepare for the holidays, I hope we can keep the holiday spirit and the value of mutual respect in mind. Democracy is the ultimate victory of civilization over savagery. I am grateful that we settle our differences with words, even harsh ones, rather than the violence that is so common in other parts of the world. We have so much to be thankful for, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

International Volunteer Day

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, International Volunteer Day is celebrated globally every year on December 5. This important day was established by the United Nations General Assembly to commemorate the contributions and dedication of volunteers world-wide. Volunteerism is a source of community strength, resilience, and solidarity. It brings positive social change by fostering respect, equality, and participation of all.

Albertans have a rich history of volunteering and community involvement. Volunteers can be found on the front lines of all of our community services, including health care, heritage, the arts, disaster relief, sports, and the list goes on. There are over 1.4 million volunteers in Alberta. Tomorrow, in light of International Volunteer Day, this government is recognizing six inspiring Albertans for their dedication to their communities during the 11th annual Stars of Alberta volunteer awards: Ms Shaughnessy Fulawka from Lac La Biche, Mr. Danny Guo from Edmonton, Mrs. Chris Burton from Lethbridge, Ms Joanne Roberts from Fort McMurray, Mrs. Olivia Butti from Edmonton, and Mrs. Maureen Willis from Cochrane.

I encourage the members of this Assembly and all Albertans to join me in thanking Alberta's volunteers and to use Sunday as an opportunity to reflect on what more each of us can do to make a difference in our communities.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 223

Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 223, the Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2010.

Bill 223 is a substantial piece of legislation to secure public health care in Alberta. The bill interprets the Canada Health Act to ensure that key principles such as comprehensiveness, universality, and portability, vital to all Albertans, are strengthened. It would amend several Alberta acts in doing this.

The provisions of this bill address what Albertans are really saying they want, things the NDP caucus heard in its health hearings, with meaningful content and not vague platitudes. This bill would help ensure the mess we're seeing with health care services in Alberta could not happen. These provisions include an explicit prohibition on extra billing. It would ensure no health facility could provide preferred access to insured services for those who pay. The law already prohibits such preferred access to insured surgical procedures. The bill would extend that sensible protection to all insured health services. It would guarantee access to real long-term care for those medically assessed as requiring it.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years important health services have been moved out of many communities, forcing some people to go to Edmonton or Calgary for treatment. This bill would require the government to set out which services will be available in regional facilities throughout the province.

Bill 223 expands insured health services by requiring the minister to present to the Legislature a comprehensive plan, including cost estimates, to meet two key objectives to improve health care: a prescription drug program that would ensure access to drugs is not impeded by cost and insured coverage for all dental services for those under 18 years of age except those solely for cosmetic purposes. An effective public health service would ensure that services are not only publicly funded but as much as possible publicly delivered as well. This bill would ensure that within five years all insured surgical procedures would be delivered in public or not-for-profit facilities.

The sustainability of our health system has been threatened by lack of planning for infrastructure, capital spending, and human resources. Bill 223 would establish a health planning council so that planning is co-ordinated with clear timelines.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill would make the health care system more accountable by bringing transparency to the health budget and ensuring the public is consulted through elected regional health advisory bodies.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is about the health services that Albertans need and desire. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 223 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Can we be brief today? I'd like to give you some numbers before we get to the appointed time.

Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the program used November 26, 2010, for the commander-in-chief's unit commendation for the 1 PPCLI Battle Group Task Force 1-06 as presented by Canada's Governor General at Edmonton Garrison, which I attended. This unit, known as Task Force Orion, consists of 1,200 soldiers. The commander-in-chief's unit commendation was created on July 3, 2002, in recognition of outstanding services by units of the Canadian Forces under direct fire in times of conflict.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 130 letters signed by Albertans concerned about proposed changes to our health care laws. They ask that the government instead consider ways of strengthening public health care along the lines of what is in the bill just introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that I have already provided the government's 2010-11 second-quarter fiscal update to all MLAs. I've also made the fiscal update public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. The Government Accountability Act requires the government to table a quarterly fiscal update no later than 60 days after each quarter. Accordingly, I wish to table the 2010-11 second-quarter fiscal update, which serves as the amended fiscal plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of an amendment to Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Unfortunately, the amendment will not be discussed due to the government invoking time allocation to limit debate and force a vote on Bill 24. It's a shame that the debate on Bill 24 was cut short considering all the . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Let's go on with this. The debate is over.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling letters from Patsy Price of Calgary; Barbara Slade from Grace Martin school in Edmonton, that serves non English-speaking refugee children; Dr. Alvin Finkel, a professor at Athabasca University; Marnie Schaetti, formerly with Project Read, Claresholm, the Association of Literacy Coordinators of Alberta, and Literacy Alberta; Miranda Bestman, an ESL teacher from Edmonton; Julia Melnyk of Calgary; and Dr. Eric Stockton of Calgary, all urging the minister of advanced education to recognize the immense value of the unique publication English Express and requesting that he reinstate the funding for this treasured publication.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon.

Mr. Snelgrove, President of the Treasury Board, pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act the report of selected payments to members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, year ended March 31, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta 2009 annual accountability report.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd be very interested in knowing whether the Government House Leader had any projected government House business for us for any week, whether it be next or not.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very obvious to all members of the House that the business on the Order Paper has for the most part been concluded, with the exception of Bill 29, which will remain on the Order Paper. I anticipate that we might adjourn the session in accordance with the standing orders this afternoon after the appearance of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

Statement by the Speaker

Sessional Statistics

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few moments from now the Lieutenant Governor will be arriving. I'm assuming that this is going to be the last day of this fall session, so I'd like to give you some numbers with respect to what you have accomplished in the year 2010. These numbers should be current to basically midnight last night, when essentially you left.

The number of sitting days that we had in the year 2010 – that is, from February 4 to December 1 – was 50, including today, which included seven evening sittings. Last year, in 2009, there were 64 days, with 10 evening sittings.

The number of minutes this year was approximately 14,864 – that's pretty specific – compared to 17,446 minutes in 2009. The number of hours not including today was 248 hours, compared to 291 in 2009. The number of words spoken by members in the 2010 sitting was 2,100,000, just a bit beyond that, compared to 2,320,000 for 2009. The number of words spoken during the November 24 evening sitting, as a number of you asked and I said we didn't have that number yesterday, was 167,471.

Interestingly enough, standing committees seem to be increasing in activity. The number of words spoken by members in standing committee meetings this year was 1,310,219, compared to 1,188,234 in 2009. The number of committee meetings, again, to date has dramatically increased from last year. It's 170 hours plus. Last year it was 141.

Dramatic changes in the question period in terms of allowing members to participate and having members participate. In 2010 there were 17 occasions, and there were 18 sets of questions and answers, compared to 11 in 2009. There were 21 occasions in 2010 with 19 sets of questions and answers, compared to one a year ago. This year there were seven occasions on which 20 sets of questions and responses occurred. In 2009 there were zero days. So there's a very dramatic increase in the number of members that are basically participating. We're averaging 108 questions and responses per day.

The total number of questions and answers for 2009 was 6,170. This year, in 2010, it was 5,284. This year, as I said, we're averaging 108 questions and responses per day. Last year, in 2009, it was 96. That is a very significant increase. The greatest number of questions and answers that we've ever had in one question period was on March 22 of this year, when there were 121. In the past: 108 on three occasions.

The number of government bills that received royal assent to date is 15, with another 13 scheduled to receive royal assent this afternoon. That would be 28 bills in 2010, compared to 62 last year. The number of government bills left on the Order Paper in 2010 is one compared to zero last year. The number of private member's public bills that received royal assent this year is two, the same as in 2009. That makes 48 private member's bills that have now taken place.

You may be interested in some history of all-nighters, seeing as you were involved in a very historic one this year. The first all-nighter actually occurred on October 8, 1913. In 1913 the Assembly convened at 3 in the afternoon, sat till 6 o'clock, and then went from 8 p.m. to 3:15, and that was viewed as an all-nighter. Mind you, that was 1913. We've had a number of all-nighters over the years. The first, basically, all-nighter that went beyond 3:15 occurred on December 7, 1981. That was the same day that Japan bombed Pearl Harbor, the anniversary of it anyway, just a few years' difference. That one began at 2:30 p.m. and ended at 5:27 p.m. the following day. It was 981 minutes, or 16 hours.

The second all-nighter took place on November 9, 1993. A couple of members in the House were here at that time. There's only one person in the House here from the 1981 one, but there are a couple here from the one on November 9, 1993. The afternoon sitting started at 1:30 p.m. and ended at 5:30 p.m., with the evening sitting starting at 8 p.m. and then ending at 4:11 p.m. the following afternoon. So 24 hours and 11 minutes.

The third all-nighter took place May 28, 2001. There were a number of individuals here. That one went for 25 hours and 18 minutes. Then on May 9, 2007 – a large number of you were here – it went to 10:45 a.m. the following day. So 19 hours and 45 minutes.

The fifth one took place on December 4, 2007. That was a long one. The afternoon sitting began at 1 p.m. and went to 6 p.m. The evening sitting began at 8 p.m. and lasted till 5:53 the following afternoon. So that was 26 hours. That was a 108-page Hansard as compared to the 132-page Hansard we did the other day.

Of course, the most recent one, 25 hours and 30 minutes, we've already talked about. In order of precedence the length of the sittings breaks down as follows: the December 4, '07, one at 26 hours, and then you go down to the lesser ones I've already talked about. There was a great amount of time spent in 2010, not so much in days but certainly with respect to those other matters of time.

Orders of the Day

Royal Assent

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[The Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: As we await the return of the Premier with His Honour, I thought that I would read a poem for you. It's called Season's Greetings. It was written by the Member of the Provincial Parliament for Oshawa in the province of Ontario and given in the Ontario Legislature. As this gentleman is not a member of our House, I can mention his name. His name is Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette, MPP for Oshawa. He recited this in the Ontario Legislature.

'Twas just weeks before Christmas and all through the House,
The members were scurrying for the rise of the House.
And the pages all stood firm in their place,
guarding and watching our ominous mace.
Now the Speaker just stood for a quieting therein, calling "Order! Order!" as he said with no grin,
"I know all are restless, with shouting and posturing about, but it's order we'll have or I'll toss you straight out."
Then the members, they seated and they listened with care, in hopes an agreement soon would be there.
Now the sergeant is seated with sword at his side, maintaining the order that he does with such pride.
And Hansard, yes, Hansard, and the words that they know, for who has said what, with the occasional show.
The Clerk being seated and advising the Chair, reviewing petitions and order questions with care.
Then the House, it did rise, and the members went home, leaving the Speaker just standing and being alone.
But it's the House, yes, the House, or the chamber you see that influences generations, many yet to be.
Then the doors, they are closed, and the lights put on dim, awaiting a time once again, when all shall begin.

3:00

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, and the Premier entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

His Honour: Please be seated.

The Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sittings passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010
- 17 Alberta Health Act
- 18 Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010

- 26 Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010
- 27 Police Amendment Act, 2010
- 28 Electoral Divisions Act

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.
The hon. Government House Leader.

[The Lieutenant Governor indicated his assent]

The Clerk: In Her Majesty's name His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Lieutenant Governor and the Premier left the Chamber]

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly do now adjourn, and I advise the House that pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)(b) the session would be recessed.

The Speaker: Merry Christmas, and be safe.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:05 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)(b)]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 3rd Session (2010)

Activity to December 02, 2010

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

Subjects Not Indexed

Subjects arising under the following headings in the text are not indexed:

- Prayers, Notices of Motion, and Projected Government Business
- Detailed topics arising during debate on bills and motions are not indexed either; however their general content is indexed under an appropriate subject heading.

Please note, however, that from 1976 onward all text, including the above mentioned sections, is searchable on the Hansard online system. The Assembly's website is www.assembly.ab.ca. Click on Quick Access, then on Search Hansard to access the search engine. A customized Help screen can provide searching hints. However, please contact the Hansard indexer if you need assistance in finding information in Hansard.
