Mr. Marz: Well, I'm getting a bit of a different story, Mr. Speaker. My reported compensation offerings still don't compare with compensation already established for other industrial installations such as oil and gas. So what options do landowners have if they're not satisfied with what they're being offered by companies like AltaLink, other than just not signing an agreement?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that you're always going to have situations where there may be disagreements on what the value of the land is, but it's my understanding that the amount that is being offered has substantially increased from previous negotiations. I guess the thing we always have to remember is that there is a balance because those costs are put back into the rate base through the Alberta Utilities Commission to consumers.

To specifically answer the question, there is the Surface Rights Board, which falls under the purview of my colleague. That is the option when you can't reach agreement.

Mr. Marz: My last question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Mr. Speaker, when you start out with next to nothing, a substantial increase is still next to nothing. Does the Surface Rights Board use different criteria in determining compensation for transmission towers than they do for well sites even though they occupy and have similar effects on the land? If so, why?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the Surface Rights Board does not distinguish between power transmission lines, well sites, or any other use with respect to dealing with compensation issues in front of them on the right-of-entry order. The board makes its decisions on compensation in accordance with the Surface Rights Act, and it's based on evidence and argument presented by the parties on each specific case.

Violence in the Somali Community

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Somali community has been caught in a deadly crossfire. The community has lost 30 young men to gun violence since 2005. Little help has been forthcoming. To the Solicitor General. Alberta ranks 12th out of 13 among provinces and territories in police officers per capita. Is this ongoing violence towards members of the Somali community a result of the province's failure to provide adequate policing?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, no, it's not as a result of our failure to provide adequate policing; it's a result of gang activity. If you include the spectrum of law enforcement that we use in this province, we do not, in fact, rank the way the hon. member points out. If you've noticed the recently released crime statistics, Alberta's crime rates are going down. We are having an impact. We're going to keep going.

Mr. Hehr: To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Most of these murders are unsolved. In the few cases that are going ahead, witnesses are too frightened to testify. This Assembly passed the new Witness Security Act in April. When will this act be proclaimed and the protection for witnesses put in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we know in this situation through our meetings with the Somali community and the work that we have done under our safe communities initiative, these are very complicated cases to investigate. We know from what we've heard from police services who are investigating crimes that it is sometimes difficult in gang-related homicides to get people to come forward to testify. We know that there are systems in place within municipalities to ensure that if victims do want to come forward, if witnesses want to come forward, there is the opportunity for them to do that and to be protected in the course of the investigation. We wish the police success with their investigation.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Mr. Speaker, the Somali community has called on the Alberta government to form a task force to find ways to solve the problem and prevent more deaths. The answer: it would be too expensive; it would be too long. The cost in lives has been too expensive, and the deaths have been going on too long. Will the minister finally appoint the task force that this community has been asking for?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with people in the Somali community across this province about some very difficult things that are happening in that community. The answer is not that it's too expensive or too long. The answer is that we in this province believe in safe communities. We partner with our police, we partner with community leaders, and we ensure that everything is in place to make sure that people can live safe lives. Unfortunately, things happen. We will ensure that we continue to work in partnership to support community efforts, to deal with diversion programs, to ensure that there are mentorship programs so that people don't make wrong choices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Affordable Housing for Rural Alberta

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of housing has been all over the news in the last little while, a month or so, cutting ribbons, announcing affordable housing projects but all in big cities. It appears to me that this minister does not recognize the dramatic shortage of affordable housing in rural Alberta. With no plan for rural Alberta what will this minister say to the people in my area who cannot afford housing? Move to Edmonton? Move to Calgary? I'd like an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first thank the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for that question, but at the same time she can actually look at where we have been. We've actually been from Lethbridge to Fort McMurray, from Edson to Vermilion, and everywhere in between. In fact, there are about 8,800 affordable housing units pursuant to the Premier's plan that have been built. About a quarter, 2,200, involve housing in rural Alberta. I'm very proud that we have a cost per door of about $97,500, and we have been able to find a 19 per cent savings in our budget this year.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, Lethbridge, Fort McMurray, et cetera, do not qualify as rural Alberta. To the same minister: how can you assure this House that the RFPs that you will be providing for those opportunities are for developers in rural Alberta, giving them the same opportunity as those in big cities like Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I get calls from this side of the House to do the right thing. Well, we are doing the right thing. As part of our RFP about one-third of our RFP applications this year have been outside the province's seven major centres. Some of the qualities include sustainability, the need for the project. But, most importantly, affordable housing must be affordable for both the taxpayer and the client.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, the RFP isn't enough to address the shortage of housing in rural Alberta, like my constituency, and this minister knows it because we've spoken. What other options can this minister of housing provide for my constituents rather than just an RFP that takes too long to build and doesn't even provide enough support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As this member knows from conversations that we've had, we have an RFP, but we also have a capital funding program. I give this House a bit of an example: 5,100 of 14,000 seniors' self-contained units, again part of our capital funding program; 1,465 of 10,000 community housing units. Again, this is in the four corners of the province on a per capita basis. But I remind this member that it's a balance between individual responsibility and what we can provide as a government because we're dealing with taxpayers' dollars here.

2:20 Attendance at Remembrance Day Ceremonies

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, next week MLAs in this House have the opportunity to participate in local Remembrance Day ceremonies. In my view, these opportunities to remember those who paid the ultimate price for our freedom and prosperity are vital to our national and provincial fabric on several levels. Unfortunately, not every Albertan has the opportunity to take part in these events because of conflicts with their employment. To the Minister of Service Alberta: is this government willing to legally ensure that every Albertan can attend a Remembrance Day ceremony if they so choose?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to attending Remembrance Day ceremonies, in many cases most employers will let their employees go, and I'm just a little bit confused as to where this question is coming from.

Mr. Anderson: Well, to be clear, there are provinces that have designated Remembrance Day as a statutory holiday or prohibit stores from opening during that morning. That's not what I'm asking for. I'm asking the minister: just as we allow people a mandatory period of time to vote on election day if they choose, would the government be willing to do the same thing for employees wishing to attend Remembrance Day ceremonies?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to that request, if there's any particular situations that we need to be aware of as a government, we're more than happy to look into them. Any services like that are open to the public, and we always encourage everyone to go if they can attend.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration looks like he'd like to answer this question. Tell us: would you like to look into this and see if there's a way that we can allow people who want to attend Remembrance Day ceremonies to attend them when they otherwise wouldn't be able to, just like we do with voting?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the reason I'm pointing it out here is because if the member is asking a question, he might as well know whom he should be asking the question to. Our employment standards legislation right now does not designate Remembrance Day as a holiday; however, I have to tell you that we are not receiving any complaints from Albertans advising us that employers are not allowing them to go and participate in this holiday. If this was a problem and if employees definitely would be raising that as an issue, we would look at it, but at this point it doesn't appear to be an issue other than in that caucus.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of investing in postsecondary education, this government's only solution for students in institutions is piling on debt. Nonrepayable financial assistance widens access and encourages students to finish, but in Alberta the ratio of loans to bursaries is 14 to 1. The government-imposed debt craze is spreading to institutions as the University of Calgary has sunk into a $47 million deficit. To the minister of advanced education: with student loan rates up by one-fourth and projected to increase another 20 per cent next year . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting that the hon. member says that we're not investing in postsecondary. I can tell you that in the roughly four years that I've been the minister of this department, we have already created more than 14,000 new seats for new access for students.

An Hon. Member: I didn't hear that. How many?

Mr. Horner: More than 14,000. Close to 15,000.

Indeed, our capital plan continues because a lot of the construction is still ongoing. We will continue to do that, Mr. Speaker, broadening the base of our support, utilizing all of the tools in our tool box, which includes bursaries and scholarships. Frankly, I would stack our scholarship program up against any other province in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate the creation of seats. Absolutely necessary. However, the attendance is a problem. How is Alberta going to raise its 14 per cent, subpar postsecondary participation rate when the only option is debt, and the most debt-averse students, those with low incomes and from rural areas, are the ones we need to reach? How are we going to help them?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would challenge the hon. member and his research that, simply, student loans are the only deterrent to raising our participation rates in postsecondary. There is a list of items that come into play, the economy being one, where students are perhaps going out into the workforce and then coming back. One of the things that we've noticed is that the average age of our students is actually going higher because they're going out, getting some dollars in their pockets, coming back into our system, and we have to be responding to that kind of reality.

Mr. Chase: Well, the reality is, Mr. Speaker, that it's getting harder to go to university full-time because it's unaffordable. If massive layoffs, tuition hikes, and extra fees couldn't stop our second-largest university from sliding into a deficit, isn't this a sign that cuts to postsecondary operating grants have gone too far?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referencing the University of Calgary's current deficit situation as was reported in the Auditor General's report, as has been recently reported in the media. We recognize that the University of Calgary is going through some difficult financial times, and the management there is taking the reins to create a new system of accountability within their system. They are tackling the problem with vigour. We're supporting them in every way possible, which means they may have to carry a deficit for a small period of time. We're going to support our university, not criticize it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Highway 63

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Numerous Albertans use highway 63, widely regarded as a busy and dangerous highway, yet some constituents claim that there does not seem to be too much activity happening with respect to twinning that highway. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. Can he please explain why more work is not being done on the highway when there are so many safety concerns?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, although the collision rate on highway 63 is below the provincial average, one collision is still too many, as far as I'm concerned. We have and will continue to make improvements to this highway to help safety. Safety is everyone's concern. Twinning a highway plays a role in the safety plan, but we all have a role to play in making our highways safe.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments, but I don't think the minister answered the question. Could the minister explain why more work was not done on highway 63 this year?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to tell Albertans exactly what we're doing on highway 63, and it's a significant investment. This government invested $147 million on highway 63 this year, and the federal government is also providing funding. [interjection] If the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo would actually quit his yipping and listen for a minute, he might learn something about his riding. Twinning north of Wandering River . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll let the minister take a breath while I ask the next question here. I want to ask the minister about the bridge in Fort McMurray. I know constituents driving in Fort McMurray are curious about its status as it looks like it's finished but it's not open yet. Can the minister tell us what the status is on that bridge and when it'll be commissioned?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right. The bridge does look like it's finished, but there has to be a realignment made there for the highway to connect to that bridge. We also have to move some of the utilities and different things from the existing bridges. But I'd like that hon. member to know that construction is being done on time. That bridge will open in 2011.

To answer a little bit of his last question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member that of the $147 million we invested this year, we did some twinning north of Wandering River.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Fort Chipewyan Health Research Agreement

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This week the Minister of Aboriginal Relations has faced a few questions, but rather than answering, he's decided to duck and cover. The First Nations and Métis people in Alberta deserve better, so I'm going to ask a question again to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Does the minister think it's his responsibility to publicly advocate on issues like health and safe drinking water for the First Nations and Métis people in Fort Chip? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government acknowledges the concerns and frustrations of the people of the Fort Chip area, and we remain totally committed to working with that community, with the chiefs up in that area to resolve a number of their issues. I feel as a minister that I have a duty to listen to their concerns and to bring them to my caucus to inform my caucus of the issues up in that area. That is what I feel is my role as the minister.

Dr. Taft: Well, the minister of health's and the Premier's names are all over the correspondence with the chief in reference to the Fort Chip health study. Given this Minister of Aboriginal Relations has claimed to play a central role in these negotiations, why is this minister mysteriously absent from correspondence on this issue?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely not the truth. This letter of intent that we're trying to get signed up in the Fort Chip area has my signature right on that document, so I'm very much involved with the issues up in that community.

Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Well, I'd like him to table that, then. That would be very helpful. I'm sure you'd agree, Mr. Speaker.

Why is this minister ignoring requests for a clear plan on how the health study will be done and instead, as he says, merely providing advice regarding a letter of intent?

Mr. Webber: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have a physicians' working group up in the area right now talking to the community, and we're developing some type of community health study. Yes, some type of community health study. The options were presented to the Nunee health board in Fort Chip in August.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

High-speed Internet Service for Rural Alberta

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been way too many reports generated over the last number of years regarding Internet connectivity or, in the case of Whitecourt-St. Anne, the lack of it. In 2009 the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties brought forth a report recommending an increase in high-speed connectivity in rural Alberta, and this year similar recommendations were being presented by the Alberta Economic Development Authority. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Ma'am, what are you doing to help this cause in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is fully committed to ensuring that Albertans have access to high-speed Internet wherever they live. We know the SuperNet has built the fibre, the infrastructure to get that going, but we are hearing about challenges in many other parts of Alberta. This past summer Service Alberta issued a request for information, asking industry to help identify the best ways to address the challenges for unserved and underserved areas of Alberta, and we are reviewing that as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. To the same minister. I don't need any more reports, and I don't need any more promises. I just need to know when you're going to fix this for the remaining mile in rural Alberta. There's 30 per cent of us that have no Internet service to our homes.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it's about 34 per cent that do not have access to Internet service. Currently we are looking at the strategy and moving forward. Once we have reviewed the industry responses to the request for information, of which there are many, we fully intend to move towards a request for proposal and ensure that Albertans have access to high-speed Internet. This will be done within two years of awarding that contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. To the same minister again. I've got counties in my constituency that are willing to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on this last mile. Can you give them some advice? I don't know if we're going to duplicate the work here, but what I heard from your answers is that you're going to take this on.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to commend the communities within Whitecourt-St. Anne for proactively moving forward to access high-speed Internet. Now, we know that many of these community initiatives are important pillars in our overall strategy. Moving forward, our provincial strategy is going to negate the need for these piecemeal approaches. We are fully committed to a comprehensive Alberta solution addressing all the areas of our province. Again, we want this work done within two years of awarding the contract.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Highway 3 Coalhurst Intersection

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The egress to highway 3 from Coalhurst and highway 509 has long been a very contentious and dangerous intersection. There is even a Facebook group about it. In fact, just within the last few weeks there's been a fatal collision and a collision with serious injuries. To the Minister of Transportation. I know this minister is aware of the serious concerns regarding this intersection. Is the minister considering some solutions, and is this a priority?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this is about working with the town to find solutions and provide access to the town while enhancing safety features on our highways to make sure that everyone gets home safely. I did meet with the mayor of Coalhurst last year, and my department officials continue to work with the town to improve the situation. There have been several options that have been proposed, and we're still waiting on the town to come back with those decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that an overpass is probably prohibitively expensive, but could a traffic light be a solution?

I'm just going to go into my third question, and then I'll have two. There could be a better way, and this is my suggestion. Would you consider lowering the speed limit from Kipp until an appropriate position past the Coalhurst intersection, lowering it to 70 when at this point in time it's 110?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a main highway on one of the national highway systems in Alberta. It's highway 3, going to the Crownsnest Pass. It's a twinned, four-lane highway. When I sit down with our safety engineers and we talk about speed limits and how they put the speed limits on highways, they say that it's very, very unsafe to lower a speed on a major highway because then all traffic doesn't go the same speed, and it makes it more dangerous for the people sitting there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Elizabeth Métis Settlement

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent article in the Cold Lake Sun indicated that some of the members of the Elizabeth Métis settlement have serious concerns with how the settlement is being managed. Can the Minister of Aboriginal Relations explain what he has done to respond to these concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for that question. We do have a Métis settlements ombudsman office that works with the settlement members and with the settlement councils to investigate and to resolve issues and make recommendations to my office if needed. Now, the concerns brought forward by the Elizabeth settlement were investigated by the ombudsman this year, and recently I received a report from the ombudsman in regard to this investigation. I did find this investigation to be unacceptable, and at the time I spoke privately with the ombudsman as to why I did not accept the report.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister. I agree; the report was unacceptable. Does this confirm the rumours that I've heard from some of my constituents that the ombudsman office has been shut down, and there's no one available to hear their concerns?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Métis ombudsman did resign for reasons that do remain private. However, the ombudsman office was never shut down, and in fact it is currently operating under my direction. There are still people there to answer the phones, and any settlement member can call at any time with any of their concerns. I hope to have a new ombudsman in place within the next week or so.

Mrs. Leskiw: I am pleased to see the minister is committed to the Alberta Métis people.

My final question is to the same minister. The Elizabeth settlement has been working very hard to develop a gravel pit in south-west Edmonton. Can the minister tell me if he's willing to champion the gravel pit to the city of Edmonton and help this economic development opportunity become reality for the people of the Elizabeth settlement?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that I do support economic development in any Métis settlement or by any Métis business to help them become more self-sufficient. However, this gravel pit that the hon. member is referring to is really out of my hands. It's the city of Edmonton. They have decided not to grant the municipal approvals needed for this gravel pit to operate. It is a municipal issue, and I will respect the city of Edmonton's decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Securities Regulation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several Canadian provinces are supporting the federal government's plan for a single national securities regulator; however, Alberta is joining Quebec in court action to prevent exactly this from happening. Some suggest Alberta is wasting its time and resources on a matter that is already a fait accompli and in a realm that would be better regulated by the federal government in any case. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Considering all of this, why is Alberta still proceeding full speed ahead in opposing a single federal securities regulator?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the time and money that's being wasted is being wasted in Ottawa in trying to set up a new national securities regulator. We have a system that works, and Albertans know that if something works well, you don't waste the time trying to fix it. Why does it work? Because the Alberta Securities Commission understands and knows how the Alberta economy works. It has local expertise. The last thing we need is a bunch of faraway bureaucrats in Ottawa who don't have that local knowledge and have the Ottawa one-size-fits-all view of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that proponents of a single national securities regulator suggest Canada is a laughingstock – on the world stage, that is – for having a disjointed system of 13 different regulators, is Alberta not also open to the suggestion that we're a laughingstock for attempting to prevent attempts to make it better?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that line is just the standard line of the federal finance bureaucrats in Ottawa. They're the ones that get laughed at when they show up and pretend they're the SEC from the U.S.

The Canadian system, the passport system that we have, is recognized internationally for the two things that securities regulators are supposed to do, efficiency of raising capital and investor protection. For the last two years the Milken Institute has rated Canada the best, most efficient at capital-raising, and the World Bank has ranked Canada the best in the top five for investor protection. In fact, just yesterday, so it's six years in a row, once again Canada was ranked in the top five, tied with the U.S. ahead of the United Kingdom, for investor protection.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. We've seen the experience of our neighbours to the east, Saskatchewan, and their experiences in potash, how it has competed both on the local level and internationally and how messy it can be. Now, to compete in a global marketplace, do we not need a national system to represent our national interests?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the story out of Saskatchewan and Ottawa yesterday was a positive story. It's a good story. It's about the protection of provincial resources. As far as our system, we have a national system already. What we don't have is a centralized system in Ottawa. We have a system that works, the passport system. You register in one province; automatically you get registered in the other nine. We have a national system, and it does work.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness would like to supplement an answer, I believe, which will allow a further question to be raised.

Fort McMurray Continuing Care Facility

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to clarify an answer with respect to the continuing care facility that is being constructed in Fort McMurray. If you take a look at Hansard through this week, you would see numerous spots where interjections were being given during my attempts to answer questions, and I may not have completed a thought here. What was intended to be said was that a new 48-bed continuing care facility that was projected for construction in Fort McMurray is actually going to be replaced with a new 100-bed continuing care facility.* With all the interjections and all the interruptions, it was difficult to complete that train of thought. If I said 48 – and I don't have Hansard in front of me – then I just want to clarify that that was the original intention, but in fact it's been replaced with a 100-bed facility.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, I believe that was in response to a question of yours.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much. Of course, I got kicked out of the PC caucus, Mr. Speaker, for, in fact, representing my bosses, the constituents of Fort McMurray, on this very facility. I'm very pleased that the minister has clarified, as the Minister of Infrastructure already had in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Today 19 members were recognized, and there were 114 questions and responses.

We will move back to Members' Statements very, very quickly. In the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Speaker's Ruling Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I take it, Edmonton-Strathcona, you want to re-introduce someone, which is highly irregular, and it's not something that I'm going to permit. Today we will do it once. If a person has already been introduced, they don't have to be re-introduced. You've requested to proceed again, but I'm not doing that in the future.

Ms Notley: As I say, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your generosity. As I had mentioned before, my guest was unable to be in the public gallery when he was introduced, so I'd like now once again to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Jan Buterman. Jan is here today, as I said, representing the Trans Equality Society of Alberta. It's a membership-based organization whose purpose is one of advocacy and education on trans-related issues for both government and others who do not know or understand the numerous challenges faced in living with this condition. I would ask that Jan now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation, an introduction as well.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two outstanding young high school students that are here to watch our proceedings today. Miss Leah Wagner is an exchange student from Germany who is studying at W.P. Wagner school of technology in Edmonton. She is keenly interested in politics back home in Germany and is here today to learn more about our political system. She's joined by an outstanding grade 11 student from W.P. Wagner. Miss Avery Bellikka is an honours student who is very interested in what happens here in the Legislature. She is also planning an exchange visit to Japan. The ladies are joined in the gallery by Avery's parents, Jerry and Lorraine Bellikka. Jerry is no stranger to the House. I used to work with him in my department, and now he works in the Premier's office and does a very good job for the government of Alberta. I ask all the members to give them a great traditional warm welcome. Would they please stand?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Property Rights

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Property rights are something that Albertans and Canadians value deeply. In Alberta these rights are enshrined in legislation and promoted by this government. That is why I'm concerned by recent comments by an individual in a southern Alberta newspaper which stated that the land-use framework is Soviet-style legislation and that it repeals landowner rights. I would like to clear up this misrepresentation of the truth.

First of all, the Alberta Bill of Rights is clear in stating that landowners have the right to the enjoyment of their private property. Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, passed by this Legislature, will assist in implementing the land-use framework and does not compromise property rights. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act does not authorize the government to extinguish land titles. Section 11 does allow a regional plan expressly to amend or cancel a statutory consent if doing so is in the public interest. Although both are instruments of an enactment, under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act a land title is not a statutory consent and cannot be cancelled by a regional plan. Land titles can only be affected through the due process of law such as through the Expropriation Act, in which case appropriate compensation would be payable.

Existing property rights continue to be protected by the Alberta Bill of Rights and are not compromised by the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and I know the hon. Member for Airdrie-

Chestermere would agree. On May 13, 2009, this hon. member stated that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is an “unprecedented victory for the rights of landowners in this province” and that “no other jurisdiction proposes to protect the rights of landowners the way Bill 36 does.” Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is absolutely correct in emphasizing this province’s commitment to preserve our right to private property.

In light of that, one week from today I urge all hon. members to participate in honouring . . . [Mr. Berger’s speaking time expired]

Speaker’s Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Airdrie-Chestermere, just cool it, okay? One of the things I’m going to look at – and I want to look at the deputy leader of that party and that caucus – is that in the last number of days we’ve been getting a lot of complaints in my office from people outside of this Assembly about the noise coming from there. One of the items I’m looking at for the spring session is to actually move the chairs and the desks here so that you’ll be right close to me.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Allocation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Water is at the heart of life. Everywhere throughout history when people have failed to protect water, the results have been devastating. I urge this government not to treat this matter lightly but to ensure that water is a priority so that human and ecosystem well-being can be assured long into the future.

Tragically, this PC government is in the pocket of big business. They put corporate interests ahead of families and the environment when business friends apply political pressure. They are on the brink of making major changes to water allocation rights throughout our beautiful province. They’re looking at deregulating water and giving control of this essential resource to people who want to make a buck. That’s wrong. That abandons their duty on behalf of all Albertans to be good caretakers of this treasure. The government is proceeding without consulting First Nations, as our treaties with them require.

All orders of government have an important role to play in protecting water for this generation and the next. The government has cut funding for water monitoring by 25 per cent since 2007 and cannot even ensure that those with licences are in compliance. A promised wetland policy has just been compromised, and comprehensive and open consultations about water are at best delayed and more likely abandoned.

Meanwhile, our water supply continues to shrink. We already see evidence of failure to take care. Fish from the Athabasca River are developing extreme deformities. People in some parts of this province are afraid to drink tap and well water. Floods and droughts are becoming more and more common. The Minister of Environment is working on amendments to our Water Act and has signalled that the government is open to using for-profit, market-based means for water allocation. We know what happened when they deregulated our electricity. Prices went through the roof. We know that they’ll put profits before people and that Alberta’s families always pay the price.

We need to learn from such mistakes. Our water is too important to sell off. All other options have not been explored. We need an allocation approach that is not based on ability to pay but, rather, on public interest.

It’s time the government stopped acting like henchmen for private interests. It’s time we rally together to put people first in practical ways. Water is not for political manipulation; it is our very life. Our water is not for sale.

Victims’ Services Memorandum of Understanding

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 28 I was joined by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security in Drayton Valley as he signed a memorandum of understanding with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, K Division. Also joining us were victims’ services units from Drayton Valley, Leduc, Wetaskiwin, and Rocky Mountain House. While our police throughout the province work very hard to protect us and those we hold dear, the sad reality is that Albertans are still victims of crime each year.

Last week the MOU was extended to ensure that victims’ voices are heard and that they receive the services they require to get through their time of need. The victims’ services branch works to ensure that Alberta’s Victims of Crime Act is carried out in our communities. This act has allowed for changes to help victims of crime such as the ability to collect surcharges on provincial statute offences, defined principles respecting the treatment of victims, and introduced financial benefits for victims. Our government works with those who are hurt and victimized by crimes of all types and levels of severity to ensure that their emotional and financial needs are met. Mr. Speaker, those who have been impacted by crime can have a long process of physical and mental recovery, and our government and our police services are taking steps to help them in their time of need.

I know that our Cardium victims’ services branch in Drayton Valley and surrounding area and all victims’ services units along with our RCMP detachments work tirelessly to reduce and prevent crime in our communities and to help us feel safe in our homes. I would like to thank the many volunteers who believe so strongly in helping victims of crime, who give so many hours of their time to help others in need.

Finally, I would like to congratulate the Cardium and Wetaskiwin victims’ services units for the awards they received from the minister for their outstanding work. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Bill 29 Alberta Parks Act

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill will align the legislation with the plan for parks. It will consolidate and modernize three pieces of existing park legislation into a single act, simplifying the parks system by reducing the number of classifications from seven to two, and will allow us to achieve a balance between conservation and recreation goals. The Willmore Wilderness Park Act will remain unchanged.

I am confident that this bill will serve the public and our parks system and our government well for a very long time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, the Chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 16(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as Chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table the 2009-2010 annual report of the fund.

Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I would also like to table the 2010-2011 first-quarter update on the fund. Copies of these reports have previously been distributed to members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it is the Alberta Occupational Health and Safety Update: The Importance of Being Pro-Active from Fraser Milner Casgrain. I would encourage the hon. minister of labour to have a quick squint at it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a research paper from the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy. The paper, which was published last month, is titled Expanding Canada Pension Plan Retirement Benefits. It analyzes various proposals for CPP reform and concludes that mandatory and universal coverage with higher benefit rates than the current CPP are essential to ensure adequate benefits for all Canadians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of documents signed by over 50 people who would like to see a law passed to amend the certification of guide, service, and assistance dogs. The letter proposes an amendment to the guide dogs qualifications regulations under the Blind Persons' Rights Act that would allow any person with a disability who requires the service of a guide dog to obtain certification through testing and proof rather than through the federation, as it currently reads.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Canadian Royal Heritage Award 2010

The Speaker: Hon. members, we still have a couple of minutes before the standing order kicks in. I'd like to advise members today that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta was the recipient of the 2010 Canadian royal heritage award, presented to a person or institution in recognition of their efforts in preserving, presenting, or enhancing Canada's royal heritage. This award was presented by the Canadian Royal Heritage Trust at a special dinner held in Toronto last week.

The award citation reads in part:

For Alberta's centenary in 2005 and the visit of Her Majesty The Queen to the province that year, the Legislative Assembly installed in glass over the exterior central front door of the Legislature in Edmonton, the cypher of Queen Elizabeth II surmounting the Canadian Golden Jubilee garland of maple leaves, and over the interior front door the Queen's arms in right of the province. At the same time, the cyphers of King Edward VII, King George V, King Edward VIII and King George VI were also installed in glass over the two other exterior doors and two interior doors on each side of the central ones. Together, the royal cyphers provide the Legislature with a collection, aesthetically pleasing and prominently visible, of the cyphers of all the Sovereigns of Alberta's history as a province. When the District of Alberta, named after Queen Victoria's daughter Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, became a province in 1905, it was described by the Governor General, the Earl Grey, as "a new leaf to Your Majesty's [King Edward VII's] maple crown." The distinctive addition of the Monarchs' cyphers to the royal heritage of Alberta and Canada is a commendable model for all the provinces.

Although presented to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, this award recognizes the contributions of the participants in this project, including Alberta Infrastructure, Alberta community development, the Alberta protocol office, the Legislative Assembly Office, and the creators of the commemorative stained glass windows, Winter Art Glass Studio. I want to especially acknowledge the leadership of the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, who was the Minister of Infrastructure at the time we approached this file and as we took it to conclusion.

In order to further highlight the work of Alberta stained glass artists featured in the Legislature Building, we have produced a brochure featuring not only the royal cyphers but also the stained glass window in the public gallery donated by the city of Edmonton in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the stained glass window installed in the Legislature Library to celebrate the centennial. Copies of this brochure, a very, very nice and historically sound brochure, will be available to all members momentarily.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Evening Sittings

19. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the remainder of the 2010 fall sitting unless, on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I note this motion is not debatable. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 4(1) it is not, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27 Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move second reading of the Police Amendment Act, 2010.

The Police Amendment Act modernizes and streamlines the police complaints and discipline process. It supports the government of Alberta's priority to provide safe communities for Albertans by ensuring adequate and effective policing throughout the province. Except for some minor process updates, the existing police complaints and discipline process has been largely unchanged since 1973. It has become legalistic and time consuming because of rising caseloads and lengthy wait times. As a result, it is no longer efficient. At the same time stakeholders' and the public's expectations of police accountability have been evolving. They want and deserve a police complaints and discipline process that is more timely, fair, and effective.

Public confidence in the police complaints system is of paramount importance, Mr. Speaker. It is also critical that there is a proportionate and reasonable response to allegations of misconduct. We all want effective oversight of our police. To refine the process, we held consultations with stakeholders and asked for public input via an online survey. Stakeholders included police services, police associations, police commissions, policing committees, the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association, the Law Enforcement Review Board, and the Alberta Justice criminal division. In addition, we received over a thousand responses to our online survey.

Consultation showed clear overall agreement on the need to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the police complaints and discipline process. Improving the process requires changes to the Police Act, which will in turn require amending the police service regulation and Alberta's policing standards and guidelines.

I'd like to take a few minutes to go through what we are proposing in Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, Mr. Speaker. By expanding the definition of complainant, the bill provides that when police officers make complaints against other officers, they will have the same standing, rights, and responsibilities as other complainants. They will be able to make complaints like any member of the public. Currently they have fewer options and rights than public complainants.

Some aspects of the Law Enforcement Review Board, or LERB, process are addressed in the bill, Mr. Speaker, to enable more appeals to be heard on the record as opposed to oral hearings, which are like trials. This will result in less time- and resource-intensive processes and allow a greater number of appeals to be heard in a shorter period of time. Again, it makes the process more efficient. The board will still be able to conduct oral hearings in circumstances that warrant it such as when new evidence is brought forward.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also gives the LERB additional powers and authorities to manage their process. For example, it allows the board to dismiss matters where the complainant does not comply with the board's direction or where individuals refuse to participate in the process. It also allows the board during an appeal to resolve a matter where both parties agree. The bill requires the Law Enforcement Review Board to issue its decisions within 60 days, and if they are unable to do so, they must advise the parties as to why this cannot be done.

Bill 27 reflects the need to develop experienced, productive commission and committee members and allows for a total tenure of 10 years. Especially important to Albertans are the provisions of the act that relate to public complaint directors. The act clarifies who can serve in this position and sets out the roles and responsibilities of the provincial public complaint director, an employee of my department. The amendments also allow regions to come together to hire a public complaint director to serve more than one committee.

The act clarifies who can and cannot lodge complaints and what information needs to be included in the complaint. We want to ensure, Mr. Speaker, that only those that are witnesses to the action, directly affected by the action, retained by or acting for a complainant, or related to a complainant can lodge complaints. This will prevent people who see something in the news that disturbs them from lodging complaints. They were not witnesses to or impacted by the event, nor are they related to or acting on behalf of a complainant. They are true third parties. Complaints of this nature eat up both time and resources, and this proposal will prevent these types of complaints from going forward. However, true third parties can still bring a complaint to the chief of police, who may then decide to initiate a complaint.

The act allows complaints to be received via e-mail, Mr. Speaker, just catching up with modern technology, and it defines when a complaint is considered to have been made. Also addressed in the act is the limitation period or time frame in which someone can bring forward a complaint. Currently complaints can only be made within one year of the alleged misconduct. These new provisions will allow for discoverability. That means that if someone learns of misconduct after the one-year time limitation is up but they could not have reasonably known about it during the one-year time period, they can still bring a complaint forward. For example, if today I learned that an officer had made an unauthorized police query about me two years ago, I could still bring a complaint forward.

The bill also makes it mandatory for alternative dispute resolution to be offered in appropriate circumstances, Mr. Speaker, to support the informal resolution of complaints. In some cases all that is needed for resolution is a simple apology or acknowledgement of the complaint. If cases can be handled informally, this saves a lot of time and resources. It still gets satisfactory results. We will develop a provincial standard that will provide guidance on what is appropriate for informal resolution. For example, if an officer is seen as disrespectful during a traffic stop, that might be a good example of where alternative dispute resolution would work, especially if it's a first-time offence. However, if there are multiple complaints against the same officer for the same offence, alternative dispute resolution may not be appropriate because it's clearly not an isolated case and the problem is not being dealt with. Additional action may be necessary in that case.

With respect to complaints and discipline the bill makes the chief of police's decision final on matters that are not of a serious nature. This prevents the use of extensive resources at an administrative tribunal for minor complaints. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the event that the complainant is not satisfied with that resolution, he could still file a complaint against the chief.

The Alberta Serious Incident Response Team is also addressed in this bill, Mr. Speaker. It gives ASIRT jurisdiction in serious incidents involving the military police in Alberta, which is new. This actually was at the request of the military police in Alberta, and ASIRT agrees with this proposal. It also allows the director of ASIRT in narrow circumstances to start an investigation without getting the approval of the director of law enforcement, who is an employee of my department. What this means is that if during the course of an ASIRT investigation the director uncovers additional criminal conduct not previously brought forward, the ASIRT director can begin investigating. The director must advise the director of law enforcement and my department of this investigation, but they don't have to wait for direction or approval to go ahead.

The bill allows for the dismissal of complaints in certain circumstances, Mr. Speaker. This would include situations where the complainant is not participating, they may have moved, or they don't show up at a hearing. It is not efficient to spend time and resources on abandoned complaints. They should be dismissed.

Mr. Speaker, the bill addresses the use of evidence by ensuring that both voluntary and involuntary statements given by officers are protected and cannot be used for other purposes such as civil suits. Currently only voluntary statements are protected. Exceptions include cases of perjury or other wrongdoing.

Finally, the bill requires that all existing complaints come under the new process effective on the proclamation date. This is necessary because as things stand now, some of these complaints can take years to work their way through the process.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, Bill 27 provides a modern, efficient, and transparent police complaints and discipline process that effectively meets the needs of law enforcement and the expectations of Albertans. It ensures we retain Albertans' trust and confidence in law enforcement.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today to provide these comments. I would now like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act.

This bill sets out the names and boundaries of Alberta's electoral divisions. Periodically reviewing and updating electoral boundaries is necessary to ensure the electoral map continues to properly reflect the province's changing population distribution and densities, community interests, and other factors.

Bill 28 is the result of almost a year's review by the arm's-length Electoral Boundaries Commission. In May of 2009 the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act was amended to establish an Electoral Boundaries Commission, an independent body of five individuals who were charged with reviewing all of the provincial electoral boundaries in Alberta. Over the course of a year the commission conducted its review, travelling around the province and consulting with Albertans in public meetings. The commission reviewed the existing electoral map and made recommendations on the areas, boundaries, and names for 87 electoral divisions based on the input they received, the applicable legal principles, and the latest census and population information. This review was done to ensure that Albertans have effective representation in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the commission was directed to divide the province into 87 electoral divisions, four more than are currently in place. Since the last time the number of electoral divisions was changed, in 1986 – and I think yesterday I inadvertently said 2002 by mistake – Alberta's population has grown by approximately 1 million people.* It is important for our province's electoral divisions to reflect the realities of the province's population.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the commission's report was tabled in the Assembly in June of this year. On October 26 the resolution was made in this Assembly, and the contents of the report were debated. All of the boundaries recommended in the commission's report were approved by this Assembly as were the majority of the names of the electoral divisions.

There were, however, changes to the suggested names of four electoral divisions. Mr. Speaker, these suggestions were made in order to better reflect the history and character of those divisions as well as the desires of their constituents. Specifically, the Assembly approved the following name changes. The proposed electoral division referred to by the commission as Okotoks-High River will retain its existing name of Highwood, the electoral division of Strathcona will now be named Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the electoral division of Calgary-Montrose will now be named Calgary-Greenway, and the electoral division of Calgary-North Hill will now be named Calgary-Klein.

Bill 28 reflects the commission's report as amended by the Assembly. This act will repeal and replace the existing act of the same name, and the new electoral boundaries will come into effect when the next general election is called in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, Bill 28 will bring Alberta's electoral boundaries and divisions up to date with its population and current needs.

I now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 28.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16
Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, how much time did I have left when we adjourned last time? How far into it was I?

The Chair: You have 20 minutes.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

As I ended right after I stood up last time, I want to talk a little bit about Bill 16. Again, as I said, this is one of those bills where I feel that, obviously, people are very concerned about distracted driving, and rightfully so. No one likes to see, when they're driving down the highway, that someone is texting or doing something that's not safe, that they're swerving around or they're cutting people off or they're running lights or whatever.

I understand the intention behind the bill, and it's a good intention. It's to stop distracted driving or to keep it at a lower level or at least decrease it. I understand the intent, but I just really feel it was a bill designed to be looking like we're doing something about it. It's not really accomplishing anything, just a bill to kind of be seen doing something when, really, it's not going to do much of anything for safety. In fact, what it might honestly do at the end of the day – and I guess we'll see; I'm sure it'll get passed – is that it could just lead to more waste of very needed police resources, and I would really hate to see that because we're already very much strained as it is.

Our police, our men and women in uniform, have a lot of things on their minds: a lot of laws to enforce, a lot of things that they need to enforce, a lot of things they need to be looking out for. The thought of having any of these officers spending any time of their very precious time on the road looking for people on cellphones or looking for people eating or looking for people writing or reading a direction off a note on where they're going to – I don't know if under this bill a GPS system is permitted. If it is, for those who don't have it, they might have a note that they're reading, or they're making a note. Is that going to be something that we want our officers spending their time on? If I thought for a second that this would in some way improve road safety in Alberta, I wouldn't need to stand up for more than a couple of seconds to say: "Yes. This is great. Let's go." But I just don't feel this bill in its current form is going to do much of anything.

That said, democracy is a funny thing. I talked earlier about it, and I'll be making a member's statement, probably, on it in the near future. We do things sometimes for interesting reasons in our system. I know that I voted for bills in the past, when I've been on the other side in the PC government. Bill 36 was alluded to. I absolutely did vote in favour of that bill, and I absolutely did speak to it, in fact. I did that because I trusted the minister at the time very much, someone who I thought of at the time as a political mentor and friend, so I thought I should vote for that and that I should read the speech that his department prepared for me in that regard.

reason for doing something. What I should have done is taken more stock of what was in that document, and I did not. It's one vote that I very much regret and that I will work very hard to undo over the next two years. That's definitely not a good reason to vote for something, but sometimes there are other reasons to vote for something.

One of these things is when your constituents so overwhelmingly want to see something done even though I don't think this bill is a very good one. I don't think it's going to do very much at all. I think it's a nanny state bill. The Minister of Transportation across the way: I know that deep down in his heart of hearts – I mean, I'm certainly not in his heart of hearts, but I sure doubt that he's very pumped about this bill. Maybe he is. Maybe he had a change of heart over the last six to eight months or the last year that I wasn't aware of.

When our constituents want something and they are essentially demanding it and polls show overwhelmingly that they want some kind of distracted driving legislation, that they don't believe people should be on their phones talking, sometimes you vote for things not because you necessarily agree with them but because your constituents demand it, period. That's what they want, much like me crossing the floor and joining the Wildrose Alliance. That was one thing my constituents wanted me to do. [interjection] Well, we'll verify that in 18 months. Don't you worry about that.

We do things for different reasons, and this is one that I'm going to eventually probably have to vote for because the mail that I've been getting on the issue is probably about 3 to 1 in favour of passing the bill. That's not to say that I'm not going to try to make some amendments, and I will bring an amendment forward on this bill today. It's just one of those bills where, you know, if the people want it, they're going to get it. I think they're going to find that this is going to lead to nothing more than a few more tickets, a little bit of a cash grab, and I don't think it's going to solve the problem at all.

I don't think there's anyone in this Chamber, frankly, that is going to change their behaviours because of this bill. I could be wrong. Maybe there will be, but knowing the group in here, I doubt it very much. We'll see. I mean, if you do, if the Solicitor General is going to keep to that hands-free device, if he thinks he can pull that off for his entire next two years, God love him, you know. Go for it. If the Minister of Transportation doesn't think he's going to eat a burger for the next two years on the road when he's running between events, okay. We'll see how that works. Now, I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. I know he'll follow this law. That I am confident of. He will be consistent. He will follow this law, not because of the law but because he already does it. He already has common sense that not many of us in here have, and he has that ability to do that. This will be definitely difficult for me to follow.

Now, as I've read through this document, I found it amazing that there were that many amendments from the government side on this bill given how short it was. They almost amended every section. We weren't aware of those amendments. There were a lot of subamendments that we would have brought forward, but we weren't aware they were bringing a whole bunch of amendments. Unfortunately, with our small caucus we weren't here at the time those were brought forward, and a lot of these sections have been cut off to us because of that. So we'll have to stick to the few that weren't dealt with previously.

What I want to do – and I believe I can keep the remaining time that I have after we get through the amendments. I can come back and still have my 12 minutes, 15 minutes, whatever, left. [interjection] Oh, still? Absolutely. Fantastic.

Okay. I will bring forward an amendment now on that. Well, no. I'll talk for a couple of more minutes on it.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you going to introduce?

Mr. Anderson: No, not yet. I'm just prefacing it.

The Chair: Okay. Continue on.

Mr. Anderson: Section 115.4 says that subject to this section and the regulations made under section 115.5, no individual shall drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while engaged in an activity that distracts the individual from the operation of the vehicle, including but not limited to.

And then there's a list of stuff.

(a) reading or viewing printed material.

Again, you can't look at the directions that you've gotten legally, which is beyond belief.

(b) writing, printing or sketching.

Probably not a good idea to be sketching. That's for sure. But writing? I don't know. If you're on your hands-free and somebody says, "Turn right at Johnson Lane" and you want to write that down on the seat next to you, you're not allowed to do that anymore.

(c) engaging in personal grooming or hygiene.

That's very vague, it seems. You know, I don't know what that exactly means. Grooming: does that mean picking your nose or something? We're going to pull people over for that? Some people in this Assembly are going to have a problem if that's the case. You know, it just depends what kind of grooming we're talking about.

I mean, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you're going to have trouble with this one. You know that. Come on.

Mrs. McQueen: No trouble with it.

Mr. Anderson: That's all right. You're already well groomed. Then

(d) any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations.

Then it jumps down to 115.5.

The Minister may make regulations . . .

(b) prescribing prohibited activities for the purposes of section 115.4.

In other words, it's not just these things up here. The minister can change the rules. If a future minister feels that, for example, a Bluetooth or something, or let's say a GPS device – it's unwritten material. It says, "Reading or viewing printed material." What about nonprinted material? If they want to say that a GPS is distracting, then the minister could unilaterally, without the consent of this House, change that rule, and I don't think that makes very much sense at all. I just don't think that it would make a whole lot of sense that the minister would be given that kind of unilateral authority to interfere in our lives even more than they already have.

This is something I just didn't understand as I read the bill, and I'm going to bring an amendment to it, so let's do that now. I'll pass it out first, and then we'll get to that, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Okay. We will pause a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment. This amendment shall now be known as amendment A3.

Hon. member, please start on amendment A3.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Amendment A3. I received a note here from you folks, and I'm not really sure what it means. You're going to have to come and chat with me, or else I'll chat with you after. I just can't understand the handwriting. That's the problem. There are a couple of words I can't make out.

The Chair: Just go on with A3.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I'll go on with the amendment. The amendment is to Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. I move that Bill 16 be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 115.5 by striking out clause (b). That would be taking out the line under regulations on page 4 of the bill, for those of you watching at home, 115.5:

The Minister may make regulations . . .

(b) prescribing prohibited activities for the purposes of section 115.4.

3:30

Then if you flip up to 115.4, again it talks about:

(1) Subject to this section and the regulations made under section 115.5, no individual shall drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while engaged in an activity that distracts the individual from the operation of the vehicle, including but not limited to

(a) reading or viewing printed material,
(b) writing, printing or sketching,
(c) engaging in personal grooming or hygiene, and
(d) any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations.

Then in subsection (2) the interesting thing is that subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a vehicle that

(a) is not on a highway, or
(b) is parked in a manner specified in a regulation made under this Act.

I guess that if you're not on the highway, you can potentially be on your cellphone while you're driving. That one I'll have to get clarification about. There are so many vague parts to this bill.

Hon. member, we're just talking about the amendment that I brought forward to get rid of section 115.5(b). You can take a look at that.

The reason I was thinking that it would be a good idea is that I just think, you know, that any time we're talking about an intrusion into people's personal liberties or lives, with government saying that you cannot do something, that should come through the Legislative Assembly, especially something like this, which is so personal. I don't know.

I'm thinking of distractions that the minister would have unilateral control over adding here. I'm thinking of maybe turning the radio on or off, adjusting the radio to change the channel perhaps. Some of our cars use satellite radio now. My truck has satellite radio in it. There are all these buttons on the console, so you've got to fool around, and you're trying to find the hockey game or trying to find CNN or Fox news or something for election results. [interjection] The CBC. You'd be surprised, hon. member, that I do listen to the CBC a lot. I have to shower afterwards, of course, but I do listen to it from time to time. I really do. You've got to know what the other side is saying. But I do that.

I just hope that in the future if you had some, you know, wacko cabinet minister out there – that would never happen, I know. But if you ever did, they could say: "You know what? It's just as dangerous changing your radio or changing your satellite, so I'm going to add this by regulation to the list of prohibited activities and not bring it through the House." Now, granted, in our party system if a minister was to do that, most likely the trained seals would probably get up and vote for it in lockstep as usual. But when we do eventually reform this House – and, hopefully, we have free votes and free debate on a matter that's actually worth while – what we'll have is representation. When people are represented, when an MLA is the voice in Edmonton for his constituents back home, not the government's voice, the government PR person back home, when that occurs, I would be very confident that the will of the people, the will of the House would be to say: "Forget that. That's way overstepping. We should be able to change the radio." They would defeat that amendment.

If you leave it to just a minister to be able to stand up and – or not even stand up. He wouldn't have to stand up. That's kind of the point. He wouldn't have to. Just an order in council. Good grief. How many orders in council do we see come through? Every day they're doing some orders in council. That's fine. I understand there's a need for some of those things. But on something that's obviously going to be intrusive into our personal lives, I would think that it would be important to bring that to the Legislature.

Now, of course, that might mean that if we're bringing more of these things through the Legislature, we would need to sit longer than the three months we've sat here. We get paid quite a large amount of money to be here as MLAs, and I would think it would be okay to be here longer than the three months we're going to be here this year, whatever it is: 12 weeks, 13 weeks. What is it going to be? It's got to be 14, 15 weeks. Not much, though. We would have to work a little harder to approve these things and take some of the power away from Executive Council and away from ministers and actually put it in the hands of the elected representatives of the entire body of this House, which is where it should be.

But that's not where we're at today. One good thing about the system that we do have today is that ideas that have to be legislated do still have to come through this House. It gives the opposition an opportunity to point out to the government party voting in lockstep, regardless of how they feel about things, that they're going to have to defend it, at least in the public. Now, they still pass it usually, but it at least gives the opposition a chance to point out the flaws, and there's a political price. [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

That's all right. I'll say some more stuff later.

The Chair: On amendment A3?

Dr. Taft: Yes, on the amendment. Do we have 29(2)(a) at this level?

The Chair: No. You have 20 minutes to talk about A3.

Dr. Taft: Okay.

The Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, I was listening with interest to the hon. member. It reminds me of two evenings ago, Mr. Chairman, when I was listening to CBC television. I think Mr. Solomon was interviewing a professor from the University of Calgary who was holding an elephant, a little baby elephant. Not only was he holding the elephant – he was very pleased, of course, with the results of the U.S. mid-term elections – but the elephant was interfering with his microphone. The young man from CBC headquarters in Toronto asked him to remove the elephant so that the Canadian listeners and viewers could hear his remarks more accurately. The gentleman went on to talk about Fox and CNN.

Dr. Taft: He had a fox and an elephant.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he was getting all his information almost up to date, in real time from Fox, and the CBC commentator aggressively said to him: I do not appreciate you promoting those networks on our television station. I thought that was quite interesting.

The hon. member here was talking about CNN and Fox, and it reminded me of that, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the elephant was in the television studio that night. I thought the gentleman from Calgary looked a little bit ridiculous clutching his stuffed elephant. Babar I think he called it.

Mr. MacDonald: A donkey. That would be a very appropriate mascot for this government caucus. I agree with you, hon. member.

Now, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is proposing in the regulation section of Bill 16 to simply remove 115.5(b). When you look at the prohibited activities that are mentioned in 115.4, just above the regulation-writing power, you can see, you know: individuals shall drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while engaged in an activity that distracts the individual from the operation of the vehicle, including but not limited to reading or viewing printed material; writing, printing or sketching; engaging in personal grooming or hygiene; and any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations. I don't understand why we would want to remove that section.

I'm not a fan of governing by regulation. In the years that I have been in the Assembly, there has been an unfortunate tendency by this government to do more and more by regulation and less and less by statute, just these bills that enable the government, or in this case the cabinet, to write rules as they see fit, quietly and without public scrutiny. Certainly, this is a government that is unwilling to have a great deal of public scrutiny.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, when we look at many of the activities that people, unfortunately, do while driving distracted, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has certainly made a good start with this bill towards at least trying to control distracted drivers. Does it go far enough? I'm not convinced of that, but it certainly is a good start. In this case if we're not going to take the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall's idea to have an overview of this entire legislation within the next three years, I think that to allow the government in this case a little bit of rope with their authority to write regulations is needed.

Last Friday, during our constituency day, I was very pleased to see for a short period of time two students from the University of Alberta. They visited our constituency office. They were polite. They were very concerned about public safety. I sat there listening to what they had to say regarding this bill. They don't think it goes far enough, and I would agree with them. But I told them why I think we have to allow this bill to proceed in this manner, the reason being, Mr. Chairman, that we have a government that has been slow to react in the past, whether it's helmet laws for children, in some cases seat belts. There are still members that suggest that that is unnecessary. There are lots of valid examples of this government being slow to act to enhance or to ensure public safety. It has taken them this long to go this far. I think it's about encouragement. Should we restrict and limit cellphones and electronic devices even further in the future? We might have to. Let's see how this works.

Now, we know that Albertans – and this was pointed out to me by the students – are the worst offenders in Canada. At any given time 10 per cent of us are using our cellphones while driving, compared to the national average of 5 per cent, I'm told.

You look at hand-held cellphone legislation in Canada – and it was the students who were pointing out to me the different legislation in different provinces. The fine in British Columbia is $167. I believe in Saskatchewan it is $280. Of course, ours is around $170 here in the proposed legislation. In Manitoba it's $200. Quebec has a range. Interestingly enough, in the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan, if I am busted there under their laws, I would have demerit points. I would have in B.C. three demerits, in Saskatchewan four demerits. Quebec also has three demerits. P.E.I. has three demerits, and their fines range between $250 and $400. Now, Nova Scotia, to compare, Mr. Chairman, would have no demerits issued, but it's $164 fine for your first offence, and if you're pressing redial and get caught, it can go up to $337. So there is a wide range of laws across the country. I would surmise that each and every one of these jurisdictions has significant ability to make regulations.

I think it may be comforting for the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere if the government was willing at this time to – maybe they already have and my BlackBerry hasn't given me the information. Maybe they have already tabled or made public the regulations they have in mind for this statute. We could have a look at them. Certainly, people in the media could have a look at them. The individuals who are very concerned about public safety and reducing the number of accidents could have a look, and perhaps they, too, would be satisfied with the government's regulations. Maybe they go far enough; maybe they don't. But perhaps I would encourage at this time, Mr. Chairman, the hon. members across the way, or in this case the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, to consider doing that.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, on this debate on amendment A3, I certainly have heard not only from the University of Alberta students. In fact, I had an individual from our constituency phone yesterday afternoon. We had quite an interesting conversation regarding this bill. She did not think it went far enough. An individual who has had a letter published in the Edmonton Journal today outlining his concerns spoke over at the Royal Alex hospital, and my constituent had the pleasure of hearing his speech. This individual made some excellent points about cellphone use and how we should restrict it to ensure public safety on the roads. She thought she would phone and express her opinion to our office on behalf of her family, and I appreciate that.

Hopefully, this bill is going to be a step in the right direction. I am not convinced that amendment A3, as it has been explained so far by the hon. member, has merit, but hopefully there will be some further details on this.

Dr. Taft: I'm going to actually engage in a serious discussion here on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: My colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview wants to have an opportunity to get some questions on the record regarding this proposed amendment A3, Mr. Chairman, so we will cede the floor to the hon. member. Perhaps the dialogue that results will convince me one way or another regarding the merits of this, but right now I don't think it is in the public interest or in the interest of public safety to delete that regulation-making ability.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on A3.

Dr. Taft: On amendment A3. I'd like to engage the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere in a little bit of clarification here on this. When I first heard the issue of cellphone restrictions while driving raised – and I suppose that would be a few years ago now – I was ambivalent initially because I thought of the reasons that the member outlined here, that it's government intrusion into personal affairs.

But as I thought about it more and as I, frankly, experienced a couple of real scares myself from other drivers – well, in fact, I don't think the member was here, but a year ago last August I was rear-ended in broad daylight at an intersection. The person behind me who hit me was clearly not paying any attention to what was going on. And last winter I was nearly driven off a narrow two-lane highway by somebody coming on who was texting and was driving up the hill in my lane. You could see them texting away as they were driving, and it was scary.

Then I listened to other material and I thought, well, okay. I reframed that, in fact, driving is a privilege, and we do license it, and we remove that privilege from people for various kinds of offences. Then I saw having a safe place to drive or, indeed, to walk across the street as a right. So I ended up coming to the point where safety was a right, being protected from the stupidity of other drivers was a right, and driving and being able to use a cellphone while you're driving is a privilege. So then, when I came to that conclusion, I began to frame the whole issue of cellphone restrictions a bit differently. When I saw the evidence that I've seen, I actually ended up supporting this legislation. I wouldn't mind if it went further.

Your amendment also addresses an argument within an argument, which is the shift from legislation into regulation, which I'm not in favour of, and I think the member would agree with me on that. So I guess I'm putting to the member two questions. One is if he sees driving and using a cellphone as a right or a privilege. Well, that would be the main question because I think he's already made it clear he doesn't want to see more regulations; he'd rather see things in legislation. So do you want to reflect on that, hon. member, in this debate?

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Very good points. With regard to whether or not driving is a privilege or a right, I think we can all agree that it's a privilege to be able to drive. I don't think anyone disagrees with that. I guess we also have the privilege, we have the right, or whatever you could say, to be able to do a lot of things. A privilege and a right. The thing I'm trying to get out here is this: I think that if you're going to pass a law, there should be a natural effect of that law. In other words, it should achieve something.

Although I do believe that, you know, obviously we have the right to have and we should have safe roads. There's no doubt about that. We should be able to go out and know that when the light turns red, people stop, right? We get that. When it's green, we go. When we come to a stop sign, a four-way stop, it's going to go in an orderly flow around there and it's all going to work and people are going to follow those laws. But I think that if you're going to have a law that is going to – the reason for those laws or the laws of the road is just so that there can be an orderly way of driving so that people don't get in accidents and so forth as much as possible.

Now, I guess I would just say that we know what would happen if we didn't have those laws. If we didn't have red lights – I'm really trying to do a lot of reflecting while I talk here, which is difficult for me to do at the same time – we know what would happen. There would be carnage. There would be accidents all over the place. Same thing with no stop signs. Same thing but to a lesser extent with speed limits. So I do understand that.

However, I don't see how this bill is actually going to save lives. The reason is because I don't see how it is enforceable. I don't see how this law is going to cause people to change their behaviour. I mean, what are the demerits on this?

An Hon. Member: Zero.

Mr. Anderson: There are no demerits? See, there are no demerits. How much is the fine?

An Hon. Member: A hundred and seventy bucks.

Mr. Anderson: A hundred and seventy bucks. That's just not going to change any real behaviour. A hundred and seventy bucks might change somebody's behaviour, but it won't change the behaviour of very many at all.

I think that what should be focused on, and what I do like, is the careless driving. We have the right to go down the street and not see people swerving back and forth out of the lane. That I think we all want to not see on our streets. So I think that if people are doing that and they're on the phone or they're doing that and they're eating a burger or something like that, if there's an offence being carried out and the officer can see that the person is weaving because, you know, they are drunk – we have drunk drivers – or they are eating a burger or they are combing their hair and you can see it and they're weaving all over the place, hammer them, absolutely hammer them. That's careless driving because of whatever reason. I don't care why they're being careless. Maybe they are listening to the radio. Maybe they're on hands-free, you know, and they're not paying attention.

Some people have the cognitive ability to do more than one thing at the same time.

An Hon. Member: Especially women.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Especially. Many in this House have that ability. I'm one of those. I mean, I really can do a lot of things while I'm driving, and I've never been in an accident. Well, not since I was 14, but that was a different story. We'll leave that. That's a different story for another time. There are people that are able to be safe and do some of these other things whereas other people can't. They're swerving around, and they're being careless, and they're not paying attention and so forth. So for those people I think the trick is: let's hammer them.

If people are swerving all over the road because they're doing something when they shouldn't be doing something, let's give them, you know, five, six, seven, eight demerits. I think that's what it is for careless driving, if I'm not mistaken. I think it is eight demerits. Give them a large ticket. Give them demerits. If they're in an accident, let's strengthen the liability penalties and say that if you cause an accident and you're on your cellphone – that's where you nail people. That can take away your driver's licence. It can cost you a fortune. That's the stuff that, in my view, would be more likely to keep people from being distracted.

For me it's not really, you know, a privilege/right thing. Yeah, it is a privilege. We all have the right right now, if we want, to have a Swiss Army knife in our pocket. Sure we could use that knife to do something bad, to damage something. [interjection] That's right. You've got the Swiss Army knife in your pocket right now. You could use it to hurt somebody. But we have laws against that when the actual hurting occurs. It doesn't mean you outlaw the knife. It's kind of like this whole gun registry debate in a lot of ways. You don't make it difficult for law-abiding citizens who are able to use guns safely, et cetera, et cetera. You don't burden their lives with all this excess regulation when, really, what you should be doing is going after the people that are actually abusing firearms. They likely are completely unregistered because that's what criminals do; they don't register their firearms. I think it's a similar argument. We don't need to necessarily regulate everything that could be used as a weapon, and I think that that includes a car.

Now, I understand that there are speeding laws, and I understand that there's a balance. Where is that line? With the same logic you could say: well, then, you shouldn't have speeding laws, right? Some people can drive at 150, and they're safe. The hon. Transportation minister: good grief; there's a prime example. Safe as you could be; 160 kilometres an hour, though. I mean, that's absolutely amazing. Not all of us have that ability to be safe going 160 kilometres an hour. Surely I know. There are a lot of individuals I won't target right now, you know, in my own family. Going 160 is not safe for them.

We have these laws, but I just think this one is a little bit too far on that scale. I understand that a lot of members in this House believe that it's not. You know, if driving is a privilege, if part of driving is not being distracted, that's fine – we can debate that; we are debating that – but I just think it goes over the line. Also, I think a law needs to be enforceable. You've got to be able to enforce a law. I mean, with seat belt laws I know for a fact that it is very difficult to prove a seat belt infraction unless you've got it on camera.

An Hon. Member: Affidavit evidence.

Mr. Anderson: No. Affidavit evidence, hon. member, generated from one police officer can or can't. I've seen it both ways. In a seat belt violation it's not actually that good. [interjection] Well, yeah, I do, unfortunately. Anyway, I don't think it's effective. First-hand experience. I think, generally speaking, you need two officers to verify it by affidavit, or you need a camera or you need some kind of independent – that's why with speeding, the laser is enough of a sure thing. It's recorded, so they can prove it.

Just in talking with some people from the Edmonton Police Service recently, they told us that this is going to be very difficult to enforce in court. I guess time will tell. We'll see what judges do with it. I mean, people can just say: "Look, what do you mean I had my cellphone up? I was scratching my head when I went by. I was scratching my head. What do you mean: burger? It wasn't a burger. I was wiping my mouth or picking my nose or something like that. I wasn't eating anything." There are a hundred different excuses that one could use, and rightfully so. Like, it's very difficult for a police officer to see something fly by that quickly and actually say: yeah, that definitely was a cellphone. Very difficult. I just don't see how this would be very enforceable in that regard, but I do see the other side.

As I said earlier, at the end of the day I have to begrudgingly defer to my constituents on this. You know, it's a better reason than deferring to the party line. That's for sure. My constituents, like I said earlier, 3 to 1 at least want this bill – you know, positive to negative mail and positive to negative discussions – although I don't think it's going to be effective at all. I'm going to try to amend it, try to make it better. We're going to have another amendment here at some point that will hopefully make this an experiment law to see if it actually works. So an experimental law, kind of like – what do they call the sports at the Olympics? A demonstration sport? – a demonstration law. Let's see if this thing works. I don't think it will. You know, democracy is one of those things where if enough people say that they want something, then they get it. People are going to get it, but I don't think this is going to do a thing.

Really, the one problem I did have and the reason I brought the regulation forward, hon. member – and I know I've heard you speak to this many times – is the issue of ministers having kind of these orders in council. You have these bills where they list a few things, and then they say basically that the minister can do whatever the heck he wants to amend the bill. We've got these things, "reading or viewing printed material"; in other words, not electronic material. So if you had, say, a GPS, like a TomTom or something like that, on your dash, it doesn't include that. What if one day somebody says: "No. That's off. You can't look at your GPS"? Well, I'd want that to come through the House.

I think you can agree with the bill, and I think you are agreeing with the bill overall, but this one part – I would think that that would give you a little bit of pause to say: "Look. You know, if you're going to outlaw something else, if you're going to prohibit something else, perhaps you should bring it to the body of this House to do, just like you're doing with this bill right here." Why should a future minister have more ability to change the law than the minister who now introduced this legislation? That's the problem.

I could see the other side's point, though. I mean, the other side is saying: "Well, look. You know, we have whipped votes on everything. It just saves time because whatever the minister says, at the end of the day we're going to do it. We're going to put up our flippers and do it. It's not a big deal." That's unfortunate. It shouldn't be that way in a democracy, but that's, generally speaking, what they do. I understand they think that's efficient, but for the rest of us and I think for average Albertans, we'll see. Obviously, this will be part of the upcoming election campaign. Most of us would say: "Look. You know what? When you're doing something that's going to affect people's lives, that's going to be an intrusion into people's lives, let's bring it to the body of the House. Let's all talk about it, let's all have a free vote on it, and we can all be accountable for it."

You know, maybe there are MLAs on that side of the House that actually are against this bill, but none of their constituents know that, none of them. So a hundred per cent are going to vote for this bill, and those who are against it – and I have some idea of who those might be – are not going to vote against the bill. They're going to vote for the bill. How is that democratic to one's constituents? I will never figure that out.

Nonetheless, even in a whipped vote, which they all are, they still have to be accountable for the way that they stood up. At least, you would make them come to the House and say: "Yeah. You know what? We're going to ban the TomTom; we're going to ban the GPS." They have to be responsible for that. They're going to have to be responsible to that old lady down the street because she couldn't use her TomTom and she got lost in a back alley, and she's just mad about it. They're going to have to be accountable to that old lady if they do that. They're going to have to be accountable because that old lady couldn't read the directions that her daughter gave her. They wrote it down: here are the directions to my house, Grandma. She goes out, but she can't read it because under this law you are not allowed to read or view printed material.

So Grandma is not allowed to read the directions, and she goes and gets lost, or she has to pull over. But, you know, it's tough sometimes. You're driving away, and then all of a sudden you come up to a sign: "Do I turn here? I can't remember if I turn here. Oh, where was it? Oh, yes. That's right, Johnson Avenue." And you make a turn. But you can't do that anymore. You'd have to pull over in traffic, which, if it's heavy traffic, is often more dangerous than driving with your cellphone and eating a burger at the same time. Pulling over, you're going to get nailed by someone coming behind you and, you know, just blow everything to smithereens and the whole bit.

I just really think that the minister in the future should have to come to this House and explain why they're taking away yet another liberty, yet another thing. I think that's important; you know, just like I have to be accountable for the fact that in the past I voted for the land-use framework, something that I will regret for a long time.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, you voted for that.

Mr. Anderson: I know. I spoke to it. I spoke to the land-use framework. It just ticks me right off.

That's what happens when you're a trained seal. You've got to get in there. You get a speech handed to you, "Here's the speech; read it," and you've got to read the speech. You've just got to do it. "Okay. Minister of finance, you're a good friend of mine." [interjection] Well, the former Minister of SRD, the current minister of finance; it's his bill. You're like: "Absolutely. I'm going to do this. I trust you." You give the speech, and then you realize: "Oops. Maybe I shouldn't have done that." Absolutely. I will work for the next two years to reverse that mistake. You can count on it.

Anyway, that's how I feel about it.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, you wish to speak on amendment A3?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much. I imagine that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and yourself and a few in this House would probably remember our debate on bicycle helmets. I remember it very vividly because every time I attend a grade 6 class and I talk to them about how a bill becomes a law, I always use the bicycle helmet as an example because kids can simply relate to it.

The reason I'm bringing up that particular bill, now the act, is because some of the arguments against bicycle helmets were almost – almost – as ridiculous as the arguments I'm hearing right now against this particular bill. Mr. Chair, even though no member would actually rise and claim on the record that he or she is special and can drive while doing many, many other things and do it safely and safer than anybody else, members would rise and raise the very same issues, saying: "Are you expecting the police to be chasing kids on bicycles? How are you going to take in a child who doesn't have ID? If you take in a child, the child doesn't have a job, so at the end of the day it'll be the parent paying for that ticket, anyhow." And the list went on and on and on.

Thankfully, Mr. Chair, that particular bill was passed, became a law, and now some seven, eight years later you will hardly find any young person that would get on a bicycle and ride without a helmet. As a matter of fact, I can use my daughter as an example. Because of this bill she never had the opportunity of riding a bicycle without a helmet. When she grew up to the age where she could ride a bicycle, a helmet was a natural piece of equipment that we provided her with, so she rides her bicycle with a helmet. Now what she does, consequently, is that she makes me wear a helmet. Well, I wasn't raised with a helmet, but she makes me wear a helmet, which obviously was an unintended positive consequence. The fact is that you will never ever catch her on a bicycle not wearing a helmet. Police officers don't have to worry about chasing her and her classmates or ticketing her.

The fact is that most Albertans, most Canadians will respect the law if a law is on the books. They don't go through every day challenging every law to see whether they will get caught, whether they can avoid it. The fact is that it's a social understanding that if there is a law on the books, a majority of us will follow it. With time it becomes a social norm, and we simply adhere to the regulations.

Mr. Chair, no one – no one – in their right mind could say that I have some special skills gifted to me by God that allow me to do more things simultaneously and still be as good at every single one of them than any other person or than most people. The fact is that even though some may argue that they're special but in a different definition of the term "special," no one is special in that definition, where they can actually speak on a hand-held cellphone while changing the radio and still be an exceptional driver and not cause any risk.

Mr. Chair, for those who drive on highways and weave in and out of lanes, if you were to pull them over and ask them, "Can you drive safely while speaking on the phone?" I would bet that they would be the first ones to argue that they can drive very safely and that they should be allowed to continue driving. I know for a fact that, especially while looking at the phone and dialing and driving, you are not as attentive to the road, and law enforcement officers would be the first ones to inform you of that. Yes, there will be arguments, and some will try to convert those arguments into some other ideological debates, but there's simply nothing ideological about it. The fact is that you cannot be attentive in the ever-increasing traffic in a province that is becoming more populous and with more and more vehicles on the road and be able to drive safely and be doing other things, engaging things, at the same time.

Let's go back to the arguments. Perhaps for those of the members who weren't here at that time, look at the Hansards on bicycle helmets. Learn some lessons from that debate so that perhaps we don't have to take significant time of the House, and vote accordingly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We had some comments in the last couple of days. I made some notes. People talked about education, so I'm going to begin an education process here for one of the hon. members, maybe more. Not that I'm an expert in any way . . .

The Chair: On amendment A3.

Mr. Johnston: Oh, A3. Okay. Regarding amendment A3, I don't support it, and I would like my colleagues to defeat it. It was said that amendment A3 would be a waste of police resources, a waste of time. There were many other things that were mentioned. The amendment says: shall not drive while distracted, may operate a vehicle on a highway, and the minister may make regulations.

Regarding some of the comments I've heard . . .

The Chair: On amendment A3.

Mr. Johnston: Okay. I don't support it, then. I'll leave my comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on amendment A3.

Dr. Taft: Yes, specifically on amendment A3, which would have the effect of removing the authority or the ability of the minister to make regulations relating to section 115.4(1). I want to make it clear to the member that I actually support this bill. I think driving is a privilege, and we would disagree on that. I don't think eating a hamburger or using a cellphone while you're driving is a right. I think it's a privilege, and as such it loses out to my right to have a safe driving environment. So we disagree on that.

However, on the amendment, I actually am inclined to support the amendment. I want to be clear here. The section that it would amend, 115.4(1), has a very important clause that concerns me. I'm not going to read the whole section, because the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere did, but the important part is the preamble: "Subject to this section and the regulations . . . no individual shall drive or operate a vehicle on a highway while engaged in an activity that distracts the individual from the operation of the vehicle."

This is the important part that has changed my mind and leads me to support the amendment. The important clause is "including but not limited to." Then it goes on to list four specific things. When it says "including but not limited to," it means that the minister could do all kinds of things there, and I do have trouble with that.

If we are to take this Legislative Assembly more seriously, I think those issues should come back here. If the minister wants to add whatever it might be – and I think we have to be sensible here. He might add "eating" here, or he might add "watching video screens" because those are increasingly standard features in cars now. Those would be legitimate concerns to have, but there's no reason that the minister couldn't bring those to the Assembly, and if they are legitimate, then I'm sure we would all support the minister.

For that reason, for the principle of defending the integrity of this institution, I will support the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you. I would like to rise in support of amendment A3, again because of the importance of the democratic process, that is being bypassed with the current bill the way it sits. It's to me paramount that we bring back legislation to the House rather than continue to increase the authority of ministers to be able to change whatever it is.

It's interesting that many of the bills that this government has brought forward and the activities that this government is doing are more and more out of order in council or at the minister's discretion. Bill 36 and property rights is a good example. With Bill 50 it's again up to the minister's discretion. With the potato farm, which now, thankfully, has been withdrawn, again it was up to the minister's discretion. These are just three relevant, current ministers' discretions that we have in this House, that cause a lot of concern for Albertans from the north to the south. This is exactly what 115.5 is about. It's about saying: well, the minister can just add or subtract on a whim.

Another concern when we do that. I believe one of the most important things that a government does, you know, in our Constitution, in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms is talk about respect for the rule of law. To me what that means is that the precedents are there, you know what the ruling is, it's pretty clear, and there's not an arbitrary decision. When you have respect for the rule of law, you actually start to have peace and prosperity because people know what the results are going to be, whether it's an investment, whether it's a driving act, or any of these areas. It's just so critical that we bring these things back to the House to pass new legislation and not just have someone who can sit in the minister's chair say, "You know, I'm concerned with this; a tragedy has happened; therefore, I'm going to change the regulations" because of that one incident that happens.

There's no question that when we look at the records out there by the AMA – and there are a few bodies in the States – 80 per cent of vehicular accidents are from driver distraction. We realize that this is happening. We don't know why it's happening, but we need to be looking at that and saying: "That's the focus of this bill. It is driver distraction. It's the safety of the people." As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said, I want to know that other people are paying attention.

It's interesting, though, because just recently, this last month, a young lady really got nailed in the courts. I believe it was a $2,500 fine, and was it three demerits? We have laws on the books already that we're failing to utilize, so it's not always about having more bills. It's not always about having more control. It's about having better laws, better understanding of those laws, and the education process of realizing that when we're behind the wheel of a vehicle, we are responsible for where that vehicle is going and for sticking in our lane, signalling properly, going the right speed, not accelerating because we're in an exciting conversation or decelerating because we're concerned with something and slowing down. All of these things need to be looked at.

Having the arbitrary decision of the minister is not in the best interest of this law. Because of that, I strongly support this amendment. I'd ask the members of this House to support this amendment because it would clarify and assure Albertans that this is where we are going to go and not have all these regulations.

People say: well, I didn't know that was against the law. Well, it isn't. It's a regulation that the minister passed. The classic example, that we've been using constantly in here, is that you're eating, and the minister could decide a week after this bill is passed: "You know what? We don't want anybody eating anymore while they're driving." Therefore, someone is pulled over and does not realize that there's a new law. "Well, no, we've just changed the regulations and the descriptions on that law." There are just so many important things that we need to look at.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member. It's 4:25. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, would you please remain standing now. We'll be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you today a class from Ashmont: 43 students, three teachers, instructional assistants, and one student helper. They have travelled two hours to be here today to tour the Legislature Building. I was very much informed by the staff that when they had a mock Legislature, they were so well prepared. If I could ask Mr. Keith Gamblin, Ms Amber Faganello, Jacqueline Michaud, Susan Novosiwsky, Alison Newby, Carol Kam, Debbie Tchir-Houle, and Teresa Ouellette to please stand with their students, that they are so proud of, and accept our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce some special guests as well. They are here from Julia Kiniski elementary school. There are 23 of our brightest students, who are here for an entire week of School at the Legislature. The group includes Mr. Dale Mandryk as their teacher and parent helpers Mrs. Karin Moses and Mr. Vik Shankar. I would ask all of these guests from Julia Kiniski to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 30 grade 6 students from John Barnett elementary school from within my constituency. John Barnett school has recently celebrated its 40th anniversary. It was an important event, and I was fortunate to support the celebration. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Peggy Wright, Mr. Anthony Reid, and Mr. Glenn Newby, and parent helpers Mrs. Cecilia Pires and Mr. Bill Plican. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Constable Mike Ellis of the Calgary Police Service. Mr. Ellis has been a constable in eight districts since 2003 and has worked closely with the homeless population and related agencies over his time with the CPS.

Mr. Speaker, in the time I've observed Mr. Ellis, I can tell you that being a police officer is not simply a job to him. He really works hard to improve his community. We're lucky to have him in Calgary, and we're also lucky to have him as a member of the Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. Mr. Ellis resides in Calgary-West with his wife, Hollie, and his young children, Simone and Keaton. I would ask that Mr. Ellis please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ginger MacQueen, seated in the public gallery. Would you stand up, Ginger? Ginger is a Calgary-Hays constituent. She's a vital part of a group that formed the CCSVI, which stands for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency. That was approximately one year ago. At this time the group is raising money and awareness and is awaiting charity status. Ginger and the group look forward to the day when CCSVI treatment can be done at home.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions today, and of course I'm thrilled with both of them. The first is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two really wonderful young women, the kind of young women that we want to see in this Assembly and that, I hope, will each work in their own country to get themselves elected at some point. The first is Miss Kim Miller, who has a flair for languages and is most of the way through teaching herself Japanese. Try that one on, anyone. She is quite the world traveller and is the daughter of our chief of staff, Rick Miller.

Today she has with her a very special friend – they met online through an anime club – Sara Nyhuis. She is a young Australian who is also touring the world at this point: Canada, Europe, and Japan. They have been through a tour of the Legislature. They are both standing in the public gallery, and I would ask the House to please welcome them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also absolutely delighted and relieved to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members our newest caucus staff member, Andrew Fisher. Andrew, would you rise, please? Andrew has joined our caucus team, and that's why I said I'm relieved; we need the extra help. He has assumed the role of public affairs co-ordinator for us. I'd really like to welcome him and wish him all the best. Please join me in welcoming him to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members Sam Gunsch from the advocacy group Sierra Club Canada, who has joined us to help raise awareness of Save Our Parks Week, which they launched today. The purpose of this week is to call on Albertans to save their parks and have Bill 29 withdrawn by the Tourism, Parks and Recreation minister. This group has a long history of protecting and preserving our natural environment through a wide range of environmental projects, from scientific research to environmental education.

In addition, we are very honoured to be joined by two members of Stewards of Alberta's Protected Areas Association: Alison Dinwoodie and Patsy Cotterill. Their group has invested years of work in Alberta's protected areas, and they want to ensure that the integrity of protected areas is retained for future generations.

Please stand to be recognized. I would ask all members to extend the traditional warm welcome of this House to our special guests in the gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you a good friend of mine, Wendy Fulton, who has been guiding me through my political career for the last 10 years or so. She's someone who doesn't mince any words and will give you the straight facts. I'd like Wendy to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there additional introductions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly six guests from the Canadian Diabetes Association who have joined us today for question period in honour of Diabetes Awareness Month. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their names and to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Jessie Atkins, Corrina Jossy, Ray Marshall, Katie McLaughlin, Charles Rees, and Linda Smith.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Women in Elected Office

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on the subject of women in elected office. First, a little bit of preamble. Canada is lagging behind South Africa, Rwanda, Iraq, Afghanistan, most of Europe, and Australia with just 22 per cent of our national Parliament comprised of women and 21 per cent of our municipal and provincial governments. Our current ranking of 47th out of 110 countries risks falling even further behind with legislative changes being implemented in countries such as Kenya and India.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to attend the Commonwealth Women Parliamentarians, or CWP, Canada outreach program and the Campaign School for Women in British Columbia last week, which introduced me to groups dedicated to increasing the number of women in elected office. The CWP Canada is a network that provides the opportunity for sharing experiences and seeking solutions to the special challenges faced by the female minority in parliaments. CWP has a goal to have 30 per cent of Canadian Legislatures occupied by women by 2015.

The 2010 outreach program engaged members from Equal Voice, which organized round-table discussions between young women and women parliamentarians from five provinces. Others include community-based groups focused on making changes through law reform, public education, and litigation, and the city councillor with the Engaging Women, Transforming Cities initiative, which transforms cities into places where women are more involved in the elective process and local governments are more responsive to the priorities of women and girls.

The Canadian Women Voters Congress is a nonpartisan organization dedicated to encouraging all women to become strong, effective voices at all levels of government. Their 2010 campaign school included topics such as marketing and financing as well as barriers that women candidates face in nominations, communications, and managing home and public lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Preservation of Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Paradise lost. Alberta's current Premier ran on a platform of transparency and public accountability. That promised train, unfortunately, never left the station. In stark contrast to responsible government Albertans have been subjected to a covert, concerted effort to move decision-making out of the people's parliament, in the form of debatable legislation, to behind-closed-doors regulations, subject only to ministerial whim.

Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act; and Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act are 2009 examples of this regulatory expropriation of public land and recourse. Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, a wolf in sheep's clothing, under the guise of simplification of the rules for parks and protected areas actually compromises what little protection was previously afforded to ecological reserves and wilderness areas such as Siffleur, White Goat, and Ghost River.

Under Bill 29 previous legislative protection has been tossed into the minister's whimsical blender along with parks and recreational areas. What comes out is a yet-to-be-defined ministerial version of Alberta government toxic Kool-Aid, which Albertans will not swallow. When it comes to dos and don'ts, Roger Miller suggested that you can't roller skate in a buffalo herd, to which I would add: except possibly in Alberta.

In Alberta public hearings and due legislative process have been replaced by online government workbooks. When the public relations blanks have been filled in, you have the option of pressing send or delete. The government can say that your input was sought. Bill 29 also offers a citizens' advisory council appointed by the minister, of course.

If you value what remains of Alberta's rapidly diminishing democratic process and vanishing pristine wilderness, please contact the minister, your MLA, and myself as the Liberal critic at calgary.varsity@assembly.ab.ca.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Career and Technology Studies Program

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every student in Alberta deserves access to high-quality learning opportunities that provide them with relevant skills, attitudes, and knowledge. Alberta has developed a high-quality career and technology studies, or CTS, program, which introduces students to careers in trades, health, natural resources, media, and business and can enable students to receive both high school credit and credit towards a postsecondary education program. Benefits for students include the opportunity to receive hands-on, real-world experience, which can motivate them to finish high school and continue on to postsecondary studies, into apprenticeship, or into the world of work.

CTS courses can make a difference for students, especially when taught by teachers who can impart relevant, real-world knowledge and passion. Unfortunately, the supply of qualified CTS teachers remains low, and teacher attrition rates remain high as teachers retire and student enrolment grows.

To address these changes, the government of Alberta initiated the CTS bridge to teacher certification program. The program aims to attract certified journeypeople from various trades such as carpentry, welding, culinary arts, and cosmetology as well as health professionals and information technologists to the teaching profession. These professionals are needed to teach advanced dual credit CTS courses, those courses that allow the students to receive high school credit as well as credit towards a postsecondary education program.

Last week a front-page story in the Journal told of journeyman baker Kelly Hobbs, one of 21 tradespeople participating in the new program, which began in September. She is working in the classroom, sharing what she loves and is passionate about, while completing a teacher preparation program offered by the University of Alberta's Faculty of Education. This unique initiative is a creative approach to meet the needs of students, and it is students who will benefit the most as they gain the skills and experience they need to be successful.

I am pleased to rise today to acknowledge the promising collaboration between the government and education stakeholders and to celebrate this new, exciting opportunity for professionals and students across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

National Bullying Awareness Week

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Words like "freak," "loser," "idiot" are not just cruel, but they are daggers to the heart, especially the heart of a young person. They are but a few words associated with the act of bullying, which has become an increasingly more serious issue. We have heard some very tragic stories of youth so severely impacted by the act of bullying that they saw no other recourse except suicide. Bullying of any kind humiliates and intimidates the victims, often with painful and long-lasting consequences. This week, National Bullying Awareness Week, from November 14 to 20, is an important time for all Albertans to think about the harmful effects of bullying.

One of my constituents, Austen Radowits, was bullied but turned his bad experiences into hope for others. Austen was a 14-year-old boy when he was involved in a freestyle motocross accident which left him with a severe brain injury. Upon his return to school he was bullied by kids. It was out of this experience that Austen decided to become a motivational speaker in schools. He has spoken to over 3,200 students and has been in newspapers and on television to share his story. I am truly inspired by Austen and how he has turned his own personal adversity into an opportunity to help other youth. He is an outstanding Albertan.

Our government continues to be committed to helping create a more tolerant society and is working hard towards a culture shift when it comes to bullying. That is why our government created the prevention of bullying strategy. The strategy focuses on working with children, youth, parents, educators, community leaders, and other role models to help prevent bullying and not just in our schools but in every corner of every community in our province. Bullying is a global issue, and as we do on so many other fronts, Alberta leads the way on the issue of bullying prevention.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What is clear to Albertans from this emergency room wait times crisis is that nobody actually knows who's in charge of the health care system. There is obvious disagreement between the minister and Alberta Health Services. Alberta Health Services is saying that they won't meet their emergency room wait times until 2015. To the Premier. What is your commitment? How long do you think Albertans should be waiting to fix the emergency room crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm just as frustrated as everybody else in terms of the waiting times in emergency rooms. Albertans deserve better, and we are working on reducing those wait times. The minister has outlined a strategy, and Alberta Health Services and the minister are working on it. The minister can further elaborate on what he has already done.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, back to the Premier. How long do you think we should be waiting for these emergency wait times to improve? How long, Mr. Premier? It's on your head.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our goal here is to either meet or exceed standards in terms of emergency waiting times. We have to keep in mind that Alberta Health Services is doing more every day in terms of surgeries: bone and joint replacement, eye surgery. Also, the pressures are in emergency rooms. We need more long-term care beds, and we have added those, I believe, 1,300 by the end of this year. Things are happening. We're hiring more nurses, and the minister can elaborate even further.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, back to the Premier. How long do you think Albertans should wait, Mr. Premier? How long?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, our goal here is to meet or exceed the national standards. I don't know as to who is meeting them currently because these are pressures right across the country, but I can assure you that the minister is doing whatever he can in co-operation with Alberta Health Services to meet those guidelines.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Sands Tailings Pond Containment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, yet another story on leaking tailings ponds came out today, giving another blow to the reputation of Alberta, another blow to the environment, and another blow to our economy. To the Premier: was the Premier aware that this tailings pond was leaking and easily accessible to wildlife?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this was a story that broke in one of the news organizations. They certainly didn't call ERCB, nor did they call Alberta Environment. However, when the story became public, we had staff both from Alberta Environment and ERCB investigating. The minister has further details. We'll hear more from the investigators on-site.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely anyone in Alberta with an education knows that we need barriers to prevent water and animals from going in and out of a toxic site, something this pond lacks. Will the Premier admit the current standards are weak, inadequate?

Mr. Liepert: Maybe I could answer that question. First of all, the Leader of the Opposition raised an issue that the ERCB takes very seriously and on a regular basis does inspections as regulations are outlined. That most recent inspection was two weeks ago. But as a result, as the Premier mentioned this morning, of the story that appeared, an inspector was out there today and found that everything is in compliance, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, back to the Premier. How many times does the Premier think that the federal government will allow Alberta's mishandling of tailings ponds to pollute federal waterways before they step in and take control of our environmental management?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the minister say that the report back from the ERCB investigator was that the operator is in compliance with the standards that are issued by government.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trade Mission to India

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier splashed out $84,000 taxpayer dollars to jet off to India while Indians were enjoying their major holiday of Diwali. He didn't, unsurprisingly, seem to accomplish much except keeping up with his blog site. To the Premier. I didn't see any trade deals signed or any other measurable gains in India. How did the Premier expect to accomplish anything during this holiday season of Diwali?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the trip to India was quite successful. We are of course meeting with not only ministers but also oil and gas companies. India is the world's largest English-speaking country. It is democratic. It has a good justice system. Their oil and gas companies are cash rich and are looking to invest in Alberta. They've also asked to work with a number of companies that are in India today to expand, especially in enhanced oil recovery, and also to learn from what we've already accomplished in many of the environmental areas, especially when it comes to water.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has fewer sitting days in the Legislature than Saskatchewan, the Northwest Territories, even the Yukon. How can the Premier justify this further insult to the people of Alberta, abandoning their Legislature when it barely meets anyway?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have to learn from this latest unbelievable economic global shift is that the economy is shifting to Asia. We can no longer depend on a market of 350 million people in the United States to maintain the kind of standard in quality of life that we enjoy today. Over three billion people, a marketplace that we can tap into. The middle class is growing in size. They need energy, they need food, and they also need fibre. Alberta can provide all three.

Dr. Swann: In September the Premier dropped everything to meet James Cameron. However, when he should have been at work meeting with the European Union trade delegation, he toured India instead. What does this say about the Premier's priorities for the government of Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, I know that following my visit to India, Prime Minister Harper visited with the Prime Minister of India. They have opened up negotiations on a Canada-India free trade agreement. When we were in Europe a few months before, we did talk to a number of elected officials in terms of opening up their borders, especially for agricultural products. Canada and the European Union are in the middle of serious negotiations. I've asked the Prime Minister to keep us informed of all of the tables. The one table that we're not involved with as yet is around the financial table. That is disconcerting because we will have to administer the agreement once it's reached in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health System Acute-care Beds

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Long waits in our emergency departments are just one symptom of many problems the health care system is facing. Fixing the ER issue and getting patients in the right bed in a timely manner is critical. Research tells us that a long-standing metric for acute-care beds is 1.9 per thousand people. To the Premier: what is the number of acute-care beds per thousand in Edmonton and Calgary, where the major pressures are being felt?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the opposition is centred on the number of beds per thousand. We went through this discussion a number of years ago. There are other services that have to be provided for patients other than just the bed – that is, kidney dialysis, radiation vaults – not only just in Edmonton and Calgary but in outlying centres like in Grande Prairie and Red Deer and Lethbridge so that people don't have to travel hundreds of miles on a weekly basis to be able to access that kind of treatment. Those are the kinds of improvements that have been made already. We will keep making those improvements not only based on the statistics that they want to look at but to make sure that the patient comes first.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is 1.2, below the national average.

Acute-care medical and surgical beds are desperately needed. Now, Mr. Premier, I'm not talking about rehab, I'm not talking about palliative care, and I'm not talking about transition beds. To the Premier: how many additional acute-care beds has your government opened since January 1 of this year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I know we have to do more is to open up more continuing care beds. We have a number of acute-care beds that are tied up by individuals that have to move to the next level of care, which is continuing care. That is why we're well into our goal of building 1,300 additional beds this year, and we'll continue to build at least a thousand a year in order to keep up with the ever-increasing aging population.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, he didn't answer that question, but let's try this one because it's going back into what he just finished saying. Mr. Premier, how many net new nursing home beds – and I mean nursing home beds – has your government opened? When I say nursing home beds, I mean real nursing home beds, not continuing care or assisted living, nursing home beds.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I find it kind of ironic. Just a few months ago they were talking about taking $1.3 billion out of Health. Then they were musing about this two-tiered, European style of health care. All of a sudden today they're asking for more spending and more beds. Actually, even with the additional new spending they want to do, they're on the right track to begin with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

2:00 Emergency Room Wait Times

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to see the Premier back with us again.

A couple of weeks ago the Minister of Health and Wellness proudly announced that he was setting new standards for emergency room wait times. Last week, clearly embarrassed by their dismal performance, Alberta Health Services quietly cut the standards, hoping no one would notice. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will you instruct Alberta Health Services to quit lowering standards for our emergency room wait times and start meeting national standards within one year, and if not, why not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as Alberta Health Services' website indicates, these performance measures are being worked on right now between Alberta Health and Wellness staff and Health Services staff. New figures will be coming out. Some of them may stay the same, some may move up, and some may move down. It's a floating document because it's a work that has to be adjusted sometimes from month to month, certainly from quarter to quarter, and most certainly by year-end.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's a floating minister. Gone are the heady first days of this Minister of Health and Wellness, when he would phone up Stephen Duckett in the middle of an editorial board meeting to demand answers. Now we see the return of Mr. Dithers, just another PR flunky for an entrenched bureaucracy. The minister makes a big show of setting ER wait time standards and then lets his subordinates lower them. Why won't the minister admit that he isn't really in charge and that he's avoiding his responsibilities while Albertans desperately seeking help sit huddled in emergency rooms for hours on end?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member couldn't be farther off base. The fact is that significant improvements have occurred at many sites. I had that discussion with the head of the Alberta Medical Association two Fridays ago, and he as well indicated that, yes, there are improvements at some sites. Thank you for that. There are a few other sites that still need additional work.

With respect to the earlier part of the question, I have given Alberta Health Services until Christmas to come up with the improvements that we need to see.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this minister and Alberta Health Services are both failing Albertans.

This minister announced that national standards would be met, and Alberta Health Services is making a fool of him. When will this minister take some responsibility for a change? When will he put his job on the line if he can't deliver national standards quickly?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the percentiles that are being met today are inadequate, and that's why we're reviewing these performance measures. That's why I gave the direction to Alberta Health Services to come back with a plan on where and how those improvements would be made. They've started that plan. They've opened 70 more beds since September in Edmonton and going forward and similarly in Calgary. That's a start, and that's at the major acute-care sites in those two cities. On top of that 1,300 additional continuing-care beds are being opened: 800 already are; 500 left to go. That will help take away some of the crowding pressures as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Certificate of Recognition Workplace Safety Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 this government's own study found that a work-site safety certificate program saved $15 million in injury compensation. In the same year the WCB issued rebates totalling almost $76 million to companies holding this safety certificate, whether they had safe sites or not. My first question is to the Employment and Immigration minister. Is spending $76 million to save $15 million the hon. minister's idea of value for money in trying to keep Alberta work sites safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One, the COR program is being reviewed as we're speaking. As you know, our Auditor General has pointed out some bona fide issues within this program with which I agree, and we're reviewing this program.

Relevant to compensation this member, frankly, is barking up the wrong tree. That decision is made by a board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board. He should be contacting the board. They manage their own finances.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the record, the COR program was initiated by this government, not the WCB.

Again to the same minister: does the minister really believe that the government here should be spending five times more on rebates than it is actually spending on trying to enforce the safety laws of this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is very important that in a question one doesn't lead a listener to a false conclusion. Not one single government dollar is being spent on COR. COR is funded by the Workers' Compensation Board, which is, truly, 100 per cent funded by employers of Alberta. Not one taxpayer dollar goes into WCB or the COR program, and the member well knows that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows perfectly well – at least, I hope he does – that the COR program was initiated by this government. Again, why is the minister allowing the Workers' Compensation Board to use bonuses to encourage their own employees to sign up even more companies for this flawed safety certificate when it doesn't even save money or make the work sites in this province safer?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say it slower. One, the COR program is being reviewed as we're speaking right now. The Auditor General has identified issues with which I agree. We're reviewing it. Two, the program is funded exclusively by the Workers' Compensation Board, which is fully funded by employers of Alberta. They seem not to be raising any concerns, and they are the ones funding it.

We're reviewing the program. We're not spending any government dollars on this. It is an employer-funded program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Provincial Taxes

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The B.C. government recently announced a 15 per cent personal income tax reduction. They claim this means that B.C. taxpayers now pay the lowest provincial income tax in Canada on incomes up to $130,000. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Has Alberta lost its tax advantage?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin by congratulating the government of British Columbia for lowering taxes. We're happy to see taxes lowered anywhere in Canada but particularly by our partners in the western partnership. Now, if you compare income taxes in British Columbia and Alberta, certain brackets now in British Columbia will have a lower tax, but if you look at all taxes – sales taxes, gas taxes, all the other taxes – Albertans pay $2,650 less per capita than our friends in British Columbia.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us what tax advantages Albertans continue to enjoy?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. Let me count the ways. One, health care premiums: no health care premiums in Alberta; $121 a month in British Columbia. Two, personal and spousal exemptions: much lower here. Three, we have the Alberta family and employment tax credits for lower income families. Fuel taxes: 9 cents in Alberta; 19 cents per litre in British Columbia. How about provincial sales taxes? How much provincial sales tax in Alberta? Zero. Seven per cent in British Columbia.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. Does the minister have the numbers to back up his claim that Albertans remain the lowest taxed in Canada?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I do have a number. It's a simple number, but it's a very big number. The number, for the opposition, is $10 billion. That's how much less we pay in Alberta than if we had their taxes here.

Hate Crimes

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, last week the people of Alberta were shocked by a serious assault in Calgary that was motivated by hatred and racism. To the Minister of Justice. According to Statistics Canada Calgary and Edmonton experienced double – yes, double – the national average of crimes motivated by hatred, and this is only getting worse. What is her ministry doing to prevent this scourge?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an area where we have particular concern. We work very closely with police services across this province with respect to hate crimes. In fact, just within the past 12 months when we were asked to intervene and to recommend that charges be laid, the Attorney General did agree to do that, and we were successful in our prosecution. We will continue to work very closely with the police to ensure that these horrendous crimes are properly prosecuted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. The assault on Mr. Devine, coupled with the attack on Ms Shannon Barry this summer in Edmonton, indicates that this minister needs to do more to educate Albertans about tolerance. What is this ministry planning on doing to reduce these types of crime?

2:10

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not my responsibility nor the responsibility of our ministry to stop these types of crimes. We continue to work through the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund to provide funding to organizations who go out and promote the need for tolerance, the need for respect. We work through our Human Rights Commission to ensure that Albertans every day are able to live their lives free of prejudice and have access to jobs, to accommodation, and to government services free of discrimination.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of children's services. The Alberta government's response to the most recent hate crime was to further victimize the Devine family by questioning their ability to parent because of their social activism. Will the minister apologize for shamefully victimizing this family a second time?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that statement is entirely inaccurate. I'm surprised that this member is bringing this forward to the Assembly as you're indicating that there are children involved in this situation, and how we assist families with children is very confidential. I have to tell you as well that our very first and foremost principle is to keep families together, and that would not be any different in the case that this member is mentioning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's nonprofit and charitable organizations are part of the remarkable formula that makes our province such a great place to live. Without the programs and services they provide, our society would literally crumble, yet a number of nonprofits in my constituency are struggling with multiple challenges, including increased and diverse needs from Albertans. Can the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit please tell me what he is doing to help this critically important sector during these tough economic times?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the government remains committed to Alberta's not-for-profit and voluntary sector community and to the goals of providing safe and healthy and vibrant communities. In addition to the $86 million in our department, there's well over a billion dollars provided through grants, services, and programs to those less fortunate across our province. But there are challenges beyond just money. In our department we're trying to help with professional development, and we're helping with the facilitation of workshops and services and programs to encourage volunteer screening. We're also streamlining our grants to make them more accessible.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. Can the minister please tell me what he is doing to ensure that this sector remains healthy after the economy has recovered?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have to do when the economy is not healthy is the same thing we have to do when it is. The government helps over 20,000 not-for-profit organizations, and over 5,600 of those are directly funded through us. We're working to meet with the representatives of the different sectors all across the province to identify their needs and to streamline our programs to more effectively help the people that they're trying to service to make sure that Albertans and those most vulnerable Albertans are getting the services that they require.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: That's it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Leaking tailings ponds is the new political hot potato. No one is doing their job, not the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Environment, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, or the Minister of Health and Wellness. No one is around to take responsibility when fish grow tumours, wildlife drink toxic sludge, or cancer rates rise in First Nations people in the area. To the Minister of Environment: why does this government have such weak standards that a tailings pond that is clearly damaging the surrounding area can meet approval guidelines?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll respond to this member, but I also need to point out that this is a joint responsibility between ERCB and Environment. I want to point out to this member that while we are following up on the allegations that have been part of these media stories, initial reports indicate that there is no release of water from this pond, that the design of this pond is working as it was appropriately designed to work, and if there is any issue, we will be dealing with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: since there are dozens and dozens of releases, contraventions, spills, and failures of control structures reported on the Horizon tailings pond since it opened, why did the government do nothing about it? Given all of these reports, this should not have been a surprise to the government; it should have been an expectation of what was going to happen. Why are you surprised?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have not determined whether or not the allegations that gave rise to the line of questioning are, in fact, accurate. We have, as we speak, our staff on site to determine whether or not there have been any breaches of the approval. But I can assure you that there is ongoing requirement for monitoring, there are inspections from time to time, and up until today those kinds of issues have not arisen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, this will go to the Minister of Energy, then. This tailings pond's cleanup plan did not meet the requirements in directive 074, yet it was approved. Why is that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the member is not any more correct in her preamble in this question than she was in the previous two. What, in fact, did occur with directive 074 is that the ERCB issued the directive, asked all of the various companies to respond. They did. The ERCB took a look at all of their plans and I believe to date has approved all of the plans with, I think, two still to be approved, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Aging Population Framework

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is common knowledge that Alberta's population is aging. In just 20 years 1 out of every 5 Albertans will be a senior, including myself. This significant change in demographics is going to be a real challenge to Alberta and our government. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What is your ministry doing to ensure our government is prepared for a population with such a high number of seniors?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, meeting the needs of present-day and future seniors is a priority for our Premier and for our government and for myself. With the changing needs of an aging population, our programs and our supports serving current seniors must be affordable, they must be sustainable, and they need to be flexible for the changing needs. The aging population policy framework ensures that we meet those needs and that they are sustainable and affordable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. Well, that's all well and good, but my constituents want to see results. They're not just satisfied with policies and guidelines. They'd like to see something that they can see and hold. To the minister: what would this framework actually accomplish?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, before you can build any house, you have to have a foundation and you have to have a framework.

That's exactly what the aging population policy framework is. It's a guide for all of government so that we're on the same page when we make any plans or programs for our seniors. Part of the framework outline includes the Alberta government's roles and responsibilities in meeting the needs of an aging population and key directions for government policy-makers, including those in the areas of financial security, housing, and transportation.

Ms Woo-Paw: My final question to the same minister: can you please tell the Assembly what some of the tangibles could be?

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, Mr. Speaker, the framework establishes goals that government will pursue to address the needs of an aging population. That includes assisting seniors to financially prepare for their senior years, it includes supporting seniors to remain as independent as possible for as long as possible, which is something that we all want, and it also provides seniors with more options so that they can have a home to meet their changing accommodation and service needs. All sectors along with individual Albertans have a role in achieving these outcomes, and I look forward to working with them.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The public had no clue that an apparently unsecured tailings dam was being built across traplines in northern Alberta, and there was no public consultation after the ERCB conditionally approved the strange three-walled tailings pond in 2004. First it was ducks put at risk by toxic tailings soup, and now animals are reportedly free to wander into this three-walled pool. To the Minister of Environment: how could this government possibly approve such a seemingly nonsensical strategy for containing liquid toxic sludge?

Mr. Renner: Well, let me again remind this member that the approval process is one that is jointly through the ERCB and Environment. In this case the ERCB was the one responsible for approving the actual plan. But, Mr Speaker, there is an allegation that somehow this tailings pond is not operating as it was intended. It is built against a natural wall. There is no indication at this point that that natural wall is working any differently than the three artificial ones.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the ERCB and the Minister of Environment are all on the same side, so I think they should all answer for each other.

Now, given that CNRL was initially asked by the Ministry of Environment to provide groundwater monitoring results from pond 1 in the spring of this year and given that the ERCB subsequently approved a delay in the provision of that information until this September, can the minister now tell this House whether he's received that report and whether he will table it in the Legislature to prove his claims that his three-sided pool is not leaking into the water supply?

Mr. Renner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to a report that was requested by the ERCB. I remind her one more time that the ERCB reports to the Minister of Energy, not to the Minister of Environment.

Ms Notley: Wow. Duck and dive there.

Well, could the minister please advise the House whether he has received any scientific reporting on the impact of having several natural watercourses flow into the tailings dam, thereby losing that fresh water, and whether there is any way we can guarantee that they do not continue to flow underground through the toxic sludge right back into the Athabasca River, where they were flowing before?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member is wrong. There are not natural watercourses flowing into this tailings pond. That's the reason why there's a compensation lake that has been put in place to gather the water that flows into this pond. It goes into a compensation lake and around the pond. What the member is referring to is a footprint for a pond that is not yet full. Like any other pond or any other water body, the last I heard, water flows downhill; it doesn't flow uphill. The pond is rising. It is not going beyond the footprint that was designated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Confidentiality of Name Changes

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A mother and a daughter in Alberta endured years of moving from shelter to shelter in fear of a violent family member. They finally took the desperate step of erasing their identities. This involved a confidential change of name under Alberta's Change of Name Act. To the Minister of Service Alberta: is it true that your department authorized the confidential name change and then, contrary to the privacy provisions of the act, published information about their name changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note that we take the privacy of Albertans' information very seriously. I am very well aware of this particular situation. One of the first things that I did when I became minister, when I became aware of this, is that we have a process in place where we will be having a second person verify whether it should not go in the Gazette.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it also true that the official explanation for this breach of confidentiality was that no one is perfect? If so, how can Albertans trust this government to protect their most sensitive personal information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a regular basis there are about 12 of these situations that take place every year, where it's a court-ordered situation where a person's identity is protected. So we do know on a regular basis that things continue to go well. With respect to this situation a mistake was made, we have verified it, and we have worked together with the individual in question to make sure of her security and that she is safe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mother in this case said that this kind of official failure is the reason why women go back to abusive relationships. In a life-and-death situation how could "No one is perfect" ever be an acceptable response?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I'd like to say that we take the security of Albertans' information very seriously. It's a very serious situation. Part of the challenge is to make sure that this woman is safe and that moving forward, in the further changes that we make to support other Albertans, we have the system in place to ensure that this does not happen again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Legal Aid

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past Albertans have enjoyed great service from their Legal Aid system, but lately I've been contacted by many constituents who are genuinely concerned about changes that have been made to this important program. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Why are you making these changes, and how can you assure my constituents that these changes will not be detrimental to their services in the future compared to those of today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work very closely with the Law Society of Alberta and the Legal Aid board to ensure that we're providing services that Albertans need through Legal Aid. We've developed a number of targeted pilot projects to ensure, particularly in the area of civil legal aid, that we are providing the services that people need to have. I congratulate the Legal Aid board for their leadership in this. We work in very close co-operation with them, and we've been ensuring that if there are possible services that people need that may not include a comprehensive plan, we'll continue to provide those services so that Legal Aid can be sustainable into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. That's good information to have, but for the record can the minister verify whether the government has or has not cut Legal Aid funding, and if so, by how much exactly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have not cut our funding to Legal Aid. We support Legal Aid with a substantial grant each year. In the 2010-2011, 2009-2010, and 2008-2009 fiscal years this grant was $53.8 million. Previous to that it was $45.3 million. We've not only maintained our commitment to Legal Aid; we've increased it and tried to make it sustainable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. It's been several months since these changes were made. How much longer are Albertans expected to wait before they can see the results of these pilot projects?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Legal Aid program and the Department of Justice decided that over this year of transition we would monitor the change in programs on a monthly basis. I will say that I had very productive meetings with the Legal Aid board last week, and we're already seeing those successes. The full reports will be available within that 12-month period, April of next year. However, we are already seeing very good results.

Patient Safety Investigation

Mr. Anderson: Last week more health care horror stories were brought to light showing that our emergency room crisis is deepening. Just one of the many latest examples is from Edmonton where a young man struggling with a mental illness committed suicide after waiting for help in vain for hours and hours in Edmonton's emergency rooms. To the minister: will you call in the Health Quality Council to investigate this tragedy as well as the thousands of other poor health outcomes stemming from the ER crisis to ensure these tragedies are not repeated?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is a history on this file. I want to go down on the record saying that any death is a tragedy for a family to deal with. I did speak with the family over the weekend, and they explained a few more of the extenuating circumstances. I want to express my sincere condolences and sympathies to the family that is suffering the loss of their stepson in this case.

With respect to the overarching question there are a number of other procedures that we are putting into place right now, Mr. Speaker, to do the best that we can do as a team to ensure these kinds of tragedies don't occur again.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Let's try this again. Given the gravity of the ER crisis and given that it was known to the Premier and the ministry of health just four days after the 2008 election, as shown by leaked documents several weeks ago, why wasn't the Health Quality Council called in to investigate the crisis at that time, and why have they still not been called in, Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if Alberta Health Services is contemplating that particular strategy or not. Perhaps they are. I don't know the details of something that goes back to 2008 as alluded to, but I can tell you that since the time that I took over, we have made some significant strides and significant improvements to address exactly the issue being talked about here; that is, opening up more beds. I could give you the entire list if you want. We are opening them in acute-care hospitals as well as in the community, and that's one of the key points.

Mr. Anderson: Minister, people are dying. Now would be the time to act. Given that the legislated mandate of the Health Quality Council is, on request of the minister, to assess, inquire into, or study matters respecting patient safety and health service quality in Alberta and given that there is no greater current threat to the public safety of Albertans than the current ER crisis, I'll ask him again. Will the minister call on the Health Quality Council to investigate the tragedies happening in our emergency rooms and table recommendations to permanently solve this crisis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll give that some consideration, but in the meantime I think people should take some comfort in knowing that there are other quality assurance types of reviews that are already under way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Long-term Care in Red Deer

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AHS has now completed the transfer of 215 long-term care residents from Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor to the new Michener Hill Village in Red Deer. Constituents in Red Deer insist on learning why AHS has closed these facilities when there are seniors in acute care and struggling at home waiting for placement in the continuing care system. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why did AHS close both long-term care facilities when there is need for more continuing care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that the Red Deer nursing home was built in 1964; the Valley Park Manor was built in 1969. They've both seen better days. However, in response to the question, a decision was made that said that it's more cost-effective to move these residents to a brand new 280-bed facility called Extendicare Michener Hill, and that resulted in a net increase of 65 additional spaces.

Mr. Dallas: On Monday, November 8, Alberta Health Services reissued layoff notices to staff at Valley Park Manor and Red Deer nursing home. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: why are the staff at these two facilities not being transferred to Extendicare Michener Hill Village?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that it's a different employer, and it's also a different operator, so you can't just transfer them unilaterally like that. However, my understanding is that the people working at the two facilities referenced have been asked, if not encouraged, to apply for employment at the new place, and I believe a number of them have taken up that offer.

Mr. Dallas: To the same minister. Red Deer nursing home and Valley Park Manor have served the community well. What does Alberta Health Services have planned for the future of these two buildings, and when will these announcements be made?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a number of months were spent studying that issue, and in the end it was concluded that it just wasn't cost-effective to keep both of them going when a new facility was going to meet the new standards in a better way.

However, the short answer to the second part of that question is that Valley Park Manor, which is newer, may require some major renovation, and I've asked for that concept to be reviewed, just to see if it could be repurposed and used down the line. The first one, the Red Deer nursing home, is probably beyond that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

English Express Literacy Program

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year many were surprised and disappointed to hear of the cancellation of English Express, an inexpensive, $300,000 investment in improving literacy that was distributed to 60,000 Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With studies showing that 4 out of 10 Albertans lack basic literacy skills, how can the minister justify cutting this valuable, low-cost resource investment for adult learners?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, English Express served us very, very well for more than 20 years, but based on the new direction that we have set out in our Living Literacy framework, which I know the hon. member has had occasion to review – this was developed in consultation with literacy providers – we need to work more collaboratively with those providers, and more innovative delivery programs were also designed to be online and to get better use of the dollars.

Mr. Chase: From English Express to English regress.

Was English Express targeted for cancellation because users of the newspaper do not have the resources or the guaranteed rights of citizenship to speak out?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not, and that's a ridiculous statement. The funding from English Express is going to be used for exactly the purpose that we have, for literacy in the province of Alberta. It is very important that we reach out collaboratively to all of those literacy networks. That funding is not cut. It is going to be redeployed within the funding literacy framework so that we can help more Albertans.

Mr. Chase: So once you've got a good thing, cancel it.

Given that the minister points to short-term cost savings as the reason for cancelling English Express, what will the long-term price be for Alberta taxpayers for ongoing illiteracy?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would listen to the answer rather than make an inaccurate statement. The funding was not cut. The funding was redeployed within the literacy framework. The hon. member should get his facts straight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Continuing Care Facility in Didsbury

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A continuing care centre in Didsbury has been my top priority and a top priority for my constituents for a number of years now and, hopefully, also a high priority for this government. This spring $10 million was committed by the government to see a facility open by 2012. We're fast closing in on 2011, leaving little more than a year to build this facility. To the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: does she still see this facility up and operating in 2012?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I can assure the hon. member that there will be progress. You know, over the past decade our government has provided over half a billion dollars towards the development of close to 10,000 affordable continuing care spaces. This year we allocated $105 million for 13 affordable seniors' projects in 11 Alberta communities, including the project in Didsbury.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The request for proposal for this project was to be completed by the end of July of this year. Why is this process taking so long if the requests were to be in by the end of July?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the member is correct. This summer we held a request for proposal for the projects in Didsbury and Stettler. This resulted in 13 project applications for the Didsbury project alone. Each of these applications is undergoing a very thorough review to ensure that they're viable and that they meet the needs of the community. I expect to make an announcement for the successful proponent in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Until I hear otherwise, I'm assuming that no news is not good news.

My final question is to the same minister. If this project is going to be opened in 2012, it's going to have to get started pretty soon. When can my constituents expect to see some action on this facility? When is the start date?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, with the announcement of the successful proponent coming in the very near future, we expect that the developer will proceed in a timely manner. The Didsbury project is receiving up to $10 million in provincial funding for the construction of 100 affordable supportive living spaces. As per the agreement we expect that construction will be well under way by 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to follow up on discussions we've had on this tailings pond at the Horizon site. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can he tell us if there is anything in place to stop wildlife like moose or muskrats or whatever from freely wading into the tailings pond at the CNRL Horizon plant?

Mr. Knight: What I can tell the hon. member and all Albertans is that the operations at CNRL and, in fact, all of the other installations that currently have tailings ponds and mining operations in the Athabasca oil sands region, Mr. Speaker, operate under a set of regulatory guidelines, and to my knowledge they follow those guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. I guess that illustrates the concern here. We're told over and over by different ministers that everything at the CNRL Horizon plant meets ERCB standards. To the Minister of Energy: does anyone in government review the ERCB standards such as this one, that allows tailings to be poured onto open ground? Does anyone in government review this?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, in a number of questions today there have been allegations made. I would question where the allegations came from, how they would substantiate these. The ERCB is recognized as a leading regulator globally, and for these members here to insinuate somehow that they're not doing their job is an insult to a leading regulator in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. I'll go back to this same minister. There's so much at stake here, not just the environment but the economy. The forestry industry works with environmental groups to reassure investors and customers, to get a sort of independent stamp of approval. To the Minister of Energy: will the government submit the ERCB's tailings pond standards for third-party independent review by recognized experts?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd take a look at that. I don't know if it's something that would add any value. If it would, I'd take a look at it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, with 112 questions and responses.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue the Routine with Members' Statements.

Diabetes

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today in order to help draw much-needed attention to the serious condition of diabetes. Diabetes can be a painful, debilitating disease that, left untreated or improperly managed, can result in a variety of complications such as heart disease, strokes, peripheral vascular disease, amputations, kidney failure, heart attacks, and blindness, just to name a few. More than 20 people are diagnosed with diabetes every hour of every day. It's estimated that in 2010 alone 217,000 Albertans have been diagnosed with either type 1 or type 2 diabetes, and that number is rising drastically. The majority of those patients are maturity-onset type 2 diabetes patients. Over the next decade that number is expected to increase by 67 per cent, which represents the highest increase in Canada.

Of particular concern are our children. Diabetes is a childhood illness. We have record numbers of young people getting type 2 diabetes, which is an adult illness. In Alberta and across the country the Canadian Diabetes Association is working hard to lead the fight against diabetes by helping people with diabetes live healthy lives while working to find a cure. This November, Diabetes Awareness Month, I encourage people to visit diabetes.ca to see the faces of people with diabetes, to learn more about what's being done in this community, and to connect with local activities.

Mr. Speaker, this disease affects everyone that we know. My own father himself has diabetes. One day I may have this disease. I know that there are probably a number of members in the Legislature that have this disease. We have to do something about this. Finally, to reduce the risk of contracting diabetes, let's start investing in our wellness today by adopting healthier lifestyles: by eating less, eating right, and moving more.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Agri-Trade 2010

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the farm calendar November stands out with the annual Agri-Trade exposition. This year's event was another great success in bringing the world of agriculture from around western Canada to Red Deer. From November 10 to 13 at Westerner Park exhibitors and events included equipment manufacturers, modern farm home products, and the agri-trend stage presentations. The ag industry is ever changing with research and development as exhibitors demonstrate excellence in innovation and agricultural applications.

The ag innovation awards is a growing agri-trade program which rewards new product inventions and improved industry processes. Ag innovation awards 2010 highlighted new ideas and practical achievements with prestigious recognition at the awards ceremony on November 10. Award recipients received show-booth banners, preshow and award banquet recognition, and ag innovation publicity. The 2010 finalists for the highly sought awards included technology processes, wheat products, and geosolutions. The vibrant and meaningful dynamic at this ag event is organized by a partnership between the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce and the Westerner Exposition Association.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the agriculture industry in our province as well as organizers and participants of the 27th annual Agri-Trade for their leadership, hard work, and dedication.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Eid al-Adha

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to recognize Eid al-Adha, or the festival of sacrifice, which will be observed tomorrow by nearly 1.5 billion Muslims worldwide, including 100,000 here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, Eid al-Adha is celebrated annually on the 10th day of the last month of the lunar Islamic calendar. This important religious event is recognized by the three major religions of the world. Eid al-Adha acknowledges Abraham's obedience to God.

This festival is a very joyous occasion for Muslims and includes special prayers, visits to family and friends, gifts to children, and, of course, good food. Many Muslims also take this opportunity to invite their non-Muslim friends, neighbours, co-workers, classmates to their Eid festivities to better acquaint them with Islam and Muslim culture. The regular charitable practices of the Muslim community are demonstrated during Eid al-Adha by concerted efforts to see that no impoverished person is left without an opportunity to partake in the special meals during these days.

This festival comes every day at the commencement of the hajj. The hajj is an annual pilgrimage in which millions of Muslims from around the world make the journey to Mecca, Saudi Arabia. Dressed in white clothing to represent human equality and purity, the pilgrims gather to perform rites dating back to the time of Abraham. Hajj is considered one of the five pillars of Islam. Muslims are required to make the pilgrimage once in a lifetime if they are physically and financially able to do so. Many Albertans every year are fortunate enough to make this journey.

Mr. Speaker, Islam is the religion of peace. In fact, the word "Islam" means peace.

At this time I would like to wish all Muslims, and especially those in Alberta, a very joyous and happy Eid al-Adha. Eid Mubarak, Assalamu Alaikum, peace be unto you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow as the chair of the Standing Committee on Health.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Health I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on the review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, dated November 2010. All members will receive copies today.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of the terms of reference and the membership of a so-called secret committee that I established to get ongoing advice from the oil and gas industry. It seemed to create some real interest by certain members of the opposition, so I'm more than happy to table in the House today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 28 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked a question relative to employment standards, which was addressed by our Deputy Premier. I would like to table with the Legislature more supplemental information that I have sent to that hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I'm pleased to table five copies of the 2009-10 annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a letter on letterhead from the Nurse Practitioner Association of Alberta making what I think is an important point, that the role of nurse practitioners in this province is much too limited and that, in fact, nurse practitioners are a tremendous resource that we should be tapping into on a much larger scale than we are.

The second tabling is a lengthy letter. It's kind of a good-news, bad-news piece of correspondence. The good news addresses a very good experience the writer had at the Sturgeon hospital in St. Albert. The bad news is that then they got transferred to the Red Deer hospital and had an extremely disappointing experience there. They've asked me to table this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter I received from the President of the Treasury Board on September 29, 2010, and this provides additional clarification as to how under the Government Organization Act the members of the cabinet policy committees, particularly the chairs, are compensated.

My second tabling is with permission from a constituent, a letter written, of course, by Sheldon Pierce. Mr. Pierce is concerned about the government's plans regarding acute psychiatric care beds at Alberta hospital.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. As it is Family Violence Prevention Month, my first set of tablings is a special issue of the English Express covering healthy and unhealthy relationships, different kinds of abuse, the cycle of family violence, how abuse affects adults and children, where to get help, preventative measures, et cetera.

My second tabling is the English Express teaching notes for same, which includes a caution to the teacher about talking about family violence as well as tips on introducing and using the special issue and what to do if a student reveals abuse.

My third tabling is an e-mail from Julia Melnyk, who feels that cancelling the unique resource of the English Express is a mistake because other government departments use it to communicate important information on topics like human rights, H1N1, employment standards, and workplace safety.

Mr. Speaker, my second set is just a tiny portion of correspondence I have received expressing serious concerns about Bill 29 and asking for more and better protection for Alberta's parks, natural areas, rangelands, and other sensitive areas. From Bragg Creek I received communications from Peta Stuart, Troy Delfs, Simon Weekley; from Calgary Ian Berard, Tom Fabijan-Waddell, Alison Cole, Deborah Bobrow, Lisa Isley, Tye Martel, Geoff Hardy; from Canmore Janine Giles, Stephen Legault; from Cochrane Michele Hardy; from Edmonton Koel Reed, Mark Hill, Heather McPherson, Rhiannon Bury; from Slave Lake Colleen Courts; from Halifax, Nova Scotia, Lynne Fitzgerald; from Montreal, Quebec, Nilia Berkin; and from Ingersoll, Ontario, Suzanne Crellin. Concern over Bill 29 goes way beyond our borders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a set of five documents referred to in my questions in question period today from CNRL. These include the 2004 decision of the Energy Utilities Board, which includes a diagram of pond 1 that does not show that the dam only has three sides, and an excerpt from the 2009 submission to the ERCB, which shows among other things that the dam has several creeks of water running into it.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Pat Wishart of Edmonton in which she outlines her concerns about Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. She writes, "It looks like Tourism, Parks and Recreation wants to abdicate its responsibility for ecological integrity."

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 205

Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act

[Debate adjourned November 1]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to participate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to join the debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act, and I'd like to begin by applauding the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing forward such an important bill, the intention of which is to prevent scrap metal theft by setting out comprehensive responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers in this province.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would require that certain information regarding scrap metal sales be recorded by scrap metal dealers, including the identity of the seller and information regarding the transaction. Why is this so important? Why do we need legislation in this respect? Well, these provisions could give law enforcement officials greater resources for solving instances of scrap metal theft and preventing future instances from occurring in the first place.

This is a serious problem. Bill 205 would help curb scrap metal thefts that burden businesses and private citizens alike by causing damage to their property and financial losses, not to mention huge inconvenience. In the past decade the value and price of common scrap metals has progressively risen, and that has of course led to increased occurrences of theft, and the resultant unnecessary costs to Albertans and their businesses and their neighbourhoods as well.

This problem is now present in almost every jurisdiction across North America. Scrap metal yards, electrical power lines, maintenance shops, and even private residences have all been targeted by thieves. I know members of this House probably have examples even close to their homes. Not only that, but these thieves are going after unconventional sources of scrap metal as well, clear across the country.

Just a couple of examples. Aluminum billboards have disappeared in Vancouver. Stainless steel tanker trucks have been stolen in Quebec. Just a couple of months ago thieves targeted a manufacturer in Surrey, British Columbia, and stole a unique aluminum mould without which the company has been forced to shut down a good segment of its business, putting a number of jobs at risk. This stolen aluminum mould would only garner a few dollars in scrap metal, but it has the ability to severely impact the company and its employees with thousands of dollars in losses. The effects of scrap metal theft can be deep and widespread, and Bill 205 could help reduce cases of scrap metal theft in Alberta.

What we would do well to note is that copper found on private property is also being targeted since it's used in electricity lines, computer components, data and phone transmissions, plumbing, and various household appliances. The price for copper has been setting historic highs for the past five years, fetching between $2.50 and $4.50 a pound. These prices have made thieves more aggressive in their efforts to steal copper wire, and people have been caught in the crossfire.

This past August Precision Drilling, which has a large presence in Alberta, was the victim of a major copper wire theft at one of its maintenance yards in Odessa, Texas. Electrical wiring was removed from several drilling rigs, rendering them inoperable. Obviously, we can see what could happen here in Alberta if we don't enact this legislation. Mr. Speaker, total damage to the rigs in that case was estimated at over $2 million and has halted production. The rigs are still awaiting new copper, which has not yet been shipped to the drilling sites, and has resulted in untold loss of production.

Scrap metal thieves often also attack utility companies for their copper wiring, causing thousands of dollars in damage. These businesses must pay for replacing that stolen wire by themselves, out of their own pockets. That, of course, drives prices up for the consumer. This is an issue that we all need to be concerned about, Mr. Speaker. When thieves steal scrap metal, they often trespass and destroy private property to remove their treasures. The repercussions of this are far reaching and can affect thousands of people.

Yet another example. In April 2010 phone service to hundreds of citizens in Big Lake, near St. Albert, was disabled after thieves dug up and removed 500 metres of copper cable. Obviously, severing electrical and phone lines removes access to essential services, and these crimes often impede power supplies, causing outages which can be devastating to computer networks, which businesses and individuals are reliant upon. In November of last year brazen thieves in Hamilton broke into a power station and stole thousands of dollars in copper wire, cutting electrical service to thousands of customers. Scrap metal theft, Mr. Speaker, wastes thousands of hours for utility companies, private businesses, law enforcement, and individuals as well. Bill 205 is a tool which aids law enforcement, the scrap metal industry, and Albertans in curbing the destructive act of scrap metal theft.

I'd again like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing forward this very important bill. This issue of scrap metal theft is rapidly evolving into a significant concern, and all methods of diminishing this curse should be put into practice. I ask all members from every corner of the House to join me in fully supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today to join the debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. The hon. Member for Strathcona has put forward a piece of legislation that I believe addresses an issue of growing concern for police services, businesses, and many communities throughout our province. Bill 205 focuses on deterring metal theft, an increasing criminal problem that in many cases may not be receiving the attention it deserves. There have been many recent cases of copper wire being stolen from construction sites at various stages of installation.

As our Premier has stated many times, our government remains focused on our goal of creating stronger communities by mitigating crime in all its forms. Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta continues to work with communities to develop crime reduction and prevention strategies. These strategies include our support for increasing the number of front-line police officers, who are on the ground protecting our communities, and funding crime reduction and community partnerships through the safe communities innovation fund. Albertans deserve safe communities, and we will continue to take steps that address the root causes of crime. To address crime on all fronts, we must also have effective, timely legislation that complements these other efforts.

Mr. Speaker, our government has been successful in implementing legislation that supports safer communities such as the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010, which is helping to support many victims of crime. I believe that Bill 205 would also serve to this end by setting detailed responsibilities for scrap metal dealers.

A recent history of scrap metal theft illustrates the growing prevalence of this problem. The RCMP have noted that theft of metals is now very common throughout many Alberta communities, and these items, Mr. Speaker, are readily sold for cash at various scrap metal dealers. There has been a steady upward trend in the price for copper and aluminum, making the theft of these metals increasingly more lucrative for thieves. In the current situation those businesses that choose to purchase metals of questionable origin are under no obligation to assist authorities in their investigations. In some cases these businesses even refuse to co-operate with authorities.

In an effort to address these challenges, Bill 205 would provide additional tools to law enforcement, making it easier for authorities to solve these crimes. The bill would require scrap metal dealers to obtain and record the identification of any person selling scrap metal. It would also require dealers to provide these records to law enforcement agencies upon request, thereby eliminating the anonymity that many perpetrators of this crime currently enjoy, Mr. Speaker.

The RCMP are supportive of the measures proposed through this legislation. They expressed their challenges under the present legislative framework and noted that these reporting requirements would be useful in reducing the theft and subsequent sale of these metals.

Our government is always supportive of measures that implement reasonable regulations on various industries in order to reduce crime. Mr. Speaker, appropriate legislation in this area has the potential to protect consumers, maintain the integrity of the marketplace as well as detect and deter illegal activity. As with all criminal matters in our province there's no easy fix when it comes to reducing crime and enhancing the safety of our communities. However, with effective legislation we can help to ensure that we are taking every step to mitigate these criminal acts.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve to live, work, and raise their families in safe communities. The prevalence of any form of crime is felt across our province in communities large and small, and these crimes have disastrous economic effects, in some cases delaying vital construction and driving up the costs of these projects.

It is not only the act of metal theft that is at issue here, Mr. Speaker. The profits generated from this theft often go towards supporting other criminal activities. Illegal proceeds can work to grow and expand criminal networks, gang activity, drug dealing, and other forms of behaviour that put all of our communities at risk. Whether we're aware of it or not, these activities affect us all. Crime in any form impacts our neighbourhoods. Criminals thrive on anonymity, so by taking measures that will force thieves to identify themselves prior to the sale of stolen goods, we are exposing them and the acts that they are perpetrating.

Metal theft is also putting pressure on our authorities entrusted with securing the safety of our communities. Law enforcement officials have an invaluable role to play in our crime reduction efforts, and they require the appropriate tools to conduct investigations and solve crimes. We have an opportunity here, Mr. Speaker, to get a handle on this growing form of criminal activity before it further impacts our province. Implementing this legislation will support our efforts and complement our broader crime reduction strategy.

Our government is continuing to work with police agencies and community organizations to discuss and establish courses of action that suppress criminal activity. Reducing crime in a meaningful, long-term way requires collaboration. It is a priority for our hon. Premier, the Minister of Justice, and all members of this government, and this priority led us to develop one of the most comprehensive crime reduction strategies in Canada.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, the importance that reducing crime plays in building the types of communities Albertans have grown to enjoy and, frankly, that we hope that they will continue to enjoy. We'll continue to tackle crime in our cities, towns, and neighbourhoods for now and for years to come. This government has made a firm commitment to the safety of our province, and we all have a stake in keeping Alberta safe. Bill 205 will help authorities to do this important work, and I believe it supports our efforts to reduce crime and to create stronger and more vibrant communities.

I commend the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing Bill 205 forward. I believe it will enhance our efforts in building a crime-free Alberta and, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all hon. members to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share some of my comments on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. This act is being proposed by the hon. Member for Strathcona, and before I begin, I would like to thank him for this piece of legislation. It's very timely.

Essentially, Bill 205 proposes measures that will combat the growing issue of scrap metal theft. After all, scrap metal theft is a real and growing issue. Now, in order to combat this form of theft, Bill 205 proposes three clear legislative requirements. The first requirement is that Bill 205 would define what metals constitute scrap metal. After all, effective legislation must begin with comprehensive definitions of the issue at hand. Second, Bill 205 would require scrap metal recyclers and dealers to collect and record proof of identity from individuals selling scrap metal. The reasoning for this requirement is straightforward as at many scrap metal dealers an individual can walk in with stolen metal and walk out with cash in hand. Requiring them to submit information at the point of sale gives our law enforcement officers additional tools to combat this growing crime. This leads us to the third change proposed by Bill 205: allowing law enforcement to view scrap metal that a recycler has obtained to aid in an investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all three of these measures will complement each other and work together to reduce scrap metal theft in our communities. Scrap metal theft is not a victimless crime; rather, it poses serious risks to business, communities, and individuals. Street signs stolen from the side of the road could cause serious traffic accidents, even leading to death. Likewise, as we have seen in other jurisdictions as well as in Alberta, the thieves themselves could also be electrocuted by pulling copper wire from a transmission box.

While I applaud Bill 205 for addressing these serious issues, I believe that the greatest benefit of stopping scrap metal theft is its connection to larger social problems. By this, Mr. Speaker, I mean drug use and organized crime. Now, I'll be the first to admit that when I think about scrap metal theft, I normally do not tie it directly to drug use and gang violence. However, the reality is that drug use, gang activity, and scrap metal theft are closely interconnected. Metal is a relatively easy commodity to steal and often is left unguarded in abandoned buildings, industrial yards, or power transmission boxes. In addition, public property like street signs and billboards all contain large quantities of these valuable metals. Because these locations are also unguarded, they make easy targets for organized crime and gangs.

Compounding this issue is a dramatic increase in scrap metal value. In recent years commonly found metals like copper and aluminum have witnessed an increase in price. Essentially, we have a situation where large quantities of increasingly valuable metal are left in unsecured locations. Gangs have seized upon this opportunity and have been using money from scrap metal theft to finance their operations.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that gangs are a blight on our communities. They spread fear and violence, and their presence can be felt by everyone. They also are responsible for spreading drugs and the problems associated with drugs into our neighbourhoods. This government has recognized that gangs and gang-related activity cannot be tolerated in our communities. This is why this government has initiated the gang reduction strategy and has added over 300 new front-line police officers in the last three years. These initiatives highlight this government's commitment to safe and secure communities.

Mr. Speaker, in my mind the proposals made by Bill 205 would complement this commitment and add to our current initiatives. After all, the best way to eliminate crime is to target its source of income, and increasingly this income is coming from scrap metal theft. If we can enact the measures proposed by Bill 205, we can in effect create a scenario where thieves would be unable to sell their stolen goods without providing identification. Law enforcement could then use this identification to track down thieves and their gangs. I believe that if we can decrease the level of scrap metal theft in our communities, we can also decrease the presence and impact of gangs.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the government's commitment to reducing organized crime in our communities, and I applaud our commitment to safe and secure communities. The proposed bill fits perfectly with the priorities of this government and Albertans as a whole. Scrap metal theft is a serious crime that has the potential to threaten the safety of not only the thieves but all members of our community. After all, in many cases the proceeds used by scrap metal theft are used to fuel gangs and gang violence.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like again to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for not only identifying the issues associated with scrap metal theft but for actually putting forward a proposal to stop this crime. I'll be voting in support of Bill 205 and strongly urge all members of the House to join with me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and join debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing forward legislation that would see our government continue its fight against crime in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 proposes to require certain information regarding scrap metal sales to be recorded by scrap metal dealers and recyclers. This information includes proof of identity and specific information regarding the transaction. This information would then be used to inform authorities as they investigate the many instances of scrap metal theft that occur in our province each year. In addition, should this information lead investigators to a particular suspect or a group of suspects, Bill 205 would give law enforcement the authority to seize materials held by a scrap metal dealer or recycler relevant to the investigation.

This legislation would be an effective tool that law enforcement could use to conduct investigations into allegations of scrap metal theft, which will in turn hold individuals involved in these crimes responsible for their actions. Currently scrap metal recyclers in Alberta conduct their business in the absence of any local bylaws and provincial or federal legislation that sets specific responsibilities for these businesses. The absence of regulations in this industry has made scrap metal theft and related criminal activity extremely difficult to investigate and prosecute. This has led to the increased prevalence of scrap metal theft in Alberta, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed indicated.

For example, in the capital region there were 138 reported instances of copper wire theft between January 1, 2007, and September 30, 2008, with losses amounting to approximately $1.8 million. One incident in Stony Plain saw over $700,000 in scrap metal stolen from one site alone. One site, Mr. Speaker. It is simply unacceptable for this industry to remain unregulated when crimes of this scale are being committed.

Unfortunately, we are not able to keep accurate records on the number of scrap metal theft instances that occur in our province each year for two reasons. One reason is that many instances of scrap metal theft often go unreported. The second reason is that metal theft is often reported simply as theft, leaving it difficult to pinpoint the scope of this specific problem.

Mr. Speaker, those who steal scrap metal know that the likelihood that they will be caught is low, and as such they continue to victimize hard-working Albertans. Bill 205 would provide a much-needed deterrent for scrap metal theft by making it easier for police to track down stolen scrap metal and the individuals responsible for such crimes. Because scrap metal theft affects not only recyclers but also home builders, commercial and industrial construction, and community residents, any effort made to address this issue will serve to make our province safer.

In fact, reducing crime and ensuring the safety of Albertans has been one of this government's highest priorities. Our government has made a commitment to provide funding for 300 additional police officers, as the Member for Calgary-Hays indicated, to address issues of crime. As new and lucrative criminal enterprises emerge, we need to ensure that we have the legislation in place to give these additional resources the tools they need to deter crime and punish offenders. It is important for us as elected representatives to ensure that Alberta remains a safe place to live, work, and raise a family. I believe Bill 205 is another tool that we can use to achieve this.

Over the last several years the costs of scrap metal such as copper and aluminum have grown exponentially, which makes scrap metal theft an attractive option for funding organized crime in our province. While scrap metal theft is only one facet of the inherently complicated nature of organized crime, Bill 205 would help to take away that option for gangs in Alberta by making it much easier to identify the individual who sold it. This bill attempts to create a set of standards and best practices that would go a long way towards deterring scrap metal theft.

Standards that would also help to minimize the economic and social cost of these crimes in our communities are another plus. Each year countless Albertans are victimized by scrap metal theft, and this crime has been steadily growing in popularity amongst criminals. Whether it's the aluminum siding on your neighbour's house or copper wire at a construction site, these metals are readily available and worth a considerable amount of money. The only way we can begin to take control of this problem is to put effective legislation in place that will make it easier to keep track of scrap metal and those who sell it. By giving our police officers the proper tools to address all aspects of crime in our communities, including scrap metal theft, we are promoting a safe and secure Alberta.

I support this bill because I believe it is one step to stopping scrap metal theft. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. I would like to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing this legislation forward, legislation that would further support Alberta police officers in their efforts to deter crime, particularly as it relates to the theft and trade of scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, instances of scrap metal theft have become increasingly prevalent in Alberta over the past several years. In fact, statistical data collected from police services across the province indicates an alarming trend involving the theft and trafficking of scrap metal, including copper and aluminum. Even with the dramatic increase in these crimes the scrap metal industry remains largely unregulated, making it extremely difficult for police to investigate these crimes. Oftentimes the offender remains at large and free to move on to their next victim.

These crimes produce countless numbers of victims both directly and indirectly as a result of scrap metal theft. Directly, there are the individuals who must bear the costs of replacing the materials that have been stolen and making necessary repairs to their property. In the case of damage to public property this burden falls to the taxpayer. Indirectly, many more serious crimes are fuelled by the proceeds of scrap metal theft such as the drug trade and gang activity. These crimes cost our society a great deal. They jeopardize lives and destroy communities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 proposes necessary regulations on the scrap metal industry in order to combat the growing issue of scrap metal theft in our communities. It would do so by requiring all scrap metal dealers to keep records of their daily transactions with private citizens, including information about both the seller and the transaction. Currently no such record keeping is required, and this allows thieves to operate under a cloak of anonymity, so to speak, with little threat of being caught. By making it mandatory for personal information to be recorded and kept on file, this bill would make scrap metal theft less attractive to would-be criminals. Further, these records can serve as evidence in a court of law when offenders are brought to trial.

Another challenge that Alberta law enforcement faces when trying to deal with scrap metal theft is that dealers are currently not required to co-operate with criminal investigations unless ordered by a warrant to do so. This renders the majority of police investigations effectively useless as those who could possibly have custody of stolen metals are not required to share that information.

Bill 205 would compel dealers to turn their transaction records along with all relevant information over to law enforcement upon request. Mr. Speaker, this stipulation would greatly improve the ability of police to track down and charge offenders. The process for obtaining a warrant is a lengthy one, and in the time that it takes for police officers to complete the process, the thieves are often able to slip away. With timely access to such critical information law enforcement can ensure that those who steal scrap metal are swiftly brought to justice. In addition, this measure will increase the chances that offenders will be caught and thus serves as an additional deterrent, helping to prevent these crimes from happening in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, oftentimes police are not made aware of instances of scrap metal theft in a timely manner if at all. This poses a challenge for authorities because by the time a theft has been reported, the offender is likely to be long gone. Bill 205 would address this challenge by requiring dealers to report any transactions involving more than a certain amount of scrap metal, measured by weight. This will serve to alert police of suspicious transactions in a more timely fashion. Further, this stipulation would help authorities find material that may have already been reported stolen.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation addresses many of the challenges associated with investigating instances of scrap metal theft and prosecuting offenders. Currently police do not have many options when it comes to curbing scrap metal theft in this province. The most effective deterrent would certainly be increasing the likelihood of being caught. As it stands right now, gaps in industry regulation make these crimes much easier to get away with. In order for law enforcement to be able to effectively investigate scrap metal theft, they need to be able to access complete and accurate records of scrap metal transactions. Requiring dealers to not only maintain these records but to turn them over to law enforcement when asked will provide new avenues for these investigations.

Mr. Speaker, these crimes have a significant impact on businesses and individuals across our province, and over the past several years the losses have been significant. Between January 1, 2007, and September 30, 2008, in the capital region it is estimated that nearly $2 million worth of scrap metal was stolen in 138 separate incidents.

This is an astonishing amount of material to be stolen in less than two years, and Albertans are looking to us as their representatives to ensure that businesses and communities remain safe.

Bill 205 addresses a specific problem in our communities and provides practical and reasonable solutions that will surely help to reduce scrap metal theft in Alberta. It is imperative that we give law enforcement officers the proper tools for the job. The measures proposed in this legislation will not only help with criminal investigations but also deter future crime.

In closing, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for identifying a problem in our communities and proposing a highly effective solution. I support this piece of legislation, and I encourage all of my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and join second reading debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. This piece of legislation is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona, and I would like to start off today by thanking him for introducing this well-thought-out bill.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 205 effectively addresses a problem that may not always be in the forefront of public thought: scrap metal theft. This form of theft is becoming a growing concern in our province. After all, the prices of scrap metal have risen dramatically in recent years, and it has led to an increase in scrap metal crime. Moreover, scrap metal theft is not a victimless crime. Scrap metal is not garbage or waste metal. Rather, it is often metals scavenged from construction sites, industrial compounds, or public infrastructure. In many cases scrap metal is taken or ripped out of functioning buildings or power boxes.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 proposes to address this serious issue by placing some responsibility on scrap metal dealers and recyclers. Scrap metal dealers and recyclers are individuals or businesses who collect quantities of scrap metal and then recycle or sell them for industrial purposes. In addition, they are often the people who in most cases inadvertently purchase metal from thieves. Under the proposed Bill 205 scrap metal dealers would be required to record the identity of anyone selling them scrap metal as well as information regarding the transaction. These records would be stored and made available to police officers investigating cases of metal theft. In the end, aiding police officers is the best way to stop metal theft in our communities.

Now, for the sake of clarity, I think that it is worthwhile to look at the types of metals commonly stolen as well as where they can be found and what they are used for. To this end, I would like to focus on three commonly stolen metals: copper, aluminum, and rhodium.

Copper is probably the most commonly stolen metal, and upon investigation it is easy to see why. Copper is found everywhere and sells for a relatively high price. For example, in 2006 the price of copper was over $3 a pound, so a 10,000-pound spool of copper could bring in over $30,000. In addition, smaller amounts of copper can be found almost anywhere. After all, copper is used in a tremendous amount of building applications. Copper serves as wire for electrical systems, pipes for household plumbing, and tubing for natural gas systems. All of these uses make copper an incredibly accessible metal. One can imagine the ease a thief would have in ripping pipe out of an abandoned house or taking a spool of copper wire from an unguarded industrial yard.

and like copper, the price of aluminum has increased dramatically in recent years. For example, in 2006 a pound of aluminum could fetch over $1.15. Now, this might seem like a small amount, but we again need to look at quantity. If a thief scavenges 500 pounds of material, this could translate into over $575. Moreover, scavenging 500 pounds of aluminum could cause significant damage to a great variety of both public and private infrastructure. Things like doors, household siding, and street signs are all made out of easily accessible aluminum, and it would not take a thief too long to disassemble and take these common and unguarded objects.

The final type of metal I would like to talk about, rhodium, varies significantly from the previous two. Mr. Speaker, unlike copper and aluminum, rhodium is not a common metal. Rather, it is a rare commodity but one that is found in many everyday objects. Most notably, rhodium is found in catalytic converters, which are standard on most vehicles. Just as an aside, a catalytic converter essentially filters exhaust and reduces car emissions. Rhodium can also be found in jewellery, mirrors, search lights, and electric connection points. While these objects are more difficult to steal than copper or aluminum, the rewards are far greater. For example, in 2006 one troy ounce of rhodium was worth over $4,300. Just for clarity, a troy ounce is around 31 grams and about 10 per cent heavier than a standard ounce. What all of this means is that a small amount of metal is worth a fortune.

Mr. Speaker, what these three metals show us is that scrap metal theft is a significant concern. Metals like copper and aluminum can be found everywhere and are essential for our day-to-day lives whereas metals like rhodium are rare but their value could prompt thieves to steal large objects, like vehicles or buses, just for their scrap value.

I believe that the measures proposed by Bill 205 could go a long way towards addressing this serious concern. Requiring scrap metal dealers and recyclers to keep detailed records of their transactions could help investigators track cases of metal theft. Currently law enforcement officers would almost have to catch someone in the act to place them under arrest. Often scrap metal has no identifying marks or records, so once it is stolen from a home or work site, it becomes difficult to identify. However, with accurate identification records, investigators would have an additional tool to track scrap metal thieves and catch them before they do any more harm to our communities.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Strathcona, and I would encourage all members to join with me in support of Bill 205. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to speak to Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Strathcona. The goal of Bill 205 is to reduce crime in Alberta and one particular type of crime, that being the theft of metal. In particular, the proposal is that dealers would be responsible for collecting information from individuals who are selling metal for cash.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is not a trivial one. It's a burgeoning problem due principally to the rising price of base metals, things like steel, aluminum, tin, copper, and lead. Those have been driven, of course, by the rising demand for those metals from developing countries such as China and India. As a result, individuals are turning more and more to pilfering these metals to get cash. While this seems like a petty crime to many of us, oftentimes it's tied to larger scale crime. Particularly, the police have indicated that it can be tied in many instances to the drug trade, where users are stealing metal and using it to feed their drug habits, and that, in turn, is providing a source of cash for those who are dealing drugs.

When we're talking about metal theft, Mr. Speaker, let's make it very clear that we're not just talking about scrap metal here. Perhaps one of the most common places for thieves to find scrap metal is at a construction site, and no, it's not just scrap metal. Oftentimes it's new metal that's a merchantable product, particularly things like construction supplies, conduit and copper piping for plumbing, and copper wiring in homes. And, of course, security is a problem at construction sites. Whether they be residential or industrial, you just can't watch all of these construction sites all the time. So it's easy prey sometimes for those who are up to no good. In addition to the things that I mentioned, electrical wiring and pipes, we often have other things like roof metal and aluminum sidings and so on.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that these thefts add to construction costs, and ultimately it's the consumer or, in the case of a public project, it's the taxpayer that ends up paying for these types of thefts. I want to emphasize that it's not just outside people. Sometimes these thefts are perpetrated by insiders, those people who actually work on the construction sites and have easy access to the construction materials.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Calgary has already acted to stop the proliferation of metal theft with bylaw 32M98, and that bylaw provides that a salvage yard is required to keep a record of the transaction and its details. Those details would include but are not limited to things like the name of the employee receiving the salvage; the time and the date the property is acquired; current information of the person bringing in the salvage, including the complete name, address, telephone, a description of the person, and two pieces of identification, including one piece of picture ID that is issued by government. The Calgary bylaw is also clear about who cannot bring in an item for salvage. Those would include individuals who are intoxicated, people who do not establish ownership of the salvage, persons under 18, and persons who cannot meet the identification requirements.

Here in Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, I'm informed that besides construction supplies there are also reports of other types of items being taken, things like aluminum beer kegs, which contain large amounts of aluminum and are stored oftentimes out behind drinking establishments, gas fixtures and appliances and other things that contain valuable metals. Older buildings sometimes also have metals in their structure. For example, roofs and drainpipes may be made out of lead or copper or stainless steel, all of which have a decent price in the scrap metal market. I even understand that there have been problems at some of the landfills with individuals intruding and trying to get scrap metals out of the landfills, and that has required additional security and created problems for the landfill operators.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe it's important that we try to deter this particular crime, and I would suggest that following the lead of the city of Calgary by requiring sellers of metals for cash in all parts of the province to have records of the transactions, including the identify of the sellers, is a good idea. For those reasons, I would support the bill, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona. The purpose of this legislation is to address the growing problem of scrap metal theft in our province and in our communities. To this end, Bill 205 would establish specific responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. It would require all information regarding scrap metal sales, including the identity of the seller, to be recorded by scrap metal dealers and recyclers. Furthermore, Bill 205 would determine the materials included in the definition of scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, these measures would help address the growing problem of scrap metal theft. Since 2003 the value and the price for scrap metals have steadily increased, leading to an increase in the counts of theft in the province and our communities, as some of my colleagues have highlighted. While comprehensive statistics on the thefts of these materials can be difficult to find, there's no question that it represents a growing and dangerous problem for our communities. Indeed, examples of such theft include a 48-year-old man who was caught attempting to steal $14,000 worth of scrap metal from a Syncrude work site. This is just one example of numerous instances of copper wire theft in the provincial capital district alone. In Stony Plain over $700,000 worth of material was stolen from one site.

What is perhaps most troubling is that most cases of copper wire theft go unreported. I believe the provisions of Bill 205 would go a long way in supporting this government's ongoing efforts to prevent crime. It would provide greater resources to police to thoroughly investigate instances of scrap metal theft. Recording details of the sale of scrap metal could provide police with the information they require to investigate a case of theft. For example, police could cross-check the sale of scrap metal around the time of a reported theft. Furthermore, police would be able to determine the names of those involved in a suspicious sale of scrap metal. I believe that these measures alone will go far in helping this government fulfill its commitment to reduce crime and ensure safe communities throughout Alberta.

In 2007 under the leadership of this Premier this government established the safe communities task force, which consulted with Albertans province-wide on the effects and the sources of crime. After accepting most of its recommendations, the government moved quickly to implement several measures that are producing real results for Albertans. In 2008 this government pledged $30 million to the Safe Communities Secretariat to fund 300 additional police. These were additional police officers to be funded over three years throughout our province, and I'm pleased to say that our government is fulfilling this promise. This year in February Premier Stelmach and the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security announced that the final 100 officers would become active over the 2010-2011 fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I know I have the highest appreciation and respect for the work police officers do to provide peace and security for our communities, and our government is working to provide additional tools to police officers to fight crime. These measures include the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, which is a powerful new tool in the fight against organized crime. It provides courts with the authority to seize the tools of crime or any property that has been used to commit any type of crime in addition to seizing property and profits gained from unlawful acts. The proceeds from the sale of these items are used to financially compensate victims of crime for their losses and for their injuries. To date police have successfully used this act to recover millions in proceeds, all in an effort to dismantle and hamper organized crime. I believe that Bill 205 will provide another tool to law enforcement in their ongoing efforts to reduce crime.

Other initiatives this government has implemented to reduce crime include a $60 million safe communities innovation fund, that many communities are accessing, and we've gotten some great new best practices out of those initiatives. This unique program supports community-based pilot projects designed to reduce or prevent crime. In its first year of operation the program funded 30 pilot projects, including a neighbourhood development team in St. Albert and the Edmonton Coalition of Crime Councils. After all, Mr. Speaker, crime prevention begins at the local level, in our communities, in partnerships with law enforcement and community organizations.

Scrap metal theft, although not new, is indeed a growing problem in our province and in our communities. As a government we must adapt by providing new tools to law enforcement that can better solve and deter cases of scrap metal theft. For these reasons I will be supporting Bill 205 and encourage my colleagues to vote accordingly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak on Bill 205? The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and join in Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for bringing forward this piece of legislation that we're contemplating today. The purpose of Bill 205 is to deter any metal theft in Alberta by setting out specific responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and for recyclers.

Currently there is actually no legislation that deals explicitly with theft related to scrap metal dealers or recyclers in this province. However, jurisdictions across Canada and the United States have recognized that there is, in fact, a problem with scrap metal theft; for example, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act proposed in Nova Scotia in 2008. Under this proposed act, Mr. Speaker, scrap metal recyclers would have to confirm the identity of any person selling scrap metal in that province. The scrap metal recycler would then be required to record the information regarding the identity of the seller and to store it for one year. This information is then provided to peace officers if it is, in fact, required. In addition, a recycler must also inform local law enforcement agencies within 24 hours of purchasing scrap metal over a predetermined weight. Finally, the recycler must not purchase or receive scrap metal from anyone who appears to be under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

Mr. Speaker, similar restrictions on scrap metal dealers and recyclers have been brought forward in the United States, as I previously mentioned. For example, in Wisconsin they passed number 64 in 2007, a little bit different terminology with bills in the States. Provisions of this act centre on three basic requirements. First, the seller is to provide a licence or other government-issued photo identification while selling the scrap metal. Secondly, the scrap metal dealer is required to record and maintain the seller's identification information as well as the time and date of purchase and a description of the items received, including without limitation the weight and a visual description of the said metal. Finally, the dealer must obtain a seller's signed declaration that the seller is the owner of the items being sold. This act also goes on to outline penalties for both scrap metal dealers and for recyclers who violate the established provisions.

The state of Michigan also has legislation addressing scrap metal theft, specifically the Michigan Senate's Bill 720. Pursuant to this bill, Mr. Speaker, the scrap metal dealer is required to display personal property on a website for viewing by the public. The Michigan bill also requires that scrap metal recyclers maintain the records of sale, purchase, consignment, or trade of personal property for the last two years. In addition, within 24 hours subsequent to a request from a local law enforcement agency the recycler is required to provide an electronic copy of the seller's name, address, telephone number, driver's licence number, and issuing state.

Another jurisdiction enacting scrap metal legislation is Kansas, where, interestingly, I had the chance to travel last year. U.S. Senate Bill 237 became effective on July 1, 2009. This statute makes it unlawful to sell scrap metal unless the seller provides the scrap metal dealer their gender, date of birth, and a number from an official United States government document such as a driver's licence. Last time I checked, we do have those here, Mr. Speaker. In addition, the statute requires scrap metal dealers to record and store information on the transaction for all of the parties involved. The statute also makes it unlawful for any scrap metal dealer to purchase scrap metal without obtaining a signed statement from the seller that the seller is, in fact, the owner of the scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, the statute goes on and makes it unlawful for any scrap metal dealer to purchase junk vehicles – I suppose this includes vans – from sellers without first inspecting the vehicle and recording the vehicle identification number and bill of sale. Finally, this statute would make it unlawful to dispose of, alter, or destroy scrap metal when notified by any law enforcement agency that there is reasonable cause to believe that the regulated scrap metal was, in fact, stolen. If this is the case, the scrap metal dealer would then be required to hold the item or items for 30 days.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the last jurisdiction I'd like to touch on is New York State as I believe they have proposed some of the most stringent scrap metal legislation. New York Senate Bill 6035 was referred to the Rules Committee on June 21, 2009, and seeks to impose strict regulations on salvage dealers and scrap metal processors who purchase illegal scrap metals. Essentially, this bill recognizes that when thieves steal property from an owner, they cause damage to the owner's property and that the value of the owner's loss should in fact include both the property taken and the incidental damage caused to the said property. The bill also requires salvage dealers to obtain a copy of government-issued identification from the seller of scrap metals, who would require the sellers to provide written verification of their authority to sell any such scrap metal. Finally, the bill restricts the sale of certain items, including without limitation street signs, propane containers, fuel markers, or any metal items bearing markings of a government entity, utility company, cemetery, or railroad.

This, of course, is the point that I find most interesting. Not only does the New York bill require identification of scrap metal sellers, but it also actively recounts the types of property that can be considered scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, as stated, many jurisdictions in the United States have taken action on scrap metal dealing, and I believe Bill 205 is an opportunity for Alberta to once again be a leader in our nation. Scrap metal theft is a serious concern that requires serious restrictions and serious penalties, and I'm very happy that we have focused on this particular issue of relevance. [interjection] This has already been recognized in other jurisdictions, just like the chirping from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is noticed by me, and I believe that the measures proposed by Bill 205 would go a long way towards stopping this from growing to a serious form of crime in this province.

With that, I will conclude my comments and urge all members to focus with me on the support of Bill 205. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak on Bill 205? The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act, brought forward by our friend and colleague the hon. Member for Strathcona. Scrap metal theft in Alberta is on the rise, and Bill 205 aims at reducing it by setting out detailed actions and responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. Furthermore, Bill 205 would determine set parameters for what materials should be included in the definition of scrap metal. These steps would help address the increasingly prevalent problem of scrap metal theft. Since 2003 the value of numerous scrap metals has risen, leading to increasing occurrences of theft. The effects of this problem are being experienced throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, scrap metal theft is not a victimless crime. Not only is theft a morally irresponsible act; the theft of scrap metal can often lead to injury or death of both the perpetrator and in some cases innocent bystanders. The places where scrap metal commonly is located can often be very dangerous, from scrap metal yards to live electric power line corridors and transformer yards. People do not realize how dangerous these areas can be. Many of the different metals that are taken from these dangerous places are not the types that commonly come to mind when people think of expensive metals.

Some thieves will take great risks for a few metres of copper wire. For example, in January a man was killed in Texas after he was shocked by 69,000 volts of electricity while standing on top of a substation transformer cutting off one of the wires. Earlier last year a 32-year-old man was found dead after he had broken into an electrical substation and was electrocuted, cutting power to 800 customers in the process. Another example occurred in Riverside, California, in June of 2009, when two men were found electrocuted near a utility transformer trying to steal wire and blacked out the city for two hours. Even closer to home, Mr. Speaker, in 2008 police suspected that a deceased man found in the bottom of an Enmax electrical vault in Calgary died in the act of scrap metal theft.

These people put the lives of others at risk as well. After all, our society is heavily reliant on electricity, and oftentimes these crimes affect the power supply, causing brief surges which can wreak havoc on computer networks, on which we rely more and more for banking, shopping, and research. Mr. Speaker, many of these crimes also lead to severe power outages, which are a risk to a community's essential services. Traffic lights could be affected, which could cause vehicle accidents. Phone and 911 services could be limited, causing serious implications to emergency medical services. A power outage goes far beyond the inconvenience most of us feel.

Mr. Speaker, scrap metal theft not only harms individuals but whole communities. Organized crime has gravitated towards stealing scrap metal because of the rise in value, the ease in which it can be stolen, and that the chances of being caught are relatively low. Gangs looking for quick money have targeted scrapyards, unguarded maintenance shops, and businesses. Organized crime is a threat to our communities, and whatever can be done to curb its existence is a step in the right direction.

Our government has placed a very high emphasis on an initiative called the safe communities initiative. This initiative strives to help eliminate organized criminal activity, which is such a detriment to our society. Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 truly aids in these efforts. Bill 205 would greatly benefit all Albertans by helping to ensure all communities, individuals, and businesses are safe from the effects that scrap metal theft can cause.

Once again, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for putting forward this piece of legislation. Scrap metal theft is quickly becoming a major issue, and all methods of curbing this epidemic should be explored. I fully support Bill 205 because it protects Albertans, and I would encourage all members to join me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to Bill 205? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. Over the past three years there have been numerous instances of metal theft throughout Alberta. Comprehensive statistics on scrap metal theft are difficult to find as copper wire thefts do not have their own code for statistical purposes. In many cases they will be classified as oil field equipment thefts. If the theft is not tied to the oil field industry, it would be categorized simply as a theft. Statistical data that has been collected indicates an emerging criminal trend involving the theft and trafficking of metals, including copper wire, aluminum, and rhodium, which has steadily increased since 2003.

Scrap metal theft damages both public and private property and poses safety risks for communities. As of now scrap metal dealers are not required to obtain photographic identification from anyone who exchanges scrap metal for cash, and scrap metal dealers are not required to provide any written records to police outlining sale/purchase transactions between clients and their business.

Now, Bill 205 would require a private individual to produce identification to a scrap metal recycler prior to the completion of the transaction. The information would be recorded and held by the recycler. Bill 205 would require information regarding scrap metal sales to be recorded by the scrap metal dealer or recycler. This information would also be available to authorities investigating a potential scrap metal theft. Bill 205 would allow a peace officer to search or seize material held by a scrap metal recycler which is relevant to an investigation. It would also afford a peace officer the authority to make copies of records taken by a recycler concerning individuals about whom an inquiry is made.

The Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act provides additional tools to law enforcement agencies to aid in their efforts to curb metal theft in Alberta without unduly burdening scrap metal dealers. This legislation is supported by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, who passed a resolution that supports legislation that creates standards for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. There's also a letter of support from Chief Superintendent P.W. Hourihan, K Division RCMP.

I also find it very interesting that Bill 205 would not apply to a corporate body that's duly authorized to conduct business in Alberta. In other words, if you're dealing directly with a corporation, then they, I assume, don't have to give individual ID: bottle depots, who I understand have bottle caps that they need to recycle.

Though I tend to not like legislation which creates more overhead for businesses, I do believe that because of the way this legislation has been minimized in terms of the amount of paperwork that needs to be taken, the amount of overhead that is expected with this is very minimal. I urge people to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to Bill 205? The hon. Member for Strathcona to close debate.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to close debate on Bill 205, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Act. I would like to thank all of the members of this House for debating this issue and would like to reiterate some of my important points.

Bill 205 aims to reduce theft of scrap metal in Alberta, which harms businesses, municipalities, and, ultimately, taxpayers. This legislation is necessary because scrap metal thefts have increased rapidly in recent years as the price of commodities such as copper has skyrocketed. Copper wire that's lying around job sites is especially prone to theft, and this increases the costs associated with doing business in Alberta.

Scrap metal thieves currently are able to cash in their thefts with little fear of prosecution. This is due to the fact that thieves can simply walk into a scrap metal dealer, sell large quantities of metal for thousands of dollars, and walk out of the dealer's leaving very little evidence behind. Mr. Speaker, the intention of this bill is to eliminate the anonymity that scrap metal thieves currently enjoy by requiring those selling scrap metal to produce valid identification. This would serve as an effective deterrent for criminals and would not unnecessarily burden business.

It's important to remember that this legislation was crafted with input from law enforcement officers throughout the province. Indeed, the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police passed a resolution earlier this year supporting this legislation, that creates standards for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. The feedback from other law enforcement officers throughout the province was strongly in favour of implementing this legislation because it would make it easier for them to track down scrap metal thieves. This would be another tool that they could use to reduce crime in this province, thereby making our communities safer and our businesses more productive. We all know how difficult the job of a law enforcement officer is, and this bill would make it easier for these men and women to carry out their duties.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 will target a specific crime that undoubtedly hurts Albertans, and it will do so without unnecessarily impacting businesses and law-abiding individuals. This legislation fits into this government's plan to promote safe communities and to reduce crime, and I think we can all agree that this is a worthwhile goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a second time]

Bill 206

Utilities Consumer Advocate Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce for second reading Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act.

Bill 206 is based on important principles: first, the interests of Albertans must be protected when they purchase utilities such as natural gas and electricity; second, Albertans deserve reliable information about utility issues; and finally, Albertans need strong representation at regulatory hearings that involve utility-related issues.

Based on these principles, Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 calls for the creation of a Utilities Consumer Advocate that is independent of government to represent consumers in this province. This officer would review consumer complaints about the provision of electricity and natural gas by public utilities to ensure that their practices are fair and ethical. This officer would represent consumers at regulatory hearings, including hearings of the Alberta Utilities Commission. This includes reviewing government action on decisions of the commission. This officer would inform and educate consumers about utilities issues, and this information would be impartial and independent. This officer would have the ability to commence investigations either on his or her own initiative or by the recommendations of the Legislative Assembly or Executive Council.

Some may wonder why this legislation is necessary, Mr. Speaker. After all, there is already a Utilities Consumer Advocate located in the Department of Service Alberta. I have nothing negative to say about the current Utilities Consumer Advocate or any of her staff. I'm sure she is committed to serving consumers as best she can. All Bill 206 would do is empower the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate by giving them more tools to do their important work for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, right now the Utilities Consumer Advocate is an employee of the government. The staffers are employees of government, specifically Service Alberta. Until just recently the Utilities Consumer Advocate was not even a full-time job but one of many hats worn by a deputy minister or an assistant deputy minister; in other words, someone who directly worked for the Minister of Service Alberta. As an officer of the government the position of Utilities Consumer Advocate can be eliminated at any time, their staff can be let go, or their budgets severely cut. Their reports can be edited by government bureaucrats, if they are allowed to release reports at all.

They can be blocked from speaking to the media or to the public. A spokesman from Service Alberta even said last year that the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate does not involve talking to the press. Given these kinds of constraints, how is the Utilities Consumer Advocate supposed to provide consumers with impartial information? How are they supposed to point out flaws in government initiatives or programs, specifically consumer protections approved by their own boss? How are they supposed to represent consumers at regulatory hearings against another more powerful government department such as Energy?

Without an independent, empowered Utilities Consumer Advocate serious consumer concerns will continue to go unaddressed. Mr. Speaker, these concerns are not new and have gone on far too long: pushy door-to-door energy marketers who bully people into signing long-term contracts, complicated contracts that do not tell consumers what they can expect to pay for their utilities; large administrative fees that are not justified; sizable cancellation fees that keep people stuck in bad contracts; huge security deposits that make electricity unaffordable for low-income customers; credit checks that can cause seniors without a credit history to be turned down by utility providers. The list goes on and on. An independent Utilities Consumer Advocate will not solve these problems overnight, but at least consumers would have somewhere to go when they are not being treated fairly.

Mr. Speaker, for anyone that doubts that an independent Utilities Consumer Advocate would better serve Albertans, I would ask the following questions. Would public money be better accounted for without an independent Auditor General? Would the privacy of Albertans be better protected without an independent Information and Privacy Commissioner? Would elections be more fairly administered without an independent Chief Electoral Officer? Of course, this government has tried to undercut the independence of these positions whenever they can, but these officers have saved Albertans money, helped to bring important information to public attention, and tried to maintain faith in the democratic processes. At their best, independent officers gain credibility with stakeholder groups, the press, and Albertans of all political sides because they can be trusted to be fair and impartial.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing missing in the utilities sector in this province is trust. It has been one thing after another: a botched deregulation experiment that sent power prices skyrocketing, a government agency caught spying on its own citizens, and a bill forced through the Legislature that shields new transmission lines from public hearings.

Mr. Speaker, projects that far exceed their initial cost estimates with higher sticker prices are passed on to the consumer. Albertans do not trust the government to be honest and open with them on electricity issues, and they are not sure that they trust the industry either. That broken trust will not be fixed until Alberta changes its course on electricity policy. An important first step towards more transparency and accountability would be to support Bill 206 and give Albertans a Utilities Consumer Advocate independent of government and free from political interference.

For those reasons, I urge all my colleagues from both sides of the House to support Bill 206. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, do you wish to speak to this bill?

Mrs. Sarich: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act. The objective of the bill is to create an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This office would be under the purview of the Legislative Assembly and would be tasked with providing information and advice to small electricity and natural gas consumers in the province. In addition, the UCA would be tasked with investigating consumer complaints regarding natural gas or electricity.

I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Member for Calgary-McCall had the consumer in mind when he drafted this particular bill. However, consumers currently within the province of Alberta are already protected and have been for some time. As such, I do have some concerns with this particular bill in that the government already has in place a very strong legislative framework and processes for consumer protection.

Specifically, we have the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This role is currently mandated in section 19, schedule 13.1 of the Government Organization Act. The Utilities Consumer Advocate currently represents consumer interests in the energy industry. Also, the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate is the voice for small energy consumers within Alberta, and the current advocate, Karin Gashus, is there to aid and support the consumer.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is contacted by an average of 250 consumers every day, and that number alone indicates the importance of this particular office. So why change the structure when consumers are already using this particular office? The office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate adequately deals with consumers' concerns regarding the utility companies and helps consumers make the right decisions and choices by providing information about their energy options.

In addition to the day-to-day interactions with the public, the Utilities Consumer Advocate participates in approximately 100 regulatory proceedings annually. Perhaps more importantly, Mr. Speaker, is that the Utilities Consumer Advocate already mediates between the consumer and the utility companies.

It is for these particular reasons that Bill 206 is, quite frankly, unnecessary. What the Member for Calgary-McCall is proposing is already in place, and I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that it is working very well.

Mr. Speaker, I also question why the Member for Calgary-McCall is asking for the Utilities Consumer Advocate to report to the Legislature as this also has some implications. How would doing this particular reporting structure make the Utilities Consumer Advocate more effective, and how would this provide greater protection for consumers? I believe that placing the Utilities Consumer Advocate under the Legislative Assembly would mean that the Utilities Consumer Advocate would in fact lose a bit of authority as well as power that is already within that legislative framework.

Section 14 of Bill 206 would give the Utilities Consumer Advocate broad powers to inquire and investigate along with seizure powers and powers to hold public hearings and compel witnesses. These powers affect the rights of a person, and it is unusual to give such powers to a body or an organization that is not carrying out quasi-judicial functions. As such, the effectiveness of the Utilities Consumer Advocate would also be eroded by placing it under the Legislative Assembly. The Utilities Consumer Advocate already generates MLA constituency reports that outline consumer concerns in each particular constituency.

Section 12(1) of Bill 206 directs the Utilities Consumer Advocate to report annually to the Legislative Assembly. I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that currently the activities of the advocate are reported in Service Alberta's annual report, which is also available to the public. Any further annual report to the Legislature would in fact be repetitive and, quite frankly, redundant.

Mr. Speaker, I've raised these several points that highlight the redundancy of Bill 206. The question in the debate on Bill 206 can be summed as follows. Why create another legislative framework that would be repetitive to the one that already exists with the government of Alberta? In keeping with that, Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 is really not needed at this particular time.

Also, Service Alberta is already mandated with consumer protection through the Fair Trading Act, and the Utilities Consumer Advocate is also mandated under the Government Organization Act. Furthermore, Bill 206 would really present additional problems in the regulatory frameworks that balance the interests of the consumers with the utilities.

With the Utilities Consumer Advocate already in place, Bill 206 also aims to duplicate an already-existing organization, an organization that is very effective and very credible to the consumers who access that particular service and program. Bill 206 creates unnecessary duplication and additional bureaucracy at a cost and would create an office that would be, again, repetitive and ineffective in this case.

As such, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support Bill 206 and would encourage all my colleagues to vote this bill down. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I must say I am very disappointed in the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I disagree fundamentally. I admire her putting her position out on the table, but I wonder how many of her constituents are really happy with their experience with electricity deregulation. Perhaps it should become an election issue in Edmonton-Decore.

I think the bill brought forward by the Member for Calgary-McCall is a good piece of legislation and deserves our support if we are actually here working on behalf of the voters and not on behalf of just those few who have benefited from deregulation.

I think it's worth just briefly reflecting on the experiment in Alberta with electricity deregulation. Alberta got caught up, swept up in what was for a while a continent-wide fad to deregulate electricity systems. It broke out starting in the States, and it got some traction in, oh, places like Indiana and Pennsylvania, if memory serves me correctly, and then ran into a huge scandal in California, which contributed to even larger scandals involving companies like Enron, which was found to be guilty of manipulating electricity pricing in markets and, in fact, did some of their early experimentation with these manipulations right here in Alberta under the nose of this government through a project well known as Project Stanley. While that scandal has been pursued in the courts and in various other forums in the United States, here in Alberta this government just turned a blind eye to it.

How has deregulation played out? Well, pretty much the way one would expect. People were promised lower prices, better service, and more choice. Prices have been much more erratic and in many cases are worse than they used to be, there's not a lot of meaningful choice, and frankly service is lousy.

I can tell you that just recently, within the last two weeks, a neighbour of mine had gone to bat to get a single lamplight installed on a post in the back alley, disconnected by EPCOR because the charges for this one light bulb, Mr. Speaker, just administration costs alone, were running, you know, a hundred dollars a year or something to administer one light bulb. Maybe there's a joke in there somewhere. How many EPCOR employees does it take to administer a light bulb? Apparently, a huge number of them. He ended up having to speak to a number of different people because under deregulation we've shattered, we've dismantled what was once a coherent system.

Consumers initially and for several years were genuinely and rightfully angry about deregulation. I think they've sort of resigned themselves to it now. They've seen that the government is not going to budge on it, that the government is serving its ideology, as confused as that is, and is serving some investors but isn't serving consumers.

I think that's the motivation behind this piece of legislation. The Member for Calgary-McCall and, I bet, all of us in this Assembly have heard from constituents who are sick and tired of electricity bills they can't understand, sick and tired of getting bills on properties where they don't even use electricity and they still get significant bills every month. They want an advocate, and they want an advocate with teeth, not an advocate that reports up through cabinet ministers and government channels and is subject to all the controls that government employees are, but an independent advocate. That's what this piece of legislation is all about. If we're going to be stuck with deregulation – and it's probably too late to put that dragon back in the cave – then at least let's do something for consumers, something genuine.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore mentioned that there are 250 contacts a day to the current advocate, who's a government employee – 250 a day. That speaks to the volume of discontent and confusion on this. If there are over a hundred regulatory proceedings annually, that again speaks to how big this problem is.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think we need to take that problem seriously, and I think this bill proposes that. The Member for Edmonton-Decore and probably others, as we hear from them, will criticize the idea in this bill in section 2(2) to make the advocate an officer of the Legislature. I think that's crucial. I disagree respectfully with the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I disagree. I think that making this Utilities Consumer Advocate an officer of the Legislature gives that position the independence that's needed. We know from various public policy research that the public trusts officers of the Legislature and independent bodies more than they trust government spokesmen, and if we're looking to build confidence and consumer trust, then we need to make this person an officer of the Legislature.

I think, for example, continuing through the legislation at section 3(1)(a), I'm going to quote here because it's a good line to quote. Responsibilities: "to represent the interests of residential, farm and small business consumers of electricity and natural gas in Alberta."

Mr. Speaker, surely that's something we can all support, and surely it's something we all understand needs to be done with the independence that would come with this advocate being an officer of the Legislature.

You know, time and again, actually, I feel like this government serves corporate interests above consumer interests. My view of government is that it should be an independent representative of all citizens. Whether it's in utilities, whether it's in auto insurance, whether it's in so many other fields, this government defaults, it seems to me, to the interests of big business rather than the interests of the consumer. There used to be, actually, a minister of consumer affairs, and now I think there's maybe a desk of consumer affairs or something in this government. That shows you how far this government has dropped the priority it places on ordinary people. This bill is an attempt to build that back up.

Section 3(1)(c) says, "to receive, review and investigate consumer complaints." Well, I think that's a good idea. I think that's a great idea. I think we need that capacity. It's kind of ironic that this government is bringing forward a health charter that has a health advocate in it, albeit a completely toothless health advocate, but it won't support a piece of legislation that advocates for a Utilities Consumer Advocate that's actually independent. Maybe it's because this legislation would give the Utilities Consumer Advocate some real clout, some real authority, some real credibility, and that's what this government is so frightened of.

I also want to refer, Mr. Speaker, to another paragraph under section 3. It's paragraph (f), and it reads, "to inform and educate consumers about electricity and natural gas issues." I think that's vital. How many of us – I bet all of us – have had constituents talk to us about their confusion around electricity issues? Obviously, some of those relate to how complicated the billing is, but there are questions around the electricity industry itself and the pricing of electricity: how is my electricity priced? How many people realize that it's a price set hour to hour? Well, people should know that, and we should have a mechanism in place to help people learn that. How many people know how natural gas is priced when it goes into their monthly bill? How many people understand what the impacts are of transmission and other costs?

Mr. Speaker, this is a good piece of legislation, important for the people of Alberta, and I hope everybody supports it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate today on Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act, being proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. The intent of this legislation, from what the member has put forward, is to improve consumer protection for users of natural gas and electricity. The member proposes to do this by creating the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This office would be charged with providing information and advice to small businesses and home consumers.

Mr. Speaker, while I agree with the intent of this member's proposal, I would argue that the provisions proposed in Bill 206 are not needed because, frankly, we already have them in place. Currently under the Government Organization Act we have an existing Utilities Consumer Advocate. So as you can see, we have a proposal to do the same thing again. Laudable but, frankly, I think very unnecessary. This advocate is already entrusted with the same powers as the advocate proposed in Bill 206. The question then becomes: what does this bill really do?

When reviewing the bill, it quickly became apparent that the biggest change proposed by the legislation is, of course, making the Utilities Consumer Advocate an officer of this Legislature rather than its current position under the Ministry of Service Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this would mean that all of the funding for this office would come from the budget of the Legislature rather than from its current source, the Balancing Pool and the gas utilities. So we have a proposal to go from an industry-funded office under a government ministry to one directly reporting to the Legislature and funded by the taxpayer.

In addition, this would mean that the consumer advocate would need to be appointed by the Legislature every five years. When we look at the legislation, it states that the Utilities Consumer Advocate can only serve two terms, so at a maximum we would see an individual serving for 10 years. I'm very concerned with this arrangement for one reason: a 10-year maximum term limit could potentially force the government to remove a qualified individual from this office. After all, Mr. Speaker, a skilled Utilities Consumer Advocate could be hard to find, and arbitrarily removing them based on a term limit could, I believe, harm consumer advocacy.

This is a very important office, and as such every effort should be made to retain on behalf of the consumer an effective advocate. Mr. Speaker, under our current system the Utilities Consumer Advocate is not restricted by term limits; thus, their skills can be retained as long as they remain qualified in the position. In addition, the current structure allows the government to fill vacancies in this position quickly, without having to go through the Assembly. This creates a scenario where we can keep qualified individuals longer and appoint new ones quicker. I would argue that changing this structure would in the end do more harm than good.

The case will then be made that making the consumer advocate an officer of the Legislature will increase the accountability of the office and could ultimately improve consumer protection. Again, Mr. Speaker, I must disagree on both of those points. First, the office is already viewed with respect and credibility. In fact, in March of this year an Ipsos-Reid research project revealed that Albertans were very happy that the Utilities Consumer Advocate was a part of the government. They felt that this arrangement boosted the credibility of the office and that the government provided adequate oversight.

Second, I fail to see how altering the structure of the office would lead to any improvement in consumer protection. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is already a successful advocate for consumer needs. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this body currently assists an average of 250 consumers every day, working out to some 54,000 people every year. In addition, since 2007 there have been over 170 investigations launched against door-to-door energy retailers. These figures tell me that this office is already operating very effectively. Changing the current structure and imposing new obligations on the office of the advocate may actually weaken consumer protection.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps most importantly, I disagree with the proposal to make the Utilities Consumer Advocate an officer of the Legislature because it increases costs for no real gain for our public. Not only is this proposal coming at a time when it falls on all governments to look at controlling spending, but it seems to run contrary to some of the opinions voiced even by some of these members of the opposition. Time and time again we have heard from that side that the government needs to limit spending or only spend on areas that are maybe of concern to a particular member or that we should spend better rather than spending more.

When I look at Bill 206, I see an item of unnecessary expenditure. We already have a body that performs this very identical function. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is effective in what it does. It is effective when hearing and responding to consumer complaints, it is effective when investigating energy providers, and it is effective when viewed from a cost perspective. Turning this body into an office of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, will add no real benefits to the consumer. Frankly, I don't believe that consumers care how; they just want the job done and done well. This proposal is change for the sake of change only. It may sound cute under this dome but has no relevance to most Albertans.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again highlight that this government is committed to consumer protection for all of its utility customers. After all, it is important that small consumers have a voice. As government we have recognized this need and created an effective body to act as that voice. This body has always functioned in an accountable and credible manner, and I see no reason to change its current set-up.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-McCall for introducing this piece of legislation as it gives us an opportunity to talk about our successful programs, but I will not be supporting this bill because I believe that, frankly, it's not necessary. With that, I would conclude my remarks and urge members to not support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to rise and speak in favour of Bill 206, which calls for the creation of a Utilities Consumer Advocate that would be an independent body that would present its findings to this hon. House and allow for a more independent body that would be seen not only by this Legislature but also by other individuals in Alberta as truly representing the interests of consumers. I have been listening intently to the debate in the House and was particularly impressed with both the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, who brought this bill forward, as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

We look at what's happened here in Alberta over the course of the last 10 years and the change where we've gone from a regulated electricity system, which was seen to be understood by consumers, and governments could monitor and regulate the activities of the electricity business. For all intents and purposes it was doing very well at that. Albertans at the time were receiving some of the most competitive electricity prices anywhere in the world. You can't argue statistics.

I appreciate the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that this was merely that at the time you changed to a private system, it was the flavour of the month. It was simply: hey, it looks like the cool kids are doing it, so let's jump on board. It was halfway through what was, I guess, being called the right-wing revolution here in Alberta. Oil money and natural gas money was coming in, so we thought about privatizing it. It was the right-wing agenda that was bringing the wealth into this province, not merely the fact that we sit on 25 per cent of the world's oil resources. Nevertheless, it's easy to get swept up in believing that you're all that and a bag of chips, which I think is what happened here in the '90s. If you look at that, we did privatize an industry that was working well.

I'm brought back to our discussions on Bill 50, that got sent to committee. I believe that we actually were at that time allowed to speak to the new Minister of Energy, who is not here in the House this afternoon. I was interested in the comments from my colleague from Edmonton-Centre when she asked the minister about deregulation. He was frank on the matter and said: "Well, our analysis of that was wrong. At the time we did it, we thought there was going to be a whole bunch of synergies at play, that have never evolved." It was a candid admission from someone who is still involved in this government, a recognition that what they did at that time hasn't turned out to be in the best interests of Albertans.

I think what would happen here by the introduction of Bill 206 is that with an independent advocate we may have an individual who reports to the Legislature who can look out for the best interests of the Alberta consumer and may, I guess, protect the Alberta citizen from some of the extremes of government, whether they're on a right-wing agenda, a left-wing agenda, or a centrist agenda, and not get caught up in the hype of the moment, not get caught up in the hype of going forward with something that sounds interesting, that sounds cool, that sounds like everybody is doing it when it may not in fact be in the best interests of the Alberta people. I don't believe this position would now fundamentally add many costs to the current administration that is going on. What is a real difference here is that you're going to transfer a system right now that reports to a minister. She decides what to report. She decides the final information that goes in the report. She decides the final information of what's going to be presented to the public. It can be massaged in any number of different fashions and ways to present a picture that the minister wants.

What the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall is proposing is something different, something that open and transparent governments are supposed to be doing: creating independent systems like this that report to the Legislature, that allow us in to look at the information presented in a clear fashion, not torqued by rhetoric or not torqued by protecting a government or not torqued by an opposition trying to make hay with whatever arguments they wish to on the day. It just merely presents the information as it is to the people of Alberta.

If you look at the public policy debates that have been out there, individuals or citizens of Alberta prefer independent commissions who are reporting to the government. Institutions like the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Ethics Commissioner all present their information to the Legislature, and they're seen to have a greater respect amongst Alberta people when these things happen. On the simple fact of openness and transparency, on the simple fact of having a person separate and apart from government that is seen as bringing the truth, not seen as just delivering spin, I would support the hon. member's motion. I think it's a good motion, that we should be enacting. Really, I can see very little reason besides rhetoric that is out there saying: appoint this to have simply what is available now transferred to an independent body. Have that independent body run similar to the way it is now, but just have the information presented right to this Legislature. I don't believe it would cost more, and secondly, I believe the Alberta people would be better represented, and on a simple trust factor it would go a long way.

I thank you for allowing this, and again I'd like to commend the Member for Calgary-McCall for rolling up his sleeves and putting this forward. It's good legislation that leads us down a path to openness and transparency.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. The purpose of this bill is to create the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This would be done in the interest of consumer protection for users of natural gas and electricity in the province of Alberta.

The Alberta government already has a functioning Utilities Consumer Advocate under the Government Organization Act. In addition to the UCA, the government has established the Alberta Utilities Commission, the AUC. The AUC is a quasi-judicial, independent agency established by the government of Alberta. The commission is currently responsible for regulating the utilities sector, natural gas and electricity markets in the interests of social, economic, and environmental protection. It ensures the delivery of Alberta's utility services in a manner that is fair, responsible, and in the public interest. The AUC's fairness, openness, and transparency in the regulatory process have delivered and continue to deliver sound decisions.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 implies that the current Utilities Consumer Advocate is not carrying out to the full extent the functions it was intended for. This is not the truth of the matter. In the first 18 months following its establishment in 2003, the Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate represented consumer interests in more than 30 regulatory proceedings, resulting in more than $85 million in reductions to rates requested by utility companies.

Presently in Alberta an average of 250 consumers contact the current Utilities Consumer Advocate every day. This is a clear indication that Albertans are seeking the help of the Utilities Consumer Advocate and that it is in place to provide utility consumers with a voice. The UCA has remained committed to providing support to all Albertans. Earlier this year as part of a survey Albertans were asked how familiar they were with the UCA. They told us that the UCA's position inside the government provides credibility and oversight.

Mr. Speaker, currently the Utilities Consumer Advocate functions under Service Alberta. If Bill 206 is supported, the proposed UCA would be an officer of the Legislature and would be required to report annually to the Legislative Assembly. Being independent from the department, it would require the hiring of more support staff. The process of acquiring new staff and preparing them for the job would take time and financial resources away from the day-to-day functioning of the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Furthermore, it's not in this province's best interest to create a new legislative officer because it would demand more spending in general. It is always important to control government spending, and during a time of more limited means this becomes crucial.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 would require funding over and above what is currently being spent on an already efficient system. As a responsible government one of our main priorities is to allocate resources efficiently. I do not believe this bill merits the amount of funding it would require simply because the current consumer advocate is doing a good job, and there is no need for changes.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the grounds for Bill 206 are based on good intentions and introduced to improve consumer protection. However, creating the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate would only add an unnecessary layer to our bureaucracy. This bill would impose a layer of duplication, uncertainty, and regulatory burden that would be detrimental to both consumers and utility companies. In addition, this bill upsets a hundred-year regulatory framework that balances the interests of consumers and utilities.

Another apparent problem with this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that the consumer advocate would hold office for a term of only five years. Moreover, he or she would be restricted to serving only two terms. This restriction would make it impossible to keep an efficient and experienced consumer advocate for longer than 10 years. As a result, it may be difficult to attract individuals who are experienced and qualified to fill this position. If there is no need to select a new consumer advocate due to the term restrictions, the experience and knowledge of the acting advocate would be carried over year after year.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, spending resources to select a new consumer advocate simply due to the term restrictions may not be the answer. I have to wonder: is this the best way to use Albertans' money? Having read about all the great work that the current Utilities Consumer Advocate has done since its establishment, the answer is clearly: no, this is not the best way to spend Albertans' money.

Mr. Speaker, it is in this government's best interest and in the interest of all Albertans that we keep the operations of the UCA as simple and efficient as possible. I do not see how the changes proposed by Bill 206 would greatly enhance the way Albertans receive support with regard to their utilities. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall for introducing this legislation for debate. It has allowed us all the opportunity to further discuss possible improvements in services to Alberta's utility consumers, and exploring ways to improve Alberta's public services is in everyone's best interests.

I believe that the current Utilities Consumer Advocate is working hard for Albertans who require their assistance and will continue to do so in the future. For this reason I do not support Bill 206, and I encourage all members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did you wish to participate at this time?

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will participate. I'm afraid I don't have too much time left before we change to the next topic.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you will have your maximum allocated 10 minutes of speaking time but only three minutes today.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I will attempt to get some thoughts in in the first three minutes and then not repeat myself next week, when I get back to it.

I want to start by congratulating the Member for Calgary-McCall for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I think it's an important piece of legislation. It's important maybe not because it's perfect in its construction – I think there are a few concerns that I have about it – but it certainly is important in terms of identifying an issue which, contrary to the points made by some of the other members who have spoken thus far today, I believe is of critical importance to Albertans.

Albertans suffer from really quite crazy fees and costs associated with electricity, and that is because of a clear, ideologically driven political decision made by this government almost a decade ago now, I guess. Consumers have clearly paid the price for it, and they pay it all the time. To think that they don't care about it is really quite something, and I was quite surprised to hear members opposite suggest that. I find it ironic to hear members opposite say: oh, we ought not to clean up or attempt to clean up our mess because it might cost money.

When you consider how much money the former Premier of this province kicked out the door in the form of rebates year after year to try and distract Albertans from the fact that his misplaced plan was costing them extensive amounts of money that they would not have had to pay had the government not embarked on the strategy to deregulate the energy market, I find all of that rather ironic. When you look at the cost of those rebates, let me tell you that the cost of having a truly independent utilities advocate pales – pales – in comparison to the almost bribe-like expenditures that went out the door to distract Albertans from the costs imposed upon them by this government's decision to deregulate.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time for this matter has now elapsed on today's agenda. The hon. member will be invited to return next Monday, and she will be the first person identified to participate.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Oversight of Provincial Sheriffs

511. Mr. Hehr moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a civilian oversight body, modelled on the Law Enforcement Review Board, to investigate all public complaints lodged against provincial sheriffs.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a privilege to rise and speak in support of my Motion 511, independent oversight of provincial sheriffs. What I'm going to attempt to do is give a little background on the philosophy of civilian oversight, try and tell a little bit about how currently the system works, and compare it to the law enforcement review agency, looking over our sheriffs and their performance, which is the direction that I think civilian complaints should go. Without further ado I'll try to piece together all that, and no doubt, hopefully, we'll have some debate on this.

As background, police oversight refers to the ongoing monitoring of police activities with a view toward holding each police service accountable on its service provision, its policies, and the conduct of its members. The term "governance" is used to refer to the process and structures used to direct an organization's operations. It defines the division of power within an organization, establishes mechanisms to achieve accountability between stakeholders, the oversight bodies, and the police service management.

Civilian oversight of law enforcement is an essential component of our democratic society. Effective civilian oversight and governance of police is essential to ensure that the police service uses its power and authority in a manner reflecting respect for the law and individual rights and freedoms. Ultimately, the essential task is to strike a balance between police independence to conduct investigations and to maintain order without undue political or other influences with the need for accountability to the public.

In Alberta civilian oversight of law enforcement begins with the Solicitor General and Public Security through legislated authority in the Police Act. In Alberta the police complaints, discipline, and appeal process is stipulated through legislation found in the Police Act and regulation. Under the Police Act the primary bodies providing oversight and governance are the police commissions appointed by the local municipal government. For municipalities who engage the RCMP as their municipal police service, official policing committees are established with a similar mandate.

Police commissions and policing committees provide a vital link between the community and the police, with their role being to balance the requirements of public accountability and those of police independence and provide an interface between the police service and elected officials. The Police Act of Alberta gives a commission responsibility for appointing the chief of police and a role in selecting a detachment commander. Both work in establishing policing priorities, allocating funds provided by a city council, and establishing policing policies. The day-to-day operation of the police service is the responsibility of the chief of police or detachment commander, and the commission or committee does not become involved operationally.

As a means to sort of take us to where I believe we need to go, I'm going to go through a little bit about what is the adjudication of complaints regarding personnel of our sheriffs branch and where I think our current oversight measures are falling short. Right now when a complaint happens, the conduct of the Alberta sheriffs is monitored by the professional standards unit. The professional standards unit is not part of the sheriffs branch. The unit, though, is housed within the law enforcement and oversight branch. The PSU's mandate is to investigate public complaints against Alberta sheriffs as well as the investigation of all internal sheriffs branch matters. Simply put, the mission objective of the PSU is ensuring that Alberta's sheriffs are providing ethical, effective, and professional service, so you can't argue with the mandate.

The unit is also supposed to receive general feedback from Albertans, both positive and negative, to ensure the sheriffs branch is improving its policies, training, and service delivery. As a function of this relationship with the community the PSU requires that all formal complaints, those requiring a code-of-conduct investigation, be submitted in writing to the PSU. Most of the public concerns that are received by the unit are handled informally with the consent of the complainant and the sheriff involved and through participation by a member of the professional standards unit.

On occasion formal mediation processes may be relied upon. These would include the complainant, the member of the PSU, the supervisor of the sheriff who is the subject of the complaint.

The investigation outcomes process. Within 30 days of the PSU having receipt of submission, complainants are notified, acknowledging the receipt of the complaint, and will receive updates every 45 days on the progress of the investigation. Upon conclusion of the matter the individual is notified concerning whether the complaint has merit. At this point of the investigation the sheriffs branch is provided with the findings, and it is left for them to determine what action, if any, will be taken. Finally, the complainant is notified in writing of the sheriffs branch decision regarding the appropriate remedy.

Now comes the appeal process. Any complainant who is not satisfied with the decision has a right of appeal to the director of law enforcement. This must be submitted to the sheriffs appeals delegate within 30 days of receiving the initial decision. Like the initial complaint the appeal must be submitted in writing and contain the findings of the investigation, where the complainant disagrees, as well as the reasons why. All correspondence and matters are managed by the police officer program.

Now here is where it gets interesting. The sheriffs appeal delegate is a member of the public who is appointed to the position by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. During the course of the appeal the sheriffs appeal delegate may direct either the public security peace officer program manager or the program investigator to contact the complainant for further details. A review of the appeal will be undertaken, and the person will be notified within 45 days as to the progress of the decision. The decision of the sheriffs appeal delegate is final.

If we look at that and how that compares to how the Law Enforcement Review Board is run, if we look at the sheriffs appeal delegate under the Peace Officer Act, where that decision is final, when we look at the process that is involved in the PSU, the information shows that some level of oversight does exist; however, it falls considerably short of the kind of independent adjudication provided by the Law Enforcement Review Board.

Let me just go through what that Law Enforcement Review Board does. The Law Enforcement Review Board is an independent, quasi-judicial board established under the Police Act. The principle activity of the board is to hear appeals from citizens and police officers alike, but these are separate and apart from the police service involved. The principle objective of the board is an independent and impartial review. At the request of the minister the board may also investigate any matter relating to policing. Individuals who can appeal are a citizen, a police officer, a private security investigator, or a peace officer. Once the board has made a decision about an appeal, it is binding. There is a further appeal process, and that can be made to the Court of Appeal only if the board has made a legal error in its decision or is called upon by a point of law.

The ultimate object of this motion will be to create something more akin to the LERB or perhaps local police commissions. If we look at the makeup of what this would hope to establish, it is that it would be establishing an independent civilian auditor with the power to call witnesses and who has unfettered access to sheriffs' records and other evidence. Such a body would be able to spot systemic conduct problems and do internal investigations. Part of this would involve creation of an independent law enforcement oversight board consisting of, for example, three civilians with legal and civil rights backgrounds that would hear misconduct complaints brought against individual sheriffs from citizens and internal whistle-blowers. That panel would be located outside of the sheriffs office and outside of the ministry. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, sir, but I have to move on now.

I'll recognize the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, and then the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I truly appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this motion. I wanted to thank the member at the outset for raising the issue and for the sentiment that lies behind it, which is effective public oversight of police or peace officers in our province. I happen to agree that's an important thing.

There's interesting wording in the motion that calls for a parallel – in fact, I'll read the exact wording – “to establish a civilian oversight body, modelled on the Law Enforcement Review Board, to investigate all public complaints lodged against provincial sheriffs.” Just let me visit very briefly the actual process that the Law Enforcement Review Board follows, which the member partially covered but, I think, glossed over in a very important way.

First of all, in the event of a serious criminal activity on the part of a police officer or an event that involves the death or serious injury or injury to a civilian, initially the investigation would likely be moved to another police force or to ASIRT, possibly, the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team. So that's an important distinction there. Nonetheless, once a civilian or another police officer, if you look at the current act before the House, files a complaint, that complaint is not owned by the police commission; it's owned by the police chief who does the investigation. The member said himself that the police commission does not involve itself in operational issues. That complaint is investigated by the police chief of the force of that offending officer unless it's a serious investigation moved somewhere else already.

Once the police chief determines the outcome of that investigation, that complainant or the police officer involved can appeal that to the Law Enforcement Review Board, which does not investigate the complaint. As you said in your introduction in your speech, the Law Enforcement Review Board adjudicates appeals. It doesn't independently investigate. So the Law Enforcement Review Board can in fact find that the investigation was incomplete and send it back, or they can uphold the investigation. The decisions of the Law Enforcement Review Board are final unless an error was made in a point of law. Right?

Given that process, an exactly parallel process exists today for the sheriffs as near as I can tell. That process would be: first of all, in the event of a criminal activity or serious incident, that would automatically be moved to another police force or to ASIRT. Sheriffs cannot investigate or recommend criminal charges, so that would require the activities of a police force. Typically the complaints that the sheriffs would get that would be investigated internally would be, you know, using profanity during a traffic stop or disrespectful behaviour during a traffic stop. So the complaint is investigated by that sheriff's employer, in a sense, quite rightly. The unit that investigates those, although independent of the sheriffs branch, still operates under this minister's department. It's the same thing in the police force. The original complaint is investigated by that officer's employer, really.

In the event that the complainant does not agree with it, they can appeal to the sheriffs delegate, who is independent of this ministry but appointed by this ministry, as the member pointed out. I'll point out that the quasi-judicial board or any quasi-judicial board is also appointed by that same ministry, so I also appoint the Law Enforcement Review Board members. Yes, they're appointed, but they are independent. The current delegate is not a member of the sheriffs, is a former RCMP officer, actually, and has done some independent work on behalf of this province before to rave reviews, if you will.

Again, I think the sentiment is good, but it creates some problems. First of all, the Police Act is currently open before this Legislature. This cannot be done under the Police Act. Sheriffs are not police; they're peace officers. It requires changes under the Peace Officer Act.

The member made a couple of interesting comments that the sheriffs branch applies the discipline in the event of an investigation. So does the chief of police in the initial incident, and that could be the subject of appeal. It's the same with the sheriffs branch. But as for anybody with employees, typically it's the employer that determines what the discipline is going to be. In the case of sheriffs, you know, they're members of the public service union, and there's a collective bargaining agreement in place, which the government has to adhere to. That initial discipline has to be meted out by the employer in accordance with that collective bargaining agreement. So not only would we have to change the Peace Officer Act but also the public service bargaining agreement, which would be difficult.

While I understand and agree with the sentiment, I question the methodology of installing an external board that does nothing different than the process that's in place today and does not in fact do what the motion suggests it does, which is investigate. The Law Enforcement Review Board does not investigate. We could have a couple of options. We could maybe leave it as is with a couple of tweaks, and I'd certainly over time be willing to talk to the member about that. We could appoint an additional sheriff delegate and call that a board, which in my mind would be adding cost but little value. The delegate has overseen something like four complaints since the position was established. It's not a busy shop.

The other thing is to establish a full civilian oversight board to investigate, which is what the motion implies, although it compares it to the Law Enforcement Review Board. That, I would suggest, would require significant changes in legislation, would also require changes to the Police Act because we'd likely have to do the parallel thing for the Police Act and provide unimaginable utility at the moment. I have real trouble seeing how we would improve the system by doing that, at least without adding very significant cost of establishing a full civilian investigative board. How would you do that? It would have to be police officers who provide investigation, which we've discovered in ASIRT. Led by a civilian, there are police investigators in there because they're the guys that know how to investigate. So you build in checks and balances, but you don't go to a full civilian oversight board. It would be too difficult to do.

I suggest that, first of all, the fact that the appeals delegate is appointed is not at all scary. You know, there are checks and balances about how people are appointed and how they do their jobs, and we accomplish that with the Law Enforcement Review Board. The fact that the sheriffs branch metes out discipline: that's true in any case with any employer.

I'll raise one other possible issue, and that is that this can't be done under the Police Act. It would have to be done under the Peace Officer Act. Sheriffs aren't the only peace officers in the province nor the only peace officers that interact with the public. There's a broad array, fish and wildlife officers and others, that interact with the public out there. Where would you draw the line?

I see this motion as calling for a costly oversight process adding limited, if any, additional value to the process. I wholeheartedly agree on the sentiment. Given the flow of how sheriff oversight and discipline is done today, any time that member wants to talk about ways that we could do that better, residing within that principle, I'm more than open to doing that. I have great respect for the sentiment that that member has laid out here, but to depart significantly not just from the current sheriffs process but also from the process that we have established for our police services is quite a leap for me and one that I can't support.

Again, while I strongly support the member's sentiment here, I can't support the motion that calls for such significant change. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to begin by commenting that I really appreciated that exchange between the minister and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I learned something from it. It felt like a really genuine exchange, and we don't get all that many of those in here, so that was very helpful to me. I noted the minister's concerns, but I also noted, you know, that he is indicating support for the sentiment if not for the details and mechanics of this particular motion.

Partway through the minister's comments, when he talked about some of the complaints like the use of profanity by a police officer giving out a ticket, it made me think of a story I read years ago – it was out of the United States – of a police officer who was called in by his supervisor and was dressed down because they'd had a complaint that he was too rude and gruff when he was giving out traffic tickets, and the officer was instructed to spruce up his manner. Then a couple of months later he was called in because they'd received complaints that people he was ticketing felt like he was really enjoying the process of giving them the ticket because he was so happy. So it's sort of a you-can't-win kind of story. Who knows? That might happen here.

I want to begin this debate by reflecting on the principles behind this motion. I think the basic principle that we're all concerned about here is protecting the rule of law. I think the rule of law is one of the real hallmarks, certainly, of a modern, civilized society, where the idea is that the law applies equally to all members and that it's enforced equally. I think that's absolutely vital to anything approaching the kind of society that we've come to cherish in Canada and in what I would call the developed world. There are still many countries in this world where the rule of law is not respected, so we cannot take it for granted.

A big factor in whether the rule of law is sustained in this society, I would argue, is the competence and credibility of the police. Our police forces are fundamental to the success and prosperity of our societies, and that competence and credibility of the police also has to correspond with public trust. Those two go hand in hand. If the public has confidence and trust in our police and the police are competent and credible, then we are much more likely as a society to enjoy the rule of law. I think that's really what this motion comes down to.

One of my sons in May was actually travelling in Ukraine. He was walking with some friends down the street one evening, and a police car came by and stopped. It was actually like an SUV sort of vehicle. Several officers got out with guns and proceeded to stop my son and his friends, who were doing nothing but walking down the street. They were clearly westerners. There was a prolonged exchange. The police took their papers into custody and gave these young Canadians a real scare. In the end what were they looking for? There were no laws broken. They wanted money. At the end of the episode they ended up taking cash from my son and his friends and drove away. That's the extreme, but we need to watch out and protect against that. Certainly, the history of the Canadian west versus the history of the U.S. frontier illustrates that in Canada we cherish and value and have a remarkable history concerning the rule of law and competent police who earn public trust.

There is some concern about what's happening with public confidence in our police forces these days. Everybody knows, I'm sure, of too many examples involving the RCMP, a police force that has a very glorious history but right now is struggling, I think, to maintain public confidence: the episode we saw with the Robert Dziekanski tasing at the Vancouver airport, where the police investigation into their own activities was proven to be very suspect. That hurts the police. That hurt the RCMP when that information eventually came out in the big public hearing. The public confidence in our police force generally and the RCMP, in particular, took a real blow. If those blows continue – and it's not limited to the RCMP – then we risk something very fundamental in our society.

I know there are concerns in Edmonton with some activities of certain officers in the Edmonton police force. There have been a few cases just in the last month, two that I can think of, that undermined our confidence in the police. We must be diligent, and we must be vigilant as MLAs, who make the laws that we ask the police to enforce. We must be diligent and vigilant to protect police credibility.

Now, the minister used the phrase "checks and balances," and I think that's crucial here. He did speak about the mechanics of police discipline and sheriff discipline, and it helped me understand a bit more clearly the different process involved in disciplining a police officer or investigating a complaint against a police officer versus investigating a complaint against a sheriff. I appreciated the minister's explanation there.

Nonetheless, I would like to reinforce with the minister the spirit of this motion, which is to beef up the civilian oversight concerning sheriffs. I would argue that in the end that's good not only for the public but for the sheriffs themselves. We're lucky, I think. As the minister said, there have only been, if I understood him correctly, four complaints brought against sheriffs. If that's what I understood, that's a remarkable record and a commendable one.

But times will change, and cultures will change. As the sheriff organization in this province grows and, shall we say, ages and gets a longer and longer track record, the baggage will build. If we don't address that baggage – in other words, those controversies, those potential abuses – very clearly and effectively, it will accumulate, and the people who will suffer first will be the sheriffs, who will go from being respected peace officers to being, you know, open to suspicion from the public.

This particular motion, Motion 511, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, is intended to protect the public by strengthening public oversight concerning complaints about sheriffs. I would make the point that that doesn't just protect the public, but in the long term that protects the sheriffs themselves because if the public sees complaints against sheriffs being effectively dealt with, openly and fairly dealt with, then the public will accept that: okay; in every organization there are a few mistakes made, but overall I have confidence in my sheriffs. If, on the other hand, a case arises in which a complaint against a sheriff is handled badly and it looks like it's concealed or there's something underhanded about it, then all the sheriffs will be cast under the same light.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would urge the minister and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo to continue that dialogue and to do what they can to strengthen public oversight of our peace officers in Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Before I call on the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, might I have your approval to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: This week is the annual fall convention of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and it's being held here in the city of Edmonton. Of course, October 18 was the last municipal election, so I've invited some friends to come today to join us for a few minutes, and I'd like to introduce them to you. As I call them out, I'd ask them to rise. Please withhold your approval until you've heard from them all.

First of all, from the county of Barrhead Reeve Bill Lee and members of his council and administration, from Westlock county Reeve Charles Navratil and members of his council and administration, from Woodlands county Mayor Jim Rennie and members of his council and administration, from Sturgeon county Mayor Donald Rigney and members of his council and administration, and from the municipal district of Big Lakes Reeve Alvin Billings and members of his council. They're all here for the convention this fall. If they'd all rise, please, and be warmly welcomed. Very nice. Thank you very much.

For our guests, what we've got right now is a motion under debate, and it's presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Each speaker has 10 minutes to speak, and we've had a number of speakers speak. I'm going to now introduce the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to give his remarks.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to welcome our guests.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 511, which is being proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. For the record, this motion proposes to "urge the government to establish a civilian oversight body, modelled on the Law Enforcement Review Board, to investigate all public complaints lodged against provincial sheriffs." Now, I'm very excited to speak to this motion because it gives me the opportunity to highlight some of the amazing work done by our provincial sheriffs.

It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that our provincial sheriffs are not police officers. They are, in fact, peace officers. As peace officers they are tasked with certain powers that are considerably different than those given to our police forces, but this is not to say that they do not play a critical role in the law enforcement continuum for the protection of our communities.

In fact, of the approximately 680 sheriffs, 411 work in security operations protecting government buildings and personnel throughout Alberta. Many of them can be found around the Legislature, around the Annex building, as well as government facilities across the province.

The second major detachment of sheriffs is the section dedicated to traffic enforcement, and this is without a doubt the section of the sheriffs department that is best known and, I'd say, loved by many Albertans as they interact with most of our public. Connecting back to Motion 511, these are the sheriffs who are most likely to receive public complaint. In fact, the vast majority of complaints levied against sheriffs deal with traffic-related issues. Now, that is not to say that they're not doing an outstanding job. In fact, since their inception we have seen a significant drop in traffic-related fatalities.

In addition to their roles in traffic enforcement and protection services Alberta sheriffs also help our police forces in areas such as fugitive capture and the transportation of prisoners.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, sheriffs play an incredibly diverse role in our society, and we need to be conscious of this when we design an oversight body like the one proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. After all, the Law Enforcement Review Board was designed to oversee police services, who have a relatively well-established role in society. With sheriffs engaged in such a wide variety of tasks, we must step back and make sure that the model that works for police services would also work for peace officers like sheriffs.

Mr. Speaker, we need to create a system that provides effective oversight while at the same time is not financially burdensome. I believe that establishing clear oversight for our provincial sheriffs will improve this already very professional force. It will raise their respectability and credibility in the eyes of the public at large and will give us the opportunity to reflect on all the valuable work sheriffs perform in our day-to-day lives.

I do not think that the motion proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is perfect, Mr. Speaker, but I do understand and recognize his intent, and as such I will be supporting Motion 511. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get on the record as speaking to this motion, and actually I'd like to perhaps narrow it down to private security firms. I know that we're speaking of rule of law, but I think we're also speaking of perception. I want to see a perception, as has already been mentioned, of a person in uniform giving a feeling of protection, safety, and trust.

I'm going to go off on my tangent again about my seniors. All of our hospitals now have private security firms, and I can only speak for two that I actually saw. A large portion of people that go to hospitals actually are seniors. I'm not talking about the ones that are being treated; I'm talking about the ones that visit. I've just seen such rudeness. People aren't moving fast enough, and they're not hopping to just because someone in a uniform has told them to. I'm really concerned about the power of intimidation that private security firms have. Frankly, I'm not sure who they actually answer to. If they have a contract with the Alberta Health Services, maybe that's who overlooks them. I'm not sure. I would like the minister to perhaps address that concern.

The other thing is that I really feel that – maybe it's my age, Mr. Speaker, but I was in the House of Commons in May. The House of Commons, as we all know, as this building is, is absolutely gorgeous. To walk down the halls of this beautiful, magnificent building and see nothing but these scanners all the way down the hall, I mean, yes, security is one thing, but I think sometimes we overdo it, to actually have the House of Commons, this gorgeous building, ruined in my mind, to be able to enjoy it, because of all the scanners.

I guess those are just a couple of things. It's got really nothing to do with this House, and, big surprise, I went off on a tangent. Big surprise. But I am really concerned about perhaps the training that goes on. [interjections] What? Oh, you guys, don't leave. I'm just getting wound up.

I really am concerned with how we can oversee the perception of people in uniform because a uniform is intimidating. Perhaps the minister could address it in terms of the private guards. Some of these young people that I see are actually quite young, and I'm not sure what kind of training they get in terms of the psychological attitudes that they should create when they approach people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, this is a motion put forward by your colleague, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. This is not a motion that the hon. Solicitor General is in a position to respond to. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and share my comments on Motion 511, which is being proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. This motion proposes to “urge the government to establish a civilian oversight body, modelled on the Law Enforcement Review Board, to investigate all public complaints lodged against provincial sheriffs.”

I must say that the intent of this motion is laudable. It is important to have firm oversight of law enforcement officers in order to ensure that the public at large have confidence in their security services. This is not to say that I don't have some concerns with Motion 511. First and foremost, there needs to be recognition that sheriffs are not police officers. Rather, they are peace officers, and as peace officers they are restricted in the actions they can take to uphold the law. In addition, there are many types of peace officers currently working in Alberta, and it may not be necessary to have civilian oversight for all of them. People like fish and game officers and inspectors are all types of peace officers who have worked successfully for years without an oversight system like the one proposed in Motion 511.

Secondly, sheriffs play a very diverse role in our society, and some of them do not interact with the public at large and may not need the same level of oversight as those who deal with the public on a daily basis. Many sheriffs provide security services to government buildings and personnel, while others work internally, helping police services. These sheriffs by and large do not interact with the public and may not need the level of oversight proposed by Motion 511.

Mr. Speaker, this is not to say that I disagree with the hon. member about the need for oversight of the sheriffs that do interact with the public. Far from it. Oversight of security services lends them a sense of legitimacy in the public's eyes, and this is something that our sheriffs have earned time and time again.

Mr. Speaker, sheriffs are a crucial part of our province's security services. They play a crucial role in the safety of Alberta's roads, and they should be recognized for their contributions. Yes, sometimes recognition comes with additional responsibilities and oversight. It now falls on us as a government to decide how to create an appropriate oversight body. We need one that effectively handles civilian and internal complaints while at the same time does not create an expensive layer of bureaucracy at a time when it doesn't make sense to spend needlessly. I am not convinced that creating a system modelled after the Law Enforcement Review Board, as advocated by Motion 511, is the most effective way to create an oversight body for this diverse force, but I do recognize the need for some form of oversight. Therefore, I will be voting in support of Motion 511.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

I invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to reiterate what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview stated earlier. I really appreciated the dialogue with the minister and his pointing out some of the successes and possible failures of the motion that I have put forward in this case. Nevertheless, I think the motion as it stands is to try and establish a civilian oversight body that is modelled after the Law Enforcement Review Board. By that, if we look at the Law Enforcement Review Board, we have people with skill sets, have an actual board assembled to look at complaints that are coming up through a system. It's not simply an individual who is the final arbiter of any appeal process that goes through to the sheriffs department.

I think that's necessary for a couple of reasons. Our sheriffs are doing more than they ever have before. They are being entrusted to monitor not only our streets but enforce our liquor violations when people are over the legal limit. They are now being charged with doing some of our drug enforcement and looking after grow ops and things like that in the city. In my view, although I'm not the Solicitor General, I have a feeling those duties may be expanding as we continue to go along. I also know that if a sheriff were to come up to a member of the public, they are often given the same level of credence as a police officer and have a lot of ability to influence the public in what they do.

There is a concern by the honour and privilege that we give them in our society as well as the rightful opportunity they have to represent the rule of law. Like we've discussed, it is our obligation as an honourable House to try and provide the independent oversight, to add legitimacy to our sheriffs and to continue down that path of policing. You've got to have the separation where the police and our sheriffs unit need the power to conduct their own operations and own investigations while at the same time an independent civilian arm has an opportunity to go through and investigate complaints.

I really appreciated the comments of the minister. I think that with his comments and with the sentiment of this motion and his skill and understanding of what some of the problems are that maybe with the passing of this bill the minister could work with it and stickhandle some of those problems that he identified. With his ability to see some of those pitfalls, yet have an understanding of the intent and where the system could be improved, this could go on the books as one of those things that gets passed, and the minister, I trust, would go to work on it and in due course come back with a better system than what's already there.

I thank the minister and the other members of this hon. House for discussing this issue. It's been a pleasure to take part in this debate. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated. We'll start our first evening session of this week.

Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 3: Mr. Liepert]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010. The bill changes the administrative rules for freehold mineral rights. It specifies the appeals process, times and procedures are changed, and it changes the punitive structures for nonpayment, increasing the potential fines. Really, this is an administrative bill and very little to take issue with.

The freehold mineral tax is an annual tax on non provincial government owned petroleum and natural gas mineral rights within Alberta. It's assessed on revenue derived from production from freehold oil and gas properties. It's assessed annually based on calendar year production, and it's levied on each owner of a petroleum or natural gas mineral right as shown on the estate fee simple certificate of title.

I won't go into details about how it's calculated, but I did want to get on the record saying that we support this. It's a reasonable amendment. It clarifies a number of administrative issues relating to freehold tax, and we will be supporting this.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll be brief. The Liberal Party has long supported the mineral rights of individual property owners. This is a bill that possibly we could look at as having 110 years of work preceding it to get it to this stage. I think Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010, recognizes ownership but also recognizes the importance of contributing to the well-being of the entire province. The 4 per cent figure that is being suggested seems extremely fair, and therefore I lend my support and that of my party to this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and answers, comments.

Seeing none, the chair shall now call for speakers on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just make a few comments with respect to this. This bill changes the appeal process for freehold mineral rights tax assessment. Previously objections to the tax were appealed to the minister, who could then go further and refer complaints to an appointed appeals board. Under our proposed amendments objections are made to the minister or by appeals to the Court of Queen's Bench. Maximum penalties for noncompliance are raised from $5,000 to $100,000, and various regulations would allow for the transmission and storage of electronic records.

Mr. Speaker, there are restrictions here, stiffer fines and restricted access to appeal them, and that in conjunction with the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, restricts the ability of freehold coal-bed methane rights holders to appeal taxation just after clarifying their ownership of these rights.

I just want to get on the record here and suggest that this is a bill which is . . . [interjection] Mr. Speaker, you know, someone is in the back there. I just want to indicate to the members that this is a bill which we have some objections to and will not support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On Bill 25, five minutes for comments or questions.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to stand up and speak in support of this bill and, I guess, the process that the government has gone through. Our understanding is that they actually consulted the freeholders and got the input and went in that direction rather than springing a bill on them that nobody was aware of. We think that that's important. It's amazing, as we can see in here this evening, that when the proper procedure and process are gone through, passing a bill can be quite simple and straightforward. We wish that this was a process that was taken on more bills. It won't be that way for the rest of the evening, I think, but on this one the freeholders are in support of this bill, and the Wildrose caucus is as well. We'll be voting in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) five minutes for comments, questions.

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to put in my support on this bill. I was very proud to take through legislation which clarified gas and coal for the government, and I'm very glad that we have moved forward and clarified this when it comes to the freeholders. I'm very pleased to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to comment? Questions?

On the bill, any hon. member?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 26

Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 3: Ms Blakeman]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I see that you wish to speak on it.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 26, which is the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. This is a piece of legislation that has been discussed – or at least the ideas behind it have been discussed – and argued over and debated for years, and it's good to see something come out of all that sound and fury. Sometimes sound and fury signify more than nothing, and in this case that would be the case.

I think that probably the history of this issue has been laid out by previous speakers. You know, depending on how you want to look at it, it's something you could trace back probably a hundred million years, to when coal was formed and when it began producing methane gas. Essentially, it's an issue of clarifying the definitions and who owns the coal and who owns the coal-bed methane that the coal produces. I think it's important to separate those two, and I think this moves very much in the right direction.

It doesn't address all the issues. There are issues, you know, such as water and saline production, which so far, luckily, in Alberta hasn't been a big issue, but in some of the coal-bed formations that will probably be tapped in the future, we will have to expect a lot of concern around the production of saline and toxic water out of those wells. That's not the main concern of this piece of legislation, and I guess we'll have to wait for the future to deal with that issue. Let's hope we don't leave it too long because they've discovered in other jurisdictions, I think most famously Wyoming, that these things need to be thought about in advance.

I think this is probably an issue that's going to attain broader national and international attention as we look at jurisdictions that have historically not been gas producers suddenly discovering that perhaps they will become gas producers. But we won't worry about that tonight. I think tonight there are bigger discussions to be had, so I will leave my comments like that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It's interesting that we're talking about Bill 26, mines and minerals and, specifically, coal-bed methane gas. Tonight gas seems to be a reoccurring theme. I don't want to add too much to that gas discussion, but I do want to get on the record the importance of principles that we have long espoused, and that's the need for isotopic testing and creating records prior to fracking. When water is intruded upon, whether by a natural process, as is often the case, or by the inappropriate chemicals used in the fracking process, we need to have that historical record so that we can determine whether or not compensation is due to the individual whose land and water are interfered with.

There's been a terrific amount of controversy with regard to how we can potentially interfere with aquifers, and Bill 26 recognizes the fact that coal and gas are separate entities. It does not talk to the degree I would like to see about the importance of water and the effects that coal-bed methane could potentially have on it. Coal-bed methane is one of those gift horses. You don't want to look into its mouth because while it can provide benefits, it can also provide a very detrimental circumstance to our underground aquifers, whether they're in the Horseshoe basin formations, as is the case from central Alberta down, or as we get closer to Fort McMurray and find that the gas is that much farther below the surface and less likely to interfere in the water table.

This is an important recognition that coal and coal-bed methane are separate entities, and for that clarification I appreciate Bill 26 and its intentions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

See none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is certainly one of those bills that I have to speak against. It's sad when the government says one thing and then jumps and changes direction. I mean, just in 2009 the consensus was that they weren't going to do anything on this. There are court cases going through. The precedent of this government in the past has always been that when something is in the courts, we'll wait, that we'll see where it's coming from and where it goes. [interjection] Yes, it's going to come up the 1st of March of '11. This has been going on two years, lots of consultation going forward, and here we are stepping in to pass legislation to pre-empt a judgment.

But probably the most concerning thing when it comes to Bill 26 is that this is an extremely complex question and problem. There are two jurisdictions, to my understanding, in the world right now that have made legislation. B.C. was leading. I don't know that they've got it right. It concerns me. To bring a bill like this and announce it, you know, on the 27th of October and then put it in front of the Legislature saying, "Oh, this is the way we need to go" — I've had too many people contact me saying: look, this is too complex to debate and push through in short order with night sittings and saying that this is the direction to go.

It's interesting the take on the government saying that, you know, this is going to open up these areas and allow us to develop these resources. But it's an extremely complex issue, and to just say that it doesn't have any domino effect down the road is very inadequate. I would say that it's just naive to think that we should be able to put this out there and say, "Oh, we've solved the problem," when in fact we could be creating a much bigger problem as we look forward to how we're going to develop the coal in this province. There's lots of talk, you know, about clean coal, the liquification of coal and using that for gas. I mean, they've been doing it since the 1800s. If you go in and actually start fracking and drilling in these areas, we could be compromising in situ processing down the road.

I just think that this is the wrong time to be passing this legislation. We should be looking at it in the spring. At the very most it should be one of these bills that's presented in the spring; then you have a year to look at it and the consequences. Like I say, the biggest and most concerning thing is that we don't have the expertise here in this Legislature to say: "Oh, this is the way to go. We see the future, here. It's crystal clear. Let's jump on it."

It's interesting because, again, this really is a question and a case of ownership, the ownership of property. Who actually owns that property? In my own mind, when I look at that, you know, we know that if a person owns the surface rights, they own that top 12 inches or wherever that organic matter in the soil is, and they can do this. For someone to come in and say: "Well, you know what? All we really want out of the surface is the organic matter, less than 5 per cent. We're just going to take it out of the soil, and we'll leave you with sterile soil. No problem. But we have this great use for this organic matter." That's what we're looking at.

There's a very small amount of energy in comparison with the methane that's trapped inside the coal versus the total reservoir. I think we need to be very careful and let the experts, the EUB or someone else, have a much better presentation, go through and make an expert decision. But for us to ram this through here in the next two weeks with the consequences that we could be facing over the next hundred years as we continue to use carbon fuels could be extremely detrimental.

Like I say, on the first reading of this bill and in discussion on the second one, I have to speak against it. We're not in a position to pass this. We're making a knee-jerk reaction to a complex problem. I would hope that as we go forward and discuss this a little bit more — if there are some expertise reports that the government has, I would sure like to see them. Like I say, the biggest and most disappointing thing is how blindsided the industry was on this and the precedent that it's going to set when, in fact, there's been two years of preparation going into a court case to try and settle this. Everything up until the 27th of October showed that what we're going to do is that we'll let the experts and the courts settle this and then go forward because this is a property rights issue. Anyway, I just feel that this is the wrong direction to go. [interjection] A light just went on with my colleague here.

It is about property rights and the fact that we need to respect them and not just pass legislation to annex out or allow people to go in and trespass into another area. This is about zone development. It's interesting, too, when different developments go forward to the EUB. If you've got gas over top of an oil reservoir, they'll allow the oil to come out first. There's always a proper process to extract our energy, and I don't know that going in and allowing this is going to be the right order.

I would hope that we would let this bill die this fall, that they wouldn't pass it through, and do a lot more research and let the experts do it rather than rush a bill through for I'm not sure what purpose or intent.

I'll sit down, and perhaps there will be a few questions.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I, indeed, do have a couple of questions for the hon. member. The first one is to be prefaced with just a comment that I attended the freehold property rights group in Red Deer about nine or 10 months ago. There were Conservatives there, your leader was there, one of the Liberals was there, and I was there. I heard your Liberal – sorry; your leader, not “your Liberal.” I'll get used to the night sittings, Mr. Speaker. I heard your leader talk about the property rights of the freehold owners.

Now, it seems to me that what this bill does, simply, is to say that where there's natural gas occurring as a result of coal-bed methane, the freehold owners have the rights as if it was just regular, conventional natural gas. So it would seem to me to be to the disadvantage of the coal companies, the big, big companies, and in the interests of the small freehold people, who of course the NDP have always supported and I thought you supported. But by your comments it sounds to me like the Wildrose Alliance is taking the position of supporting the big coal interests over the small freehold owners' interests. That would be my first question.

The second one is with reference to your comments about waiting for the courts to make the decision. I always thought that it was a conservative position that the courts should not be making legislation, that the people's elected representatives should be making the legislation. So why, then, do you want to have the courts lead this decision?

Mr. Hinman: Those are two excellent questions that I'm happy to answer. The first one is that the freehold rights were very much proponents, as you are of the freehold owners and wanting to protect that. But the way you protect that is by following the precedent of rule of law, not arbitrarily, where you jump one area or the other area. It's just critical that we get it right on who actually owns it, not necessarily just going politically and saying: oh, there are a lot more votes here or there. It's always about the rule of law and ensuring that we're setting a proper precedent and not something that's a trap that we're going to go back to fall into several times going forward.

Again, he says that we set legislation. We do, and that's my whole point. There is legislation in place now, and it needs clarification by the courts. Then if there's a problem, that's where we as legislators would come back in and say: “You know what? We see that we've made a mistake here. The courts have misinterpreted it or it's wrong, and therefore we need to pass new legislation.” You don't pre-empt the courts when there's a case going forward. The legislation is in place. It needs to be clarified in the courts, and then if there is a problem, that's where we would step back in as legislators and say that this needs to be addressed.

Absolutely we're a huge supporter of the freehold mineral rights. Our leader has spoken to them many times. But this is about precedent. It's about rule of law. It's about property rights. You can't infringe on one area and say, “Oh, a big owner owns this; therefore, it's okay to go after it,” and then not go after a small owner later. It's about following the rule of law, not arbitrary political decisions that are just about votes.

I hope that answers your questions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, five minutes.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Under 29(2)(a) just to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you've mentioned property rights quite a number of times, but this is surely an issue where two parties are claiming the same property rights. Why are you saying that this is an issue? You're stating the obvious. This legislation moves to resolve that issue. What's your problem?

Mr. Hinman: The whole problem is the technicality of it. Is this just political? What's the expertise? Why did they come up with this decision? With this government I'm always very concerned when they pass a law that there's someone to benefit or something else rather than rule of law and making sure that we're following, you know, the actual law and the property rights issue. Here they're just coming in and saying: this is who it belongs to. It's a very technical question. It's about zone and infringement. Like I say, if you were to say to the surface owners, “Well, now we want to come in and mine the organic matter from the soil; you can have your 12 inches, but we're going to take that 3 per cent organic matter,” what does that do to what you own? I think there's some jeopardy here on what we could possibly do.

My point is that this is extremely technical. I don't think we've thought about what the repercussions are in the next 10 to 20 years.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Very good. Well, it's interesting that this would come up. In my previous life as a lawyer I actually worked on the decision that the EUB made on this case in 2007, and it was very interesting. It is very highly technical, over the heads of probably, maybe, everybody in this Assembly, frankly, which is why this obviously needs more time and thought.

Obviously, we can see that Bill 26 clarifies the ownership of the coal-bed methane. What it's saying is that it's the gas owners, the freehold owners, not the coal owners.

You know, I had a gentleman in my office just to talk a little bit about who this is affecting. This is not just an issue of big coal. I had a man in my office last week actually who was just beside himself over this legislation because he was part of the consultation that this government did in 2006, I believe he said. The outcome of that, the recommendation, was to leave things how they were and then see how it would play out in the courts before coming back to it with more consultation. So he was beside himself because this broadsided him.

He's just a landowner. He's got a very accessible coal deposit on his land, and he wants to make the most of it. Of course, coal-bed methane could obviously be a very lucrative product that he could gain a lot of money from. As a landowner he's furious because he feels like he's been – without any consultation the government comes in and arbitrarily decides: "You know what? You're out of luck. The gas belongs to the freehold owners, and that's just the way it's gonna be. Sorry. No compensation for you." I think he has a very legitimate claim.

I do understand completely the precedents in this area. There's no doubt that there have been court cases from the United States as well as from Canada, including our own EUB, although that was a very, very fact-specific case. I don't think you can say it's a precedent for the whole area. But there is case law out there that this bill does conform to. That doesn't necessarily make it right. It's certainly not well-spread case law.

I can remember hours and hours researching this area and finding almost nothing on it, with a few minor exceptions. So it's a very new area of law, and it's something that is extremely technical. I'm glad I'm not doing that anymore because it makes your head spin. In all honesty, I don't think I can say that I fully understood it when I was going over it. I mean, we had experts in on both sides of the issue that made very compelling cases for why the coal owners should have the rights to it, why the freehold owners should have the rights to it.

That's the whole point here, that as a Legislature and as lawmakers we have to understand that our decisions affect people a lot. Sometimes we can devalue their land and do things to them that will cause major heartache and major missed opportunities. We have to understand that when we come in and we decide or a bureaucrat decides or a set of individuals decide that they're going to make a change this substantive, there are consequences. I'm not convinced that the proper protocol, the proper consultation has been done to make sure that the coal owners, whose rights are going to be essentially extinguished under this legislation, are being adequately heard, and I think that that's wrong.

I think that there is no doubt that there does eventually need to be clarification around this issue, but we should do a proper consultation process and make sure that – you know, there could be ways that we could make sure that the coal owners are compensated in some way for essentially extinguishing their claimed right to the coal-bed methane and also arrive at more certainty. We can do that, but it takes consultation. It takes some hard work to find a way to make sure that all people's property rights are respected.

It goes back to what the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was saying. This isn't about, you know, clarifying who owns what. Yeah, that's what this legislation does, but that's not the argument he was making, and it's certainly not what I was making. We all understand the need for clarity, but we also have to understand that this is a new area of law, and this decision is going to have effects on people's existing property rights, so let's take some time. Let's talk it through, maybe not even in this Legislature. Maybe we go back and do a proper consultation first with all partners involved, all stakeholders involved, to make sure that everybody comes out at least with some compensation – yeah, I guess the best word is compensation – for the property rights that they hold. I think that's a very fair point that the hon. member made.

Again, we can do both. It's not mutually exclusive, what I'm talking about here. It's not like we're saying that we can either have clarity on this issue or we cannot have clarity on this issue; the coal guys win or the gas guys win. It's not about picking winners and losers. It's about trying to make sure we arrive at a fair decision, where everyone is compensated.

Just a few years ago or a decade ago coal-bed methane wasn't even on the radar screen to these guys, so to just come in and arbitrarily make a decision like this, I think, is certainly beyond the expertise of this House currently. Certainly, that's not to say that we shouldn't eventually debate and pass a law on it, but to ram this through in a week or a week and a half or whatever we're going to do without having the proper technical explanations of what this matter is about is really doing a disservice to this House, hon. members.

You know what? This is a perfect place if you want to keep this purely in the Legislature, if you don't want to go back and do a proper consultation with all the stakeholders before bringing it forward, to at least punt this out – punt is the wrong word – send this to a committee of the House, of the Legislature, and allow that policy committee to sit down and invite stakeholders in to hear their different arguments and to get some technical analysis from some experts and scientists on this subject. You're going to find, as you peel back the layers of the onion, that there is a ton to learn about this subject. That would be a much better process. You know, perhaps we should bring in an amendment in Committee of the Whole to that effect. That would be a much better process than simply just ramming this through: oh, we've got to have clarity; we've got to have clarity. This isn't the way to do it.

Although I applaud that we want to try to bring clarity to this issue – that's the final goal – you want to make sure you do it in the right way. You don't just want to jump to a conclusion and then look stupid and affect people's property rights down the road. You know, some of the issues that haven't been resolved here are things around deep coal deposits and the gasification of coal. As one coal owner said, if you go and frac the whole thing up down there, it brings some unsettled new legal issues into play that maybe you haven't accounted for. Maybe there will be a lot of legal disputes that come into play because we jump ahead without thinking.

That's basically all I had to say on that. I just hope that as we go into Committee of the Whole that we'll think about it. You know, I'm not going to support the bill at this time because I don't think the proper consultation process has been done, but in Committee of the Whole I sure would like to see a little bit more sober second thought and move this over to an SPC, at the very least, if not just delaying the bill until a proper consultation is done.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood-Northlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've listened to two Wildrose speakers on this bill so far, and I still am really struggling to find out why the position is as it is. It surprises me. Maybe we could take the fellow that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere referred to, that's very upset. If this person has some land and on the land is some coal and on the land is some natural gas and on the land is some coal-bed methane, how does this change what his rights are with respect to those things? Does he have freehold mineral rights? I assume not. That means that he doesn't control the mineral rights, so a coal company could come and dig up his coal, and a natural gas company could come and drill for gas. If this bill was passed, then the gas company could come and take the gas because he doesn't own the mineral rights. Are you proposing something that would actually give mineral rights to the people who own the surface land? Is that what you're proposing? I don't understand how this fellow is negatively affected by the bill. I don't think you made that clear enough.

Mr. Anderson: Fair enough. You can own coal rights without owning the gas rights. That was the case with this fellow. He doesn't own the gas rights, but he owns the coal rights to this certain parcel of land. If he wants to develop the coal, he's going to get an awful lot of money for that coal. If some company who already owns the natural gas that he doesn't own wants to drill for it, he's not going to get compensated even a fraction of what he would get compensated if he actually owned the gas rights. You know, that's the difference. You do have separate rights to these commodities. It does make a huge difference with regard to the amount of compensation that the landowner will receive depending on what rights he holds.

Again, this is about property rights. This isn't about picking winners or losers or favouring the little guy over the big guy or the big guy over the little guy. It's about doing the right thing, making sure that people's property rights and their expected property rights are compensated and respected. I don't think that this House has done the adequate due diligence necessary to say that we actually have made a just and well-thought-out decision.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Two quick questions. One, how does this affect in situ development of coal in the future? We have in situ development of bitumen. Well, maybe I'll just let you do that because there are lots of people that want to ask some questions here. Does this affect the in situ development? If, in fact, you own the coal, who has precedence to go in? If someone wants to take out the coal-bed methane yet you want to mine your coal, does that mean you don't have access to your coal? Is that clarified?

Mr. Anderson: It's not clear. That's one of the points where we need to do more consultation because that issue in itself could raise a whole whack-load of legal issues that this legislation clearly does not address. The problem is that when you pass legislation that isn't well thought out on every issue – for example, this in situ development of coal – you have a situation develop where in order to solve one legal problem or clarify one legal area, you end up opening up Pandora's box in another area.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much. I'm still wondering who it is that the member is hoping to consult. I'm wondering if he's been talking to, for example, EnCana or if that's who he thinks we should be consulting. There we have a situation where CP Rail had the coal rights on either side of the tracks. That's what they got to be able to develop the coal and use it on the trains. That company, CP Rail, eventually goes and becomes PanCanadian. It merges with Alberta Energy, becomes EnCana. Now EnCana has all the coal rights on either side of the tracks. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we still have the opportunity to talk about it later.

On the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr Speaker. You learn a great deal on this side of the House. Sometimes it's good and sometimes it's bad, but I tell you, you sure . . . [interjections] Do you guys want to take that argument outside?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, anyhow, I'm pleased to stand up and debate Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. There's no question here that when you become a member of the opposition, you go through a steep learning curve. That steep learning curve takes you from, you know, having two or three things that you're interested in, and all of a sudden you're learning about legislation.

I always have to say how when I was on the side of the government, I admired the opposition and wondered how the heck they were able to stand up and debate every piece of legislation and, for that matter, some of them for 20 minutes at a time with a bill in their hand. Well, guess what? We've got the Wildrose caucus. We've got a limited budget. Like I said to the leader, it's like going from the castle to the outhouse and hoping you have some toilet paper with you because that's exactly what we have. We have two researchers. We've got I forget how many ministries over on the government side, I think 23, that we have to try and keep up on. So it's been an interesting challenge.

I find it interesting, and I'm looking forward to the Member for West Yellowhead standing up and debating this piece of legislation because it's the coal companies in his area that, in their words, feel that they are getting screwed. They feel that there's no recollection of their claim to the byproduct of their coal. Again, it emphasizes, I think, what my two colleagues said, the lack of the industry consultation. In fact, a lot of them were totally blindsided by the announcement on October 27.

This harkens me back to the times when I was on the government side and the royalty framework. I don't have to remind anybody in this Legislature about the royalty framework. I see the former Minister of Energy watching and listening to what I have to say. At that period of time, when we brought the royalty framework forward, we heard a lot of the oil and gas companies talking about their lack of consultation. We saw what the lack of consultation did on the royalty framework. I think we've got – what? – seven changes we've gone through so far. I've lost track of exactly how many changes.

You know, the government is rushing the legislation on this bill. I think the in situ gasification from coal is not clarified, and I think that when my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere was questioned, my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore asked him that. The natural gas may belong to a gas tenure; however, the value-added from the coal gasification is not recognized. Without clarification of this value-added process and rushing this bill through legislation, we just feel that Albertans will be losing a great opportunity, similar to the oil sands, and we will be caught in litigation seeking assets which we know must be defined.

The Premier has said that the clean coal has a big role in Alberta's energy future. He's made that one of his priorities. I'm just very, very concerned about what we're hearing from Albertans and what we're hearing from those in the coal bed about how they feel that there has been no consultation. They feel blindsided. They feel the lack of industry consultation and yet another case of ramming through legislation, and they feel that two weeks is not enough for legislators, us as MLAs, to be able to make a fair analysis of what's happening.

This is second reading. I'm going to be listening to what some of the colleagues from the government have to say on this particular piece of legislation. I'll be particularly interested in those colleagues that have some of the coal companies within their constituencies because I think that'll be interesting to hear what they have to say. I can't imagine the coal companies coming to us and explaining their displeasure, then going to the government member if the company is in there and saying how much they like the legislation. I always find it fascinating when there are things going on that the MLA supposedly representing the constituents in their riding is not speaking up. That sends a very, very bad message, to me. But I guess it's not surprising, when we haven't heard any of the government MLAs talk about the crisis that we're in in health care.

With those remarks, I'm going to sit down. I look forward to again speaking in committee. I imagine that we'll be continuing to meet with the coal companies that have expressed their displeasure in this piece of legislation as they take the time to educate us through the process. There's nothing like going back to school and getting energy 101. Now we're going into coal 101 and all of those others.

Mr. Speaker, I will sit down after those remarks, and I look forward to hearing what the government has to say during the committee process.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify for the benefit of members. Some of the members in the House are under the impression that this bill affects in some way all freehold lands. It does not. There are somewhere around – the estimates are around 30,000 freehold titles in the province of Alberta, and the only ones that are affected by this bill are the ones in which coal is designated separately; in other words, there's a split title of coal. If your great-grandfather got a piece of land and homesteaded it, this is not going to affect that piece of land because he got the whole title. If he bought the land from the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre said, for a dollar an acre probably, as my grandfather did, you might have an issue with the split title.

My information is that there are about 4,200 freehold owners that have titles in the Horseshoe Canyon zone of Alberta, and of those 4,200 approximately 3,100 have a split title. That's what we're talking about here: about 3,100 titles that are going to be affected by the bill.

I hope that clarifies a little bit.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Just to clarify as well, you know, there's this love affair that certain people have that aren't in our party. They're married to the idea that somehow there are big companies that are behind the motives of the Wildrose at every turn. It's very sweet, but it's very untrue. Honestly, the reason we're against this is because we feel that it improperly infringes upon people's property rights.

In fact, I can only speak for myself, but I've never had EnCana or any of the larger coal companies come to me on this piece of legislation. It has been smaller owners with split titles, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill had talked about, that have come. The owner from my area is from a little place called Keoma, and he's very concerned about it. I've had several letters, and our energy critic I know has been receiving some letters on it as well. We have talked to a few people.

Certainly, in my case when I speak to it, it honestly is because I feel that, you know, we're rushing through the process. Maybe it's because I worked a little bit on the case and I saw first-hand how incredibly difficult and technical it was that I feel we need to do more work on this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

8:20

Bill 24

Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 3: Mr. Liepert]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This bill was created to set up a legislative framework to support an industry that doesn't yet exist but is in its early development in Alberta, generally paralleling the existing framework for exploration, extraction, and shipment of minerals. The bill covers clarification of ownership of pore space, and this means a fundamental change to fee simple title. The bill ascribes long-term liability for injected carbon dioxide to the government – in other words, the public – once the operator provides data showing that the stored CO₂ is contained. Thirdly, it establishes a fund financed by CCS operators for ongoing monitoring costs and remediation, and fourthly, it does not change ownership of mine and mineral resources.

To be clear, the government is not only funding here carbon capture and storage projects in Alberta, up to $2 billion as announced; they're also assuming long-term liability for all CCS projects in Alberta. The government of Alberta has stated that they are accepting the long-term liability because of the nature of captured carbon, in effect forever. The proposed legislation ensures that carbon capture and storage will not change mineral ownership or mineral production, and the carbon capture and storage operator will be responsible for mitigation work during operation and up until a closure certificate, like the reclamation certificates in surface disturbances. The transfer of long-term liability remains undefined. That is a concern for us.

Carbon capture and storage operators will also pay into a postclosure stewardship fund, which will be managed by the Alberta government. In theory the fund will cover ongoing monitoring and remedial work that may be required in the future, but as we have seen with other security funds associated with upstream oil and gas, it may well not cover the full liability, another concern for us.

As a starting point the bill takes away landowner rights to or ownership of pore space. That surely needs to be discussed and proceeded with carefully. This is a retroactive decision vesting those rights in the Crown. In addition, it moves more issues regarding private land up to the level of the provincial government, leaving less space for municipalities to have decision-making powers.

With respect to the first issue, fee simple title, in the amendments this bill changes the definition of fee simple title and changes a fundamental principle of what title to land means in Alberta. Others have raised concerns in other opposition parties. It is retroactive. It is without compensation. Surely, this needs to be discussed and carefully proceeded with. The change is that the government plans to define pore space and vest all rights in the Crown except that which is owned by the government of Canada. For example, even if one received one's land a hundred years ago, the government is now taking it away and saying that one never owned it, and the landowner will not receive compensation.

With respect to the Surface Rights Act, that's also being amended in this, there is a permit that grants the right-of-entry orders either for drilling or pipelines or collateral installations.

The second key issue, the assumption of liability by the Crown, I think also raises concerns that we should have a vigorous debate about. It includes, in addition to an assumption of liability, an indemnity of the company; that is, it releases them of all liability forever. Essentially, at this time the lessee washes its hands of all future issues and downstream an undefined risk is therefore assumed by us the public. The assumption of liability and indemnity is triggered by the issuance of a closure certificate similar to the reclamation certificate of upstream oil and gas. The preconditions to issuing a closure certificate are set in section 120. They, too, need to be carefully examined, and clearly the regulations relating to these need to be examined. We'll be suggesting some amendments that address questions around proper abandonment, proper reclamation, captured CO₂, and the period of time established by regulation. The devil is in the details as always, Mr. Speaker.

The third key issue is that it creates a postclosure stewardship fund, and we've seen something similar in the upstream orphaned well fund. The fund is intended to permit monitoring behaviour of captured carbon, fulfilling obligations that the private sector has not or that the Crown has assumed or paying costs in relation to the orphaned facilities. Of key interest is that contributors to the fund are only those who participate in carbon capture and not those who create the carbon in the first place, again, ultimately falling to the public purse.

Mr. Speaker, we are cautiously approaching this particular legislation. We feel that it's an important decision to make. It's one we have to move forward on. This is an opportunity for Alberta to lead in North America, perhaps elsewhere, in this important new technology, but we feel there are a number of amendments that would protect the public interest long term, prior to the approval of regulations.

We're supportive of carbon capture and storage as at least one component of a rational approach to climate change, but a small component, certainly not the silver bullet that this government seems to see it as. In addition, the bill is in line for the most part with the closest existing legislation, which is in Australia, and follows some of the similar principles identified here. We need to have this debate, especially regarding the postclosure security fund, and the timeline for government accepting liability needs to be part of this debate. I look forward to it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't think we have 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to speak on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope to use my time tonight to provide a background of the legislation that this government has passed concerning property rights. It really has been one of the black eyes of this government. This is just the latest in a long list of pieces of legislation that show a total disrespect for the principle of property rights, a belief that the minister knows best and that Albertans should trust the good nature and good will of their government to look after them, a desire to pursue megaprojects that will earn them short-term PR points, without any thought as to the long-term welfare of this province, and a willingness to cast aside long-standing traditional principles to make the implementation of these megaprojects easier for them to conduct.

The protection of property rights is one, if not the most, fundamental role of government. Disturbingly, property rights have been severely eroded in this province since December 2, 2006. I'm going to review some of the most egregious examples in the last four years to demonstrate this.

We had, of course, Bill 19, which turned into the Land Assembly Project Area Act. In this one the government granted itself authority to freeze large tracts of private land for public purposes without having to compensate landowners for relocation costs, losses incurred due to business interruption as well as other related damages. We were told to trust the minister, that the government knows best. We were told this bill wasn't about confiscating anything; it was only about putting restrictions on your land, encumbrances that might almost make it useless and for an indefinite period of time, but there's no need for compensation.

Oliver Wendell Holmes in the U.S. Supreme Court handed down a famous ruling 90 years ago, which made clear that overregulation was a form of government confiscation; that is, if the government implements restrictions that diminish the value of your land, then you deserve compensation. But this government knows that despite the Alberta Bill of Rights citizens of Alberta these days don't really have any meaningful property rights. That's why in bills like the land assembly act they only have to pay lip service to being fair and not worry about actually being held accountable to the principles that they talk about, like fully compensating landowners for government interference.

Who knows what megaproject this government might decide to approve in the province next? Whatever it is, they know best, and that's what's important, that there are no independent boards or individual rights that might get in the way. Over and over they've been passing laws that expand the prerogative of ministers. In fact, if you look at the Order Paper right now, there are many more of them than just the one we're debating right now.

Now, the most extreme example of this and one where I personally got burned, I feel, was Bill 36, the land-use framework. This was a bill that at the time was brought forward, and we were told in the caucus that there would be proper property rights protections involved, that there was nothing to fear from this piece of legislation, that everybody's local government autonomy would be respected. We were told this. I was told this, and naively I believed it, and I went ahead. That was my fault and something that I will use the next 16 months to try to undo.

Nonetheless, I actually spoke in favour of this bill. The problem was that it was the wrong thing to do at the time. It was wrong. It showed a naïveté of trust that I had that the bureaucracies and the government of the day would have their act together and would at the end of the day protect the property rights of its citizens. That's a lesson that I learned the hard way, that it's not, in fact, always the case.

This act, Bill 36, authorizes cabinet to implement regional plans for each area of the province. This means that central planners at the Legislature rather than locally elected and accountable municipal councils will specify what types of activities are going to be permitted or prohibited on private land. I saw this first-hand as we went from the legislation to implementation, seeing the discussions that were had between MLAs and ministers regarding MDs around my area, including the MD of Rocky View, seeing the discussions that went around about how we may have to impose upon these local governments these regional plans that were being developed and that centres such as Calgary and others were going to be given essential veto power over where these compact urban nodes, as they're called, would go.

It was very disturbing, and at first I thought: well, surely the minister in charge wouldn't ever think about doing something like that. In fact, that wasn't the case. We don't know where that is right now. We will see what happens going forward. If the discussions that I had with the ministers involved when I was over on that side are any indication, I'm not hopeful. We'll be looking to see what they bring forward in that regard.

Obviously, the most infamous of all is Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, which mandates the construction of billions of dollars' worth of massive transmission lines criss-crossing private lands up and down Alberta. This bill's main objective is to bypass the requirement of an objective Alberta Utilities Commission needs-based assessment, which probably would have shown that the degree and the amount of build that was being contemplated was not, in fact, needed and that much of it could have been locally generated and that much of it could have been avoided and ratepayers wouldn't be on the hook.

It is also resulting in the government offering billions of dollars in untendered, uncompetitive transmission line building contracts to large companies, some of which have obvious ties to the sitting government. The cost of this boondoggle will be passed on to residential, farm, and industrial ratepayers for years. It is an absolute black eye on this government.

Then there's the other multibillion-dollar megaproject that this government decided was a good idea, which is its motivation for this latest piece of legislation, carbon capture and storage. Environmentalists, of course, have been attacking Alberta for the oil sands in light of the theory that environmentalists have that carbon emissions are the largest contributor to global warming. This government decided it would be cute and a good PR stunt if we stick this carbon dioxide into the ground, pump it right into the ground.

Mr. Mason: Stick it where the sun don't shine.

Mr. Anderson: Stick it where the sun don't shine; that's right.

When we were raking in record levels of royalties, they decided we could afford to devote the staggering amount of $2 billion to establishing the infrastructure to capture, transport, and store this CO₂ underground in what are called pore spaces or – what are they called? – subterranean aquifers or whatever they are. Alberta has a geological makeup that makes it especially suited for this, they said.

Then they realized that while the Crown owns a lot of the resources under the ground in this province, these spaces, meaning the pore spaces, were never considered resources. In fact, pore spaces themselves hadn't really been considered at all. The gases in them had, but that's a resource, not a space.

Now, they could have said, "Well, let's focus on the pore spaces under the Crown land," but that's a limitation that this experiment probably can't handle. Then they could have said – well, they could have said a lot of things. What they did say was: what we'll do is that instead of assessing what property rights people have to this space under the ground, we're just going to come in and say that we own it.

So here we are today debating Bill 24 for a grand total of one or two or three days before the government declares that all pore space anywhere in the province belongs to the Crown and that ministers can inject whatever they want whenever they want and that there's nothing anyone can do about it. With this bill the government is pretending that landowners never had a claim to pore spaces under their land.

We believe that if the government has not specified otherwise, people do own that space. We've heard from them. This is just a difference in philosophy between us. This is what one of the ministry's bureaucrats, which I will not name, said to our researcher twice in the briefing, "It's just a difference in philosophy between us," as if he meant that there is no right or wrong answer.

Well, it certainly is a different philosophy. We recognize that individual rights are not in place at the pleasure of government. If anything, they are actually there to make the government uncomfortable. When there is uncertainty between individual rights and government prerogative, we're inclined to respect the individual. These folks on the other side, we feel, have been in power for far too long and have forgotten that important fact.

Only recognizing rights when it's convenient for the government is not what rights are about. There's a Latin legal phrase that can be translated as follows: whoever owns the land owns it all the way to the heavens and to the centre of the Earth. It is a legal maxim in legal systems based on English common law that still stands today. As it does with all major projects that benefit the public interest, the government ultimately can confiscate or appropriate whatever land it needs to, but citizens have the right to the demonstration that it is necessary and the right to fair compensation.

Besides the dubious premise that carbon capture is in the public interest, which we won't talk about today, this bill ignores any claim by landowners to own their land. That is the core problem with this bill. Once again, the government views individual rights as a speed bump that they can steamroll with legislation. Their idea of accountability is putting up with complaints from the opposition for a couple of evenings and maybe a negative story or two in the papers the next day.

I've only provided the background of eroding rights and the disrespect for citizens that this government seems to show with virtually every bill they bring forward concerning property rights these days. I will leave the remainder of the time to my colleagues to raise specific concerns, and we will try to put forth some amendments in Committee of the Whole that, hopefully, will make this bill, if we cannot defeat it, at least more palatable and respectful of individuals' property rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. Just a quick question for the member regarding the Land Stewardship Act. The member makes the argument that his naiveté caused him to vote for that bill. That is probably a compelling argument, but I want to sort of carry on to the logical outcome of that. The member was so naive in his understanding that he was actually duped into speaking for the bill, not just voting for it. Carried to its logical conclusion, that would mean that either the member didn't read the bill or didn't understand it. He is a lawyer, is he not?

Mr. Anderson: Wow, we have a real sharp one there in the Solicitor General's office. Yes, I am legally trained, and, yes, I did look over the bill, Bill 36, but as anybody with a modicum of legal training will tell you, simply reading a bill is not enough in and of itself. You have to research its effects, what it will do in practice. Usually you see that in the legal realm, in the courts.

The other thing, too, is that a lot of Bill 36 left a lot of discretion to the ministers, and you should know that if you had read the bill or if you understood it. It leaves a lot of leeway to the minister in charge to make decisions. The problem with that is that you get people like yourself who don't understand jack squat about property rights and who don't have any respect for property rights, clearly. People like that, ministers like that, will use this legislation to trample on the property rights of individuals. That's why it was naive of me to always think that there were going to be people in government and in the ministries that were going to be respectful of individual property rights.

Absolutely, I should not have spoken to that bill because it wasn't the right thing to do. I know that it's difficult for certain people that haven't spoken against the government their entire careers because they don't know what it's like to be able to actually say what they're thinking or what their constituents want them to say. They just kind of chirp the party line. I know that's difficult for some members to understand.

Mrs. Forsyth: He was the whip, Rob.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's right. He was the whip. You've got to give him that.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Wildrose Alliance does understand property rights. We do understand that government is beholden to the property rights of individuals and that they must respect them. Even when they do have to take them, expropriate them for whatever reason, there needs to be fair compensation, and there needs to be proper consultation. Bill 36 does not do that. Bill 50 certainly does not do that. Bill 24 certainly does not do that. It's been a pattern. Bill 19 does not do that.

It's a pattern with this government to continue to pass legislation over and over and over again that shows absolutely no respect for individual property rights. Some of them think it's almost like some kind of game. I think some of them don't. I think some of them genuinely probably do at least understand the importance of protecting property rights. The fact of the matter is that actions speak louder than words, and this government has just failed repeatedly on this file. I don't understand for the life of me why a government who claims to be conservative or claims to believe in the concept that the rights of individuals need to be respected continues bill after bill to pass legislation that does the opposite.

This issue is going to cream them in the rural constituencies over the next year and a half – and it should – because people are tired of it. They're tired of a party who's conservative in name only acting like a bunch of, you know, big-government progressives, running around taking people's property rights without fair compensation. That's not fair. All for the public good. It's always for the public good, whatever the heck that's supposed to mean. They don't seem to understand the concept that the rights of individuals need to be respected and properly compensated.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry; I wanted to speak to the act itself, not under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: This conversation is getting interesting. In the vein of the question asked by the Solicitor General, I would ask whether this naïveté was selective to this bill, or was it across all bills?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Where do I start on this bill? I listened carefully to what the minister said as he introduced the bill, and I disagree with him on a couple of things, but I'll come back to that.

To begin with, what we have here is the concept of carbon capture and storage that's brought forward in the bill. I'm responsible for the environment policy put forward by the Official Opposition, and we do have it in our environmental policy under what we call Powering Long-term Growth. We talk about an energy sector, that Alberta needs an energy sector that includes petroleum and renewable energy, and it names some of those sources. That sector talks about the need to diversify Alberta's investment in carbon solutions by supporting renewable energy, energy efficiency technology, and conservation and that we would look to grow our dependence on solar wind and geothermal by a number of different incentives that could be taken, including using that technology fund to create clean energy jobs. We certainly recognize this. It's in our own policy.

I'm going to differ a little bit with some of my colleagues. I'm not quite ready to get on this horse and ride it into the sunset because I think there are some issues around it. Let me talk first about one tool in the tool box. I'm just going to sort of go off on a small tangent here, sir, but it does relate, so bear with me. My father was a welder, so he never had the zen of wood, and he didn't teach me how to use those kinds of tools. Welding I know. How to work with metal I know. With all of that stuff, acetylene torches, yeah, I'm good, but he failed me as a father because he never taught me how to use the rest of the tools in the tool box.

I'm reminded constantly when I look at this concept of carbon capture and storage that it's one tool in a tool box. I can't think of anybody that would have one tool in their tool box, that you'd open it up, and there would be a wrench, and that's it. That's their whole tool box. I can't imagine that because I'm sure that if any of you have ever tried to take the only tool you had – let's call it a wrench – and hammer a nail into a wall: not very effective, not the tool that you needed to do that. If anybody else was around that really did use tools, you were in big trouble for using a wrench to try and whack a nail into a wall. You're supposed to use – well, it's true, isn't it? – the proper tools.

I can't imagine having just one tool in the tool box, and persistently I see that as the approach from this government: no hammer in your tool box, no screwdriver in your tool box, no lever, no pliers or wire strippers or tinsnips, just a wrench. I don't think that's the way to have a good tool box to be able to deal with all the complexities of life and/or of our province.

My issue here is that carbon capture and storage is about getting rid of greenhouse gas after it's been produced. What I see is this government – it hasn't actually said this; let me be fair about it. But I'm concerned from what we're seeing here that carbon capture and storage must not be used as an excuse to continue business as usual, to continue, you know, using and encouraging more and more and more use of petroleum-based products, more cars on the road, more transport. You know, you can see the backlash against this, where people are trying to grow local and eat local food and buy locally produced items. Part of that is to cut down on transit. Why?

Because we've got all these honkin' trucks out there on the highway driving back and forth, burning petroleum products, which does what? Yes, indeed. It puts greenhouse gases into the air, and then we've got to deal with them.

The other thing is that a lot of people seem to assume wrongly that carbon capture and storage is somehow going to fix the oil sands. No. Wrong. It has very little to do with the oil sands. If we are really going to direct carbon capture and storage in this province, then it probably has to be directed towards coal-fired electricity plants because that's where most of it comes from in this province, not the oil sands. That's why there are no projects taking place up in the oil sands and why nobody bid on it. It really just doesn't affect them very much. I'm just trying to put in the context of what I'm saying by placing it around that.

We do have the ownership of the pore spaces, which the members of the Wildrose are clearly not happy about because of the property rights issues involved in that. I see it as creating certainty, and perhaps that ownership would flow to all Albertans if there's a way to make it pay for all Albertans. That to me goes hand in glove with this issue of long-term liability, and that's where I start to have a bigger problem with what's going on here.

Usually when you have an entrepreneurial spirit, the entrepreneur is putting risk out there, but they gain the benefit from the risk. If it goes right, they make a ton of money. If it goes wrong, they lose their money. But that's the deal. They take the risk. They get the benefit from it or occasionally the downside of it. I'm not seeing that in play with what's being proposed here. In assuming the long-term liability, what I see is that someone else gets the payoff from this. The taxpayers and the citizens of Alberta assume the short-term risk – they're paying out the $2 billion to help industry develop this technology – and they're assuming the long-term risk here. Where exactly is the super payoff for the citizens of Alberta here?

Let me go back. Maybe that ownership of the pore space is the payoff. Nobody has talked about it in that way, so I've got to assume that that's not really what's happening here, but I'm happy to have someone explain that or put it on the record. I have concerns about the acceptance of that long-term liability because it's a long-term risk and because the government has now made it Albertans' long-term risk. Where is our payoff? What are we going to get for this?

Is our payoff that we can continue to drive cars and use electricity from coal-fired electricity-generating plants and pollute as much as we want? Is that the payoff that we're getting from carbon capture and storage? That doesn't seem like a very good idea in this day and age. I can't believe that's what you want us to accept. I'm getting that sort of slightly raised eyebrow from the previous Minister of Energy and current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, so I know he's going to have something to say to me, which is great. That's one of the issues for me. What's the payoff there? Is it to be able to continue to pollute as usual, or are we somehow gaining a positive payoff for Albertans through this?

The other thing is that mediation fund that's being created, which is being sold to us like the orphan well fund. Well, that one hasn't quite worked out the way it was supposed to either. I am sorry that I did not come with the stats that I was looking for, but I will find them and either table them or bring them up in a later debate. I know that there is a really nice comparison between the amount that is collected from those companies that pay into the orphan well fund sort of per acre of reclamation and the amount that Syncrude spent on its one acre of officially reclaimed, re-remediated ground, and they are vastly different amounts of money. I think: "Well, okay.

This is what the government did before. What are they likely to do?" Pretty much the same thing.

There's a second concern that I have around this idea, that if we're going to collect money from the operators that is such a minor amount in comparison to how much it would cost us to actually clean this up if something went wrong, again I see the government putting Albertans in a place of great risk without the commensurate payoff. But I'll allow the government to get up and correct me on that one.

How many of you remember the Wimpy character in the Popeye cartoons? He always wanted to pay you Tuesday for a hamburger today. That's a bit of what I'm seeing here.

Mr. Snelgrove: Two hamburgers on Tuesday.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, he would pay two hamburgers on Tuesday for a hamburger today. See, I knew someone on that side would get it right. There you go. Thank you very much, President of the Treasury Board, for that correction.

Thank you for that because here's what we get. We've got the minister telling us with great pride that by 2015 5 million megatonnes would be sequestered yearly, but when I looked it up, in the year 2005 we produced 240 megatonnes of the very thing we're trying to stuff underground.

An Hon. Member: Two hundred and forty million?

Ms Blakeman: Two hundred and forty megatonnes compared to five megatonnes yearly that we'd be able to stuff underground by 2015.

I'm thinking: how many years is it going to take us just to deal with what we produced in 2005 at the rate of five megatonnes a year when we're trying to deal with 240 megatonnes from 2005? Are you starting to get a sense of how this is not adding up?

A connected issue to that. I've seen it in health care, and I'm seeing it around energy development and around carbon capture and storage. It's two things: the horizon that we get from the government on how far out they promise something will happen by. Here we have 2015. That's not a far horizon when we're sitting almost at the end of 2010, but when you look at a number of the other targets that the government is trying to hit here that are around environmental targets, protection targets, that kind of thing, we're looking at horizons of 2030 and 2050. Well, given how fast things are going here, I'm sure these government members three years ago had no idea that they would be facing a four-member Wildrose opposition party a short time later.

You see how fast the world moves today, yet the government wants me to believe that they're in control of something that's going to happen on a 30-year horizon out or a 50-year horizon out. I'm having trouble believing that. We heard this same thing happen around health care, so it's not only in this particular field that that happens. The minister of health is promising us that, you know, there are going to be enough long-term care beds and all kinds of stuff. What the heck was it where they had three different rates, and by the time you actually added it up, it was 30 years? It was a 30-year horizon to get all of this stuff done.

Then the part that goes hand in hand with that is how much the government puts for later, not right now, not the target of what we're going to do in 2011, 2012, 2013. We get: well, that's all going to move really slowly, but then it's going to pick up speed, and it's going to move a lot faster the closer we get to 2030 or 2015. And you think: I'm not believing you.

I also really have a concern. I know this is the enabling bill for carbon capture and storage. It's got some detail in it, but it also leaves a lot to regulation. In my definition this creates another shell bill, in which a very loose definition or a very loose outline is in the bill of what's supposed to happen and everything else is put onto the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make decisions during those meetings. Of course, having just come off that FOIP review committee, I can tell you that none of us get to look at that stuff possibly ever but certainly not before 10 or 15 years from now, so trying to find out how decisions were made or what was going on when that all happened is a long, long, long way away from us. I'm not keen on stuff being made by regulation or ministerial order, and there's a lot of that in this bill.

As I listened to the minister, he referred to an International Energy Agency review of 16 countries and how glowingly they spoke of ours. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll get to come back to this in Committee of the Whole, but there's a story behind that one. Oh, maybe somebody will ask me what it is.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a).

Mr. Snelgrove: Could she elaborate on that story?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much. I did actually ask the minister for a copy of that International Energy Agency review, and it really didn't do what the minister had led me to believe it was going to do. I got a copy of it, and I actually read it. In fact, all it does is very briefly refer to the fact that we have a framework, and that's all it says. It doesn't comment on whether it's an effective framework, whether it's a complete framework, about the timelines around the framework, nothing. It just says that there's a framework. Not quite what the minister had led me to believe was a complete blue-ribbon, gold star with a stamp in the middle of it blessing from the IEA. Not quite. That was just a bit of a slip.

You know, I can believe, as I heard the minister bring all of this forward, that he was in communications in his pre-elected life because he sold it very well. I'm used to the more sort of pugilistic form that he tends to take with me. [interjection] Yeah. Exactly. So I was a little surprised due to his tone. But then when I went back and looked, I thought: oh, he was just smoothing that one through. At the very end then he talked about how we should all be overjoyed because we could use CCS as enhanced or deep-well oil recovery and wasn't that the bee's knees. Again, not quite what I had expected to get out of this bill.

Just to put it all in context, Mr. Speaker, my caucus is in favour of this. We recognize carbon capture and storage is one tool in a very large tool box. There are a number of hesitations around it. I'm very cautious about the risk and the long-term risk and liability the government is asking Albertans to assume on behalf of this decision especially when it's unclear to me where the payoff from that risk actually comes. We can certainly see the downside. Where's the upside for Albertans in that? Also, where is the rest of the encouragement around conservation, energy efficiency, and alternative forms of energy?

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this is going to be a really interesting discussion. I can see the engagement on the faces of my colleagues opposite, so I'm really looking forward to the rest of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you stood up before. Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: Under 29(2)(a)? No. She was able to elaborate on the question I had.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Perfect, Mr. Speaker. You got it perfectly. Thank you very much.

Ms Blakeman: It's the time.

Mr. Mason: No. I wrote him a note.

Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill we've been waiting for because this gives us a chance to debate the stupidest idea that this government has had in a long time. I'm telling you that there's a big, long list right there, and for this to top it out I think is a real accomplishment on the part of the government.

This carbon capture and storage is going to be, in my view, one of the biggest boondoggles ever facing the Alberta taxpayer, $2 billion of taxpayers' money going into the ground to subsidize this government's friends who are the big producers of CO₂ so that they can bury their carbon instead of having to do something serious about reducing the actual emissions that are there. I want to just lay out that our objections to this legislation and to this approach go very deep and to the core. This is a piece of legislation and a program that is misguided and which I think is going to dog this government for whatever time it actually has left, Mr. Speaker, as a government.

First of all, the cost of this program. Because it is so uneconomic, the government, in order to get it moving, is forced to put in place $2 billion in subsidies. The previous Auditor General warned about the high cost and the lack of clear objectives and the lack of clearly defined measurements of success, of results, and I certainly agree with the Auditor General.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it was really interesting. When this was first announced, the government talked about how this was a solution to the growth in emissions from our oil sands, which are the source of the greatest increase in CO₂ emissions in the country. But they didn't talk about the fact that the concentration of emissions that are released as a result of oil sands operations was insufficient for this technology to be effective.

We released, in fact, or someone released a briefing document to the government that showed that while it might be possible to gather and collect and concentrate and bury CO₂ emissions from coal-fired generation, it would be very difficult and certainly uneconomic to even try to do that in terms of the oil sands. Now, the government was embarrassed by that, Mr. Speaker, and well they might have been because they were touting this as a plan that was going to help us deal with the increase in emissions as a result of oil sands development going forward into the future, and their own briefing document put the lie to that.

Now, then, that leaves the question of whether or not it's going to be useful in a couple of other areas. One is the carbon capture and storage with respect to conventional oil recovery. The government again has played a game with people, confusing people. It's a kind of bait and switch. There's a difference between long-term storage of CO₂, for which geological formations in Alberta are well-suited, perhaps, and its use to replace water as a way of forcing out the last 10 or 20 per cent of oil in depleted fields, which is not the same as long-term storage. There might be, in fact, a use for CO₂ to replace water, whether it's fresh water or brackish water, for the recovery of depleted oil fields, but that is not the same thing as a long-term strategy.

Mr. Speaker, the risks of this are unknown, but most people who have some knowledge in this area have identified potentially very serious risks of either long-term seepage or a catastrophic release. The risk is so great that these massive international oil and gas consortia, private corporations, are unwilling to undertake the liability. So the government, then, has generously – generously – on behalf of the people of Alberta undertaken the liability for any accidental release. Now, there have been historically releases of large amounts of CO₂ suddenly, which is one of the potential risks here that's been identified. These have occurred naturally, but of course the CO₂ is heavier than air, sticks to the ground, and asphyxiates all life in the area where it is present in large concentrations. Those are the kinds of liabilities that the government's not really talking about but is assuming on behalf of the people of Alberta, on behalf of the taxpayers.

Very little is known, Mr. Speaker, about the migration of CO₂ underground, its effect on groundwater, and so on, and a lot of research needs to be done in order to find out more about that sort of thing. I'm looking at a report now by the Pembina Institute, Carbon Capture and Storage. It identifies a number of areas where more work needs to be done: the way CO₂ migrates underground, the risk magnitude and time frame of leakage, and to clearly identify who is liable for cost and remediation if a leak occurs. They also talk about

- high costs and energy penalties of post-combustion capture and separation;
- high capital costs of converting coal-fired power plants . . . [and]
- limited experience with large-scale geological storage, including "proving" the estimates of storage capacity.

There is real doubt, according to the same report, as to whether or not CO₂ storage can really be made permanent.

The other concern that's raised here – and I think this is a good one – is a continuing dependence on fossil fuels going forward into the future. This is an attempt by the government and some of its friends in industry to postpone the day when we have to make adjustments and make changes in how we invest and do research in energy. It's a continuation of dependence on fossil fuels instead of shifting and investing money in renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, this is really a question, from my point of view, aside from all of the other issues, of: where's the best place to invest your money? Where's the best place to put your resources with a view to the future? What we see is that the government is refusing to go down the road of investing in renewable energy. Alberta is falling farther and farther behind the rest of the world in developing renewable energy notwithstanding the fact that we're ideally suited in a number of areas – we certainly have a lot of untapped wind capacity – and the government's failure when a European consortium came calling wanting to invest in Lethbridge in actually manufacturing wind turbines. They sent them back to Europe. Of course, they're being built there, and we're paying to import them. There's just a lack of appetite on the part of the government to really embrace wind energy.

We are, of course, the sunniest place in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and that makes us ideal as a solar producer. We also have geothermal capacity in this province. So we're well suited for renewable energy. But, you know, just a few years ago it was just the European countries that were ahead of us, but now the United States is ahead of us, and certainly China is investing in renewable energy. This province has failed to grasp the real reins that it needs to lead this province in the direction that looks to the future. Two billion dollars was also the amount that was allocated to Green TRIP, but that of course was cut almost immediately after the government announced it a number of years ago, and only a small amount has been put forward ever since.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what we have is a real lost opportunity. It's the opportunity cost that the government is ignoring. There are far greater dividends to be paid not from burying our carbon but from investing in renewable energy and energy reduction. So investing in public transit, investing in programs to reduce energy consumption for government, for business, for homeowners, and for farmers are real areas where the payoff is much greater in terms of reduction of overall CO₂.

I think that the real problem with respect to that is that the government is not forcing the industry in the oil sands and in power production to sort of face up to the reality internationally that we face. I suggest that this is a false direction, a dead end, if you will, with a potential to waste a massive amount of public money.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude by saying that even if it were shown to be safe, even if we were able to demonstrate that it had some value, the wrong people are paying. If the government could be convinced and industry could convince us that this was a safe and responsible step to take, it still leaves the question of why the taxpayers of Alberta are subsidizing the people who are producing the CO₂ instead of asking those very, very profitable corporations to pay themselves. That would be an approach that we would find possibly more acceptable. But this is again the government getting involved in business, using taxpayers' money to subsidize private industry instead of making sure that private industry pays its own way to act in a responsible fashion.

Mr. Speaker, I can unequivocally say that we in the Alberta NDP will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd like a point of clarification from the hon. member. Is he for or against CO₂ sequestration? I know that you talk about public transportation, but I'm just not sure after that speech on sharing and all that with all of the liabilities, which I'm very concerned about and I have questions on. Are you wanting some CO₂ sequestration, or are the liabilities not there, and what you're really saying is that we can't use carbon fuels anymore and that we've got to go to wind and solar or geothermal? Could you clarify a little bit? I'm a little bit confused now.

Mr. Mason: I'm happy to do that, Mr. Speaker. I think we need to start the transition to an energy economy that's based on renewable energy. We're behind the rest of the world, and we need to catch up. I'm not saying that we are going to get rid of fossil fuels or that we should bring an end to development in the oil sands or other aspects of a fossil fuel economy in this province at the present time, but we must prepare for the day when that is necessary. The government is failing to do that. That's really what I'm saying.

I thought I clarified his first point at the end of my speech, which is to say that if we can solve some of the problems in terms of the effectiveness of this technology, the liability issues, and the cost issues and we're satisfied that it's safe to use and that industry wants to use it as part of its plan to meet targets that are set by government, then we wouldn't have an objection. But we do object to the massive use of taxpayers' dollars to subsidize private industry in this regard.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), hon. members?

The chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Earlier in this fall session I spoke about my enjoyment of stories. I referenced during the debate on promoting entrepreneurial education how much I enjoyed Biblical stories from my grandparents, who were both Sunday school teachers. But there comes a time, Mr. Speaker, when you have to move beyond stories. I remember being nine years old and liking the idea of Never-Never Land and of Peter Pan and the lost boys. I remember as a child enjoying stories about magic beans, and now we're talking about magic bullet solutions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about a single tool in a tool box, that while it may have some functional use, as she pointed out, using a wrench for a hammer often results in bruised walls and bruised knuckles. So the idea, as much as we'd like it to be the case, that carbon sequestration will be the ultimate answer to pollution and concerns in the oil sands is just too much for a grown person to believe. Another way of looking at it is: all eggs into one basket.

Now, the Beatles wrote a song, Can't Buy Me Love, and the government is banking that $2 billion spent on carbon sequestration will buy international love. The government has previously spent $23 million in a greenwashing effort, which included blond British children romping on a beach, and when that was pointed out, there was a terrific amount of embarrassment associated with that exercise. So if money can't buy me love, then the government is going to have to take real action, and it's going to have to take action beyond just carbon sequestration. As long as there are tailings ponds, whether they're the three-sided – oh, we missed a side – box variety, as we asked about in question period this afternoon with CNRL, or whether they're the large toxic lakes that can be viewed from space, until we clean up those tailings ponds, we're not going to get a whole lot of credit for carbon sequestration, as this bill is calling for, because it is only one tool, and we have to use a variety of tools.

Now, the idea of carbon sequestration, while it's been tried in other places in the world, closest to us it's the Weyburn, Saskatchewan, model where CCS is piped up from North Dakota. But this is such a small-potatoes circumstance. For us to say, "Well, we'll just increase the size; we'll use the same principle and make it a much larger project, a $2 billion project," that's oversimplification.

One of the hopes I have is that because I represent the University of Calgary, which has very notable scientific research in the form of the ISEEE, Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy – experiential learning is sometimes the third E. Now, at the U of C there's been a terrific amount of research done on, for example, in situ, on carbon sequestration. They've looked at the possibility of converting wind power into compressed air that can be then stored. I'll give the government credit for requiring the equivalent of an emissions credit being paid into the research fund. I think that's a very smart idea. But until we can come up with a methodology that guarantees that the sequestration works, then we've got a long way to go.

Now, a person who has scientific credentials and has been employed by the government for his research understanding and information, Dr. David Schindler, has spoken about minimal requirements in terms of scrubbers. It was his understanding that in Fort McMurray the minimal standards in terms of scrubbers that were required to be placed on coal-fired power plants weren't even being deployed in the oil sands. So before we get to sequestration at a $2 billion price tag, how about putting some scrubbers on those stacks belching out the CO₂ and a variety of other chemicals in the Fort McMurray area? Dr. Schindler showed slides of black snow, never mind the fish with the various deformities and so on, and showed the intensity of the chemical compounds, CO₂ being probably one of the least worrisome, that we're planning on sequestering and how it affected the wildlife in the area, the flora and the fauna.

A Liberal policy would go farther. Instead of intensity caps, what we're talking about is, within very few years of forming either part of a coalition government or forming government, the idea of going after complete caps. In order for those complete caps to take place, there would be a carrot-and-stick methodology where industries who were successful in their sequestration efforts would reap rewards and those that failed to live up to the expectations that Albertans have for industry development in order to be sustainable would be punished and would have to pay into the fund.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out the shortcomings of reclamation funds. She pointed out the shortcomings associated with orphan wells. My understanding is that what we require from industry is less than 10 cents on the dollar, so Alberta taxpayers are stuck with that 90 per cent liability.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre also referenced how the government is basically using taxpayers' money to invest in private industry's sequestration efforts without a requirement that there be equal investment on the part of industry and then assuming the liability if the sequestration doesn't work.

Now, sequestration, in theory, could provide terrific benefits. It's going to have to be compressed, and it takes an awful lot of energy and power and fuel to do it. But if the idea of using that compressed CO₂ to pump out oil fields that had reached their mature date can actually be realized, then maybe we can start getting back some of our $2 billion investment. Hopefully, with this $2 billion gift come some expectations in terms of industry achievement, and if we can make industrial development and the extraction of bitumen or conventional oil and gas more efficient, then hopefully we're going to share in the profits of that improved efficiency.

The need for a solution is, no doubt, out there, but I question whether we couldn't have put a billion dollars, for example, to carbon sequestration and kept a billion dollars for what the government had talked about, and that was the Green TRIP. Now, originally the government was going to set aside $2 billion for carbon sequestration, $2 billion for Green TRIP.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that in terms of tangible improvements if we were to put that money into Green TRIP, which some municipalities are attempting to do – sort of a small version would be the buses from Airdrie that run into Calgary or the buses from Leduc – while we're taking more cars off the road and we're putting people on buses and we're reducing our carbon output and our carbon footprint, how much better would it be if we were to be using our rail lines, for example? We could transport considerably more people; for example, bringing people from High River to work in Calgary on already existing train lines.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, carbon sequestration is just one of many tools that we need to explore. Hopefully, the Green TRIP will be brought up again.

Dr. Brown: This is about pore space, Harry.

Mr. Chase: Carbon sequestration is one of the solutions the government is offering. Hopefully, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill can realize the importance of a variety of methodologies in terms of achieving a healthier environment and a sustainable industry at the same time.

My conflict is the singular solution, Mr. Speaker. I think carbon sequestration has a role to play. But, as I began, all the eggs in one basket I don't think is worthy of a $2 billion investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

9:30

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I guess, to the hon. member, my question is that there are some who believe that the sky is falling and that the CO₂ is going to be the end of us and that we're on a very short timeline. The government is following up on that, spending $2 billion. Again, it's a long time out there, but where is your actual stand, then? Do you feel that government should just legislate and tell these people that are emitting through these stacks that they have to shut down in a certain time period? Where do you actually stand on this? And the fact that we have CO₂ coming out: do we want to eliminate that? Do we want to legislate it to go in the ground? What is your actual view? You've opened up some questions in different areas, but what about the immediate action on CO₂?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore's question. As a Liberal what we're looking for are sustainable solutions. The carbon sequestration, hopefully, is part of the solution for coal-based power plants, which are eventually being phased out, but while we wait for them to be phased out, eliminated, I would like to see that type of sequestration potentially being applied to it. We've talked about turning coal into liquefied gas, and in that process there still has to be sequestration involved in the production of the liquefied gas.

There is so much speculation associated with this, hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, that I cannot definitively say that I support a single solution, which is carbon sequestration. I hope, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, that this turns out to be a useful tool in a multifaceted tool box, but again I question the $2 billion investment.

Mr. Hinman: Just to expand on that a little bit more, I think too often we look at knee-jerk reactions. You talk about these coal plants, the generation. I mean, we're talking billions of dollars to try and capture CO₂ put down as this government's plan. It would be far cheaper just to buy the coal plants and eliminate them than to put in the infrastructure and put the CO₂ in the ground when we don't have the technology. We don't know if it's going to stay there. There are all of these liabilities. Wouldn't it be cheaper just to buy the coal plants and move to a different energy than to go through this elaborate charade game?

Mr. Chase: Well, I agree that the faster we get rid of coal-fired power plants, the better off we'll be. This is part of the farce, hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, of the idea of having transmission lines running from Wabamun all the way down to Calgary.

Gary Holden, with his most recent faults of sort of entertainment excesses, has talked about local gas-operated plants that serve the area. So when we're talking investment, we should be looking, considering how cheap gas is and its availability through coal-bed methane, at alternative energy sources which aren't as heavy carbon dioxide producers.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I give way.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: On the bill, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the gesture from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I will keep my comments fairly succinct in anticipation . . . [interjections] I'm getting heckled from my own colleagues here.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Dr. Taft: I will start from the big picture, which I'm sure if I don't, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore will press me on anyway later, and that's my view on climate change. We differ fundamentally on this. I accept what most people would say is the mainstream science on this, represented by the UN Panel on Climate Change and lots of other people. I think there's a significant risk that the globe is warming and that that warming is driven by human activities, the most significant of which is burning fossil fuels that put carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, creating the greenhouse effect. I accept that science, and I think that if we don't act very quickly and very forcefully, we, and more specifically our children and grandchildren, will pay a heavy price. What does that mean? To me that means that as a society we need to aggressively adapt.

A few years ago I was giving a speech, and I did some background research and came across a comment from Charles Darwin, who may not be a source that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore reflects on. What struck me is that Darwin said that it is not the species that is fastest, strongest, or smartest that survives; it is the species that most readily adapts. I think we have to adapt, and we have to adapt quickly. That means, in my view, that we need to address issues of greenhouse gas emissions, particularly carbon emissions. So that's the background from which I approach Bill 24.

Now, the members for Edmonton-Centre and Calgary-Varsity and even the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood have made the point that there are lots of ways to address the issue. We've heard at length about supporting public transit and Green TRIP. There are many other ways to reduce, well, what would be called demand-side management, to reduce how much energy we consume in the first place. I actually wish we were much more aggressive on that file. I wish this government was much more aggressive on things like building codes and even supporting programs at NAIT, for example, around the construction of much more energy efficient housing.

There are so many ways we could be moving aggressively to reduce the amount of energy we consume. But is that going to be enough? No. Like it or not, we're going to keep using electricity. We're going to keep burning coal. We're going to keep putting the pollution, as it were, from fossil fuels into the atmosphere. So how are we going to deal with that end of it? How are we going to deal with what comes out of, as it were, the giant tailpipes of our electrical system, the ones that are pumping away out at Wabamun and Sheerness and Forestburg and so on?

How are we going to do that? Well, one proposed way is what this bill is helping to address, and that is carbon capture and storage. Are there a lot of issues and questions around this? Of course there are. It's a new technology. It's not brand new. It's not unproven. But on the scale that's being proposed in Alberta, there are lots of technical issues that have to be resolved. Is it expensive? It's terrifically expensive, particularly at this stage, when we're having to invent everything new. This is, like it or not, the kind of thing that corporations and private investors will not undertake. That's not rocket science. That's not a new insight. It's a common approach to solving very complex problems.

Many of the most important inventions that underlie our modern world were actually invented with public investment, whether it's the World Wide Web and the Internet, whether it's all kinds of research into our electrical systems, whether it's GPS or all kinds of things. All of that was done exclusively or largely through public investment. So we're doing that again. It's a lot of money. Do I want to see $2 billion going to this and not $2 billion into Green TRIP or energy reduction? No. I'm frustrated with that balance, but I believe that as a province and as a society we need to take this step forward.

There are significant risks, but there are also significant risks – and I think they're more significant – in doing nothing. I happen to be of the view, informed from some of the reading I've done, that Alberta has an opportunity to become a real world leader in what is potentially a significant new technology. There are a handful of other places in the world also looking seriously at this, but we do have an opportunity, if it's managed well – and that's always vital – to see some benefits from this.

We also are in a very unusual position to actually enhance our oil recovery if we capture the carbon and inject it into our old oil reserves. There's a certain paradox to that in that we capture the carbon to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions, and then we use it to increase the production of fossil fuels, which will produce more greenhouse gas emissions. It is paradoxical. Can that paradox be resolved? We'll wait and see.

There are a lot of legal and financial obstacles to this work as well as technological ones. This bill, as I understand it right now – and I hope to learn more about it as the debate continues – addresses some of those, some things that have to be put in place before this technology can begin to be developed and implemented.

I don't want to give this a blank cheque. I've got concerns. We should all have concerns. But what worries me more is doing nothing, Mr. Speaker. So I expect that when we're done with this debate – and I will give myself the out here – pending a lot of what I'm going to learn, I suspect at this point that I'll support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I just want to thank the member for his succinctness. I've got a few questions, though, especially when it comes to Darwin and the fact that we need to adapt and that adaptation is the key to survival. If, in fact, we need to adapt because global cooling hasn't come in – and I'll say that the science is very controversial on whether we're still warming or entering into a cooling period. Sorry to make you have to tip your eyes so far. But if it's about adapting and we're going to spend $2 billion, are there not so many more efficient ways?

I mean, look at the overall scope of this. If you add $2 billion or $4 billion or $6 billion, would you seriously look at it and say, "You know what; we're going to put 5 or 10 per cent of CO₂ into the ground" versus actually addressing so many other areas in the world and ensuring that they have, you know, LED lights and hand cranks in developing countries. There are so many areas where we can use renewable resources that would be so much better to get energy in those areas that can't afford the carbon. Wouldn't you say that that would be a better use and that we should be looking at that rather than burying $2 billion, which might become a bottomless pit that continues on with CO₂ storage?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that in two parts. The first part is the so-called controversy, I think he said, about whether the planet is cooling or warming. I don't think that the credible scientists of this world would actually accept that position. There is a large consensus. If the members want to learn more, I'll invite them to come with me to my constituency. We'll spend some time at the university, and we'll sit down with some of the scientists, and you can actually go through the issues with them. So come on with me. Anyway, I'm going to dismiss that part of the position. I disagree. We'll just have to agree to disagree.

On the second part of it, I mean, I found your comments a bit confusing. I'm not in favour of spending $2 billion giving LED white lights to underdeveloped countries or things like that. But I think more generally the spirit you were meaning is that if we have $2 billion to spend, is this the best way to spend it to address the issue of global warming? I think that's a good, tough question. This is where I return to my frustration at the cancellation or the deferral of things like the Green TRIP fund. I'd love to see an increase in mandatory fuel standards for vehicles. I think, you know, much as the Wildrose people might see that as an intrusion into property rights, I see that as a cheap way to reduce emissions. I think we could improve building codes. I think there are all kinds of things we can do and should be doing. Does that mean we shouldn't be doing this? We are, in Alberta, in almost a unique position in the world to take on this particular challenge. Again, at this moment in this debate I am prepared to say, yeah, let's see if we can pull this off. Let's see if we can take advantage of our specific, unique circumstances of geology and technology to rise to this challenge.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't know about the efficacy of trying to demonstrate climate change as human-caused by the Wildrose quoting Charles Darwin. I don't know if it's the right approach.

But I do ask this question. If you have only $2 billion to invest, do you really believe that the best investment, the most bang for your buck, comes from carbon capture and storage, hon. member?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The point I'd like to make to this government and to this member is that we don't only have $2 billion to invest. We should be investing more, not in carbon capture but in other issues such as public transit, which this member supports, I'm sure. All kinds of other things. We do have the resources, and I think we should be investing them.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand up and speak to Bill 24. I guess that right off the bat I'm against this bill.

I don't see it serving the best interests of the taxpayers of Alberta. I don't see it in the best interests of any pollutant problems that we might have. There are just so many areas here that really concern me.

If we were to go back 50 years, to 1960, we could have two options in the world. Do we want to fly to the moon, or do we want to journey to the centre of the Earth? The U.S. president said: well, we want to be the first ones on the moon. We know that that was an extraordinary outspending of taxpayers' money, but they achieved the dream.

But the question here is: are we going to drill to the centre of the Earth? Calgary-Varsity loves stories and knows I enjoy reading Jules Verne and his outlook from the 1800s on where he thought the world would end up. The only novel I believe he wrote that hasn't come about is A Journey to the Centre of the Earth. We've learned a lot more. We know the core temperature down there, and the bottom line is that we would be incinerated if we were to try to journey to the centre of the Earth.

The question that we've got to ask with Bill 24 is: is this achievable? What is it? I really regret that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre couldn't put forward some of her research dollars in showing the numbers that she's got. I'll look forward to when she presents some of those later on the percentage of CO₂ that we're going to actually put in the ground versus the amount that we're producing here in the province.

Ms Blakeman: I gave them to you.

Mr. Hinman: Oh. Then I got disturbed. I thought it was only 5 per cent. You had some other numbers, but anyway, you did refer to the 5 per cent.

Ms Blakeman: Five megatonnes.

Mr. Hinman: Five megatonnes. Yes. So that's not even 2 per cent of the 240 megatonnes.

Ms Blakeman: There you go.

Mr. Hinman: I remember now. We got going on so many things.

When you look at that, we're talking 5 megatons out of the 240 currently being produced, and we're going to ask now: by spending $2 billion on that, what have we really achieved other than possibly a feel-good bill? We can supposedly go out to the rest of the world and say: "Oh, look at what we're doing. We've cleaned up 2 per cent of our CO₂, and we've spent a huge amount of our budget in order to achieve that." We've just got to step back and look at reality. Is this achievable? Are we going down the right road? Is this a dream that can be achieved, or is this a bad dream, where we're going to wake up in a cold sweat realizing that we're in trouble?

I would say that it's the second one, Mr. Speaker. We've got some real challenges ahead if, in fact, we're going to say that there is no question that CO₂ is the problem and spend all of our money saying what we have to achieve with CO₂. The first question asked should be: can we possibly capture 80 or 90 per cent of the CO₂ that we're producing and put it in the ground? When we ask that and look at that, if we're trying to be energy efficient, immediately that puts us on the side that we're not energy efficient because it takes 25 per cent more energy just to compress it, to put it down somewhere. We're going to actually increase our energy consumption by 25 to 30 per cent in order to put that CO₂ into a black hole in the ground.

This is where all the discussion is coming from. Once we put it in the ground, is it going to come back to haunt us? Are there going to be leaks? What are the liabilities? Again, the government is taking action here by saying: oh, we'll remove all liability from the companies. A little quote that the Energy minister said is that the government will take responsibility but only after the private-sector operator has delivered scientific evidence that the carbon it has stored underground is safe and stable.

Well, our tailings ponds, that are 40 years old, have finally been — one area has been given a reclamation certificate. One. I'd like to know: when is the reclamation certificate? After one year that it's been in storage? Oh, it's good; we've checked it. Is it going to be 10 years? Forty years? A hundred years?

Ms Blakeman: Regulations.

Mr. Hinman: But again the devil is in the details on regulations. To accept that liability is unacceptable for the taxpayers of Alberta. I do not believe it's an area that we want to go down.

Again, when we look at the big picture, this $2 billion knee-jerk reaction is that they've realized all of sudden: "Oh, this isn't going to happen. We'll pump in $2 billion because we want to capture this carbon and store it." So they're trying to have this happen, and again they're not looking at the big picture, the money transfer that's going to be accumulating and transferred as we try to capture CO₂ if they continue through on this bill. I hope that we'll see the light of day and realize that this is not what we want to have happen. We need to kill this bill and to have a long-term plan and say: "You know what? This can be done, and here are the prototypes, the first sections that we've done to show that it is viable." That isn't going to happen for a long time.

You know, we have no idea what the long-term consequences might be of jamming all this acidic gas into the ground. It's never been done, it's highly speculative, and it doesn't matter how deep those caverns are. It's interesting. At this point we might say that this is an area we're not ever going to use. We're not going to need to drill down there again. So we put all this in there, only perhaps we might find that — you know what? — another 5,000 metres below that is more gas again, more natural gas, the best carbon fuel that we have, the cleanest, best burning.

I think the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about raising the fuel standards, saying that raising those standards would be a good way. Well, actually, the Wildrose program would be to switch over to a cleaner fuel, which is methane. We can have compressed methane. We can have liquefied methane. There are companies that are doing that. Europe has a high percentage of cars running on that. We shouldn't be looking at trying to change the gas or the diesel; we should be looking at what's an actual cleaner fuel. We have an abundance of it, and that is gas — natural gas, methane, or CH₄ — a one-carbon fuel as opposed to a multicarbon fuel, and it burns much cleaner and doesn't have all of the pollutants that actually come with these other fuels.

We need to be looking at the really big picture. That's where this government continues to fail. Where this bill fails is to think that we can and will capture all of the CO₂ that's being produced, whether that's in 20 years or 30 years or 40 years. Boy, nobody is taking a real look at it, crunching the numbers and realizing, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, that there's a huge amount. If we actually wanted to spend taxpayers' money on anything, like I say, you could look at, you know: what's the cost of buying these old clunkers? What's the cost of buying some of these old pollutant plants and shutting them down and allowing for combined-cycle natural gas electrical production?

Again, we're off base. The vision of this government is to put up huge coal factories – I'm not sure what they're going to use – and huge power lines to transmit power, when in fact we have power lines, and those power lines are pipelines in the ground, where we move the cleanest carbon fuel that we have in abundance here in the province and are able to bring that forward.

One of the other problems is that this act provides an overriding provision for all other and previous laws, another area that is just very, very concerning. The minister has sweeping powers to evacuate areas without compensation in other emergency evacuations. The government is not compensating landowners for their property. Just like bills 19, 36, and 50, this is further erosion of property rights in Alberta without any recognition of landowners' rights and saying: "You know what? We own that underneath you. It's our obligation to capture this CO₂. The consequences really don't concern us at this point. We just want to move on this. We want to move on it fast."

So these are all areas, Mr. Speaker, that we seriously need to look at addressing before we pass this bill. We haven't adequately done that.

I would move to adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole is now in order.

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, to review, for those of you following at home, the amendment that I brought forward is that Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 115.5 "by striking out clause (b)." What that would mean is that it would strike out the ability of the minister to make regulations prescribing prohibited activities for the purposes of section 115.4. And 115.4 is the section where prohibited activities while you're driving are included. So included in there is reading or viewing printed material; writing, printing or sketching. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said that she saw someone reading printed material, actually reading a book, on her way down the highway coming here. That was brutal.

An Hon. Member: Was it you?

Mr. Anderson: It wasn't me. But she saw it. She was distracted by it, by someone else reading.

The other one was engaging in personal grooming or hygiene and then any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations.

The problem I have with this section is that it again goes back to what we talked a little bit about earlier. You know, ministers come and go. The Minister of Justice is a very reasonable person, but she won't always be the Minister of Justice. Who knows what minister will come after? So I think it's disrespectful to the House to give this type of latitude to a minister, to allow something that's so intrusive. I mean, when you're talking about something someone cannot do in the privacy of their own vehicle, that's quite an intrusive law. It's not to say that we shouldn't have laws that govern things like that, but it is very intrusive when it happens. You're changing, you know, someone's ability, what they can and can't do in the privacy of their own vehicle, which is a piece of property that they own, while driving, of course.

I think that it would be wise – if you're going to change the rule surrounding something so intrusive, it should come back to this House and have a discussion on it and bring an amendment for it. Say: "Well, you know what? We want to add." I mean, it says that reading or viewing printed material is prohibited under these. What if the minister one day says: "You know what? Printed material is not good enough." You know, you have that Kindle. That's electronic, so really that doesn't fall under it. It's not written; it's electronic material. You can't read or view printed material, but you can read or view electronic material. Would that include a GPS system? What would that include? What wouldn't it include?

The point is that the minister could come at a later date and say, "We're not going to allow people to read their GPS because that's distracting" or "We're not going to allow people to turn their radio off and on because that's distracting" or whatever. The point is that if there's going to be something changed in the law like that, the minister should come before the Assembly and explain why she or he feels that that needs to be done. Otherwise, I think we shouldn't pass it. It shouldn't be allowed to be just thrown into a regulation. Why would we pass this?

You know, we talk about prohibiting reading or viewing printed material, writing, printing, or sketching, all these other things. Why do we even have them in here? Why don't we just say that we'll just leave it to regulation, let the minister decide what's prohibited or not? Essentially, that's what they're doing. You're naming some, and then you're saying: but the minister can add or subtract as many prohibited activities as he or she wants. I think that's an unreasonable amount, an excessive amount, of ministerial latitude and power, and I just don't think that it's right.

I guess I would say, you know, that the amendment we're talking about illustrates this, but this bill really is of an intrusive nature. I just wonder if this is really going to do anything to stop people from actually doing these prohibited activities anyway. I mean, honestly, what would really make more sense, you would think, is that instead of saying that you cannot do something and that we're going to slap a small ticket on you if you get caught doing it, what you should do is hammer them if they're weaving all over the rode, if they cause an accident, or something like that. You just nail them with liability. You know, their insurance skyrockets. They lose their car for a period of time or their right to drive for a period of time if they actually are swerving on the road or if they're actually running stop signs while looking at their PDA or whatever. You hammer them if they actually do something wrong on the road because they're distracted, not just because they may have glanced – because I worry, too, Mr. Speaker.

Usually if you are making a phone call while you're driving, I know that when I do it – and obviously I can't do it here pretty quick – I'll usually do a quick 403, da, da, da, da, da, da, da, so I can keep my eyes on the road as much as possible. If I were to put that phone down here so that the police or the person viewing me couldn't see me, then I'm doing this; I'm starting to tap and stuff, and I'm even more distracted.

I don't think people are actually going to follow this law, predominantly. There will be a few who do, but I think, generally speaking, that it's just going to be like any of the other traffic laws, unfortunately, that are ignored. I think that a lot of them wouldn't be ignored if it would be a stronger penalty if they do something wrong. For example, you can think of when someone's drinking and driving and they hit somebody or they get in an accident while they're drinking and driving. That's when you just have to absolutely hammer the individual, make sure that they're losing their licence, that they get in trouble. That, I think, would be more effective in keeping dangerous drunks off the road than any other activity.

I think that we've got to go more towards a system where we are punishing people who are actually being a menace on the road as opposed to somebody, in this example, who's driving and maybe looking at some printed material, maybe at some directions while they're driving. Maybe they're not sure what turn to make, so they take a look at the piece of paper so they can make the right turn at the right street, and then they're in violation of the law. That just doesn't make any sense. It's too intrusive. Now, if they're looking at something and they're swerving or they're talking on their phone and they're swerving around or they're in an accident, you can document when they were on the phone. You can document that, and you can punish them accordingly with a very serious penalty.

Again, I just don't see how this is really going to help anything. I mean, I think everyone agrees that we shouldn't be distracted while we're driving. I don't think anyone disagrees with that. We should be paying attention, but think of all the things that do distract us while we're driving. I mean, there are the passengers in the car next to you.

Dr. Brown: What about all those kids?

Mr. Anderson: Exactly. Those four kids in my SUV going crazy back there. I mean, you wonder why I'm a little tense in question period sometimes. It's because I've got four kids in the back of an SUV all the time. That's a lot of pressure.

There are lots of things that distract. Does that mean that we should ban kids from our cars, you know, that we shouldn't have kids in our cars? They're distracting. They're very distracting. You should hear my little guy, my two-year-old, when he drops his bottle or something. I'm driving, and he's just going nuts because he can't find his bottle. I mean, there's nothing more distracting on Planet Earth than that. Well, maybe a few things, but it sure doesn't feel like it at the time. [interjection] Yeah. Well, I don't have to watch them while I'm in my car. Thank goodness.

There are all kinds of distractions. We don't ban kids from our car. We don't ban the GPS from our car. We don't ban radios and CDs and audio books. We don't ban those things. We haven't banned eating a hamburger here. Is eating one of the prescribed things? I don't think it is. No, it's not. So you can still eat. What's the difference between holding a cellphone to your head and chewing down a Big Mac? Honestly, in some ways the Big Mac is far more distracting. It's slopping all over you. There are pieces of food going all — I mean, it can be very distracting. A milkshake, a Diet Coke: all these things are very distracting things.

We're banning a few things; we're not banning other things. I just don't see how this is really going to help safety. Even if you banned all that, even if you decided to ban the hamburgers and you ban your kids from vehicles — you're going to ban all those things so you have no distractions whatsoever — you take the radios out and the headsets out and everything out, you know, there are all kinds of studies out there that say that wireless phones and hands-free phones are just as distracting as the ones that you hold up to your ear. If we're not going to ban every possible distraction, then why even pass a law about it, especially when people aren't going to listen to it? They're just not, by and large. A few will, but a lot won't.

I think education would be a much better thing to do. I mean, we don't ban cigarettes. Cigarettes are by far more harmful than distracted driving, but we don't ban them. We educate. [interjection] Well, that's right. We do ban them in public places for second-hand smoke, but we don't ban it in other ways. We do give public education. We do make sure that we educate the public about how bad smoking is for them, and because of that the smoking rate over time has gone down.

It's the same, I believe, with texting while driving and the use of cellphones and other things while driving. If you have good public education on it, over time people will make, generally speaking, rational decisions. Those who choose not to make rational decisions you can absolutely hammer with fines and all kinds of bad things when they actually do something that is illegal or dangerous on the road.

There was a member across the way, but I forget which one, who took exception to the fact that some people are very safe when they drive, that they can hold a phone up to their head and drive very safely compared to somebody who isn't a very good driver and has both hands on the wheel. I think we all know that. It's true. You know, not everyone has the same abilities. It's just like, you know, you've got some people who can skate and stickhandle the puck really well at the same time, and then you've got others that can't do that well, so they're not very good hockey players. Some people can do two things well at the same time; that's just kind of a gift. I'm sorry that not everyone has it in this Assembly, but that doesn't mean you have to take away the use and enjoyment of my gifts, hon. member. That's right: the use and enjoyment.

Anyway, I want to just make it clear that I don't think that it is proper for the minister to have such discretion because, frankly, she or a future minister could add kids into this legislation. Kids are distracting; you're not allowed to have kids in your car. Or dogs: dogs are distracting; can't allow dogs in your car. Hamburgers: can't have hamburgers. Radio: you've got to take the radio out. I think that that is too much discretion to give to a minister.

Mr. Hinman: What about doughnuts?

Mr. Anderson: Doughnuts are very distracting. You go by a Tim Hortons or something like that, just that in itself, you know, you have to turn your head and, "Man, I'd really like to have a doughnut and a coffee or hot chocolate." [interjection] Or a taco from Taco Bell, that's distracting: "Man, I could use one of those."

So we just have to make sure that we don't give the minister so much discretion. Again, it goes back to the larger problem. The reason I don't want to give the minister so much discretion is because this is an overly intrusive bill. Unfortunately, it's one that the public seems to want. I think what they want is more safety; they want less distracted driving. I don't think they want more intrusion. I don't think that this accomplishes what the public wants. The public might say: "Oh, good. They're passing something on distracted driving." But they have to realize that that's not going to solve the problem that the public is concerned about.

Hopefully, we'll talk about some clauses later that I think will address that issue, and we can maybe make this bill a trial bill to see if it works for a couple years. Then, hopefully, it will be proven. If it works, great. I mean, if it does decrease distracted driving, great, but if not, then we can put it on the shelf for the future and can remember it just as a history lesson about why big government solutions and intrusive government solutions don't work.

With that, I look forward to hearing any questions or comments on the amendment.

The Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that. You know, I listened with interest to most of my hon. colleague's speech, and I guess that while I was prepared to consider his amendment, I am quite unconvinced by his arguments.

First of all, the attempt to liken this bill to an intrusion into property rights is most unconvincing. It's true that your vehicle is your personal property, Mr. Chairman, but it's a piece of your personal property that you load other human beings into, take out on public roads, and drive around with other people's private property all around you, in which if you are not driving carefully, you can kill people. So there have to be very strict limits on this. You know, to just call it a private property issue I think is vastly overstating it and ignoring the much more important aspects of ensuring safety. As our hon. Minister of Transportation loves to say in this House, safety is our first concern. We have to keep that in mind when we frame this bill.

I also recall, as I was a member of the standing committee that conducted public hearings on the original private member's bill that was brought forward, that we called the police to testify. We had the Alberta sheriffs, we had representatives of the chiefs of the Calgary city police and of the Edmonton city police, and they described some of the issues that they're dealing with. In terms of the hon. member's contention that we just wait till something really bad happens and then just hammer people, this flies in the face of what we heard, actually, from the police, which is that there is legislation that is very severe, and because it's so severe, it's rarely used. They were looking for something with some lesser penalties that they could impose.

That gets to my other point, which is the whole question about education. The hon. member suggests that it's education that has reduced the smoking, using that as an example. Well, you know, there's education and there are different degrees of enforcement, and I would submit that in addition to education a very significant component in the reduction of smoking is due to the fact that it's no longer legal to smoke in most public places. I think that's had a greater impact because, you know, there have been lots of studies to show that the extensive advertising that was being directed at young people to get them to not smoke has not been effective. You know, they just don't buy it.

What I've seen in my observation is that the increasing degree of restriction on where you can smoke has in fact had a very significant impact. When you have to go outside in the cold and huddle around the corner of a building, you know that it's not socially acceptable anymore to smoke, and you're smoking not because you want to, I don't think, in a lot of cases but because you have an addiction, and you'd really rather not be there. So I think to suggest that just education on its own is effective is not correct.

I do think that we need to have this bill. I accept that there are other distractions besides cellphone use. The original private member's bill was to talk about the use of cellphones alone, and the argument was put forward by government and transportation officials and others that, you know, it's not the only distraction; therefore, we can't legislate it. That's a logical fallacy. That's fundamentally bad logic to say that one thing is bad and because you can't get everything that's bad, you know, you shouldn't deal with the first thing. That's just nonsense. You should get the things you can deal with and try to deal with them, and if you don't get it perfect, it's no reason not to start. It's no reason not to pass some legislation. I think the bill actually does that.

Now, I do admit to being somewhat tempted by the hon. member's proposition that you shouldn't allow a minister on their own to designate new categories of offence. I think that's an argument that is somewhat persuasive, but I'm not convinced that this is a massive government plot to take away the rights of our citizens. I'm not saying that I don't believe that the government does have some of those plots, but I don't think this is one.

So I am not persuaded in the end by the arguments. Of course, if the provision is abused, then I certainly think that we will need to revisit it in the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on amendment A3.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise on the amendment that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has brought forward because when I spoke on this bill previously, that's one of the things that I had brought in my speaking notes in regard to the prohibited activities in 115.4. I want to get it on the record that I do support this bill. The constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek have indicated very clearly by phone and by e-mail and on my web page that they want me to support Bill 16, and quite interestingly enough in the Twitter world they're also twittering us. We're finding it quite interesting because we obviously have some followers that are following some of the comments of my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere and giving us some examples in regard to some of the things that they've seen.

As I indicated when I was speaking before on this particular section, you see a lot when you drive highway 2, or the Queen E. I spoke in support of this bill when the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays brought this forward in his first attempt, and I talked about some of the things that I had seen when I was driving. Then it was punted into committee, and now it's back. It's interesting how quickly the government can change because at that point in time there was no way at all that they were going to support this.

Things have been interesting, Mr. Chair, as I was telling my colleagues after we were coming back from the AAMD and C reception that we attended, hosted by the minister. We went to grab something to eat, and I was driving up early on Sunday. I had been watching, actually, because I indicated when I was speaking on this that I was one of those people trying to break my cellphone habit while I was driving down the highway and only using it if there was an emergency.

Anyhow, I'm driving, and I'm watching this individual in front of me as they're weaving on the highway, and I thought: ah, cellphone user. So I catch up, and I'm watching, and I honestly drove off the highway. She was reading a book. I thought I'd seen everything. She had her book on her steering wheel, open, and there she was reading and occasionally bringing her head up as she was reading the book. I know that's contained in the legislation that they've brought in, reading or viewing printed material, and I can certainly see why they've brought that forward.

What I'm finding under this section and why I would like to see it taken out as per the amendment is that I just think it's too prohibitive. I think if you let our police department and our sheriffs and the peace officers that are on the highways that do an incredible job make the decision and let them decide what they think should be prohibited – you know, it could be a host of things. I talked about the personal grooming, and I talked about the hygiene, but it could also be – and it's not in here – that you attempt to drive down the highway with a coffee in one hand, and you might have an Egg McMuffin or a doughnut in the other hand. That can be dangerous on the highway.

What I'm finding quite interesting now is that newer cars have got movies in them. Now, I do realize – and I'm not a car girl – that most of the movies are contained for the passengers in the back, but I'm not sure if there are movies allowed if you're sitting in the front. You know, you have to be careful if somebody is listening attentively to this movie in the back and not paying attention to the road.

I will support my colleague's amendment in regard to striking out (b) under Regulations, but I will also again put on the record that I do support Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. I just think that our police and our peace officers on the highway need to use the discretion.

My only other concern is that from driving that highway all the time, the majority of the time when I'm seeing peace officers, it's because they're pulling somebody over for whipping down the highway at 150 or 160 kilometres an hour, and I'm just trying to rationalize: if they're going to be taking a casual drive down highway 2, just look for somebody who will be talking on their cellphone or could be reading a book or, for that matter, reading a map. I mean, I don't have a GPS in my car. I carry Lucy, as I call her, in the car with me, and if I need to go somewhere, then I'll hit her, and she'll direct me all over the place.

Again, I support the amendment that's been brought forward, and I look forward to any discussion.

The Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very concerned about safety on the roads. There is no question that Albertans are concerned. The frustration continues to grow, and the question is: are we going to address the problem, or are we going to pass feel-good legislation? At this point Bill 16 is still feel-good legislation. I don't believe it's going to decrease the amount of accidents on the road.

What this amendment is about is that under section 115.5 "The Minister may make regulations." That's what this amendment is about. Should the minister be able to just ad lib new regulations at will when he deems it in his best interest for whatever reasons, political, whatever the gain is?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood-Highlands – Highlands-Norwood. It's been so confusing this evening, I'm confused on that. Gosh, I've lost my train of thought on that now.

Dr. Taft: It means it's time to go home.

Mr. Hinman: It is.

Dr. Taft: Send us home.

Mr. Hinman: How do I do that?

Ms Blakeman: Stop talking and vote it.

Mr. Hinman: We can't do that on such a bill, to serve the interest of the people.

What we want is safety. The question is: is giving the minister the carte blanche ability to add something into the regulation going to solve the problem?

Again, I'm very disappointed that the government hasn't stood up

– it's got millions of dollars for research – to say: "This is why we should be doing this. Here are the answers. Here is the guidance. Here is what we've learned in other jurisdictions. This is what we need to do." In the research that we're finding, this isn't solving the problem. Traffic accidents have been in place. Since the first car was developed and the Model T, there have been accidents. We've got all kinds of safety devices, from seat belts to air bags to warning of a sudden manoeuvre, backup cameras so we don't run over things. We've got all kinds of safety devices, but the question is: are we addressing the real issue?

What is the number of cars that are on the road today versus 10 years ago, when we weren't using cellphones so heavily? What's the percentage of accidents that are happening that actually go back to cellphone use, and has that changed, or is the human factor in there that 80 per cent of accidents are caused by distracted driving and they're going to continue?

What's the new distraction? Right now it seems like the scapegoat is someone holding a cellphone in their hand while they're driving, and that is what's causing all the carnage on our highways. I don't believe that that is the sole problem here. We don't have the numbers to do it. I spoke earlier, you know, about some jurisdictions in the U.S. that have passed the cellphone ban, and now people are hiding it below the level where people can see it and actually increasing the number of accidents in some of those jurisdictions.

Is the bill adequate the way it is? No. Is it proper that the minister should be able to pass new regulations the week after the bill has been passed because something new has come to light and we're going to start going after it?

Oh, that's what it was, hon. member. What was the plot of the government on this bill? I would say that perhaps the backdoor plot on this is that they have a $7 billion cash-to-revenue deficit, they need more money, and they're saying: "You know what? This is an easy target. All we need to do is empower our police officers and our sheriffs. If they see someone holding a cellphone, if they see someone holding a book, if they see someone doing one of these on the list of five things, we can ticket them, and then the world is going to be a better place." But it isn't. That is not going to solve the dilemma, what the policeman does or doesn't see.

Again, to me, the whole problem is that what I want those peace officers and sheriffs and policemen doing when they're out there patrolling the roads is to be looking for poor drivers. I don't want them to be focused on: "Oh, let's check every driver to see if they have a seat belt. Let's check every driver to see what they're holding." I want them to actually be observing and seeing people that are driving poorly. I want them to be going after people that are speeding up, slowing down, that aren't signalling their lane changes. It would increase safety if we actually penalize people who are driving poorly.

That isn't what this bill is about. This bill is about a cash cow, where we can start to look for people that are holding objects that the minister can automatically say that this is a new regulation. Like I say, it could be that they're holding Tim Hortons coffee cups, and now they start watching and boom, whatever they're holding, they go after that.

You know, it's interesting that perhaps what we should be doing, then, is saying that the ticket is going to be for anybody who takes their eyes off the road ahead. We've got mirrors, but we still need to do a shoulder check. It's always amazing when you're in the heat of three- or four-lane traffic and you're trying to merge and come everywhere together. You've got to be watching ahead. You've got to be doing your shoulder checks. You've got to be looking back and forth. You've got to be very keen and observant on that. When you're travelling over the Glenmore Reservoir and merging, whether you're going to go Glenmore west or Crowchild north, it's a little bit chaotic there. Again, the lane changes and things are not well designed. That would help improve the safety if we looked at some of those areas.

The problem that we're looking at here with Bill 16 is that it's not really addressing safety. What it's addressing is the anger that people are having, the frustration people are having on the road when they want to drive. As the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek mentioned, I was passing this individual, I was sure that they were going to be texting, and, no, they were reading. And, yes, that is covered in this bill. Reading is wrong.

But my point is that the policeman shouldn't have to be driving up beside, getting a visual, and then saying: "Aha, it's a book. I can pull them over." She was driving poorly. The light should have gone on. That person should have been pulled over. They should have got a ticket. "You know what? You were driving erratically. You were lane changing, you were speeding up, slowing down, and that's not in the best interests of society. We need people that are paying attention." That, to me, makes sense. That tells you to be focused on the road. But this idea that you're holding something and therefore thou shalt be ticketed just is not addressing the safety on our roads.

I just want to go back again. I can't emphasize it enough. One of the problems that we see in this government on many of the bills that they bring forward is that they say: "You know what? The problem is that we just need to give the minister more power." Then we're going to all of a sudden create this perfect society where – I don't know – all-powerful Health Minister: no deaths. All-powerful Environment Minister: no problems. All-powerful Attorney General: no accidents on the road. It doesn't happen. Human nature is that we get distracted. We have accidents. It's happened from day one, since cars have been invented, that there have been accidents. We've got rules of the road.

Again, if it's the carnage and saying that we need to do that, reducing speed and saying that nobody could drive over 30 kilometres an hour would reduce the carnage. Is that what we need for efficiency and productivity? No. Again, this bill in this current state does not address the efficiency and the productivity of people. There are many people who can and are able to function, when you're not in heavy traffic, to carry on business.

I mean, one of the other problems in this bill even in its current state is: no writing, printing, or sketching or reading or viewing printed material. So what this really is is that in a car you're banned from having a map anymore. You can't look down. That's printed material. No maps are allowed. You have to pull over and stop or know, and I don't know that that's serving the public interest.

Mr. Chair, it's critical that we get this right. We need to address the hazards on the road, but let's address that actually in the bill and not focus on what somebody is holding. That's the problem with this bill, and I'll continue speaking on that as we go through more amendments.

The minister does not need the power to be able to make regulations at the whim of a bureaucrat, the whim of the minister, and say: oh, this is what we need; this is the new gadget that can't be held. Or, like I say, no more eating. It just seems like they're missing the big picture. What is the problem with the safety of our roads? We need more lanes in many areas. We need synchronized traffic lights so people aren't so frustrated with stopping and going. There are so many other areas that we could or should be addressing if we're after the safety in there.

Mr. Chair, I would urge people to vote in favour of this amendment. It's important that we get it right. This is not right in its current state, so I would ask that we would consider this and remove the power of the minister to make regulations at the whim of his thoughts or whatever the complaint of the week is and add it to the details. It's not good legislation. It needs to be amended. I hope all will vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: On amendment A3 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. I hesitate to stand again, realizing the hour, but I just think that, you know, the characterization of how the enforcement under this act would take place is not correct. It is the observation of an erratically driven vehicle or a poorly driven vehicle that will draw the officer's attention, and when the officer then finds the distracting evidence there, he is able to then issue a ticket where he or she might not otherwise have been able to. That's how it would actually be enforced. It's not like they're driving up and down looking for people reading or on their cellphones, but when they see a vehicle that's not properly driven, it gives them the basis on which to issue a ticket. That's all.

Mr. Hinman: I think the hon. member missed it totally. That's the problem. If the policeman observes that someone is driving erratically or there's a problem, that's when they pull them over. The lights go on, and they give them a ticket for driving erratically, lane changing. You have to stay in your lane. We actually have legislation, and we need to change it a little bit. That's the whole problem. If they're driving poorly, that's what we want to address. I can't believe it, that we'd see someone driving poorly and then need to drive up and see what they have. I mean, if I was driving poorly and all of a sudden I see the policeman and then I put it down, then he can say, "Oh, we're going to let you go." Or he pulls you over, and you say, "Oh, actually, it was because I was disciplining my children. I was talking to them." "Oh, okay. Well, just keep on going, then. There's nothing wrong with what you've done. It's okay because you didn't have a cellphone. You didn't have a book. You didn't have a hairbrush."

This is the problem with the bill, to say that we're just going to see someone driving poorly, drive up, and see what they're holding in their hand? It doesn't make any sense. We need to vote against this bill in the current state by putting in this amendment.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 16, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. We further give thanks for the gifts of culture and heritage which we share. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of introductions today. The first is of two classes from an exceptional school in Edmonton-Riverview called Stratford, which has a number of special programs in it. I can tell you that I've gone there a number of times, and Stratford routinely produces some of the brightest students in this province. There's a total of 52 both in the public gallery and in the members' gallery. They are accompanied by two group leaders Mrs. Rhonda Tarapacki and Mrs. Deb Sitter. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

Mr. Speaker, I have one other introduction. I think these guests may be here. They are two members from the Alberta Federation of Labour visiting today as part of a campaign: Joanne O'Hair and Trudy Grebenstein. They are here speaking about things like pension issues and government finances. If they are in their seats, I would ask them to please rise and receive our welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions to make today, and I'd ask each individual to rise as their name is called. First, I'm pleased to introduce my friend and Airdrie's newly elected mayor, His Worship Mayor Peter Brown. He should be sitting in the Speaker's gallery. Mayor Brown is a long-time Airdrie resident who has made a name for himself as one of our community's most active and generous volunteers. He can also put on one of the funniest stand-up comedy acts that you'll ever see. In my view, he will do a wonderful job leading a community with so many unique needs and challenges. I ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

A second introduction. It is my pleasure to introduce Airdrie's elected school trustees, Mr. Don Thomas and Ms Sylvia Eggerer, as they are also here to advocate for new schools on Airdrie's behalf. They were also my principal and vice-principal at the same time while I was a student at George McDougall, and I spent many an hour in their office trying to explain to them why I had a problem following certain rules, something I know that you can identify with, Mr. Speaker. The patience and dedication of these two individuals has made a huge, positive difference in my life and the lives of hundreds in my community, and I thank them from the bottom of my heart. I now ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce through you to this House – and I hope that they're in the public gallery – an exceptional group of Airdrie parents, teachers, and students who are here to advocate for schools in our community. This includes members of the Airdrie Council of School Councils, in particular Donna Pearce and Stephen Goodall, who organized the Airdrie rally for schools last week and have done a wonderful job advocating for our community; as well as Mike De Bokx, a great citizen and president of the Airdrie Chamber of Commerce; Ron Chapman, a newly elected alderman; Al Jones, a dear friend and amazing community volunteer; and, of course, grade 8 student Leah Moore, who aside from being a straight-A student found time to put together a petition of 3,300 Albertans asking the government to build more schools in Airdrie, which I'll present later on. Also, Leah's family and many other Airdrie parents, teachers, and students are here to advocate on our community's behalf. I ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Terry Alston and Mrs. Pam Wilson, who braved the winter storm to come to question period today. Terry is the president of the Association of Alberta Registry Agents. In addition, he is also the vice-president and managing director of Crowfoot Plates Registry Inc. He's a very positive individual with great enthusiasm for the future of Alberta's registry agent network. Pam is the new CEO with the Association of Alberta Registry Agents. I'm pleased to welcome her and look forward to working with her. I would now like to ask Terry and Pam to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine from Edmonton-Whitemud, Mr. Aaron Thompson. Aaron has been living with multiple sclerosis for most of his adult life and is here today to show his support for and to advocate for the timely approval of chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, CCSVI, the research treatment. He received this treatment this past October in California. Mr. Thompson is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he wave and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a surprise guest today, and I'm very honoured to introduce Jerry Iwanus. He's a dear friend of mine, and he's the former mayor of Bawlf. I'd ask him to rise. This is one man who has always dedicated himself to growing our rural communities. He's taught me that the sacrifices we make for something larger than us are the greatest gifts we can give back to Albertans. I thank him for attending today and ask the Assembly to give him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today 12 colleagues and fellow council members as well as individuals who assist and support the council. They are council chair Marlin Styner from Red Deer, council members Dan Bojarski from St. Brides, Bryce Clarke from Ardrossan, Mike Hambly from Calgary, Dr. John Latter from Calgary, Austin Mardon from Edmonton, Diane Ridley from Thorsby, Brad Robertson from Calgary, Amber Skoog from Picture Butte, Kuen Tang from Edmonton, Pam Wagner from Medicine Hat, and Carmen Wyton from St. Albert.

The staff who support the Premier's council are Helen Stacey, Louise Butler, Diane Bergeron, Bonnie Edwards, and Audrey Walton. Also accompanying the council members today are Diane Gramlich, Sandy Tancowney, Bill Taylor, and my assistant, Lindsay Cooke. They are seated in both of the galleries, and I'd ask that they now stand, as they are able, or wave and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly representatives from the Alberta Federation of Labour and the Canadian Labour Congress. They are here as part of the campaign for improved pension benefits. These guests as well as other labour leaders and activists participated in meetings today with MLAs to discuss the pension crisis and Alberta's role in solving it. The joint AFL-CLC efforts are aimed at encouraging the Alberta government to back CPP expansion when Canada's finance ministers gather to discuss the issue in December.

Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome my guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask them now to rise as I call their names: Sherry McKibben, who is a member of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Christina Doktor, who is a member of the United Nurses of Alberta; Kevin Galley, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees local 37; Trevor Alway from the Canadian Auto Workers' union; and Kevin Partridge from the Canadian Auto Workers' union. I would ask that they now receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40 Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Louis Riel

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. This is a revision of a speech given by president Poitras.

The historic origins of the Métis people in Canada began during the fur trade. They were connected through the highly mobile fur trade network, extensive kinship connections, a common culture, and language. As our population grew, so did our ethnic awareness of who we were. Métis leaders rose from within our own nation who saw this commonality and sought to promote and defend our identity and our existence.

The man whose sacrificial death we honour and commemorate today was such a leader: Louis Riel. He was born in 1844 at Red River Settlement in Manitoba. In 1870 he relocated to the U.S. as a result of his exile from the Canadian government. From 1873 to 1874 he was elected three times to the Canadian parliament but was never able to take his seat.

Even in exile Louis Riel believed in the Métis saying, "Pray that God may preserve the little Métis nation and cause it to grow and remain faithful to its mission; during five years that I must pass in exile, I have only this to say to the Métis: remain Métis, become more Métis than ever."

In June 1884 Louis was asked to come back to Canada to lead the Métis people. He returned to defend the interests of Métis, believing in a people having self-government with their rights, land, and culture preserved. In March of 1885 shots were fired at Duck Lake. The battle with the Canadian army had begun. In May 1885 the battle continued in Batoche, with Louis Riel leading the charge. The battle lasted a mere four days. On May 12, 1885, the last shots echoed through the Saskatchewan valley, and Métis soldiers lay wounded and dying on the battlefield. Louis Riel gave himself up. He was found guilty of treason and sentenced to hang 125 years ago this very day.

The Métis as a distinct aboriginal people helped shape Canada's expansion westward through their ongoing assertion of their collective identity and rights. From the Red River resistance to the battle of Batoche to other notable collective actions undertaken throughout the Métis nation homeland, the history and identity of the Métis people will forever be a part of Canada's existence. Louis Riel was a man of great vision. He did not waver from his belief of a future for Métis people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

School Services in Airdrie

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week hundreds of parents, teachers, and students held a rally in Airdrie calling on this government to immediately address our city's school shortage. Many of them are with us here today. The number of public students in Airdrie has increased by roughly 1,500 in the last five years, yet in that time not one new school has been announced. However, during that same five-year period six new schools were announced for Edmonton public despite their enrolment decreasing by roughly 1,000 students. How is this discrepancy explained? How are 10 schools supposed to satisfy the needs of 6,500 public students in Airdrie, yet Medicine Hat has 20 public schools to satisfy the same number of public students? How did 32 schools get announced just prior to the 2008 election, yet not one ended up in Airdrie?

Here are some numbers from this government's last budget: $2 billion dollars budgeted for grants to Alberta's largest corporations to pump CO₂ into the ground, an amount that could build 133 new schools; $200 million dollars budgeted for subsidies to businesses, enough to build 13 new schools.

You see, it's not about spending more taxpayer money. It's about spending the money we have wisely. It's about putting needs before wants and priorities before pet projects that government has no business being a part of. It's about making decisions objectively, based on the needs of Albertans, rather than making political decisions based on favours owed to politicians.

Mr. Speaker, my community is tired of these excuses. We just want enough schools for our kids. This minister and this Premier have a chance to correct the mistakes of the past and begin the process of winning back the trust of Airdrie voters. Please, Mr. Premier, the ball is in your court. Please don't play politics with our kids.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I am proud today to say a few words about the good work that the council does for Albertans with disabilities. It works to improve the lives of Albertans by advising, reporting, and making recommendations to government and other stakeholders on issues, including accessibility and the removal of barriers to employment. My council colleagues are great Albertans. They're active participants in their communities, where they engage and connect with local Albertans.

Later I'll be tabling the council's 2009-2010 annual report, that outlines the activities undertaken by the council during the last fiscal period. I am proud to say that we have met all of our targets, and we've stayed within our resources. One of our goals is to promote universal design, and to this end we've pulled together a stakeholder group to do just that. We've also completed our first internal evaluation, identifying strategies to help us to be even more effective resources to our communities and to our government.

Every December 3 the council sponsors International Day of Persons with Disabilities, a chance to honour people with disabilities and those who support them. On this day we also present the Premier's council awards, which encourage and celebrate the support and commitment of individuals, organizations, and governments for persons with disabilities. Last year the number of award nominees doubled.

The council is also available as a resource to our government, and just this past year we contributed to the consultation of the advisory committee on health and also to the government of Alberta's response on the ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of persons with disabilities. In my role as deputy chair I feel privileged to be part of the discussions and initiatives that this council is involved in, and I look forward to our plans for the coming year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Pension Reform

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Federation of Labour understands that Canadians, and Albertans in particular, face a very serious issue, that being the need for pension reform. They understand that society is a lot better off when seniors have enough funds to live with dignity. No one wants to see seniors suffering through what should be their golden years. That's why the AFL has been promoting the need for pension reform.

Albertans place dead last in Canada when it comes to retirement savings. Less than a third of workers have private pension plans and half have no retirement savings at all. Of course, almost all Canadians will enjoy the CPP benefits when they retire, but those funds simply aren't enough to live on. This paints a dark picture for seniors. Clearly, some kind of pension reform is needed. The AFL suggests that reform should begin by expanding the Canada pension plan.

Later this year Canada's finance ministers will meet in Kananaskis to decide the future of pension reform. A huge majority of Canadians and most of Canada's finance ministers approve of the simple, low-cost solution promoted by the AFL, double CPP benefits by slightly increasing premiums today. Your paycheque today will take a slightly larger hit, but your benefits as a senior will double, a significant step toward a dignified retirement. Unfortunately, Alberta's finance minister doesn't see the simple wisdom of reforming CPP. He is one of only two holdouts blocking this needed reform. I hope he'll change his mind before the conference in Kananaskis because Canadians, most especially Albertans, need pension reform.

Here in Alberta we like to pay a lot of lip service to seniors: how important they are, how much they've contributed, how they deserve our support. Well, here's a chance to do something real for seniors, to provide a solution that will make a difference in their quality of life. Do the right thing, hon. minister. Support pension reform.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Canada November 17 has been designated as a National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims. On November 17 Canadians are asked to remember those killed or seriously injured on Canadian roads and those left to deal with the sudden and unexpected loss of people they love. Nearly 2,800 Canadians are killed each year on Canada's 900,000 kilometres of roads and highways. This means eight avoidable deaths every day. That's one every three hours. In Alberta 351 people died and more than 19,000 were injured in collisions in 2009. The tragedy is that most of these injuries and deaths on our roads are preventable.

Here in Alberta we've developed a comprehensive traffic safety plan that focuses on education, enforcement, communications, engineering, community engagement, and legislation to help make our roads safer. From 2007 to 2009 traffic fatalities in Alberta dropped 23 per cent and injuries dropped 22 per cent, which indicates that this co-ordinated approach is helping to save lives and reduce injuries.

Our efforts are making a difference, but while these reductions are encouraging, we must be vigilant. We can and must do better. This is about all of us, every Albertan, and the role we play in making our roads safer. On November 17 let's take a moment to remember those killed or injured in traffic collisions and encourage everyone we know to make a commitment to becoming a safer driver.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care Beds

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the health care bumbling of this government continues to cause preventable suffering and loss of life. The litany of failure continues in mental illness as it does in clogged emergency rooms due to the long-standing deficit of long-term care beds. The government's inventory of major projects published just last month shows that an expansion of the Norwood Glenrose long-term care facility, planned between 2008 and 2010, was cancelled. To the Premier: how many additional long-term care beds would the Norwood Glenrose have created?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've already added 800 new beds this year, and our goal is 1,300 by the end of this year. So there will be 1,300 by the end of this fiscal period.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's unfortunate the Premier is misleading Albertans with comments about solving bed problems with continuing care. We're talking about long-term care. The Premier said yesterday, "We need more long-term care beds." He's got that right. We need more long-term care, not supportive living. Does the Premier deny that the continuing care strategy has contributed to the ER crowding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the time has come in this province to start paying attention to the needs of our seniors and not talk about long-term care beds. We're talking about continuing care, giving our seniors choice and not splitting up married couples after 50 or 60 years of marriage because the system says so. It's about time we take their needs into account.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. And there was a point of order as well. Go ahead.

Dr. Swann: How is it working for you, Mr. Premier? How is it working?

Mr. Stelmach: It's actually working quite well. In fact, we're showing leadership right across the country. We're looking at the needs of our seniors, and rather than putting seniors into facilities that perhaps may have, you know, four people to a ward, we're giving them individual rooms. We're giving them choice in terms of whether they want to cook their own meals or not or live in a more communitylike setting. There has been a tremendous amount of improvement in this province. One just has to travel to small communities to see the number of beds that have been opened.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Sands Tailings Pond Containment

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to see the buck being passed from minister to minister but receive no clear answers regarding recent reports of unsecured tailings ponds. Meanwhile, Environment Canada is arriving at the Horizon tailings pond because, frankly, they don't believe this government either. To the Premier. The government claims there is no water flowing in or out of the pond. The ERCB says there's a stream which flows into the tailings pond. Which is it, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, clearly, the information that was given out — one of the news organizations in this province didn't do its due diligence. There are no tailings ponds that are leaking, especially this one that is the subject of this question. The three ministers — SRD, Energy, and Environment — met today with the ERCB. In the next question the Minister of Environment may give further detail.

Dr. Swann: Well, again back to the Premier. Does the Premier understand that if toxic tailings are in fact leaking into surrounding waterways, the federal government won't care if the pond is in compliance with our guidelines or not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to reiterate the answer that I gave yesterday. There is no water that is entering this site. The water has been diverted around this industrial site. There is runoff. It rains otop of this area just like it rains anywhere else, so there is some runoff that will originate. It is on a hill. It's running into the river.

As for the involvement of the federal government, Mr. Speaker, this was a joint approval that was based upon a joint hearing in 2004. The federal government has the responsibility, the same as the provincial government, to ensure that their regulations are being met.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, first the federal government created a water panel, and now they're checking on our tailings ponds. Is the Premier trying to manipulate this crisis so that he can stand up for Alberta against big, bad Ottawa?

Mr. Stelmach: No. Actually, as Premier and leader of this government our duty here is to protect the environment not only for today but well into the future, and we have a good record.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parks and Protected Areas

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 30 years the importance of untouched wilderness areas in our province has been reflected by the fact that they are protected by law. Today Albertans are deeply alarmed. This government plans to open up some of our most cherished parts of the province to inappropriate activities, including clear-cutting, motorized recreation, and industrial exploitation. To the Premier. In a recent survey by the parks minister 70 per cent of Albertans said that their top priority was setting aside more land in an undisturbed state. Why is the government ignoring the wishes of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're not ignoring Albertans in terms of the need for more recreational space, more protection of Alberta's pristine environment. We're doing that. We're doing that in consultation with Albertans. The minister has held a number of consultations across the province. Legislation is before the House, and it'll be debated over the next few days.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess the question for the Premier is: which Albertans are influencing? Which is he listening to?

This government's own Plan for Parks, released just last year, says, "Albertans want more involvement in decisions about parks." Why is the government trying to do exactly the opposite by shutting the public out of decisions about parks in favour of special interests?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just simply not true. You know, we have consulted. We'll continue to consult. It's kind of ironic because sometimes the opposition accuses us of consulting too much, and then today they're saying: not enough. Sometime maybe they'll find their own balance.

But in this particular case we're continuing to consult with Albertans. It is an important issue for Albertans. As more people move to the province, some of these spaces will be cramped, and we want to protect a very pristine environment for future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's catalogue of failures grows by the day: hours in emergency departments, dangerous tailings ponds, botched flood relief efforts in southern Alberta. What do Albertans have to do to make the Premier understand that they don't want their parks and protected areas added to the list?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all of the dire consequences that the opposition brings forward, especially during question period, we're continuing to see people net migrate from Ontario, from British Columbia to this great province. They see opportunity. They see opportunities for jobs, to raise their families, educate their children, and live in one of the best places in the world.

School Services in Airdrie

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, as I explained in my member's statement, Airdrie is in desperate need of new schools to cope with the explosion of growth in our school-age population. We have fewer schools per school-age child than any city in the province by a mile. Every school is at or above 100 per cent capacity. Libraries are being turned into classrooms, we have elementary classes approaching 50 students, and school cores cannot adequately accommodate more portables. To the Premier: will you commit today to immediately address Airdrie's school shortage by announcing funding for at least three critically needed schools?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, my appreciation to the grade 8 student who initiated a petition, got her community interested in this very, very important area. Even though there were about 2,400 new spaces added over the last five years, we have a lot more to do, and we'll continue to do that. I'll be meeting with the mayor later this week as well.

I just wanted to correct one misinformation. In the member's statement the hon. member talked about $2 billion this year allocated to carbon capture and storage. That's simply not true. That $2 billion will probably bring us about $25 billion in enhanced oil recovery for the next number of years.

Mr. Anderson: This government has budgeted $2 billion over several years in grants for companies to pump CO₂ into the ground. I did not say this year. That amount of money could build 133 new schools. Airdrie is not asking for 133 new schools. We're asking for three, sir. To the Premier: will you retask a fraction of that $2 billion for CO₂ and instead spend it on Airdrie's kids, whose education, one would think, would be a higher priority for taxpayer dollars than pumping CO₂ into the ground? Yes or no, sir?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the request from Airdrie is a priority, and we're working through the capital plan. But I'm not going to back off the investment in carbon capture and storage. It is a good investment. I can't turn down the possibility of $25 billion in new royalties over the next number of years.

Mr. Anderson: Well, let's put it this way, then. Given that prior to the 2008 election funding for 32 new schools across Alberta was announced and given that placements of many of those schools were based on political considerations rather than objective need, as admitted to me by multiple government officials when I was still with that PC government, will this Premier commit to instructing his Education minister to publicly release his ministry's priority list of school projects and the criteria used to arrive at them?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there's simply no question that Airdrie is on top of our priority list. I'm not sure why he needs a released list to hear what we've said publicly in this House before. That hon. member, however, should in his commentary remind the House what he said when the budget came out last year, and that is: we could balance the budget if we stretched out our capital spending over another few years, if we reduced the capital bill from $7 billion this year to $4.6 billion this year.

Schools in Airdrie, Rocky View, Fort McMurray, and other places in this province are a priority for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. [interjections] Well, we have recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I'd like to hear her.

Mental Health Services

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this week's numbers show that once again some hospitals, including the Royal Alex, are unable to meet wait time standards even a third of the time, yet at the same hospital the government has permanently closed an eight-bed, quick access mental health section. Several mentally ill patients waiting for any attention have committed suicide in hospitals across Alberta in the last few years. To the Premier: will he reverse this shameful closure and direct his minister of health to start fixing the crisis in Alberta's mental health care system now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a good question with respect to mental illness and the programs offered in the province. Even though we're investing $500 million this year in mental health, there's a lot more that can be done. That is why I'm so positive in looking at the number of primary care networks that have been opened, 38, most of which have some psychologists. They're the people who can intervene at the right time. It's a symptom, obviously, of the number of people that are waiting in emergency rooms, and personal care networks will deal with some of it.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta has less than half of the mental health beds per capita than the Canadian average and given that experts say that mental health cases are the primary source of ER delay in many hospitals across the province, why are the Premier and his health minister continuing to ignore the crisis in mental health, that, among other things, is so clearly linked to their failure to fix the ER crisis for years and years and years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're continuing to increase the number of community-based mental health programs. As more people move to the province and as more people require additional help with respect to mental illness, we'll do whatever we can. I do know that personal care networks are a start. They're part, of course, of opening up more beds by moving more people that require continuing care. All of these things are in process, and we will see results soon.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've seen no new mental health care beds. Indeed, last year the plan was to get rid of a bunch. Now, mental health patients suffer when they're stuck waiting in the ER without treatment, families suffer when they can't get help so desperately needed for their loved ones, and our health care system suffers when these Albertans can't get the help they need. Again to the Premier: why do you refuse to act? Why will you not invest in more beds now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are. There are over a thousand health projects, construction projects, in the province as I speak. I believe it's over $5 billion of infrastructure spending in health. It's adding more acute-care beds, it's adding more continuing care beds, and of course in other areas, as I mentioned yesterday, some new cancer treatment, radiation vaults, in Grande Prairie and Red Deer and Lethbridge. That's, you know, moving in the right direction. Unfortunately, I just can't build them overnight.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's response to new reports of an unsecured tailings pond is that everything is in compliance. This government just doesn't get it. When the rules allow for tailings ponds with missing walls or without barriers or removal of vegetation to prevent wildlife access, this government's rules are too weak, literally full of holes. To the Minister of Environment: given that over 50 per cent of the reported incidents from this particular tailings pond had impacts on water, why hasn't the government done anything to improve the standards?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. This is an industrial site. The site is completely isolated from all of the natural water bodies and watercourses in the area. There are pipelines on this site. There are fluids on this site that from time to time are released. They are not released off the site; they are contained within the industrial site. These are the instances that this member refers to.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Uncontrolled release of settling pond water above approval limits, treated water particle counts and turbidity, missed readings, a storm that caused the pond to overflow because there was too much water: I mean, come on. These are the incidents. They reported them. So why do you keep insisting that there's no problem with the water? What exactly is holding the government back from doing a better job here?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, again, there is movement of water within the industrial footprint of this operation. When there is a release, there is a requirement that there be an appropriate cleanup and appropriate reporting. These are not releases of water into the environment; these are releases of water that cause issues within and on the industrial footprint of the operation itself.

Ms Blakeman: Well, there are 69 of them.

Okay. The next question, then, goes to the Minister of Energy, responsible for the ERCB. Given that the CNRL Horizon application under directive 074 states, and I quote, that Canadian Natural is unable to achieve the fines capture required by directive 074 and the phase-in schedule is not achievable, why was this plan approved? They couldn't do it.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the answer to the member's question yesterday when she said the CNRL plan had been approved, it's my understanding that it has not yet been approved. It is one of the two that I mentioned yesterday that are still under review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Arts Funding

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we all agree that the arts enrich our lives and give us a quality of life here in Alberta. We overlook the fact sometimes that it's also an important economic driver. The recent funding reductions have brought some of that into question and are hampering arts organizations, and I hear regularly on this from my constituents who want a reassurance that we continue to hold the arts as an important priority. Can the minister offer that assurance and tell us specifically what he's doing to support the arts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to share with the hon. member and everyone else in this House that the government of Alberta is entirely committed to supporting the arts in Alberta. Over the last six years we've increased arts funding by 55 per cent. Last year because of the economic circumstances we had a reduction. We're meeting with the arts community on a semi-annual basis. I'm in the midst of going through eight different cities, and we're looking at ways that we can resolve through dialogue some of the problems that they incur. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. We should expect Alberta to be a leader in the arts in this country. That's certainly my expectation, but there is a concern that we're falling behind. Can the minister tell us how we're comparing with other jurisdictions?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the barking on the other side of the House over there, Alberta's funding of the arts is number three in the country, second only to Ontario and Quebec. We have provided $29.2 million this past year. If you look at other jurisdictions, the B.C. Arts Council's budget is $9.4 million, and the Saskatchewan arts council's is $13.6 million. We are very proud of the commitment that we've made. Irrespective of what the person on the other side says, we have lived up to our commitment. We have a cultural policy, and we will continue to support the arts in this province.

Mr. Olson: Arts organizations in my constituency are starting to budget for the coming year, and they're looking for some guidance because they feel that there might not be a long-range plan. Can the minister tell us anything about planning for the future in terms of budgeting?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know, as the opposition members should know, that we are in tough economic times. Our Premier has mentioned repeatedly that we are going to maintain our spending and control our spending. Right now as I see it, there is no reason for anybody in the arts and cultural community to worry about funding decreases for the next fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All powerful, all knowing, ever present, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent are attributes not normally associated with mere mortals, including Alberta's Premier and his appointed cabinet ministers. Moving from legislation to regulation assumes such ministerial infallibility. Does the minister of parks believe that online workbooks, private meetings, and an appointed advisory council are democratically acceptable replacements for public hearings and legislative debate?

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, I have to take exception to what the hon. member just said. This department has spent a considerable amount of time doing extensive consultation with all Albertans, and we will continue. That is our practice, and that is what we will continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without qualifying legislation, what is to prevent either an undebatable order in council or ministerial whim from permitting further industrial or inappropriate recreational intrusion into our existing parks and protected areas?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a policy in this government that we do not make moves in parks until we have consulted. We always consult. If you look at the plan for parks that we've generated over the last few years, I think that what we do is very telling. We always consult. We do not make moves in parks without checking.

Mr. Chase: The government's pattern, Mr. Speaker, is consult, first; insult, second; ignore, third. Would the minister please explain how moving from the checks and balances of debatable legislation to unilateral ministerial discretion is in Albertans' best interests?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to legislation that will be on the floor of this Assembly, and I think that's when we should have this debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing a lot about emergency department wait times recently. Media reports said that Alberta Health Services had aimed to admit seriously ill patients within eight hours of their arrival at hospital 48 per cent of the time but has now changed it to 45 per cent. It was also reported that the goal of four hours to treat and discharge patients who don't need admission was 80 per cent but has now been changed to 70 per cent. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why were these wait times reduced?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, some of the percentages that were reported by the media were neither targets nor were they performance measures. Some were, indeed, actual results from a year or two ago. Secondly, some of the numbers that were reported were for all emergency rooms in the province whereas others were only for the 15 busiest acute-care hospital sites in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: well, then, what are the wait time targets?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, for the larger hospitals, including those in Edmonton and Calgary, they are supposed to be admitting people for overnight stay at the 45 percentile. In other words, 45 per cent of the people should be in and admitted within eight hours by the end of this year. Secondly, they are also to be discharging 70 per cent of the people who do not require an overnight stay within four hours. Both of these targets, it's important to note, will actually be increases from actual results.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister. When we talk about four hours or eight hours in the emergency department, does that mean patients do not get any help for that period of time?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker. The point here is that emergency department length of stay for the eight-hour period is defined as the total time spent by a patient in the emergency department. They are indeed seen and helped during that time. Emergency department length of stay includes everything from the moment of triage to diagnosis to treatment to bed placement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Injured Worker Claim Duration Rates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the annual report of the WCB in 2008 an injured worker spent an average of 32 days off work. A report from the Employment and Immigration department for the same year states that on average an injured worker was off the job for 41 days. This claim duration difference is nine days. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: who are injured workers and their employers to believe regarding claim duration rates, the department or the WCB?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, the person to ask how long he's staying off work would be the person who actually is off work. That will give you the most accurate answer. But the fact is that our department gathers all information, Mr. Speaker, from the Workers' Compensation Board. They are the collectors of data. Any data published by this department stems from the Workers' Compensation Board. So if this member, again, much like yesterday, wants to get accurate information relevant to WCB, I would strongly encourage him to contact the board of directors of WCB, and they will gladly share that information with him.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I would urge him not only to read his own information that he proudly posts on the Internet but also, hopefully, read the WCB annual report. Why is there a nine-day difference in claim duration between the statistics that you produce and those that the Workers' Compensation Board produces?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, to reiterate, we do not produce statistics. We simply publish them for public consumption. We want to make sure that Albertans have access to any pertinent information relevant to injury rates and types of injuries, and we will be publishing more and more information. Where there are inaccuracies, indeed, if there is a difference between rates published by the WCB and what we made available, I'll look into this. But at the end of the day all information comes from the Workers' Compensation Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that the hon. minister has time to look at Lady Gaga, I would suggest that he needs to look after injured workers in this province a lot better. Now, are you telling this House that the statistics that you so proudly posted on the Internet are inaccurate, and they're wrong, and employers and injured workers can't rely on those numbers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, any Little Monster would have understood it by now. If he wants accurate, relevant, and timely information from the Workers' Compensation Board, he should contact the Workers' Compensation Board. But if there is, indeed, a discrepancy between the information the WCB publishes on this one particular item and that published by this department, I will look into it and see why the difference occurs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Elder Abuse Strategy

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Up to 10 per cent of Albertan seniors have experienced some form of elder abuse, and in many cases elder abuse goes unreported. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. We have the knowledge, we have the facts, we have the statistics, but what is your ministry actually doing to protect our seniors?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, seniors, like all Albertans, deserve to live in dignity and be respected. We work to prevent elder abuse through collaboration with other government and community partners and through key pieces of legislation like the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act and the Protection for Persons in Care Act. But we need to do more. That's why today I released Addressing Elder Abuse in Alberta, a strategy that calls for governments, community partners, and all Albertans to work together to prevent and address all forms of elder abuse.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. With the work that we're already doing, why do we need this new strategy, and what do you hope this strategy is going to accomplish?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the strategy builds on the work that we're already doing. Addressing Elder Abuse in Alberta outlines four specific goals. One is improved awareness of the abuse, two is to have knowledgeable and skilled service providers, three is to have co-ordinated community responses, and the fourth is to have protective laws and policies. The strategy also outlines the roles and responsibilities of all sectors of society and builds on all the successful relationships that we now have in our communities.

Mr. Quest: Final question to the same minister: you're speaking about these partners and relationships, but can you elaborate on who these partners are?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, as I said, preventing and addressing elder abuse is a shared responsibility. Government cannot do it alone. We definitely have a role in supporting and facilitating the work, but we need the help of front-line staff, we need the help of our communities and community members, the people that know our seniors, and we also need the help of municipal governments, family members, and friends. We all need to work together to help prevent elder abuse.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The emergency room crisis continues as this government fails to respond to the challenge in a meaningful way. The minister talks in years and percentage reduction times while our facilities and staff are not being fully utilized. Hospital administrators must be able to override perceived system limitations in order to move patients and respond to ER overcrowding. To the health minister. Our ERs continue to burst at the seams with patients to care for while beds are closed in those facilities. Can you tell us how many beds are currently closed in Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the number of beds that are open and the number that we'll still be opening and the successes of that plan, which is a wonderful plan now that we have five years of funding. I can tell you that in September in Calgary Alberta Health Services opened 52 additional transition beds at the Rockyview and at the Peter Lougheed Centre. By November 5 they had opened 12 more transition beds at the Foothills, and just last week they opened an additional number of beds at the Rockyview, 12 more transition beds later this month. By the end of the month 20 more will open at the Peter Lougheed.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, that answer was pathetic.

We've been told by some AUPE members that there is at least one ward with 26 beds closed in a Calgary facility. Again to the same minister: will you immediately conduct an audit province-wide of all hospitals so we know how many beds there are that are currently closed that could be opened in those facilities and report to this Assembly by Thursday?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in total 70 new beds have been opened or will be opened before December 15 in Calgary – 70. That includes beds in acute hospitals, and that would include transition beds, hospice beds, and the like. Similarly in Edmonton we have about 71 more beds that will be opened in acute-care facilities. That doesn't include 1,300 new beds in the community. There is so much good stuff happening right now. It's wonderful.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, that answer as put out there was insulting.

There's no consultation. We need an audit province-wide to know how many current facility beds are closed that could be opened if we empower chief administrative officers to do that. We want an audit in the next 48 hours. How many current facility beds are closed in the province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know why they continue to dwell in the past. They keep talking about taking money out of the system, and now he's talking about putting probably more money into the system. A few months ago they were talking about cutting $1.5 billion or thereabouts out of health care, out of education. I wonder how they would intend to open any of those beds that might have been replaced if they pursued that strategy. Unbelievable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Food Bank Use

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2010 HungerCount was released this morning, and food bank usage in Alberta is up 10 per cent. Unemployment remains at double the prerecession rates, and the lowest income group earns less than they did 30 years ago. Glaringly clear is that our most vulnerable populations are being left behind. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Food security is an essential piece for keeping families together, but 43 per cent of those accessing food banks in Alberta are children.

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. This is a national report, and that report did indicate that food bank usage is up for all provinces across Canada. I believe that poverty is one of the underlying factors of that. The way that we assist with this ministry in breaking the cycle of poverty is through the many good programs, supports, and services that we have. For example, we assist our families through child care subsidies, and we also have 46 parent link centres that we refer parents to in our local communities, that thousands of parents access, where they learn about nutrition and they learn cost-effective ways in which to prepare their food.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next questions will be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that 16 per cent of those accessing food banks also depend on disability-related income supports, it's clear that support to vulnerable people isn't keeping pace with the costs of the times. Why not?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we remain committed to supporting Albertans with disabilities, especially those most in need. This includes support through our AISH program, which provides a comprehensive list of health-related benefits in addition to a monthly income of $1,188 per month. There have been five increases in the AISH program since 2005. AISH financial, health-related, and supplementary assistance provides one of the highest combined benefits to persons with disabilities in this country.

Ms Pastoor: Ah, an excellent segue. Thank you. Will you commit to indexing AISH payments, as MLA salaries are, to ensure that the vulnerable are not left behind?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would repeat my answer that I just gave, and that is that we have one of the highest benefit packages for people with disabilities in the country. We have increased the AISH benefits five times since 2005. We continue to monitor and review the income benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Pension Reform

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Labour Congress and Alberta Federation of Labour released a poll that seems to indicate that Albertans favour an expansion of the Canada pension plan. These two organizations have come out today calling for Alberta to stop "acting as a spoiler and standing in the way of real reform." My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Why is Alberta opposed to reforming the retirement income and pension system?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, let the record be very clear about this. Alberta is not opposing pension reform; we started the pension reform movement. Three years ago Alberta and British Columbia undertook a comprehensive review of the adequacy of retirement income security. It was the feds that got on board only a year ago and now have come up with sort of a quick fix across the board that simply won't work. We want a solution, but we want reforms that work, and across-the-board CPP reforms do not help those who need help.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for that clarification. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Why doesn't this government support the federal move to expand the CPP?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian retirement income system is not broken. Three weeks ago one of the leading pension institutes in the world, the Mercer Institute in Melbourne, Australia, ranked Canada in the top five, the top five in the world. There is not a crisis in the Canadian income retirement system. It's a narrow system. It's not the upper income brackets. It's not the lower income brackets. We have OAS and GIS to look after lower income. It's a certain sector of the middle income, and we need a targeted solution for a targeted problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: if CPP expansion is not the right solution, then what is?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is looking to fix what's broken, and that is ensuring income adequacy both from CPP but also from other types of income support. We value, we think Albertans value freedom of choice and responsibility for choice in planning their retirement income. In doing that, we're looking at private-sector pension plans facilitated by government action that are called smart defined contribution plans, that have voluntary automatic opt-in and reduced administration rates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Residential Construction Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From home warranties to building codes to condos this government's response to the growing crisis in residential construction has been the same for the last 10 years. First, ignore home and condo owners; second, huddle with industry to water down any real consumer protections. To the Minister of Service Alberta: given that consumer reps on other committees have been ignored in the past, why should Albertans trust that the input of condo owners will be included in the new condo act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to looking at the Condominium Property Act, we do indeed have a working committee that's been working for the last year. We'll be moving into the consultation late spring, and it's really important that we do this. We'll be looking at a number of areas with respect to governance, how condo boards are run, and anything with respect to the building codes and those issues are with the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the weakest recommendations made by the home warranty review committee four years ago have not been implemented, will the minister admit that even the weakest protections are too strong for this government?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, one of the huge focuses of this portfolio is consumer protection and consumer information, giving consumers the right tools to make the best decisions. With respect to the Condominium Property Act and the responsibilities that are implicit when you do purchase a condo, those are the things we want to make sure that consumers know they're getting into. The review of the Condominium Property Act will look at that area and many other areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that this minister's reviews have also excluded homeowners, why should Albertans have any confidence in proposals he says that he will bring forward next spring?

2:30

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, my ministry is always working very hard to find solutions to ensure that the integrity of new homes is maintained. You know, there's no doubt that building concerns have been raised for a number of years. We continue to look at the various issues that are being brought forward and have adapted some building code changes and will continue to do so.

Online Employer Records

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, it's been just over a month since this government posted the safety records of 140,000 employers in Alberta. Lots of information posted; however, some employers are questioning the accuracy of the records. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given these complaints which have been received, regardless of the source of that information how confident are you that the information posted is actually correct?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll let the member conclude for himself. We posted information about 140,000 employers that included some 3 million data points of interest or sections that you can search, and 50 or so employers have called with inaccuracies, and most of them were not. The employers simply were not aware of the fact that their employee died some 20 years later as the result of an occupational disease that he perhaps wasn't even aware of.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: wouldn't it have been better to potentially delay the release of this information until you really had a sense of confidence about these records?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm very confident: out of 140,000 employers and 3 million pieces of information, 50 complaints and most of them actually resolved. They weren't inaccuracies. Alberta right now is the only province in Canada that releases full information about safety records of all employers, and up to now we've already had about 15,000 hits on that website. It is information that is available to Albertans. I'm proud of it, and I'm glad that we released it as soon as we did.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I've got constituents that are suggesting that posting the information is great but that it doesn't go far enough, that we need more data to be better informed. What does the minister say to that?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, those are great suggestions. Keep in mind that we're pioneering here, that no other province releases information of this type at all. We have released the first generation, shall we call it, of this website. As we monitor now the usage and see how different groups use this information and for what purposes, we will be updating it, and perhaps more, additional information will be released in the future.

Hate Crimes

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, today happens to be the International Day for Tolerance, so I thought the Minister of Children and Youth Services might tolerate another question regarding answers she gave yesterday regarding the Devine family. My question to her is: did Alberta Children and Youth Services tell Mr. Devine's mother not to allow the parents to retrieve the children because the couple's social activism created an unsafe environment for the children?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to answer questions with this member. I did invite the member yesterday to speak with me after question period, but that didn't occur. If this question was framed in a way in which I could answer it, hon. member, I would. In the way that it's been asked, though, I won't be giving confidential information regarding the family to the Legislature on the floor of the Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll keep going with this because I think they're fairly answerable questions. To the same minister. My office spoke with the Devines, and they indicated that a social worker visited his mother's house in order to keep the children away from their parents. Yesterday you said that you were in the business of keeping families together. Doesn't the situation with the Devines prove otherwise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whenever our department through our child and family services authorities is involved with families and when it relates to children that are in need, that may require assistance through our department, as I said yesterday, our first priority is to keep families together. We have the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which, as you know, very much has the basic principle of assisting families with resources so that they can stay together.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary police say that the Devines broke no laws and that there was no clear reason to remove the children. If that's true, why did your staff victimize – and I'd say that: victimize – the family a second time by calling their parenting abilities into question, and when do you plan on apologizing to the Devines? Can you at least tell this honourable House that you have at least done that?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to you yesterday, the statement is highly inaccurate. It's incorrect, and it is inaccurate. I don't know if there's a ruling in the Assembly in regard to situations where somebody brings children to the floor of the Assembly, basing it on the name of a family, with information that is incorrect, but it is, and the person that should be apologizing is this member.

Affordable Housing in Calgary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, there's a serious crisis in the city of Calgary in the lack of affordable housing, including persons in my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill who are unemployed or working for minimum wage. The tendering and funding of a recently opened project, the Louise Station in Calgary, has far exceeded the budgeted amount. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Given the fiscal realities of today and the limited funds available to remedy the problem, how can the minister ensure that taxpayers are getting good value for their dollar?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for that question because, in particular, my number one priority is to deliver value to both clients and to taxpayers in our affordable housing plan. The municipal block funding plan was announced in 2007. It was $100 million per year for three years, and it reflected the reality of the time. During the boom time we needed to get as much affordable housing out as possible. I cancelled this program earlier this year because there are better ways to deliver affordable housing during this time. I can confirm the particular item he's talking about: $136,000 a door.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the minister continues to promise that the government is going to construct 11,000 affordable housing units across the province by 2012. How many of these units are going to be built in the city of Calgary, and will the minister ensure that the tendering process is going to be competitive with those other projects in the public and private sectors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must correct the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. It's not the government that actually builds these units; it's a partnership that we have with local nonprofits, for-profits, community organizations, and municipalities. The government can't do it all alone. I've seen projects where these local associations have in fact put up 25, even 35 per cent of the money themselves. We're acting in the best interests of the taxpayer and the best interests of the client.

Dr. Brown: Given that the municipal block funding program has ended and given that most successful brownfield developments in Canada do not include affordable housing, how does the minister propose to press ahead with plans for badly needed affordable housing in the city of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. Again, that is a good question because we actually have been mandated in my department to create 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012. We're at about 8,700. Calgary's amount: I don't have a specific number for this member, Mr. Speaker, but we are acting there on a per capita basis. I can tell you that on a go-forward basis we have an RFP process that ensures that these items are not sole sourced. In fact, taxpayers are getting the best value for their dollar. Our cost in the entire province is around $100,000 per door.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nonprofit organizations in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie and all over the province are feeling the pinch during these tough economic times. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. I'm sure that you're hearing similar concerns, Mr. Minister, during your regional dialogues as well. What are you doing to ensure the operation of these nonprofit organizations continues to be viable?

Mr. Blackett: Well, let me start off, Mr. Speaker, by saying thank you to the many Albertans who give their time, their skills, and their dollars on a regular basis. These are challenging times for everybody in the not-for-profit world, the private sector, and government alike, but we continue in our department to provide $86 million in grants to these great organizations. We streamlined the programs to reduce duplication and ensure that the available dollars are going to the people that need them. As a ministry and part of our government we're making sure that those dollars go to the most vulnerable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. The ministry's website says that the community spirit program's goal is to "increase individual charitable giving." How will this help the nonprofits struggling to operate?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, in 2009 our government created the community spirit donor program, and that was $20 million a year to encourage individuals to give more to our not-for-profit organizations. Over the last two years we've been able to give about $39 million to 3,200 organizations that help them do the great jobs that they do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. My final question to the same minister: what kind of tax credits are available to encourage continued growth of nonprofits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As it is on our website, we have the community spirit enhanced tax credit, which is unlike any other in the country. It is $80 million, which allows those individuals who give an amount in excess of $200 to get a 50 per cent tax receipt. That means 21 per cent comes from the province of Alberta; 29 per cent comes from the federal government. It's a chance to give for Alberta's charitable organizations and take that money from the federal government, which is Albertans' money coming back to work for them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 19 members were recognized today. There were 114 questions and responses. My feeling is that there are a few in the House that are feeling a little bit frisky today or aggressive today or enthusiastic today. We'll stop for 30 seconds, and then we'll continue with the Routine.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests before we continue?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the House. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you today and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two guests who attended the chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency rally on the steps of the Legislature today. The first one is my youngest brother, Don Mason, who lives in Spruce Grove. He's here today in support of efforts to provide a full range of treatment options for every Albertan with multiple sclerosis.

My other guest is Mark Power. Mark was recently diagnosed with MS and also attended the rally today in an effort to increase the awareness of CCSVI treatment as an option for citizens who have MS.

Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome both Don and Mark, who are seated in the public gallery, to the Legislature, and I would now ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through to members of the Assembly the South Asian Canadian Association members who are here from Calgary. This association has worked hard for the past two years to provide opportunities for educational, social, and recreational activities that promote the well-being of seniors, particularly in the communities of Pineridge, Monterey Park, Temple, and Whitehorn in Calgary. They've been tremendous assets within east Calgary. I'd like to ask them to rise as I announce their names: Mr. Harmohinder Plaha, Mr. Sam Sahota, Mr. Hardip Sidhu, Mr. Mohinder Singh, Mr. Harbhajan Kalkat, Mrs. Surinder Sidhu, and Mrs. Manjit K. Plaha. I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, did you have an introduction?

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Really quickly, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three very special people that weren't here earlier: Leah Moore, a grade 8 student from Muriel Clayton school, and her parents, Melinda and David. If they could please rise and receive warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll return now to Members' Statements, and I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

International Day for Tolerance

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 the United Nations General Assembly declared November 16 as the International Day for Tolerance. The purpose of this is to educate, discuss, and bring awareness to issues relating to prejudice and tolerance.

Mr. Speaker, our province is committed to creating a society where people are all welcomed and included in all aspects of the province. The government of Alberta works with other organizations, the community, municipalities, and many other organizations to help implement programs and services to combat discrimination and support the goal of creating welcoming and inclusive communities and workplaces. The Alberta Human Rights Commission works to foster equality and reduce discrimination. It offers resources about rights and responsibilities related to human rights and helps Albertans resolve human rights complaints.

Our province is supporting our communities and taking concrete steps towards being more inclusive in a number of ways. Two examples are the Coalition of Municipalities Against Racism and Discrimination and the multiyear welcoming and inclusive communities partnership between the government, the Alberta Human Rights Commission, and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. CMARD aims to have municipalities follow key principles in order to build communities that are respectful, safe, and welcoming. I'm pleased to announce that 10 Alberta municipalities, most recently Wetaskiwin in September of 2010, have joined the Alberta network of CMARD. These initiatives have been made possible in Alberta through funding support from the government's human rights and multiculturalism education fund. These assets help Alberta organizations build inclusive workplaces and communities and promote equality for all people.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta becomes ever richer in diversity, our government is committed to communities that are inclusive for all Albertans. Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately abandon plans to increase the role of private insurance in the [public] health care system, and instead, commit to strengthening the single-payer, public system.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise to present a petition that was delivered to me on the steps of the Legislature this morning – it's a biggie – by elected officials, parents, teachers, students, and Leah Moore, whom I introduced earlier, a determined grade 8 student who joins us in the House today as I present to this Assembly on her behalf a petition urging the government to build more schools in Airdrie. Leah is currently a student at Muriel Clayton middle school and has been personally affected by an overcrowded classroom caused by a critical shortage of schools in Airdrie. After learning that more students in Airdrie were facing the same problem, Leah took action. She collected signatures from across our community, and today I present that petition, which has been signed by over 3,300 Albertans. It's an honour and a privilege to call Leah Moore my constituent and friend, and on behalf of all students, parents, teachers, and citizens in Airdrie I thank her for her dedication.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to table five copies of a report entitled Alberta's International Strategy: Global Advocacy for Alberta. "Alberta will maintain a strong presence on the world stage, defend our export markets and promote our province and its products to a global market," our Premier said.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Victims Services status report for 2009-2010. Last year more than $9.2 million in grants were provided to programs and organizations that help victims of crime, and $10.5 million was provided in financial benefits to eligible victims of crime. More than 1,800 victim advocates and board members contributed 177,000 hours of volunteer time in 2009-2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the following annual reports: the 2009 report from the College of Dental Technologists of Alberta and the 2009 report from the College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta and, finally, the 2008-2009 report from the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta called Expert Caring: RNs Make a Difference. These groups all make a difference, and I thank them very much for their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As deputy chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities and on behalf of the council's chair, Marlin Styner, I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of our 2009-2010 annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter that I received from the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise regarding questions I had about ATB's financial risk achievement notes, which is another form of management bonuses.

My second tabling this afternoon is a letter from a constituent, Sheila Oliver, which I certainly have permission to table. Sheila Oliver is as concerned, of course, as a lot of people are about the government's plan to use Alberta Hospital Edmonton and their plans with the acute psychiatric care beds there.

My final tabling is also a letter. I have permission to table it in the House. It's from Mervin Prediger from Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mervin is also very concerned about the government's plans regarding the psychiatric care beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to table numerous letters brought to my attention by Mr. Trevor Alway, the president of the CAW local 4050. These are letters addressed to our hon. finance minister and the hon. Finance minister of Canada. It's calling on the "Minister of Finance for Alberta to support the initiatives laid out in the Canadian Labour Congress 'Retirement for Everyone' campaign which states that the doubling of CPP benefits would be financed through a modest and gradual increase in contributions over seven years." Interestingly, all of these letters were received from Alberta residents, and here are some of the locations: Acme, Airdrie, Alberta Beach, Beiseker, Bowden, Beaumont, Bocket, Calgary, Calmar, Canmore, Carstairs, Chestermere, Cochrane, Coleman, Cowley, Devon, Drumheller, Edmonton, Exshaw, Fort McMurray, Fort Saskatchewan, Hillcrest, Hinton, Langdon, Leduc, Lethbridge, Lundbreck, Millet, Morinville, Pincher Creek, Red Deer, Ryley, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, Thorsby, and Wetaskiwin.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Calgary-Varsity, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two categories of tablings. I am tabling five copies of the May-June 2010 edition of English Express, a free literacy learning newspaper for adults that also includes informative information about various communities in Alberta and incorporates actual life experiences and items.

My second tabling is five copies of the English Express teaching notes for the same edition for evaluation of comprehension and retention and improved understanding of Alberta culture and life.

My third tabling is a letter from Patsy Price, who is very concerned about the cancellation of the English Express and explains that special issues and inserts are funded outside of the $300,000 annual budget of this valuable literary resource.

The Speaker: You have more?

Mr. Chase: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, then, proceed quickly, please.

Mr. Chase: I will, Mr. Speaker. I indicated the categories. Thank you.

My first Bill 29 tabling is from Shaun Fluker, a law professor at the University of Calgary, who instructs the first-year law course in drafting legislation, asking to have Bill 29 withdrawn and stating that the bill would have received a failing grade in his class.

My second tabling is an article written by Shaun Fluker for the University of Calgary law blog noting the most significant changes to the existing framework that Bill 29 will make and that the bill will delegate most legal authority over protected areas to cabinet or the minister as the act will contain no rules on allowed or prohibited activities.

My next tabling is a letter from a psychology professor at The King's University College, Heather Looy, who lists a number of goals that should be paramount in the drafting of legislation to achieve sustainable land use, pleading that this act be redrafted and advising that many of her friends and colleagues are also disturbed about Bill 29.

My next tabling is a letter to the Premier from Catherine Shier of Edmonton, who was involved in the recent plan for parks process, indicating how far from the wishes of Albertans consulted Bill 29 is and asking that the legislation be withdrawn and that the public be consulted and listened to.

Next I would like to table a letter to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation from the Stewards of Alberta's Protected Areas Association, many of whom have worked with parks for years as volunteer stewards, who specify significant failures in the proposed legislation and make many suggestions for changes.

Next is a letter to the minister from the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, CPAWS, who represent thousands of Albertans who prioritize the ecological health of Alberta's wilderness and protected areas while recognizing the desire to recreate and feel connected to wilderness areas, providing a thorough analysis of problems with Bill 29.

Finally, I have a sampling of the hundreds of e-mails, none of which are form letters, I keep receiving from citizens disturbed and upset about Bill 29. From Airdrie Aaron Holmes; from Bragg Creek Ken Lukowiak; from Calgary Eric Lloyd, Tony Daffern, Jennifer Weihmann, Reagan Brown, Alison Seekra, Garry Shepherd, Darlene Brown, Ian Berard, Jean Fisher, Kim Parkin, Bob Saunders, U of C professor Dr. Pat Brennan, Siobhan Williams, Dr. David Cebuliak in the U of C Faculty of Medicine, Bruno Steppuhn, Rick Young of the Alberta Hiking Association, representing thousands of hikers, walkers, et cetera, Andrea Battistel, Don Harms, Sara Jordan-McLachlan; from Canmore Rosemary Power, Lin Heidt, Joe Kadi, Tracy Jacobson, Rosemary Langshaw Power, Eric Langshaw Power, Colin Ferguson; from Cochrane Marina Krainer; from Edmonton Sheelah Griffith, Ted Nanninga, Ron Ramsey, Deborah Hobbs, Margaret Fisher, M. Joyce, Peter Chapman, Linda Rosenstroem Chang, Jason Melnychuk, Eva Radford, Jamie Thompson, Niobe Thompson; from Red Deer Jean M. Kline; from Sherwood Park Harold Jacobsen; from Stony Plain Katelyn Kuzio; from Golden, B.C., Maryann Emery and Rob Wilson; from Montreal, Quebec, Danette MacKay; from Nimes, Quebec, Marianne Jarras; from Toronto, Ontario, Jay Macpherson; from Ottawa, Ontario, Laine Johnson; and from Shorewood, Wisconsin, Heather Henrickson.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following on the issue identified by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the results of a public opinion poll by the Environics Research Group taken in October. The poll asked several questions about Canada's pension system and found overwhelming support for expanding CPP benefits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a point of order to deal with this afternoon. The hon. Deputy Premier.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of order on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Leader of the Official Opposition, with the citation of Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) and Beauchesne's 489. In the run-up to his question to the Premier this afternoon he clearly stated the phrase: misleading the public. The hon. member well knows that the Premier of this province did not mislead the public, nor does he mislead this House, and that under Beauchesne's 489 the phrase is clearly unparliamentary and out of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader on this point.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I certainly heard something said.

The Speaker: I can help. Would you like me to tell you the phrase?

Ms Blakeman: I believe I heard the word, so thank you very much.

The Speaker: Okay. You've heard them, then. You don't need them. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: Don't get me in trouble here.

I've looked at the questions. The difficulty that's created here is that there's a specific term that is being used in long-term care and that has a very specific, recognized designation to it. Long-term care is a level of care, Mr. Speaker. It includes a copayment from the individual for room and board and a government copayment for medical care. It includes a designation of staffing ratios. It includes a number of very specific criteria that are tied to that phrase, and it is recognized in legislation. Long-term care means something very particular. That was the phrase that the Leader of the Official Opposition questioned the minister on.

What we're getting back from the Premier is that he is using, replacing, a different terminology like supportive living, which does not get people out of hospital. It is a higher level of functioning. It has different accommodation. It has a different payment scheme with it. It does not include a government copayment. It has different staffing ratios with it.

I knew there was a point of order coming. I'm sorry; I didn't look at Beauchesne, but thank you for the citation. I looked under the House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 503, chapter 11, on questions, detailing the criteria for it. We certainly satisfied the urgency, the best possible behaviour. We didn't yell. We didn't throw things. But we were trying to seek information. There was urgency for it. It was under the administrative ability of the person who answered the question. And it was brief; we didn't exceed the time limit.

Now, misleading the public: is that specifically listed in Beauchesne as a prohibited phrase? Indeed it is, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker himself is very kind in supplying us before every session with a long list of phrases which have and then later have not been ruled by various Speakers as prohibited language and now allowable language. So although it does appear in 489 under prohibited language, it appears in other lists as acceptable language. I would say that the leader of the Official Opposition should have said "sleight of hand" or "a shell game" or "a switch" or "knowingly replacing one term for another."

Therefore, on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I will withdraw his statement of misleading the public. He should have used other terminology. My apologies to the Premier.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. That settles that matter.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

[Adjourned debate November 2: Mr. Chase]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have a full 15 to go, I believe.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is the prescription or the solution, we need to look at the problems that preceded this prescription and this solution.

It's important to go back to approximately 1993, when there were very severe cuts taking place not only in health care but also in education, postsecondary as well as public education. Among the most detrimental effects of the cuts that led to Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, being proffered as a solution was the closure of three hospitals in Calgary. Half our hospitals were gone, and with them 1,500 beds. This compromise occurred in the late 1990s although the instigation of this solution happened much earlier.

Now, in concert with the closing of three of our hospitals, half our Calgary hospitals, the then minister of advanced education also closed down a number of medical training seats at universities throughout Alberta. Nurses were driven out of the province to seek employment. Those who remained were frequently hired only to be fired to be rehired. A number of them basically said, "I can't take this anymore," and went down to the States, where their qualifications were recognized.

Mr. Speaker, what happened was that, basically, our existing health system, particularly in Calgary, was compromised tremendously. The number of specialists who left from what remained – and that was at that point the Foothills, the Peter Lougheed, and the Rockyview, the only hospitals that remained in function along with the much smaller Children's hospital – caused a terrific drain on the individuals who could perform the necessary medical support.

Another function, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is supposedly attempting to correct is the fact that the red alerts, the burgundy alerts, occurred particularly in Calgary – and I'll move to Edmonton as well – because the distances to emergency centres were increased significantly because the options were reduced. In other words, ambulances, paramedics had to respond and deliver to considerably longer distances, putting patients at risk.

Mr. Speaker, along with the paramedic problem it seemed that one thing occurred on top of another. More recently the former minister of health attempted to standardize ambulance services across the province. The problem that was run into was that – again I'm using the Calgary example – in the case of Calgary the city of Calgary had budgeted to continue the responsibility of maintaining the ambulance systems. However, in other centres such as Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, and specifically in Lethbridge, where paramedics and firemen were one and the same and operated out of the same facility, there was confusion about dispatch and designation.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, since 1993 health care has been in an uproar. In Edmonton in 1993, as opposed to in Calgary, we had a very strong, in fact the strongest in the province's history, Liberal representation. Not to give credit completely to the Liberals, there was also a significant number of New Democratic Party members representing the city of Edmonton. The result of that championship of universal health care was that no hospitals in Edmonton were closed at that time, unlike the circumstance that occurred in Calgary, where with the exception of Gary Dickson waving the flag on behalf of Calgarians, other sitting MLAs basically allowed the closures to occur.

One of the largest monuments to lack of sustainability or long-term thinking was the blowing up of the General hospital, which contained wings that were newer than those currently existing in Foothills.

So this problem that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is attempting to fix has its origins going back a long time. What the government is attempting to do at this time is provide some sort of sustainability to the health care system. The minister of health has indicated that providing secure funding for five years for health will provide the sort of foundation, the security for moving forward and improving the health care delivery which Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, purports to achieve.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a teacher I've heard of these five-year promises; for example, the agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association that wages would be indexed to the weekly earnings and that the funding would continue to occur, yet the government clawed back $93 million in educational funding. Basically, until they were threatened with . . .

An Hon. Member: What? Check your facts.

Mr. Chase: Was it $83 million? The correct figure I'm willing to hear, Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: About $53 million.

Mr. Chase: Oh, $53 million. And where did the other $36 million come from?

The Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Through the chair. I do appreciate the Minister of Education indicating that a significant clawback of funding occurred from numerous school boards as well as lack of funding. This was one of the problems with the medical system. Given the example of what happened and the failure to follow through with the educational system, how can they have the trust that similar promises will be carried out over the five-year period?

Mr. Speaker, what we've seen very recently is Dr. Paul Parks putting out, basically, an emergency cry. He put it out in 2008, but in 2010 he released the personal horror stories of individuals who had not received timely treatment in the emergency departments in hospitals throughout this province.

As a former Alberta chair of Friends of Medicare that believes in universally funded, publicly funded health care – then that takes it back further. Not only publicly funded, but a key point is: publicly delivered and publicly administered. Mr. Speaker, Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, does not guarantee that health services will be publicly delivered.

We have been given promises of funding for five years, but we have seen, for example, the situation where the Grace hospital was bought out by a private company, HRC, in Calgary and was purported to have delivered more efficient hip and knee surgeries, not of the overnight-stay variety. Any complications, of course, came back into our health system. But somehow that health delivery that was touted as being top-notch was very dramatically cancelled, and Albertans do not know how much, somewhere between $4 million or $5 million, was involved in that out-of-court settlement. If that's part of the solution that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is proposing, then we're no farther along than we were before in terms of pursuing the improvement of the public delivery and efficiency of delivery of health care in Alberta.

The beds business, Mr. Speaker, I refer to as musical beds. When the hon. minister of health talks about eight beds here and 12 beds there and future beds here and so on, what we need is the staffing for those beds. I'm very proud of the service the Children's hospital, that is now located in Calgary-Varsity, provides, but that hospital was built with only 12 beds more than its predecessor had when the population of Calgary was a third of what it is. The idea is to service individuals and get them out of hospital as quickly as possible – and I appreciate that – but, especially with vulnerable children, waiting times of eight hours and more because of a lack of service providers and a lack of overnight bed stays is a concern.

This musical beds, Mr. Speaker. As I began, prior to the closure of the Grace, of the Holy Cross, of the General we had 1,500 more beds in Calgary. There was a priority placed on long-term care beds as opposed to assisted living beds. The former Auditor General, Fred Dunn, in 2005 did a study in terms of the delivery of long-term care in this province, and he found it woefully short. He raised the alarm. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, whom I am extremely grateful was included, toured the province. They heard the long-term care horror stories.

Mr. Speaker, it's 2010. We realize that seniors deserve better care; they deserve publicly funded and publicly supported care as opposed to being nicked and dined for every Depend, for every tube of toothpaste, for every wheeling down to the cafeteria. And if they want the luxury of more than one bath a week in assisted living, that doesn't have the professional support that long-term care has, they're expected to pay for that privilege of having a bath.

The long-term care facilities are trying their best, but when the term "bed blockers" is used to describe seniors who, out of no will of their own, are forced to take up space in acute-care beds because there's no provision for them in long-term care, then we need a solution, which I have not seen provided in Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act.

Since the centralization, since the development of the superboard, that has very few medical professionals on its advisory board, health care has been in a terrible flux within this province. Mr. Speaker, back in 2005, for example, Premier Klein promised a half a billion dollars, $500 million, for the extension of the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary. He promised similar funding for cancer centres in Edmonton. In 2010 with the Alberta Health Act, Bill 17, we don't have a solution for those individuals who are trying to seek treatment for cancer in a timely manner.

With regard to Bill 17, it does not resolve the 75 vice-presidents of health that are currently in the top echelons. [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar under this section.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was just getting to the point in his speech regarding 75 vice-presidents, I believe the hon. member indicated. In the health charter that's proposed in Bill 17, would the hon. member consider supporting the bill if there was a mechanism in that health charter that mandated chief executive officers of, for instance, the Alberta Health Services corporation and all senior management to post their expenses online as an initiative to try to rein in some of this excess spending that seems to be apparent at Alberta Health Services? How do you feel about that?

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you very much, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Something that I hope we're all trying to achieve and strive for in every piece of legislation we put forward is transparency and accountability. We have seen the Jack Davis settlements: on top of millions of dollars in bonus he receives $22,000 a month for the rest of his life. These excesses, unfortunately, are still there in terms of the number of vice-presidents, in terms of the bonuses for meeting targets, Mr. Speaker, targets that keep being lowered. So it's now considerably easier, for example, for Dr. Stephen Duckett to meet his emergency delivery times because they've been reduced.

Mr. Speaker, what we need is a surety. We need sustainability. I'm not saying to throw money at it, because the government threw $1.3 billion at the superboard to bail it out of its deficit as part of its reorganization. It's not the money; it's stability, and it's efficiency. In order to have that efficiency, we have to have medical representation on the advisory councils as part of the superboard. Doctors know their business. Economists can help, but medicine has to be the primary concern.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have another question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. It relates again to what perhaps should be in the health charter as described in Bill 17. Certainly, in the past the President of the Treasury Board has taken this side of the House's advice and posted online the complete blue books of the Legislative Assembly. It's helpful to taxpayers if they are interested in tracking government spending. Would the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity like to see Alberta Health Services follow the Alberta government's lead and commit to reporting all grants, expenses, contracts, and payments in the government blue books considering that the budget is in excess of or close to $9.8 billion in the last fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a member of Public Accounts and as deputy chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy accountability and transparency are absolutely essential. The government cannot say that they're spending 40 per cent of our legislative allowances on health care and then not account for where those dollars are being spent.

Now, a website is one way of accounting. Audits are another form of accounting on a regular basis, whether it's our current AG, Merwan Saher, or our former AG, Fred Dunn, both men for whom I have tremendous respect. But the accounting processes have not been resolved, Mr. Speaker. It's not a matter, as they say, of throwing money at the problem; it's a matter of accounting for the money that is being invested in health care. Albertans deserve the best.

The Speaker: Others under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join debate in second reading of Bill 17, Alberta Health Act. This is certainly an interesting proposed piece of legislation but not, unfortunately, one that I can be particularly supportive of. In general I, certainly, and the NDP caucus see this bill in many ways as a big distraction. It's as though it's been crafted by a government which is living in a bubble somewhere thinking: "You know, we have some issues in health care, so we're going to rewrite some legislation and create this framework, for what we don't know exactly but for something, because that's what Albertans are calling for. That's what they're reaching out to government for. That's what they said to us in hearings, that we need more legislation; we need another restatement of our framework." Yet I really think that that's not what Albertans have asked for. I do know at least some of the people that the government met with, although the process for consulting was nowhere nearly as transparent as we would have liked. Nonetheless, I'm pretty sure that this is not what they asked for.

Instead, what we have here is a bill which seems to me, too, is essentially divided into two parts. What we're dealing with today, in this session, is part 1 of a two-part process. Part 1 here is the sort of, for the most part, rather meaningless, empty assurance of the government's so-called commitment to health care, that really has no impact on the crises we are facing on the floors of our hospitals in our communities today.

That's what part 1 is. It's an attempt on the part of this government to assure Albertans that, really, the train has not gone off the rails. It's a somewhat hapless attempt, I would suggest, but I think that's what really generated this particular piece of legislation. The difficulty with it, of course, is that it is part 1 of a two-part process. The second part of the process involves eliminating and replacing the current legislative regime which governs the provision of health care in our province. That is the point at which the shoe will drop, as it were, where Albertans will be once again very disturbed to discover that the government is playing with yet more experimentation with their cherished health care system.

Of course, I also expect that we can rest assured that we will not see part 2 until after the next election because the government has a tendency as it gets closer and closer to an election to become much more soft around the edges and lots more sort of stuffed-animal looking and friendly and that everybody can kind of trust them.

Then we get through an election, and things happen. The former health minister is appointed, and he runs around saying things, and I quote: I expect that sooner or later other people are going to have to pay the costs of health care; it won't all be publicly funded. That's the kind of thing that we know is being considered by this government. Of course, even in Alberta the enthusiasm with which that particular minister went about his job – you know, eliminating the regional health boards, threatening the need for more private funding of health care – created a backlash, so of course he had to be removed. We were then presented with the softer, fuzzier version of the Tories and their pre-election self. Ultimately, what we are left with right now, then, is part 1, which I would simply suggest is the preparation for part 2, which we won't see until after the next election.

In this particular act what do we have? Well, we have a preamble that does not commit to maintaining or growing publicly delivered health care services. We have a preamble that commits in theory to the principles of the Canada Health Act although the fact of the matter is that most of those principles are protected through current pieces of legislation, which this particular piece of legislation threatens to displace at some point in the future. We have a charter, which sounds lovely – I mean, we all like charters – except that, you know, it has no legal force and effect. Again, it's just part of this attempt on the part of the government to assuage fears on the part of Albertans that they really are intentionally destroying our public health care system.

You know, it's no big surprise that Albertans would think that because if you look at how our public health system is being managed right now, it's really hard to think that anybody intended the level of chaos that we see right now. It's really hard not to expect, or suspect anyway, that part of the chaos is being allowed to occur in order to build what they hope will be a public appetite for more private services, privately funded as well as privately delivered. I don't think that Albertans will fall for that, but you have to wonder how it is that we've managed to get ourselves into such a poorly, poorly managed situation within our health care system. It just can't be something that anyone actually planned or intended. It is just too bad for that.

As well, of course, this act talks about having a health care advocate. Well, you know, I just don't know that there is anybody out there begging this government to replicate the dysfunctional model that we see demonstrated day in, day out through reliance on the children's advocate or the utilities advocate, these advocates who are forced to report through the minister about who they are supposed to be reporting, which is the most ridiculously conflicted process. You simply can't expect the person in that role to be able to truly provide transparent accountability or advocacy on the part of Albertans with respect to how that service is provided.

It's the creation of another little office that the government can put out a few press releases on because, you know, every now and then they run short of the ribbon that they use for all their various announcements for buildings which never actually materialize. If they need something else to announce, well, they can announce that the advocate has done something, but of course that's only after the advocate has consulted fully with the Public Affairs Bureau and the minister's office and yada, yada, yada. Anyway, it's all about creating a certain impression. It's truly not about providing a transparent or meaningful mechanism for Albertans to assert their right to an affordable, high-quality system of public health care.

In addition, the new act will give, as does almost every piece of legislation that this government brings into this House, additional regulation-making authority to the minister. I suspect that if the government keeps up this way, they will just stop sitting altogether. We'll have an election. Oh, I guess they'll have to bring in the budget. Well, we'll wait and see when exactly it is they give themselves the ability to budget through regulation. That probably is an E plus one manoeuvre for next term. Nonetheless, until then we're going to see ourselves having less and less need to come in here as they devolve more and more authority to their cabinet table. That's what's happening again in the regulations in this act.

One example, of course, is that they are giving themselves more authority to play around with the role of the professional colleges that govern the staff who provide health care within our system. I'm a little nervous of this because I know that sometimes the only barrier to drastic cost-cutting efforts within our health care system will be the professional code of ethics of the health care professionals who work within that system. Where a nurse, for instance, is told that she should be able to provide medication to and take blood from 50 patients, there is a point at which she can say: "No. You know, I really can't. My professional code of ethics prohibits me from attempting to do this." The same kind of thing exists with doctors, and it exists with many other professionals within our health care system. So I get a little worried when the government expands its ability to play around with the colleges' role in that regard and to do it all behind closed doors, along with everything else that they do.

There are a few things that we should be worried about, but again, as I say, I think most of this becomes relevant once we see part 2 of this little communications parade here, which I suspect we will not see until after the next election.

What is it that the government is distracting Albertans from? Well, we've had a lot of conversation about that, but ever so briefly, you know, we have emergency room wait times which are just growing, growing, growing every day, and it seems as though the government is completely incapable of addressing the problem. We have people, as a result, dying and suffering in our emergency rooms, the place where you should expect the most comprehensive care, but that's not happening in our emergency rooms. We have wait times for surgery across all types of surgery. We have gross discrepancies and disparities within our regional provision of health care. We have people in rural areas of the province who have to drive three hours one way once a week to get dialysis because they can't get it in their own communities.

We have, as we talked about today in the House, a shocking and shameful failure to provide anything bordering on comprehensive mental health treatment to the 1 in 5 Albertans who will suffer from a mental illness at some point in their life. A huge portion of the population will suffer from a mental illness, yet we have wait times in every aspect of providing treatment for that concern. We have done nothing to deal with it, and we have fallen well behind the rest of the country in that regard. This government has done nothing about it even though they've known about it for decades.

Then, of course, we have the problem with long-term care and continuing care for our aging seniors population. We had discussion about that again today, and the government steadfastly holds on to its little message box mantra: let's just talk about continuing care, and hopefully no one will notice that we're actually talking about putting people in places that don't actually have health care professionals around, where they don't actually get anything bordering on the kind of care that they need, so we'll just use that cute language, continuing care, and stop telling Albertans that we're not really going to build any more beds that have nurses and LPNs attached to them to give them the kind of medical treatment they require in order to leave the acute-care beds that they are currently occupying. That's a problem that's been going on for a long time.

Of course, again, in their standard process, their standard way of operating, leading up to the last election the government promised to build 600, 800 – I can't remember which – new long-term care beds, and immediately after the election they, quote, reprofiled them and decided to make them into something else. They never built those beds, tried to close some other ones – I think the net situation that we're in right now is a slight decrease from where we were after the last election – and instead want to replace them with privately run multistar hotel type scenarios, where if you need someone to help you to get to where you might try having a meal, you'll need to pay extra. This is the kind of process that the government envisions for our growing seniors population, and this will have profound impacts on our health care system. This is why the government wants to move away from clearly delineating what is health care and what is not and what is publicly funded and what is not, because they think we need to make sure that citizens pay more for their health care out of pocket.

The NDP last fall did do a tour on health care. We spoke to Albertans across the province, and we created a report as a result. I won't get a chance to speak about what our recommendations were in great detail because I see I have about 45 seconds left within which to speak. We spoke to Albertans across the province, and as a result of that we came up with a number of recommendations that would actually see significant improvements to our health care system, some of which could actually have been addressed through legislation but clearly are not in this case. It's really hard to go through them all at this point, but let me just say that were one to go to our website and look for that report, you would see a report that consists of roughly 30 recommendations to substantively improve our public health care system.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you want to speak on the bill?

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to ask the hon. member a question, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, under 29(2)(a), of course. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's speech regarding Bill 17. Certainly, I was very interested to get more details on her opinion on why this bill is a deflection or a diversion from the real issues around health care, particularly with emergency room wait times. We all know that it seems to be getting worse and worse. The government doesn't seem to be able to solve that problem along with many other problems that they themselves have created through their policies and their lack of management and direction towards our public health care system. Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member: given that the Norwood Glenrose long-term care facility, that was supposedly to be up and running and operated by Alberta Health Services, has been on hold – this is a $68 million facility; it was originally scheduled for between the years 2008 and 2010, as the hon. member correctly mentioned earlier – does the hon. member think that if this facility was built like it was supposed to be built, we would not be facing the emergency room crisis that we're currently facing at this very moment?

Ms. Notley: Well, I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for asking that question because I think, you know, he certainly identifies one of several critical reasons why we have this gross example of mismanagement with respect to our ER wait times and acute-care bed shortages right now. There's no question that, absolutely, what we see right now is that there is a ridiculous number of seniors who are in our acute-care hospitals receiving treatment because they cannot get the treatment that they require in other parts of the community.

You know, every time we raise the issue of continuing care versus long-term care, the Premier falls back on this empty mantra that somehow we're begging for people to be institutionalized, which I actually think is quite insulting. When I've talked to seniors about how that's the Premier's response to the call for long-term care beds, they get very, very angry. They talk about how while they're sitting in their apartment waiting for their home-care nurse, who they only get to see once a week – and they're paying extra for home care to come in there – they can't move around their apartment; they often aren't able to eat adequately; they're often spending hours, days, you know, suffering from incontinence. All these things are happening, and all these things contribute to their repeated trips to the hospital, the circle of trips to the hospital, because they don't have the treatment that they need to keep them out of the hospital.

Why does that happen? Because there are no beds with higher levels of treatment available to them. Why are there no beds? Because the government promised them and then broke their promise and continues to break their promise and, instead, is trying to build hotel rooms where people will buy extra care, and many people simply can't afford that. Certainly, our current seniors cannot afford that.

Instead, they go back to places where they don't have adequate medical care, and they get sick again, and they go back into the hospital, and they take up a bed in an acute-care hospital trying to recover from the illness that arose from the lack of care and the neglect that they suffered as a result of this government's mismanagement of seniors' health care, that has been going on systemically for years and is only going to get worse. The government's own figures show that it's going to get worse because our seniors population is booming, and they have made no plans to increase our home care, to increase long-term care and extended care settings, where people get the medical treatment they require.

Back to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, we would have far fewer problems if the government had kept any of its many promises to provide the care that our seniors need, but since they did not keep those promises, we have the crisis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the bill.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and join debate on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, at second reading. I want to acknowledge the contributions of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to the debate. I thought that that was very well argued, and I didn't see anything in there that I would argue too strenuously with.

I do want to try and walk a bit of a fine line here as we debate Bill 17 because out in the real world, Mr. Speaker, one of the realities is that the debate over health care has become so polarized that we're not getting anywhere with this. I think a bill like Bill 17 is one of the results that you see of the reality of the polarized debate on health care. On the one side you have the people who say that the system is broken and it's got to be, you know, reformed, changed, lock, stock, and barrel: throw the baby out with the bathwater, privatize this, change that, and so on and so forth. On the other side you have the people who cleave to the bosom of the status quo. The people of Alberta know that neither approach is going to solve the problems that we face in health care in this province or, frankly, in most of the world. So we can't just stick with same old same old, but we have to stick with the parts of same old same old that work. When we look at the administration of same old same old, that's where we see that there are some real, real problems.

Now, the minister of health, in introducing the bill at second reading, made a comment – and I'm quoting from Hansard of November 2 – that “Albertans need to trust their health system and have confidence in how the health system is governed and administered.” So I'll give the minister some marks for that. He at least recognizes the crisis of confidence that exists in this province around the administration of our public health care system. You go out, you talk to most Albertans, and they'll tell you that you can still get excellent care in our acute-care system or in our primary care system if you can just find the magic password, the magic key that actually gets you access to the system.

What we've been talking about primarily in question period since we came back into the House this fall has been the access problem, I think most acutely demonstrated in the ERs of this province right now. But that's a symptom, Mr. Speaker, of what's going on and what's ailing the health system throughout. The access problem is a failure of administration. It's a failure of the bureaucracy around health care in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I went looking for that very famous medical phrase that is a cornerstone of medical ethics, that all medical students are taught in medical school, that is a fundamental principle for emergency medical services in this province, in this country, around the world. It is: first, do no harm. First, do no harm. I was surprised to find out another way to state that. I think that normally we who are not doctors, when we hear that phrase spoken, think that what that means to a medical doctor is: first, don't do anything that's going to make the situation worse. But it actually goes a little deeper than that.

Another way to state it is that given an existing problem, it might be better not to do something or even to do nothing than to risk causing more harm than good. I sort of go: “Whoa. Okay. What does that mean, really?” Well, you think about it, give it a few seconds, and you realize that there is logic in that. The patient presents, and, you know, this is not the patient presenting in the waiting room at ER at the Rockyview and you promising to see him within the next 24 hours or so. This is when the patient has gotten in front of at least a triage nurse, hopefully a doctor, and there's been some attempt at medical diagnosis here. What it's really saying is that if you don't know for sure what's wrong here but you're pretty sure that there may be something more wrong than what is obvious from the outward symptoms, then maybe you just need to hang on for a bit and not do anything until you can better diagnose the situation.

I think that works in the practice of medicine as it relates from the doctor to the patient, from the medical professional to the patient. I don't think that it should have any place in the administration of health care. When I look at a bill like Bill 17, I'm afraid that this is what we're being given. Well, okay; it might be better to do nothing than risk causing more harm than good. It might be better to do nothing than to do something, because this bill does nothing, absolutely nothing. Well, I won't say “absolutely nothing.” It does a couple of things. It's clear that there was some consultation with Albertans by the governing party, not just by the third party, and congratulations to both of them for doing that. Albertans were consulted, and there's always some merit to that.

Ms Notley: The fourth party.

Mr. Taylor: Sorry. The fourth party. The member of the fourth party corrected me, which is good.

Guiding principles can serve a function over the long term – there's no question about that – but this bill fails to address any of the imminent issues with Alberta's health care system. However, I'm willing to grant that it may provide a stepping stone to creating a more holistic approach to health care in the long-term future. Unfortunately, that doesn't do anything for the hundreds of people who are stuck today in the waiting room at the Rockyview and the Royal Alex and all the other hospitals of this province that have emergency rooms. They need help now.

This bill may have a long-term function and a long-term purpose, and that purpose and function may be positive, but it doesn't do anything to deal with the situation as we face it now. Establishing a health charter: well, maybe that's something that Albertans want. Certainly, the report Putting People First argues that they really do want that, that they really heard that.

I know that the fourth party, when they went out and did their consultations, didn't hear from anybody saying: hey, give me a health charter, and I'll be a happy Albertan. They heard, like I hear when I door-knock, like I hear when I talk to constituents, like I hear when I talk to Albertans who are concerned about health care: “I want a family doctor; I can't find one. I want to be able to get timely treatment when I'm sick or when I think I might be sick. I don't want to have to wait for a day or more in emergency to be seen by somebody. If I'm having psychiatric, mental problems, I want to be assured that they will be addressed. If I'm old, I'm sick, and I need long-term care with appropriate medical components to that, I want to know that I can get that. I want to know that my parents can get that. I don't care how fancy the hotel is. I don't want them in a hotel when they need medical care. I want them to be able to get what they need and have it covered by the Canada Health Act.” I think those are fair things to ask.

Okay. Let's assume that the people of Alberta really do want a health charter. You know, frankly, the health charter as it's spelled out in Putting People First is not earth-shattering, but I suppose it ain't bad for a health charter. But we don't get a health charter out of Bill 17. What we get is a commitment that if Bill 17 passes, the minister will have to go out there and do some more consultations and come up with one. I would have much preferred to see a health charter as part and parcel of this bill. If the health charter is as important as this bill and the public hearings, the public consultations that led to this bill purport to argue that it is, I think it should be in the legislation. I think it should be part of legislation. The big charter in this country, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is even beyond legislation. It's constitutional. It is the law to which all other laws must abide and respond and obey. That's good, I guess.

But this charter: I mean, it doesn't exist yet. I'm not really sure how it's going to be brought in or when. There doesn't seem to be any particular deadline to say: we must have a charter by this time. The charter has next to no authority. The health advocate, which is created to ensure that the charter is followed, has the power to make recommendations, has the power to report issues if the health advocate wants to or if the minister asks, and if the minister wants to, the minister can take action or not. I think that to be an effective position, the advocate needs the ability and the requirement to take some action. I understand that Albertans don't want to have to go to court every time they've got a problem with the medical system — that's good — but they need a more concrete, more definitive way of seeing that their complaints are dealt with and dealt with effectively and dealt with in a timely manner.

I think the desire to define the role of those few health authorities we have left is also valuable. For instance, with Alberta Health Services and the Health Quality Council of Alberta kind of tussling right now, trying to find their respective roles and responsibilities after the significant overhaul of the health care system, the ability to inject some clarity would be helpful. But I think this, too, is vaguely worded within the bill, and it doesn't ensure that clarity and co-ordination will be provided. A guaranteed review in order to clarify roles and responsibilities in the health care system would certainly provide more certainty and direction to a system that is on the edge of faltering.

That's what we really come back to, Mr. Speaker, the notion that this health care system of ours, of which most Albertans, most Canadians — I won't say all — are justifiably proud, is in rough shape these days, and the crisis in ER is the most outward, most visible symptom of that. The crisis in ER is caused by an incredibly bad case of constipation in the system. You have beds blocked by seniors who need long-term care, not continuing care but long-term care, and they can't find it. You know, if you move them out of the hospital into a continuing care arrangement, into an assisted living arrangement, they're just going to be back in the hospital in a few weeks or a few days because they're still sick, and they'll be tying up beds again. You've got beds in ER tied up by homeless people, by people with mental health issues, by people with all sorts of issues that our society, our province is not sufficiently addressing.

We have people accessing our health care system, whether that's our emergency rooms in our acute-care system or our primary care networks or whatever they can find, a walk-in clinic in the middle of the night, who are accessing our health care system more than average because of poverty issues, because they didn't have enough to eat as children, because of issues related to their socioeconomic condition that simply render them less healthy than people who are doing better, and this bill in its current form doesn't really seem to address any of that.

I don't know if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has got it absolutely right or not that this is part 1 of a two-part conspiracy. I don't know whether this is conspiracy or incompetence or a little bit of both or a milder version of either. Every time this government tries to do something, no matter how ill-informed or ill-advised that may be, to reform the health care system in this province, I'm not sure that it necessarily follows that they're trying to set us up for privatization.

I think that when we merged the nine health boards and the Cancer Board and AADAC into the superboard, that looks a lot more like something that Moscow would have come up with in the '60s or '70s under Khrushchev or Brezhnev than any kind of setup to privatize the system, quite frankly. It's central planning, central control, bureaucratic control taking the authority of doctors and nurses to make the right kind of front-line judgment calls, because they're there and can see what's going on, away from them and investing it in some bureaucrat parked who knows where. It might as well be on Mars or 40,000 feet over Red Deer for all it matters because they're that remote from the doctor-patient relationship.

I think this bill on the face of it isn't going to do any harm if we pass it. I don't think it's going to do any good either. I don't think that it necessarily sets us up for a part 2 that's going to be any more conclusive than part 1 was because I don't see a lot of conclusiveness. Oh, I see some decisive action from time to time. Certainly, the creation of the Alberta health superboard was decisive action. It was one of the most boneheaded decisions I have ever seen in my life, but it was decisive action.

This bill doesn't do anything. I don't know, as we get into committee, whether we're going to be able to amend this bill, propose amendments that will in some way add some meat to the bones of this bill, in some way bring it down to a point where it intersects with where people live their lives, but I hope we can do something about that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, 29(2)(a)? Five minutes.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has been a champion in this Assembly for pharmaceutical treatment, particularly in the case of rare forms of cancer. We know that the rapidly rising costs of pharmaceuticals are one of the biggest concerns faced in this province.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there has been a recent case of a woman in Edmonton who, again, has a rare form of cancer and whose pharmaceuticals and treatments are not covered by the Alberta health plan. My question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie would be if he has thoughts about drug coverage and the possibility of either a national pharmacare program or at least a regional Saskatchewan-B.C.-Alberta pharmaceutical program that could potentially buy in bulk and reduce drug costs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Varsity for that question. I think it's a good one. Yeah, Member, I can't keep running to the health minister asking for coverage of this drug and that drug and the next drug for rare forms of cancer when those drugs are very expensive and expect that we're actually making the system better with each one of these one-offs.

I'll give the nod to Bill 17 for trying to take, at least in broad principle and broad theory, a holistic approach to health care reform and health care delivery in this province. We do need to take a holistic approach to it, and a national pharmacare program, ideally, or certainly at minimum a regional pharmacare program is, I think, a fundamental part of that. I absolutely support that idea. National would be better, in my view, than regional simply because if there are savings to be had by buying in bulk on behalf of four provinces, then there are greater savings to be had by buying in bulk on behalf of 10 provinces and three territories. It's the old volume discount approach that many furniture dealers have yelled at us about over the radio time after time after time in commercials. It's a good idea. It's an essential idea.

We know that the cost of pharmaceuticals is one of the fastest, if not the fastest, drivers of health care cost escalation. In part, what we're seeing happen here is that health care and our ability to diagnose and treat very complex conditions with very sophisticated medicine and very sophisticated treatments of various sorts has massively outpaced what the architects of public health care in this country envisioned 50, 60 years ago when they came up with the concept. Tommy Douglas did not know when he came up with the idea for medicare that it would ever be possible to perform heart transplants. He did not know that there would be drugs like Abilify and the one that was in the news today – I forget the name of it – that would perform the miracles that they seem to perform in some cases yet would be as costly as they are.

Yes, I come back to this notion that we can't just keep going back with one-offs and saying: "Okay. Now we need to improve this drug. Now we need to absorb the costs of that drug." We have to take a more holistic approach to it. It makes sense to team up with the other provinces and territories and try to do this on a national basis, I think.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Again, through the Speaker, I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie would support the notion that if a particular health service delivery, for example gastroparesis, that is currently not treatable in Alberta – should Alberta pay the bill if that treatment could be delivered in another province of Canada? Failing that, if our system lacks the expertise, do you think that the cost of treatment should be provided for, say, travelling down to the Mayo Clinic, if that's what it takes? Obviously, first, I'd like to see the expertise encouraged through both secondary training and the hiring of physicians in Alberta. Failing that, would he consider accounting for patients' services? [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise for my first occasion on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, an important act, to be sure, one that emphasizes a key element that Albertans have come to expect and pay for in our current province, in our country, and one with a long and proud tradition in Canada, unique perhaps in North America in its basic principles, the five principles that many people still champion and some across the floor are less sure about but that we on this side of the House continue to endorse and support: comprehensiveness, universality, public administration, portability, and accessibility. These five principles are really so ingrained in the Canadian ethic that all attempts to try to subvert these and undermine the principles of public funding and public delivery have failed in Alberta, and this particular government has tried on numerous occasions to do so to their shame and to their failure.

This legislation I think does in a practical way bring together some loose and somewhat connected health acts, which is perhaps helpful from an administrative point of view. But I think most Albertans are wondering: why now, and how is this going to really improve the most fundamental questions around access and quality and cost-effective spending? Alberta is renowned in the country for spending more money per capita than any other jurisdiction. "What are we getting for it?" I guess people are asking. How is it that we can spend so much money and get so little in terms of improved wait times, in terms of the quality that both professionals can be proud of and patients can appreciate? There's a reassurance that the dollars spent are actually maximizing the opportunities on investment both in terms of prevention of conditions and education around some of the issues that really are preventable.

Much of the illness in our society is preventable. In terms of treatment are we getting the best bang for the buck? In terms of evidence-based treatment programs and in terms of long-term care and rehabilitation how do our investments here in these key areas, including palliative care as the end point in life, compare to others, the best in the world? Are we actually looking at the best in the world and learning from the best in the world as opposed to simply experimenting in our health care system and, in the case of the last health minister, the current Energy minister, blowing up the old system and starting with a totally new experiment that pushes us, in fact, to the edge of a precipice?

Indeed, we're right over the precipice now, seeing tremendous stress and strain and suffering and preventable deaths in our emergency departments because of the basic incompetence and arrogance that led to one man basically deciding on the basis of his own experience, what experience we don't know, that we were going to make a grand experiment in Canada and unify all nine health regions into one and somehow manage this largest merger in Canadian history – if one were looking at other mergers that have happened, this actually, as I understand it, is the largest merger in Canadian history – without any evidence, without any plan, with no transition plan, and without a clear sense of how we were going to spend the money more wisely and get better results at the end of the day.

That's the past. We have to go forward. We have to make things work. I'm sure the other side is tired of our ranting and railing against what we see as gross incompetence and arrogance and the huge price, not only a material price but a human price, that we're hearing about every day not only from my colleagues in the medical and nursing and paramedical professions but also from patients who see family members suffering for lengthy, lengthy periods in emergency departments or languishing on wards where they don't have sufficient staff or hanging out in hallways, waiting for testing, waiting for appropriate therapy.

So that's the backdrop, I guess, to thinking about a bill that is ostensibly about improving our health care system. Indeed, it does bring together the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, the Hospitals Act, the Health Care Protection Act, the Nursing Homes Act, and the Health Insurance Premiums Act. There is some logic and some efficiency in doing so. There is also some interesting work done in relation to a health charter, which basically sets out what every individual and their family members could expect from a health care system today and what they must demand if it's not provided.

The irony, of course, is that you can demand all you want. The system is incapable of providing some of the basic services in this province now. We have gone back 30, 40 years, even before medicare, as a result of some of the changes we've seen today. In terms of health outcomes, in terms of access, and in terms of cost benefit we have lost ground significantly in Alberta. Understandably, many people look with some skepticism at this new health act and ask the questions: why now, and how is this going to improve access, quality, and cost effectiveness? It certainly remains to be seen.

Under this new act the minister will also have the authority to order all the bodies mentioned above to create and adopt the health charter. The Alberta Health Act does not contain a draft health charter; that still is in the works.

The idea of a health advocate is a good one. Who doesn't want someone to speak up for them and to challenge a system that's not working. I guess the question is: what power will that individual have, and what recourse do people have when the advocate and their voices go unheard and unheeded?

The Alberta Health Act will also allow the minister to collect information on the health service, the hospital and clinic operators, the health providers, the professional colleges, and that is certainly going to improve efficiency in terms of a database and the ability to monitor the activities and the outcomes of the various players in the health care system. But we're a long way off from seeing that pay dividends in terms of the three priorities: access, quality, and cost-effective spending.

I will say that one of the most distressing parts of the changes we've witnessed in the health care system these last few years has been the cuts to prevention programs. It seems to have been lost on the former health minister, not so much on the current minister, that prevention actually costs something, and it actually returns on the investment significantly. When you deal with children in poverty and you get their bellies full and you get them into school and you deal with any emotional and learning problems, when you help single mothers who are struggling to create the conditions for a healthy environment, when you help that individual and others with disabling conditions or those with mental illness or addictions, when you actually help these people to move beyond that condition to a place where they feel a sense of clarity and purpose and satisfaction in their life and start giving back to society, that's when you start to see returns on investment.

Unfortunately, this mean-spirited government has decided in its wisdom to cut the kind of services that would bring people to a level of capacity and satisfaction and contribution that would give them a level of health that would cost us nothing. It's an investment in people; it's not an expense. Unfortunately, what I witnessed in the last six years of my time in the Legislature is a government that's bent on cutting costs, not recognizing that people are an investment that will return three, four, sevenfold in terms of the investment.

The Perry preschool project out of the U.S. back in the '70s followed the poorest children in a community for 25 years. Those poorest children were broken into two groups: a group that was given enhanced support, nutrition, opportunity to learn, early intervention into problems; and the other group, where no extra supports were given. The cost for the principle was $1 per child to improve this, and the return on investment in terms of educational success, less criminal activity, employment, and lower mental illness rates was a return of $7 per that $1 investment. That was the seminal study out of the U.S. that showed the importance of investing in early childhood, investing in poverty reduction, investing in families.

Those fundamentals around health seem to be lost on this government, who has invested so heavily and so inappropriately in high-tech medicine and fails to understand that we need to get back to basics. We have abandoned prevention. We have all but abandoned home care. We have all but abandoned seniors and active-living programs to keep them well. We have not supported people in terms of their optimal learning environments, and we are paying a deep price for that. As a result, we are seeing the highest rates of family violence, depression, anxiety, addiction, including alcoholism, and suicide in some age groups. So very short-term thinking, Mr. Speaker, that many, many Albertans are fed up with and certainly frustrated that there's a lack of willingness to use evidence to make decisions in this government.

While this bill brings together some wonderful principles and values, where the rubber hits the road is the question.

Mr. MacDonald: Where does the rubber hit the road?

Dr. Swann: The rubber hits the road on extended wait times in emergency, frustrated professionals, some of whom are leaving the province, some of whom are retiring early – certainly, they're leaving work as soon as they can get out of the place to reduce their own stress levels – greater rates of illness and absenteeism among our professionals, and a growing chorus of patients who are saying: "This is not good enough. This is not what we pay for. This is not acceptable in 2010 Alberta."

Certainly, we on this side of the House will be looking at this bill very closely for very practical ways in which we are supporting people in reaching their own health and then providing the necessary services to intervene early when something breaks down and then following up with those who have a chronic illness or disability, to make sure that they are maximizing their physical and mental and spiritual capabilities, to keep them well, to keep them satisfied and contributing members of our society.

There's a real recognition across the health literature today that the Perry preschool program, which looked at the whole array of supports for people, relates to what's called the social determinants of health. Again, it is incumbent on a government that says it's acting in the public interest to learn about the social determinants and invest in the social determinants, that include recognition of special challenges, economic supports where needed, the importance of early childhood experiences, both the physical and mental environment for children, the critical nature of employment and fair wage with employment to ensure that people have a dignified standard of living, and of course the issues of gender and culture and how those impact in specific cultures in specific parts of the province, how those may impact people's health practices, their beliefs, their values, and their need for different kinds of support.

Essentially, it's looking for a health system that looks beyond the fix, looks beyond the treatment after the breakdown but looks at the conditions in which people live and the degree to which communities are encouraged to develop the skills themselves to support each other, to identify environmental threats to health, to identify social and economic barriers for people's well-being, and to address those in a systematic way that recognizes that we are saving money in the long term, saving lives, and saving the quality of people's lives and their productive ability in our economic system if we address some of these determinants of health.

We've not seen that. Instead, what we've seen in this government is a cut of almost 50 per cent to the prevention services available to people in this province. And with the loss of family physicians and the cuts in home care services this is a triple whammy that leaves people too often vulnerable, seeking help in emergency departments and going to the wrong place for the wrong conditions instead of allowing for the basic primary care, what we call getting back to basics, to ensure that people have an early recourse and early intervention before something becomes a serious problem.

I had a colleague, in fact, a medical colleague, who because of the strains on the system was not able to get in to see a heart specialist at a time when he started having symptoms. Three weeks later, when he finally got in, he of course had some heart damage from a blockage in his coronary artery. And this is a physician. That illustrates to me that when someone who has as easy access to the health care system as a physician can't get in because of barriers that this government has basically created, we are in serious trouble. The average person on the street, the average worker, the average mom has a tremendous set of hurdles to jump through to get appropriate or timely care. If he had gotten in within a day or two, this damage to his heart would not have happened. He would have had a stent put into his coronary artery, and the damage would have been averted. That story is all too common in this province.

Another friend had progressive gallbladder problems and tried repeatedly – went to emergency, was put on the wait-list, waited six weeks to get in for his gallbladder surgery. It had started to leak and rupture at that time and ended up infecting his whole abdomen. He spent, I think, roughly six weeks in hospital on intravenous antibiotics, developed complications from the antibiotics, and could have died. Fortunately, the medications and the care pulled him through, but that's another example of where if things are not working, we compound the cost, the suffering, and the risk to people's health.

I have very little else to say about the Alberta Health Act except that it follows, for the most part, the principles and values of the Canada Health Act. At the same time, we recognize that privatization of this health system goes on apace. We saw recently with the Health Resource Centre out of Calgary, a private deal, private assurances that they'd have all the surgery they wanted. Suddenly the rug was pulled out from under them, and they ended up in bankruptcy, an illustration of a government that doesn't know where it's going in health care, that is dabbling with a number of different private providers at the same time as saying that it honours the principles of the Canada Health Act and basically snubs its nose at Albertans and the federal government in doing so.

I suppose the principle here is that if you mismanage the public system badly enough, people will accept private delivery of health care services. That's certainly what I've witnessed in the last 10 years I've been involved in health care: a growing trend to privatization because the public system is not working. And it's not working because we have incompetent management of our health care system: 11 different deputy ministers over 10 years, three major disruptions in the system in 15 years. Just when teams and lines of authority and communications plans and work plans were set in place, this government has blown up the system again and created the kind of chaos that is severely undermining the morale of professionals in the system.

Regardless of what we do and the merits of some of this bill, Albertans in the main and certainly the professionals that I talk to are asking these fundamental questions: will this improve the efficiency of flow of patients and the quality of care? Will we spend money more wisely after this bill is passed? I can't reassure them that that would be the case.

The Alberta Liberal caucus has consistently argued that the health advocate should be independent of the government, and that's one of the areas of concern that, clearly, we will be raising and suggesting for amendment. We've seen evidence that the children's advocate reporting to the minister has failed to address the best interests of Albertans, and that's certainly an area where we think there should be change in the Alberta Health Act to ensure independence and reporting to the Legislature so that people can have confidence in both the role and the actual functioning of that individual.

The section on roles and responsibilities for the organizations that are already extant and reiterated in this bill are already there under existing legislation and certainly do appear to be entirely redundant.

The last issue that we have with the bill is the exemptions that the minister can make to having public input on proposed legislation. If the government truly wanted transparency in the way the health care system is governed, then they would not have the possible loopholes to public input. Surely, if there's anything this government has learned, it is that people are pretty cynical about public consultations that don't result in change. In response the government will most likely state that if a regulation is created without public input, then the minister must post notice of the decision. But in the end what good is posting after the decision has been made?

The political cynicism has to be part and parcel of what we deal with today in Alberta politics, and a government that's been in place for 39 years clearly has lost a sense of connection to key issues that Albertans care about. I think that's the message that more and more Albertans are giving us on this side of the House, that the nominal approach to consultation has not been appreciated. It's been seen as window dressing and lacking any meaning or not translating into real decisions in the public interest. There's a strong sense that people don't see a vision in this province not only for health care but for an economic, environmental, or social future. I guess what we're hearing in terms of Albertans is a very passionate plea for a longer term commitment to the public interest, that includes most fundamentally the basic services of health care, public education, and supports for people who can't support themselves.

Again, the underlying theme here is the recognition that this government has stopped doing its work, stopped listening to evidence, stopped listening to the professionals and the science, gone ahead without even following the most basic of business principles, which would put in place a plan that could be reviewed and debated, a set of monitoring benchmarks to which it could be held accountable and an oversight mechanism that says whether we're meeting those benchmarks or not and what the consequences of not meeting those benchmarks would be.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 has lots of good phrases, lots of good principles. It reiterates a lot of issues that are already covered in some of the other acts. It recognizes the need for a patient charter and a patient advocate. Who could argue with that? But what I think most of us, including Albertans and the professionals involved in the health care system, want to know is: how is that going to change the reality on the ground? That's where people fail to get attention when they need it, where they need it. They fail to get access to the testing facilities appropriately and in a cost-effective way. The treatments often come late, with significant cost and complications because of the failure to understand the complexity of the system and the interconnections of the prevention, the primary care, the diagnostic, the treatment, and the rehabilitation parts of the system, that all have to work together. They have to communicate, and the different parts of the province need to be able to make some of the choices around provision of services and investigations and treatment programs and support in the community that are appropriate to those regions.

My final comments, I guess, would relate to the re-disorganization that has been foisted upon us and the attempts by a single health services board to manage a massive organization with many, many variables, many unique needs in different parts of the province and fundamentally approach it as a cost-cutting exercise, without recognizing the extreme complexity, the importance of teamwork, good planning, and timely action where changes are needed, not action that comes a month late through a single health board that is reviewing too many issues and trying to micromanage, and a failure, really, of acknowledging the broad roots of health and our need to invest in health as opposed to a sickness care system, that has now itself become sick and is creating as much illness as it is solving.

So I have great reservations about the bill. I think it's important that we have some of these debates here, and I hope the government is listening not only to us on the opposition side but to the many, many citizens in this province who are saying: not good enough.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for his many words of input there. I have one question. You made comments on the problems with the centralized health board and the importance of local community. Would you agree with the Wildrose that the superboard doesn't function and that we need to disband that and go back to a more local system? What are your thoughts? We see that as one of the major problems, the centralization, the bureaucracy, the decision-making, just absolutely bringing everything to a stop. Even good ideas can't come forward because they don't want to allow that. Whereas if the different regions had that – what are your thoughts on the superboard and where we should go with that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for the question. It's a critical question at this time, particularly since there's so much chaos still in the system. I guess I would have to say that I disagree with the Wildrose on this issue not only because we've had such major disruptions in the system to this point and it has created such chaos and such adjustment problems and pain and suffering and we need to stay stable – stability is what the system needs at this time – but also because there are efficiencies to be gained from a single Health Services Board: a single set of standards; a database; a single point of managing human resources and salaries; a monitoring system, if it's consistent across the province; and presumably an enforcement system that would get out to hospitals or communities that weren't meeting a standard, saying: you're not meeting the standard. So from a database and human personnel management point of view it's possible to do this from a centre.

However, delivery of services is a totally different issue. There needs to be much more autonomy in the delivery of the service at regional or zonal levels so that individuals can make decisions in a timely way; they can recognize the teams that are there and use them and organize them in a way that's most appropriate for that setting; they can deploy resources; they can make changes to procedures that suit that area; and they can focus their resources on, for example, more seniors in an area as opposed to an area where it's all young professionals or young workers like the Athabasca region, for example, where a different mix of health services is clearly needed.

There are strengths and there are definite weaknesses to the Health Services Board. Blowing up the system again would be terrible for the professionals, and it would create much more suffering for the individuals in the system. We need stability now, we need to make the system work, and the Health Services Board has to devolve some authority and some responsibility to the zones of the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I would like to know from the hon. Leader of the Opposition how important the environment is in terms of proactive and preventative health. Are the ideas of a healthy economy and a healthy parks system or a healthy environment mutually exclusive?

Dr. Swann: Well, that is often the way it's portrayed, unfortunately, in the political debates that we see: environment versus economy. Of course, they're both sides of the same coin. We have to make the economy work, and we have to have an environment that will sustain the economy.

Having said that, the economy and the environment are critical factors in health. If you have income, if you have a steady job, if you have some stability in your life, your mental health and your well-being are going to stay high. If we sacrifice one on the back of the other, then not only is there going to be a sacrifice to health, but there's going to be a sacrifice to the social well-being in the community, and that's going to come back to bite people.

In terms of the environment – the indoor environment and the outdoor environment, the work environment, the wonderful wildlands and parks that we enjoy here – all of these are critical for ensuring that we have the kind of healthy activity, the healthy opportunities that create the conditions for what we all want in our lives: happiness and well-being and community growth.

So critical interdependence here. I think that part of what has been missing in some of the policy is a recognition that everything we do impacts our health. If we're not thinking long term as opposed to short term, if we're making short-term economic decisions – for example, allowing industrial development in our eastern slopes, where it's going to affect our water supply for the future, at the same time as climate change is cutting down our water flow from the eastern slopes – we are maybe gaining in the short term, but we are sacrificing hugely in the long term.

The Deputy Speaker: On my list here, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I feel like we're back at the first day of spring session. It's almost like déjà vu with this bill. Back then the government finally came to the conclusion that everyone else in Alberta had already come to, the conclusion that we as a province had fallen behind the rest of the country in the area of competitiveness. Our investment climate, of course, had taken a big hit thanks to the ill-conceived royalty fiasco, our businesses were being hammered with overregulation, and the cost of doing business was going up and becoming uncompetitive with other provinces. Alberta was and still is losing its competitive edge.

Then I look and I remember that this government's response to this problem was not to lower taxes or to implement stricter spending rules or to cut wasteful and ineffective government programs; they just made a new law. They even called it the Competitiveness Act, hoping that Albertans would mistake it for real, effective action on the issue of competitiveness in Alberta or the lack thereof.

Mr. Hinman: Bill 1.

Mr. Anderson: Bill 1. Albertans did not buy it.

The Competitiveness Act was rightly panned as a do-nothing piece of legislation intended more as a PR exercise than a serious attempt at fixing a major and real issue. In many ways it typified this government's statist approach to governing this province. There is no issue that more laws and more government cannot fix, which brings me to Bill 17.

Everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta health care is in crisis right now. During the first week of fall session the Wildrose caucus released hundreds of emergency room horror stories, the details of which painted a graphic and disturbing picture of the sorry state of health care in this province: broken bones being treated in hallways; pregnant women getting cervical exams in open triage units; patients vomiting blood in the middle of emergency rooms while waiting hours and hours for care; people dying in hospitals before even seeing a doctor; a young man leaving hospital in a desperate and suicidal state only to commit the tragic act soon after not being able to receive care. As our caucus leader, Danielle Smith, often says, these are the types of stories that you would expect to hear in a Third World country. You would not expect them to happen in this province, in Alberta.

In the days and weeks that followed we heard from more and more doctors and other health care professionals about just how deep the entrenched issues in health care have become. The government promised more beds, but the Alberta Health superboard said that there wasn't enough money to staff them and operate them. The government announced new ER wait times, but doctors said it would take a Christmas miracle to meet them. The government claimed the centralized superboard is working, but the Auditor General found nearly a billion dollars misallocated and criticized the superboard for building facilities with no funding agreements in place. They said we'd have more beds, they said we'd have more health care, but what we got was a bunch of empty buildings and no staff to staff the beds so desperately needed.

So the government is doing what it always does when confronted with an issue of monumental concern to all Albertans: it makes a new law. The Alberta Health Act has all the hallmarks of a PC government bill designed to try to persuade people, to try to convince Albertans to believe that they are actually doing something to fix the problem. It's even got "health" right there in the title, just like the Competitiveness Act. But even a cursory read of the bill reveals that it has very little, if anything, to do with actual health care delivery and it will do little, if anything, to help our health care system.

The centrepiece of the legislation appears to be this so-called patient charter. The health minister has twisted himself into a pretzel over the last couple of weeks trying to explain what this patient charter would actually mean for patients. Albertans were probably pleased when they first heard of the idea of a charter – I know I was: "Oh, good, a charter; this ought to help" – an entrenched document that would guarantee them rights when it comes to health care delivery and legal recourse should those rights be violated. After you scratch the surface of this bill a little bit, you discover that this so-called charter is not legally binding in any way. It doesn't entrench any rights, it doesn't guarantee any level of care, and it doesn't give Albertans legal recourse for anything. It's a deliberate attempt by this government to fool Albertans, and it's a pretty poor attempt. All it will end up doing is shielding the minister from the real issues that Albertans are facing in their health care system.

Then there's the health advocate. Again, it sounds like a pretty decent idea on the surface, somebody whose job it is to act as a voice to government on behalf of patients who experience difficulties in the system. But it didn't take long for the gloss to come off that promise. We soon found out that this advocate isn't accountable to Albertans through the Legislature; it's accountable to the minister who appoints him or her. Given how this government treats those who have dared to shine light on the incompetence and mistakes this government has performed in the past – the recent dismissals of the Utilities Consumer Advocate and the Chief Electoral Officer, to name two examples – it's hard to believe that this so-called advocate will have any real impact whatsoever on patient care.

It's kind of ironic, then, that the report this act is based on is called Putting People First. I think it would be most appropriately titled Putting the Minister First or maybe even Putting Headlines First because it clearly has nothing to do with putting Albertans first or certainly will not accomplish that goal. Beyond protecting and empowering the minister and giving the appearance of taking action, I'm at a loss to describe what this bill accomplishes for anybody.

Fortunately, there is a party in this province that is actually endeavouring to come up with a plan for reform of this health care system, this tired and outdated health care system that we keep clinging to as if it's going to one day work if we just pump more money into it. There's one party that is actually going to propose some ideas that will reform the system into one that works and one that will fix health care or, at the very least, improve it greatly from where it is right now. Unlike this government, which can't seem to do anything beyond commissioning reports that they put on shelves and let collect dust and task forces and studies that do nothing, we are putting forth real ideas.

First of all, there absolutely needs to be more patient choice and competition in the health care system. We have some already. Our doctors are private. They compete with one another for patients. So we do have some competition in our health care system, but we need a lot more. We've seen what this government does to private facilities that perform procedures faster, better, and cheaper than public hospitals do. They put them out of business.

That's what happened at the HRC. Some of our best doctors at our highest performing health care facility surgical centre in the province for hip and knee replacements were told one thing by the government. They relied on that representation and acted on it. The rug was pulled out from underneath them once they did so, and they found themselves insolvent. An absolute disgraceful performance and something that is causing even longer waits for people with hip and knee surgeries: we just shut down our most efficient and effective hip and knee replacement centre. It is absolutely nonsensical.

It is no wonder that we've seen ERs that are bursting at the seams, that we see waiting lists continue to increase. This government is actively shutting down health care providers and funneling everybody into an already overcrowded system. One of the examples of this is the McCaig centre, where they opened up was it two surgical rooms. Well, they just shut down six at the Grace hospital under HRC. How does that help anybody? It doesn't.

This type of mismanagement is simply not sustainable. The system itself is not sustainable. The massive hikes in health care spending over the last few years prove it. Eighteen per cent last year. Think about that: 18 per cent. How on earth can we justify spending that much money in year-over-year increases? Are we going to fix the system or not? It's not about plowing billions and billions and billions more into health care; it's about making sure that the billions that we're already spending are spent prudently and properly, that people are competing for those dollars, putting patients first, getting the patients to come to them, and trying to offer the government the lowest price possible for completing those services.

What this government and the other opposition parties, for that matter, fail to realize is that Albertans don't care how their health care is delivered as long as it's safe, it's timely, and they don't have to take out their credit card to pay for it. They don't care who delivers it. They just want good health care. I don't know why we devolve every time into this stagnant debate and start fearmongering, throwing out that we want to privatize everything, that we want a two-tier system. That's not what we're talking about. We're talking about what doctors across this country are talking about, what the Liberal MP just put out. What was the Liberal MP's name in Ottawa, the former Reform MP?

An Hon. Member: Keith Martin.

Mr. Anderson: MP Keith Martin.

We've got to put these tired arguments away. There are some people in all parties, Keith Martin being one of them, Danielle Smith in this party being another, in this debate. We've got to put it behind us, this idea that we can't change, that we've got to stick to the old-style, monolithic way of delivering health care. It's not working, guys, and people are suffering because of it. So let's put that old argument away because it's not doing anyone any good.

Now, that's exactly what our party and our caucus are proposing. We would open up the system to greater competition to allow for more patient choice within the five key principles of the Canada Health Act. That's the only way our health care system will deliver the care Albertans need at a cost to the taxpayer that is both reasonable and sustainable.

We will also dismantle the health care superboard and gradually return delivery of health care to local decision-makers. There is no doubt that you can create some efficiencies for purchasing prescription drugs, for example, on a bulk basis. We can definitely have that as an option for regionally run hospitals to use. However, that doesn't mean you need a massive superboard to run everything. You pick the parts where it makes sense to have, you know, a more centralized decision-maker or centralized entity helping out, but you don't put it all under the centralized decision-making when so much of it would be much better run locally.

Alberta Health Services was ushered in to replace health regions two and a half years ago with promises of streamlined delivery, less administration, and lower costs. It is absolutely beyond refute – there's no argument – that it has not worked. It has not resulted in those things. They may have cut bonuses somewhere or the number of executives they've had with certain titles, but the cost of health care went up 18 per cent last year, and there were no positive improvements in the system. How is that more efficient? It's not. Centralizing delivery of essential goods and services doesn't work. It never has; it never will. We don't allow the state to dispense food or clothing for the precise reasons we see in our hospitals today: long lines, high prices, and shortages of supply.

The Wildrose will end the health care monopoly in Alberta by decentralizing decision-making and entrenching patient choice as the cornerstone of our health care system. A Wildrose government would redirect more of the health budget to expand home-care services, make it easier to build and operate assisted living and long-term care facilities, and introduce a kinship palliative care program that would compensate family members for giving end-of-life care to loved ones in their homes. We would track and publicly disclose waiting lists and costs for all procedures as well as the treatment outcomes for all health facilities openly and transparently. Empowering patients with this information will allow them to make better choices and will provide incentive for doctors, surgical centres, and hospital administrators to provide better service. These are just a few of our ideas, and they will draw a stark contrast between the Wildrose and what this government does if it continues to act in this way, in this do-nothing way.

We will be putting forward several amendments to Bill 17 later on, and I certainly look forward to debating them in this House, but I have to make myself as clear as possible for my constituents and for Albertans. If we do not start getting this right, we are going to continue to see Albertans unnecessarily suffer and unnecessarily die in some tragic cases. It's happening. This is not some kind of alarmist view. It's being documented everywhere. We need to fix it, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I have a question. This government was withheld federal transfer payments when doctors were extra billing, so I would like to know from the Wildrose representative where he stands on extra billing, the idea of a voucher system, and competition, private health care delivery as opposed to the tenets of medicare, which talk about publicly funded, publicly delivered, publicly administered.

Mr. Anderson: Well, as the hon. member knows, that's not what the Canada Health Act says. It says: publicly administered. It does not say: publicly delivered. There's a big difference.

But I will say that we're not talking about a two-tier system here. That's the big scare card that goes out. That's not what we're talking about. We're talking about: the money goes in from the taxpayer to the government. Okay? Then people, when they get sick, have to make choices about where they want to get their health care done. They would go to the place of their choice, and the money would follow them to that hospital or surgical centre or doctor or whatever.

It's all public money, so we're not talking about skimming and two-tier, where somebody can bypass the queue. It's all the same queue. People all have to line up in the same queue. We're just talking about making sure that there are more options on the end of health care, delivery options, so that people can make their choices, so that private deliverers and nonprofit deliverers can come into the system with their money and invest it in the system. I mean, look at the Health Resource Centre: tens of millions of dollars invested from private money making a piece of infrastructure that was doing fantastic work.

Ms Blakeman: Only when subsidized.

Mr. Anderson: That's not true, hon. member. The building was not subsidized. It was the Grace hospital, but it was changed and altered and renovated by private money, and that's a fact. You can sit down with Dr. Miller and talk to him about how it went. The fact is that they were delivering those services for 40 per cent cheaper and 40 per cent faster than the public system. Now, in every case is that going to happen? Is private delivery always going to be more efficient to the government than public delivery? No. There'll be some cases where that's not the case, clearly, but the point is that you let them compete. The government says: "We've got 5,000 hip and knee surgeries, replacements that we need done. Public hospital, public surgical centre, private surgical centre, nonprofit surgical centre, compete. What can you do? Who can deliver this at the lowest cost and still do it most effectively?" Let them compete for the business.

You'll find that although there is a profit margin in private delivery of sometimes 5, 10 per cent, depending on what you're talking about, there's a massive waste margin in the public system. That's 30 per cent or 40 per cent, as we see with the HRC example. There's waste. There are margins everywhere. Sometimes it's waste margins; sometimes it's profit margins. The point is: make them compete. Make them compete for the public dollars. That makes the deliverers of health care accountable. It makes public managers of health care accountable. It makes doctors, nurses, and everybody involved in the system accountable.

I respect very much the hon. Leader of the Opposition and what he said earlier. This is the big difference. They think, the Liberals and the PCs, that you just need to get a better central planner, a central manager, that you just need to manage it better, and it would all work out. But on what planet? Where is that the case? Look at Europe. Is that what they do in Europe? No, it's not. They don't have one monolithic public deliverer of health care. They don't. They have multiple, competitive delivery, and it works for them. It's still universal health care, but it works for them because they have competitive delivery.

We're one of the most monolithic systems in the world – certainly, in the developed world we are – and we have some of the worst health outcomes and waiting lists. That has to change, but it's not going to change if we continue to go down this path of, you know, fearmongering and “privatization is going to kill the whole system” and agendas. No one wants to see the ridiculousness that is going on south of the border. No one wants that health care system. It's a joke. No one wants to see people dying because they can't afford to pay for it. That's not what we're talking about. We're talking about making positive changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to adjourn the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You cannot. You have already finished speaking.

Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move to adjourn debate on Bill 17. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 25

Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get this opportunity to rise and say a few words regarding Bill 25. Certainly, we're looking at some changes to administrative rules. This bill, as I understand it, specifies the appeals process in that times and procedures for that process are to be changed, and the bill changes the punitive structures in nonpayment, increasing potential fines. From what I can understand from talking to members of the community who are lucky enough to have a few freehold mineral rights, they seem to think that this is a good bill.

I had an opportunity late last spring to attend an event in Red Deer. Actually, it was slightly west of Red Deer. There were, Mr. Chairman, over 500 freeholders in attendance, and they heard from various political parties, starting certainly with the Progressive Conservatives, who were very well represented by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Johnston: I thought you said freeloaders.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. Freeholders, hon. member. Don't get that confused. There are a lot of freeloaders in that Progressive Conservative Party – there's no doubt about that – but certainly not at that meeting.

Now, from the freeholders' association, as I said, there were close to 500 or maybe more in attendance. We had a nice lunch, and then we got down to business. The Wildrose Alliance was represented. I think the hon. members over there were calling them the fourth party, but the New Democrats were represented as well. The government caucus was very well represented. There was one member speaking, of course, on this panel. I was representing our caucus, too. I counted at one point nine Progressive Conservative MLAs in attendance. Nine. [interjections] It wasn't the free lunch. No, it certainly wasn't.

I don't know whether the MLAs from the government caucus were reluctant to have lunch because of what they might hear from the citizens, but there were nine, and then there were eight because one hon. member left, as they would say in the movies, in a bit of a snit because that individual didn't appreciate that the freeholders . . .

Ms Blakeman: What did you say?

Mr. MacDonald: It wasn't me. It was the freeholders who suggested to this individual that they needed to respect their interests. I think in a small sort of way Bill 25 is a reflection of the direction that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne got that Saturday afternoon in the church west of Red Deer because many of the freeholders want the same rates for the product, in this case energy, that they own under their properties.

If you look at how freeholders in the past have been treated in this province, I'm not saying necessarily by the government but certainly by the energy industry, the industry, hon. Member for Calgary-Hayes, could in this case be the freeholders because they are the ones that are getting the royalties for significantly less than what they pay south of the border in the lower 48 states. If you look at freehold mineral rights and rates in any jurisdiction south of the border, whether it be Texas, Pennsylvania, New York, Louisiana, the royalty rates in some cases would be double – double – if not triple what some of these freehold owners are getting here in Alberta.

So, Mr. Chairman, it was a very interesting Saturday afternoon in Red Deer, and this bill certainly, I think, would be appreciated by the freeholders. I hope it is. The ones that I have had contact with have thought that as a result of their efforts and the work they have done advocating for themselves, this is a baby step in the right direction towards meeting their needs and concerns. Many of us may forget that there's a lot of land in this province that is owned by individuals who had this land handed down to them from their pioneering grandfathers and grandmothers and in some cases their pioneering great-grandmothers and great-grandfathers.

The energy industry is changing. Some people would think it's coal-bed methane that would be of significant interest, Mr. Chairman, but it is interesting to note that we may get a second chance.

All of us may get a second chance in this province, all of us maybe deserve a second chance every now and then, but in this case it would be around tight oil. Alberta has a lot of oil in place in mature fields that have been in production in some cases for 50 to 60 years. There's a lot of that tight oil remaining, and with the new technology involved with fractionation, or fracking, that oil can now be produced. In many of the mature fields, whether they're Pembina, Swan Hills, Bonnie Glen, certainly Leduc, all the areas around central Alberta where some freeholders would have the rights, they should watch this unfold very carefully because there could be an additional amount, 1.5 billion barrels, to be lifted from those wells, or produced, I should say. [interjection] I'm sorry hon. member?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think that's CO₂ enhancement.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, CO₂ enhancement is part of it. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, at some point – and I know I don't want to be distracted by Treasury Board – we're going to have to have a rather robust debate in this Assembly on what sort of royalty should be collected either by the citizens of the province or by the freeholders on this second-chance oil if the experts are right and there are 1.5 billion barrels of oil that now can be recovered from these mature existing fields in the central part of the province, where the infrastructure is already in place, whether it's power to run the oil fields, whether it's the roads to service them, or whether it's the pipelines to collect and distribute the production.

We have a lot of issues here, but the freeholders, I'm sure, are going to pay attention to this. They're going to get on the Internet before they sign the deal with the land person and see what the same company is willing to pay in Texas or New York state or Pennsylvania or Louisiana for royalties. In Texas it's 25 per cent. So we will see what happens with this, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Blakeman: Say that again.

Mr. MacDonald: In Texas the royalty rate on freeholders, or private property, is in some cases 25 or it could be as high as 27 per cent. Now, I met freeholders in Red Deer that certainly were not getting that.

When we look at the chance we're going to get in Alberta, the marginal oil pools of yesterday have become very attractive. They're the jewels of the future development in western Canada. We can thank technology for this. Of the 98 billion barrels of discovered oil in place in the western Canada sedimentary basin only about 20 per cent has been discovered to date, leaving 77 billion barrels of already discovered oil trapped in tighter reservoirs that can now be unlocked with this technology that I talked about before.

Hopefully, if we were to get this, even if it was a billion barrels of additional production – and the hon. President of the Treasury Board is correct in stating that some of this would come from enhanced oil recovery from CO₂ sequestration. That's going on, as he knows, in central Alberta in a pilot project and down in Estevan in southeastern Saskatchewan. This fracking technology, hopefully, is going to be put to use, and many of the companies that have picked up some of these sort of assets at a very modest price from some of the big players because they thought they were worthless – these are leases where there's an environmental liability to them and nothing else, so we're going to sell them to the junior players. Well, the junior players may be really on to something here, and they're going to have to in some cases approach the freeholders.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, will in the future benefit the freeholders, who have fair and square legal title and legal right to the energy under their land in all forms. Hopefully, this bill is a step in the right direction and is what they want completely.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members who wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question. Are you ready for the question on Bill 25, Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 19

Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Any hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased today to stand in Committee of the Whole to speak to the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010. Before getting to the bill itself, I would like to acknowledge the yeomanship of the Member for Red Deer-South for his assistance in bringing forward this bill through second reading. He did an excellent job, and I appreciate his assistance.

Now, the amendments to this bill, Mr. Chairman, will help ensure that Alberta's renewable fuels producers are on a level playing field for fuel tax purposes, and it will support the upcoming renewable fuel standard that will be implemented.

Second reading, Mr. Chairman, provided for interesting discussion and debate, notably on the topic of the renewable fuel standard and biofuels in general. I'd like to thank the hon. members for their comments and discussion, but one question did come up that needs to be addressed promptly that I would like to address now.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked if the Treasury lost any money as a result of the past practices that are corrected with this amendment. This is a critical question, Mr. Chairman, because it would be important to understand if we had forgone revenue because of some irregularities or some changes that needed to be made in regulations. The short answer to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is: no, the Treasury did not lose one single dime as a result of the past practices of the previous regulations that are now going to be corrected by this legislation. I'd also like to add that this bill is revenue neutral, and it's not aimed at correcting any loss of revenue.

Mr. Chairman, renewable fuel producers outside Alberta currently are exempt from charging tax in some circumstances when they sell fuel to a full direct remitter. A full direct remitter is any entity that refines fuels or transacts large volumes of fuel in Alberta while Alberta's renewable fuel producers are not exempt from charging the tax.

Now, section 3 of Bill 19 amends section 4 of the Fuel Tax Act to allow Alberta's renewable fuel producers the same tax exemption as fuel producers outside of the province. By providing the same treatment for both Alberta and non-Alberta producers, it ensures consistency and fairness. In essence, it levels the playing field for tax purposes, and it removes the disadvantages that our own domestic fuel producers were faced with when competing against outside-the-province fuel producers. It will also ease the administrative burden for both industry and government, Mr. Chairman, by ensuring that there is not a mixture of taxed and untaxed fuel at a refinery or at a terminal, which could be difficult to track and monitor.

The next measure, of course, Mr. Chairman, involves information sharing. Section 7 of the bill authorizes Alberta Finance and Enterprise to share information with Alberta Energy for the purposes of both tax administration and administration of the renewable fuels standard. Since many entities will report similar information to both ministries, this will allow each to use the information collected, which helps ease some of the administrative burden and helps to ensure that both programs are being monitored and reviewed equally. It reduces the duplication of reporting burden of ministries to each other and the private sector to two different ministries. This section also authorizes both ministries to collect and use the information for public policy formulation, which is a critical step. This brings the Fuel Tax Amendment Act in line with all of the other commodity tax statutes that the province currently has, so these changes do support the efficient administration of both the fuel tax and the renewable fuels program.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of minor technical amendments to remove references in the Fuel Tax Act to blend stocks. Currently the term “blend stock” in the act refers to a nontaxable fuel; however, there are no blend stocks in Alberta, so the term has no real effect. Further, the term “blending,” which is also used in the act, is commonly used by industry to describe the mixing of traditional fuel with renewable fuel, an entirely different meaning than the meaning of the term that’s used in the act. Thus, sections 2, 4, 5, 6, and 8 of the bill remove the references in the Fuel Tax Act to blend stock and some of the instances of blending. However, the term “blending” will not be completely removed from certain sections. In those sections the term can refer to blending in the renewable fuels context standard and will still have application.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I ask all colleagues to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Just a question for the hon. mover of the bill. Do you believe it’s a good idea to basically require a certain amount of blended fuels through government legislation in order to subsidize renewable fuels? My second question is: are the actions in terms of sort of putting Alberta on a level playing field consistent with our Bill 18, Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010, with British Columbia fuel producers and, obviously, with Saskatchewan now included? So, first, should we be requiring a certain percentage of blended fuels, and secondly, are Bill 18 and Bill 19 working together to create not only a level playing field for Alberta, but by creating a more level field for Alberta, are we subject to any argument from either B.C. or Saskatchewan that we’re potentially tilting the table?

The Chair: Any other hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would just like at this point in committee to express my appreciation to the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright for getting that information. I appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d move that the committee rise and report bills 25 and 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 25, Bill 19.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 18

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move Bill 18, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2010, for third reading.

The bill itself has had good discussion, but just to recap, it’s a bill which allows us to move forward with the New West Partnership. It’s a bill which recognizes the advantages that have been received by Alberta in engaging beyond our borders with our neighbouring provinces to really enhance the work of the internal trade agreement but to move it forward at a faster pace so that it reflects the strength of the western Canadian economy and the strength that we can have in an Alberta economy in Albertan society when we partner.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker, Bill 18. I listened to the hon. Government House Leader. I’m not going to say that it was glib, but it was certainly a sales presentation on this bill that I’m not convinced is in the best interests of Albertans.

I would like to know why, before we proceed any further with this, it is necessary that we have the provision to grandfather this legislation going back to April 1, 2007, as I understand it. I certainly would like to know why it’s in our interest to go back over three years with this amendment to the Government Organization Act. In some cases here with this legislation there doesn’t appear to be a legal recourse. I would like to know through the course of debate how and why this is necessary.

Certainly, some of my other colleagues talked about this earlier in debate, but who has the government consulted with regarding these amendments? In the past we heard from various organizations that they were unhappy with TILMA because it didn't lift provincial standards; it reduced them to the lowest level. In this case, trade certification, many different labour unions had expressed concern about that end of TILMA. Some professional associations also expressed concern about that reduction or diminishing of standards.

I know we need to have closer trade ties. I see the importance of having significant co-operation between the western Canadian provinces. I can understand that, but I'm not convinced as of yet of all the merits that have been proposed by the original TILMA legislation or this amendment to the Government Organization Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House 4.4(a), and that is the ability of the respective minister, in this case the International and Intergovernmental Relations minister, to make regulations "defining words or expressions used but not defined in sections 2 to 4.3." There is considerable language that could be, in my view, a lot more specific in sections 2 through 4.3. This is another reason why I certainly would have concern with this.

Reading Hansard, there was a discussion earlier about the Arbitration Act and why the Arbitration Act does not apply to a domestic trade agreement. I guess I have to accept that as it was discussed, or at least my interpretation of that.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House. I'm not convinced that the government has talked to the organizations that have had previous concerns regarding our internal trade agreements, and if they have consulted with these groups that I identified earlier, I sure would like to know what those discussions were about and what issues were talked about, what issues were addressed, if any.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. members for their questions and the discussion from the discussions we had in committee. There were some questions, and I would like to respond on behalf of the hon. minister to some of them and some of the comments.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had questions on tax implications under the agreement and, in particular, the new harmonized sales tax in B.C. We said we would look into that, and we have, Mr. Speaker. We can tell you and all hon. members that there in no way will be any tax implications under the New West Partnership trade agreement. Taxation is specifically excluded. Provinces are free to pursue tax policies that are determined to be in the best interest of their province.

In addition, the hon. members also raised concerns regarding the consultation process with Albertans prior to the signing of TILMA. Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that this government recognizes that co-operation, collaboration, and communication are key to any successful agreement, certainly interprovincially, and Albertans were indeed consulted through a variety of methods, which included website updates, news releases as well as consultations with various groups and organizations.

This government met with more than 200 representatives from the MASH sector and countless labour groups and businesses. In fact, the president of AUMA was quoted in a news release from June 25 of last year saying, "The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association is now satisfied that municipal concerns which the Association raised on behalf of its members have been addressed in the negotiation process regarding the MASH provisions."

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo also raised an interesting point during Committee of the Whole. The hon. member asked if this bill would have anything to do with foreign investments such as the current discussion over Potash Corporation in Saskatchewan. In fact, this bill deals strictly with domestic trade and investment. It has nothing to do with foreign investment.

Mr. Speaker, we have had a productive debate in this House, and I hope I have clarified some of the concerns the opposition had raised. There's no question that this bill will improve interprovincial trade.

As someone who represents Canada's only border city, I can tell you that this approach of our three western provinces is going to be absolutely essential if we're going to compete not only with our near neighbours to the south but with our global competitors around the world. In fact, we have over the past few years allowed so many different regulatory differences to creep in between our provinces that sometimes you would think we are different countries: little things such as harmonizing standards for trucks and the movement of goods and services that are essential to build our economy and the little differences that happen from the ports in B.C. into Winnipeg.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, the importance of this agreement can not only be measured by what it's going to do for our three provinces but by how the other provinces approach it. I think we've already seen across Canada other provinces indicating that they, too, want to talk to the importance of removing trade barriers. This is very critical. We don't have to start with all of the provinces agreeing on everything, but when the three western provinces can put to work such an incredibly good opportunity, that we all have here with the resources and the people we've got, it won't be long until our neighbouring provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, and, indeed, the Maritimes will be looking to those kinds of agreements to enhance their opportunities for their people, too.

Mr. Speaker, it's been a privilege to address Bill 18, and I would hope the House would support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In terms of a little bit of lightheartedness, I'm just wondering if the hon. member, the President of the Treasury Board, who lives in the border city which bears his name, has divided loyalties or feels conflicted at times with his location.

But on a more serious set of questions, I'm wondering also, more seriously, if Bill 18 has the potential, because of our agreement with British Columbia, of reducing the price we pay for imported hydroelectricity. My feeling is that I'm extremely grateful that we have got hundreds and hundreds of years of coal ahead of us, but I'd like to see that coal liquefied as opposed to our coal-fired generation, which we currently have, which, unfortunately, has large, belching smoke stacks, that do not contribute to Albertans' health. While it's a less expensive form of electricity, I'm hoping that Bill 18 might see us getting better prices on electricity.

The other problem is that when one of our large coal-fired plants goes down, we're paying a premium price for the electricity we get out of B.C. I'm hoping that the damage done on their river systems, the dams and the hydro, can potentially through Bill 18 be turned to our advantage.

Also, in terms of sort of reciprocal agreements I'm hoping that the Prince Rupert . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have five minutes for comments or questions. Are you using the five minutes?

Mr. Chase: Here's my last question, and I would look forward to an answer. Thank you.

Through Bill 18 have we come to a stronger agreement with our container ports and our co-operation with Prince Rupert?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the utilities agreements between the two provinces are not part of or changed by the TILMA agreement as to the opportunity to strengthen our opportunities for the container ports. Any time that you have governments agreeing on a common purpose in trade, it strengthens your opportunities. I think that what the hon. member would be suggesting is the fact that it's essential for so many of the goods that we produce in Alberta to have that west coast market outlet. I would hope it does. I cannot tell you unequivocally that this agreement changes that, but it certainly enhances the opportunities to do it.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) still allows two minutes and 10 seconds. Any hon. member wish to use that time?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize hon. members to speak on the bill.

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Bill 23

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 23, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2010.

The bill clarifies the authority of postsecondary institutions to create parking bylaws and impose and collect penalties for parking violations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Without going into echoing or repeating what I previously said, I support this bill. It is the sort of lowest level of support for advanced education and technology going, and I'm hoping that this is maybe signalling a new move in this province in terms of valuing advanced education, innovation, and technology and that instead of just forgiving parking fines, we'll actually get into investing in postsecondary institutions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16

Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. With regard to Bill 16, just for the record and in summation, I would like to have it noted that both the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and myself had matching subamendments encouraging the province to go a step farther with distracted driving legislation, and that would be to follow the recommendations of numerous physicians in this province of regulating hands-free as well as the hand-held cellular phones. Unfortunately – and I say: unfortunately – the majority of government members felt that this was not the direction to go.

My colleague from Calgary-McCall attempted to provide a sort of bridge amendment which would suggest that we do our due diligence, study the potential effects of collisions, accidents associated with hands-free, do this over a three-year period, report back to this Assembly with the potential of further strengthening the distracted driving legislation by including hands-free as part of the regulation and enforcement. Again, I consider it unfortunate, Mr. Chair, that this sort of backup compromise position was rejected. I do realize that the government is going to be collecting these statistics as it relates to collisions involved with hands-free, and for that I am grateful. I just wish that we had put a timeline on when this legislation would be updated to include a ban on hands-free.

Companies throughout this province have taken the lead in terms of numerous fleets requiring that their workers pull over when it's safe to do so to carry on any kind of conversation. Bill 16 has already allowed exemptions, rightfully so, for a variety of transports, taxis, et cetera, which would basically kill their business if these exemptions weren't allowed. But it is my hope, Mr. Chair, that at some time we take the lead.

We had an opportunity in this province to lead the world with a ban of hands-free cellular phones, and I'm sorry that we didn't take that opportunity. At least, Mr. Chair, I am hoping that there will be some commitment over the next three years, as my hon. colleague from Calgary-McCall suggested, that in reviewing the scientific evidence, if there is sufficient direction that the distraction is more of a mental nature than a physical nature, this bill will be amended.

I want to make sure it's firmly on the record that I do support the steps that have been taken in terms of distracted driving. I understand the need to go simply beyond the hand-held cellphone to recognize other distractions, some of which are impossible to prevent. I do believe that we need more children in this province, especially of the quality of my two grandsons, so we cannot ban children from riding in vehicles. I suggested earlier that I would like to ban back-seat drivers, but I know that's not possible. So I will be supporting the legislation. I would like to have seen it take a bolder step forward, but I'm definitely in support.

I very much appreciate the hon. mover of the motion, who has had that front-line experience and wants to continue to be proactive and preventative. Therefore, I thank the mover of the bill, the MLA for Calgary-Hays.

Thank you very much. I would think that this will be universally accepted.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to take this opportunity to express my support for this bill. First of all, I would like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this bill forward. To many people this bill might not be perfect. I got a lot of e-mails, I got some phone calls, and I had a lot of my constituents talk to me about this bill. Some people feel this is long overdue, and some people feel we haven't gone far enough, that we should ban all electronic devices completely.

I think this bill is not perfect. There's no such thing as, quote, perfect. But I would like to see this as a very significant first step in the right direction. I would also like to acknowledge the fact that this is the first bill in Canada. Basically, you know, it's such inclusive legislation: not just the hand cell, the mobile phones that I'm talking about, but it also includes many other distractions. I feel as an individual that we cannot rely on legislation completely because there's no such thing as legislating human behaviour. As citizens we all have to take the responsibility for our own lives, for the lives of others.

So no matter what we do, in this case driving, we've got to concentrate on the road, and we shouldn't do anything else in the cockpit. That's why I feel it is very important to have this bill passed. This would send a strong signal to all the people who are driving, who are on the road. You know, we have to follow the rules and also drive carefully and responsibly. When we talk about distractions, I realize, as many members have already mentioned, that raises many other issues. Given today's technology we have a lot of gadgets in the vehicles. We have a navigation system. We have an entertainment system. We have many other things. I think we cannot just rely on the legislation to eliminate the possibility of causing traffic accidents by distractions. I want to put this on the record.

I'm very happy to see the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays bring this bill forward. As a member of the Public Safety and Services Committee I feel very proud of the fact that the minister and the members of the committee are supporting this bill. I encourage all my colleagues to support the bill. I definitely will vote to support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would also like to move to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report – I would say progress, but . . .

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 16.

The Deputy Speaker: Those hon. members who concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m.]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20 Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 3: Mr. Renner]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be going here. I'm just winding up. There we go. Now, this brings my memory back right to where I left off on this. I thank the hon. House for waiting through my disorganization, and I'll try not to let it happen the rest of the way through although I cannot make such promises that it won't.

I would like to speak in favour of this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you have already spoken.

Mr. Hehr: That is why. A light goes off. Thank you very much. Perfect.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

Bill 21 Wills and Succession Act

[Adjourned debate November 3: Ms Pastoor]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposed Wills and Succession Act really is to update the law. This side of the House, at least this little section of this side of the House, is in support of this bill. It currently stands to reflect changing social values in Alberta as well as evolving estate planning practices.

Certainly, as an RN working in geriatrics I could see the importance of actually having a will very, very early, having it updated as you go along. In fact, the personal directives, which should be a part of when you write your will with your lawyer, actually probably should be signed at the age of 18. There are reasons for that. Say a young man or a young woman is in a car accident, and they're 18 and a half. They are now adults, and there is no one to make decisions on their behalf or to look after them if they're in a serious car accident and seriously injured. So it's very important that at the age of 18 one not only has a will but, more importantly, that personal directive so it's very clear who is to make decisions on their behalf.

I think the other thing that it sort of clarifies is that if two or more people die at approximately the same time in the same accident, their property would be distributed as if each party died before the other. But now it'll be that in cases where property is jointly owned, it would be deemed to be split amongst the owners equally. This is consistent with public opinion on the matter as established by the ministry through a public consultation and harmonizes the principles regarding testimonial dispositions with those contained in the Insurance Act. When these accidents happen, certainly, there are lawyers involved, there are insurance companies involved, and in the case of deaths there are all families involved, usually from both sides. It's very important that these are very, very clear.

This is part of a housekeeping bill, really, just to make these things brought up to the 21st century in the number of things that can actually happen and also the different ways that we recognize families and who would be entitled to the disposition of properties and monies.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I will sit down and say that we are in favour.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment or question.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I would move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 22 Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 3: Ms Blakeman]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 22. The highlights of the bill are that it will reflect several changes to Alberta family law policies, specifically in the following areas: parentage and guardianship of children, maintenance enforcement program, and interjurisdictional support orders.

Mr. Speaker, the current law states that parentage of a child is shared between two legal parents, which would be in most cases the biological father and the mother. At the moment there is somewhat limited recognition of exceptions for individuals to be recognized as legal parents in situations where the parties are a same-sex couple or where nonbiological parents have relied upon assisted human reproduction.

In order to address the growing reliance on AHR, Mr. Speaker, and recognize the children who are a product of this birthing method, the ministry has proposed through this bill the following policy in order to provide greater clarity regarding the issues of parentage. Where AHR is used and there is a proper combination of biology and consent, couples using AHR can become the legal parents without any added need to begin adoption proceedings as long as one partner or spouse can show a biological connection to the child and the other individual consents to being a parent.

As noted previously, this policy change will result in a paradigm shift from the arbitrary exercise of parental guardianship, particularly where the child resides, in favour of focusing completely on the willingness of a parent to be a guardian. The ministry has made certain exceptions for situations where a sexual assault has occurred or that individual has no interest in being a guardian.

It further goes on and talks about the maintenance enforcement program, Mr. Speaker, which is responsible for the collection of court-ordered payments from debtors after an order has been made. In an effort to further the goals of increasing the regularity of maintenance payments and making systems more efficient while keeping the level of service to Albertans consistent, the ministry has introduced several changes through this bill.

In addition, there have been amendments to the current model to increase procedural fairness to all parties. These changes include some of the following: charging penalties to maintenance recipients that owe money to MEP as a result of fees, overpayments; penalties would be collected far more frequently; and debtors will now be required to keep employment information current. Now a debtor will be required to have sought a negotiation of payment arrangement by the maintenance enforcement program before an application to suspend an enforcement action can be brought before the courts. The release of information governed by this act would now be more closely aligned with the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

This will be providing powers to search for parties to applications as well as prospective applications and revising the way in which the applicable law is established by Alberta courts in order to simplify the process for the courts and the parties involved.

The revisions to guardianship will certainly have positive effects for Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and reflect the changing values of the time as well as the role that technology has played in influencing the law as it relates to parenthood and guardianship. The changes that the minister has made will improve the administration of the maintenance enforcement program and provide enhanced procedural fairness for creditors essentially by levelling the playing field in relation to the way that the maintenance enforcement program deals with debtors. The outcome here will likely be greater client satisfaction, and, hey, if anyone could use that, it would be the maintenance enforcement program.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment.

Any others?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27 Police Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 4: Mr. Oberle]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I probably had a problem with this right from the very beginning because despite the fact that we have an increase in population, I'm not convinced that we actually need 87 ridings in this province.

An Hon. Member: Police Amendment Act, Bill 27.

Ms Pastoor: Oh, I am sorry. I believe that my hon. colleague is up on this one. Sorry.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I could go?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My apologies for the difficulties here tonight.

I am pleased to rise and discuss for my first time Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010. I must say that I have some concerns about this bill. I believe that the Police Amendment Act could be better, and I believe that it may in fact be limiting what we have in some rights of individual citizens to go forward and have their situation investigated by a proper review agency in regard to police misconduct or an incident that involves a police officer or the justice system.

If we look at the Police Act, we're primarily looking at an act that has been in force since 1973. The police complaint and discipline process has remained largely unchanged since the 1973 Police Act. As noted by the minister, the amendments are a result of several consultations with stakeholders over the past 10 years and, most recently, consultations for the law enforcement framework. The law enforcement framework was designed to reflect and respond to, apparently, the current realities of policing and to position Alberta's law enforcement as a modern, flexible, and professional system that can continue to meet the policing and public security needs of the public.

Now, I would also like to advise that although that is the stated goal of this bill and it attempts to streamline and modernize the police complaint process, much of what is being done in this act appears to actually be, at least at first blush, limiting some of the abilities of an individual to appeal their outcome or to get a reasonable hearing in front of a board or to investigate some complaints, which is essentially why this board has been set up. We had a frank discussion yesterday about sheriffs, and we're having a discussion now about police officers in order for police officers to be seen as legitimate to be enforcing the rule of law and to be really strong guardians of not only our personal safety and our personal property but also strong guardians of our democracy and our justice system. With that power and privilege comes a role by the state to oversee their responsibilities, to appoint boards and citizens to look after complaints that stem from police issues that occur in Alberta.

Although I've only been an MLA for roughly three years, coming from a downtown riding oftentimes I hear stories, rightly or wrongly, about some incidents that occur in the community. I'm not saying they're correct or not, but at least we need to have an avenue where these complaints are heard, where they're heard by people who are seen to be open and accountable and who are listening to what, in fact, a person's complaint is against the police officer or police organization or whatever you may have. Whatever an individual's complaint is, we have to give them the opportunity to speak and to be heard and for them to legitimize what the policing role is in the community, which is our protection. It's also protection of, like I alluded to earlier, our entire system of rule of law, of no one being above the law and the government not seen to be using too much of its power to buffalo someone into doing things or being railroaded into situations that they have not been in.

I think I've outlined in a rambling sort of fashion how these commissions and complaints processes are supposed to go. This bill, in my view, is contrary to the public interest as it will water down the public complaints process to a point where ordinary citizens are offered no recourse should they fall victim to some form of police misconduct. This bill is an attempt to serve what police officers believe are the best interests of police officers. In my view, it goes some of the way to taking away somewhat. Maybe we can go to the other things where some legitimate concerns are not being heard.

If we can talk about it here, if we look at section 19.2:

19.2(1) Prior to scheduling an appeal for a hearing, the Board shall, within 30 days of receipt of written notice of the appeal, review the written notice of appeal and the record of the hearing and may

- (a) dismiss the matter if in the opinion of the Board the appeal is frivolous, vexatious or made in bad faith, or
 - (b) notwithstanding section 20(2)(b), make a decision in respect of the appeal based on the review of the record and consideration of the factors set out in the regulations respecting appeals, without conducting a hearing.
- (2) Where the Board is unable to dismiss or conclude an appeal in accordance with subsection (1), the Board may schedule a hearing of the appeal.
- (3) The Board may give directions to the affected parties in respect of a review or a hearing and may extend or modify its directions on reasonable request by a party.

Stakeholders have voiced concern regarding the proposed powers conferred on the LERB to dismiss an appeal outright. Groups maintain that the Law Enforcement Review Board should require the parties to make submissions on whether there should be an appeal. This should be on the record before the relative appeals of the merit are considered and any decision to dismiss the issues. I think this would be a valid way to decide whether an appeal would go forward. It would allow for justice not only to be done but to be seen to be done, and it would allow for opportunity for a victim to express their opinion or their concerns as to why they should have an appeal. I think this is an important step. Should a person get a decision that they disagree with and they are not afforded this appeal, their confidence in the system may be shaken, and I think that in situations where police are involved, we should as a government, as a state extend that opportunity even in what are at first blush possibly some very sublime or even ridiculous circumstances.

It's one of the situations where we must go further and at least allow for people to discuss issues, to hear why they think they weren't given the opportunity the first time to get their, I guess, facts on the record and to at least give them that opportunity. I realize it will often be a bureaucratic nightmare and possibly make some people do some extra work on some stuff that has little opportunity to succeed. Nevertheless, having that opportunity, in my view, would allow the situation to go forward and allow our citizens to have more confidence in the system.

We also look at section 20 and its amendments. I'll just go through them here in subsection (1) by adding the following after clause (e):

- (e.1) if a complainant fails to . . . answer questions or to produce an item as required under clause (c) or (d), is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner, the Board may dismiss the matter;
- (e.2) if a witness fails to attend or to answer questions, is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner, the Board may dismiss the witness and continue with the matter.

The proposed changes of section 20 are difficult for me to fully comprehend. In situations where the complainant or witness is unable to respond, their inability should not be used as a pretext to dismiss what might in fact be a valid claim. I don't believe that an individual's inability has much relevance at this stage. Even where a complainant or witness falls into one of the behavioural classes provided above, it should simply be assessed against that witness's credibility rather than used as a means to expedite the disposal of the appeal.

This type of power is not available in criminal matters, civil trials, administrative tribunals, or almost any other professional discipline system. In almost any other adjudicated setting if a complainant or witness is guilty of behaving in the ways listed in (e.1) or (e.2), the hearing would simply proceed to its conclusion and be based on the available evidence.

If there is no available evidence to back up their claim, well, it'll be dismissed and you go from there, whether they have the ability to appear or not or whether their behaviour dictates that they shouldn't be there. But if the evidence still suggests that something was wrong – and I realize that there are situations where by reason of their inability to show up, the case will be dismissed because the other evidence won't be substantial enough. But there may be cases, in fact, where this is. Simply by having that put in there, I think that is taking too much away from the process and disrespecting the process for what it is. Allowing for people at the LERB to do their job and review situations at face value, in my view, would be a wiser course of action.

If we look at section 9:

9 Section 28.1 is amended

- (a) in subsection (2) by striking out “or” at the end of clause (c), adding “or” at the end of clause (d) and adding the following after clause (d):
 - (e) a former police officer if the position of Public Complaint Director is not in the same municipality where the former police officer was employed.
- (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) The Public Complaint Director shall not be a currently serving police officer.
- (c) in subsection (3)
 - (i) by repealing clause (b) and substituting the following:
 - (b) act as a liaison between the commission, policing committee, the chief of police, the officer in charge of a police service and the complainant as applicable,
 - (ii) in clause (c) by striking out “public complaints” and substituting “complaints”;
 - (iii) by adding the following after clause (c):
 - (d) review the investigation conducted in respect of a complaint during the course of the investigation and at the conclusion of the investigation.

People I have talked to associated with the Police Commission are afraid that this above amendment will allow the public complaint director to possibly second-guess an investigator during the course of an ongoing investigation. The proposed change could result in the public complaint director overseeing and unnecessarily scrutinizing the investigator and the investigator's actions. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to comment or question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes, please. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he would like to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Hehr: Well, certainly. I thank the hon. member. This is one of those bills that I think we'll be bringing forward some amendments on that may help clarify what was no doubt a bit of a scattergun approach to what my comments are.

Finally, I believe the commission has expressed a concern that the complaint director could attempt to insert himself or herself into the investigative process. We know from the simple fact of police independence that we want those police officers to have their independence to complete a review of a situation, to go about their actions in a reasonable fashion, where they can report to their supervisors and to the powers that be on what the situation is.

We know that as public officials we are not supposed to interfere in a complaints process, and in my view it wouldn't be appropriate to interject a public complaint director into a situation like this. We hold the value of our police officers' investigation officer discretion as even a cornerstone of policing, and by allowing this, the public complaints director could be seen to be actively engaged in the process. In our view, that doesn't appear to be correct. Possibly that's not the case, and maybe that is going to be clarified later on, but that's at least my reading.

This amendment may breed some hostility between the service and the oversight body and create an adversarial relationship. I think at all times we have to respect police independence while at the same time walk a fine line between allowing people to have their say when it comes to making a complaint to the appropriate bodies. Investigators must be trusted to do their own investigations, or else they should not be in the role, and the public complaints director should not be thrusting themselves into a situation.

We look at some of the issues that are involved in section 43 and some of the things that have been changed in the act. Several stakeholders have complained that this is a new narrowing of the class of eligible complainant and that it runs counter to the public interest. Advocacy groups feel that these changes are aimed at eliminating complaints by groups or organizations that represent and protect our civil liberties, the CTLA and other organizations and concerned citizens. The CTLA feel that they are the main target of the proposed measures. In my view, that could be the case.

If such a restricted definition of who falls into the prescribed class of a complainant was in place previously, there would be, for example, situations that would not have been brought forward in the past. I think that would limit what type of complaints could go to the LERB and would limit the ability of people to obtain what in their view was a full and fair hearing of their complaint to a board.

Like I said at the start, we should err on the side of caution when we limit individuals' ability to make a complaint or we limit who can make a complaint to a board that serves the public interest. This act essentially disenfranchises.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before continuing, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a large contingent of the Friends of Medicare who have taken time out of their evening because they feel very strongly that there should be a vocal opposition to Bill 17, and they're here to offer their support. I would like to ask them to stand and ask the House to give them the traditional welcome.

Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and make a few comments with respect to Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010. This is another in a series of very, very bad bills that are coming out of the government in this fall session. A lot of the bill has to do with the hearings into the conduct of police. We've had some discussions with some of the legal community in our province, and I'd like to make note of some of their comments with respect to this. It is, I think, a real cause of concern.

Section 20 of the bill, for example, stipulates a wide range of circumstances whereby a complaint could be dismissed. An action can be dismissed if the complainant fails to attend, fails to answer questions, fails to produce an item as required, is unable to participate, refuses to participate, fails to follow processes, or fails to conduct himself or herself in an appropriate manner. Mr. Speaker, this gives an enormous range for a complaint to be dismissed on very spurious grounds. It gives enormous latitude to people who can characterize behaviour of the complainant in such a way as to lead to the dismissal of their complaint.

For example, Mr. Speaker, someone who is agitated bringing a complaint against the police may behave in an unruly manner, but an unruly complainant may nevertheless have a highly valid point that they wish to bring forward. They may have an extremely legitimate grievance, yet their complaint can be dismissed under this legislation. To dismiss a justified grievance simply because a complainant somehow offends a government tribunal or falls into error adhering to process is antagonistic to the notion that the conduct underlying the complaint ought to be determined on the basis of all available evidence. It is, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the duty of these tribunals to look at the behaviour of the police, not of the complainant. So this is a very bad piece of legislation just for that reason alone.

Section 42 unreasonably restricts the class of complainant. A complaint may now be brought only by a person who was the subject of the conduct complained of, an agent of a person who was the subject of the conduct complained of, a person who was present at the time of the incident and witnessed the conduct complained of, or a person who was in a personal relationship with the subject of the conduct complained of and suffered loss, damage, distress, danger, or inconvenience as a result of the conduct. This class limitation unduly restricts other persons or organizations acting in the public interest from launching a justified grievance.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the government employs Crown prosecutors to act in the public interest. What if a Crown prosecutor became aware of information justifying a hearing into police misconduct? By the operation of section 42.1(1), absent of authority to act as an agent, Crowns are incapable of filing a grievance because they do not fit into the class of persons entitled to make a complaint under this act if this is passed.

Similar logic might apply to any other groups acting in the public interest. These groups could include police and other law enforcement officials, civil liberties organizations, a city alderman or a mayor, even the Attorney General of Alberta, the Solicitor General of Alberta, or the Prime Minister of Canada. None of them would be entitled to bring forward a complaint under this section if this bill is passed. So the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association says that there is no basis for this amendment other than to disenfranchise those who are powerless to complain or afraid or who otherwise will not complain.

Section 43 stipulates that if a complainant "refuses or fails to participate in an investigation, the commission may dismiss the complaint." Although, you know, it's possible that dismissal due to nonparticipation can happen, the amendment is nevertheless impractical. It just goes too far, Mr. Speaker. There might be any number of reasons that are justified which would explain a complainant's nonparticipation in the complaint process.

Mr. Speaker, the act goes on to address the question of discoverability. There is a one-year limitation to complain of police abuse. That's half the period for almost any other litigant who has a civil grievance. There are many good reasons to extend the limitation for launching a citizen's complaint against police from one year to two years. You know, for example, anyone participating in criminal justice understands that straightforward criminal cases routinely take more than a year to complete.

With this in mind it's also important to recognize that the party complaining of police misconduct may also be an accused in criminal proceedings involving the very same police officers he or she complains about. So I think it's worth noting that an accused may have a large number of legitimate reasons to refrain from lodging his or her complaint until the completion of the criminal proceedings. For example, the complainant may have been instructed by his counsel to exercise his or her right to remain silent. Obviously, bringing forward a complaint with the time frame that they've put in place makes that very, very difficult.

I want to talk about section 45. Section 45(4) provides that the chief of police may dispose of a complaint if he or she is of the opinion that the grievance is not "serious." Now, I remember a case here, in this city, where the son of the police chief was accused and, I think, later admitted to taserings repeatedly a man who was passed out, and it took a really long time to get any sort of justice at all in that case. Of course, you know, if the chief of police has the broad power to dispose of a complaint because they are of the opinion that the grievance is not serious, it gives enormous latitude and something which we ought not to invest in the chief of police or any police officer whose own members may be subject to a complaint.

Aside from the fact that it appears the Alberta government is prepared to legislate this approach, the practical reality is that there exists a reasonable apprehension of bias in circumstances where the subjects of complaints are essentially authorized to dismiss complaints about themselves. What a citizen or an independent tribunal might view as serious might be markedly different from what the police chief views as serious. I really wonder whether any aggrieved party could ever feel that they received a fair hearing when their complaint was dismissed by the leader of the very group of which they complained. That would be, Mr. Speaker, like trying to bring a civil suit against the government for some omission on their part or some civil wrongdoing on their part and having the Premier decide that it's not serious. Well, how many cases would actually get to trial in that case? I would say very, very few.

So I really wonder what the motive is on the part of this government for bringing forward these amendments. I think that it is inconsistent in our free and democratic society to enact laws shielding law enforcement from accountability, but that, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010, accomplishes. This is a shield for the police to protect them from being brought under scrutiny for any potential wrongdoing that might exist.

This bill is a bad bill. This is one of a series of very bad pieces of legislation that this government is bringing forward in this session, and I urge all hon. members to defeat this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Kang: Yes, sir. Under section 45, where it goes on to say, "by adding the following after subsection (4): (4.1) Where the chief of police disposes of a matter under subsection (4), the decision of the chief of police shall be final," what are your views on giving police chiefs that much power?

Mr. Mason: The question, Mr. Speaker, for some that might not have heard it, is: what is my opinion of section 45, that says that the chief's decision to reject complaints as not serious is final? Of course, it makes it a travesty. If anyone wants to bring a complaint against the Edmonton Police Service, for example, and the chief of police decides to use his authority to declare it not serious, it's over and done with. You know, it's a joke.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28

Electoral Divisions Act

[Adjourned debate November 4: Mrs. Redford]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The object of the bill is the end product of the June 2010 report of the independent Electoral Boundaries Commission, which was appointed under the auspices of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. This was based on the submissions, available census data, and other factors affecting effective representation. The majority of the commission decided to maintain the allocation of the divisions proposed in its interim report, allowing for the following increases: Calgary by two additional divisions, Acadia and Hawkwood; Edmonton by one; and the rest of Alberta by one.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, several of the proposed electoral divisions from the final report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission have been amended since the resolution was debated, and it goes on further. We on this side of the House have advocated repeatedly for some time that Albertans are adequately represented by 83 electoral divisions and the addition of another four would simply be an increased financial burden for Albertans. Secondly, as noted by several members of the Assembly, the move to recognize a living public figure who is regarded as both a controversial and divisive figure could pose considerable difficulties.

This is going to increase the burden on taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, by creating four more seats for the Legislature. Albertans don't need four more electoral divisions at this time because times are tough and it's going to put more of a burden.

For those reasons I don't think I will be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. I'm going to hold my nose and vote for this bill. There's a number of problems with it, not the least of which was the blatant gerrymandering that took place in the development of the second report, the final report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

We had some problems with the original report by the Electoral Boundaries Commission – we appeared and made presentations to them – but there was some rationality to it, Mr. Speaker. Then, of course, the Progressive Conservative presentation to the commission, when they had their hearings on their preliminary report, demanded a number of changes.

I'll just use one example. I'll use the example of Edmonton-Glenora and Edmonton-Calder. There was a rational decision that met all of the criteria to simply draw the boundary along the Yellowhead, which is a natural dividing boundary between Edmonton-Calder in the north and Edmonton-Glenora in the south. But, of course, when this came forward, the members of the commission, who are Conservatives and Liberals, found that this was not in their interests. If you look at the boundaries now, Mr. Speaker, you'll find that it looks like a big bowl of spaghetti: the lines are all squiggly, and it intrudes into one community, and a neighbourhood is attached here, and so on. That's a clear indication that there's gerrymandering going on.

I think that we need to address the whole question of how these boundaries are drawn and the political, in fact partisan, nature of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. What we have now is that the governing party appoints two people; the government appoints a third, the chair; and the Official Opposition, allegedly in consultation with other opposition parties, appoints two more. So what you effectively have is three Progressive Conservatives and two Liberals on the commission drawing electoral boundaries which affect all political parties.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about the whole question of the opposition members on the commission. The act clearly intends the Official Opposition to operate in consultation with the other opposition parties in making the two selections that they're entitled to make on the Electoral Boundaries Commission. But the Liberal Party in this case apparently viewed this as a mere formality, requesting our submissions, to which we went to a great deal of time and effort to find people that would be acceptable not only to New Democrats but to Liberals as well, but it was ultimately – I shouldn't say ultimately ignored; it was completely ignored. The people that the Liberal leader wanted to put on the commission were put forward, and our submissions were ignored. I don't know if the Wildrose was asked for consultation or not.

This is our experience, and it's not the first time. What we have is a partisan group that makes deals to set electoral boundaries. I don't think that this is the way we should be determining our electoral boundaries in this province.

We've made some progress, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the appointment of deputy returning officers. Up until this upcoming election the Progressive Conservative Party selected the deputy returning officers throughout the province. Whether it was an opposition riding or a government riding, it didn't matter. That's where the names came from. One of the things that the previous Chief Electoral Officer recommended was that we do away with that system and that the Chief Electoral Officer, who is an officer of the Legislature, should hire the people who are the deputy returning officers in each constituency. That's been done, so that's progress. But we can make more progress by eliminating the partisan basis for selecting the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and it would go a long way to ensuring that the kind of gerrymandering that we've seen does not occur again.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what I've said, we're prepared to live with this. We know the futility of trying to make amendments in the face of politically determined boundaries. By and large, I think it's something that we're going to have to live with, frankly.

I want to bring up one other question, and that's the question of the renaming of Calgary-North Hill to Calgary-Klein. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a tradition in naming some ridings for outstanding leaders of different political parties: we have Edmonton-Manning; we have Calgary-Lougheed, although I think that's named for the family rather than for the former Premier; and we have Edmonton-Decore. So you have someone who led the Social Credit Party, the Progressive Conservatives, and the Liberal Party.

We put forward a proposition that Dunvegan-Central Peace should be renamed for Grant Notley, which was the riding that he represented, and should be called Central Peace-Notley. We went through all of the processes. There were, in fact, a number of submissions from groups within the community, within the constituency itself, that this should be done. This was rejected without comment by the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I'm not aware that any submission was made to change the name of Calgary-North Hill to Calgary-Klein. But at the last minute the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill jumps up, evidently with the full support of caucus already determined, and says: you know, we're going to rename this Calgary-Klein.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there's an imbalance or an injustice, an inequity in terms of that decision and the lack of process that was followed relative to the process that was followed properly by us and by other people who supported the renaming of Dunvegan-Central Peace to Central Peace-Notley. I think Grant Notley was an outstanding leader of our party, an outstanding parliamentarian, and well respected throughout the province for his work.

I think that the lack of balance, fairness, equity, and the partisanship that's been shown by the Progressive Conservative caucus in this matter is deplorable. We certainly don't support the renaming of Calgary-North Hill after Ralph Klein, who remains – and I'm being charitable and polite, Mr. Speaker – a very controversial figure in our province, not a unifying force, I would say.

That concludes my comments with respect to this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I will speak to Bill 28, as I sort of got started a few minutes ago. We are against this for a number of reasons. I think that it's already been mentioned that we don't believe that we need four. But I think my problem is that when the commission was appointed, the commission was told to make 87. The commission should have been mandated to look into seeing if we need 87 and what that would be based on. They shouldn't have been told to make 87. It's certainly an expense to the taxpayers of Alberta that I think at this point in time is certainly unwarranted.

One of the other things that was mentioned already that I'd like to speak to is the appointment of returning officers and election clerks. I think that we know that last time around was probably not as undemocratic and as fair as it probably could have been. I'd like to share what we used to do in the old days, and I think this could be done again. All of the parties submitted names to the electoral officer, who would then share them with the returning officers. If someone was a returning officer or a deputy returning officer, then their staff would be somebody from the opposite party, so a member from every party. They were all mixed up, and people worked as a group instead of working as only one party represented. I believe that it really helped keep – when people walked through that door, they left any sort of partisan hat at the door and actually ran good elections, asked questions, and worked together as a team to provide a really good election experience. They did not try to play politics, sometimes making it very difficult. I think we do know that there were certainly some problems in the last election.

Just one other comment. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood spoke about perhaps it being a little skewed by the Liberals on that commission. Well, I for one have had my boundaries changed. I have probably picked up maybe two polls from my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-West, who proceeded to tell me with great pleasure that every one of those polls, of course, he had won. So I don't think that the Liberals on that boundary commission helped me at all. However, I did point out to my hon. colleague that probably they had gone PC because I wasn't running in those polls. I didn't think that it was a surprise that the polls that they had chosen to add to my constituency had all been won by the PCs. However, we shall see what happens the next time around.

I think maybe those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. The one that I feel the most strongly about is that every party should be represented in terms of the jobs that are given out during an election period.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Snelgrove: Would the hon. member just give us one instance in the last election or any election before where a returning officer has shown a bias to one or another? It's okay for the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to slander all of the returning officers in Alberta, but you have normally shown a little more class. Would you give us one example of where it's happened?

Ms Pastoor: It wasn't within the returning office. It was when people were coming to the polls. I wish I had it at my fingertips, but you know what? I am going to share that with my hon. colleague across the aisle. In fact, I think there was actually a lawsuit that had gone to court, so I will share that.

I do know that some of the people that were hired – how can I say this? – were probably past their best-by date and sometimes weren't always exactly cognizant of what was going on and weren't quick enough. People were sent away to different polls because they had come to the wrong place. They weren't receiving the kind of help that they should have gotten to ensure that they actually voted. Some of it was, I think, training and the fact that these people are there to help people vote, not discourage them or say: go somewhere else. There are any number of little things that happened, and I certainly will share the instance.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to stand and address, I guess, a few concerns that I have with the Electoral Divisions Act but knowing full well that it will be passing, and I accept that. This is a democracy, and that's the way it works.

One of the biggest concerns that I have, as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East mentioned, was the directive given to the task force in dividing up the Electoral Divisions Act. You know, we're going into the 21st century, and the question is: do we need so many people elected? Was 83 sufficient? Did we need to go to 87? To what lengths and where do we go, and at what cost to the people?

Are we not able with 83 people to represent all of Albertans in this province? Being a representative from Calgary-Glenmore, we now have 25 representatives coming from the awesome city of Calgary to sit in this House and to bring the concerns from Calgary here, but I have to say that at the municipal level, where they have a lot of details that actually go on in the local community, they don't have 25 members to represent them.

It just seems like we've lost sight of this democratic representation here, and it seems like it's more about the numbers or, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said, that gerrymandering is going on to say, "Well, how do we retain another seat so that we can have that vote and ensure that we have the power and the decision-making?" like it's some critical event that they don't have quite enough in the House. We all acknowledge very well the strength of the provincial PCs here in this House in being represented. Do we need to continue to elect more members?

I think that what we should be looking at is: what are ways that we can improve the democratic representation here in the province? We had a great opportunity here in having to respond to the 10-year mandate and ensure that the electoral divisions are set up right. I think that we need to be a little more innovative. There have been lots of discussions. There's even been a commission in B.C. that went out to look at: how are we going to change representation to ensure that people are engaged?

But this bill, you know, has come forward. We've divided up the different areas, and it really is disappointing when you look at some of the divisions in the different ridings. Geographically and communitywise you look at it, and you have to ask: why would you divide this community? Why would you take this one that's over the Yellowhead or across Macleod Trail or Glenmore Trail or some other one and drop it into the neighbouring one and take one piece out of an obvious block in the city and move it over across something like Macleod Trail, which is a major division in Calgary with, again, very different concerns?

I would hope that going forward, and, again, a very slim hope, we would do a better job in looking at the geographical representation, in looking at the number of people that actually need to be sitting in this House as elected representatives, and seeing, you know: can we streamline government in a way that's beneficial to the citizens? There are so many interesting concepts that we could and should look at. I'll just mention a few that will be put down, and maybe over the next 10 years, before the next one, some people will think of that.

One of the interesting concepts that I feel that we could move forward with because of electronics and the way that we can calculate and vote and everything else is to actually try to engage people on why they should actually come out and vote. Is there really a difference? Lots of people say, "Well, it really doesn't matter, you know; they're going to win" or "This person is going to win, and it doesn't affect us."

What would it do if we were to perhaps change the thought? Let's just say that in the city of Calgary we were to cut the number of ridings in half and meld half of them together so that we only had 12 or 13 ridings, but in each riding when they were elected, you'd record the actual number of votes. If there were 11,000 or 15,000 or 25,000 votes, that's what that individual would actually come and vote with here in the House, and each representative would be kind of like a shareholder. The number of people that voted for them in that riding would be what they would actually represent.

I realize that it's a little bit out there for some people who would think: well, how would that possibly work? It would actually work, I think, quite efficiently when you came in here. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the hon. Member for Airdrie-

Chestermere are two that have huge representations in their ridings, yet they were, I guess, divided because they needed more representation from those areas. If, in fact, we were to change that and calculate the vote on the number of people that voted in those other areas, that would engage people, one, to say: well, I want my representative to have full voting authority, so I'm going to go out and engage and vote for them. But, two, we could really reduce the number tremendously because we would have a fair and weighted ballot according to the people that came, whether it's from Calgary or from rural Alberta.

It's engaging because when you look at the different areas, there are some areas that have very high turnout. Even though a member might represent a smaller area or perhaps a vast area, there might be 10,000 people that come out, out of a total of 15,000 in some of our more remote areas, so they have good representation. Then we have some other densely populated areas where there might be 40,000 or 50,000, yet only 10,000 people come out. This would be a way to actually engage Albertans to say: no, my vote does make a difference because when it comes into the House, it's going to be weighted. Right now, you know, like I say, it's one MLA, one vote, and we can tabulate those very quickly. I think we could tabulate just as quickly if people were to push the electronic button, and that number would be in there right off the bat, and it would go.

I really hope that the next time around, when the electoral boundaries act is being relooked at, we'll be a little more innovative and not say: oh, we need four more MLAs here in the province. Eighty-three was more than enough. I think we could have cut them down on this one tremendously, and I hope that next time the government will look at that. I'm quite confident that by the next time there is a revision, a new government will look at it, and we'll have a little more fair representation and more geographically directed. That will be to the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now adjourn debate on Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Doerksen]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. As you know, health care has been the number one concern for Albertans not only now, but I think it goes back to the 1990s, since the cutbacks started. It relates to the wait times in the emergency rooms, a shortage of long-term care beds, a shortage of staff.

We didn't get to this situation of the backed up ER rooms at the hospitals and the red alerts with EMS in one night. It took a long time, I believe since the '90s cutbacks. It has been building, say, for 15 or 16 years. Health care lost 10,000 health care professionals in the 1994-95 cutbacks, I believe, and those health professionals either moved to the U.S. or moved to other jurisdictions, and we haven't been able to catch up. There were lots of beds cut. Lots of programs were cut. [A fire alarm sounded]

The Acting Speaker: It sounds like a fire alarm. We will recess until this is straightened out.

[The Assembly adjourned from 8:41 p.m. to 8:46 p.m.]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we'll call the Assembly back to order. That was the fire alarm. As a couple have mentioned, this is the first time he's heard the fire alarm since he's been here. It was in the sound room in the basement – that's the subbasement – and it's a false alarm.

The Assembly is back to order. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of those employees – I was talking about 10,000 of them – moved to the U.S., or they moved to other provinces. For example, there are 200,000 people in Calgary alone that don't have a family doctor. That is according to government figures. So there we go.

It is a shortage of staff, not only the doctors: nurses, support staff, housekeeping staff. When I was in the hospital this summer, the biggest complaint they had was the shortage of staff. I applaud the front-line workers for doing their best to keep their patients in as much comfort as they can. Under the circumstances they are really stretched. Time and again – time and again – they said: I'm working overtime today. They were really stretched to the limit.

Mr. Speaker, as we keep hearing, you know, the health care expense is the biggest expense, but over the last 20 years per capita health care spending has not gone up when we take into consideration population growth and inflation. I've been living here since 1970, and our health care was working just fine up until maybe the '80s or early '90s. It all started to go downhill with the '90s cutbacks, when our population continued to grow, but we lost four hospitals in Calgary and all the support staff, like I mentioned before. How could you expect the system to keep up when, on one hand, we lost about 10,000 health care workers – now we're able to catch up on that – and we lost about, I believe, 1,500 beds alone back then?

Now, we look at urgency level wait times. For level 1 the target is two weeks, and the actual is two weeks. For level 2 the target is six weeks, and the wait time is 21 weeks. When we go on further, for knee replacements the target is 26 weeks, and the actual wait time is 49 weeks. Mr. Speaker, that's 23 weeks more than the target.

Mr. Speaker, things are not getting better. Things are getting worse every day, but here every day we hear from the minister of health, you know, that it will be done by the end of the year, done in three months. Ever since I've been here, like two years, we've been hearing that we will be meeting our targets in a short period of time, but it's not happening.

It's good to have five years of predictable funding, but even with the five years of predictable funding the patient is getting sicker and sicker and sicker. Red alerts and yellow alerts are becoming common, and the whole system is backed up. People are lying and bleeding in the hallways, Mr. Speaker. I was at the Peter Lougheed emergency department, and this girl was walking up and down the hallway bleeding. I don't know what her problem was, but I think she had a miscarriage or something, it looked like.

The shortage of acute-care beds and the shortage of staff are the biggest concerns in health care today. Patients are being put in storage rooms, in the hallways, and they're waiting in the emergency rooms for sometimes 40 hours to be changed to a room.

When I was in the hospital when I had bypass surgery, I was moved four times, and I ended up in the TV room. Finally, I got a private room, and that took about a week. We were put in a big room. There was no privacy for the patients, and this reminded me of the situation back home, Mr. Speaker. We are still lucky to have health care as we know it today, and if we don't do something about it, I think we are in for a big, big surprise.

Coming back to the Alberta Health Act, Mr. Speaker, the principles of the AHA are that health care is a co-operative between individuals, government, and the health care providers in recognition of social determinants of health; that all ministries and service providers have a role in healthy Albertans; that Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act; that Albertans have access to safe, quality health care; that the health care system is built on long-term planning; and the transparency of the system and the decisions made.

The goal is that all the pre-existing health legislation will be examined and amended to bring it into alignment with the principles that are established in the Alberta Health Act. Originally it was expected that five main pieces of health care legislation – the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, the Hospitals Act, the Alberta Health Care Protection Act, the Nursing Homes Act, and the Health Insurance Premiums Act – would be consolidated into the Alberta Health Act, but this was not pursued as one of the recommendations from the report Putting People First. It was stated that in consultations Albertans were opposed to proceeding with consolidation of these five acts into the Alberta Health Act without further consultation with Albertans.

Then it goes on to say that the Alberta Health Act will allow the minister to collect information from Alberta Health Services, hospitals, clinics, health providers, professional colleges regarding their compliance with the health charter and other health care system information. The reason for this power is so that the minister can report this information back to the public. This is an improvement, Mr. Speaker. However, there is also the ability for the minister to disregard this provision for public input if the regulation is urgently needed, if the proposed regulation clarifies the intent or the operation of the AHA, or if the regulation is of a minor or technical nature. Why have this provision included in the framework legislation that all other health legislation will be viewed through if there's such a large loophole through which the government can avoid public input?

In fact, the Alberta Health Act will entrench some of the progressive principles in the preamble of the AHA such as social determinants of health – social, economic, living conditions, physical and mental environment, employment, gender, and culture – and the need for a healthy policy.

The AHA also says that the minister of health will establish a health charter that will provide direction to Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health Services Board, operators, health care providers, professional colleges, and Albertans on what every organization and individual can expect from the system or what the system expects them to do. One problem with this is that the Alberta Health Act does not provide any timelines on when the health charter will be created, nor does it provide any specifics regarding the public consultations that there will be for the health charter.

Then it goes on further. The AHA will also provide the minister with the power to clarify the roles and responsibilities of different organizations involved in the delivery of health care in Alberta. This will include Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness, the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and the health professional colleges. This is all in line with already existing legislation that defines the roles and the responsibilities of authorities, but there are also stipulations that the minister can clarify the roles and responsibilities of the bodies mentioned above.

Mr. Speaker, the AHA also stipulates that when regulations are being drafted, there must be public input by posting the regulations online, that the public can submit comments, and that the comments are reported to Executive Council. There are also sections that allow the minister to almost completely ignore the section that demands public input into the regulations if the regulations must be made urgently.

Much of the detail in this act is left to regulation, Mr. Speaker. This poses a large problem in that if this is supposed to be the framework through which all other health legislation will be viewed, it follows that in any other health legislation to come, a large part of the details will be left to regulation.

Section 8 of the AHA outlines the minister's ability to order public bodies to provide him with information regarding the health status of Albertans, health service outcomes, and health system performance. There is also the ability to expand the scope of this information through regulation.

What is left out of this section is, then, how the minister will communicate this information with the public when the section explicitly states that the minister is allowed to collect this information "to report to the public on the status of the health system." How is this collection of information any different than what is already provided in the ministry's annual report, Alberta Health Service's annual report, Alberta Health Service's performance report, and the publications by the Health Quality Council?

Another issue with section 14 is with regard to how the minister will report on recommendations regarding proposed regulations to the Executive Council. All reports to Executive Council are subject to censure under FOIP. There's no way to know exactly what the minister's recommendations to Executive Council were until the regulation is declared.

Then in both the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health report and the report from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford there is mention of creating an independent, evidence-based steering committee to support decision-making; however, there is no mention of creation of this entity in the Alberta Health Act.

While the preamble of the Alberta Health Act contains many principles that the Alberta Liberal caucus agrees with, the rest of the act doesn't contain nearly enough detail for us to support it completely. There is no specific health charter that is outlined in the legislation, so the main question surrounding the issue is what type of public debate the health care charter will receive if it's not specifically outlined in the Alberta Health Act. There is no mention of timelines for the creation of the charter, and there is no indication of how the public consultation on the charter will proceed before the charter is put into force. The draft health charter is given in the report Putting People First, but as it is not contained in the actual legislation, it cannot be debated.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, anyone else wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albert Einstein gave a definition some time ago that the definition of insanity is to do the same thing over and over again and expect different results. This government is doing just that with this bill. They pretend to consult with patients and doctors and nurses. They promise meaningful changes, and like a bad soufflé it falls flat. Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, has lofty ambitions like a patients' charter and a patient advocate, but once again this government is going the wrong way because it has no direction. This government promotes one bad policy after another, lurches from one crisis to another crisis, and is constantly having to clean up its own mistakes. As we have seen with the way the government has handled the energy sector, they mean well, but they keep getting it wrong. With this government every time they take a step forward, they inevitably take two steps back.

Mr. Mason: They don't mean well.

Mr. Hinman: You have a valid point there.

Albertans expected real change, real results that could be seen with their own eyes. After years of consulting the people, or after a year, I guess, and after being told Albertans are finally getting their own act, all they have to show for it is an imaginary patients' charter and an invisible friend to enforce it. The charter in question won't even have legal force. The people are not only disappointed; they are frustrated. This feels like a bait and switch. All this government has to show for its work is a preamble, a statement of principles that Albertans already agree with. There was no reason for the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to travel the province at considerable taxpayer expense to draft a laundry list of motherhood and apple pie. Now, because of this government's incompetence, they feel they need to pass a bill to look busy rather than being busy. While emergency rooms overflow, cancer patients wait longer than they should, and seniors wait in hospital beds, this government dithers.

The biggest problem in our health care system is centralization. It does not work. A collectivized solution is just a bigger problem waiting to happen. It doesn't work in agriculture, and it doesn't work in health care. There is no shortage of funding and resources in our health system. Alberta has one of the highest levels of per capita spending in the country. Canada has one of the highest levels in the world. The problem is management.

Mr. Speaker, our health system is clogged with bureaucracy, and we need a bypass now. What does work is local control and autonomy. Empowering front-line staff like doctors and nurses rather than rewarding faraway bureaucrats will help alleviate the stress in our health system. Like school trustees, local decision-making has been removed, and as a result quality is suffering.

Successful European health systems are highly decentralized. In Switzerland health care is managed at the local canton level. There are 26 jurisdictions across that small nation, with a population only twice the size of Alberta, providing responsive care as they see fit. Alberta used to have a similar model, and this government has unwisely created a tragically sluggish monopoly. The track record of centralization in this province is littered with failure: cataract surgeries, emergency dispatch, and a disaster known as Alberta Health Services.

No matter what the issue this government acts the same, and the results are just as predictable. A better performing system was dismantled and consolidated, putting hope for cost-cutting ahead of quality. The best way to keep costs down in general and in health care is to allow competition. The fastest way to find inefficiencies and room for improvement is through competition. For too long the health care system has been sheltered, needlessly putting patients' lives at risk. This government has stamped out any competition. We've seen this with the Health Resource Centre. The HRC provided hip and knee replacement faster, cheaper, and better than any other clinic in the province of Alberta. The proof was provided by the government itself. How did this government react? It shut down HRC. What we need is a government that protects patients, not bureaucratic turf.

When you bring in competition, you bring in something everyone wants. That's choice. In most parts of life if you don't like what you are being offered or how you're treated, you find something better. Choice is something our health care system does not have. You can choose a different family doctor in theory, but in reality there is a shortage, and you have to take what you can get or hold onto what you have.

I believe our health system should be publicly funded, publicly administered, and competitively delivered. This government acts as if wait times and staff shortages are a mysteriously unsolvable problem. They are not. Many European countries like Switzerland and France have found solutions that keep coverage universal and at the same time keep costs and wait times down. The system runs smoothly so that you can see a specialist without a referral in a timely manner. Imagine that: seeing a specialist without a referral in a timely manner.

Anyone should be able to go to any provider with their Alberta health card and receive treatment, whether that provider is a public hospital, a private clinic, or a nonprofit like Covenant Health or the Shriners. They will all receive the same fee from the government. The most efficient, innovative, and productive clinics will treat the most patients, and those with the best results will continue to attract more patients.

The old saying goes that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. I think it's really important that we shift focus to preventative care. As we stand, we have a system that treats sickness instead of promoting wellness. We keep treating instead of curing. We address symptoms instead of causes. Far too often we are spending precious health care dollars on preventable illnesses caused by drugs, smoking, or plain old lack of exercise. Chronic conditions like diabetes are the most expensive to treat, more than cancer or any other life-threatening illness. If people have a strong relationship with a family doctor, they can work together as partners to improve the patient's health and reduce the burden on the system. Right now our system is too short term, where people end up at a walk-in clinic or an emergency room, clogging our hospitals and not getting the proper care they need.

I urge this government to demonstrate real leadership by being humble enough to admit its mistakes, which does seem unlikely, and to realize its limitations by being strong enough to say that, no, it does not need to do things just because staff inside the Premier's office say that this is what we need to do.

Mr. Speaker, while I applaud the principles of Bill 17, I struggle to find how it helps the people of Calgary-Glenmore or any other jurisdiction in this province to create a more sustainable system. All I see in this government's report is lip service to sustainability. The government is spending over 40 per cent on health care. In other Canadian provinces it's now over 50 per cent. This government was warned eight years ago by Don Mazankowski. Real priorities are being brushed to the side because of this government's political priorities.

Albertans are creative, successful, and entrepreneurial. I'm sure there is plenty of opportunity to be more efficient in health care delivery. The problem is that Alberta Health Services is a black hole of information. We haven't had wait time information, or it was withheld for 18 months. If Alberta Health Services were more transparent and released detailed information rather than PR brochures, we'd have a much more efficient system than we do now.

We need a more innovative and efficient system. A key to that is the electronic health records. This government is woefully behind the times in this regard. In nations like Australia and Holland nearly a hundred per cent of the doctors use electronic records. In Canada the average is 37 per cent. EHRs give the right person the right information at the right time so a patient's health comes first. If we had a stronger information system in place, we'd know how much each procedure costs, we'd know the cost benefit of treatments, and we could develop a more efficient and effective health care system.

If we are going to have a sustainable system, we need the staff to run that system. We need sufficient doctors and nurses. We need them doing the jobs that they're trained to do. We have doctors not being able to work because of lack of nurses. Often those nurses are doing manual data entry as well as the doctor. We have nurses changing sheets. We need the right staff doing the right job that they were trained to do.

If we're going to have a fully staffed system, we need fully staffed medical and nursing schools. We need educational stability. This past year medical school spots were cut, and at the same time we were having a family doctor shortage. It just doesn't make any sense. In the nursing field, Alberta Health Services put a freeze on hiring and laid off nearly 500 nurses. Our system needs stability if we're going to have sustainability.

If we're going to look at sustainability, we must take into account our senior population. Those who have worked so hard in life need the proper care and support as they age. The government's record on senior care is a disaster, the reform of the drug plan was a failure, and the lack of proper beds is appalling. Seniors want to live at home whenever possible. Alberta has the second-lowest level of home care spending in Canada. Too often seniors end up in a hospital bed while they wait for a bed in assisted or long-term care. When seniors can't get the right beds and end up in a hospital, it creates problems in our emergency rooms. Seniors want to be near their loved ones and, when possible, close to home.

Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing that we have come to this, where we need to pass a bill to state the obvious. One has to scratch one's head and ask: what are we really doing here? To think that this government feels that Bill 17 is a priority in health care is just wrong. Of course, we think health care is important and that patients should be respected. It's obvious that the government should seek public input on a regular basis. That's the bedrock of democracy. We already know and understand those things. These things are common-sense things.

What this bill seems to be is much ado about nothing. One might say that thou dost protest too much for an innocent person: way too many statements about how well everything is going to be with this new act. These are all promises and declarations that one would never think about saying or stating, other than the fact that there are so many problems with no cures in sight, so we must state that we're going to have one.

If we were truly to run health care properly, it would be a major step to bring back the Alberta advantage. There should be an economic and social advantage to be here in Alberta. Do not get me wrong. We are very blessed and fortunate here in Alberta. The problem is that like many family businesses that were focused on service with a great reputation that is lost by the third and fourth generation, they lose the family business because they do not understand the values and principles of those who founded it and worked hard to build up a successful business. We are falling far short of our potential and the excellence that we shall have here in Alberta. We can do better, but this bill will not turn around the continuing decline of our health care here in Alberta. The front-line workers are amazing and do a wonderful job given the workplace atmosphere they must work in. They deserve better, and our patients deserve better. This bill falls far short of any improvement here in the province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I just have a few comments with respect to the speech of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. It has the refreshing aspect of honestly stating the intention to bring about competition through private enterprise into our health system. I think this is a severely mistaken point of view, but it's refreshing to see a party that's at least willing to admit what their underlying objectives and strategies are for the health system, unlike the party opposite, who hide what they're doing at election time, and after the election they make a renewed attempt to try and bring about the kind of system that the hon. member here is talking about.

I've seen it at least twice, Mr. Speaker. In the 2004 election I challenged Ralph Klein in the debate and said, "You've got a secret plan to privatize health care," something he hotly denied in the election and in that debate, but it was only a matter of a couple of months later that he unveiled the third way, which, of course, was a plan for a privatized second tier of health care. It was two-tier health care using private delivery as a key ingredient. In the last election, of course, the Progressive Conservative Party said almost nothing about health care. When asked, the Premier said: well, you know, the third way is DOA, dead on arrival. There was nothing on their website or in their policy statement which would have given us any indication of what was to come with the appointment of Ron Liepert as health minister, and we've seen the results of all of that.

The Acting Speaker: Well, hon. member, you know that you can't use names.

Mr. Mason: Oh. Did I use somebody's name?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, you did.

Mr. Mason: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. It was completely inappropriate. It was the previous health minister. I take your admonishment, and I apologize to you and to the House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Mason: So we've seen how the government tries to operate along the same policy lines as put forward by the hon. member from the Wildrose Alliance but to do so with stealth. They back off because the people of Alberta stand up against it. They don't want private health care, including rural Conservative voters, and that's something that I think the Wildrose Alliance is going to find out to its disadvantage in the next election.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Just to respond to that because, you know, there are always those who jump to conclusions, that don't want to look into the details. The Wildrose Alliance is very much for staying within the Canada Health Act. There's a big difference. I mean, I would suggest that for most all members who go to their family doctor, that's a private clinic that's publicly administered and publicly funded, and that's very much what we're focused on. We do agree with you that Albertans want a publicly administered and publicly funded health care system. It's very different.

Albertans do not care if they go to the HRC and can be treated six months earlier than waiting to go to another facility. The problem is that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the debate is through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Sure. I'm just referring his answer through the chair so that he can get that.

The Acting Speaker: Through the chair. Yes.

Mr. Hinman: So it's a misguided idea to think that privatization is some evil thought that's going to take over health care. What we want is the administrators to have the choice and to look at various ways of appealing and putting out requests for proposals. If they would do that in an open and honest sense so that we know what is being proposed, then the competition can come in, and we can even allow areas such as Calgary to compete with some areas that Edmonton might be given.

I remember that during the by-election one of the hot issues was that the superboard said that, you know, for prostate cancer, which I'm proud to be wearing the tie and the pin for today, they were going to remove the green light laser technology from the Rockyview. They said: "We don't need one down in Calgary. We've got two in Edmonton, one in Grande Prairie, one in Medicine Hat, and that's enough for the province." So we weren't even going to be allowed to compete and say that we've got this here, and the money would follow only where they decided to give this facility money; it might be for hips or something else.

So when we talk about competition, we mean that even in one jurisdiction – whether it's Grande Prairie, whether it's Red Deer, or it might be Calgary – that wants to move into a new area, that funding would follow that procedure and not be trapped in one centralized area, saying that everybody in the province must come to Calgary or to Edmonton to receive that because the superboard says that that's the only area that's going to provide that service.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to discuss Bill 17 here tonight in this honourable House. I was present in this honourable Legislature when I heard the preamble and first reading of this bill. I listened with hope. I guess, you know, that like many citizens in this province and like, hopefully, many members of this House we are rightfully concerned about our health care system and the state that it is currently at in this province. So I listened with a great deal of interest when the bill was introduced.

You know, one of the funniest guys I know is my cousin David Vanrobacys from Lethbridge. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East knows him. He and I were discussing this, and he said: you know, that Bill 17 is a whole lot of feathers and not a lot of chicken, don't you think? Mr. Speaker, I bring that up because I think it is really a good analogy by an extremely funny man, my cousin. It is. This bill is a whole lot of feathers, but at the end of the day you don't get much of a meal out of it. There's not much chicken left.

When I was listening to this wonderful stuff, this new health care act, what it was going to prescribe, all I heard was that we're going to have a health care charter that might be put into play sometime in the future and in regulations. Then I heard that we'd have a health care advocate, who might be able to make recommendations and who might be able to tell you that your concerns won't be as evident next time or point you in a direction where maybe you can get some answers, because, hopefully, this person will deflect you away from the real problem or from directing a call to the minister or someone else. It is just, it seems to me, an act that is trying to act like it is doing something when it is in fact doing nothing.

I think if you look at health and – I listened intently, too, that day to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who is our health critic, and I believe he did a very good job of looking at what in fact some of the problems are. If this government is serious about looking at what the problem with health care is, it would have to look into the situation and make a diagnosis. That diagnosis would have to go back. We'd have to go back in Alberta's history and look at what has happened to a health care system which, in my view – I was born in 1969 in the Holy Cross hospital, and some of the research that I've done and our caucus has done leads us to the view that Alberta had one of the best health care systems bar none in Canada, if not the world, up until the time I was 15, up until approximately 1985-86. It might even have extended all the way into the early '90s, when it was still a pretty good day for Alberta citizens in terms of health care.

At that time what did we see our government do? We saw our government go off for political reasons on a tangent of sorts that began by tinkering with a system that was arguably the best in the world. It made fundamental decisions on political idealism that really had no rational basis as to what, in fact, an adequate health care system looks like or what a productive health care system looks like. What did you see at that time? You saw, one, where about 15 years ago, in 1994-1995, 10,000 health professionals in this province either lost their jobs or were declassified into some other structure, and you had university spaces that were simply nonexistent for nurses and doctors to go to school. So is it any wonder that in Calgary now statistics are that 200,000 people don't have a family doctor? Okay? We did those things, and I think those decisions have a direct correlation to what we see now. But I guess as many people accuse us: that was then, this is now, and we have to deal with it now.

You know, those are some of the decisions that find us where we are today, and I don't think to have then gone from that decision – and look at some of the decisions we've made since then. I believe it was in the late '90s that we went from some number of health regions down to nine regions. Sure. A decision was made. It was made probably for political expediency like many of the decisions this government makes. It looks like it's doing something when it may not actually be prescribing a diagnosis to what the problem is.

We see, again, what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up in I believe it was Bill 11, which tried to bring in the third way, which again was based on nothing but ideology in the early part of this decade, which saw this government spend time and money and invest dollars into monkeying around with a system, continuing to tinker with a system that was starting to falter from some of the earlier decisions, that were made in the '90s, a system that was beginning to show cracks there but still was puttering along from some of the good work done probably by the Lougheed government to put in place a very good, strong public health care system. But they kept on tinkering. So now where does that leave us? Where are we now?

An Hon. Member: Right here.

Mr. Hehr: Oh, I know we're right here. Yes. That is the one thing I do know. That is the one thing I do know. But thank you for reminding me. Don't ever say that I don't pay attention to what you guys say. Okay? I do know where we are.

We have many of those symptoms, that have really come up over the last 15 years. I'm glossing over some things. Don't let me rush myself. I got sidetracked there for a second. We have access problems today. We have closures of hospitals. You know, I don't like to belabour this, but they blew up a hospital in Calgary, the Calgary General, which serviced people. It was not in Calgary-Buffalo but one block away. They sold a hospital, the Holy Cross, which I think is actually in the new Calgary-Buffalo electoral district. They sold that. Those facilities could have in some fashion maybe handled some of the emergency lines, some of the pressures that are building today. But those facilities were shut down and sold and their staff let go, and it left a problem.

There's also the fact – and this was brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview – that over the last 16 years we've had 13 or 14 deputy ministers in charge of our health care system. He paints a very clear picture. If you consider that, we've had 13 or 14 people in charge of a $10 billion a year corporation that have been changed every couple of years: "Let's just move this out. We have a new minister coming in. Let's bring along his buddy." Or maybe he knows someone in Calgary who types his letters the way he likes them. I'm making light of the fact; nevertheless, word on the street is – and primarily I trust my friend from Edmonton-Riverview – that many of these deputy ministers had never been doctors, had never worked in a health facility, had never run a corporation of that size.

Let's fast-forward things to the Alberta health superboard. Where did Mr. Duckett work prior to this? Had he ever run a health system? I don't know that. Nevertheless, we've appointed some people to a superboard. Have they ever really worked in hospitals? Yeah, they were good businesspeople, things like that, but in a hospital system you need expertise.

We say that our hospital system should be run like a business. We look at, say, Nexen, for example, in Calgary or – what's it called? – Canada oil sands development, something to that effect. God forbid I'd say Petro-Canada. My goodness. Government intervention at its worst. Nevertheless, I would assume they've had a person who's worked in that organization for years, has risen to the top, an engineer or MBA or something, that would have some knowledge of how an oil business runs. I think it would be wise to have a deputy minister who has that, who has worked in a hospital. This seems to make common sense. These are things that have been absent from our health care decision-making, and I really hope that going forward they're not. That may make things better.

I did listen, and I was actually very consumed by this. There was one positive thing that came out of this: looking at the social determinants of health. Now, there's the thing, a recognition, of all things, that poverty and disease and health are interlinked, that people who maybe don't get access to certain things or have a bad diet or maybe are malnourished or are exposed to certain things may not be as healthy and may cause more concern for the health care system. That would be really a remarkable thing, for this government to look at the social determinants and how maybe they can make things better for some elements of this society who are not getting by quite as well as the others, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview also said. I'm essentially ripping off his speech, but those who were here don't mind that. There you go.

He looked at things like a school lunch program for kids going to school hungry. Are these kids going to grow up to be healthy and productive? You know, probably not. Those are things governments do to try and play in those fields that maybe make things better. Are we going to bring back a system that really recognizes that governments have a role to play somewhat in those things? I think that at one time a Progressive Conservative government maybe with a different philosophy, one that may come back at some point in time – who knows? – the Lougheed government, believed they had to play in those fields. They were part of that progressive element of government that actually makes lives better. That element has actually left, left for quite some time, and it doesn't appear headed back for town any time soon.

Nevertheless, those are things, at least from the limited wording in there, that to me had a positive light: government looking at the social determinants of health. If they really want to get active and busy on that, there are many ways to do things for the citizenry that I believe would augment things.

On that note, you know, I guess to sort of sign off again using the words of my cousin, this bill really has a lot of feathers, not a whole lot of chicken. I think, to be honest, that this government should be a little bit embarrassed about it. I think there is more to be done in the health care system than what has been done in this act. I think it's merely window dressing, which makes you look like you're doing something when you're not. Everyone knows that a health care system is there to make you feel better when you're sick or when you need it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Hinman: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo started off with an eloquent delivery of his remembrance of history, but he is somewhat younger. It's interesting. He, you know, referred to the years '87-88 to '92, and to me the lesson that I learned watching the government and our health care system at that time was the fact that we had a growing debt. It escalated to $25 billion, and it was just unsustainable. By allowing that debt to escalate to such an area, the government felt that the only area where it could make cutbacks was in health care, and it made the very poor decision of saying: well, you know, we don't want to be picking and choosing, so what we're going to do is go 5 per cent across the board.

Anybody who has ever managed a business and looked at those types of things: when you've got tough times, you look at those things that are critical and those things that aren't. You would never in a business take the idea of 5 per cent across the board. You'd look at: actually, we need to increase 10 or 15 per cent here and make maybe a 30 or 50 per cent cut here or eliminate some other programs.

What would be the member's comment regarding that we were hitting a debt wall? We've got a government that has spending out of control again, and if we don't control that spending, then you start pointing the fingers at important things like health care and saying: well, we don't have any choice. I was just wondering if your view on that was a little different from your view on history, realizing that we were in a real dilemma there with a $25 billion accumulated debt, that was continuing to escalate. That had a major effect on our health care because of irresponsible spending.

Mr. Hehr: Well, first off, I'm not going to agree with everything you said there. Nevertheless, here is my view of society as a whole. When we look at our society, at least as it exists right now, as a society we say that we can't afford health care, yet my parents, who are retired teachers, can take a couple of vacations a year. We have people living in extraordinary opulence here in this province, many of them doing wonderful things, which is fair. I like that. I like that about our society. But if we as a people, as a province can't get our heads around the fact that we can afford a health care system that treats everyone in our public to the best health care system in Canada if not in the world and that we as a citizenry can afford it, then I think we're in trouble.

I realize the government has – I would be naive to believe that it is easy being in their shoes. If they one time all of a sudden said, "Guys, we have got to go to the polls, and we've got to charge 5 per cent more taxes to run a proper health care system," I would probably support them on that. The thing is that we have many members of our society who say: oh, my goodness, governments have a money tree in the backyard. Okay? I think the hon. President of the Treasury Board accuses me of believing that there is a money tree in the backyard sometimes. I may be one of these people who hasn't stood in their shoes.

I believe, probably without looking at blaming here and just answering the question – really, I'm rationally taking the politics out of it – our society has to get its head around the fact that we are wealthy enough to afford the best health care in this world and that it's going to take us contributing to it at some point in time to see that happen. We can't simply rely on the vagaries of the oil and gas system and hope that enough royalties come in one quarter and that if they're not in another, well, we're going to cut things indiscriminately from what they are. Simply put, our society has got to get their head around the fact that it's going to take contributions to pay for it.

Thank you very much for the question.

The Acting Speaker: There's still time left for questions under 29(2)(a).

Any other members wish to speak to the bill? Hon. member, you have spoken to the bill.

Mr. Mason: I have?

The Acting Speaker: Yes.

Anyone else wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that a lot has been said, so looking at the hour, I won't repeat many of the things, but I guess I'll get on my horse that I always get on and talk about staffing. Clearly, it's one of the main things happening that is creating, in my mind, some of the huge problems that we have in health care.

We talk about needing beds. Yes, but some of the things that happened when senior care was deregulated was that they went overboard on the other side for housing, and they didn't create the staffing that should go with it. Par for the course, I think, was to try to get rid of long-term care. Of course, as time goes on and certainly as it's being proven, we do need long-term care. Had they looked at the Nursing Homes Act, in fact, many of those people that were in acute-care beds could have been moved to long-term care had the nursing scope of practice been allowed to go to the very highest level. I know that when I was in the industry, there were many things that we couldn't do that any ordinary nurse would do. Those people could have come in.

I think the other thing that I'm probably annoyed about is that they took hospitals and they blew them up. They got rid of acute-care beds. All of a sudden there is a problem. Whoa. Wait a minute. Who should we blame? Certainly not the guys that made the decision to blow up the hospitals. Who should we blame? Let's blame the seniors. They're the bed blockers in our acute-care beds. I really resent the fact that seniors who needed care, who probably deserved to be in long-term care – granted, we did not have designated assisted living, et cetera, at the time, and home care was certainly almost nil in terms of keeping people in their homes. But I really resented that somebody needed to pay the price for the mistakes that were made. Unfortunately, it was the seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this particular bill, although there has been some good work done on it, is a vision. But, you know, it's a vision without action and certainly without timelines. We need health care, and Albertans want a health care that they can trust now. We can't wait any longer. We have to move.

We tentatively oppose it for several reasons. The preamble of the Alberta Health Act contains many principles that the Liberal caucus agrees with, and the rest of the act does not contain nearly enough detail for us to support it completely. When I say detail, I want time frames, and I want actions. When is it going to happen? I think one of the things we have to look at is that although we talk about beds, we absolutely have to have the trained staff that will go with that particular level of care needed in that bed.

There is no specific health charter that is outlined in the legislation, so the main question surrounding this issue is what type of public debate the health charter will receive if it's not specifically outlined in the Alberta Health Act. We have a couple of things going here that don't appear to be meshing. There is no mention of timelines, as I've said, for the creation of the charter, and there's no indication of how public consultation will proceed before the charter is put in force. A draft health charter is given in Fred Horne's Putting People First report, but as it is not contained in the actual legislation, it can't be debated.

The office of the health advocate will be created to ensure that the health charter is enforced, but it's difficult to support the creation of an office to enforce a charter which, in fact, in itself is undefined and has no legal force. The advocate should be independent of the government so that they can more effectively lobby the government on behalf of the Albertans that they are representing. That's what Albertans want. They want to know, when they go to somebody, that they're not going to be intimidated and that it really will be somebody who is looking after their interests, not the government's interests.

The whole section on the roles and responsibilities for organizations, that are already covered under pre-existing legislation, is completely redundant. This is a sign that Alberta Health Services has turned into an organization which the government is seemingly having more and more difficulty controlling or at least working in tight partnership with.

The last issue with this bill is the exception that the minister can make to having public input on proposed regulations. Regulations, as we all know, are often done in the backrooms and certainly don't come through this House. This is very, very wrong. This is a health act that will affect every single Albertan from birth until death. They must be able to have input into this. We must have input into any regulation and any charter that would come forward that will affect us.

Certainly, every single portion of our life is affected in some way by health. If the government truly wanted transparency in the way that the health care system is governed, then they would not have had the possible loophole to public input. If a regulation is created without public input, then the minister must post a notice of this decision. But in the end what good is posting the exception after the decision is made and the public input was not solicited nor considered? I think that's one of the most important things, that we do have the public, and when I say the public, I want to see more – and it has been mentioned previously – actual front-line workers being part of the decisions and part of the input. The front-line workers, as far as I'm concerned, have been ignored to this point. They are the ones that are on the ground, they're on the front lines, and they really understand what is needed. More often than not it isn't a big study. It isn't money being spent. More often than not it is tweaks in the system that only front-line workers can actually recognize and be able to bring forward.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, I would like to give notice of an amendment, and I present this amendment on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Hon. member, we'll pause and have it delivered, and then you can speak to it.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief because I believe that we've had a fairly good discussion, and I think there have been many points of view brought forward on this. I have to read the motion. It is to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

I will be brief. As I've mentioned, I think that there has been a good discussion up to this point. I feel very strongly that we need a timeline. We need action, which, I believe, should be staffing to go with all of these extra beds that they're saying that they're creating. We certainly need more transparency. We need Albertans to be able to trust what's going on, but they have to know what's going on before it goes on. I believe that a lot of these discussions that will go on in regulation truly should come back into the House and be put in. I think that there are overlaps between this. I'm not sure that it's totally understood how this would fit in under the Canada Health Act, and for that reason I'm bringing forward this motion.

I think one other thing is that Albertans want good health care that they trust now, not two years from now, not after charters are made, et cetera, et cetera. They need it now, and they want it now.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: On the amendment, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. I want to indicate to the House that I support this amendment. I think it's an excellent amendment, and I don't think we should read Bill 17 at this time but six months hence, when it's unlikely that the House may actually be meeting, in which case the bill is dead. That would be the best outcome, as far as I'm concerned, to kill Bill 17 altogether, and this amendment would have the advantage of doing that, in my opinion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I did speak to Bill 17 earlier, I talked about it really as a question of misplaced priorities. There are so many difficulties with our health system at the present time that I'm amazed the government would think that this particular bill would be a priority.

The bill is very clear as to what it sets out. It sets out a charter, a patients' charter, which, in our view, is not the best policy. It's going to be set later by regulation, so we don't even know what the charter is although the government has given us some indication of what they might put in it. It won't be enforceable by law. Nobody will be able to go to the courts to require the health system – Alberta Health Services or the ministry or the government – to act in a way that's consistent with the health charter.

Then it sets up a health advocate, and the health advocate, if he receives a complaint that the health charter has been breached, may choose to conduct an investigation. If he or she does conduct an investigation, then they can give a report to the minister, and the minister at his or her discretion may or may not decide to act on the report.

That's really all this act says. We've looked at it carefully because I know there have been a number of concerns raised that this, in fact, gives a great deal more latitude to the minister and to the government to change a whole bunch of things about the health system; specifically, health authorities and professional organizations within the health system. We don't believe that this is extending the power far beyond what currently exists in existing legislation.

But what this represents is misplaced priorities on the part of government. Let's take a look at the emergency room crisis. Just two or three weeks ago, when the ER doctors released the letter describing the crisis that exists in our emergency rooms, the minister was quick to announce that he was going to enforce new standards in our emergency rooms. These are national standards, and they had quietly been sitting on Dr. Duckett's compensation evaluation on the website for over a year, but the minister announced them as if they were his initiative and that they were new and that he was taking tough action.

Well, just today, in response to a question from a government member, the minister admitted that he has watered down these objectives very, very substantially, massively. Only 45 per cent, in one case, of patients are expected to get care in the time frame that exists for the national standards, instead of 90 per cent of them, 45 per cent of them, and that's the scope of it.

Well, this was a change that was quietly announced on the Alberta Health Services website just a few days ago, apparently without the minister's knowledge, but he has now endorsed this, so his tough talk that we're going to have national standards for emergency room wait times has just evaporated, you know, like a spilled drop of water in a hot desert. It's just gone.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

Mr. Boutilier: Under what citation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Under 23(h), (i), (j). Take your pick. The allegations that this member is making against me as the minister of health are completely off-line, off-base. They're not true, and I think we should clarify that and bring him to order on it.

The fact is that I have not admitted to any watering down of any performance measures. What I did today was clarify that a reporter in the media had made a wrongful comparison of mixing together different statistics, Mr. Speaker, and took some licence by misapplying some of those numbers to all emergency sites across the province versus some that were attributed to only the 15 busiest sites across the province. As a result of that, he created some unfortunate confusion, and I was simply trying to clarify that.

At the same time I also clarified, Mr. Speaker, that on Alberta Health Services' website it clearly states that the performance measures are being worked on jointly by Health and Wellness and by Alberta Health Services and that they will be released soon in their proper full form. So I would ask the hon. member to please correct himself and not mislead the House any further in that regard.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would hold that the Minister of Health and Wellness does not have a valid point of order. It is clear that in this House he announced, following the release of the doctor's letter indicating the severe crisis in our health care system, that the health system and he as minister would be enforcing emergency room wait time standards that were established as the national standards. Today, in response to a question from one of the government members, he announced that he was working on new standards with Alberta Health, which was just repeated today. The figures that he used were very much lower than previously said. I would submit that the minister does not have a point of order, but he has unfortunately contradicted himself with respect to what the emergency room wait time standards will be.

If I could continue with my comments, I want to just indicate . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I've listened to this. I've listened to the points made by the minister, and I've listened to the comments that you've made here as well. I also was here in the House today listening to the question and the answer as it was brought forward, and I think that perhaps there's been just a little bit of levity given by you, hon. member, when you were talking about watering down. I think that the term "watering down" was used incorrectly. If you would put a different point in, we can carry on.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw the use of the term "watered down," but it does seem apparent to me that there has been a dilution of the changes that exist that were previously announced.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: I want to just indicate that notwithstanding this severe crisis in our emergency rooms, there exists a health centre in my constituency, the east Edmonton health centre. When it was opened, it was opened without two critical components. The first component is a family medicine centre where six doctors were going to be employed in order to provide services to a very underserved area. The second component that has remained vacant is an urgent care centre which was designed to divert many cases from entering the emergency room at the Royal Alexandra hospital, one of the busiest in the province. That could be reopened for a very small amount of money and would divert I think the number is 34,000 cases from the Royal Alex ER on an annual basis. These are cases that don't need to go to emergency, Mr. Speaker. What I see is the government not addressing these issues.

Mental health beds are another huge example. The Premier today in question period, when he was asked about this by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, said: well, we've got all of these community-based mental health programs. But, Mr. Speaker, they're not beds. They're not staffed beds. So if people with mental health issues are in acute-care beds and preventing them from being used by people who have cleared emergency, putting them in a community health program is no good because they need a bed. The Premier has double-talk going on. Instead of saying, "Yes, we need more mental health beds," he talks about community-based programs.

Similarly, when we talk about the whole question of long-term care beds, again the Premier dissembles, and he talks about continuing care. Well, continuing care may be a range of care, but long-term care is a medical bed. It has nursing care, it has drugs that are paid for, it has a higher level of care, and people are medically assessed as requiring that. Now, that's not the same as a seniors' apartment or a lodge at all. You can't take people who are in an acute-care bed because they're chronically sick and put them in a seniors' lodge. There's no nursing care, they don't get their drugs covered, and so on. The disingenuousness of the government around the whole question of emergency room care is the real reason why we need to view this particular act as an enormous diversion and, frankly, a complete waste of time. Mr. Speaker, what they're setting out is nothing that is going to solve the problems.

In my experience, when I talk to people around the province and in my own constituency, what they want is not a patients' advocate and a patients' bill of rights. They want somebody to fix the emergency room problem. When they have parents that are ailing, they want to know that they're going to get good care and that it's going to be affordable and that it's not going to bankrupt the family to make sure that they're well taken of. If they've got someone in their family with mental illness, they want to know that there's a bed for them and people that are going to care for them. Those are the kinds of things that people want. They want family doctors, Mr. Speaker. They want the government to stop lurching from problem to problem without ever finding a solution.

We've seen the government, for example, say for a number of years that we have a severe shortage of nurses, and then all of a sudden last year a whole graduating class of nurses couldn't find jobs in Alberta because they put a freeze on it, and in fact they were eliminating nursing positions. Now, again, we have a nursing crisis, and we need to find more nurses. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that we can't staff these beds? This government is so inconsistent in terms of how it attempts to address the problems in our health care system that no solution is ever reached.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at some length about the whole question of long-term care and the private delivery that this government keeps attempting to access as a solution to long-term care, glossing over that the long-term care private providers have told the government that in order for them to be able to invest in long-term care and in seniors' housing, they're going to have to double the charges that are currently in existence. Of course, this is just going to drive more and more families towards bankruptcy, whether they have to pay inordinate amounts of money or they have to give up a job to themselves care for a loved one who requires constant care.

I think that the motion that's been put forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is an excellent one. I think we should approve it so that we can get rid of this atrocious piece of legislation, just one in a series of some of the worst legislation I have yet to see in the 10 years that I've been in this House, Mr. Speaker. The legislation that has come forward in this session I think is dreadful and truly indicates to me what I hope is the last gasp of this tired, old Progressive Conservative government.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. You want to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Boutilier: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. My question through the chair to the hon. member is on the issue of long-term care, something that is close to all of our hearts. You know, when you made reference earlier – and I look here in Beauchesne, and nowhere in here are the words “watered down” unparliamentary – it clearly captures watered down when you talked about long-term care. Through the chair to the hon. member I would have to say: do you not believe that it is truly a watered down system in terms of what is being amended, in terms of what Bill 17 is all about?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I spoke earlier about him not using the words “watered down.” You can check Beauchesne or wherever you want. I made a ruling that asked him to use some other words, and you are now using the same words. I’d ask you to do the same as well.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I look here in Beauchesne. Nowhere are the words “watered down” in here under parliamentary language. Nowhere have I made reference to the issue of speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, it was in the term and it was in the context that it was used. I made a ruling on this, and I would hope that you would respect that.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I certainly respect your decision. However, the context of what I am saying here regarding this amendment, which I am speaking to, is the issue of long-term care.

Through the chair, Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. member on long-term care. Clearly, long-term care and what has been committed to versus what has been delivered relative to this bill and the amendment which is coming forward right now: do you not feel that, no reference to any individual in here, that actual policy is watered down?

Mr. Mason: Well, I wouldn’t use the term “watered down,” Mr. Speaker, but I would say it’s terrible. I would say that, you know, it’s very, very hard to follow this government’s strategy. Let’s not forget that last November we released an internal document of senior bureaucrats from a number of departments that showed that they were working to a plan to reduce the number of long-term care beds in this province by up to half, a plan that had never been shared with the public or this Assembly by this government. So I would say that that’s not watered down. That’s not even diluted. I mean, that is a strategy on the part of the government that is deceiving the public, that is not telling them what they’re really doing and leading them to believe that there’s going to be an expansion in care for seniors.

Of course, they use a confusing array of language like continuing care and so on. They don’t really define what it is. We redefined it and redefined it for them. Long-term care is in the health care system. People are covered under medicare except for their housing payment. They get nursing care, they get drugs, and they get the treatment of someone who is chronically ill. They are nursing home beds or auxiliary hospital beds. And there is no reason that you can’t design those beds so that you don’t have to separate couples, which is the other red herring that the Premier throws out every time to try and confuse things and make it sound like they’re the humane ones and we’re the ones that want to break up couples that have been together for 50 years, and that’s just nonsense.

Thank you very much, hon. member, for the question. I don’t think that the appropriate word is “dilute.” I think the appropriate words are “incompetent” and “less than honest.”

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I just wanted to ask the member. He had referred to mental health, and I just would like his comments on the importance of having a counsellor always available in emergency so that at least people with mental health that come in are immediately seen. Even if they have to wait for a while, at least they’ve been contacted by somebody with the proper training to be able to help someone with mental health.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much. I think that the background for what the hon. member is saying is the recent revelations that there have been mental health patients in emergency rooms that have committed suicide in Alberta hospitals in the last number of months and the fact that they’re not able to get the beds. You know, let’s not forget that the government recently closed a number of mental health beds in Edmonton hospitals.

I agree that this is an urgent priority that needs to be addressed. The staff in those emergency rooms are professional, they’re excellent, they’re good humoured, but they are also at risk because we don’t have the proper staffing and facilities and beds in our emergency rooms. Mental health is one of the biggest reasons why we have the emergency room crisis because there are not active beds, and you need to put someone in a bed to take them out of an acute-care bed to free it up.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak to the amendment, that “Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.” I wish I could actually in this amendment talk about maybe not six months from now but perhaps 12 years from now or something even further because it is full of irony. Clearly, the irony and also the rhetoric that goes with Bill 17 – at one point the Edmonton Journal called it historic. Nothing could be further from what is accurate. It is historic. It is historic with rhetoric, rhetoric that is, I believe, meaningless to the people of Alberta. The people of Alberta deserve much, much better.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands earlier talked about long-term care. I can only say – and I’m embarrassed to say – that the city that I proudly call home in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, with over a hundred thousand people, to this day does not have a long-term care centre. We have emergencies where the emergency room is clogged. We have over 55 seniors in acute-care beds that are costing at this point a thousand dollars a day.

In actual fact, the commitment that this very government made over two years ago, that they failed to live up to at the time – I would not toe the party line when it came to the fact that I was representing the voices of Fort McMurray on health care and specifically to honour a commitment of an election promise. Even though the economy had turned down, the fact was that there were over 50, almost 60 seniors that were still in acute-care beds. Acute-care beds, if you can believe that.

The then minister of health talked about: we want to keep seniors in their homes. Well, there is not one person, not one member in here who does not want to keep seniors in their homes. Their families and their loved ones have cared so deeply for their seniors.

For me to go and tell a lady 102 years old that, by the way, the minister of health thinks that you should stay in your home for another four years while we break a promise that we made to you is absolutely bordering on ludicrous, for anyone to even consider going back to their constituency to say that. To the senior that is 99 years old who has been in an acute-care bed for over three years and still is there today while other seniors – and I applaud the other seniors in constituencies that have long-term care facilities that can enjoy a quality of life in their last years of life. Unfortunately, don't come to northeastern Alberta because there is no long-term care centre.

Ultimately, I believe the amendment that you bring forward is an honourable one, but I just wish that it was not for six months. I actually wish that perhaps we'll consider at one point an amendment to the amendment of making it more than 12 years.

I really appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, who makes reference to the fact – and I can see him nodding his head in agreement with me – that he does support seniors, and he supports that, yes, you can care for your loved one, and you can. But to go and tell a 104-year-old lady that, in fact, the minister of health says that you're going to have to wait another four years for committed long-term care – a broken promise. I can't think of anything that is more diluted in terms of the importance.

An Hon. Member: Distasteful.

Mr. Boutilier: Distasteful I think is a very good word.

I can only say that I can proudly look myself in the mirror. I can look myself in the mirror and know that I have been a good voice and a strong voice for the seniors in my community. I think every MLA that looks themselves in the mirror when it comes to this act, Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, shall never forget the fact that this is not historic. This is historic in rhetoric and does not in any way, shape, or form – my advice is that perhaps they should listen to their emergency doctor, who actually has experience in dealing with emergency room things, so that long-term care beds are not clogged. Because of the fact of what's taking place up here, it also then impacts other stages of our health care system.

Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, does not address either the long-term care issue or the ER issue, and that really is an important component that's been identified by health care professionals. I also think of the health care professionals that had the courage, that came to the Wildrose and came to other opposition parties to talk about what is fundamentally wrong with this bill. The actual – the actual – distastefulness in terms of what is being purported as historic is nothing more than historic in rhetoric.

Mr. Mason: Histrionic.

Mr. Boutilier: "Histrionic" is a very good word, but I would prefer to keep to my own words at this point. I appreciate the comment by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

I do believe that as we go forward, let us do what's best for Albertans. Let us do what's best for people going to emergency rooms. Let us do what's best for seniors that have been in acute-care beds now for over three years, still waiting for a commitment that this government broke over two and a half years ago. I can look myself proudly in the mirror each and every day knowing that I've been that voice and that I asked the government to honour a commitment that they failed to do. When I see Bill 17 and I see the amendment that is put forward tonight, I can only wish and hope that it wouldn't be for six months.

Let's deal with something that is real. Let's deal with something that is not historic in rhetoric. The comments that we saw here earlier today in question period from the minister of health – clearly, question period is about getting questions. I had, actually, citizens ask me: why is it that the minister of health never answers your questions? I said: that's something you can only pose to him.

But I do know that the former minister of health indicated at one point that we want to keep seniors in their homes for a longer period of time. I wasn't willing, nor do I believe any single MLA in this Assembly would be willing, to go back after the government made a commitment during the election time and tell a 104-year-old lady: oh, by the way, the minister of health thinks you have to wait four more years before you get your centre. A community of a hundred thousand with no long-term care centre: how can anyone look themselves in the mirror? I know I proudly can, knowing that I've represented and continue to hold the government's toes to the fire to honour that very commitment. I will be the first to say thank you if, in fact, that ever comes to be. The senior, who has been an advocate for over 30 years, a lady from Fort McMurray, in fact met face to face with the Premier of this province and indicated: honour your commitment, your commitment that you made.

I believe that with this amendment today, as much as it says "six months hence," I really wish that it would be a longer period of time. It says that "Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months [from now]." I will support the amendment, but I do believe that it could even go further.

To the hon. members that have any other advice on the issue of seniors, I welcome it because I can look myself proudly in a mirror and say: honour your commitment to the seniors, who are truly the architects of this very province that we enjoy and that our children enjoy and that our grandchildren enjoy. Consequently, I do believe that today this amendment is a good start to postponing the rhetoric that we have seen, the historic rhetoric that we have seen, and I do believe that as we go forward, seniors and the people of Alberta deserve something better.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand and speak in support of this amendment to Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, which reads that it "be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence." The reason why I feel this is an excellent amendment is because this bill really is, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo said, all feathers and no chicken. If, in fact, we were serious about the problems that we're faced with in the health care industry, we would actually be doing it. This is no different than a magic act where you have this side movement to take you off the real issue and say: "Well, let's talk about the advocacy now. Let's talk about, you know, the charter." What we need to talk about is the emergency room crisis. We need to talk about the bed shortages. We need to talk about the centralization of the superboard and not having actual administrators that are running our hospitals in an efficient and effective way. Instead, there's a total disconnect from the services that are being provided and no one in a position of authority to make decisions.

I've spoken with emergency room doctors. I've spoken with front-line nurses and even some facility housekeepers. There really is a problem. In our hospitals we have beds that are closed at the current time, and they're not being opened even though there are people down below in the emergency room that need to be moved up there. We're not getting the answers we need, Mr. Speaker.

Even today I asked the minister to do an audit and to report back to this House on how many actual empty beds we have in our current operating facilities that are closed that could be opened if we just had a functioning system that responded to the emergency situations, and he wouldn't even answer the questions, Mr. Speaker. Because of the fact that we're not even responding to the current ones, why would we pass a bill like Bill 17, which doesn't address any problems?

I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, the table of contents of Bill 17, and I think that by reading that, it would help one understand and realize that this is just a smokescreen and that there's nothing of any quality in here that's going to change the health care system. We shouldn't allow this smokescreen to be brought forward so that we can say: "Oh, we're working on the charter. Talk to the health care advocate. He will return his comments to the minister, which may or may not be accepted."

Here's the table of contents to Bill 17, 2010, the Alberta Health Act. Section 1 is the definitions, which we always have. Section 2 is the health charter, which is a lot of wonderful words that shouldn't have to be in there if we even were to address the problems. Section 3, the appointment of the health advocate. Section 4, complaints. Section 5, findings following a review. Section 6, the annual report, that's supposed to come back to the minister from the health advocate. Section 7, roles and responsibilities. Oh, gosh. You know, we've been running the system forever, but we need to start defining some roles and responsibilities. Yes, we do, but what we need is a chief administrator's roles and responsibilities to run a hospital efficiently. Section 9, directions by the minister. Section 10, proceedings not subject to review. Section 11, liabilities. Section 12, Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations. Section 13, ministerial regulations. Section 14, public input. Section 15, coming into force. And then we go into a wonderful dialogue of preamble.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at the contents of this bill and what's actually in here, there is nothing that addresses the actual problems. What it says is that we're going to look at the problems. We're going to have a declaration that people can make to the health advocate to say: "Oh, we're going to address this. We're going to do this." When these crises are here, the minister talks in terms of years instead of actual. We need to do this in weeks or days or perhaps even minutes in emergency, where a system is set up that actually can respond. Bill 17 isn't going to help any of those things. All it is is another layer of bureaucracy to say: read this charter if there's a problem with what you've received in health care. Then we'll go through a whole new area of process rather than fixing anything. There's nothing worse than just having a process.

You know, one of the things that's often said is that there's nothing worse than no legislation, but there is something worse than no legislation, and that's bad legislation. That's what Bill 17 is. It's bad legislation. It doesn't address the health care act. I would urge all members in here to take another read of Bill 17 and ask the question: is there any reason why we should pass this? What would really happen if we allowed this to be debated six months from now? We would realize that this isn't going to do any good, that it's of no value. So why would you pass the bill in six months? This is a knee-jerk reaction to a major crisis that's happening in our health care system and trying to create that magical image going over here so they can continue with their show over here of poor performance and say: well, let's just focus on the health act, the advocacy act, the new charter, and see if that's going to solve all of our problems in the future. Mr. Speaker, it is not.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has brought forward on behalf of her colleague a very important amendment at this time. Let's not have any distraction to the real problem. Let's not have legislation that's passed here in the next week or two that is going to do nothing for the patients and those people who are needing health care services in the next six months. There's just zero help in here. For that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that other members would look at that, review it, breeze through it quickly, and realize that there is no reason to pass this bill. We should be readdressing it in six months because at that point we'll realize there's no need to readdress it.

I'm very much in favour of this. I would ask all members to consider it and to have some deep thought on what is the real purpose of Bill 17. Is it a smokescreen? Is it poor legislation? Is it distracted legislation? We're talking about distracted driving and trying to solve that, again with another poor bill. This is distracted health care.

We need to focus on the problems. We need to have some solutions to the problems. There is absolutely nothing in here that's going to change the way our emergency rooms are being run or operated. There's nothing in here that's going to change the administration in our hospitals and put the power and the authority back to a local administrator, that can make actual changes when the crises arise, that has the authority to open up closed beds that already exist. We don't need to build new ones. Let's use them.

Most importantly, I would urge the health minister to do an audit and come back to this House. That would be something that we could see in the health care act. What are the numbers of beds that are closed down? That would be something that's productive that we could talk about.

In closing, I'll urge everyone to please support this amendment, and let's read this bill in six months' time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Anyone wish to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 17 lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

10:30 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. First of all, I want to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for his hard work on this distracted driving bill. I think we can deliver the support of this side of the House to improve the safety of Albertans on all roads.

I'm a little disappointed in the member for not supporting my amendment mandating the minister to provide statistics associated with injuries from hands-free devices. This was a very small amendment but would provide a clear picture of the necessity of future reforms.

In 2005 there was a motion proposed by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I believe, to prohibit the use of hand-held devices while driving; however, that bill was defeated by the members opposite. Since then the times have changed, and many more hand-held devices are now used today, which pose a significant danger to Albertans.

This new bill is much stronger than the one which he initially proposed and addresses many of the new challenges which have emerged since that time. These include texting, computer screens, personal hygiene products, reading and writing, and grooming. At the same time it allows for sensible exemptions such as the use of electronic devices by emergency personnel. However, hands-free exemptions may pose significant risks to the public, and anything that diverts the attention of the driver away from actually operating the vehicle is very dangerous, Mr. Chair.

While it seems that most Albertans have heeded the warnings, it still seems that there are a considerable number of Albertans who have not heeded the warnings. This new law, Mr. Chair, does not unjustly infringe on the freedoms of Albertans, as some members have suggested. This law is a necessary law to protect the safety of Albertans on the road. To Albertans who feel the need to text, to use an electronic device while driving, please be clear: just pull over, or it can wait. My hope is that once Bill 16 is law, it will have a positive effect on the lives of Albertans.

Mr. Chair, there are concerns that the bill doesn't go far enough. I have concerns with hands-free devices as well, but I believe it would be very difficult to enforce hands-free devices. No other jurisdiction has a ban on hands-free devices. Alberta could be the leader in banning the hands-free devices as well, but it would be difficult to enforce.

Using hands-free devices may give a false sense of security. It is not the device that is the distraction; it is the conversation that is the distraction. Most of the new vehicles are coming out with Bluetooth built in, and all of the new gadgets in vehicles make it virtually impossible for police to enforce this ban without co-operation from the other orders of government.

When we look at history, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought forward a motion in the year 2000, I believe, to ban cellphone use in cars, and many people thought he was nuts at the time. I also believe the member opposite from Lacombe-Ponoka in 2002 and the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought this motion, too, in 2005 to make amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to prohibit the use of hand-held cellphones. Everyone thought these gentlemen were crazy, but they were ahead of the times. Here we are five years later debating and likely about to pass a bill not only to prohibit hand-held cellphones but to ban other driving distractions as well.

Mr. Chair, laws do save lives. For example, MADD estimated that in 2007 there were 12,039 people who died due to impaired driving, and 73,000 were injured. We know for a fact that without drinking and driving prohibitions, this number would have been far higher. It took decades for people to realize that seat belts save lives, but still people think that they only have to use the seat belts in the front seat, not in the back seat.

In British Columbia since the distracted driving legislation came into law, since February there have been 20,000 fines issued by the police. Mr. Chair, driving is a privilege, and drivers should not abuse that privilege. It should be taken away if somebody is driving in a manner which is unsafe and could result in an accident resulting in death or serious injury. Injury, death, fender-bender accidents: they cost money to our health care. They cost money to our society. They cost money to our economy.

Mr. Chair, this is a good bill, but it doesn't go all the way. As I said, we should have found a way to ban the hands-free as well. Had my amendment been accepted, we could have come back to revisit this legislation three years down the road. It's unfortunate that the amendment was not accepted, but I will still support this bill since this is a step in the right direction and we have been fighting for distracted driving legislation for years. While it is good to see that a multitude of distractions are covered by the legislation, it is unfortunate that the penalties don't even come close to B.C.'s or Ontario's. We will likely seek to strengthen the legislative penalties maybe in the future. So I will be supporting the bill, but I've still got my reservations about the bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, Mr. Chair. Again, we're in the same dilemma with Bill 16. There's no question that we have, you know, as was stated earlier this day, I think, 300 and some-odd accidents every year on the road here in Alberta. AMA has been tracking these for a long time. With Bill 16 the attempt here is to increase the safety on our roads. I think that everybody will agree and has read the reports that 80 per cent of all accidents are from people that are being distracted. They might be under the influence as well, but they lose their concentration on the road, and we have an accident.

The problem that we're faced with in Bill 16 is: what do we do to actually solve the problem of human nature? You know what? The little flags, the different billboards, the people that are walking along the street, the nice little dog that they're walking with, whatever it is: there are just thousands and thousands of distractions out there that are going to continue.

At this point what we're looking at is the frustration of drivers. I've been guilty myself when I'm behind somebody and they've slowed down, not keeping up to the posted speed, whether that be 60 or 80 or 100. It's frustrating when every lane is filled with traffic and somebody slows down in the one lane and we can't keep up. The immediate reaction in today's world is: ah, that person has got to be on their phone. Granted, some are, but it surprises me as I drive by how many aren't. They could be talking to their other passenger. They could be talking to their children. Some seem like they're just singing along with the song they have going out of their speaker system and enjoying life and not paying attention to what's going on around them.

With Bill 16 what we have is a list of a few items that say what you cannot do. You cannot be "reading or viewing printed material." You cannot be "writing, printing or sketching." You cannot be "engaging in personal grooming or hygiene." Does that mean that if one needs to blow one's nose, that's hygiene, and we shouldn't be doing that? If someone has a Kleenex or a handkerchief while they're driving down the road and the policeman is driving by, they're going to get pulled over and ticketed because they're blowing their nose?

Mr. Kang: What if the policeman is blowing his nose, too?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Well, that's interesting. There are many dilemmas out there.

"Any other activity that may be prescribed in the regulations." Again, that's very concerning to me, just any other activity that may be described in regulations. If you read the preamble to that:

"including but not limited to." What I'm reading here is section 115.4(1)(a), (b), (c), and (d). We've got this list of things that we're not supposed to do. Supposedly, the root of all of our accidents is this list of four things that are in there. It just isn't the case.

As I said earlier about another bill – and I really was preparing that for this bill – the only thing that is more discouraging than no legislation is poor legislation. We look at a lot of the problems that we have and the infrastructure that we haven't been building over the last 10 years and prioritizing our money right. I'm not saying that we haven't spent billions and billions of dollars; it's whether we've spent billions and billions of dollars on the proper priorities. This government continues to point fingers and say: "Oh, we're going to cut a billion here, a billion there. We're going to extend it out." But what they still fail to seem to understand is the importance of budgeting and using priorities. They talk about lists, but they never put them out. Yet they've put out a list here on a few items that shall not be done, and if so, they're going to be ticketed. I just can't help but wonder if this isn't again another smokescreen to try and say, "Oh, look at what we're doing for the safety of Albertans" when in fact they're not really addressing the safety of Albertans. This is a concern.

One of the techniques that's used when bad legislation has been put forward is that too often we never remove it, and we just say: well, we're not going to enforce it. I think that one of the key things that we can and should do is to put sunset clauses in legislation when we don't know how this is really going to turn out.

When you look at the process that we're going through with this bill, I'm disappointed that the government didn't bring forward more reports or reasons why they're passing this. It seems to me that the biggest reason is that they want to increase their revenue from traffic tickets but not from poor drivers, just from drivers that are holding a cellphone.

Mr. Campbell: That's nonsense.

Mr. Hinman: I would absolutely have to say that I would disagree with the Member for West Yellowhead that that's nonsense. This bill is nonsensical in the fact that it doesn't make sense that you give someone a ticket because of what they're holding. We should be giving someone a ticket, Mr. Chair, because they're driving poorly. This bill doesn't address that.

There's been lots of discussion in the committee that looked at this bill saying that the reason why we're bringing this bill in is because the police said that the test for dangerous driving or not paying attention is too high and the penalty is too high, where a young lady was fined, I think, last month $2,000 for texting while she was driving. So we do have legislation in place that doesn't allow that.

If we were to change this legislation to where a policeman who is driving behind a vehicle and sees that they're driving poorly was to pull over and give them a ticket, that would be a reason for giving a ticket. But it is misguided to see the poor driving, to speed up beside them and look at that and then say: "Oh, they have a cellphone. Oh, they have a hairbrush. Oh, they have a map in their hand. Now it's okay to give them a ticket."

What do we want to do in the future? Pass legislation that we can read someone's thoughts and say that we're going to ticket you for your thoughts because we don't agree with them? That isn't the way common law was set up. Common law was set up for when you do something wrong, when you impose a loss or something to another person, whether it's their property, whether it's a hate crime. You've done something wrong. Then the law kicks in, and we try to have the justice system do that. But this law is a feel-good law. It's not going to accomplish what we want. There are actually a few states that have passed cellphone bans and texting bans only to find out that accident rates have continued to rise in those jurisdictions.

So this government again is failing to pass proper legislation that is actually about the actions of someone doing something that is causing possible harm or driving dangerously. I don't think that this bill should pass in this state, so I would like to put forward an amendment at this time, if I could, to this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll have the amendment passed out, and then you can speak to it. This will be amendment A4.

Hon. member, you can proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. So to read this amendment, I move that Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after the proposed section 115.5:

115.6 Sections 115.1 to 115.5 expire 4 years after the date on which the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, comes into force.

Now, the reason that legislation has sunset clauses is because many times we pass things that we're not completely sure are going to actually do the job that we're hoping that it's going to do. I would argue, Mr. Chair, that after we've gathered some information, we're going to realize that the accidents have not gone down here in the province, that we won't have 300 accidents a year; it will probably be 350 or 400. We'll see it going up. As we analyze the real problem and look at that, we'll realize that human nature is predictable; it's powerful. People do not pay attention when they're driving. It's just human nature. The fact is that our roads aren't constructed properly or we don't have enough lanes, and people are frustrated, so the accidents will continue.

This is a bill that, again, is going to be a cash cow for the government because, I believe, many citizens are going to carry on with their habits of speaking. I, myself, have a hands-free device; I use it. It goes back to the other question that many hon. members have brought up. Is my driving any better hands free versus holding the cellphone in my hand? What we're going to have to do is either have an amendment and ban hands free, or we're going to realize that accidents are continuing, human nature is continuing, and we haven't been able to accomplish what we want. Perhaps the minister will make legislation saying that anybody who takes their eyes off the road is subject to a ticket because they're being distracted by something in their peripheral vision. All of these things are human nature. They're a constant problem.

As I said, I just don't feel that this bill, the way it's currently written, is going to serve the purpose that we're hoping it will. It's going to be a cash cow. It's going to cost a lot of people a lot of money because of their habits, yet it's not going to address what we really need to address in here: the reckless, poor driving of people that are being distracted, whether it's texting, talking on the phone, playing with a new gizmo that they just bought at the hardware, or whatever it is. Like I say, if we really want to address this, what we want is legislation that says that when a police officer is following a vehicle and realizes that they're driving erratically and poorly, they have the authority to pull that person over and give them a ticket.

Again, one of the forces that I really admire in the province is a small force – I think it's a hundred years old now – the Taber police force. There the chief of police had a lot of vision, understood the importance of good policing in a community. They put video cameras, back in 2000-2001, in all of their police vehicles. So if, in fact, they were actually following another vehicle, it's recorded and shows it, you know: this is the poor driving that they're doing.

If we take it one step more, which really is what we prefer in the court of law, some actual evidence and not just one man's word over another person's word, saying: oh, they had a cellphone in their hand. That to me would be good legislation. But what we have here is feel-good legislation, to be able to say, "Oh, look; we've done something," when, in fact, we haven't. It would be my hope that four years from now, when we analyze this bill, we'll realize . . . [interjection] Four years. Do you have a problem with that? [interjection] You're probably right. I've gone too long on this, but some people would ask, and maybe I'll be lucky enough that someone has the foresight to make an amendment with a shorter time period.

This amendment at this time is to expire in four years' time, when we've collected more data and know what the causes are and not attribute something to: well, it's got to be the cellphone that's in someone's hand that's causing all the accidents. The accident rates really haven't gone up astronomically like cellphone use has. It's amazing how many people – I think the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said that it was 1 in 3 or 2 in 3, when they were driving by, that had a cellphone in their hand. If, in fact, that was the real problem, I think we would have seen a jump in accidents from 300 a year to 600 a year or something like that, and that that's the real problem. We're not addressing it.

I prefer to see legislation that is there for when someone actually does something wrong, not because someone is holding something. We're pointing at the wrong area. So I'd hope everyone would look at this, evaluate it, and realize that – you know what? – let's look at this bill again in four years and see if it's actually serving the purpose. But my fear is that even at that, the government is going to say: "Well, we're generating millions of dollars. It's wonderful for our revenue. We want to keep it in place because of the cash cow that it is."

With that, I'll sit down and see if anyone has any questions or comments on the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In terms of the amendment being put forward, I have to truly question the issue of four years because four years seems to me to be somewhat of an extended period of time to be able to make a determination of whether, in fact, Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, is working or not. I think the intent of what you're doing is reasonable, but I actually believe that the four-year period of time and the extended period to make that determination could be done in a shorter period of time.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would like to move an amendment that I have here.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause while subamendment A2 is passed out.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this is subamendment A2 to amendment A4, moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Can I continue on at this point regarding the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. In the amendment that has been circulated, I move that amendment A4 to Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, that has been brought by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, be amended by striking out "4 years" and substituting "2 years." Actually, Mr. Chair, I say that because I do believe that the Minister of Transportation and his officials clearly do not require four years to make a determination if, in fact, the prescribed bill is and has become effective in its intent and its spirit in protecting Albertans. Consequently, therefore . . . [interjection] I might say I appreciate the nice comments by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill when he makes reference to my amendment. I see that he probably agrees with it. I'll obviously look for his voice or his vote when he stands for this amendment.

We don't need four years. I'm quite certain the Minister of Transportation would be able to make a determination in two years. Two years allows a sufficient amount of time to determine, in fact, the strengths and the weaknesses that would be intended regarding the spirit of this bill.

I made reference to the fact that my wife hit me in the ear when I actually was being distracted backing out of my driveway. I couldn't hear for a day or two, but I deserved to get hit in the ear by my wife because I had my three-year-old son . . . [interjection] I see the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod – clearly, I can see he's shaking his head – got hit in the same ear by his wife, I think is what he is intimating. I can only say that we quickly learn, and we do not in fact make the same mistake twice.

I think the intent of this and the spirit of this bill is to ensure that doesn't happen, but we don't need four years to determine this. I believe the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, who made the original amendment, which is a noble one, can join me in agreement with other members of the House to say that two years should be a sufficient amount of time to determine if, in fact, this is working or if it is not. We proceed accordingly in protecting Albertans, in protecting our children and our grandchildren and all Albertans who travel Alberta highways.

Therefore, Mr. Chair, I believe that this amendment is a reasonable one, moving from amendment A2 to subamendment A4. I believe that I'm willing to give distracted driving a chance, but I don't need four years to give it a chance. I believe Albertans are very thorough. I think Albertans are quick-minded when it comes to determining if, in fact, a law can work or not work; therefore, I put forward the subamendment of two years, replacing the four years that was originally submitted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will welcome debate on this important subamendment and certainly welcome the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members who wish to speak to subamendment SA2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the subamendment.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm more than willing to accept this amendment to my amendment. I had those who argued that four years was too long.

Mr. Boutilier: What? We're agreeing?

Mr. Hinman: Yes, we're going to agree on that, hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We do not need to take four years to look at this bill and see whether it's being effective or whether it's just impacting the dollars of the people of Alberta and revenue for this government, that it will spend irresponsibly and on poor priorities in all likelihood.

I would encourage all members to stand up and speak on this. Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who's jiggling in his seat, you need to put in a little more effort. You can stand up and speak on this and share your thoughts on why you believe that two years is enough time or whether you think that the sunset clause is inappropriate.

The bottom line, Mr. Chair, is that as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said earlier tonight about a previous bill, this is indicative of this government desiring to pass a stream of poor bills that are not going to serve the best interests of Albertans. I've said it so many times. I'll say it one last time. On this amendment, though, what we want is to reduce accidents and increase safety on our roads, and the way we do that is by actually giving tickets to people who are driving poorly. Whether or not they have two hands on the steering wheel or some other area is not the determination of whether or not one is driving safely.

I think that if we look at history, class 1 drivers have quite a good driving record. Most of them are driving big vehicles with gear-shifts, and on top of that they're busy talking on their CB radios. Those came in, I believe, in the '60s and '70s. They've been using them forever. We didn't see a major problem with traffic accidents and didn't ban those devices. They're useful.

The point of all of this is that if we actually analyze this bill over the next two years to see whether or not it's effective, we'll be able to make a determination on whether or not we need to leave this bill on the books. More importantly, if in fact we're kind of lackadaisical about it and don't want to do anything, which is often the case with a lot of poor bills – they just kind of go by the wayside – this one will have a sunset clause, and it'll be removed from the books, and the people of Alberta will be free to be responsible in their driving, which is the proper situation. When one has a driver's licence, it's not a right. It's a privilege. It's a benefit. It's determined by good driving.

What we want is a sunset clause, two years where we can analyze and look at the data and see: is there an increase in accidents? Is there a problem? I would hope that all members would be willing to support this amendment to put a sunset clause in place. It doesn't do anything to change anything else in the bill other than the fact that we will review it in two years and replace it or let it die in two years because it really isn't what Albertans want or it's not serving or increasing any safety on the road.

With that, I hope to hear some other discussion on this amendment, that this will pass, that we can have a sunset clause in here. Perhaps we need to be implementing sunset clauses in a lot more of the legislation that we're passing.

The Deputy Chair: On subamendment SA2 to amendment A4, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think there must be some lack of communication between the deputy leader of the Wildrose and his House leader. If he thought that there was going to be a need for a two-year sunset clause instead of a four-year sunset clause, why didn't they get their heads together and do it in the first place?

As far as his comments that we need to accumulate data in order to see whether this thing is working, he well knows that these acts could be amended at any time. We always have fall or spring sessions. We can amend the legislation at any time. We don't have to wait one year or two years or four years. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has the floor.

Dr. Brown: Therefore, I'm against the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to subamendment SA2?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to amendment A4. Any other comments on amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I would like to address the comments by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill saying that we have to get together. I think what he should really do is look at the bills that this government brings forward and realize that the government can bring forward a bill at any time. Opposition parties do not have that discretion.

The Deputy Chair: You're speaking to amendment A4.

Mr. Hinman: He made reference to four years and two years, so I'm discussing the change, why it's there. The fact is that opposition is not allowed to, but by putting in a sunset clause, it forces the government to. That's why the four years in a sunset clause is important to have in the bill. This government doesn't seem to realize the problems that it causes by passing a bad law that sits on the books for years. A bad law is the gun registry. Had it had a sunset clause, chances are it would never have been renewed. There are many other bills like that, that are bad, that should have an actual sunset clause so we don't need to address it.

You're missing the point when you say, "Oh, we don't need that; the government can address it." The government can, but chances are it won't. There's going to be lots of debate. By placing sunset clauses in, it is critical to the law that it has to be readdressed to be reinstated in four years. That's why this is important.

If we want to go through a long list of poor regulations and legislation, we could maybe do that another evening. I get the feeling that the House is wanting to move on. Well, then, maybe they shouldn't bring forward so many bills that aren't going to serve the interests of Albertans so that we don't have to try and filibuster. Maybe the hon. member hasn't heard about that, but we're very limited now on the discussion that we can have to stop bad bills from passing. In older days in the parliamentary process they would filibuster and could carry it out. The intent of this is to carry out the discussion until the government comes to its senses and realizes that – you know what? – this bill isn't in the proper sense.

Four years is a very good determinant time for the government to have to review and pass new legislation, and the purpose of this amendment is to have a review time that has to be put in place instead of letting it stay on the books going forward, like the gun registry has for years and years now. We need a four-year sunset clause. That's what amendment A4 is about.

I'd urge the government members to change their nays the first time, not the second time, so that we could pass this. The legislation will pass in its entirety, the way the government has presented it, refusing all amendments by the hon. members in the opposition.

You'll just have to be accountable in four years. So please vote in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has hit the head, hit the nail right on the head when it comes to the issue. [interjections] He hit the head right on the head. Believe me, there are a few heads over there that have to be hit. There is no doubt in my mind about that.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the difference between being in the government – I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has forgotten that democracy . . . [interjection] Nose-Hill or North Hill? It's Nose Hill. [interjection]

He knows quite correctly that every four years is a period of time that really becomes a clogging of bureaucracy. A sunset clause is able to eliminate bills that are not serving the purpose of Alberta. I think the intent and the spirit of this bill, actually, by the Minister of Transportation are noble in terms of protecting our children and protecting Albertans on highways. That is good, and as a member of the opposition I salute the Transportation minister for that. However, that being said, the idea of protecting Albertans, be it in two years or in the amendment that I'm speaking about, Mr. Speaker, four years – clearly, it is my observation that in any business an operational review is that they review the normal operating procedures. They look at the strengths. They look at the weaknesses. They look at what is good and what is bad. They listen to customers. This amendment that is put forward, that four-year period, is a period of time that, in fact, does achieve that objective, and that is very important.

For those who do not have business skill and do not have the operational review tactics of being able to look at the strength, the weakness, the cost-benefit analysis – we should be asking that each and every day in this Assembly on behalf of Albertans in terms of any proposed bill that comes forward. That is exactly what this amendment is attempting to achieve: operate similar to a business, do an operational review, take a look at what is working well and what is not working well. But that sunset clause provides an opportunity for a business to look internally. Perhaps this government needs to do exactly that even more when it comes to looking internally at what is taking place after 40 years.

Clearly, I believe that this amendment that is put forward is a good one. I believe it is intended in the spirit of what the Minister of Transportation has put forward in terms of, "I'm willing to give this bill a chance, but am I willing to allow it to continue to build up in bureaucracy and red tape for four years?" I don't believe that Albertans should allow the inmates to run the asylum. I think this amendment will be a counterbalance to that impact to ensure that the spirit of what the Minister of Transportation is doing is upheld, and ultimately Albertans will be better served by supporting this amendment.

I'm sure tonight, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of members will support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 16 as amended. Anyone wish to speak to this?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 26 students from Annunciation school as well as their teachers: Mrs. Maureen Ostrowerka, Mrs. Maria Joy, Mrs. Yoga Gaffoor. If I can ask them to please stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce two groups today. I have three classes from the Three Hills school, 76 visitors in all. They are seated in both galleries, and they are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Christina Hoover, who also has the distinction of being my niece, Mr. Jamie Keet, Mrs. Carmen Reece; Mrs. Susan McNeely and Mr. Brad Luijckx as parent helpers. Also accompanying them today is the head honcho of the school itself, the principal, Mr. Lloyd Boody, and he tells me he also drove the bus. I would ask that they would all stand in both galleries and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Another introduction today, Mr. Speaker, if I may, is a close friend of mine and also the deputy reeve of Kneehill county, up here for the AAMD and C convention and a meeting later on today with myself and the minister of health. I would ask Mr. Bob Long if he would stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly some employees from the Utilities Consumer Advocate within my department. I am very pleased to introduce Mr. Alan Flemmer, Mr. Perry Gray, Ms Kelsie Acton, Ms Lourdes Castillo, Shirley Wilcox, and Karin Gashus, the Utilities Consumer Advocate. The staff at the UCA work hard every day on behalf of Albertans to provide information and advice and represent their interests in Alberta's electricity and gas markets. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to make two introductions. The first one is a number of students who are here from Velma E. Baker school in my constituency. They are here as part of the seek-and-find information mission with respect to how democracy works in the province, and I'm very pleased that they have joined us today. They are seated in our galleries, and I would ask that all of the students, their teachers, and their parent helpers from Velma Baker please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you for coming.

I have one second introduction if I might. I also want to introduce a constituent, Denise Baillie. She's a member of the CCSVI Edmonton group. That's people suffering with MS. She was diagnosed with MS a few years ago, and she would like to be able to get testing and treatment for CCSVI here in Alberta. That is her main mission. I want to welcome her and thank her for coming. Thank you, Denise, and welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of Calgary-Hays, Joylynn Matheson. She's in the public gallery. I'd ask you to stand, Joylynn. She was raised on a family farm in Saskatchewan, and community involvement comes naturally to her. She relocated to Calgary in 1988 for schooling. Joylynn, Rudi, and their dog, Tucker, moved into their first home in Copperfield in 2008. A daughter, Isabella, joined their family in July of '09. This new family prompted Joylynn to get involved on the Copperfield Public School Committee. She also volunteers time to the community association and is a full-time, at-home mom. I'd like you to give Joylynn the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to let the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo introduce one of his guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. To follow up with the Minister of Energy, you can see we're getting along today.

It's indeed my pleasure to introduce the Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce president, Jon Tupper. He's sitting in the public gallery. I'd like to ask him to rise, representing the oil sands capital of the world. Jon, please rise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first introduction I would like to do is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a spectacular woman, Penny Ritco, who is the executive director for the Citadel Theatre. I'm going to do a private member's statement on her a little bit later around a recent award she's received. She has been at the Citadel since 2003. She is a member of the Theatre Advisory Committee of the Canada Council, is on the board of the Professional Association of Canadian Theatres as well as on the steering committee for the Canadian Arts Summit and sits on numerous juries and panels. With her today is a colleague, Marianne Bouthillier, who is the associate executive director of the Citadel Theatre. I'd ask them to both rise and please accept the warm welcome of my colleagues.

My second introduction I'm making on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview. He asked me to introduce – and I'm delighted to do so – to you and through you to all members four representatives of CCSVI. Joining us in the public gallery today we have Brenda Requier. Brenda has recently returned from Poland, where she received the treatment and is feeling better. Along with her today is Lorraine Bodie, Warren Stefanuk, and Tanja Allen. Tanja would like to get the treatment, but it's not available. She's asking for us to keep that in mind. I'd ask everyone to please welcome this group to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members Bryn MacDonald from the environmental group the Sierra Club, who has joined us to vocalize his opposition to Bill 29. Bryn has served our country as a UN peacekeeper in Cyprus and now, as a proud father of a two-year-old girl, has chosen to serve the environmental cause. Bryn has done volunteer work for the Sierra Club for more than six months and has brought to the Sierra Club a strong background and experience in detailed planning and organization, chemical engineering, and many other areas. Bryn, if you could please stand, I would ask all members to extend the traditional warm welcome of this House to our special guest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my guest and good friend Lorne Dach. Lorne is a realtor and has made his name with the adage: call Lorne Dach and start to pack. I met with Lorne earlier today to discuss remediation and recertification issues surrounding real estate that has suffered the consequences of grow op or drug house activity. I would now ask Lorne to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Canadian Finals Rodeo

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. From November 10 to 14 83,936 fans, including many of my colleagues, attended the 37th annual Canadian Finals Rodeo at Rexall Place. The event saw 106 of the world's best rodeo athletes competing against world-class stock and the clock for a share of a record $1.32 million.

One highlight of the CFR was Red Friday, honoured on November 12 as a special opening ceremony, with 60 members of the Canadian military taking part. Rodeo fans responded by wearing red as a show of support as Wrangler and Lammle's Western Wear & Tack teamed up to sell the national patriot shirt and donated $40,000 to the Edmonton Military Family Resource Centre and the hero fund.

I want to congratulate Northlands for all their successes this year at CFR and also to recognize the incredible impact they make on our great city year-round. Mr. Speaker, with 2,500 events each year, attracting over 4 million visitors to Alberta's capital city, Northlands is vital to putting Edmonton and Alberta on the world stage. Aside from the wildly successful CFR Northlands also hosts events like Farmfair, Capital EX, headliner concerts, international events, and dozens of trade shows. I'm extremely proud to have an organization like Northlands right here in the city of Edmonton and honoured to serve on their board. Once again, congratulations to the board of Northlands.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Penny Ritco

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Penny Ritco is a woman with style. She has a unique style, both in how she presents herself and also in how she works, and that management style has worked very well for arts patrons here in Edmonton and in Alberta. Penny is co-CEO of the Citadel Theatre along with Bob Baker, and Mr. Baker is no slouch in the style department. Bob is smart, cool, talented, and successful, and Penny gives him a run for his money every single day.

I have asked Penny Ritco to be present in the gallery today as it is important we celebrate her success as a CEO and the recognition of her success by the Rozsa awards for excellence in arts management. Created in 2002 to honour the philanthropic efforts of Drs. Ted and Lola Rozsa, these awards are the only ones of their kind in Canada. I want to particularly thank the Rozsa awards for recognizing how complex arts administration is today and how high the stakes are.

Today is about Penny Ritco, and we are here to celebrate that. Earlier this fall she was named recipient of the Rozsa innovation award. This award is presented for extraordinary innovation in financial, human resource, governance and business systems, partnership development, community engagement, and sound business practices in all areas of a company's endeavours. Penny runs a company with an $11 million budget and the large facility the company operates from.

I know that a recent project she is very proud of is creating the Robbins Academy at The Citadel. This is Canada's most comprehensive program for creative development under one umbrella. Five different programs: new play, artistic, collaboration, young company, and the Foote Theatre School. She does all of this while trying to cope with a 16 per cent budget cut. Pretty stylish in my books. Penny is also the proud mom of two daughters, one a budding playwright and one an actor, and is married to the fabulous Brian, a successful actor and director.

Thank you and congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

International Education Week

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks Alberta's seventh year of participation in Canada's celebration of International Education Week, which runs through November 15 to 19. This year's theme, Building a Society for the 21st Century, reflects on the long-term view that we need while competing in a global marketplace. As we engage in the transformation of our education system, this week provides a wonderful opportunity for Alberta's education system to promote the benefits of cross-cultural understanding in our rapidly changing, interconnected world. One of the government's objectives is to help create global citizens preparing and equipping Alberta's youth, who will graduate into a global economy that will require them to interact with the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker, international education programs and activities in our schools expose students to an international dimension that enriches their learning and prepares them to become world citizens. I would like to add that this special week provides all Albertans with the opportunity to reflect on the importance of our province's international relationships such as the 30th anniversary of our international collaboration with Hokkaido, our sister province in Japan.

At the local level our education partners play an extremely vital role to support international education: the Alberta Teachers'

Association for the delivery of Alberta teacher and student exchange programs, the creation of the Handbook for International Education Administrators with our International Education Advisory Council, and participation of school administrators in a highly successful study tour in China last month. All of these initiatives, Mr. Speaker, demonstrate that when it comes to international education, truly Alberta is a leader. This is the time to showcase our wonderful province of Alberta to the international community and to promote global citizenship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Métis Week

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise proudly in the House today to draw attention to Métis Week in our province. This is an annual celebration of the Métis people, their rich history, culture, and outstanding contributions. Alberta is proud to be home to the largest Métis population in Canada. Métis people have deep roots in western Canada and were vital to the early social, political, cultural, and economic development of Alberta.

Alberta is the only province in Canada with a legally recognized Métis land base. Two of these settlements reside in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The Fishing Lake and Elizabeth Métis settlements play an integral role in the fabric of our community. They add to the diversity of our community, and they continue to maintain the proud traditions of the Métis people.

The Alberta government works closely with the two main organizations and their leaders representing the Métis people: the Métis Nation of Alberta Association and the Métis Settlement General Council.

Mr. Speaker, 2010 is also the Year of the Métis Nation and the 125th anniversary of the death of Louis Riel.

There are events during Métis Week as well, including a flag-raising ceremony, an open house, artistic displays, Métis Fest, and Métis Youth Day. I also had the privilege last night of speaking at the Delia Gray Memorial Gala, which commemorates the life of Delia Gray, the first provincial elder and adviser to the Métis Nation of Alberta Association. The gala is a flagship event for the Métis Nation of Alberta and draws a large number of individuals from the Métis community.

I encourage all Albertans to take some time over the next few days to attend an event and to learn more about the Métis people and their pivotal role in our history as well as our future success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

National Child Day

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise today in recognition of National Child Day, to be celebrated on November 20. National Child Day is celebrated in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world as a reminder of our shared commitment to the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. The convention has been ratified by 192 countries, more than any other human rights document in history, a clear indicator of the importance of this issue. On Saturday we honour our commitment to ensure that all children are treated with dignity and respect, are given the opportunity to have their voices heard, are protected from harm, and are given every opportunity to reach their full potential.

Mr. Speaker, children are Alberta's most precious resource. Supporting their development and providing them with opportunities to pursue their dreams helps brighten the future for all Albertans. The government of Alberta is committed to strengthening and supporting families so that children can grow up in safe and caring communities, where they are protected from abuse, neglect, and exploitation; where they have access to basic necessities such as food and shelter; and where they have a say in matters that affect their lives. It is a responsibility that we all share.

In the words of Reverend Jesse Jackson, and I quote: it is often said that children are our future, but I don't accept that premise; they are our right now. Whether you are a parent, teacher, friend, or neighbour, I encourage you to take time today and every day to make sure that the children in your life have the support and encouragement they need to grow up to be strong, healthy, and happy people. Together we will create a bright future for our children and our province right now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has neglected people with mental illness for years. From a scathing Auditor General's report in 2008 to a shocking list of 12 mental health patients dying preventable deaths after seeking care from mental health services, the failings are wide and deep. To the Premier: will the Premier accept my challenge and expand rather than shrink Alberta Hospital Edmonton?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's more than just talking about the expansion of infrastructure. It's talking about providing mental health services, community-based places across Alberta, increasing the funding over and above the $500 million to deal with the matter. We see this as one of the causes of emergency room waiting list increases because it's more continuing care beds that are necessary but also having the right staff in the right place to deal with people that are coming in with some mental health issues.

Dr. Swann: Well, the Premier talks and talks, and the health minister talks and talks, and we do not see change, Mr. Speaker: 10 of the major recommendations from the Auditor General's report from 2008 on mental health services still ignored by this government. Mr. Premier, how can you justify any delay at all when people with mental illness have such tragic outcomes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is a topic where if a person does have a mental illness, there still is a bit of a stigma, unfortunately, in society. It makes it much more difficult for people that are suffering from mental illness. That's why I feel that, you know, more community-based programs spread out across Alberta – and, yes, there will be additional infrastructure required – more people specifically trained to deal with this very critical issue is the answer.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Premier refuses to answer the question. Ten major recommendations from the Auditor General have been ignored by your government. Are you going to address these and when?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what recommendations the hon. member is talking about because we have honoured or are working on all of the recommendations in the Auditor General's report.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care Beds

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier likes to talk about not splitting up senior couples when they need long-term care, but the much bigger problem we're hearing about is three people squeezed like sardines into rooms built for two. We're not talking about the remand centre here; we're talking about our public health system. To the Premier. It's become common practice in Alberta Hospitals today to squeeze three patients into rooms built for two. Is the Premier aware of this? How does he justify it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a bit of an irony here because when we were attempting originally to move patients from Alberta Hospital, from multiple patients in one room to a facility that gave individuals their private bedrooms, more green space, better accommodations, that party opposed it. Now they're saying that, well, that's not the right thing to do.

Dr. Taft: Oh, come on, Ed.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, they'll have to decide where they stand on this particular issue.

Dr. Taft: You know perfectly well that in acute-care rooms people are squeezed in three to a two-person room.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker . . .

Dr. Taft: Don't evade these life-and-death issues so badly.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, would you just tap the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the shoulder? You have the floor.

Dr. Taft: It's offensive. This Premier is offensive.

The Speaker: The hon. leader has the floor.

Dr. Taft: He's offensive to the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader has the floor. Edmonton-Riverview, if you want to take over, you go and fight that out behind these doors, but the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has the floor.

Dr. Swann: The Premier continues to dismiss these issues and talk around the issue rather than addressing the question. Albertans are not fooled. This Energy minister is the cause of the problems in the health care system today. Unbelievable. His arrogance and incompetence created such suffering in this province, and he sits over there and laughs. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Why don't you staff the beds that are needed so that we stop this squeezing of three patients into two-bed rooms?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as of this January we will be opening our thousandth long-term continuing care bed in this province. That is a sign in the right direction. We originally thought we should be able to build about 800, but we're going to meet a target of about 1,333. They will all be staffed, and it will take some of the pressure off emergency waiting lists.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has hundreds of beds sitting empty, unstaffed. How can the Premier defend the mismanagement of health care staffing these last two years, the real reason why we have an acute-care bed shortage?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, we are training more nurses, more LPNs. We opened up more spaces in the province of Alberta for training, and we're seeing improvement in the number of people working in the health system. So it is continual improvement. There are, as I mentioned, some issues in emergency rooms, but we'll continue to add staff as much as we can over the next number of years.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Pension Reform

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, next month provincial finance ministers will meet to consider expanding the Canada pension plan. The proposal that's on the table would increase the amount that workers contribute by 2.75 per cent, phased in over seven years. This modest increase, no more than a few dollars a week, would double the benefits of retirees. To the minister of finance. An expansion of CPP at a very modest cost to employers would allow small businesses, that can't offer big paycheques and benefits, to compete for talent with big business. Why doesn't the minister want to help small business in Alberta compete in the marketplace?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the last thing we should do to small businesses and enterprises in this province or anywhere in the country that are trying to create new jobs is add a new payroll tax. That's what CPP is.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister doesn't seem to know the difference between a tax and a premium. Is there a difference, Mr. Minister?

The Canada pension plan covers 93 per cent of Canadian workers. It's portable across this whole country. It keeps up with the cost of living. It's financed at no cost to government. Why would the minister want to bypass this very affordable program and, instead, make Albertans gamble their savings for retirement on private funds with confusing terms and high fees? What's the problem?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. member to my remarks yesterday, where I explained that we are ranked in the top five countries in the world in terms of pension coverage – the top five. He talks about the CPP covering 93 per cent of workers. You're right; it does. The problem is limited to about 10 per cent of workers. The solution is to target a solution that works for the 10 per cent that need the help and not saddle everybody else with additional payroll taxes.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, to change the Canada pension plan requires support of the provinces. There is broad support across the country. Why is Alberta's finance minister refusing to support doubling Canada pension plan retirement benefits for all Albertans?

Dr. Morton: In case the hon. leader hasn't noticed, we're still in a recession. Unemployment is high across the country. Increasing CPP premiums is a job-killing tax, and it won't solve the problem where it exists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the Wildrose revealed a document, which will be tabled later, regarding the superboard meeting on Friday to deal with the ER crisis. Hospitals truly need the authority to override superboard bureaucracy from the roots up, not from the sky down. To the minister of health. Keeping in mind patient care for all Albertans, will the minister, if he has a choice between listening to a doctor or a health care professional versus a bureaucrat . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing new about some of the information that the Wildrose folks seem to think they have here. There were some overcrowding pressures. I think everybody is abundantly aware of it. I congratulate them on coming into the present tense. That's good that they've caught up to the rest us. Now we're dealing with it. That's the point: we can't change something from the past. What's important is that we've given specific directions on improvements we expect to be made, and that's what they're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question was: who would he listen to, health care bureaucrats or doctors and health care professionals? I'm assuming the answer is that, no, he will not listen to doctors. Will this minister listen to the people on the front lines, who are caring for Albertans, as opposed to bureaucrats? Will he listen to them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Part of my job is to listen to everyone. I'll even listen to him. [interjections] Sure. I will. I will listen. I may not agree with what he says, but as minister I have a responsibility to listen to every single soul who lives in this province. I'm doing that. Whether they're a doctor, whether they're a patient, whether they're an administrator or a family member or helping some of his own constituents, I'm there to do that service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel like saying that you're going to be the saviour for Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, given what the minister has just said, this document, which will be dealt with tomorrow or on Friday, management by closing doors: he doesn't want to see that happen any more than I do or anyone in this Assembly does. Will the minister, though, go to the front line and go to the doctors and the nurses, who have the solutions, as opposed to listening to this bureaucracy that he has created?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've already done that, and I'll continue to do more of it despite accusations by that party that I shouldn't be doing it.

The fact is that there are solutions that are being worked on, and we've listened carefully. That's why I issued the direction document, the direction requests, to Alberta Health Services to make these improvements, to make these changes. Every hospital that is a major hospital with a major ER department has overcapacity protocols. What AHS is doing is that they're bringing together a number of those people for a sit-down chat on the 19th of this month to help address those issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Northeast Edmonton Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The northeast part of Edmonton is seriously lacking in medical services and professionals, including family doctors. The results are devastating. The infant mortality rate in the northeast part of the city is three times higher than in wealthy neighbourhoods in the same city, the equivalent of many Third World countries. My question is to the Premier. What steps has he taken since becoming Premier to improve access to health services and professionals for the citizens of northeast Edmonton?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there have been improvements in the number of spaces and the number of people working in the system throughout the city of Edmonton, including northeast Edmonton. However, there is an issue in terms of having more prenatal work being done with young mothers. We also need to have more people out there, not necessarily a physician but someone assisting families in terms of some issues tied to diet, perhaps to addictions, and to work with folks to make sure that the baby that's being carried in the womb has a good start once it's introduced.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier is incorrect. The situation is not markedly improved in the northeast part of the city.

On 112th Avenue there's a shiny new building that was to house new family doctors and badly needed services for northeast Edmonton residents. It sits half empty. Tomorrow at noon there will be a rally to demand that the provincial government finally keep its promises to the people of northeast Edmonton for better health services. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier finally keep the promise of adequate medical services for the northeast and fund the family health centre today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take that question because I think it's important for this member and everyone here to know that the East Edmonton health centre now has 136 staff at the facility, and that number is going to continue to grow. That staff includes 57 public health staff, five registered nurses providing support for high-risk pregnancies, nine staff members for pediatric development and mental health, and five additional mental health therapists. So there's quite a bit going on right at that site, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's certainly true that they did move the Eastwood public health clinic into that facility, but the badly needed additional doctors have not been funded, and the minister knows that. The question is: when will he take action? Will he commit today to fully fund the medical centre at the East Edmonton health centre, that remains empty, and get the services that the people in northeast Edmonton need and deserve to bring down the infant mortality rate among other things?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I agree there is more to be done, and that is part of the second phase. In the meantime 85 per cent of the East Edmonton health centre is currently occupied with programs like child health clinics, community perinatal programs, early childhood oral health services, chronic disease management programs, immunization services for adults, infants, and schools, pediatric development and mental health services, speech and language services for children, home care for adults and children, and the list goes on. There are a lot of good things happening there. I acknowledge more can and will be done.

Hate Crimes

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I spoke with the Devine family again last night. They assured me that they are comfortable with my raising in this honourable House the issue of the unsavoury actions of the minister's department. The only thing that makes them uncomfortable is the minister of children's services' refusal to take responsibility for this fiasco. To the hon. minister. Just to be clear, I don't want to have tea about this issue or chitchat about this issue after QP. I want to know if you'll apologize to the Devine family.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have answered this question over the last two days. I can let you know today that the family that this member is referring to has not contacted my office with any complaints. They've not contacted the office of the child and family services authority in Calgary with any complaints. I continue to question the motivation of this member for raising this family's issue on the floor of this Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason I'm bringing this up is because after they were attacked in the dead of night, the Devine family were harassed by Children and Youth Services – I believe that's the minister's department – who demanded to see them and made belligerent statements regarding their political advocacy. Please explain how this falls into your stated mandate of keeping families together. That's why I'm asking.

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I continue to assure you that this information is incorrect, and every day that this member reaches into his backpack and shoots poison arrows at my staff for the good work that they're doing out in the field – it's uncalled for. That's exactly what you're doing with this particular situation. This did not occur in the way that this member has described.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I actually find it absurd and, frankly, a little bit comical that she's castigating me in this Assembly for trying to do my job. I'm trying to stand up for a constituent who's been bullied by members of your department. You should be apologizing to this honourable Assembly, to me, but, most importantly, to the Devines for the actions of your ministry. Will you do that?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, this member should be apologizing to my staff in the field that are ensuring that children that have experienced any violence in any home are safe. We have many good programs and services that are being offered by our staff for individuals. You have accused my staff of victimizing a family. That is uncalled for, and you should be apologizing to my staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Affordable Housing Community Consultation

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several communities in Edmonton have repeatedly raised concerns over housing projects in their communities and have come to the realization that these concerns, quite frankly, are not making a lot of progress. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. What will the minister do to slow the growth of government-funded housing projects in Edmonton communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I first have to say that I disagree with the hon. member's sentiment that somehow affordable housing is creating ghettos. In fact, it's many times just the opposite in a particular situation. We are in the process of building 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012; we're about 8,700 along the way. I can tell you that we're already looking to address this issue by promoting things like mixed-use housing and projects that do not contribute to overconcentration in any community, including this member's.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Given that it's not very appropriate to ignore community concerns, the community would like to know: why won't this minister recognize that there seems to be a growing disconnect between the concerns of the community and the wishes of the residents and the will of government to have a concentration of low-income housing in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I thank the member for that question, I do again disagree with its premise. Most people, if not everybody, involved in affordable housing or housing for the homeless do intend to be good neighbours. We do address issues on an individual, case-by-case basis. The reality is that with this government's commitment to increase affordable housing and deal with our homelessness problem, there is going to be some throwback, but at the same time we will continue to deal with this through individual community consultation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Given that there is a request for proposal process and it's ultimately the minister's responsibility to look after this particular area, what will he do to ensure that project developers step up and appropriately address community concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I thank the member for that question. Realistically, as we move forward, there is going to be some opposition, and we deal with that through our RFP process, which we're very proud of. It keeps our costs down but also ensures that developers with whom we partner have to engage in active community consultation in most of the projects that we have, particularly in the high-needs one in this member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

2:10 CCSVI Follow-up Treatment

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My question today regards a treatment for multiple sclerosis, and I'm asking it on behalf of the guests in the gallery upstairs and many, many others. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why are people with multiple sclerosis who travel out of country to receive the treatment for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency being denied follow-up ultrasound tests when they return to Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that we're looking into this issue right as we speak and that I had met with a number of neurologists and a number of MS sufferers, some of whom have had the Zamboni treatment. I met with patient advocates for MS folks, and we came up with a few ideas that we need to pursue to help fill that evidence gap that was identified by the Canadian institutes of health information and by the federal government and, for that matter, by all ministers of health at our federal-provincial-territorial ministers' meeting in September. I'm pursuing that strategy as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, that didn't answer anything useful, actually.

This minister has been looking into this issue for weeks and months. When will he have a decision for the people who return from out of country, having received this treatment, on whether the province will fund ultrasound follow-up or not? When will that happen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a major medical issue that Albertans here could be facing. As Dr. Zamboni himself pointed out, this is an experimental procedure, and right now no government in Canada covers the CCSVI treatment. There is nothing that we can do until we get all of the information. That's one reason why there's a major study going on between vein drainage and MS activity in Calgary, one of seven North American sites chosen for it. As soon as we have some of those answers, we'll be in a much better position to address the issue that's been raised plus a number of others. This is a serious issue, and I thank him for raising it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, ultrasound is not some big, exotic, new treatment, and this minister knows it. He also knows that other provinces have allocated substantial funds for clinical trials for MS, but Alberta is just blowing hot air. Will the minister show some leadership and commit to providing the necessary funding and urge the fast-tracking of trials and include the MS patients and their advocates?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the first answer that I'm already pursuing that strategy. We are working very aggressively, very fastidiously, and I indicated that to folks from the MS societies and folks who have MS at their rally yesterday. I will continue to advocate on their behalf to get the best care, the best treatment possible, but we have to observe medical protocols here as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, would you also join with me in acknowledging an anniversary for him, the anniversary of his arrival on Planet Earth a few years ago.

Panhandling

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs was very outspoken about the panhandling issue this past spring and promised action by this fall. Since then, the Calgary Homeless Foundation released a report saying that panhandling, according to the research, is not an issue. My questions are to the minister. How long has this minister been out of step with one of the biggest stakeholders, and why does he pick on such a disadvantaged section of society?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just before I answer, I also want to wish the member a happy birthday. But that's where my smiling ends because, in fact, that report does not indicate that panhandling is not an issue. It indicates that instances of it have gone down. This is a good thing, but we also have to monitor the panhandling issue through the entire province just to ensure that it, like our homeless problem, does not get out of hand and that we have a good handle on the problem but also the root causes that individuals may be having to actually end up on the street as a panhandler in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister promised action this fall. It's now mid-November. To the minister: are you doing anything about panhandling, or are you planning more grandstanding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Despite this member's unduly caustic and self-serving comments I want to assure him that I've actually met with the mayor of Edmonton on this issue, and I'm looking forward to meeting with the new mayor of Calgary as well on this issue. He has been a little bit busy. Overall, I want to assure him as well that we are dealing with municipalities because they are the people that we'll deal directly with and who are closest to the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: if he has nothing planned, whether he has a real handle at the provincial level, and instead is dumping this issue on cities to address it, what will he do if the cities have no plan or intention to address panhandling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had some difficulty understanding this member's question, but I want to assure him that we are working with municipalities. At the end of the day there is one voter; there's one taxpayer; there's one person who is on the street. I don't think that they look at which level of government is addressing the problem. They want action. That's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Environmental Hazards of Drug Houses

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When an illegal drug operation in a home is busted by police, the first response team handles any immediate dangers. Secondary issues such as building code violations and poor quality are up to each local community to address. As a result, a homebuyer can be left with a dwelling that poses serious health and safety risks. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why should the standards of restoring houses used in illegal drug operations depend on where the homebuyers live?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, individual municipalities have individual standards, and those are often set in their land-use bylaws. If I understood the member's question correctly, often it's up to individual municipalities to ascertain what quality and how much inspection will go on in new facilities that are being built.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health: given that the exposure to chemicals, mould, or other defects can have serious health consequences, why isn't Alberta Health Services working with Municipal Affairs to give Albertans uniform protection across the province from these risks?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the folks at AHS are in fact doing that. I'm not sure what the member feels isn't being done. To my knowledge there are a number of programs and services that Alberta Health provides under community and population health to address issues just like that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: will the minister direct Alberta Health Services to increase standards for environmental health consultants so that they can properly assess what needs to be done to make these homes habitable?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to bring that to their attention. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Homelessness in Calgary

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. This minister has stated publicly that his 10-year plan to end homelessness is working because, according to his numbers, shelter use is down. This is hardly enough evidence to make such a statement. Besides shelter use, what other empirical evidence does this minister have to make the claim that the plan is really working?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I did not have trouble understanding that question. This member is correct that one indication that the plan is working is, in fact, that shelter usage is down month over month, down 6 per cent from 2009. In addition, we've also created 940 homeless units, 400 in Calgary. Also, a third-party verification was released this week by Homeward Trust showing a 21 per cent decrease in the homeless population in Edmonton. Mr. Speaker, to this member: we're on the right track.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that he understood the question.

My next question is to the same minister. Some Calgarians see this minister's plan as a plan to hide away homeless Albertans so that they can live their destructive lifestyle out of the public eye. How can this minister assure my constituents that homeless Calgarians are getting the supports they need besides a safe place to live a destructive lifestyle?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this Assembly and the public at large that our first priority is getting people off the streets, not putting them away in shelters. We are focusing on permanent housing.

In addition to that, we also recognize that there is not one cause of homelessness; there is also not one solution. We look at things like homeless identification, that can help people get off the streets and get bank accounts and start feeling like everyone else does in society, treating people like individuals, and also showing that you don't always need a good government outlay of a lot of cash to get people . . .

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. The plan to end homelessness will require funding support for years to come. How can this minister realistically commit to funding this plan at its current rate in the midst of the province's tightening fiscal situation?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I remember the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talking about how governments set goals, set regulations with no plan on meeting them. We are meeting the 10-year plan to end homelessness. We've constructed 1,700 homeless units throughout the province. We are going to be moving forward and working harder because we realize that homelessness doesn't just affect those who are homeless; it affects communities. We will be helping all Albertans through this process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The research is in, and the research is conclusive. There is a looming crisis for Albertans nearing retirement. Now, the research also says that expanding the CPP is the best way to address this growing danger, and polling shows that most Albertans support this strategy. Again to the minister of finance: will the minister try a new word in his vocabulary and just say yes to support for CPP reform to ensure a reliable and adequate retirement income for working Albertans?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say yes, yes to policies that create jobs for people that need them and yes to pension reforms that help the people that need them. The hon. member there is looking for across-the-board increases to CPP. The people she's being pushed by, the public-sector unions, already have the highest, best pension plans in the country, most of them badly underfunded, and she wants to increase more for that. We're not going to do it.

Ms Notley: Well, 50 per cent of seniors living below the poverty line is the real job killer, and you ought to know that.

Given that private-sector plan fees are triple that of CPP and given that CPP is the only plan to offer portability and a 93 per cent participation rate, why won't the minister of finance take off his ideological blindfold, admit that an expansion of CPP is the most sensible way forward, and actually work to reach a solution that will help regular Albertans?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd suggest the hon. member take out her ideological earplugs and listen to the answers. One of the answers, which I repeat once again: Canada just received top five in the world for pension coverage. Are there some problems? Yes. But the coverage is limited to a small segment of the overall population.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that small segment is everybody but he and his rich friends.

Given that current saving rates means that the number of seniors living in poverty will only increase, will the minister admit that his stubborn refusal to pursue this reasonable solution is really just based on his desire to deny the choice of retirement to low- and middle-income seniors, force them to keep working long past the age of 65 while he and his wealthy friends go salmon fishing off the west coast?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I repeat: any changes to CPP that we make today have absolutely no effect on people that are already retired. The effect is 25 years down the road. Again, she's purposely trying to confuse listeners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Southern Alberta Flood Disaster Relief

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is outsourcing its responsibilities with, apparently, no accountability. A flood in southern Alberta means millions of dollars for LandLink Consulting; however, flood victims are still struggling to recover while they wait for their claims to be settled. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: Minister, is the LandLink contract public, and if not, why not?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the LandLink contract was done by and through an RFP process, and the RFP is available publicly. It certainly provides a detailed overview of our expectations in terms of the services that LandLink has to provide. We've been very, very open about the terms and the process and the outgoing outcomes of that particular contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given that the victims have been displaced for months, what does the minister believe to be an acceptable time frame for a resolution for these people?

Mr. Goudreau: I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for asking that particular question. It gives me the opportunity to indicate that this particular summer, the summer of 2010, has been a very, very difficult season for a lot of individuals. We've had severe weather across the province, and we've identified several disaster programs throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, LandLink has met their requirements in terms of evaluations within . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: given that a hundred per cent is the only acceptable number when helping disaster victims, has this consulting firm informed your ministry when they will finally help the last 15 per cent that have been waiting so long?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, probably of the outstanding files in almost all cases we are waiting for additional documentation from the applicants, and as soon as we get that documentation, we'll process them as quickly as possible. To date in southern Alberta we've received over 2,900 applications, and the hon. member would know that. Out of that, we've issued about 2,350 cheques, and there are well over a hundred applications where we're waiting for additional information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Calgary Copperfield School Services

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. I delivered 1,391 letters to your office yesterday, and today a page delivered a document to you with 1,615 signatures from concerned parents, citizens, and community members from the Copperfield community. There is clearly an overflow of families that reside in southeast Calgary whose children spend anywhere from one to two hours in transit to get to public schools outside of the Copperfield community. First question: can the minister explain why the children of the Copperfield area who want to attend a public school must endure these long bus rides when they live in an area of Calgary that has the highest rate of suburban residential growth according to the city of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question, and it comes after the question from Airdrie yesterday about the same type of issue. We need to make sure that we have schools where the children are. The issue in Calgary is a bit different in that there's not a lack of capacity, but it is about the demographic shift and the children in the suburban areas that have long rides to school. I can say that 10 new schools opened in Calgary, so it's not that we're ignoring the problem. We're doing something about the problem. Ten new schools opened this fall, and I think there are another six schools expected to open by the start of next year.

Mr. Johnston: To the same minister. The minister is not at the ground level and does not have first-hand experience with the unique needs and priorities of every community. How does the minister prioritize which communities get schools and which don't?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we work very collaboratively with school boards. School boards put together their capital plans with their highest priorities, and the school boards determine which neighbourhoods should come next. The Calgary school board, as I indicated, will be opening schools in Coventry, Panorama, Taradale, and Tuscany in the next year. Those were their highest priorities. We're working on the next list of priorities for schools across the province. But, of course, there are more places than Calgary that have needs for schools, so we'll have to look at that in the context of the whole provincial need.

Mr. Johnston: Final question for the same minister. With approximately 700 children under the age of five in the Copperfield community we can anticipate a great need for school space in the coming years. What is the long-term plan of action to accommodate Copperfield students in the community?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first plan of action would be for the Copperfield parents and families and community to work with their school board to determine the priority of the Copperfield neighbourhood school on the Calgary public school board's priority list. I might say that we are opening a school next year in Copperfield with the Calgary separate school board. That was on the top of their priority list, and there is a school opening in that community with the Roman Catholic separate school board. But it's about getting on the priority list of the local school board. Then we have to work it into our capital plan provincially, and the priority will depend on the highest level of need, health and safety issues, and of course availability of capital.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Amazingly enough, the health minister accuses the Wildrose of being behind on the ER issue. The only one behind and in denial is the government. What is shocking is that the minister believes he can get away with these accusations. The document that we received discuss widespread failure in the system, and it goes on to say how a young patient died after a six-hour wait in the ER. How very, very sad and tragic. My questions are all to the minister of health. Daily demands for hospital beds are not being met, Minister. When are you going to open . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the tail end of the question was about opening more beds. I've indicated before that there are a number of beds opening, so I'm going to talk about additional beds that are being opened in acute-care hospitals. I've mentioned them before. I think I gave out the Calgary stats yesterday. Today I'll give out some Edmonton stats. In October 55 more beds were opened at the Royal Alex and at the U of A. This current week about 16 more were opened at the U of A and at the Royal Alex. By the end of November 44 more seniors' mental health beds will be opened, and in December about 12 more detox beds will be opening.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not talking about palliative care or rehab or continuing care. I'm talking about acute-care beds.

Since the minister has stated in the House that fixing the ER crisis is your priority and a top priority, will he legislate the waiting times that he aspires to?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in some places around the world they try to legislate that, but I'm also aware of what her colleague to her right there, from Calgary-Glenmore, said yesterday when he was talking about so-called successful European health systems. He cited France, where patients might be subject to copayment charges for basic services such as hospital care, and he's making it sound like that's one two-tier system we should follow. We're not going to follow that. We believe in a single payer here . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, Albertans want answers. They don't want your BS.

The Speaker: I believe, hon. member, you want to rephrase that. I'd withdraw that and rephrase it.

Mrs. Forsyth: They don't believe it, Mr. Speaker.

The government continues to state that they are open, and they state that they're accountable. Will the minister table in the Legislature on Monday the minutes from the Alberta Health Services meeting this Friday on their strategy to deal with peak pressures in the ER?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's not my meeting. That is a meeting of a number of specialists that Alberta Health Services has invited. Let's be clear on what the purpose of that meeting is. The purpose of that meeting is to look at the very issues that were expressed to me and to others with respect to overcrowding in some emergency rooms, in some major acute hospitals. That is why that meeting is occurring, to address those issues. It's time to get on with it and to focus on what's going forward, and that's what they're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Primary Care Networks

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has made great strides in developing primary care networks to provide Albertans better access to primary health care services. However, I do have concern that rural PCNs such as the one in my constituency, the Bonnyville-Aspen PCN, are disadvantaged by the current funding model, that focuses too much on the number of patients physicians see rather than supporting other health professionals who provide services in a PCN. All my questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

The Speaker: And we'll hear from him now.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I visited Bonnyville, and I spent some time with this member. I know that she might not know that we have 38 PCNs in the province today. They are funded based on the number of patients that the family physicians actually serve. We have about 2,200 family docs who are serving those patients as we speak, and the funding that they receive is calculated on how many patients the physician has provided service to in the past three years. That's about $50 per patient.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister. The current method of determining funding for PCNs doesn't appear to support team-based care. What is being done to look at models that support the work of nurse practitioners and other health professionals in the PCNs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the budget that physicians receive for their PCN can be used and is often used to hire additional health care providers. Some of those might include nurse practitioners, for example, a group that I'm particularly fond of because I know they're doing good work. But there are also different funding arrangements that can be looked at. I've asked our department, in fact, to look at that as part of our trilateral master agreement, which is under discussion right now. The current one comes to an end in March, and we hope to have a new one in place very soon.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: when can communities like Bonnyville expect to see changes in how the primary care networks are funded? Presently we feel we're being shortchanged.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of different things that are being looked at right now by PCNs throughout. This is a fairly recent concept in Alberta, but as we go forward, I think you'll see the improvements that you seek. In the meantime let's, please, thank the PCNs that are out there because they are serving about 2 million Albertans right now, and there will be more added to that system as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Water Allocation

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been four years since a moratorium was placed on water allocation in southern Alberta, four years and no action despite government claims that changes to the Water Act are coming. The public consultation phase has seen delay after delay, as has the regional plan. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. When does the government find some courage and put human need, in-stream flow, and long-term land use ahead of FITFIR and the highest bidder?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might suggest that the discussion around water allocation is one that is absolutely critical, but I would suggest to this hon. member that she ask the same question of some of the groups that are engaging in fearmongering and in raising the level of fear in the public so that having a real and informed discussion on this critical matter is almost impossible.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the minister is not afraid of some grassroots organization, Mr. Speaker.

Well, let's talk about Balzac. As demonstrated in Balzac, where water allocation was purchased in a private deal for over $15 million, this government views a water market as a suitable option for dealing with our water shortage. Why is this minister considering allowing the sale of our water?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I have said it about a million times, but if a million and one will serve her needs that much better, this government will never consider the sale of our water. Our water belongs to all Albertans and will always belong to all Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: Ah, the importance of words and the specificity of words, because you are certainly considering allowing the sale of water licences. Maybe the minister would like to explain how the sale of a water licence is not the sale of water, please.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as the member pointed out in the preamble to her first question, there is a moratorium in place on the issuance of new licences. That's not because we enjoy putting difficulty into the lives of people in southern Alberta. It's because there are some realities that we face, and one of them is that the river is fully allocated. If we are, then, going to allow people to more effectively use that water, we have to have a process in place that will allow for the transfer from one user to another user.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Group Home Placement

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of Edmonton-Manning, especially in the Fraser community, are worried they are not being told that group homes are being made in their neighbourhoods and that they are not being evenly spread out. My first question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: Mr. Minister, can you explain the process of the placement allocation of the group homes within the municipality?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our municipalities set out the specific standards for land development in their land-use bylaws. Their municipal development plans may also provide general information on suitable sites for things like group homes. Ultimately, the location of a group home or any other development is based on whether the site meets the development requirements that the municipalities have set.

Mr. Sandhu: To the same minister: can you explain what options residents have to make their concerns heard about the placement of the group homes and the treatment of the residents?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, someone who wants to build a group home needs to first find the site, and if that particular proposal is not permitted by the municipality, the applicant may apply to amend the land-use bylaws. When bylaws are amended, that's when the public needs to be informed and given a chance to speak before their individual councils. If the use is permitted then or discretionary, a development permit is issued. That particular approval can be appealed to the local subdivision and development appeal board.

Mr. Sandhu: My next question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Can you explain what the province's responsibility is with regard to group homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The responsibility of my ministry is to license group homes that have four or more residents who are receiving care and supports. We inspect each group home or each licensed residence at least once a year. Before a licence is issued, an operator must receive a zoning permit from the municipality. They must meet provincial building codes, and they also must have passed an inspection both by the fire department and the health inspector.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Eighteen members were recognized; 108 questions and responses were given.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine and be back to Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health System Governance

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans, the true owners of this province, do want answers to important health care questions. We get these questions posed to us as MLAs, and we try to find the answers through question period to the minister of health. They deserve no less, especially our seniors.

Today we found out from the superboard itself that there are widespread accountability failures in the health care system. The accountability failure extends to this House because I believe that the minister has not been answering the questions that MLAs have been asked by the true owners of this province, the Alberta voters. They are the bosses. Doctors and nurses and health care professionals are talking to us, and I appreciate that, but they're not afraid to talk to us because they've had enough.

So far this session the minister of health has refused to answer over 30 of our questions as MLAs when it came to issues regarding the 2008 state of emergency rooms. Will the minister, I ask, call on the Health Quality Council to investigate the situation? Will the minister allow hospitals to override superboard bureaucracy and red tape in order to give better care to Albertans? Will the minister answer: how many beds have been closed this year in active hospitals around Alberta? Will the minister table a comprehensive list of wait times in Alberta and report online like other provinces do?

It's time for Alberta to catch up. Will the minister take charge and do the right thing and ultimately eliminate the superboard and return decision-making authority to local hospitals through chief medical officers, that the Wildrose suggested, from the roots up, not from the sky down, in capturing the true community capital of answers within Alberta?

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are getting tired of this act, and clearly we need some answers from this minister.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in his position as chair of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report, dated November 2010, respecting presentations to the committee by various groups within the electric industry. These groups are the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, Canadian Wind Energy Association, Capital Power Corporation, Enmax Corporation, Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta. Copies of this report are being distributed to all members today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Child and Youth Advocate's 2009-10 annual report. This report summarizes the activities and achievements of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate over the past year. The advocate does have an important role in representing the interests of individual children and youth and making observations on how the system can be improved. My ministry's response to the advocate's report will be made publicly available on our ministry's website once we've thoroughly reviewed the report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the following annual reports: first, the 2009 report from the College of Licensed Practical Nurses, or LPNs, of Alberta; the 2009 report of the Alberta Opticians Association; and the 2009 report from the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter here, which I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of, from Ken Georgetti, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, making an argument on a point-by-point basis outlining the flaws in the Alberta government's opposition to reform of the Canada pension plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the November-December 2009 edition of English Express, a free newspaper for adult learners, that incorporates information on Alberta grasslands, the Grey Cup, and a real-life CPR situation among other topics.

My second tabling is five copies of English Express teaching notes for the same that allows teachers and learners to check their reading and informs learners of literacy resources on the Internet.

My third tabling is a letter from Enerys Jones, an instructor, who states, "My students and I look forward to each issue of this high quality newspaper" because it contains "topical, relevant and interesting subjects that we use for discussion, reading and writing."

Mr. Speaker, my first tabling regarding Bill 29 is a letter from Bryn MacDonald of the Sierra Club, who I introduced earlier this afternoon. He points out that despite the claim of Alberta's parks protection, attempts to remove those protections from Alberta parks in 1999 were stopped due to public outcry and that passing this bill would be an unprecedented step backwards.

Next, I have a letter to the Premier and minister from Peter Poole of Banff, whose family has invested much in parks and protected areas in Alberta. He spoke to the minister on the shores of Big Lake at the expansion of the Lois Hole provincial park, for which he is thankful, but he is concerned that either the proposed act was written in haste, or it is an attempt to weaken our parks protections and expects . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please table. This is not the debate time. Please just table the documentation. This is not debate we're into here now.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: No. Just table.

Mr. Chase: I have tabled that document, Mr. Speaker. Am I permitted to . . .

The Speaker: Would you table the document with the name of the individual? Anybody who wants access to it can get it. This is not a debate right now. Yesterday you took up eight minutes of the Assembly's valuable time. Please sit down. We've had this discussion before with tabling. You've heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who is a great example of how to table something and get his message across. Check the Hansard tomorrow. You'll see how to do it appropriately, okay? You can't spend eight minutes debating something in tablings. Short, sweet, to the point. Let's move on.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, am I allowed to mention the names of the individuals who have expressed concern?

The Speaker: I think I said that a minute and a half ago.

Mr. Chase: I am allowed?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I wanted clarification.

I have a sampling of the hundreds of e-mails I keep receiving from citizens opposed to Bill 29: from Banff Thomas Willock; from Bragg Creek William Hoyne, Gaynor Hoyne, Jennifer Sadee, Brett Gilmour, Shannon Bailey, Colleen Seto; from Airdrie Linda Dragon; from Calgary Andy Goodspeed, Barbara Hatt, Richard Collier, Richard Kover, Christina Pickles, Mike Cousins, Carol Armstrong, Mike Jones, Darlene Jones, Stephen Herrero, Alison Lennie, Linda Vaxvick, Jane Roberts, Zofia Zgolak, Tamara Chik, Mark and Roxanne Krizan, G. Bellary, Danielle Dufour, Dave Lovekin, Howard Thies, Lorraine Thies, Danile Thies, Logan Thies, Richard Thies, Carol Spring, Laurel Robbins, Peter Santink, Leila McDowell; from Camrose Maggie McBride; from Canmore Sarah Hutchison and Kate Rive; from Cochrane Margie Davenport; from Edmonton Chelsea Flook, Koel Reed, Bronwen Mason, Maxine Epoch, Tim Willson, Annika Nicholson, Rhiannon Prince, Isabelle Nash, Candice McMillan, Jesse Hitchcock, Ronald Ball, Katherine Thompson, Devin Goodsman, Elaine Butler, Jamie Thompson, Bernadette Blakey, Patricia Clayton; from Edson Carl Hunt, Christine Westerveld; from Exshaw Daniella Rubeling; from Grande Prairie Brenda Termeer; from Lethbridge Marie Matkin, Rob Taylor, Selwyn Craig; from Medicine Hat Nicola Gunter; from Pincher Creek Wendy Ryan; from Red Deer Brent Gavey; from Spruce Grove Iren Bartok; from Stony Plain Katelyn Kuzio; from Spruce Ridge Peter McClure; from Wetaskiwin Brenda Blakely; from Water Valley Tim Clinton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, the reason there was an interjection by the chair is that in virtually every parliamentary system like ours in the world there is only one provision provided for under tablings, and that is official documents. Alberta is a total exception to this.

I defend what we do here in Alberta. I just don't want it abused so that the members will decide one day to revert to become like everyone else and disallow members to do tablings, but we have to be responsible.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you had a tabling?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of an Alberta Health Services superboard document titled Accountability Framework for Access and Flow.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 29 Alberta Parks Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move second reading of Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act.

I'd like to take a few moments to outline why this legislation is necessary and the process that brought it to us today. The purpose of this act is to foster an Alberta parks system that conserves unique and represented lands in Alberta's natural regions, balancing environmental conservation, recreation, and tourism opportunities. I want to be clear about what I mean when I talk about the word "balance." I mean a balance of conservation and recreation across the entire parks system, not just in individual parks. We know and science confirms that some parks contain such rare and special features that our primary objective must be preservation. Our wilderness areas – the Ghost, the White Goat, and the Siffleur – come to mind. We also look at features like wildlife corridors. For instance, we're currently consulting on adding lands for additional protection of a wildlife corridor in the Bow Valley wildland.

On the other hand, there are lands that are best suited to recreation. They have been used that way historically, and they don't have ecological features that would be endangered by families spending time there, like a day on the beach at Sylvan Lake. I want to make a point about recreation. I sometimes hear that recreation should be secondary to conservation goals. In my mind they are naturally linked in a parks system. I encourage the hon. members to remember that recreation for many Albertans is hiking or backpacking with the kids or birdwatching or enjoying, as I do myself every morning, a walk in Fish Creek park.

Outdoor recreation is essential to our well-being, to our health, and to our quality of life. It is vital to nurture a stewardship ethic in our children and in their children. I believe it was Robert Bateman who said that kids need to get to know the land as a first step to caring about it. We see the truth in that statement in the history of our parks. In the 1930s provincial parks began to satisfy our need for outdoor recreation. Subsequently, in the 1990s with special places, parks evolved as we saw the need to preserve our natural heritage.

With the land-use framework, the plan for parks, and Bill 29 we are conscientiously and scientifically managing our land base. Bill 29 is intended to align park legislation with the goals stated in the plan for parks. The plan for parks was developed through extensive consultation with stakeholders, aboriginal groups, park users, academics, and experts over three years, Mr. Speaker. We worked very hard to make sure that we got priorities right. Those priorities include involving Albertans in parks, conserving landscapes, providing recreation opportunities, and offering modern facilities, policies, and programs.

I'm committed to fulfilling the plan for parks and to achieving the vision of our Alberta parks system, that our parks will inspire people to discover, value, protect, and enjoy the natural world and the benefits it provides for current and future generations.

The consultation process was open, transparent, and fair. It was also very comprehensive. We've listened carefully to the many ideas and concerns and suggestions brought forward by the public and special interest groups during the consultation on the plan for parks, and on this proposed legislation it aligns with that policy. We, like many Albertans, want a robust, sustainable Alberta parks system. I believe we're well on the way to achieving that with the land-use framework and the plan for parks and this enabling legislation.

First, I want to talk about proposed changes to simplify the park classification system. During the consultation Albertans told us that rules around the park aren't clear and it can be difficult to understand what is allowed in parks. With three pieces of legislation, seven different classifications, dozens of exceptions over nearly 500 parks, that's not surprising. Bill 29 streamlines three acts: the Provincial Parks Act, the Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act, and the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangeland Act.

I want to assure the Assembly that this bill will maintain current levels of protection and recreation access across the parks system. What we will remove is the current complexity and lack of clarity that leads to confusion and all of the consequences associated with that confusion. We will reduce the number of park classifications from seven to two, provincial parks and heritage rangelands. Further to Motion 507 in the spring session the Willmore Wilderness Park Act will not be affected and will not change.

We will focus on communicating the main intent of each park, whether it is conservation, recreation, or a combination of both. Within the provincial park classification up to four zones will be used to describe how visitors use various areas of a park. Zones will clearly set out what activities are allowed, whether, in fact, when you step in the park you need a camera or perhaps a fishing pole, whatever the recreation that is allowed. There could be more than one zone in a provincial park. The names and descriptions of the proposed zones will be created in regulation.

This will be a subject of a lot of discussion. I'm very pleased that we've been hearing from respected conservation experts, and they've offered to help us set up zoning. We anticipate that zones will be determined based on current practice and on science and on the input from additional consultations over the next year. I don't think I can stress enough that our intent is to maintain existing levels of protection in recreation activities across the parks system. Bill 29 will fix some of the confusion that visitors experience.

This legislation is enabling, not prescriptive, and it will give us the ability to manage our land base more effectively. For instance, some natural areas are used almost exclusively for recreation while others have higher conservation values. Currently they're in the same category, and it's creating confusion. We will address these anomalies and apply zoning consistently across the province. The new classification and zoning structure will make it clear to Albertans what kind of activities they're allowed to do in parks, and it will clearly identify which parklands need to be protected so that future generations will be able to experience our province's treasured natural heritage. As our population expands, Albertans need access to more recreation opportunities. At the same time, protecting our environment is an important priority. My mandate with the plan for parks was to ensure that our parks are protected and accessible to Albertans.

I want to now talk about how Albertans can become more involved. In the plan for parks and with Bill 29 Albertans will have more opportunities to get involved in parks and play an active role in the planning of their future. A parks advisory council and a parks conservation foundation will offer new forums for Albertans to help them play a larger role in parks. For example, the parks conservation foundation will accept donations of land, money, and gifts in kind to benefit the parks system. We know there are advantages for Albertans to donate through a foundation rather than directly to government, and often that is their preference. The parks advisory council will have broad representation and will advise the minister on park policies and initiatives.

Another aspect of Bill 29 and an important recommendation from interest groups during consultation is the commitment to notify the public about changes to parks land base. Currently there is no requirement to notify the public of changes to provincial parks, recreation areas, or wildland provincial parks. With this bill we're making a commitment to provide 60 days' notice on changes to a park land base. Examples range from minor boundary changes to rerouting a road to establishing a new provincial park. Currently we're consulting with local communities and stakeholders. You'll see about 20 consultations over the last year on park websites. On a range of changes like the addition of new campgrounds we'll continue to do so, Mr. Speaker. We're developing guidelines for future consultations and community engagement, and we will communicate them clearly to the public.

We developed this bill through consultation with the public, aboriginal groups, stakeholders, and other government departments to ensure that we'll meet their needs. It's also critical that the bill align well with other pieces of legislation such as the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Bill 29 will streamline the way we manage Alberta's provincial parks and strike a responsible balance between conservation and recreation across the entire parks system.

Last year in the plan for parks we committed to getting back to Albertans with specific actions, including in legislation a clear, simplified classification system and opportunities for Albertans to have more say about what happens in their parks. Under Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, we can achieve these goals. We will continue to protect our province's natural heritage and to ensure access to unspoiled natural spaces for recreation and the healthy outdoor activities that are important to the quality of life of all Albertans.

I want to be clear that this legislation will not immediately change what is happening in parks. We will not proclaim this act until we have worked with Albertans to develop a strongly supported group of regulations and a strong zoning system to better manage what happens on the land. I believe we're doing the right thing in the right way for the right reasons, and I think our approach of creating enabling legislation supported by strong regulations is the most effective way to manage the Alberta parks system.

Bill 29 is good for the Alberta parks system, it's good for our province, and I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill to help us create a stronger Alberta parks system. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would now move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, your vote will be removed from the record. You were not sitting in your appropriate place. We couldn't account for you. I see you've moved again. Do you want to move to the other chair? I can do that, you know. It's just that you're getting farther and farther away from me all the time.

Mr. Mason: Actually, I'd like that one.

The Speaker: Okay.

Bill 27
Police Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Zwozdesky]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. We're on Bill 27.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010, is getting a bumpy ride here because, as my colleagues who have spoken before me have already noted, this act seems to be not achieving the balance that we need to achieve whenever we assign powers to the police force.

We're in a consent position with policing. We the people agree that we will abide by the rules, and we will consent to the police enforcing those rules upon us. Therefore, it's important that we always have that balance and that respect from both sides, from the people that what is being asked of them is not unreasonable and from the police that it's enough to actually do their job and protect the officers. Protection of the officers is a key part of this. We ask those individuals, who are civil servants, to take on a difficult, complex, and many times dangerous task on our behalf, on behalf of the public. I very much respect that.

I also, as I'm sure many of you have noticed, push back pretty hard because I see that the police – let's call them law enforcement agencies – always want to make their job easier. Fair enough; we all want to make our own jobs easier. But they have a particular place in our society and have very far-reaching powers that will limit our freedoms, essentially, so we have to be very cautious about adding to those far-reaching powers. You know, they're trying to do a better job. I feel sometimes that they would like to microchip us all because, heck, it would be so easy to keep track of everybody. Then they'd know where each one of us was at any time of the day or night. I say that with a great deal of fondness for the law enforcement agencies. It's probably true, but I'm standing here to make sure that that doesn't happen.

One of the issues that has come up quite a bit in the past was the issue around how the police investigate themselves. Actually, at one point among my many portfolios I was the Justice and Solicitor General critic. At that time there was a very imperfect system available, that I believed suited nobody's purpose very well. It was police services investigating complaints against their members, and they would do their own investigation of the situation. I feel it was imperfect because nobody ever walked away from that one in a clean way.

What do I mean by that? Well, essentially, if you had an officer that was cleared, they very often were regarded by others in the community, including the media, as not quite cleared because, you know, they'd been investigated by their buddies. That was not a pleasant experience for an individual officer to be in, I'm sure. On the other hand, for members of the police institutions if one of their members was found to be in an infraction, they felt that maybe people had been overcompensating to try and make a point that would make the public happy that somebody had been punished. So nobody ever liked that system, and I, in particular, didn't like it.

We have addressed that, and we do now have better legislation that recognizes an independent body being able to investigate officers. What I believe was trying to be achieved in Bill 27 was to look at the new officers that we've created and figure out how we are going to be involved in that same kind of investigative and disciplinary process with them because we have a number of new categories now that we didn't have back when previous amendments to the Police Act were made in 1973. I'm sorry; the complaint and discipline process has remained largely unchanged since 1973.

We have had consultations with stakeholders over the last couple of years and particularly on the law enforcement framework. It was intended to deal with these current realities that we have. One of those realities is surveillance. You know, that's another area I think we as legislators have to push back against, the ease with which surveillance can be put in place and used. To me it flies in the face of believing that we live in a society of essentially decent people who are going about their lives and should be able to go about their lives without scrutiny from persons unknown.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Part of the whole thing is: exactly where do those tapes go? How long are they kept, and who else is looking at them? Do they turn up at somebody's, you know, retirement party? Are they spliced together to make a joke for a roast for somebody? You never quite know. I'm sure that our law enforcement agencies wouldn't sanction anything like that, but I bet you it happens. The temptation is just too great to do that. I am very cautious about use of surveillance, and that was one of the realities of modern enforcement that we were talking about here.

Ms Pastoor: Private security companies do it all the time.

Ms Blakeman: My colleague is mentioning private security companies. I know she's eager to speak on this bill, and I'm sure she will raise that point when she does.

I think what has concerned me most is that the different perspectives aside from the ministry's objective are taken into account with this bill. I remember I heard one of my colleagues on the other side speaking enthusiastically, saying: "But don't you see? This is just going to be great. It's exactly what we wanted." But we have to be careful who else is caught. What are the unintended consequences of legislation? Part of our job is to make sure that we've looked at that. What are the additional risks that we've created for others that we hadn't anticipated? What else could happen as a result of this?

I have questions about the public interest in this bill, and I have hesitations because I think the bill may be contrary to the public interest. I think it has the potential to water down the public complaints process, and I also really am concerned about how the definition of who can participate in this is very narrow. That's part of why I think it's not in the public interest.

If we start to say that only these certain people are allowed to express a concern about police behaviour, given those immense powers that the police do have over individuals, I think we create a very – dangerous isn't the right word – untenable situation. Someone who, you know, is under the control of the police – let me put it that way – may be allowed to complain, but frankly they may be quite frightened about complaining and may be worried about other things.

We had a case in the Assembly recently where a couple was picked up by the police, and therefore their children were picked up by children's services. That's not uncommon, frankly, but an individual may be concerned about pursuing a complaint because of those additional consequences that flow from that.

When you have organizations in the community like the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association or some of the others like E. Fry or John Howard, which are organizations that move a lot between all of the different sides that are involved in policing and enforcement and the judiciary, we need to be able to bring them into the discussion and have them participate in a complaints process. It may be that they are the ones that end up bringing forward the complaint, and I don't want to see a situation where we narrow too much who is able to bring those complaints forward.

I'm sorry; my next thought just escaped out of my head. I should have written it down. Sorry about that.

I've heard my colleagues talking about this, and I know that there are some real concerns about it. I'm not sure if we're looking at bringing forward amendments. I think we do want to see something change around the disciplinary and complaint process. We don't want to simply abandon this bill, but I would expect that my colleague will be bringing forward amendments to be able to try and address some of what is in the act that we have concerns about.

I'll wait until Committee of the Whole to be able to do the commentary on more of the sectional analysis, but that is my observation at a first glance. We're debating in second reading the principle of the bill, and you can see that I'm struggling with it. I mean, clearly, I believe that there is something that needs to happen in this process. Do I think this is what needs to happen or that what's in this legislation is the right way to approach this? That's what I'm struggling with because I think it's not.

We need to be very, very cautious. We write the rules here. We expect someone else to enforce them and to lay charges according to what we've done. If there is a discrepancy or an argument about whether that was appropriate, it moves into the judiciary, and at that point a judge is trying to figure out if everybody did the job they were supposed to do.

It often flows back to us. I know that there tend to be complaints about judge-made law, but frankly whenever you hear that argument, it means that we didn't do a very good job as legislators because we didn't make it clear enough what we were intending, and we didn't write the legislation well enough to get rid of those inconsistencies and unintended consequences. So that's what I'm asking for here, a very careful look at this.

I'm a nice middle-income gal. Very plain household. My parents were teachers. Nothing special there. You know, I had a good upbringing, went to public schools. I'm a pretty average Albertan, and I obey the rules. I obey the rules until I perceive an unfairness in them that is so one-sided that I'm going to start to fight to change the rules. I think that's what we need to make sure that we're not creating, that kind of situation. [interjections] I'm being heckled, I'm sure with great fondness, from the other side. I appreciate the heckling. Thank you for listening to what I'm saying because it is an indicator that you were.

I think we need to be very cautious with what we're going ahead with here. I look forward to the debate around this bill because I think it's an important one, and I encourage as many people to get involved as they can.

Thank you very much for allowing me to put my concerns and outline the context of where I think the act needs to be very careful while we're in second reading.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to comment or question.

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has moved second reading of Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010. Does the Assembly agree with the motion for . . .

Ms Blakeman: No, no. There's a speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I asked if there was anybody for comments and questions, and no one stood up.

Ms Blakeman: You said: 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: Yes, I did, and I had no one standing to ask questions after.

Ms Blakeman: But how about another debater?

The Acting Speaker: I've called the question on this.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 15: Mr. Hinman]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to rise and speak about Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, brought forward by the hon. Minister of Energy. This bill sets up the legislative framework and regime to support an industry that doesn't even exist, the sequestration of carbon, and generally parallels the existing framework for exploration, extraction, and shipment of minerals and pipelines. This is a pretty important piece of legislation that is going ahead here. Alberta has a lot of hope riding on this. It has a lot of money riding on this. It affects our use of land and how we traditionally viewed ownership of land in this province going forward. So I'll try to touch on a few of those things.

The government is currently funding the development of carbon capture and storage projects in Alberta to the tune of $2 billion. That's a lot of money for any jurisdiction, even one as wealthy as ours. They are also assuming the long-term liability for all CCS projects here in Alberta. The rationale, I gather, for the province assuming the risk is because the risk is too high and long term for industry to want to lay themselves on the line. So the government has picked up this risk or incented the market or whatever you want to call it to hopefully allow carbon capture and storage to go forward in this province and, hopefully, be successful. I use the term "hopefully" because it has not yet been proven.

The carbon capture and storage operator would be responsible for mitigation work during the operation and up until a closure certificate has been issued by the province. The period of time between closure and the transfer of long-term liability remains undefined in this bill. The legislation provides regulatory powers to the governing board to define these aspects of when and how the liability transfer will occur.

The CCS operators will also pay into a postclosure stewardship fund, which will be managed by the Alberta government. In theory – and again I use the words "in theory" because this whole act has a lot of theory to it – the fund will cover ongoing monitoring and any remedial work that may be required in the future. We've seen some of the troubles that have occurred sometimes in the oil and gas industry when abandoned wells have happened or other incidents have occurred where industry is done with their work. Sometimes there has to be a cleanup, and that cleanup is left to the government to do on behalf of the people. Sometimes private industry hasn't left any money in the kitty to cover that loss. Hopefully this stewardship fund, when the details emerge, will actually bring in the money to cover some of this reclamation work that, it appears, is going to be part of the ongoing nature of us developing our CCS business.

Once the government of Alberta has the legislative framework in place – you know, the regulations are still to be determined – Alberta Energy in conjunction with the stakeholders will begin a review of the framework to apparently ensure they facilitate carbon capture and storage. Hypothetically, this carbon capture and storage is supposed to start as early as 2011.

There are some serious issues out there, as I alluded to earlier, Mr. Speaker. As a starting point this bill takes away landowners' rights to ownership of pore space. I'm no scientist, but from what I understand, pore space is holes in rocks and spaces below the earth that allow for carbon to be drilled in. It puts in place a legislative framework that is similar to that in oil and gas drilling, in that it allows for putting carbon below the earth much like the oil and gas regulations allow us to extract oil and gas from the earth.

If you look at this, this bill retroactively changes the way landowners own their land. Simply put, prior to this bill becoming an act, landowners owned the pore space below their properties. This was evident in the fact that no other body or jurisdiction had claimed they had owned it, so by the fact of them owning the land, an individual who owned the property was entitled to everything below it, of course, unless the government had reserved the oil rights or if it was within five miles from a railway track, which the government of Alberta then owned, at least in the old days or something to that effect, where all landowners in Alberta owned the pore space below their lands. Well, that in one fell swoop changed. So on people's lands they will now have this carbon capture and storage happening. It will have, notably, some impact on their land and may even have some detrimental effects.

I bring up the fact that governments are usually loath to retroactively introduce legislation that takes away rights, going backwards not forward. It's something they generally don't want to do because it interferes with what people have thought was the lay of the land, what they thought was their own property and what they thought they could do on it. What is interesting on this front is that not only is the government taking the land, but people will not receive compensation for this. Hey, the government by all means is allowed to do it, but like I said, governments generally err on the side of caution, generally only affect landowners going forward and not past.

This is definitely a change from business as usual and one that we have heard from many stakeholders about, many landowners. Rural landowners have contacted us saying that they're worried about this. They're worried about what impact this will have on their land, what impact this will have on future agricultural use of their land. Hey, I think those are legitimate concerns. Right now, given where we are in the carbon capture and storage game, I don't think everything has been answered for us to just say: oh, nothing is going to happen. I think that may be wishful thinking. I hope it's correct and all that stuff, but who knows?

A hundred years ago we got into the development of our oil and gas industry. I don't think we foresaw some of the ramifications on the environment back then, and this could be the case in terms of this carbon capture and storage bill. I think it does affect those individual landowners and their peace and quiet and enjoyment of their land. They are taking away some property rights that were there before, and it's something to be pointed out.

The second component of this is the assumption of liability by this government. Like I said before, it's essentially a way to incent the marketplace or take expense away from industry or is basically a bit of a handout or a hand up to them, whatever you really want to call it, in that we are encouraging the markets to go ahead and do what they want, and we'll cover the damage. I don't know right now if we know what the damage is going to be. That worries me in this case. Hey, I'm no expert. I'm hoping that this is covered. Nevertheless, I think it's something to be concerned about. How much is the Alberta government going to be on the hook for in the future should something go wrong with this? Given that we're relatively new in the game on this, it's something to be concerned about, and I bring that up in at this time.

We also look at the assumption of liability and indemnity as triggered by the issuance of a closure certificate, and the preconditions to issuing a closure certificate are set out in section 120 of the act. Some of the things that it may include are proper abandonment of wells and facilities, proper reclamation, that the captured CO₂ is behaving in a stable and predictable manner "with no significant risk of future leakage," and that the period of time established by regulation has passed.

Hey, if you look at that at face value, the fact that industry is not viable without assumption of this risk by government begs the question of whether the Crown, through the Crown landowners, is giving up too much to create a viable industry in an uncertain business and in an uncertain scientific climate in order to kick-start carbon capture. It's a question that I hope the experts and the scientists we've consulted on this have been able to answer. Nevertheless, we need to keep an eye on this.

I also note that this is a major component of our CO₂ reduction strategy. The government assumes that to reach our 2050 targets of reducing the CO₂ we emit into the environment – we are going to reduce that by over 200 megatonnes – this carbon capture and storage is going to be the solution for 70 per cent of these reductions. That's right; 70 per cent of our reduction in fossil fuel use or, at least, in our production of CO₂ is going to come from carbon capture and storage. That seems to be putting a lot of eggs in one basket, and I'm not sure if that's going to be doable given the state of this technology, given that it is at best experimental in nature in the Alberta landscape and all those things. Do I think we shouldn't be trying this? No, that's not what I'm saying. But I'll tell you what. In my view, I believe global warming is real and we have a responsibility to do something about it.

3:30

This highlights to me that we should also be looking at other strategies. I know that some members of this honourable House are actually bringing forward private members' bills on emission standards this legislative session. I think they're actually coming up next week. I think it might be time for those procedures to actually be looked at in conjunction with our carbon capture and storage bill that is being passed, the burying of our carbon underground, and look at some other ways to actually lower reductions. Emission controls may be part of that. We have to be always looking for other ways.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to speak.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I just want to be very quick. One of the things that really bothers me is that the government would accept long-term liability for injected carbon dioxide once the operator provides data showing that stored CO₂ is contained. My understanding is that there really are no long-term scientific studies to say what is safe or not safe. What happens to the water in aquifers that may be permanently damaged? I think it's just not going to be good enough to be able to say, "Oops," because it'll be too late then.

We do know that we have had earth tremors over the years in Alberta even as far north as Edmonton. What happens if there is an earth tremor and rocks are moved, et cetera? I don't think that there's nearly enough information on what's considered safe, when the taxpayer should take it over. The other thing is that the period of time between the closure and the transfer of long-term liability remains undefined. That period of time has to be based on scientific studies, which, as I've mentioned, I don't believe exist.

I think the other thing that would tie in with the assumption of liability by the Crown, i.e. the taxpayers, is that the industry is not viable without an assumption of risk being taken by the government. It begs the question of whether the Crown and, through the Crown, landowners are giving too much to create a viable industry in an uncertain business. My question would be: has any insurance company been willing to take this risk? If not, why should the taxpayers take the risk if an insurance company won't take the risk? Why can't developers take out the insurance? I mean, after all, they can write that off as a business expense. Most insurance companies do a tremendous amount of work on risk assessment and those sorts of informational things before they'll even dream of providing insurance, and even if it is very high risk, they're willing to take it if the dollars are right.

So until some insurance company tells me that they're even remotely interested in providing insurance on the liability that the taxpayers are going to get stuck with, then I think a lot more work has to be done towards this. Certainly, taxpayers cannot write off tax increases as easily as businesses can write off business expenses.

With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you. This is the part that I think really needs a lot more work done on it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to put a comment and a question to the hon. member, and hopefully she'll respond. She's raised the question about why insurance companies shouldn't provide the insurance. I guess I will suggest to her that the reason that they don't, even though that's their business, is that, believe it or not, they're risk averse. They don't like to insure things like nuclear power plants and so on, where there's a potential for catastrophic damage. I just wonder if the hon. member feels that that may in fact be why insurance companies are not prepared to insure carbon capture sites and that's why the only people who are left is the government, with its deep pockets.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I think he's basically summed up exactly what I was thinking. I don't know whether insurance companies have been approached, but I think in this day and age one walks down the street with their insurance company and their lawyer. An awful lot of what we do is based on an insurance company saying that you can do it. I go back to the very simple example of a soccer mom. In the old days you packed your car with kids and off you went to the game and had a grand time. Now you are worried about the liability. That has now spoiled it for having kids go in the vans together because you have to make sure that your liability is for the kid in the van and the kid getting out of the van. I mean, it's really taken a lot of the joy out of life.

Having said that, I would like to know if insurance companies have been approached, if they're even remotely interested in insuring this. Certainly, I think that if an insurance company isn't willing to take the risk, why should taxpayers?

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Zwozdesky]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I don't think I'm pleased to be able to be up and debating this, but I'm certainly grateful for the opportunity and the freedom of speech to be able to get up and talk about what has happened around electoral boundary changes in this province given the last Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I want to be very clear that right from the get-go I and members of the Official Opposition caucus did not agree with the government's move to add four new electoral divisions to the map, and I will speak very specifically about why I disagreed with this. It was because that was a magic number for the government. Adding four new electoral divisions gave the Electoral Boundaries Commission the ability to move some boundaries around and to cope with the increased growth in metropolitan and urban areas without ever having to reduce the number of rural ridings. I really disagreed with that, and I think that the map should have been drawn differently.

That's not to say that I particularly have it in for any given rural riding, but what I am a champion for is the fact that Alberta is an urban province. Most of our residents live in urban areas, and that is not reflected in the distribution of seats that are in this House at this time. I think that's wrong. What it does is create a different value of votes, and it entrenches a different value of votes between someone living in a rural area and someone living in an urban area. Let me be clear again. I'm not picking on any particular rural riding. I don't care where it is.

It's very convenient for the members on the other side that they are able to protect their status quo and protect the likelihood of their re-election in exactly the same way. The urban ridings are not getting the representation and the number of votes that they should be getting. Mr. Speaker, that matters. So we have . . . [interjections] Oh, I'm so glad that the Minister of Energy is beaking off; the Minister of Infrastructure now has joined in; I think maybe we've got Grande Prairie. Yeah, lots of folks want to join in.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm always excited when I can manage to engage the hon. members opposite, so I don't mind the heckling, but I do want to see them get up and defend some of this because, frankly, I don't think it's defensible. I went to the Electoral Boundaries Commission twice, once before the interim report and once in reaction to the interim report, and I put the same concerns that I'm raising here today and more, actually, on the record with the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I am fiercely proud of this province, and I really hate it when I see stuff happen here that I think diminishes us, and I think that what happened with the distribution of seats diminishes Alberta, particularly because it diminishes the people that live in urban areas. Two-thirds of us live in an urban area in this province, and that is not reflected in this House. So that's where I start from.

Now, let me keep going now that I've got started. Who cares? So what? There is an entrenchment of rural voting privilege in this Assembly. So what? Well, it matters to me because those votes matter on things like the allocation of resources, the allocation of budget, the way we put a priority on various government initiatives. If you don't have enough seats in here that are voting on urban concerns and you have more than the share voting on rural concerns, then those issues are the ones that get the funding and the priority.

We do end up with things like FITFIR, which is something that I've talked a lot about in this House – first in time, first in right – which is a very archaic water management system that's been in place in this government for a very long time. The government is hesitating around a new water licensing or water allocation system. We're looking at whether we can grow some of the cities. Okotoks comes to mind. Because they've had to stop allocating new water licences, we have some urban areas that are really struggling with their growth choices because of those decisions.

That allocation of seats and votes matters because the decisions that come out of this House matter in all of Alberta. The allocation of resources and the prioritization of those issues matter. So it's really important.

Let's have another example. You know, it's important to me that as part of moving forward in this province and as part of balancing our environmental concerns against the economic growth, which in this province means oil and gas development, I've talked about trying to enhance walking and cycling infrastructure in the cities, not just for recreational purposes but for commuting purposes. If we can get more people that find it easy to be able to commute in an urban centre, you have fewer people driving cars, which is going to cut down on our greenhouse gasses, and that's going to help us all the way around. But if you can't get that balance of votes, then you're not going to have the priority put on those kinds of choices in here.

The other thing that Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, deals with, of course – and it was certainly brought up a lot during the boundaries commission – is voter participation. We are all struggling with voter participation in this province. We're all trying to figure out, you know, how to do it. How do we encourage more people to vote? Again, you look at that distribution of seats and the distribution of votes and, well, how many people are going: "What's the point? What's the point of voting in an urban centre? My vote is not going to count anyway. For a lot fewer people in a rural riding, their vote counts more, so why would I even bother?" I have had people say that to me. I hope that is not the reason, genuinely, why they are not voting because if that's true, then we just entrench that kind of lower voter turnout. I wonder sometimes if it isn't just a pat way of answering the question, but they said it to me, so I have to take that seriously.

When you look at the electoral boundaries report that is encompassed in and put into practice through Bill 28 – and for anyone that needs to see it, this is Sessional Paper 225/2010, the 2009-2010 Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission's Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries, and Names for Alberta – one of the interesting things that happened was the way that the boundaries commission decided to divide things up.

With a tip of the hat to one of my previous colleagues in this House, which was the previous member for Brooks – he held various ministerial portfolios, and he loved to average things – at a certain point he said: well, there are no poor children in Alberta because if you average the children in wealthy households and the children in impoverished households, it comes out to kind of the midpoint, so there are no impoverished children in Alberta. You've got to love that one because then you didn't have to fund, of course, any kind of program.

That same logic, the Oberg principle I'll call it, I find in play here because what we had was a way of thinking about this – here it is; I think it first shows up on page 5 – that talks about how many seats in Calgary, how many seats in Edmonton, and then the "rest of Alberta." So outside of Edmonton and Calgary, everything else in Alberta got mixed into one, the rest of Alberta. It shows it, when you look at their various graphs, to be kind of more or less in the same mix.

Well, when you actually look at how that breaks down, there is a massive difference in how many people are in those ridings. Mixed into the "rest of Alberta," you've got some ridings that are the percentage of variation off that average. What they do is take the population of Alberta, they divide it by the number of seats, and say that this is the average number. Now, is riding A above or below that average, and by how much? This is how they start to figure out whether they need to move the boundaries around to either add more people into the riding or take them away or whether what they've done is indeed fair. Okay?

If you look on page 16 of the electoral boundaries report, here you've got some ridings. I'm going to save embarrassment here by not reading out what they are, but you've got one, for example, that's 15 per cent under the variation. Fifteen per cent under. Eight per cent under. Seven per cent under. Going down here, 12 per cent under and another one 12 per cent under. Fifteen per cent, 11 per cent, 23 per cent under that average: that's one heck of a variation.

Those are all mixed in together with a number of cities because, remember, they just said: Edmonton, Calgary, and the "rest of Alberta." These rural ridings that can be that much under, 23 per cent under that average, are mixed in with ones that include the city of Grande Prairie or the city of Lethbridge or the city of Red Deer. Those are all in the mix with the rest of Alberta. It's exactly the Oberg principle. If you take ridings that are very, very low and you mix in a bunch of urban centres with them, well, gosh darn, you're going to come up with more or less around that average, that looks pretty acceptable to everybody else, and that is wrong, in my opinion.

When I look at the other side of that mix, when I look at the divisions in Edmonton and Calgary, what has happened there? Well, look: 12 per cent over, 14 per cent over, 9 per cent over, 10 per cent over, 16 per cent over, 10 per cent over, 15 per cent over. That's in Calgary alone. Those are Calgary ridings. Those are Calgary ridings where people in this House are trying to represent more – 10 per cent more, 15 per cent more, 12 per cent more – people than what that average is. Okay?

That matters because they're representing more people, and when they try and talk about extra money for constituency offices to pay for translation services or dealing with poverty issues or casework or anything else, they're representing way more people, and they don't have the seats that reflect that.

When you look at Edmonton, we've got 8 per cent over, 10 per cent over, a bunch of 5 and 6 per cents over, 12, 8. You know, once again, more people. It was an entrenchment of the status quo, that favours the government. Do I think that's right or fair? Nope, I don't.

Okay. I talked about voter participation and whether that happens, I talked about that Oberg averaging principle, and I just want to go through some of the things that were brought up and, therefore, get incorporated into Bill 28 and that were presented to the boundaries commission.

Now, just let me stop here and say a small prayer of gratitude for the members who served on the boundaries commission. This should be an exalted position, but, oh, my goodness. I mean, basically, we took some citizens and we said to them: "You're going to have to forsake your job. You're going to travel around the province for extended periods of time."

Is the Speaker wondering how talking about what's in the electoral boundaries report reflects itself in Bill 28? He's not.

They travelled all over the province. They were away from their home and their families for a long period of time, even their work. They may well have lost money. So thank them. This was not an easy job.

Now, the composition of that Electoral Boundaries Commission also matters.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wish to comment or question? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much. I do have just a couple of questions on the presentation because I'm just having a little bit of difficulty understanding. I feel like it's a narrow-minded approach, and I can't quite figure out if it's the narrow-mindedness that comes first or the tunnel vision.

I believe that this is a democratic country, and what happens is that the aspect of democracy very much revolves around equitable representation, but you look at it completely as equal representation. There is not equal representation. It takes someone in rural Alberta to be able to see their representative possibly four hours, such as it is in mine, to get from one end of the constituency to mine in order to have a face-to-face opportunity to discuss an issue. In the hon. member for Dunvegan's that might be eight hours. In your constituency, hon. member, it may take you – and I think you've said this before – 13 to 14 minutes to walk across it.

Ms Blakeman: Forty-five.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Forty-five minutes to walk across it. What ends up happening is that your office, as I saw it, is across the street from the Legislature. We have to talk about the opportunity of representation. It isn't equal because this country is not equal. This country is not a country that only has urban development. It has different types of development. Could you please tell me how you would address that aspect? It is access.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Thank you for that question. It does flow into what I was talking about as I ran out of time, which was the composition of the Electoral Boundaries Commission itself. Essentially, you have two members that are appointed from opposition parties or with co-operation – yeah, the Official Opposition with the other one knowing as well – and three, therefore the majority vote, appointed by the government in power. Yes, officially one is appointed by the Speaker and two are appointed by the Premier, but that is how it shakes down. We all know the Speaker is a member of the government caucus. That's a majority vote right there. If you want to talk about equal, equitable, the majority vote is the way this place works, and I think that matters. So the composition itself of the boundaries commission is important in all of this.

Now, there were a number of presentations made, and some of the points from the public that were made indeed are captured in the boundaries commission annual report, and I encourage people to go and read it because that matters, too. One of the things that really bugs me is somehow this assumption that some ridings are better and some are worse. That just offends me. I think all parts of this province are important. How the count works is a different matter, but to say that because I represent a central riding within, literally, walking distance of the Legislative Assembly I get less money to fund my constituency office – the factors that are counted here tend to be factors that favour an older system.

What's in an older system? More rural seats. There's a lot of consideration given to how much time is spent for an MLA to move about their constituency. True, but this is also modern times. We just spent a lot of time talking about whether or not you could have a cellphone in your car and communicate with your constituents that way. I think all of us as MLAs talk to our constituents on the phone. Some of them we meet. Does that mean that it can only be this way or only face to face? No.

My colleagues spend time driving back to their constituencies on a Thursday night, and that's no fun, for anybody listening. I remember that a member, Mr. Taylor, said: "That's it. I'm quitting because I'm sick and tired of getting in my truck and driving five hours to get home every week and five hours to get back." I understand what he's saying. He did work while he did it, but he was driving every day. What did I do in that five hours? I went back to my office and worked.

So it's not as though either one of us is better or worse. It's just different.

The Acting Speaker: On the bill, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to get up and speak to this bill, as it always is. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, it is really a privilege to be here and to be able to discuss these democratic principles. I, too, will follow up a little bit on what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said and maybe try to engage the hon. member's question that was just asked and try and pick up, from my point of view, on the difference between equitable representation as it says in the Electoral Boundaries Commission and what goals we are balancing off and try and get a little bit of an answer from at least my perspective. I'll try and do some justice to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre although I doubt I will do it. We'll continue on with that conversation.

Nevertheless, I too am of the view that when we started this process, there was no need for an additional four members to be added to the House. I don't know whether there was a magic number to keep rural ridings together. All I know is that there was no need for an addition of four more seats. Why is that? Simply put, we are in recessionary times here in Alberta. Everyone is clamouring for money, and the addition of these four more MLAs will cost the taxpayer approximately $50 million over a four-year term in office. That's not a small chunk of change. It could be used for many things. I'm sure the hon. minister of housing could use that to help some of our homeless individuals in both Calgary and Edmonton, to speed up the 10-year plan to end homelessness a little quicker, or a number of things where that $50 million could be used instead of having four more MLAs here.

There are other jurisdictions who do it, Mr. Speaker, with fewer MLAs. Ontario does it with fewer MLAs per population than we do. So does British Columbia. There are examples of jurisdictions who manage to survive with fewer people in their Legislatures working on behalf of their citizens. From a straight optics point as well as a financial point I don't believe that was wise.

I've stated that for the record. I believe we would have been much better served, all of us here, leading by example, rolling up our sleeves, working a little harder, adding a few more constituents in our communities and saying: all right; we're going to carry the ball and do the best we can. I believe we are all very talented individuals in here. We could have served our constituents very well in that regard.

I will follow up some of the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre as I, too, am of the view that urban constituencies were not treated in the same respect as many of our rural communities in this new electoral boundary redrawing. I know we've had some numbers bandied around here, whether it's 66 per cent or, as I've heard recent statistics say, closer to 71 per cent of our people that live in cities in Alberta. Whether we're arguing over 5 per cent, I think, needless to say, we're all cognizant that Alberta is moving towards more people going to our city centres rather than our rural townships.

Now, what does that mean for the redrawing of this electoral map? It means that if you look on a straight representation-by-population basis, the urban constituencies are disadvantaged. Using my 71 per cent number, 71 per cent of the individuals in this province live in cities, yet they only receive approximately 50 per cent of the seats. That is a striking imbalance, one that you don't see in all other jurisdictions. It is really an imbalance, I think, that is more unique to Alberta than it is to other provinces that find their equitable representation closer to a number that reflects actual people in their urban sectors. I believe that's a uniquely Alberta situation due to probably some history of the way the province developed, some history around recent electoral victories. Well, recent; let's go back even further, to the last 40 years' election victories. The current zeitgeist of what is happening here in Alberta may have some implication in that. But that may be reading too much into it.

If we get back to what is equitable representation, under the act it means that not all communities or constituencies are easy to represent. I think the hon. minister made a good point in the fact that in some areas it does take a rural member of this hon. House eight hours to get across that constituency to visit with a person. Okay. I accept that. I say: yeah, that happens; from time to time that happens. I don't know how often that happens; I don't represent a rural community. But I know that if he's driving eight hours to see that person on a Monday, he's probably not going to go out there on Tuesday and see that person the very next day. I don't know for sure. I know for sure that that guy eight hours away isn't going to stop in three times in a week every week for the remainder of their session. Believe me – maybe I'm just too nice a guy; maybe I'm so helpful – I have constituents who by nature of my community stop in two, three times a week, not really with an issue, but they still want to talk to me.

Mr. Danyluk: You should solve the problem the first time.

Mr. Hehr: Yes. Exactly. Maybe it is my fault. I have to solve the problem the first time. That may be it. I'm getting to that. Maybe I've got to get better at solving these constituents' problems; that's it.

Nevertheless, there are different ramifications for different communities, you know, so we can point to these differences in representing different geographical communities. I know I can list some of the joys of being a representative from downtown Calgary and just some of the things that I find not so joyful. Believe you me, I love every one of my constituents, sir, just not always the ones that come in as often as they do. I still love them, but nevertheless a little absence makes the heart grow fonder. You guys know where I'm going with this.

Anyway, back to the point. The big thing that I see that is really the great equalizer – it's a great equalizer for us in this Legislature – is the use of technology. We handle much on the phone, much on the computer, much through our ability to simply communicate better with individuals. Is it a perfect world? No. But we have the means, the ability to do that. Okay? I believe technology is a great equalizer in this forum, that is going to make representation by population much more the norm than equitable representation that we brought out.

We see the differences. We have a 23 per cent difference in one rural riding compared to a 12 per cent overrun in another. Let someone do the math. That's a 36 per cent difference in the number of people that are being represented. That's a lot. Their vote counts more. Their vote on a straight representation by population counts more. That is supposed to not happen to I think the extent it did in this electoral map redrawing. I believe it has to happen a little, but I believe that because of some of the things the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought up – the nature of the people selected to the committee, the nature of the redrawing of the map, our rural constituencies having the power they do – it happened.

For better or for worse, those are my thoughts. I believe and hope that in the future even more technological advances will be made that allow us to communicate more effectively with our constituents. In my view, if we can get as close to votes equalling the same in this province, the better off democracy is. I believe that was what Canada tried to be founded on, with a recognition that our geography has a place in that.

I think the day is coming to a conclusion when we're going to accept such a wide variety, and that may be settled through our courts. You saw a narrowing in our court decisions recently on what equitable representation actually means. I believe there will be a court challenge that even limits it, that instead of a 25 per cent deviation, you'll see it down to an 18 per cent deviation. I don't know. I brought that number off a skyhook. Nevertheless, I believe it will be decided through the courts, and I believe that at the end of the day it will happen more in the manner I am suggesting than in others. Nevertheless, that will be happening at another date.

I thank the hon. Speaker for allowing me to have this discussion and to participate.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess I wanted to direct a question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. It relates to the comments earlier by the Minister of Infrastructure about distances. I wonder if the hon. member – I'm sure he's aware that the act permits, I think, up to four special constituencies to have significantly less population, and they are normally assigned to the far northern constituencies, which are vast and thinly populated. It's just two constituencies.

Don't you think that that really takes care of the minister's concern? There are very vast northern parts of our province, and there are special transportation problems for MLAs, which, I guess, are addressed. I would ask if, in his mind, that constitutes a justified reason for systematically assigning greater vote power to rural constituencies over urban constituencies in the sense that you consistently have rural MLAs representing fewer constituents than urban.

A second question also relates to this point, and it has to do with the change between the first report of the commission, the preliminary report, and the final report with respect to the constituencies around Grande Prairie. It has to do with the original report, which adopted what I would call the Medicine Hat model, which is that the bulk of the city forms a single urban constituency, and the fraction is then joined with a large rural area surrounding the city, which gives at least one urban constituency in Medicine Hat. This was adopted for Grande Prairie, but the objection in the Conservative Party report resulted in reverting to a situation where you split Grande Prairie down the middle and then joined that with large rural areas. That seemed to me to be an example of the self-interests of the Conservative MLAs up there prevailing over the principle that some of us discussed with the commission when we appeared before the commission.

I just wondered if I could get your comments on that as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. I'll try to deal with the second issue first. Make no doubt about this; this is a political process that is used or should be used to the best advantage of the government of the day how it is. I don't know whether it should be used; I think it was used for that purpose. This is a political map you're redrawing. I believe the government used its powers to draw it in the best political way possible.

The goal of these election redrawing maps is not necessarily to create ridings that you can lock up and win for sure. What you're supposed to do is create competitive ridings. Let me give you an example of how that was done in Calgary. What happened in Calgary is that there's a new Calgary-Buffalo. The new Calgary-Buffalo was stuffed – 54 per cent of the people in my riding now voted Liberal in the last election, for better or worse. Bully for me. But what has happened – what has happened – is that this electoral committee through the process of stuffing all those votes into my electoral district has created very viable, winnable races for other parties, namely the government, in both the new Calgary-Currie and the new Calgary-Mountain View. They said: all right; let's create some competitive boundaries. That happened there. Okay? That's what is supposed to happen if the government is using this for a political purpose, and that's what happened.

If we look at what happened up in Grande Prairie, I believe that was also a political purpose. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I was really intrigued by the concept and the process that led us to having Bill 17 in front of us now, as I'm sure speakers previous to me were, which was the report from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Putting People First: Recommendations for an Alberta Health Act. A number of physicians worked on that committee, and I think there were some patient reps, et cetera, et cetera. After some initial criticism that the stakeholders were individually chosen, that process got opened up, and I think in the end a fair number of people did participate despite the challenges of trying to participate over the summer months when it's very difficult to get people together and to be able to inform them that something's happening because people's attention is in other places and they're often out of town for periods of time.

From that we get this new act. Essentially there are three pieces in this act: the preamble, the concept of a health charter, and the concept of a health advocate. Overriding all of this is the change from having several health acts because they would now all be repealed. We're repealing a number of them. Sorry; I'm just trying to find out which ones we're repealing here. It's not popping to mind, so I'm going to move on.

What's happening in this bill is that aside from stating a number of motherhood statements in the preamble, the idea of the charter and the health advocate, all other future decisions will be made by the minister or cabinet, known in legislative language as the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or could be made by ministerial order. So it doesn't come back in front of this House again. It makes it very, very hard for Albertans to find out what's going on, to find out that a change is being considered, and to find out how they would give input into that change.

I started to look at a couple of things. The first thing was that I was really intrigued by the idea of a charter because, as you know, I'm a real constitutional and administrative law amateur and I'm really interested in how, when you set something out in that kind of a system, things proceed from it. I was very interested in how our new Canadian Constitution came into being and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that came with it. So I was trying to figure out if you could have a charter that didn't confer any rights and wasn't able to be challenged in court.

I looked for a couple of different definitions, and all of them talk about rights. From the Oxford dictionary we get that a charter is "a written statement of the rights of a specified group of people." Again, the word "rights" is right in it: "the rights of a specified group of people." Something is being conferred upon them that is very finite, and you can compare against it. They have it. There are a number of other definitions if you care, but it's about, you know, you can hire something or you can grant a charter or make a chartered corporation, for example. So there are a couple of other definitions, but when you're actually talking about creating a charter, it confers rights. That's the Oxford.

But some people don't like the Oxford, so I went to the Merriam-Webster. Merriam-Webster, well, more or less the same thing: "charter . . . a grant or guarantee of rights, franchises, or privileges from the sovereign power of a state or country." Then it talks about the civic charter again, which I mentioned previously, and then the thing about hiring a ship or some part of it or a travel arrangement.

I may have checked one more because you know how thorough I am. No. You don't get anything else. You get those two. That's the English and the American versions of charter. Clearly, a charter and calling something a charter is supposed to have rights with it. What we have here, there are no rights. There's nothing in here that confers a right.

When we look at what is called a health charter here, it says it's establishing a health charter to guide. So, again, it's not enforceable. A guide is not something that you can say: you didn't do this right. A guide is a suggestion, but it's not an order. This is to guide these various groups that are listed. It talks about recognizing that health is a partnership between – and then it names a number of different groups – individuals, families, communities, et cetera. Also, this health charter, that isn't a charter, should acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other things upon interacting with the system, but it can't be used to limit access to health services.

I've gone through the other parts of this – there are five sections on it – and none of this talks about conferring any kind of a right nor does it confer any kind of a guarantee. It actually specifically does not allow a cause of action or other legal enforceable claim or a proceeding in any court to be brought as a result of this charter. So it's not a charter; it's a guideline that isn't enforceable. My goodness. That's not exactly a step forward in health care delivery. A guide that isn't enforceable: frankly, I just have a hard time taking that seriously, and it's clearly not meant to be taken seriously. It's not enforceable and doesn't grant anything.

Then we look at the health advocate. You know, I have met with a number of seniors' groups over the years that had great plans for a seniors' health advocate or a seniors' advocate. They had it all set out, and they involved volunteers that were going to offer services in the community. It was very low cost, volunteer driven, some great ideas. Every time we brought it up to the government, they got blown off. So I was very interested to see the idea that there would be an appointment of a health advocate in here.

Again, when I look at it, what's the job of the health advocate? Okay. To look at complaints and to perform any other duties that are set out in regulations. Well, again, everything is going under regulations. This is completely a shell bill. It allows that there could be employees that are able to assist this health advocate or, one presumes, be this health advocate. Then it talks about the kind of complaints they can take. But, well, what can they do with it? Can they adjust it? Can they enforce it? Can they make something happen? No. They can review it. Wow. They can review the complaint. Okey-dokey, then. Well, that wouldn't take it very far, would it?

If they find in their review that someone has failed to do what they were supposed to under a health charter that's a guideline and doesn't have any guarantee of enforcement or any legal standing – that would be interesting to watch – then they can do what? They can demand. They can enforce. They can move something. Well, no. Wait. They can make a recommendation. Okay. So when you've seriously had a problem with the health care system and you go to the advocate, the advocate reviews it.

Isn't there a song from a musical, something about reviewing the situation? It's Fagin, whose response to everything was to review the situation. I sometimes think that he might be the mascot of the current government administration, to have Fagin reviewing every possible situation. It is, however, a catchy tune, so maybe everyone can hum it.

Once they've reviewed the situation, if they do find that there is a problem here, then they can make a recommendation. They may make a recommendation, not that they must but may, and they may submit a report, may but not must, on the matter to the minister. What does the minister have to do? Nothing. They don't even have to respond to it. So that's not very effective either.

We have a charter that's not a charter, a health advocate that reviews, recommends, and makes a report but doesn't have the power to make anything happen. And then there's the matter of the preamble. Now, this I'm very interested in. Let me just see if I brought the – oh, I didn't. Okay. The next time I'm here, I'll bring back the specific language about preambles. Essentially preambles are set as a context, as a lens through which you view and understand what is set out in the rest of the act, but preambles are not enforceable.

Here we have this preamble in which there is a lot of good stuff, you know, a lot of careful statements and pithy observations and some real hand-on-your-heart stuff. Unfortunately, it matters not. Nothing in that preamble can actually be used to make anything happen or to make the government do anything because it's actually before the act. The preamble comes before the act. It's not part of the act, and you can't use a preamble to make the government do something.

So we have three components to this act. None of them are enforceable or give any kind of concrete direction on how to make the Health Act better. The worst part of it all, sort of the shading of all of this, is that everything now gets referred to the minister and is all decided by regulations, ministerial order, or by cabinet and does not come back before this House again, before the people essentially.

You know, this act actually raises more questions than it answers. What I've written on the first version of the bill I got is: which principle receives priority? Well, the answer is none of them. Which preamble is most and least important? You don't get anything out of that either because the preamble is not enforceable. How is any conflict resolved in between any of these things? None of those questions are answered in this.

The complaints process, you know, talks about if a complaint is frivolous or vexatious or is without merit. My notes say: well, what is the test? Is there an appeal process in place? How does this work? Nothing. There's nothing that indicates that there would be an appeal process or the test or the criteria that would be used to say that a complaint is frivolous or vexatious. When you look at other acts where that's defined, it's clearly defined. You want to look at the Privacy Commissioner. Boy. Vexatious and frivolous are defined so that everybody knows what they're talking about. It's got, like, "repetitious" and that kind of language in it.

Here we had things that I think a lot of people had hopes about, and it's not going to be resolved by what's put forward in this act. We're all getting mail on this, I know. I certainly am. I've been through the grandmother of Bill 11, which I think was Bill 39, and I think that was in 1999. Is that possible? Yeah. Then I was through Bill 11. I've been through the third way and Aon. I've been through all these different tries at different health prescriptions by this government, and always what people say is: don't privatize the system, and make it work. There's a lot of leeway in there for government to do stuff.

Some of the specifics that have been brought forward by people are: where do seniors fit into this plan? Where does access to ER fit into this plan? I know that they're asking really specific and current issues about a piece of legislation, which is in effect – well, clearly, this one is a guideline, but it's supposed to give you a roadmap of how it would all be implemented. There's nothing that you can grab onto here. This is a cloud.

You know, my motion, which my colleague kindly brought forward on my behalf, was to hoist the bill because it's not doing what it should be doing. More than that, I think it will make people believe that there is a commitment from the government that is in fact not there. I find that particularly devious. So we'll have an Alberta Health Act that doesn't do anything. It's completely a cloud. There's nothing enforceable about it, and it doesn't answer any of the questions that people had about how to make the health care system better.

Every day there is something else in the paper about what's going on in our health care system. You know, I was the critic for the Official Opposition for health care for four years, so by the end of that I had a pretty good handle on what was happening in the health care system. I'm three years past that now, so I wouldn't claim to have immediate knowledge of stuff. But I'm tired of the chaos. As a citizen I'm tired of opening up that paper and watching the minister point his finger at the administrator of Alberta Health Services, and then the next day you open the paper and the executor from Alberta Health Services is pointing their finger back at the minister. It just isn't helpful, and there's a lot of chaos that goes with it. That's one of the things that I am most disturbed by, that lack of stability and consistency in the system.

So I look at Bill 17 and I go: will those questions get answered for me? No, they won't get answered for me. Will this create stability and consistency in the system? No. Will this answer the questions we all have about who's the boss, Alberta Health Services or the minister? No. And frankly, you know, I more than most people in here, I suspect, understand how quickly this can all turn around again. All we need is another change in health minister, and then there will be another year of: just wait; I'm getting on top of this. You know, the current guy likes to go out and meet with people and tell us how many meetings he's held. The previous guy just said, "Do it" and turned the system on its ear. The one before that – I'm sorry, I'm trying to remember who the one before that was. I could have been through, like, half a dozen health ministers and 11 deputy ministers, I think, in about 12 years. So the person that actually runs the system has changed over and over and over again.

Some of the people that I talk to said: I don't know what form I'm supposed to fill out anymore and who it goes to. You know, we're all supposed to be tracking all of this stuff in the health system so we can get better, but people are spending so much time trying to figure out the new system that in some cases they're really pressed to actually get the work done. These people went into health service to help people, to deliver health services. The delivery of health services.

My colleagues in the Wildrose, the third party, fourth party . . .

Mr. Mason: Who's counting anymore?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, who's counting?

I remember listening to their part of this debate the other day, and they were very insistent that nothing in the Canada Health Act talks about a public delivery system, that it talks about a single payer and talks about publicly administered, but nothing says publicly delivered. I understand where the impetus comes from to look at having a mixed delivery system. If we're going to compare apples and oranges, let's compare apples and oranges, but having people stand up and tell me that the system – well, actually, we just watched it today. The health minister got up and said: don't tell me that the French system is better because the French system is in trouble because, and then he named something. That's, indeed, what I started to figure out, that every system is just different enough that it's very difficult to make comparisons across. What we can do is make some very general statements about: is the system delivered by a mixed system? [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Wow, I can't believe how fast that went by.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I know there will be other speakers that follow me as we consider Bill 17 in Committee of the Whole. I've made some notes based on the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. My understanding of the purpose of Committee of the Whole is to consider a bill on a clause-by-clause basis and that statements with respect to support or nonsupport for the principles of the bill are properly reserved for second reading. I guess because of that I will leave the comments that the hon. member made about the delivery system and concerns with respect to roles and responsibilities and other matters that are not related to the bill for the minister to answer during question period, as he does on a daily basis.

A couple of things were raised by the hon. member that I would like to take the opportunity to talk about. First of all, Mr. Chairman, the basis for this bill. The hon. member spoke about the consultation process but not in a lot of detail. I think it bears repeating that the consultation prior to the development of this legislation was, in fact, one of the broadest consultation dialogues in recent history in Alberta.

Over 29 workshops were held across Alberta in 23 separate communities over the spring and summer months. Over 1,300 Albertans participated in that process. It was a three-hour commitment on the part of people who came out to the consultations. We were assisted in hosting the consultations by the 12 health advisory councils that have been set up by Alberta Health Services, and they did a very good job of providing good venues and good links to the community so that we could get the word out about this opportunity and ensure that people came and had the opportunity to have their say. A public survey, Mr. Chair, which involved similar questions that were discussed during the workshops resulted in over 1,500 submissions. Finally, over 85 organizations across this province provided detailed, thoughtful, well-considered submissions on the questions that were raised.

Mr. Chair, as I'm sure the House is aware, the consultation dealt with proposals for an Alberta health act. It also provided an opportunity for citizens across the province to talk about their concerns about the health care system generally. I suppose that in fairness to the hon. member I should point out to the House that, in fact, the second volume of the report Putting People First is devoted to a thorough, unabridged summary of the concerns that we heard across the province during the consultation. These comments, the ones that were included, are not reserved for accolades, positive comments about the health care system – there were certainly many of those – but they also present in a fair bit of detail some of the specific concerns expressed both on a provincial basis and, more frequently, with respect to challenges in local communities.

The hon. member also in her comments suggested to this House that Bill 17 would in some way repeal existing legislation. That is simply not true, Mr. Chair. It's certainly unfair, I believe, for any member to suggest such a thing. A simple review of the bill will reveal to the reader that it is a guide, in fact, for making future decisions about changes to legislation, regulation, and policy, sound decisions that are based on principles that Albertans have had input into and have expressed support for: a health charter, not a patient charter but a health charter to guide the system, to clearly delineate expectations of Albertans about their health system, to talk about issues like roles and responsibilities, including the responsibilities of individuals and families and communities and, thirdly, to support decision-making on the basis of consultation or dialogue.

Quite contrary to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre suggested, the bill contains a very specific provision, Mr. Chair, that the minister of health would be required to provide public notice for any proposed changes to regulations under the act, that Albertans would have a minimum period of time within which to provide their comments to the minister, and thirdly and perhaps most importantly to all members of this House and, I would say, all residents of Alberta, a legal requirement that the minister must consider those comments in the course of making and announcing a decision on a proposed change in regulation.

Now, while I can certainly agree with the hon. member that the simple mechanics of this I think are somewhat unprecedented in previous legislation in the history of this province, although we see some elements of that in Bill 29, also before the Legislature, it is in fact the spirit in which those processes of dialogue are put in place that is what is most important. For that, Mr. Chair, I have no difficulty at all in standing up for the integrity and the thoroughness and the comprehensiveness of the consultation process that's been undertaken not only in the last few months but, in fact, in the last year, including the work of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health, which I had the privilege to co-chair.

So for an hon. member to suggest that this bill in some way would result in fewer opportunities for consultation and dialogue, I challenge any member of this House to find evidence to support that contention in this bill.

What I'm more concerned about, Mr. Chair – and I think there were a number of comments brought forward by the hon. member that would lead me to have these concerns – are her remarks about the proposed health charter.

Just by way of background, when we began this process we went out initially to talk to people about the concept of a patient charter. The reason that this is not a rights-based document that is proposed is quite simple. Albertans, the citizens of this province, are in fact not interested in more legislation, more litigation as a result of health care. They're not interested in the establishment of enforceable rights. What they are interested in, quite frankly, is improving the performance of the health system and providing a true framework for decision-making for the future, a framework that would reflect priorities that have been established by Albertans that go far beyond the acute care system and recognize the social determinants of health, which are talked about extensively in this bill, which recognize the role of our publicly funded health care system in improving the health status of our population. By that I refer to reducing the incidence of chronic diseases like cancer and diabetes and many other chronic diseases that are, in fact, front and centre in the day-to-day business of providing publicly funded health care in Alberta. They are interested in the role of citizens in making decisions in the future.

You know, although I would hesitate to suggest that any member of this House has an interest in seeing us continue through an air of conflict over health care, which in my humble opinion has represented much of the public discourse in Alberta over the last few years, the bill represents an intention and provides a mechanism for dialogue about health care, Mr. Chair, that would help guide us in the future. Albertans are, I think, much more informed about issues in our health care system than perhaps the hon. member gives citizens credit for. While, of course, they are interested in the day-to-day challenges in the system – and those have been properly raised in this House by all members and will continue to be debated and answered for by government – they are also very interested in the question of how we plan for the future.

We, of course, Mr. Chair, are in a position to do much more for people in health care than ever before as a result of technology, as a result of additional health professionals playing roles in the system, working as teams in many cases. Albertans want to ensure that we make the best quality decisions that we can make going forward, and they see a very significant role for themselves in doing that. This, of course, ranges from broad issues involved in legislation, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre referred to, right down to the establishment of community-based priorities and some input over the allocation of resources. This report and this bill make provision for that.

For those that are interested or perhaps have a vested interest in further conflict and in enabling more litigation over health care and in looking to establish rights and generate activity around those sorts of discussions, I can tell you from my first-hand experience that Albertans are not interested in that. In fact, they are quite tired of that sort of dialogue. I think it's good instruction to all members of this House that we should be looking to involve citizens in decision-making, to give them an opportunity to set priorities for the future and to actually have a say in things that are as important as the preamble to this legislation, Mr. Chair.

For those that are familiar with health legislation across the country, they will know that most of our health legislation dates back to the 1960s or earlier. If you look across the country – it pretty much doesn't matter what province – one thing that all of the legislation has in common is its focus on things like the transfer of money, the role of institutions, and the role of providers. Albertans have clearly stated, Mr. Chair, that they want a health system that is focused on the needs of citizens, of families, and of communities, and we can't do that if we go forward without a bill to guide some decision-making that takes us away from that focus on the needs of those institutions and the flow of that money as opposed to meeting the needs of our fellow citizens on a day-to-day basis.

Mr. Chair, those are some selected responses to some of the matters brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. With all due respect, you know, for members that are looking for specific changes in service areas of the delivery system, the consultation exercise in this bill has not been and has no role in making changes to those specific services. More importantly, it provides a framework which I think would be of use to all of us in this House to guide decision-making and to guide constructive, informative debate about health care issues in the future.

If members opposite have issues with specific principles that have been included in this bill or if they would like to take issue with the role of a health advocate in terms of supporting and assisting Albertans and helping them navigate the system, I'd love to hear some of those arguments, and I'd love to hear why those things would not be a good idea and not worthy of consideration and debate in this House. If members opposite want to dwell on specific day-to-day issues within the health care system and are not prepared to engage in discussion about more future-oriented items and, frankly, have no interest in reflecting upon the comments and, quite frankly, the wisdom that was put forward by Albertans throughout this exercise, then perhaps we don't have a lot to talk about.

I'll leave it there, Mr. Chair, at this time. We'll do our best to respond to some of the other points that may be presented during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we continue on, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members present in the Assembly four of my constituents who are also all municipal councillors. Just out of interest, each one of their divisions is probably larger than the division of Edmonton-Centre, so they have a larger area to travel as municipal councillors. We have Reeve Henry Van Hierden; Neil Wilson of division 6; Glen Alm, division 4; and Ian Sundquist of division 7 in the MD of Willow Creek. Thank you for showing up, fellows. Glad to have you here.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do want to make some comments with respect to this bill and certainly with respect to some of the circumstances which have given rise to it. I've spoken previously in the House about the difference between the report produced by the minister's advisory committee, under the chairmanship of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and the recommendations that it made and the report that was produced by the NDP caucus as a result of its much smaller public consultation process, What People Want, the distinction between what I consider to be quite abstract recommendations that don't really touch on the kind of concerns that we heard in the report from the minister's advisory committee and contrasting it with some very specific and concrete recommendations in the report that our caucus produced.

I'm not going to repeat that, but I am going to talk a little bit about what I see as a real dichotomy or a real difference between part 2 of the minister's advisory committee's report, a summary of Albertans' views, and the recommendations in the first part of the report, which gave rise directly to this legislation, on which the hon. member opposite has just spoken.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I look at this report and look at the account of what they actually heard from the public in their quite extensive consultation process, I find more similarities with the recommendations and the results of our report than I do with the recommendations in the first part of the minister's advisory committee report, and I just want to go through some of them. On page 18 of part 2 of the report it talks about the comments of the participants. It says:

People commented on the scope of services covered by the publicly-funded health system, including the observation that these services do not include the range of initiatives, providers and options they see as important to support their health and wellness.

That corresponds very clearly with what we heard, Mr. Chairman, and it is also related very directly to the practice of the delisting of services, which is an ongoing, chronic issue in the health system. Often things that are delisted are not reported or known for some time.

Under timely access to care the committee said that "a great number of participants said that wait times are still too long." That corresponds with what we heard.

Under accessing health professionals it says, "Participants in many communities noted that their communities had more local physicians than in the past" and that it's clear that there's "still a lack of health professionals in many rural communities." That also corresponds to what we heard.

Under seniors' health issues the report says in part:

Many participants, regardless of their own age, worried about the lack of designated assisted living and long-term care spaces in their communities, and the consequences this would have for themselves or aging family members.

People were worried about costs, people were worried about stress and burnout from caregiving, and they "raised concerns about the impact of for-profit organizations delivering continuing care." This also corresponds with what we heard, Mr. Chairman.

Well, there are a few others. Emergency room pressures: "Participants across the province expressed concerns about long wait times in hospital emergency departments, especially for those with less serious health issues."

There's a section here on the scope of services that are available locally and a lack of recognition of the complexities in rural communities, something we also heard.

There was concern about for-profit delivery of publicly funded health services. We heard that in a very strong way, Mr. Chairman. According to the advisory report, the summary of Albertans' views, from which I've been quoting, it says that people "expressed concern that more and more, the health system seems to be 'nickel and diming' patients and families."

Here's one, Mr. Chairman. This report says:

One of the most frequently raised issues was the Alberta government's decision to move to a single health authority. Participants from virtually every community said that the move has resulted in a less responsive, less transparent, less collaborative and less accountable local health system.

There are lots more, Mr. Chairman, but I think that we can conclude from this that when the committee actually went out and talked to people, they heard very concrete concerns about the health system: emergency wait times, being able to afford long-term care, making sure that their aging parents had a place to go where they'd be properly cared for, emergency ambulances, lack of access to physicians, all of the same things we heard.

So what did the committee, then, recommend? Well, they made some recommendations that led directly to the adoption of this legislation. According to the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford they want dialogue, and they want a "responsive and transparent public engagement framework." They want, under the health charter, to "acknowledge the impact of a person's health status and other circumstances on their capacity to interact with the health system." They want to "provide assistance to Albertans in accessing appropriate resolution mechanisms in the health system through the use of education, guidance and referral."

Mr. Chairman, there isn't anything here in these recommendations to create a health charter and a health advocate, to create this act, that really acts upon what the committee heard about the real problems that people are facing in the health system. I have not adopted the view of this act that it is an insidious Trojan Horse to give the minister the power he needs to destroy our public health care system, as some may have done. What I see this act as being is a diversion, once again, from tackling the real problems that ordinary people face in accessing our health care system. This is really spinning our wheels.

A famous story about the emperor Nero comes to mind, Mr. Chairman, where Nero fiddled while Rome burned. Well, the health care system is in trouble. I won't say that it's burning, but there are a lot of problems that need to be addressed. The emergency room crisis is just the most recent one. We see a health minister who's not tackling those issues and, in fact, is backpedalling from his earlier commitments to enforce some much stronger standards in terms of timeliness.

We've been talking for some time now about the government's misguided strategy with respect to long-term care and how that affects not only the ability of families to ensure that their aging parents are well taken care of, well cared for at a cost that a family can afford but how it actually affects the whole health care system and blocks acute-care beds, which in turn creates multiple problems. So wait times not just in emergency rooms but for other surgeries and particularly for cancer surgeries are an ongoing problem. We've heard this from people, that people don't think that six months or even a year is an acceptable waiting time to get surgery for cancer.

We have certainly heard from people that there's a serious problem with respect to family physicians. Just today I raised again the question of the East Edmonton health centre in my constituency, where two key new components have not been funded even though the cost is quite modest, and that is an urgent care centre, which could divert 34,000 cases a year from the Royal Alexandra emergency room – that would make a very substantial difference to people in that waiting room, one of the busiest in the province – and a medical care centre, where six doctors were to be hired because there's a severe shortage in that part of town of emergency room physicians. We have infant mortality rates that are three times what they are in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's constituency, for example, and are equivalent to Third World infant mortality rates. That has not been funded.

What has been done is that they've transferred the public health clinic and put it in that space, and it is operating and doing very good work, and some of the scope of their work has indeed been expanded. But those two key components: something that could be done concretely and is very affordable. In fact, the cost of operating that is about equivalent to the severance packages that the CEOs of the old regional health authorities received and is easily affordable and would make a big difference.

Mr. Chairman, why I'm against this bill is that I think it's largely irrelevant, and I don't think it's going to do anything. It allows the government to claim that it is doing something when in fact the system is in crisis and they're failing to take the appropriate steps in order to rectify it. We have been positive. We have been putting forward suggestions and ideas that would improve the situation: more long-term care beds; make your strategy with respect to long-term care or continuing care, as the government would have it, public instead of keeping it a secret from the people; make sure that you keep Alberta Hospital open so that you have enough mental health beds. You need to expand that as well.

I know the government will turn around and say: well, you just think that we're made of money, and you have to be realistic. But let's not forget that in this budget the government reversed the direction from the last budget and added a billion or a billion and a half dollars more to the health system, so they have recognized that you need to invest in health care in order to fix the problems. But that doesn't mean that you need to waste money. The government in funding more acute-care beds has failed to recognize that acute-care beds are blocked by a lack of long-term care beds and mental health beds, which are both very substantially less expensive than acute-care beds. It's more economical not to build more acute-care beds but to free up the ones you have with less expensive mental health and long-term care beds. Those are the kinds of things that the government should be doing.

Mr. Chairman, just to conclude my comments here, I believe the government is missing an opportunity. It doesn't get it that there are some real, concrete things that can be done and need to be done in order to improve our health care in the way that both the people that the minister's advisory committee heard from and we heard from want to see. They want to see a better health care system, with reduced waiting times and better access to family physicians, and those solutions are available. They're not necessarily cheap, but I think the government has already recognized that if we're going to fix our health care system, we do have to invest money. It will be an ongoing cost to government, and it will be a significant cost. The sooner we can just get on with the appropriate steps, I think, the better.

I don't think that the health charter or the advocate or the way the legislation is written is going to advance us in the direction that we need to go. So for that reason, I don't support this bill and would hope that the government would reconsider what steps actually need to be taken so that people who need access to health care can get it and can afford it and get it in time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A few comments to offer in response to the remarks by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. First of all, I did take the opportunity prior to the design of the consultation exercise that led to the Putting People First report to actually take a look at the report that was prepared by the ND caucus. Once we completed the consultation and I looked back on what Albertans had to say, I was very pleased to see the degree of alignment between the comments that were heard in the consultation conducted by the ND caucus and some of the feedback that we received from people across the province.

I think what that speaks to is the integrity of hon. members in this House in terms of being prepared to go out and ask difficult questions, not closed-ended questions, open-ended questions about how people are experiencing health care in their community. At the same time we went further than that, Mr. Chair, and we also talked about their visions for the future. We heard a lot of concern, for example, from young people about what the health care system was going to do to improve the health status of our population as a whole over time and was that not an objective that should be reflected in the Alberta Health Act. I mentioned in an earlier speech things like chronic disease.

People also talked about the productivity of our workforce and the future of our economy as being connected to health. They talked about things like end-of-life care really having no place under current legislation. They talked about access to and need for recognition of spiritual care services in the health care system, again something that's not reflected in any of our very outdated legislation today. While it's true – and I'd be the first to acknowledge it, Mr. Chair – that people took this opportunity, and we encouraged them to take this opportunity, to talk about their very specific local concerns, that was only one part of the conversation.

For the benefit of the record and perhaps for some hon. members I just want to go back and talk about the genesis of all of this work. This work did not begin three months ago. This work began approximately a little over a year ago now, I guess, with the establishment of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. If hon. members will recall, at the time when this government discussed its three key initiatives in health care, we described legislative review as one of three steps.

The first that we talked about – and we have now implemented it and are working to continuously improve it – was the reorganization of the delivery system into one health region, one health system for all Albertans, trying to leverage the best of what was available in different parts of the province for the benefit of all citizens while continuing to preserve opportunities for local input and local priority-setting through entities such as the 12 health advisory councils, which assisted with this consultation. So that was the first initiative.

Despite some of the issues that have been raised by this hon. member and others during question period, we are seeing major moves forward to address some of the issues that our constituents raised. For example, we are opening over 1,300 continuing care spaces this year, Mr. Chairman, a fact that should be well known to all members of this House following the debate of the last two weeks. Four point two million dollars in additional funding has been made available for home care for this year alone, and that is going to provide home care to people who are in the community, endeavouring their best to live independently, to a thousand Albertans across the province. That's this fall.

There are many other initiatives that we can point to. The challenge, of course, is to implement them in a timely way, in a way that benefits people who are most in need in their local community. We're taking the steps to do that. That is made possible by the restructuring of the delivery system and by truly establishing one health system for all Albertans in the form of one health region. That was initiative 1.

Two, Mr. Chair, is the question of funding. We've had some discussions in the House and, of course, through the course of the last budget, and I want to acknowledge again that Alberta is the first jurisdiction to move beyond a single budget cycle to try to implement some of these changes and improvements that members are calling for. We have moved to a five-year funding plan with Alberta Health Services. That's recognized in the report, and the role of that sustainable funding is acknowledged directly in this bill.

The third area, of course, and the area that this work and this bill specifically addresses, is the question of the role of legislation. We've talked in this House about and I spoke a bit earlier this afternoon about our legislation. For the benefit of those who don't know, we have over 30 statutes, Mr. Chair, and over a hundred regulations that govern health care in this province alone. Most of these acts date back to 1962 or earlier. As I mentioned earlier, they are not focused on the issues that the hon. member just raised or the ones that we are concerned about on this side of the House; that is, the issues that affect people, the families who are supporting people, and the communities that are supporting better health locally. They support in large part the needs of institutions, the needs of providers, and they present some legal barriers.

Let's talk for a moment, Mr. Chair, about how this bill will help us to make better decisions in the future about changes to existing legislation, which is in fact not working in the interests of our citizenry. One of the best examples – and I believe other members have brought this up before – is the whole question of the area of continuing care. For example, at this point in Alberta nursing home services can only be provided in a nursing home. The guidelines that are provided in this bill for decision-making in the future, with the priority being on meeting the assessed needs of individuals when we come to look at legislation like the Nursing Homes Act, would force us to ask the question whether we really want legislation that defines services that are going to be received by Albertans on the basis of the particular bed they happen to be occupying at a given point in time or by the name of the facility that appears over the door of the facility they happen to be living in.

Albertans said they want an overarching piece of legislation that would guide decision-making, so that thing wasn't allowed to occur in the future, that would allow us to unbundle services in such a way that we could support people living in their own homes, in lodges, in other forms of supportive housing and meet their needs for that little bit of extra care that they might require in order to remain independent with their loved ones and within their home communities. That is the kind of decision-making that this bill is intended to guide in the future.

Similarly, we look at the question of the availability of pharmaceuticals. As MLAs we've all heard the concerns of constituents that have had certain drugs and therapies available to them while they were in-patients in hospitals but because of the provisions in the Hospitals Act in many cases these same drugs and therapies are not available to people when they're discharged home. The principles, the charter, the mechanism for consultation with advanced notice and the opportunity for public input is exactly the kind of feedback, Mr. Chair, that's going to help us to not make similar decisions in the future and to make the right kinds of changes that we need to be making today.

There are many, many other examples of what I'll call legislative bias in some of our existing legislation that causes us to offer programs and services and be confined to service models that are not working in the best interests of our citizenry. That is the point of the Alberta Health Act, Mr. Chair.

The third area I just wanted to comment on – and I think a few members have raised it so far – is this whole notion of primary care. If you take a look at the report that's the basis for the legislation, Mr. Chair, you'll see a clear recommendation that the health charter for Albertans should include a provision that all Albertans would have access to team-based primary care. Now, while this is not specifically something that would be legislated in the bill, it is proposed as something that would be included in the charter, which the minister has said will be made available to Albertans for further input.

Let's talk about the opportunity presented by that for just a moment, Mr. Chair. We currently have over 38 primary care networks operating across the province; over 2 million Albertans live in communities that have primary care networks. These have been tremendously successful, and in the course of the consultation, that the hon. member referred to, they were cited in every single community as the most popular initiative in health care today.

The opportunity to treat Albertans not as passive patients in the health system but as respected partners and, in fact, members of a primary care organization that is operating in their community and the opportunity to do that through a health charter, Mr. Chair, I would suggest is a very noble cause for any piece of legislation to enable. I would suggest that it is directly what Albertans want, and I would suggest that it's something that all members of this House should take note of if they care to think about the potential for this bill to guide better decision-making, more future-oriented decision-making, and more decisions that reflect the priorities of Albertans in the future.

I'm going to leave it there, Mr. Chair. There may be some other comments to respond to as well, but in summary, with all respect to the hon. member opposite and with recognition of the issues that he recognized and cited in the delivery system, the intent of this bill is to guide better decision-making, better performance in health care decisions that affect legislation in the future. I don't think any member of this House would want to stand up and suggest that Albertans should not have a role in setting the priorities and developing the principles that guide those decisions around legislation in the future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Amen. Amen. Amen. You know why I say that, Mr. Chair? What we just heard there was a prayer. It really wasn't a comment about what is happening on the bill. It was a prayer for what he hopes will happen for future legislation, for a charter that may come into it one time to implement better things for a health care system in the future. That's why I said amen. Where I come from, that's what you say after a prayer has been delivered. So to that I say amen because I, too, hope that some day in the future our province or this government will get its head around actual things that are happening in our health care system.

That is the trouble here. I think that because the hon. member has been through a process here, and he may in fact have been set up for this process – okay? – to go out and talk to Albertans, round them up: “We’ve got to go for cover here. They’re circling the wagons. Things are not good. Hon. member, you’ve got to go out. You’ve got to do the due diligence, talk the talk, and come back and give us some cover here for awhile, okay?” Really, back to that prayer business, that’s all we heard here was a prayer that, God willing and the crick don’t rise, things are going to get better here in the future, and somehow this legislation may or may not, should we follow up on it, do something in the future.

What I see is a preamble, a preamble that says some nice stuff, really motherhood and apple pie stuff, where most Albertans can say, “This is great,” and even: “Oh, a health care charter. Wow. Isn’t that going to be good stuff?” But it’s got no teeth to it, no pull to it, no oomph behind it that can really do anything besides give a government that really seems to be at its wit’s end on this a little more time for cover. That’s what it appears the hon. member has been set up to do, and he’s doing the best he can to sell that here.

If we look, then, after the health charter, we go to a health advocate who, again, has really no ability to change things. We have no ability to change things, and that is the entire problem with this bill. What I hear from this is that the hon. member did a whole bunch of consultation with people who said to him: “This sucks. This sucks. That sucks. Now go back and try and do something about it.” Because there are no answers on what to do about it, well, let’s try and run with this for awhile and say that it’s a plan to make a plan to make a plan, okay?

Maybe I’m not giving the hon. member the benefit of the doubt, but I’ve had the honour and the privilege of sitting here for the last few days and heard how we’ve lurched from plan to plan to plan, how we’ve lurched from minister to minister to minister, how we’ve lurched from deputy minister – I think 14 deputy ministers in this department in the last 16 years, very few of them with any relevant experience in health. We wonder why our health care system is in disarray. I think this is just another example. We don’t know what to do, and we’ve got to be seen to be doing something, so let’s do this.

By all means. Hey, I hear and I hope that some of this preamble may get implemented into some vision of a health care system in the future. What I have problems with is the fact that we’re actually here discussing it as an actual fix to anything that’s going on. It’s not. We’re just deluding ourselves if we believe otherwise. I believe that’s why our caucus is, frankly, a little bit insulted by the fact that this has been coming forward. We’re actually hopeful that there is going to be a day when we’re going to have a better running health care system, maybe one that was modelled on what we had, you know, roughly 25 years ago. That would be good. But we continue to lurch. All this bill is here right now is some legislation designed so the hon. minister of health can run around and say, “Look, I’ve got the Health Care Act.” It’s much like Chamberlain running around with the paper, saying peace for our time. It didn’t mean anything, didn’t amount to nothing. The Germans were still coming. The people are still showing up at the emergency rooms with no clear fix.

Those are my comments, and I cede the floor to others who wish to comment. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I believe that this is a document that has been well written. I think that they did listen. However, I have not heard a single thing that I have not heard over the last six years. In fact, many of the things that they have talked about and put in this document, we talked about on the long-term care task force six years ago. There isn’t anything new here. All they’ve managed to do is to actually listen to the people who have been saying this for a long time.

We all know that once you get into the system, the system works fairly well. What we also know now – and this is something that we heard years ago – is that when you’re in the system, it isn’t all that good. There are many, many places where the system is falling down. Certainly, we know that that is reflected in the number of acute beds, but more importantly it’s the number of people that are trained. There is a big difference between trained and experienced staff for acute care than for long-term care, assisted daily living, assisted living, and working with mental health patients. Every area in its own sort of way is a specialized area and needs trained and experienced staff, which doesn’t come with these beds.

As I’ve mentioned, this is a vision document. I didn’t see any action. I really didn’t see any time frame, and I’m a time frame kind of gal. I want a start and I want a finish, and if it means that somebody has to work their tail off in between the start and the finish, so be it. Let’s get a project. Let’s get it going. I want a time frame. It gets to be too loosey-goosey if there are no time frames. Albertans want a health care system that they can trust now.

They also want to be able to trust those that make decisions that affect health care delivery. I think from what I heard quite clearly, they do not trust the Alberta Health Services Board to deliver care. They may not object to having them do administrative things – maybe run HR; maybe run the paycheques; perhaps even create the standards – but they don’t want them enforcing the standards. They want the enforcement of the standards to come through the ministry of health. They don’t want Alberta Health Services making the decisions on how health is being delivered or by whom. They want to be able to know that front-line workers and the doctors and nurses and psychiatrists and staff are actually involved. They are the ones that really know what needs to be done.

There’s really no specific health charter that’s outlined in the legislation, so the main question surrounding the issue is what type of public debate the health charter will receive if it’s not specifically outlined in the Alberta Health Act. I think that we can talk and dialogue until the cows come home, but that does not come up with an action plan. People that go to meetings even now do not want to walk out of a room unless there’s an action plan and it’s actually been assigned to people to make that action happen. Otherwise, they know their time has been totally wasted. People don’t have time to have their time wasted anymore.

There's no mention of timelines, as I've mentioned before, for the creation of the charter, no indication of how public consultation will proceed before the charter is put into force. Well, we've had a whole ton of public consultation. It's in that document. A draft health charter is in the document Putting People First, but it is not contained in the actual legislation, and it can't be debated.

The office of the health advocate would be created to ensure that the health charter is enforced. It's difficult to support the creation of an office to enforce a charter which is undefined and really has no legal force behind it.

If I recall, the long-term care task force was also asking for an advocate, an officer that would look after long-term care complaints, of which there were quite a number at the time. There has to be somebody that is totally independent. They're not there to defend the government, and they're not necessarily there to defend the claimant. What they're there for is, for lack of a better word, to negotiate and try to come up with a solution to a problem. When everybody plays nicely in the sandbox, everybody wins, but if you go in as adversaries, it never will work. This side of the House has consistently argued that the advocate should be independent, as I've mentioned, so that they can effectively lobby the government on behalf of the complainant, but in fact what they should be doing is to be sort of the negotiator, the facilitator.

A whole section of roles and responsibilities for organizations that are already covered under pre-existing legislation is redundant at this point in time.

The last issue with this bill is the exceptions that the minister can make to having public input on proposed regulations. If the government wanted transparency in the way the health care system is governed, then they would not have the possible loophole on the public input. When I speak of public input, I'm thinking again of the front-line workers that actually know what's going on. The government may state that if the regulation is created without public input, then the minister must post notice of this decision. But it's sort of like closing the barn door after the horse is out. It will be too late.

This should really be a living document in that input should be allowed from Albertans, especially, as I've said, for those who are actually keeping this health care system running, often at the expense of their own health. We are burning out our health care workers. We are burning out our health care family caregivers. These are the people that are actually saving the government's butt by being able to make sure that people get care, because they care.

As I've mentioned, we need action now, not yet again another vision of perhaps better things to come. I'm not saying that this document should be put aside. I'm saying this document should be dialogued, but in the meantime we have to do something exceptionally concrete.

One of the things that was mentioned was end-of-life and religious care that would be given. Again I go back to the long-term care task force. That was exactly what came up, and that was six years ago that that document came out.

Looking at that same document, staffing, staffing, and staffing was by far the first and foremost concern of people who were speaking about people, and in those days, of course, it was long-term care. We didn't have as many designated assisted living, et cetera, but even in designated assisted living families are expected to do a great deal of the work, especially if the people that are in the homes of their family require that little extra care.

The advisory councils were also mentioned. I may be wrong, but my understanding is that they have no budgets. If this government really thought that they were worth creating in the 12 areas, then surely to God they would give them a budget so that at least they could do some kind of research on their own. They have no power. I'm not sure that the people even know what they are, and if they do, they have absolutely no – the word isn't "trust." They actually think that they can do anything because they know that the word "advisory" means that you can basically ignore any advice that you've had.

One of the other things mentioned is that a lot of the regulations in the statutes go back to 1962. Certainly, I know that: again, the long-term care task force. But one of the things that has to be looked at and should have been looked at a long time ago – and I think we could have eliminated some of these problems when we started blaming seniors and calling them bed blockers – is that had we looked at the Nursing Homes Act at the time and upped the mandate for what the nurses could actually do in those nursing homes, more people would have been released to the nursing homes.

The other thing that's happening with the deregulation of long-term care, as we knew it then, the Nursing Homes Act, is that the building codes are different for long-term care residences than they are for any other designation. In long-term care there have to be firewalls, and there have to be different door systems. It is more expensive to build for long-term care; there's no question about it. Clearly, for anybody that wants to make a buck, the buck is on the housing side, not on the care side. So you're going to try and build the cheapest building, put up a couple of nice palm trees in the atrium, and put a little garden outside. I think that's great. But when I go in there with the knowledge that I have, I want to know how much staff is there. I don't give a damn about the potted plants. What I want to know is: who is sitting on the toilet for an hour? Who is not being fed? If they are, is that food cold? Those are the kinds of concrete things that I want to see.

I'm aware of some of the very successful primary care communities that have been created. Not all of them are the same. Some, I think, are more successful than others, and from my limited knowledge I'm thinking that the more successful primary care operations are really based on the doctors that run them, their attitude toward teamwork, and certainly that as long as everyone has a doctor or at least access to a doctor and are not being put off to perhaps someone with lesser assessment skills.

Speaking of assessment skills, that is why RNs are very, very important anywhere where there are seniors. They have the ability to make the assessments that can help keep these seniors out of hospitals. But when somebody falls and the best you can do is call 911, that isn't effective. I know that the member who has written this document is more than aware of all that I'm saying. I know that he is very aware and cognizant of many of these now front-line things, and I guess I would have liked to have seen something a little bit more concrete because this is a vision document.

One of the other things that I have a little bit of a problem with about the primary care is that we were talking about people being partners in looking after themselves, et cetera, et cetera. I think that works well for people who are educated. It doesn't work well for people who are not. We've got people who think they're helping when they say: "Here are the pamphlets. Go home and read them. This is what you've got to do." They sometimes don't have that follow-up that's often required for people who can't look after themselves. When you're sick, you're vulnerable. I don't care how educated you are. If you're sick, you want someone to help. That's what the care system is. It's not: get out of your bed and walk. It's: wait a minute; let's see how we can get you there so that you can walk and go out the door, and you're not going to come back because you've been released too quickly.

I think I'll close there. I know that I will probably have another chance. I just do want to say that I realize the work that's gone into this document. I know that the member has gone across the province and has listened. There are a few things that I think people were quite negative about, and I'm not sure that they really hit this document.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would like to adjourn debate.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to move third reading of Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010.

It's a privilege to rise today and once again speak in favour of Bill 16. I appreciate the thoughtful debate we've had on this important piece of legislation, and I want to thank all MLAs from all parties for their input and everyone for participating in this process. I think we all have strong feelings about this issue, but ultimately we all share a common goal: we want to make our roads safer.

I believe this bill has many merits and will benefit Albertans by improving traffic safety in our province. I also know that based on the public reaction so far, Albertans are eager to see Bill 16 become law. We all know that talking or texting on a hand-held cellphone while trying to drive is dangerous, but other activities like reading, writing, shaving, or putting on makeup while driving are just as dangerous. We should all be proud that Bill 16 takes a bold approach and goes beyond banning the use of hand-held cellphones while driving and addresses the broader issue of driver distraction. The challenge we faced was to create a law that is comprehensive, practical, effective, and enforceable. I think Bill 16 strikes the right balance. We got it right. This will give law enforcement another tool to better address distracted driving in Alberta, help reduce collisions, and, ideally, save lives.

Drivers will be restricted from engaging in distracting activities, including but not limited to using hand-held cellphones or other wireless electronic devices, programming GPS units while driving, reading, writing, or grooming. A driver who chooses to put everyone else at risk by driving distracted would face a fine of $172, which is in line with other moving violations. With the passing of this bill, we are sending a strong safety message to all Albertans: when you are in your vehicle, your focus must be on driving.

I know there were some concerns and questions brought up in debate, like we haven't gone far enough; why not ban hands-free phones as well? Our goal has been clear. We want legislation that is effective and enforceable. No jurisdiction in Canada bans all drivers from using hands-free phones. We have consulted directly with law enforcement, and they have told us that enforcement would be very complex and challenging. We have used research, stakeholder consultation, and best practices to develop a very comprehensive piece of legislation that we feel strikes the right balance to address distracted driving. Alberta has gone further than any other jurisdiction in Canada in addressing this issue. I'm very proud to have been part of this process.

Bill 16 is fundamental to good driving practice, and it will be a key addition to our overall strategy to reduce collisions in Alberta. This is all about changing driver attitudes and behaviours. This legislation, combined with co-ordinated enforcement and education, can help make our roads safer.

Mr. Speaker, it's now my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 16, Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to speak briefly on Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, and again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for his leadership on this bill. His views as a police officer have helped guide us going forward on police concerns and on how this bill will work well both for people who are wishing for greater safety on the road but allow for our police community to adequately enforce and to educate our public.

Really, it's a fairly sensible bill. We on this side of the House had been calling for something similar to this for quite some time. I believe the earliest we brought it to the House was 2002. It was brought back in 2005, but like all things, sometimes it takes a while for the idea to take hold. Now it seems that it has, and I'm glad to see it. The research indicates that this will allow for drivers out there or people using our streets to be more safe. We always have to strike that balance in this House. We want people to have personal freedoms, but at the same time we have to do what's right to protect people from individuals who may not be using care, concern, or caution. It's fine if they maybe do not have any respect for themselves, but if they don't have respect for the others on the road, well, that's where laws are supposed to be made.

Again, it was a pleasure to speak on behalf of this. I like the hard work that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays did, and I hope this will lead to safer Alberta highways and byways and everywhere in between there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and speak in support of Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010. Firstly, I would like to compliment my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this forward a couple of years ago. We've gone through a very extensive process of referring it to committee, and it's now come back as a government bill with proper research and respect for the results of the committee deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has taken a leadership role to address this important traffic safety issue by the issuing of this bill. Other jurisdictions have simply banned hand-held cellphones or electronic devices, but there are many other activities that drivers engage in that take their hands off the wheel and their attention off the road. This legislation addresses those additional distractions. Traffic collisions impose enormous costs on our society, and anything we can do to improve safety provides tremendous benefits to Albertans.

Sometimes people forget that when you're in your vehicle, your primary focus should be on driving. We seem to treat our vehicles like a second living room or a couch on wheels, so to speak, or even a mobile office sometimes. That has to change. It's all about traffic safety. Make no mistake; you cannot drive safely when you're distracted.

While I believe we are definitely moving in the right direction with this legislation, I have one point I would like to address, and that has to do with the exemption of hands-free phones. I mentioned this in debate the other day, and I would like to return to it. First, let me say that there is no other jurisdiction in Canada and probably in the world that has included hands-free phones in their legislation. I know there is research that says that hands-free are no safer than hand-held, and I do not dispute that research. It's the cognitive act of speaking that is distracting, and this is quite different from simply speaking to a passenger.

I also realize that our Transportation staff has looked at a lot of research in this area as well. They have looked at what is going on in other jurisdictions, best practices, and talked with traffic safety experts and the enforcement community. The bottom line is that from a safety perspective all drivers should put driving first and take care of other business when their vehicle is safely parked. In fact, in our traffic safety literature we encourage people to hang up completely, and our public education and awareness campaigns will continue to stress this. However, in discussions with law enforcement we were advised that enforcing hands-free would be very difficult. Again, the goal of this legislation is that it should be practical, effective, and enforceable.

I know that my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has talked about this, that the only way to prove that someone was using a hands-free cellphone would be to get the cellphone record. This would mean a police officer would have to get a search warrant for a driver's cellphone records, and this would be very time consuming, quite onerous, and ultimately counterproductive in tying up the courts.

I understand that the review process for any new legislation includes a review of its effectiveness, so Bill 16 will be reviewed in the future, and adjustments could be made as needed. Within four or five years the province will be able to look at the statistics and revisit the issue to include hands-free if necessary. I know that our legislation does go further than any other jurisdiction in Canada. That's something we can all be very proud of.

Education and awareness that complement effective legislation and enforcement are key to changing attitudes and behaviours, so we will continue to reinforce the idea that drivers should hang up altogether and focus on the task of driving. There has been a lot of good debate on this issue, and it appears that most Albertans are eager to see this bill become law. I know I had a lot of comments expressed by my constituents, and they're all supportive of this bill. We know now, Mr. Speaker, that the time is right for this. We must take action on distracted driving. This is all about making our roads safer and saving lives. We are sending a strong safety message to all Albertans: keep your hands on the wheel and your eyes on the road.

I strongly support Bill 16 and encourage all members to do so. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to close debate.

Mr. Johnston: Yes, I wish to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and the considerable progress that we made throughout the afternoon, I would like to move that we now adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:49 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 29 Alberta Parks Act

[Adjourned debate November 17: Mrs. Ady]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to address what I see as shortcomings to this particular piece of legislation. My primary concern is that this bill will take the legislation, the public domain, the public input, and place it in the hands of the minister and in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor in Council; in other words, the cabinet.

My concern is that Albertans deserve to have an opportunity to have input into legislation that affects a large part of their enjoyment, whether it's simply birdwatching in a natural reserve setting, whether it's different types of recreational activity, whether it's the appreciation that there's protection for our wild species. The proposal with Bill 29 is to seek a degree of input from Albertans, but the decision-making is taken out of Albertans' hands. It's taken out of their legislative representatives' hands, and it's placed solely at the discretion of the minister or the cabinet.

I have not deliberately – it seems at times that I'm deliberately provoking the members of this Assembly, but I realize that I've tried the patience of the Speaker over the last three days by reading excerpts from people opposed to Bill 29. Rather than reading excerpts from a number of the submissions that I've received – and it's very important to note that these are not sign your name at the bottom and hit send; these are individual concerns that Albertans from across this province have expressed – I have attempted to at least get their names on the record as being passionate Albertans and passionate about parks.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk a little bit about my personal passion and why I have potentially been seen to try the patience of members of this House. For the last three months myself, my wife, Heather; my sister Barbara; her husband, Ian; and my nieces and nephews have been helping my dad, who is 87 years old, transition from his house, where he's lived for almost 40 years with a wonderful view of the mountains, straight across 37th Street, looking across the Tsuu T'ina reserve, to a condominium.

This past week I spent the morning with my dad at the remembrance assembly at the Museum of the Regiments, and that afternoon I went over and helped him to do what I hoped would be the final clearing out of the garage. Mr. Speaker, when I was in the rafters of the garage, I came across a big piece of canvas tarp, and that takes me back to 1956, where, stationed at Namao air base, my dad was a flight lieutenant. He flew the C-119 Flying Boxcars up north, and when he wasn't flying, he was busy building a camper, a tent trailer. He had acquired from my grandfather a Jeep trailer, and he spent numerous hours over at the wood shop on the base at Namao creating what some would see as a very heavy monstrosity of three-quarter-inch plywood, numerous bolts, numerous butterflies. And it took us as a family, with my brother and myself and my mother and my dad putting this tent trailer together back in 1956, probably the better part of three-quarters of an hour to get this thing assembled, and then we'd stretch the canvas over it. That's when, I would suggest, my enjoyment of Alberta's wilderness and parks began.

Over the years I've enjoyed that direct experience with the parks. I've realized that there are certain things you can't do in certain parks, and to a large extent I've accepted those limitations. For example, I stopped camping at Little Bow provincial park, very close to Vulcan, because of the Sea-Doos and the powerboats and the skiers. Now, those Sea-Doos and skiers had every right to be on that waterway, but I could not myself enjoy the experience in either my kayaks or my rowboats because of the busy nature. We did at times get into the back irrigation areas, and there was enjoyment.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, when we first upgraded to a fifth wheel, we went to McLean Creek, and one of the reasons we went to McLean Creek was its close proximity to Calgary. We wanted to try out our new-to-us fifth wheel, and I quickly realized that I was in the wrong campground for the type of recreation that I had in mind because McLean Creek was an ATV, motorcycle-type campground. Understood. I believe that ATVs have a place, that motorcycles have a place, but it wasn't my place because of the noise associated and no sense of sort of refuge.

Mr. Speaker, throughout my life, as I say, I have been connected to camping. My dad had postings throughout Canada, so I have camped in every province. Most recently I had the wonderful experience with my dad of going up to the Northwest Territories to the Nahanni River and going back to living in a tent with my dad for a week as we rafted down the Nahanni River together in a guided undertaking. I appreciate those wilderness experiences, and, as I say, I realize there are certain things that you cannot do.

My concern about what you can and can't do in parks brings me to the point where I would like to put forward an amendment to Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. I see a page coming over to receive the amendments. Once they have been distributed, I'll speak to the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this amendment shall be known as amendment A1. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if this is the appropriate time, but I do want to qualify that I am not looking for a 10-minute recess preceding a standing vote, so if the bells, for example, could be rung just for a one-minute period, that would be quite acceptable. Am I presenting this at the appropriate time?

The Deputy Speaker: I would suggest that we continue, and then we will have a motion on that.

Mr. Chase: Is the one-minute-bell notice sufficient? Okay. Thanks.

Speaking to A1, to put it on the record, I as the MLA for Calgary-Varsity, the Liberal critic for Tourism, Parks and Recreation, move that the motion for second reading of Bill 29, Alberta Parks Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following, that Bill 29, Alberta Parks Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will endanger the preservation of Alberta's parks and protected areas for present and future generations and that further input is necessary from the public and from conservation groups.

Mr. Speaker, I now take off my camping backpack and am putting on my teacher's hat, and I believe in doing my homework. I required for 34 years that my students do their due diligence and do their homework. What we have had in terms of input into the creation of Bill 29 has primarily been online workbooks. There has not been the due diligence, the research, the involvement of a variety of groups. We have two members of the Sierra Club in tonight witnessing the debate. The Alberta Wilderness Association wasn't involved in the creation or the reviewing of this particular bill nor the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society and numerous friends of various environmental and protected areas and organizations.

What this bill does, which is most offensive to anyone who values public input, is that it moves the decision-making out of a debatable circumstance, out of legislation, and puts it into regulations, regulations, Mr. Speaker, that have yet to be formed. One of the comments that the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation pointed out was that once this bill was passed, she would then go to the various groups and ask for their advice on forming the regulations. Well, in my way of thinking, that's putting the cart before the horse.

This consultation, that will affect 4 per cent of Alberta's land area, that is made up of between 450 and 500 parks and protected areas, is extremely important to Albertans' well-being. As I say, whether it's a refuge that people seek on the weekend to do a quiet activity or whether it's a particular park that allows motorized access, we cannot lump everything into two groups, which this bill proposes to do, rangeland and parks and protected areas. What happens is that the only wilderness area that has been singled out for special status is the Willmore region. The White Goat, the Siffleur, the Ghost River areas are of equal value in terms of ecological reserves, in terms of wilderness parks, but they're going to be tossed into the blender, given equal value to recreation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill was proposed in order to simplify the rules, to let Albertans know what they could do and what they couldn't do in particular areas. That can still be accomplished in legislation. It doesn't have to be put into regulation for that clarity to be provided. When a tourist guide is printed off, it indicates in boxes what facilities are available: showers, electricity, water, et cetera.

Now, that same type of information in terms of zoning, what's allowed in this particular park, whether motorized access is allowed, whether it's a hike-in circumstance and no motor vehicle access, whether mountain biking is permitted, and so on, these various regulations and explanations to Albertans can be enshrined within legislation. By enshrining them in legislation, they're still open for discussion, but once Bill 29 gets passed, if that becomes the will of the Assembly, gone are the opportunities for the public to have any control. Yes, they can still input – yes, they can fill out the online surveys – but they can't control the decision-making, and, Mr. Speaker, that's at the heart of this amendment that I've put forward.

I believe Albertans want the opportunity to have their voices heard and want the opportunities to have any changes in regulation, not simply be given a 60-day notice but given an opportunity to change. We have to go, in terms of valuing Albertans' opinions, beyond consultation. Collaboration is absolutely essential in the protection of our parks and wilderness areas.

I used the analogy of not being able to roller skate in a buffalo herd. Mr. Speaker, I have experienced directly in 2002, 2003, and 2004 the mistakes associated with multi-use. I have seen where ministries have failed to preserve parks. I have brought up the example of Cataract Creek, where fences were not maintained and therefore free-range cattle made their way into the park. I've talked about cattle guards not being maintained, again, to keep the cattle out of the parks.

I talked about how in 2003, when the Lost Creek fire was raging and there was a fire ban on, clear-cut logging was being permitted by Spray Lakes in the area adjoining the campground. Mr. Speaker, there was only one way out of that campground, and if there had been a fire or a spark caused, the danger that campers would have been placed in by allowing that activity to go on in that park area in the midst of a fire ban, where we couldn't even have a mosquito coil in the campground, would have been disastrous.

Mr. Speaker, over the years I have seen what happens when you diminish the number of conservation officers, when you cut down the conservation offices that provide the tourism information. I am so concerned that these areas are being left to ministerial discretion, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Normally I would say that this is rather patronizing and patriarchal, but given the minister's gender I would say that it's matronizing and matriarchal. This minister is suggesting that she knows best, and I'm suggesting that Albertans are the ones whom this legislation is supposed to support. Putting recreation into the same designation as protected areas is doing a disservice to Albertans.

I have great concerns based on the industrial intrusion I saw in Cataract Creek in terms of from not only cutting a swath around the campground, taking every lodgepole pine out, practically, to actually going into the campground and taking out campsites to build a road. First Spray Lakes cut the outskirts, and then Bell Pole took what few trees stood.

If that kind of lack of control is allowed to go into other park areas, then forget any type of recreational activity other than quads going up and down fire lines or survey lines because no one in their right mind would want to hike in a devastated area. How can we protect our woodland caribou? How can we protect our grizzlies? How can we protect any of our species unless we have strong legislation that supports them? How can we guarantee that we have a legacy for future generations, like my two grandsons, to be able to go out into a wilderness circumstance and be able to hike and enjoy the experience, to know that there are conservation officers who can provide the information and the enforcement and safety for their well-being?

Mr. Speaker, I have put forward this reasoned amendment because I believe that Albertans need to be more than consulted; they need to be involved in the process. With legislation that involvement continues because we as their elected representatives can speak on their behalf. If this legislation falls strictly to regulations yet to be determined, then Albertans have lost.

For the sake of not provoking individuals and straining their patience, I will not read the numerous individuals' names into Hansard who have objected. Mr. Speaker, I have never in my office been inundated with so many requests to remove Bill 29 and go back to the drawing board, where the proper consultation through the legislative process can take place.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you and I appeal to all members of this Assembly who value the wilderness experience to support amendment A1.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, may I interrupt you? I have a note here. Some hon. members wish to revert to Introduction of Guests. Do we have unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members gathered in the House here tonight two members of the Sierra Club who are here to watch this debate at second reading on Bill 29. In the gallery are Mr. Sam Gunsch, parks spokesman for the Sierra Club – Sam, if you would stand, please – and also, Bryn MacDonald, the healthy communities campaigner for the prairie chapter of the Sierra Club. If you would stand as well. If we could all give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I also see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has guests.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, I'd like to introduce several people who are here. Some of them are here to listen to the debate on the Alberta Parks Act, and some are also here with a keen interest in hearing debate on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. These members are seated behind me, and they are associated with Friends of Medicare in one way or another: Margaret Brown, Allen Vesicre,* Bob Settle, Diane Lance,* Karen Crank,* Lindsay Henderson,* Catherine Newman,* Trevor Zimmerman, Mary Gordon,* Maurice Beaugeron,* and Josephine Singh,* who was chatting with me outside about her concerns with respect to the Parks Act, and the chair of Friends of Medicare, David Eggen. I'd appreciate it if they could all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 29

Alberta Parks Act

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to quickly thank the hon. Member from Calgary-Varsity for his amendment. Certainly, not only in listening to his remarks but having a look at the bill, I think it would be in the interests of all Albertans to see this legislation sent back or, as they would say, returned to sender. This legislation is not in the best interests of the province and the people who live in it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was talking about, you know, this government's habit – I won't call it a chronic habit but a habit – of doing less and less in this Legislative Assembly and more and more through regulation and ministerial order. Here we are on a snowy winter evening debating not only this legislation but perhaps as many as seven other prospective statutes in the time permitted, Mr. Speaker. We were all told, as were the taxpayers of this province, that with the new Premier, after the retirement of Mr. Klein, there would no longer be night sittings, but here we are with this government trying to ram another piece of unpopular legislation through this Assembly at a time when citizens are thinking about other things, including the upcoming Christmas season. It is a tendency, unfortunately, of this government to do less and less in this Assembly, where there is public scrutiny, and more and more through backroom regulations and also through ministerial orders.

Now, some people may think, hon. member, that all regulations are available for those who are interested on any statute, but that is not necessarily true. The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation would certainly be aware of that.

The same is true for ministerial orders. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in his remarks on this bill today has focused on the unlimited ability of this government to deal with future matters by regulation. Also, there is under ministerial responsibilities, part 3, the ability to write ministerial orders. I must say that I had no idea how many ministerial orders are written by this government that are not published. They remain unpublished and hidden from public view, of course.

Here we have in this section an indication that we're going to give the minister substantial authority to issue ministerial orders. Some of these may seem innocent enough; for instance, an order to temporarily prohibit or restrict the possession or consumption of liquor in a provincial park. Well, that could happen any May long weekend. There are also the ministerial orders allowing for the establishment or the provision of a mechanism for establishing fees relating to Alberta's parks system.

Now, one would assume that all this would be public. This is where the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and the individuals who are e-mailing and phoning have every right to be concerned. In another section of this proposed statute, "the Minister shall provide notice of the closure and the subsequent reopening of [any said] land by any method the minister considers to be most appropriate." So we are giving a lot of discretionary powers.

I know how hard it was for this hon. member to get to the bottom of the pay scale that was quietly set through a ministerial order for cabinet policy committees, Mr. Speaker. Now, the salary was an additional $35,000 a year at one time for four lucky members of the Conservative government caucus. I noticed that in the indemnity files, and I thought: I wonder where the authority for this rests. I made some inquiries, I was persistent in my enquiries, and finally I did receive almost a year later a ministerial order. It was numbered, and it was dated, and it had provided authority – at least, I think it provided the proper authority – for those cabinet policy committees to receive this substantial increase in their pay. So, Mr. Speaker, that would be one example of the use of ministerial orders by this government.

Now, I could go through regulations, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity certainly has done a pretty good job of that. We do know that this is yet another example of why this government wants to rule quietly, secretly, with the ability to rule through regulation and ministerial order and not in an open and transparent way in this Legislative Assembly.

Now, there are reasons why hon. members should support this amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. With Bill 29 if we don't accept the amendment as proposed, we're going to give the cabinet more wide-sweeping powers to create parks zones and for the minister to zone parks for different uses. I'm sorry. I don't think that is needed, nor do I think it is necessary.

Establishes a delegated authority for the management of trail systems: who says that we need that? We've got a lot of delegated authorities now that don't seem to be functioning well. Ask a consumer who's just purchased a new $400,000 home that isn't up to proper building code standards if they're satisfied with their delegated authority. I know what they're going to tell you, that they are not, and they're not satisfied with this government's lame excuse to try to brush everything over and pretend there are no problems. That would be an example of delegated authority.

*These spellings could not be verified at the time of publication.

Now, we're going to create a parks conservation foundation and a parks advisory council. If this was ever to happen, I couldn't think of a more suitable candidate to be on that than the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. I've heard over the years about – is it Chickadee Creek? Is that one of your favourite places?

Mr. Chase: Cataract Creek.

Mr. MacDonald: Cataract Creek. I was just testing him, Mr. Speaker. I knew it was Cataract Creek all along. Chickadee Creek, for those who are interested, is out in the constituency of the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and it, too, is a beautiful place, and I hope it has an opportunity to remain so.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are concerned about the environment. You only have to on a holiday weekend go to the edge of any of our major cities, and you will see a steady stream of traffic loaded down with gear for the outdoors. We may live in cities, but we appreciate the beauty of the rural areas of the province and the beauty of our mountains. It is part of our heritage; there's no doubt about that.

I would please ask hon. members to give due consideration to this amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity because the Alberta Parks Act is not what the citizens of this province want. I think the hon. minister who proposed this legislation knows that. I don't know why the government is insistent that this is the direction that we should go with, but certainly I would urge all hon. members to please consider the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 29(2)(a), allowing for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing none, on the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise to speak in support of the amendment brought by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. The Member for Calgary-Varsity spoke at length on Bill 29, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar shed light on the bill, too.

Bill 29 endangers the preservation of Alberta's parks and protected areas for future generations. The proposed legislation is a radical attempt to overhaul the parks system to favour recreational interests, tourism, and development over conservation and preservation. Bill 29 is wrong on a number of fronts, including restructuring of parks systems, the delegation of authority over trails, and the new powers given to the government through regulation.

Firstly, Bill 29's philosophy for Alberta's parks system is gravely concerning. The legislation would enshrine in law that conservation and preservation of Alberta's landscape is less important than exploiting that land for tourism and recreational purposes. This is a fundamentally flawed philosophy that is out of step with the view of Albertans and with evolving parks legislation in other provinces. Ontario, for example, has recently amended its parks legislation to strengthen the primacy of conservation and preservation.

This bill will dismantle Alberta's parks system as we know it today by eliminating the categories of wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, recreational areas, and provincial wildland parks. If this bill is passed in its present form, these areas will be reclassified as parks, and the minister will then be able to assign these areas zoning categories that could permit a range of activities to occur that currently are not permissible. The public will have limited or nonexistent input into how the zone categories will be created and how they will be imposed to carve up Alberta's parks system. Areas that have been free from interference for many years could find themselves vulnerable to intrusion from tourists, recreationists, and developers. This could undermine Alberta's ability to conduct scientific research on topics such as the impact of climate change as ecological reserves provide valuable benchmarks for these kinds of studies.

It is important to note that even if the government of the day has no intention of using these zoning categories negatively, a future government could come under political pressure to reclassify these areas to permit motorized recreational or oil and gas development. With this legislation they will have the power to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Furthermore, the creation of delegated authority over trails is vaguely defined and transfers a serious amount of authority into the hands of organizations unaccountable to the public. The government has clearly caved in to the demands of recreational organizations by including this in the legislation, but it must be removed. Conservation groups argue that inclusion of delegated authority with respect to trails opens the door to further usage of this kind of delegation to privatize portions of the parks system in the future.

Finally, this legislation would transfer a vast area of regulation-writing authorities to government. The public's input on changes to the parks system would be fundamentally curtailed.

The notice requirement included in the bill is also unacceptably weak, Mr. Speaker. A two-month statement posted on the minister's website is all that is required. The creation of the parks conservation foundation and the parks advisory council could have been bright spots in this bill, but they are too loosely defined and overly subject to political interference to be successful.

This bill shows that the government is fundamentally out of touch with the public when it comes to protecting parks. In survey after survey, Mr. Speaker, the public wants to see the amount of land set aside for conservation increased. This legislation makes it easier to decrease the size of parks and heritage rangelands. The public's lowest priority is for the expansion of trails, and this legislation empowers outside organizations to do just that. More broadly, this bill is the latest in a series of attempts by the government to shield their management of public land from public view. Protections have been weakened in a series of bills by transferring them from legislation to regulation.

When we do the sectional analysis, Mr. Speaker, by defining only provincial parks and heritage rangelands in the legislation in section 5 and section 6, the categories of wilderness areas, natural areas, ecological reserves, recreation areas, and provincial wildland parks lose their legislative existence and the protections that that entails.

Further on, section 7 represents an enormous new set of powers for cabinet and even more so for the minister. Instead of legislatively defined categories, the cabinet can simply create zone definitions that can be altered at any time. The minister can then assign these zones to any portion of a provincial park broadly defined. This could allow a range of inappropriate activities to occur in what are currently ecological reserves, natural areas, or wilderness areas.

There is also a profound lack of transparency in this process, Mr. Speaker. The government has defended the zoning process in an attempt to simplify the parks classification system for users. However, the minister already has powers over zoning in the Provincial Parks Act under section 12(2). These provisions could easily be used to create a more simple naming convention to help the public understand what is permitted within the parks. The zoning powers introduced in Bill 29 are clearly intended for a different purpose, to dismantle legal protection for protected areas that have existed in the province for decades.

Further on, in section 8 the public notice provisions in this bill are laughable. To make dramatic changes to the province's park system, changes that could affect tourism, recreation, scientific research, endangered species, and fragile ecosystems, the minister must only post a notice on a government website two months beforehand. Any other formal notices are at the discretion of the minister. Current legislation has a much higher threshold for notice. Section 4(2) of the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act actually requires publication of notices in Alberta Gazette and in the print media, Mr. Speaker.

More broadly, this bill should include a duty to consult the public rather than a simple duty to notify. This section reveals the arrogance of this government, its determination to do whatever it likes with Alberta's parks and protected areas regardless of what the public thinks.

These are just some of the reasons – I could go on and on – but for these reasons I urge all the members to support the amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there are five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: This would be on the amendment, Mr. Speaker. If there are those who want to get in on 29(2)(a), I'll take my place until that's done.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any hon. member using 29(2)(a), the five minutes?

Seeing none, then back to the amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Amendment A1 is that the Alberta Parks Act be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will endanger the preservation of Alberta's parks and protected areas for present and future generations and that further input is necessary from the public and from conservation groups.

I regret to inform the minister that I am in full support of this. I paid a good deal of attention to this bill when it was introduced and to the minister's logic for introducing the bill, and I will admit that on the face of it, it certainly seems like a fairly innocuous bill. The minister claims that one of the key things that she's trying to do here is to simplify the classification systems that we have for our various parks and protected areas, everything from ecological reserves to wilderness areas to wildland provincial parks to provincial parks to provincial recreation areas. She says, you know, that it's really tough when people are trying to figure out what they can do in which kind of landscape, what the rules are, and what rules apply to which area.

Her four-zone approach – I don't know whether she intends to colour code things or not – sounds pretty appealing on the face of it. It sounds pretty simple, pretty straightforward. You can go online, theoretically – you can't yet, obviously, but if this bill were to pass you could go online, I would imagine – and say, "I want to go to this particular location," and then you could find out whether it was a zone 1 or a zone 2 or a 3 or a 4.

When the minister and I spoke, I don't think it had been worked out at that point, and I don't know if it's been worked out yet, whether zone 1 or zone 4 would offer the highest level of protection and the other would be the highest level of variety of activities or the other way around. Frankly, I guess, we in the Legislature are not going to have much input into that anyway if this bill passes because that would all be done in regulation. Still, it sounded appealing, frankly. It sounded simple. It sounded like you could walk into a park and know right from the moment you left the parking lot and got onto that first trail what kind of situation you were dealing with.

But that's on the surface of it, Mr. Speaker. When you drill down even a little bit – and you only do have to drill down a little bit. All you have to do is go on the Alberta Parks website to call up a page called About Alberta's Parks. I mean, it's maybe a little more detailed than the minister would like, but it gives you a pretty good page-and-a-half description of what an ecological reserve is all about, what a wilderness area is all about, and so on and so forth.

Those are already very clearly defined, delineated, designated classes of protected area. Some of them are very protected:

- Ecological reserves contain representative, rare and fragile landscapes, plants, animals and geological features.
- The primary intent of this class is strict preservation of natural ecosystems, habitats and features, and associated biodiversity.
- Ecological reserves serve as outdoor laboratories and classrooms for scientific studies related to the natural environment.
- Public access to ecological reserves is by foot only; public roads and other facilities do not normally exist and will not be developed.
- Most ecological reserves are open to the public for low-impact activities such as photography and wildlife viewing.

Now, as the minister well knows, I'm a birdwatcher. That's a low-impact activity. That is wildlife viewing. Even at that, Mr. Speaker, the job finally got to me and I finally had to admit that I was too busy in this job to keep my volunteer commitments, so this past summer my wife and I stopped volunteering at the Inglewood Bird Sanctuary in Calgary after, I think, probably 11 or 12 years for her and something like 22 years for me. But as a volunteer steward at the Inglewood Bird Sanctuary I know very well that even birdwatching can be an activity that is harmful to the landscape, harmful to the environment, if you go about it the wrong way. That's why we insist at the Inglewood Bird Sanctuary that the visitors have to stay on the trail. To go off the trails and to go into the woodlands damages the ecosystem, damages the habitat that those birds, largely migratory birds in a wildlife sanctuary in the middle of a city of over a million people, depend on. So you stay on the trail. We were nice about it; we had nice ways of cajoling. We didn't go, "Hey, you, get out of here and get on the trail," or anything like that. In fact, if we had done that, we would have gotten in trouble with our superiors. It is possible to fire volunteers. But that was key.

Now, when I read that definition of ecological reserves, which is right off the minister's website, right off the Alberta Parks' website, it is very, very clear to me that everybody knows or should know or could very easily within a couple of mouse clicks know the definition of an ecological reserve and understand very clearly that this is not an area to go off-roading in, that this is not an area to go mountain biking in, that this is not an area to, you know, take off your shoes and run through the stream or anything like that. This is an area for very, very low-impact activity, for scientific study. This is an area, Mr. Speaker, where people come second or third or maybe 25th, after all the flora and the fauna, after the rare and fragile landscapes, plants, animals, and geological features that exist there.

Mr. Speaker, I'm as much a fan as anybody else I know in this province of big, palatial resort hotels like the Banff Springs or the Fairmont Chateau Lake Louise or any of those. I've stayed in places like that myself. I've enjoyed myself; I've indulged myself in places like that. You know, every couple of years, when you can actually scrape together the down payment on a night's stay at a place like that, it's really quite a wonderful thing to do.

But I would point out that the Banff Springs, the Chateau Lake Louise, many other resorts like that – I'll leave Kananaskis Village out of it because that's a more recent addition – were built back in a time when there were nowhere near 4 million people in the province of Alberta, when there appeared to be no end to the wilderness, when you could plunk down a hotel, when you could go swimming in the hot springs because we didn't have the scientific knowledge at that point to know that if you swim in the hot springs in Banff, not the upper hot springs but the lower ones, you're depriving a very rare little mollusky, mussel-type thing of the only habitat it has in the world. We didn't know that we were dealing with such an endangered species.

Lots of things we didn't know back then and lots of things, frankly, we didn't need to know because there was so much wilderness. There was so much wildlife. Our footprint upon the landscape was minuscule by comparison to what it is today, our footprint as Albertans. If everybody on the planet lived according to the way we did, we'd need nine and a half planet Earths to support 6.1 billion people in the style to which we have become accustomed.

I think that when our network of parks and protected areas was set up, back around the year 2000, in its current form with ecological reserves, with wilderness areas, with wildland parks, with provincial parks, with provincial recreation areas, also with a couple of other weird, kind of off-to-the-side things – please don't take offence if you have a particular attachment to any of these weird, off-to-the-side things. Willmore wilderness park, for instance, is still, even under the proposals in this legislation, in a class by itself, not covered by Bill 29. Natural areas: not specifically covered by Bill 29. Heritage rangeland areas: specifically kept in its own category under Bill 29. But with the exception of that, everything else, which is very clearly delineated, in my mind, very clearly defined here and very well set up, with protection as the primary goal at the top of the list and working its way down to provincial parks and recreation areas, where you can do a wider variety of stuff, at the bottom of the list – that was and continues to be a very good set-up, something that ain't broke and doesn't need fixing.

I understand that the minister of parks is also the minister of tourism, and she's also the minister of recreation. There can be, depending on how you look at this, Mr. Speaker, an inherent conflict of interest between those three activities. Yes, of course, we want to attract tourists. Yes, of course, we want to give them activities, opportunities to recreate. Yes, of course, we want to give our own people opportunities to recreate. But we have to do so, and we did so 10 years ago with the full knowledge that those opportunities cannot be limitless, cannot be universal, cannot happen anywhere and everywhere that we choose. If it happens to be convenient for us to jump in our vehicle of whatever sort, motorized or not, and tear up the Ghost-Waiparous, that may not be in the public interest today, a hundred years from now, and certainly isn't in the interest of the critters who call that area home today or any time in the future.

We are the dominant species on this planet. We will be until we dominate ourselves into extinction, which hopefully won't be in my time or my children's time or my grandchildren's time. But we need to realize that we share this planet with a myriad of other life forms that need protection primarily from us. The current parks system that we have provides that. Everyone that I've talked to, not only since Bill 29 hit the Order Paper but since I became an MLA and for years and years before that, when we would talk about issues related to parks, to wilderness areas, to natural areas on my various programs on the radio, when we would talk about the grizzly bears, when we would talk about other wildlife, when I was involved in the creation of Southland natural park in Calgary, throughout all that activity I've never heard anybody say to me: gosh, if only I could do whatever I wanted wherever I wanted; we don't need any more parks. What people say is: we need protected areas.

I'm kind of left scratching my head, at least I would be if I hadn't heard from a number of people that in fact they weren't appropriately consulted on this plan. I'm kind of left scratching my head as to precisely whom the minister and her minions consulted with. I'm sorry; her assistants, her people. Her people didn't call my people; I'll tell you that, Mr. Speaker.

I think that amendment A1 speaks directly to that when it says that "further input is necessary from the public and from conservation groups." Now, there are different ways that we could do this. I know that there are a number of conservation groups in the province of Alberta right now that have done over the course of the last generation, over the course of the last 25 years, a fine job, on many occasions when our government has not, of standing up for our wilderness areas, for our natural world, and the natural inhabitants of that world. They have said that the best thing that could happen to this bill is if it was pulled and a proper process of public consultation take place and the minister bring back a revised bill in the spring of 2011.

Another way to go about this would be, I think, to refer this bill to one of the standing committees of this Assembly because much the same process could be conducted by that venue. This particular amendment would seek to do what the conservation groups would like to do, which is to pull the bill and, I think, instruct the minister to try again, using her best cheddar this time, as the cheese commercial used to go, go through the process of consultation again to consult more broadly, more widely, more deeply and really listen to what it is that the people of Alberta want, which is more parks, not fewer, more opportunities for recreation expressed by more areas in which to recreate that are not currently set aside with any kind of designation on them – in other words, there is nothing wrong with creating an off-roading area in the middle of the prairie; it may not be quite as challenging a ride, but you can do it, as an example – and come back to this Legislature in the spring with a revised bill.

I understand the concept of zoning, and I understand the wisdom, the need to be able to more succinctly express to people through a colour-coded system or whatever, when they get out of the car, lock the door, and walk across the pavement or the gravel to the entrance to the provincial park, what sorts of things you can do there and which areas you can do them in. I understand the need to make it crystal clear that this part of the park is a high-impact activity area, that part of the park is a low-impact activity area, and that corner over there, well, that's actually an ecological reserve, and you've got to tread there with extreme caution or else you're going to be in trouble. I understand that. But let's keep the protection that's there, Mr. Speaker.

I support the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in order to offer up the support of my caucus for the passage of the amendment that has been proposed by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. In particular, the Member for Calgary-Varsity is suggesting that this bill not be read a second time. It's primarily for the purpose of ensuring that this bill is then subject to the amount of transparent consultation that it requires in order to be improved to a point where it would be acceptable to the majority of Albertans, which I would suggest right now it is not.

Essentially, you know, the minister has suggested that there has been consultation, and in fact I know that there was some stakeholder consultation immediately prior to this bill, where some of the concepts included in this bill were distributed amongst people who take a keen interest in these issues and are well informed on them, yet we've not received the detailed outcome of that consultation from the minister.

Had she, for instance, been provided with feedback which rejected a number of the principles embedded in this bill, we would not know that because that consultation was done in the way that this government likes to do consultation, which is that they put something out, and they get information back, and then they kind of keep it to themselves. They may or may not sort of conveniently or strategically release small pieces of the consultation, but certainly it will not be shared, and the conversation itself will not be openly transparent so that the debate is available to Albertans. On that basis alone this bill should be reconsidered and put out for a more thorough and transparent review.

Now, there are, of course, a number of other reasons why this bill should be abandoned, and I will get to those in a moment. I think it's important to remember, you know, if you go back in history a little bit, the Member for Rocky Mountain House when he was, strangely, the Minister of Environment. I have to say that I struggle to imagine a world where the Member for Rocky Mountain House served as the Minister of Environment. Nonetheless, when that was the case, that minister brought forward a bill that was designed to overhaul the system of parks in Alberta. That bill, interestingly, managed to inspire the opposition of not only environmental groups but also industry groups. That, I think, takes some genuine skill, but nonetheless it did.

Ultimately, the government had to back down on that particular bill, and then the matter was referred to a committee of MLAs who engaged in a more robust form of consultation. At that point, when that was finished, in about 2000 or 2001 – I can't remember exactly – there were a number of recommendations that came forward. There was a good deal of consensus about those recommendations, but those recommendations ultimately ran up against industrial interests that were represented by different members of cabinet, so those recommendations were never acted on.

It's unfortunate that when you make a decision to protect something in the future, it is sometimes the case that those people who either have a quick buck to make or just a simple, you know, immediate gratification to make off of the most immediate exploitation of a resource will often work very hard to defend their right to engage in the most immediate exploitation of that resource. That sounds maybe sort of complicated, but it's akin to a child with a toy in a sandbox. They know that if they were to treat the toy in a certain way, it might last a bit longer, but you don't expect children to have the kind of impulse control necessary to actually make the hard decisions to make sure that that toy lasts longer.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we are not children; we are adults. As much as this government sometimes acts like the child in the sandbox, the fact of the matter is that they have an obligation and we as members of this Assembly have an obligation to make the hard decisions necessary not only to enhance immediate exploitation of whatever resource is in front of us but, rather, to preserve it and to cherish it and to protect it so that it's actually here for generations and generations to come and maybe even for generations where we're not alive to see the outcome of their enjoyment of it. You know what? It's still a wise decision. It's still representative of good governance.

I know that that immediate gratification way of approaching things that so dominates the way this government manages its day-to-day affairs tends to discourage that more responsible approach to governance, but I would suggest that that's something that we need to see more of on the part of this government. Certainly, this Alberta Parks Act as it currently exists does not reflect that suggestion. Rather, it reflects the child in the sandbox trying to exploit his toy as quickly as possible.

Under the former Premier, who I think all members of this Assembly have a great deal of respect for, Premier Lougheed, there was a very significant commitment made to the import of preserving and conserving natural resources for future generations and not simply conserving a piece of natural habitat so that we can look at it as we drive through it at 100 clicks an hour on an ATV but, no, to preserve it for its own sake, to preserve it as part of the environment. Yet we have an act here, that this government wants to put forward, that will ensure that we need to balance the ATV against the future preservation and conservation of natural habitat. Only this government could come up with the notion that we need to balance the toy against the future, yet that's certainly what they've done, and that's what is so profoundly wrong at the very heart of this piece of legislation.

Now, the minister has said: well, you know, we have lots of opportunities for consultation in this act because we've got a 60-day notice if I make any changes. I'd just like to say that I think the history of what has led up to this piece of legislation indicates to us that we really cannot count on this minister or this government to engage in meaningful consultation within that 60-day period nor, moreover, can we truly expect citizens to be able to engage in the kind of work necessary to ensure that their contribution to that consultation process is the best that it can be.

You can't do that in 60 days, and God knows how long it takes this government to move forward on policies. You know, the minister of health will tell you that it takes 30 years. To expect people to respond to particular planned changes with respect to the designation of parks or how they will be used within 60 days is a standard, certainly, to which this government does not hold itself in terms of moving forward on policy, so I'm not entirely sure why it is that we should expect citizens with far fewer resources at their disposal to do the same.

Now, one of the things that has been mentioned a number of times that is of concern about this act is the massive amount of regulatory authority that it gives to the minister. Of course, I have to say that it's not this particular minister's issue. It's actually the issue of pretty much every minister in this government. Every time a piece of legislation comes forward, we find that they are giving themselves grand powers to deal with matters through regulation so that that legislation never ever has to come back before this House.

My personal thought is that the ultimate measure of success for that government will be to eliminate all days of legislative sittings entirely. I mean, as it is, the number of days this year that we've sat is shocking and really quite an insult to the notion of democratic accountability. Nonetheless, I think that if they could find a way to pass a budget through regulation, they would. Then, you know, we could just all come here for one big celebration after the election. We could all do that, and then we could never come back here until the next election. I honestly think that that's sort of the route that we want to go.

It's not this particular minister's desire to be able to do everything behind closed doors that is different because, in fact, that's part and parcel of how this government is operating. She's part of that whole gang that wants to do that. But with this act, as with many of the other acts where they've adopted that approach, that shuts out Albertans, and Albertans have a very close tie to and love for the land. They do not want to see themselves shut out of this process the way this minister would like them to be.

Now, you know, we say: "Oh, well, we should just trust her. We're going to have this nice streamlined process, and it's just going to be simplified. That's all that we need to worry about because it's just a simplification with nothing more meaningful to it than that." I would say: well, if by simplify you mean take it all behind closed doors so that we can streamline away conservation obligations and preservation obligations, then I guess you're right. It will simplify the process, but it won't simplify the process in the minds and the hearts of Albertans who watch as their cherished, unique heritage lands are undermined and jeopardized through the actions of this government.

I think that the purpose of this act is concerning to me. I mean, we had an act before, the act that this is attempting to replace. There were a number of things that were a focus of that act, and conservation and preservation were critical. Now what we've done is basically added this notion of having to balance interests, of having to ensure that our preservation is done with a view to building tourism and enhancing prosperity, so suddenly prosperity and economics becomes something that needs to be considered in the behind-closed-doors designations that will be undertaken by the minister.

I have to say that this is such a huge departure from the recommendations that were made by the government committee back in 2000. It does, however, represent a significant accommodation of the tourism and recreation industry. You know what? I'm not against tourism and recreation, but I also believe that it is important to enable that to occur without in any way jeopardizing, Mr. Speaker, the integrity of our natural lands and areas. Unfortunately, that is not something that I see being achieved through the regime that this minister wants us to accept.

I think the other thing that's really important is that what consultation that has been done publicly, where the government has done surveys, has clearly shown that the majority of Albertans want to see preservation and conservation be the primary objective of what happens within our parks systems and our various reserves. That's clear. That's clear. That's what Albertans have said.

In the very poll that these members here had presented to them at their convention two or three weeks ago, we heard about how Albertans want to see this government protect the environment even if it means jeopardizing jobs. Now, in this case, we're not talking about jeopardizing jobs; we're talking about future growth of friends in the recreation industry. We're not talking about current jobs. It's interesting that Albertans were actually prepared to make that choice as reported to these members of this government by a polling firm that they hired. If they were prepared to make that choice, that follows in line, of course, with the survey results done in 2008, which show that Albertans want to see preservation and conservation remain as the primary priority. So this is, as a result, a very disappointing piece of legislation.

The other thing is that the act replaces not only the old parks act but also the wilderness act. The wilderness act had conservation as its primary and only objective, that wasn't being balanced against tourism and development and those kinds of objectives, so we see in one particular area that, again, we are potentially compromising these objectives.

Ultimately, what we know is that the public wants to see us do a better job of preserving our natural lands. What this government has to figure out is how to grow up, get out of the sandbox, and start preserving our resources like adults and making hard decisions for future generations, which is not what is reflected in the current act that's being put forward to us. So I support this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on the amendment.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I took it from the comments that were made earlier that there may be a willingness in the House to consider unanimous consent to shorten bells in the event of a division. So before you call the question, I would like to ask the House if there might be unanimous consent to shorten the bells to one minute for tonight in the case of a division.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the Deputy Government House Leader, is there unanimous consent, which means: is anybody opposed to shortening to one minute between the division bells? Is any hon. member opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Does any hon. member wish to speak on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:46 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We go back to the bill. The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and offer a few comments on Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. I want to start by acknowledging the passion of members across the way. Though we may have different viewpoints, the passion is still valid and very well understood mostly because of my background and the amount of time I spent in my career being involved in parks debates.

Parks are different things to different people, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the reasons why parks are always difficult to talk about. I have constituents who think the word “park” means that I should hook up my trailer and go camping for the weekend, some place I’m going to tow my trailer to, which is actually a valid view of parks. I’m sure that the hon. members would agree. But there are many others that believe parks serve some value of ecological protection or preservation of landscapes for future generations. That is every bit as valid a viewpoint, and there are many other viewpoints as to what parks are.

The word “park” actually is kind of a loaded term. Maybe it would be better if we had more than one name for the vast array of uses that parks provide. Every once in a while we venture out and add a name, ecological reserve for example. But somehow we always manage to gravitate back to the word “park” and then we always manage to fight over the word. That’s unfortunate.

I’ve been involved in many debates over parks and many planning exercises around parks, and I’ve learned, certainly, in my time that the debates are always passionate. There are people that argue with deep passion that it is our duty as a society to preserve landscapes and ecological features for future generations. That is absolutely a valid viewpoint. I happen to agree with that viewpoint. But there are also people that argue with equal vigour that they have a right to use public land for ATVs or camping or whatever other use they happen to champion. They are right as well. Public lands are, after all, public, and that’s a valid use of a landscape.

I’m a professional forester and have a background in landscape planning. I’ve learned over time that I think parks systems – and you need to talk about systems – have to accommodate all uses, not just some uses. But, more importantly, no matter what the use, parks have to be managed. We need to understand, agree right up front why a park was established and what steps we need to take to maintain that condition or value on the landscape. Simply putting a fence around something doesn’t always ensure that it’s going to stay there.

Then we can talk about what uses are compatible or would be considered that would not compromise what the original objective of establishing the park was. If I were to establish a park to preserve a cultural feature, for example a prehistoric cave painting, I would suggest that that would require some very strict and hard protection, maybe a fence. There are certainly cave paintings in the world where flash cameras aren’t allowed because the light would damage the painting. Very, very strict protection is required, and very obviously nobody would be allowed to touch it and those sorts of things. Very strict protection.

Not so in a park established for recreational use. We obviously would allow camping or at least day use though we might have some restrictions on where you can go or can’t go – there are certainly campgrounds where you can’t venture just anywhere – and what you can or can’t do. You can’t dump your dishwater on the ground, and you can’t cut bushes. Maybe your kids are not allowed to cut wiener sticks out of the willows that grow along the banks.

Then there are parks that are established for conservation or preservation motives, often encompassing rare or unique features such as rare plants in a bog. Again, a very strict form of protection would be required in that instance.

Sometimes the feature we’re planning to preserve or protect is a landscape feature, a mosaic of vegetation on the landscape. That’s a dynamic feature. Our landscapes are dynamic. They’re shaped by fire and wind and water, and often if we simply put a fence around it and call it protected, the feature will disappear over time. We must consider management actions in that case. In fact, we might consider the use of fire. Jasper or Banff park is a classic example of that. They’ve used fire extensively over the last few years to preserve habitat or to re-create habitat conditions that were there for many years and started disappearing off the landscape.

Even in the highest protection areas we might consider other uses. We might. For example, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned scientific sampling. One of the reasons we set aside ecological reserves or benchmarks, as was once a very popular term, is to understand or contrast what’s happening on our managed landscape. We can’t do that if we can’t sample or understand, and we certainly want our schoolchildren to be able to understand ecological process.

In some of those, and certainly some would argue in all of those, we want to exclude some uses, like all-terrain vehicles. We’re not going to run all-terrain vehicles across a bog that’s got a rare pitcher plant or some plant in it. Obviously, there are incompatible uses on the landscape.

This always requires rigorous assessment, Mr. Speaker. We need to understand what value or state we are trying to protect, what management actions are required to protect it, what uses will be considered, and what uses won’t be considered on that landscape. Those decisions are complicated by the fact that parks are rarely, if ever, established coincident with the value that we’re trying to protect. If we’re trying to protect a bog with a rare bog plant in it, the park is not the shape of the bog; it’s some square around that. There is an envelope of land encompassing that that might contain several values, some of which we’re trying to preserve, some areas that we might want to allow other uses.

For example, we’re talking about establishing the dinosaur park up in the Grande Prairie country there. Sorry; the name of the park escaped me just then. I’ll bet you that there will be a fairly hard preservation area where we’re not allowed to disturb anything, and somewhere nearby there’ll be a campground because the objective is to attract people to that area. There’s one park that’ll have at least two uses, probably several more.

Often the boundary of the park does not align with whatever value it is we’re trying to protect. Another example occurs in my constituency, where the Caribou Mountains Wildland park established there is established overlapping an area where buffalo traditionally were hunted and, I would argue, still need to be in order to prevent the spread of disease from the wood buffalo herd into domestic buffalo and cattle herds in the farmland outside. That’s worked for years, and the Caribou Mountains park is now not hunted, and the diseased buffalo are moving out. So there are reasons that we allow uses in certain places.

If you look at it locally and we should allow this and not that and we have to consider this special condition, it leads to a whole mosaic of possibilities. It requires real and local management planning, and whatever decision we arrive at, it has to be clear to all the users. I think a system of zoning, fraught as it seems to be with some difficulty, should at least be considered. I think that’s something that would work.

I know that all people that are passionate about parks will approach such a system with trepidation. I bet you Mr. Gunsch in the gallery behind me is deeply concerned about the future of ecological reserves in our province. He should be. He put a lot of years of work into it, and he should be congratulated as a hard-working Albertan. But I think Mr. Gunsch would acknowledge that there are people that drive ATVs in the province that think their ability to use those on public land is also threatened by people that would preserve areas. So it’s always that balance, and it’s always a difficult task. It’s always that way with a parks debate.

I think a parks act has to be a document that provides for a range of uses on our landscape because we are going to have a range of uses on our landscape. It has to provide appropriate protection mechanisms where the desired use is protection. When we're trying to save something, we have to make sure we have the mechanisms that will allow it to be saved. It has to provide flexibility, the ability to adjust when the prescribed uses are not protecting the value we want to protect. Jasper park is a classic example of that. Somewhere along the way they had to switch their management practices in order to provide habitat that was disappearing on the landscape. It has to provide clarity to all who are using it. It has to provide teeth. We have to ensure that we can enforce protective actions when we need to. It has to, most of all, Mr. Speaker, provide healthy, diverse landscapes and the ability to enjoy them by future generations. That's what parks are all about at the end.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that Bill 29 will do that, just about. Actually, it won't do that, but what it will do is provide an enabling framework that will allow subsequent work to do that. I don't for a second pretend that Bill 29 is the answer to everything, nor do I pretend that going down this road is going to be wonderful and happy for everybody. It doesn't matter how we approach parks legislation or the discussion or the input because we're talking about a diversity of views, a diversity of values, and it's going to be difficult sometimes.

I do believe that Bill 29 and the framework that it scopes out and the future work that it scopes out is the path to proceed with, and I'm going to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Yes, under 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker. And thank you through you to the hon. member who just spoke. I don't doubt the sincerity of his words for a moment. I mean, clearly, this is a man who has some experience and some knowledge in the area, and I respect very much what he said.

But I am having a hard time understanding, given that zoning is a management tool, given that the member is absolutely right that no matter what classification of park or protected area you're talking about – certainly, it is true that within the boundaries of a particular let's call it park just for simplicity's sake, and Bow Valley provincial park would be a perfect example, you have a number of different areas with a number of different uses and classifications of use in it. In fact, we're doing that already. What I'm not clear on is what there is, in the member's opinion, about our existing parks legislation that prevents us from doing the kind of job of managing parks, wilderness areas, ecological reserves, et cetera, et cetera, that the member is advocating.

I do think that I'm missing a point here. As I see it, we can certainly talk about zoning issues and management issues and make improvements in those areas, but I must admit that I'm coming at it from the perspective that you do that better when you're doing it within a framework, where it's very clear already that you have degrees of protection for some extremely valuable landscapes that are higher than they are for some others.

If the member can answer that question, please.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the same reason that the hon. member expressed dismay that I would argue against the current system, that's precisely why I would argue against the current system. We have a system of park names. If you were to establish a park, we can give it that name or we can give it that name or we can give it that name. None of the three recognize the fact that there are actually three or four or 10 different values or types of parks within that envelope, within that square, that doesn't coincide with the boundary of some value that we're trying to protect. We may want to include 10 uses in this park, and we may want to include one use in that park and none in that park, and our current system doesn't allow that.

I can give you examples of that. The Caribou Mountains wildland park was established, and now you can't hunt buffalo in there. That excluded a use on the landscape. First of all, that's important to a local economy and an aboriginal economy, but from a disease vector point of view, it's radically important. And all we can do is go: "Oh, it's a park. I'm sorry. We can't allow that." We don't have the mechanisms that allow for local management the way it should be done.

Who gets to define how it's done, how rigorous the regulations are in the end? Who gets input into that? Yeah, I can understand that a lot of people would be concerned about that, as am I. I'm going to be all over that minister when we get to that stage, let me tell you, because I'm passionate about parks and the value they add to our province. But the framework we have is flawed, and it doesn't provide for the range of uses or the range of protection that we need out there.

Mr. Chase: I very much appreciate what the Solicitor General said. I don't want buffalo with tuberculosis affecting larger herds. I totally understand it. In fact, I agree with everything you've said except why the problem cannot be solved by amending existing legislation, strengthening it where it needs to be, and defining the categories as opposed to taking it out of legislation and putting it into regulation yet to be established. Can you explain to me how regulation is superior to legislation?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, if all of the parks we were ever going to have in our province were already established, I guess I'd have to agree with the member that you already know what you've got there, so why can't you just say in legislation how to protect it and we're good to go? What are you going to do about the parks that we haven't established yet? We'd be fools to think that we're going to continue on this landscape without establishing further protected areas. You can't decide what values you're going to protect, how they're best protected, and what other uses are allowable or desirable in that context until you actually have the piece of land and there's a discussion about the values and everybody gets to lay their cards on the table. If you can't have the discussion, how do you enshrine it in legislation? It has to be a flexible system because there are flexible landscapes out there. Not only do we need to be able to define it up front; you have to change it over time.

I've used my time, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will pick up on the notion of what's been talked about here in the last few minutes. Frankly, it would strike me that if you have a situation under current legislation, especially given what the Solicitor General just said about, you know, indicating that there is a need going forward to add more land to our inventory of parks and protected areas, then using Caribou Mountains wildland park as an example, it would seem to me that a logical response to the situation that he describes, where diseased buffalo cannot be hunted within the park, would be to try and acquire more land as a buffer zone between the wildland park with the uses that it has now and not the cultivated land but the rangeland, I guess I'm trying to say, on which the cattle are raised.

Now, you know, if the President of the Treasury Board were here, he'd probably be yelling that it's a spending day, not a savings day, when I suggest that. Obviously, neither Rome nor our parks system was built in a day, so this is an ongoing, evolutionary process. No question about it.

I appreciate what the minister had to say about the notion that doing things in regulation gives that kind of evolutionary flexibility to a situation that may need that flexibility. I'd prefer, whenever possible, to do our legislating, our lawmaking on the floor of the Legislature in legislation, but I understand that there's the perfect world and the real world and that in some instances you really do need to go to regulation because it gives you the ongoing flexibility that you're going to need to meet changing conditions, to meet changing circumstances.

I just don't think that this is necessarily one of those issues or one of those areas. If it is, let me say that I think we would be better advised to perhaps review the categories that we have now and say: within these definitions do we need to come up with better management plans that, in fact, zone different areas of the wildland park in different ways? That would, I guess, mean going back – if not absolutely to the drawing board, we'd be getting pretty close to there – to redo Bill 29, I think.

I suggest that we'd be better off with that because the Solicitor General touched on it. Parks are a very difficult thing to talk about because they mean different things to different people. I would argue, by the way, that that's one reason why we shouldn't call them all parks, but we should call some of them wilderness areas and some of them wildland parks and some of them ecological reserves. Or maybe, you know, there are categories of protection that we've yet to define that fit in the middle between some of those and define provincial parks in the sense that I think most Albertans and most Canadians probably understand provincial parks, which is an area to go to recreate to some degree of activity, whether that's low impact or higher impact, whether that's going to camp or not, that sort of thing.

The Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation is talking about a management plan, and my quibble with this, quite frankly, is that she's taking the concept of a management plan and zoning and trying to cram that square peg into the round hole called protection, the definition of protected areas. I think we need to keep those two things separate. First, we need to define and delineate the protected areas, and we need to say: this area has this overall level of protection, and this one has a slightly lesser level of protection, et cetera, et cetera. Then within that, you can deal with zoning and management plans, I believe.

I think we'd be well advised to look at the things that we want to call provincial parks and say: these are the areas where, yes, we expect there to be some roads and, yes, we expect there to be some trails, and some of them will be paved so that moms with babies in strollers can get out there and enjoy the wilderness just like some intrepid hiker, that kind of thing. I think we'd be better advised to do this sort of thing that Bill 29 seeks to do within the context that we have.

I understand the Solicitor General's frustration with some definitions, some regulation that perhaps ties his hands or ties people's hands around a crucial issue like diseased buffalo getting out of the park and intermingling with and infecting domestic livestock, that sort of thing. But I suggest that those sorts of things are probably the exception rather than the rule, and if we really came up with the right Bill 29, it would include a way to deal with that that does not put at risk the near sacred status of an ecological reserve, the one step below sacred status of a wilderness area that says: "Thou shalt not build a road through here. Thou shalt leave the vehicles on the other side of the fence," metaphorically speaking.

The Solicitor General is right, Mr. Speaker. Every single one of us probably has a different expectation of what a provincial park should be, and I come back to the notion that one of the problems that we are having with this legislation is that that concept hasn't been fully enough explored here. The people of Alberta, the citizens of Alberta, have not had enough opportunity, in my belief, to weigh in on this issue and say: this is what we really want.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move another amendment if I could, which I believe is going to give this House the opportunity to go out and seek that consultation, that input from our bosses, from the people we work for, the citizens of Alberta, without having to tear up Bill 29 but in a way that will give us a better Bill 29. I will pass the amendment to the pages and allow it to be passed out, and I'll continue to speak to it when you say so.

The Deputy Speaker: Let's pause a moment for the pages to pass out the amendment.

We have an amendment introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. It shall be known as amendment A2.

Hon. member, please continue with your amendment.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief from this point forward because I think that this is very straightforward and self-explanatory. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

That is, very simply and succinctly, a motion to refer this bill to the standing policy committee of the Legislature on Community Services. One of the ministries for which that standing policy committee is responsible is the Ministry of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. These standing policy committees in the three or so years of their existence, I think all members of this House would agree, have done some fine work, and they've done it outside of this particular Assembly room, in committee rooms, where perhaps we can put aside some of the partisanship that sometimes colours our debates and question period and everything else that we do in here and get down to work in a bipartisan or multipartisan, all-party fashion to do some really, really good work on behalf of the people of Alberta.

This gives an opportunity for us through the committee to study this bill clause by clause, to study the overall intent of this bill, to seek written submissions from the people of Alberta, to hold public hearings, and to conceivably hold public hearings in a number of locations around the province, to hear from the people of Alberta who have an interest in their parks, which, of course, are not only their parks but the parks of future generations of Albertans. Let the people weigh in in a very public way, in full view of the public, with their opinions on where we should go in defining and delineating our parks.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I don't know that there's anything more that I can really say in support of that particular amendment. I think that explains it, and I prefer not to take up other speakers' time just because I might have a little bit of time left on the clock. I'm sure there are other members of this House who want to speak to this amendment, probably against this amendment, but let's let the debate on the amendment begin.

Thank you.

9:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation on the amendment.

Mrs. Ady: On the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to tell the hon. member that I appreciate the debate that I've been listening to. It reminds me a lot of the three years of consultation that we've been doing around this issue because, as you've said, many people when they think of parks think of such different things, and it's the thing we grow most passionate about because we all love it so much. But, hon. member, I'm going to recommend to the House that they not support the amendment based on the fact that we have done three years of consultation. We've had these kinds of conversations across the province.

One of the things I can tell you is that in the existing legislation, as it sits today, even some of my friends that are really on the conservation side will say to me: actually, the way the legislation is set up today and the way it's developed over the years and the fact that there are three acts, with seven categories and 40 exceptions and over 500 parks, has created confusion, and Albertans need to be able to understand it.

I understand that this is the beginning of the work, that this is enabling legislation, and that it will create the atmosphere for us to get back together and have that next piece of conversation. I think that's important conversation, Mr. Speaker, because as the Sol Gen was saying to us, this is a dynamic landscape that needs enabling legislation because it has to be able to change and move and reflect what happens. It can't stay in rigid boxes.

We do need to protect; we absolutely do. I don't think anyone disagrees with that. That's why we've talked about creating areas where we can define that very specifically so that across the province you can know what that means. So when someone says, "Well, this word means something and that word means something," I would suggest to you that the average Albertan doesn't. To people that work in the area and know it and love it and have spent time there, it means something, but to the others it doesn't particularly, and we have created great confusion. So I think this gets us to the next step.

I will also say, Mr. Speaker, on consultation: we don't make a move in parks anymore without creating consultations, where we bring the local community in, we sit them down, and we have open houses, round-tables. We bring all players in so that they have to kind of discuss it and come up with the best management plan. Those things are all possible under this legislation, and that's the way we want to do our work as we go forward to do the things that need to be done in parks and make sure that we ensure we have a dynamic parks system.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend that we not spend more time going back around the circle, that we create enabling legislation, that Bill 29 can do that. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on 29(2)(a).

Ms Notley: Thank you. Under 29(2)(a) my question is to the minister. I appreciate her engaging in the debate and the comments that she's made. You talk about consultation and, certainly, the idea of being able to go out into the communities and listen to what people have to say, not only members of the community but other interested parties because, of course, we have a lot of people who are interested in our ecological reserves and wilderness areas who aren't necessarily members of the community per se. You say that, you know, that's all possible under this enabling legislation. But apart from the provision that talks about the 60-day notice, can the minister tell members of the House what part of this legislation requires that form of consultation and, in particular, where the terms of that consultation, the extent of the notice, and the folks that need to be advised, and the forum for that consultation are specified so that we can ensure its transparency and accountability?

Mrs. Ady: Well, yes. Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. As you know, legislation today doesn't speak about notice. In this legislation we're saying that we have to give 60 days' notice. In the plan for parks, which is what we so extensively consulted over, there were priorities in there, and one them was that we would do nothing without consultation. Since 2009 we've had 20 consultations. Whenever we make a move in a park, we have a full consultation about that movement. So I would say to the hon. member that as we develop these zones and the regulations, we will continue to do this work. That's how we plan on working going forward. No one should make movement on land that people care about as much as this with, first of all, not notifying that it's going to happen, and, second of all, following up with a consultation. That's what we do, and that's what we're going to continue to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would dearly love to see tabled the examples of the consultations you've had and a record of that information because, as I've said, the only thing I've seen previously is the online workbooks. Now, you talked about open houses and round-tables, and I'm saying that should have been done first. People should have had a chance to look at the legislation that was proposed and comment on it. I'd be interested in hearing your answer.

Mrs. Ady: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, in the three years we spent on the plan for parks, that's where those round-tables and all vested interests were brought together, and we came up with the priorities. As far as, you know, consultations today if you were to go on our website, you'd see the 20 that we've had since 2009. That's specific to anything that's happening in the parks. As far as the legislation itself we contacted those groups. We let them know we were putting it out online so that they could comment. That was the commitment that we had made, that we would get back to them on how we would create a simplified classification system. It was one of the priorities in the plan for parks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'd like to just follow up on the question that I asked previously. You talked, of course, about the possibility for these things, and you said that you've done this consultation in the past, but the question that I actually asked specifically is: can you point to any place in this legislation? It is enabling legislation. It is a hollow shell. So is there any place in that enabling legislation that requires the government to engage in consultation and that stipulates the form of that consultation?

Mrs. Ady: Well, obviously we have a duty to let people know what's happening and then in policy we have it. You know, again, you can go to our website and see what the policy is, but our policy is to always consult. We never don't consult. But you're right; in the legislation there is a duty to inform that it's going to happen.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My point being, through the Speaker, of course: what good is consultation unless there is action taken and people are involved in the decision?

Mrs. Ady: Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that there is action taken. That's why we bring them around the table, and that's why we come to an agreement. That's how that work is done. You can no longer go behind closed doors or have someone decide to decide. Everyone has to come around the table, all stakeholders, and we have to come up with a unified decision. You know what? In all honesty, since we started doing that consultation, we have found that we can generally come to some pretty good consensus. In fact, we have other provinces now looking at our consultation policy because it's actually pretty cutting edge, and they're saying: "It's working for you in the province. How are you doing it?" So we're now actually getting to describe that for other provinces.

The Deputy Speaker: We have one second.

On amendment A2, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to the amendment, I guess about the only quality or credit under transparency and accountability that I will recognize our Premier for is his creation of standing policy committees. Now, I'm extremely aware, based on the electorates' choice, that opposition members form a minority on those standing policy committees, but as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, to a large extent, not always but to a large extent, partisanship can be parked, and the committees can get on with activities that are of value to all Albertans. It's the equivalent of what a Senate is supposed to do, the sober second thought. What we're asking in amendment A2 is to let that thought continue.

The standing policy committees that I'm connected with – Community Services, and I'm the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy – have brought before us numerous individuals on topics of concern, whether it had to do with, I believe, Bill 203 and the electricity franchise fees and rates. I was very surprised that the committee did basically a U-turn and recognized that the AUMA and the AAMD and C were not in favour of having the government determine local franchise fee service rights, and I was very pleased because I was totally in agreement with the decision that was made.

I also appreciated the opportunity in the Standing Policy Committee on the Economy to discuss the minimum wage, and in that discussion we were incredibly together for almost five months of that discussion, and even at the end there was an opportunity provided in the standing policy committee to offer a minority report. I cannot think of a more democratic opportunity afforded to members of this Legislature to seek out the information that they need to have.

My concern, as I pointed out, is the difference between consultation and collaboration. Consultation just simply means that we're listening. It doesn't mean that we're going to act on what we've heard. This is the concern, that consultation without publicly recording the minutes of the various meetings to show that there is support or lack thereof is meaningless because unless we see the reports, we don't know where people stand.

Now, what we're seeing is, as Sam Gunsch pointed out, watching in the Assembly from the point of view of Albertans in general but specifically under the Sierra Club's concerns, that back in 2000 we had a much more co-operative circumstance. The act that was put forward by the hon. Gary Mar, Minister of Environment at that time, was entitled the Natural Heritage Act, and we have members who participated at that time; for example, the Member for Banff-Cochrane was a member of that committee. It was an all-government committee, but they did a very good job, and that was before standing policy committees. The Member for Calgary-Fort, who I would like to hear – obviously, I can't tonight – was a part of that committee that worked on the Natural Heritage Act. We had Dave Coutts, the MLA for Livingstone-Macleod; Ron Hierath, MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner; Dave Broda, the MLA for Redwater; and Ivan Strang, the MLA for West Yellowhead.

They did their due diligence, they involved people in the discussions, and they came up with some very interesting findings, but they defined their roles clearly. For example, the role of the MLA committee: the principal objective of the MLA committee was to develop and oversee a public review of key issues related to the proposed Natural Heritage Act. A public review. Mr. Speaker, I'm suggesting that that public review in terms of reviewing the clauses and concerns of Bill 29 has not taken place.

To accomplish this, the committee defined and monitored a public consultation process to confirm key issues and ensure that the consultation process was conducted in a fair and effective manner. Equus Consulting Group was contracted by Alberta Environment to develop and complete the consultation process. The MLA committee reviewed the findings of the process and developed the recommendations outlined in this report for the minister's consideration. They weren't pre-empting the minister. They were supporting the minister through their research and through their consultation.

In formulating its recommendations, the MLA committee reviewed the findings in relation to existing and proposed policy pertaining to the key issues. The policy and practice of other, comparable Canadian jurisdictions was also reviewed as additional background; in other words, best practice not just within the scope of Alberta but across the nation.

Scope of the review. The MLA committee limited the scope of its review to policy issues relating to five key areas of concern. These were identified through earlier public feedback and confirmed in the consultant's initial issue identification discussions with major stakeholder groups. These included oil and gas exploration and development in parks and protected areas, mining in parks and protected areas, recreational off-highway vehicle, OHV, and snowmobile use in parks and protected areas, hunting in parks and protected areas: ideas that we are discussing tonight and suggesting need to be discussed further by referral to committee, reclassification of natural areas. This is a déjà vu circumstance, Mr. Speaker.

One additional issue, ministerial flexibility versus certainty, was identified through these discussions and was also reviewed by the MLA committee.

Now, what was amazing to me is the amount of agreement. For example, this comes from the Edmonton Journal, March 30, 2000. The author was Ed Struzik. This was what was stated.

The Natural Heritage Act will set the stage for phasing out industrial development in most protected areas, and prevent new developments from being approved. The measures are likely to receive the blessing of the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Speaker, they did receive the blessing.

Sources say Mar, who was unavailable for comment, will release the results of a public consultation process that focused on a number of key environmental issues, including the Natural Heritage Act. In its original form, which drew criticism, it would have allowed industrial development in protected areas.

Now, to me, this is key. This is bringing everybody into the discussion.

Last month, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers board of governors reaffirmed its support for a series of protected areas where there will be no development, including oil and gas.

"We have told the government, and we have been telling them since 1994, that CAPP believes that there should be a network of protected spaces in Alberta, and by the strictest definition of protection, there should be no industrial activity, including oil and gas," said Geoff Morrison, the association's manager of environment and operations.

His organization wants a clear process by which industrial interests will be phased out of special areas.

Now, let's see what's happening tonight. What's getting phased out, Mr. Speaker, is special areas. This is counterintuitive. The reason CAPP was in support of this methodology was that what we don't want is a project by project, valley by valley debate every time we make a submission to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. So they got it back then.

Now, more with regard to Gary Mar in terms of putting forward parks legislation. This is from an Edmonton Journal article dated April 21, 2000. The author of this article, found on page B4, was Larry Johnsrude.

Resource development in environmentally sensitive areas would be phased out, and off-road vehicles would be restricted, under legislation proposed by a committee of government MLAs.

The suggested Natural Heritage Act, which has caused a split in cabinet, would eventually eliminate all oil, natural gas and mining activity in provincial parks and protected areas.

Environment Minister Gary Mar, who has been at logger-heads with Resources Minister Steve West . . .

And we can substitute our current resource minister.

. . . over the proposed new legislation, said he hopes the report will strengthen his hand in pressing for tougher new environmental rules.

Mar had hoped to introduce the bill this spring but was unable to patch up differences with [Steve] West, who opposes Mar's time frame for phasing out oil and gas activity in protected areas . . .

Liberal environment critic Debby Carlson praised the MLAs' report, released Thursday, but said its implementation will depend on how Mar makes out in his showdown with West.

What was interesting, Mr. Speaker, was that while there was discussion and while there was fraction within the government that was making the decision, in the end the environment basically won out. The Natural Heritage Act was proclaimed. It wasn't as strong as it might have been, but it was considerably stronger through the committee process than what is being proposed tonight without a committee process.

Mr. Speaker, I talked about omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence being associated with one minister. I believe the combined intelligence in this room, through the standing policy committee recommendation, the Committee on Community Services, could refine the process, could have on the public Hansard record the meetings with various environmental groups, industrial groups, anybody who has a desire as to how parks legislation and enforcement should be shaped. This could happen. This is the sort of compromise, middle position. If this middle position is taken out, if Albertans are shut out of the process and their elected representatives cannot hear from the public and act upon what has been heard, then this is a sham. Legislation allows for debate and discussion; regulation shuts it out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and obviously I'm supporting amendment A2.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions or comments.

Seeing none, then on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Yes. I rise as well to support this amendment for many of the reasons that have already been identified. It's really apparent to me that, you know, consultation is one of those words that can be used and overused and sometimes abused. One of the things that makes that word a positive word is when the process of consultation is one for which there is transparency and to which there is accountability.

At this point, as much as we have, you know, these very sweet-natured assurances of consultation and consultation policies, we have absolutely nothing in legislation to ensure consultation, nor do we have anything in the legislation that would set the parameters for the consultation process, nor do we have anything in the legislation that assigns any form of accountability to the outcome of those consultations, nor of course do we have anything that suggests that they would be remotely transparent. That means that we are left completely to hope for the benevolence of whatever minister happens to be in charge of the process at any given time. Of course, as it probably will come as no surprise, the record of this government is not one to make me feel confident that I would give up that kind of input into the process. So it really is a very important thing to address.

Now, we've heard about consultation in the past. You know, I may be corrected over the next few days as I have an opportunity to talk with more people who are coming out and expressing concern about this legislation. But my understanding is that while there has been somewhat positive relationship building and consultation going on with respect to certain policy levels of activity through parks, when it comes to what is actually included in this legislation, this legislation truly does not reflect the majority of the information that was received by this minister or this ministry around the future of our parks regime in this province.

As I've stated before, I think what we see here, then, is an example of why we cannot blindly put our faith in this minister or the next minister or this government to just voluntarily consult and voluntarily make it transparent and voluntarily demonstrate some level of accountability to the consultations and the feedback that they receive from the Alberta public because, as I've said, this act in and of itself reflects a breach of that trust as it is. So there's certainly no reason to go forward and assume that things will be any different.

The Member for Peace River talked about the complexity of the issues that face regulators and this government when it comes to planning the future of our parks system. He talked about different levels of protection that are required and different uses and different objectives. That's all very compelling, and it's all very convincing. Certainly, no one here is suggesting that this is a simple project or a simple issue where you simply go: this is protected land, and it will be this way forever.

I was particularly convinced by the description of how over time the lack of impact on a particular protected area means that you may actually lose that which you are trying to protect or preserve. You know, that's absolutely and totally a legitimate point. I understand that there is complexity to this issue, but that does not, however, automatically lead to the notion that what we should do is give unchecked authority and ability to the minister to deal with these complex and competing and evolving pressures without any type of input from the public or transparency or oversight from the public.

If anything, if it is that complex, if there are those conflicting interests and sometimes even conflicting interests within the scientific community – I’m not even talking about the more, sort of, politicized conflict between conservation and exploitation; I’m just talking about, you know, the complexities that can actually exist within the actual conservation community and the scientific community – then we need to ensure that the public is involved in that discussion and has input in that discussion. There is no provision for that in this legislation.

Now, there are loads of other types of regimes where we engage in the preservation and the administration of the public interest and the public good. There are loads of other cases where when we do that and we decide that it is somewhat complex and that we can’t put every last crossed “t” and dotted “i” in the legislation, there are other mechanisms that we can use. We have administrative tribunals throughout government in a number of different ways. We have hearing processes. We have public hearing processes. We have these kinds of things throughout the province in other areas where government is attempting to preserve the public interest in a changing environment so that we’re not necessarily having to have every issue come back before the Legislature once a week.

But this act does not provide for that type of mechanism. Instead, what this act says is that we’re going to create an enabling piece of legislation to let the government on its own, behind closed doors do whatever in its wisdom – and that is a wisdom that will be gained from consulting with whoever it is they want to because we’re not ever going to ask that they balance out their consultation process or identify who it is they need to hear from. So however their wisdom is gained, at whatever time, based on whatever the political winds are at that time, they can go behind closed doors and come up with regulations and do whatever they would like.

You know, I would be less concerned about it if the overarching objectives of the act remained the same, but as I said before, we’ve clearly played around with them – very subtly, but we have played around with them – so that the objectives and the scope of activity and the purposes of the act have been modified enough to allow even greater authority to the minister to depart from what I think the public would all agree is the primary objective of our parks regime.

As a result, the motion put forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie suggests that we refer this matter to an all-party committee. That committee can have public hearings, and that committee can decide who to hear from, and that committee can do it all in Hansard. The people who want to have their concerns and their issues addressed can come and make submissions and that will be in Hansard. Their submissions will be available to the rest of the public, and then the deliberations of the committee and the considerations of the committee mostly will be transparent in that setting. I mean, we know the majority of committee members will sometimes hash it out beforehand and then come into the committee with sort of a preordained decision, but oftentimes these committees function better than that, and we actually see some genuine discussion between government members break out in these committees.

It’s a way to allow for a less politicized, more sort of best-interests mechanism to govern how we make these decisions. We’re also able to have all these players come and fully engage and then the public can see that, oh, well, you know, the government was actually told this, this, this, and this, and they accommodated that concern or they said: we don’t care about that concern. Then at least the decision-making process is more accountable and the government is more accountable to the people of Alberta. To review, most of them in surveys have said that there’s a certain focus that they want to see represented here that is not. So there needs to be better accountability.

I know it’s tiresome. Lawyers are tiresome, and people talking about legal mechanisms are tiresome, and I understand that. Nonetheless, I actually sort of have some buy-in to them. They sort of do brainwash the least brainwashable of you when you go through that law school process. But I actually think that this bill could benefit from an objective review that looks at coming up with a structure that is an alternative to unrestricted regulation-making authority and instead comes up with a public hearing process, comes up with a process that ensures transparency and ensures accountability and maybe even allows for adjudication.

I know that goes a bit far, and maybe I’m looking for a job for some other time in my life. Nonetheless, the point is that I think, for instance, that that’s something that could be discussed in the setting. We could discuss this idea of whether or not all these complex issues need to be managed by a minister behind closed doors or whether or not there is a better way to preserve and articulate the basic objectives that the majority of Albertans want to see reflected and then also build in an opportunity for those complexities, which the government complains of, to be managed through a much more public and transparent and accountable process.

These are the kinds of things that could be discussed not only with all Members of the Legislative Assembly but with those stakeholders who are deeply, deeply concerned about this parks act.

I just do want to mirror the statements that were made, I think, by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I, too, have been inundated with e-mails and phone calls and letters from people who are desperately concerned about what this parks act means to the future of our wilderness and ecological reserves and our parks system in general in this province.

Rather than bowling forward in yet another attempt to grab a whole bunch of authority and take it and scurry behind closed doors and do whatever you want to do in the future with no regard for the interests of Albertans, instead what we could do is engage in a much more productive, transparent, and ultimately higher quality process that would produce a product that all Albertans would be proud of and actually could sign on to and would understand. I think that would be in the best interests of not only this government but of all Albertans.

So I urge members of this Assembly to support the motion put forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie because I do believe that it is a mechanism through which we could actually improve substantially the quality and the substance of what is currently a very flawed piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. On amendment A2 I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for presenting this and allowing the House to consider another way of dealing with the controversy that has surrounded Bill 29. Certainly, as I hear more and more discussion, I’m getting more and more concerned about the direction. I have not been convinced by the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation that there has been due public consultation regarding this matter.

I have a copy of the Plan for Parks from last year. Last year was a very busy year for the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Many hon. members of this Assembly may be astonished to know that that was the only one of the 24 ministries that failed to meet their voted budget. That ministry had a wee bit of a deficit. If you look at the other ministries, many of them contributed significantly back into the stability fund at the end of the year 2009-10. This ministry was very active in the Winter Olympics held in British Columbia. One of the sort of sales pitches was, of course, our wide-open wilderness areas and what we have to offer. We certainly have a lot to offer to tourists and travellers from anywhere on the globe. But I find it interesting that this bill, after that promotion, is before the House in this form.

Now, the Plan for Parks is an interesting read. The hon. Member for Peace River gave a very interesting speech, and I appreciated hearing his remarks on this. Provincial parks account for 4 per cent of Alberta's land mass, and they are certainly very important to our quality of life. We think there is a large land area set aside in this province. We are correct if we look at it as a percentage, but much of it is national park, and when we think of the national parks, we think of Banff and Jasper and Waterton, Elk Island, but we forget about the large area that is included in Wood Buffalo. So I can appreciate that, and I hope I see more land set aside for provincial parks.

I read with interest the message from the minister, the plan for parks, the priority actions, and it's worth noting that there are four strategies. One of the strategies from last year, of course, is to refine the parks classification system. There's no real direction as to how or why or that we're going to have this enabling legislation, Bill 29, as it's known, and this is going to be what citizens need.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we go a little further on and we find out how this plan was developed, that's quite interesting. If we were to look at this plan as it was developed and we were to consider amendment A2, we would certainly find a need for the Standing Committee on Community Services to get involved and have a series of public hearings not only in the capital, but I would suggest they could break up into subcommittees and travel throughout the province. I'm not sure. I can only think of the Alberta Health Act. The public consultations that this government is currently doing are very contrived. Whenever I experience what was done with supposedly public health consultations, I can confidently say that it was a contrived outcome. I know the Minister of Energy doesn't agree with me, but it certainly is true. Now, if we were to have the Standing Committee on Community Services look at what is in this plan for the parks that was tabled in this Assembly last year and what is in Bill 29, I think we would have to question whether Albertans' expectations and ideas for parks are reflected in Bill 29.

I heard about this public consultation from the hon. minister, but I read in here that Alberta Tourism, Parks and Recreation reviewed – reviewed – findings from consultations. Reviewed doesn't say that they've had them on their own; they reviewed consultations and gathered information about best practices in other jurisdictions. I heard earlier, Mr. Speaker, people talking about how the rest of the country was following our lead on this, if I understood correctly, Mr. Speaker, but certainly I'm surprised to learn that we had gathered information about best practices in other jurisdictions. Which other jurisdictions? They don't say. It could be Algeria. I don't know. It could be Saskatchewan. It might be. Maybe whenever they were on the train going up to Whistler at the taxpayers' expense last winter at the Winter Olympics, they had a consultation. Who knows? But they could, I guess, honestly say that they had a consultation.

Now, further input was also sought from a wide range of groups through First Nations and individuals from different parts of the province. I would certainly like to have a synopsis or a summary of those meetings, meetings with stakeholders and environmental groups, recreation enthusiasts, commercial tourism operators, and municipalities. At some point this evening we're going to have to talk about land sales to municipalities that are considered or written into the statute in section 29, I think.

Public opinion surveys. In these public opinion surveys, if I understand correctly from this document, Albertans told us they want "more involvement in decisions about parks and in the delivery of parks programs." Now, Bill 29 contradicts that. It's enabling legislation. It's enabling this government to do what they want behind closed doors. I can't understand how this government and the speakers who are promoting this bill can make their claims and think that this bill will give interested individuals more involvement in decisions about parks in the delivery of the parks programs.

The parks classification system, which the hon. minister talked about and which is in Bill 29 – we heard various speakers speak about this – certainly is an issue that could be looked at if this amendment were to be passed tonight and this bill was to be provided to the Standing Committee on Community Services for discussion and scrutiny. The parks classification system, it states here, is to "refine the current park classification system so Albertans can easily understand which recreation and conservation activities are supported in each park and why." Fair enough. "Easily understand" is not part of Bill 29 because they're not going to have an opportunity to have a chance to understand what decisions are made.

I can hear people on the other side talk about cabinet confidences or "If you want the information, use FOIP." A favourite one not of yours, hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, but of some of your colleagues: "Well, put it on the Order Paper as a written question or a motion for a return." I can just hear all this. That's why we have to support amendment A2 from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Now, the parks classification system will require the consolidation and modernization of two pieces of existing park legislation. The hon. Minister told me three, I think, or told the House. I could look at the back, but certainly the Provincial Parks Act and the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act, putting them into a single act, which is proposed here. Certainly, that's all; that's the complete plan for the parks.

Now we have this bill, and I would like to say that we certainly should bring this back to the Standing Committee on Community Services, not the cabinet policy committee. The chairperson of the cabinet policy committee that would look after this would be . . . [interjection] I don't know. I don't know. The only thing I would know is that they're well paid for what they do, but what they do is secret. The taxpayers, the public, have no idea about the cabinet policy committee and the work habits or lack thereof.

But with the hon. members on the Standing Committee on Community Services, of course, everything would be public. There would be minutes. There would be submissions, hopefully oral and written. That's why I think this is a very good idea, and I would, in conclusion, passionately urge even the Minister of the Environment to support amendment A2 on Bill 29.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I'm just wondering. You talked a little bit about value for money. We receive, whether we meet or not, a thousand dollars per month per committee that we're on. Would you suggest that we should be earning our money by being part of a further study of Bill 29 in Community Services?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, certainly all of those committees, whether they're standing committees or special select committees, are well financed, and they're well resourced with support staff. We have facilities in the Annex, and if need be, if we had a large group, we could even use this Assembly to hold a public hearing. So the resources are there, and I really think that January would be an ideal time for this committee to have another look at this bill.

Now, hon. member for – I always want to say, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cataract Creek, but I don't. I'm going to say the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. I heard tonight that the Canadian Senate for the first time in the last 85 years overturned a private member's bill that had been passed by the House of Commons. Now, I know that the hon. Member for Stony Plain is saying: what's this got to do with this amendment? Well, this is what is happening.

We don't have a Senate in Alberta. I don't think we need one, but we do have these standing committees, and this Standing Committee on Community Services could take a long look this winter at this legislation and, hopefully, make some improvements to it so that it would be acceptable to many of the people in the province who right now, hon. member, think it is unacceptable and that it is poorly drafted. So if the Senate of Canada can overturn a private member's bill, the first time in 85 years – I'm not going to comment any further on that.

Certainly, one of the Senate's responsibilities is to have a second look at legislation, and this committee system that is set up in this province can do exactly the same thing if it is the will of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

10:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that every month taxpayers are putting out approximately $160,000 to members of committees, and that's a very lowball estimate, do you not believe those committees should be meeting at least once a month to discuss important issues such as this one?

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree that those committees should be meeting frequently. I think idle hands are the devil's workshop, and certainly whenever we look at that big government caucus, there's a lot of mischief going on there. [interjection] Well, you have a caucus meeting tomorrow morning, and the longer we're here tonight, the crankier you're going to be, as far as I can see.

I certainly think those committees should be meeting quite frequently, and there are lots of issues, not only Bill 29, that they could have a look at. There are lots of other issues as well, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on the amendment.

Mr. Kang: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on the amendment brought by the Member for Calgary-Currie, that:

Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is going to have a great impact, a far-reaching impact and outcome for Alberta's parks and protected areas. It repeals most of the existing parks legislation, including the Provincial Parks Act; the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act; and the Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act. It will streamline the parks system by eliminating a number of categories currently defined in the legislation. Currently it's wildland provincial parks, recreation areas, wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, heritage rangelands, and the proposal is "Provincial Park or Heritage Rangeland" as the reserved fragile ecological areas would be deemed provincial parks unless they are grasslands and would be placed under the authority of the minister or the cabinet for zoning. This could leave a number of once-protected areas of Alberta's landscape open to a range of inappropriate activities.

As well, now all land leases in the province would be subject to the same notice provisions when they are altered. It allows for the creation of park zones within the parks system that would define appropriate uses for those areas, and these zone categories are not defined in the legislation. They will be created by cabinet and assigned by the minister.

It would create a public notice requirement of 60 days before any changes are made to any areas of the parks system. This notice is only required to be posted on the minister's website. Currently certain areas such as wilderness areas have high notification requirements. It will establish a delegated authority for trails in the province, which is likely intended to permit a coalition of recreational groups to oversee and manage the trails. It will establish a park conservation foundation to observe the particular mandate of the current Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. It will rename the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation the active Alberta foundation, and it will also create a parks advisory council to advise the minister.

Mr. Speaker, right now there are more than 500 sites and roughly 27,500 square kilometres in total, and that is 4 per cent of the total land mass. When we talk about the consultation process, the government announced in a news release on May 19 that it was considering overhauling the parks legislation. Albertans were given until July 17, less than two months, to fill out the online survey, which was considered highly vague and general by those who completed it. No public meetings were held. Conservation groups have told us that they were not contacted or offered technical briefings on the legislation. The results of the online survey were not even released publicly, as they have been for other consultations in health and education. This nonexistent consultation process demonstrates that the government does not really care what the public or the concerned stakeholders think about the legislation.

By referring this bill to the Standing Committee on Community Services, there will be more consultation done, and maybe this bill will be improved to the satisfaction of all the stakeholders. For those reasons, I'm supporting the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. One of the recommendations A2 is suggesting is that the committee process has value. Do you see the standing policy committee process as an opportunity to review, an opportunity to discuss? Do you think the committee structure has value?

Mr. Kang: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. There was some poll done, and 85 per cent of Albertans agreed that protecting the natural environment should be a higher priority for Alberta's parks than providing recreation even though both were considered important, and 82 per cent of Albertans felt that more parks facilities should be provided to accommodate population growth and demand. When the consultation process was done, there was not really enough time for Albertans to speak their mind on this bill, Mr. Speaker. By referring this bill to committee, by holding hearings across the province, probably, it will get the input from Albertans, and maybe we can improve this bill to the satisfaction of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order (29)(2)(a).

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that the motion that was agreed to earlier applied for the rest of the evening. If not, I would then move a second motion accordingly, that we have a one-minute bell.

The Deputy Speaker: I heard the motion, but I also understood that the motion applied to this bill. Is that correct?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: My understanding was that when the Deputy Government House Leader moved that motion, he was talking about all bells, all divisions this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: So we agree that for all bells the division is one minute?

Hon. Members: Yes.

[The division bell was rung at 10:20 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Bill 29 at second reading. I have been waiting . . . [interjection] Yes. I had an opportunity to speak to the amendments, and I can also speak to the bill as well. It was a tough fight to get here, and democracy is precious. Isn't that right?

Now, certainly, one of the issues I had – and I was listening with interest to the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security talking about why this bill was needed. I heard earlier that we last had a discussion on this in 1999, and we had some changes, which are reflected in portions of this legislation which are to be repealed. There were reasons suggested that this was to be better, of course, but I'm curious why we need these agreements respecting the sale of land. Why is this at this time necessary? One would be suspicious of this government when you mention the words "land sales."

An Hon. Member: It's a conspiracy theory.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it's not a conspiracy theory, hon. member. It has been proven in the past. It's quite odd that a lot of beautiful land for development close to taxpayer-funded twinned freeways becomes surplus and becomes available and is sold for very modest prices to parties who always find time to make it to the Premier's fundraising dinners. I'll put it that way.

So I would like some clarification, and hopefully, Mr. Speaker, if . . .

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. MacDonald: Relevance, you say? Relevance? I would ask you, hon. member, to read this bill, specifically section 29, for relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that each and every one of us debate and discuss and put our views on the record regarding various pieces of legislation. I was sitting here waiting patiently for my turn to speak, and I was wondering how many members of that big government caucus haven't said a word yet this fall session. I thought: well, maybe I'll look it up in Hansard and see. But I know you would feel that I'm further being distracted by these hon. members.

Specifically on Bill 29 and section 29, agreements respecting the sale of land. The hon. member now seems to agree with my concerns around that, and I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. If we could have some discussion on that: why that is so necessary, which municipalities we have in mind, which parcels of land could be potentially up for sale and to whom, and what sort of restrictions we would put on that. Is it exclusively for municipal parks, or could it be six months later turned into . . .

Mr. Campbell: Condos.

Mr. MacDonald: . . . a condominium development. You took the words right out of my mouth. Yeah.

Those are some of the issues that, hopefully, would be discussed, but if we were to have another look at giving this bill a pass – don't send it through to committee. Don't send it to third reading. Just get rid of it and have another attempt at making a law that is acceptable to the majority of citizens, whether they're environmentalists, whether they're landowners, whether they're urban or rural Albertans. I think they deserve better than this. I spoke earlier about the plan that was tabled in this Assembly last year, and it was a 10-year plan. I don't think Bill 29 addresses that.

Now, why should we have another look at this legislation? Well, we only have to look at some of the things that have been said publicly about this. Whether it's in Canmore, whether it's in Edmonton, or whether it's in Calgary, this bill worries people. Environmental groups say that this bill will erode protections now in place for Alberta's provincial parks. The minister argues it's about making classification of parks easier to understand, not changing government policy. But, again, I'm going to repeat: so much of government policy is now behind closed doors and in silence.

Now, in St. Albert citizens have raised concerns. Certainly, other neighbourhoods have raised concerns. The Sierra Club of Canada has actually formed a coalition, as I understand it, and they got a week, November 15 to 20 – and this is the 17th – as Save Our Parks Week. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from Chickadee Creek, I'm sure whenever he goes camping, leaves his clocks, all of them, in Calgary, but I certainly am lucky enough to have a large, open-faced clock that I can view.

Mr. Speaker, in baseball you get three chances before you're out. In the Legislative Assembly here I'm going to give this Assembly one more chance to get rid of this bill. I am proud on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to now move another amendment to give this House an opportunity to rethink Bill 29. I know the opportunity to send it back to one of our standing committees: we didn't agree with that. But, certainly, I think it's time to put forward to the floor of this Assembly a hoist motion to once and for all send this bill back to the department, where it belongs, for further study. I would like to circulate this amendment – it's signed, and it's in order – on behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Riverview at this time, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We shall have the pages distribute the amendment.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. For the record this will be amendment A3, Mr. Speaker, correct?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, it'll be known as A3.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you very much.

Mr. Liepert: Three strikes and you're out.

Mr. MacDonald: Three strikes and you're out, yes. Unfortunately, hon. Minister of Energy, there are a lot of foul balls in this place.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview moves that the motion for second reading of Bill 29, Alberta Parks Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following, that "Bill 29, Alberta Parks Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

This amendment is again an opportunity, as I said earlier, for the Department of Tourism, Parks and Recreation to take this bill back to the legislative draft table and have another look at it. It doesn't reflect what Albertans are saying they want and they need in environmental legislation. It doesn't satisfy their view. It certainly doesn't satisfy hon. members on this side of the House.

In conclusion, I would urge all hon. members at this time, Mr. Speaker, to please take one more look at this bill and support amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'd like to rise tonight to encourage the Assembly not to support this motion. It is a hoist amendment. I think that it kind of flies in the face of the work that has been done in this province. As I have been saying all night, we had three years of consultation, where the plan for parks was developed through extensive consultation with stakeholders, aboriginal groups, park users, academics, and experts. They sat around tables and they came up with the plan for parks. One of the priorities that they noted in those discussions was the confusion in this classification system and how we needed a more robust ability to have parks legislation that could work for us in the future.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is proposing that we have enabling legislation that creates the framework so that this important work can be done. Yes, that will allow for subsequent work to be done, so I again would like to encourage the Assembly not to support this motion.

At this time I'd like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 25

Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 25.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've had ample time to discuss this bill. I appreciate the comments earlier from members opposite. It appears to be what the Freehold Owners Association has been working for for a very long time. I hope they are satisfied with this amendment.

Certainly, it is a pleasure to support Bill 25. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. Speaking to Bill 25, this is an example of when members of this House are able to agree. Bill 25 basically stands up for the rights of individuals, those who have freehold mineral rights. It's what we should be doing, recognizing individual rights.

Mr. Liepert: You're on the wrong bill, Harry.

Mr. Chase: Sorry?

The Deputy Speaker: Bill 25, Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010.

10:40

Mr. Chase: Who's on the wrong bill?

Mr. Liepert: It's not the freehold mineral rights.

Mr. Chase: Sorry. Minister of Energy, are we not talking about freehold mineral rights right now?

An Hon. Member: No, we're talking about taxes.

Mr. Chase: The point I was trying to make, Mr. Speaker, before I was assisted by the Minister of Energy, is the recognition of individual rights, and that's absolutely essential, as essential as the recognition of collective rights. Bill 29, unfortunately, doesn't do that. Bill 25 does. That's why I support Bill 25.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on Bill 25.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ensure that we don't have complete consensus in this House because that would be deeply disturbing to me. I feel the need, of course, to raise a couple of concerns with this bill. We've gone through it in a certain amount of detail, but it appears to me that what this bill does is that it's not changing the rights or giving new rights to freehold mineral rights owners, as far as I can tell; rather, all it is doing is that it's restructuring the way in which the government can collect taxes from those freehold mineral rights owners. If it turns out that I am incorrect, then I apologize to those freehold mineral rights owners who I do agree have been advocating for some time to enhance their rights vis-à-vis their land ownership.

What appears to me to be happening with this bill is primarily that the government is giving itself more authority to assess taxes and then more authority to penalize for nonpayment of taxes and then more authority to take action in the event that those taxes are not paid. You know me. I'm all for taxation, being a New Democrat and everything.

An Hon. Member: She admits it.

Ms Notley: It's late. Again, though, also being a lawyer, probably even more unpopular.

I think that it's really important for people to have as enhanced an opportunity to have their case heard as possible. What this bill does is that it eliminates an appeal board and replaces it simply with the minister. I expect the minister is not going to spend a lot of time personally adjudicating taxation decisions, so ultimately what it actually means is that people who are unhappy with the tax decisions will have to go directly to the Court of Queen's Bench. Unfortunately, as we have heard many people talk about in this House, particularly in this sitting, we have a real problem in terms of access to justice in this province. We have a real problem in terms of access to the courts, we have a problem with delay in the court system, and we have a problem with access to legal counsel in the system and the cost of legal counsel.

The fact of the matter is that not all of these freehold mineral rights owners are necessarily exceptionally wealthy people. What we've done, then, is that we've taken away an administrative tribunal that is user friendly and replaced it with the obligation for these folks to go to the Court of Queen's Bench and pay the additional costs associated with that should they be unhappy with the level of taxation imposed upon them by the minister.

This, to me, is not actually a win for the freehold mineral rights owners. Again, I apologize to them if we've misinterpreted what this bill is designed to do. This being what I think it is, we cannot support this bill as we believe it will be an additional cost to these particular Albertans, and that would be unfortunate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to actually – I wouldn't suggest apologize, but I want to thank the Minister of Energy for clarifying the remainder of the bill's title. It's not just about, as the minister noted, freehold mineral rights, but it's the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010. I thank the Minister of Energy for pointing that out because there is a distinction.

I'm just wondering. To the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration would allow me to continue, I'd gladly do so.

My question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is: does she see Bill 25, the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Amendment Act, 2010, falling into the same category as the Alberta Parks Act, Bill 29, in terms of extending ministerial discretion as opposed to legislative appeal processing?

Ms Notley: I will say that in my very brief review of the act I suppose one could argue that it enhances the role of the minister in terms of replacing an appeal board with the minister, but since I suspect that what will actually happen is that most of that work will go to a court, really what this is about is moving that adjudicative function from a more user-friendly setting to the courts. To the extent that appellants are unable to afford the court system, then there's no question that this does take authority from the board and give it to the minister, so at that level it does in fact do what the Member for Calgary-Varsity suggests.

I think the bigger concern simply is about removing an avenue of appeal that is relatively accessible and replacing it with an avenue of appeal which is not relatively accessible, thereby infringing on the rights of this particular group of Albertans in the process.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize hon. members to speak on the bill.

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Bill 19

Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 19.

Just to remind all members, this bill will allow for the implementation of renewable-fuel standards in Alberta and will clarify some of the tax provisions to make sure that we don't have discriminatory, unintended consequences as a result of introducing renewable fuels in this province. My recollection is that there's been broad-based support for this bill at first and second readings and in committee, so I anticipate that members will have relatively few questions and comments at third reading. However, I welcome their comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very good bill. It's a pleasure to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

10:50

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. mover of Bill 19, the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, had indicated that in third reading he would provide me with two answers, so possibly he's passed those answers on to the Minister of Environment. Very quickly, the questions I asked had to do with: would Bill 19 potentially lead towards a requirement of a certain amount of renewable fuels, ethanol for example, being mandated for use in the province of Alberta?

Then my other question was: did this interfere with the extension to the TILMA act? I'm afraid I'm forgetting the number, but it involved having fair prices for Alberta gas transport users. I asked the question: by improving the playing field in Alberta, does that potentially contradict the competitive practices with British Columbia and Saskatchewan?

Hon. Minister of Environment, if you didn't have a chance to receive the answers to that research, I'll understand and look forward to those answers being tabled later, but I did want to raise them.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having accomplished a significant amount of good work tonight, I would like to move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:52 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 18, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent this weekend. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For several years this Legislature has been the host site for the regional Historica Fair. In 2007 the Legislative Assembly Office initiated an award to recognize Historica Fair participants who demonstrate outstanding achievement in celebrating an aspect of Canadian parliamentary democracy, governance, or political history with a specific focus on Alberta. It's my pleasure to introduce this year's award winner.

Wendy Dyjur was a grade 6 student at the Vital Grandin school in St. Albert last spring when she created an excellent presentation on the role of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, an interesting topic, indeed. It turns out that Wendy's grandfather, who I'm sure is not very well known in this House, Dr. Steve West, formerly sat in this Chamber as a member and as a cabinet minister. She tells us that she learned a great deal from interviewing him for her project. I'm sure she did. Wendy is accompanied by her father, Duane Dyjur, her grandfather, Dr. Steve West, and her brother and sister, Raeah and Morgan Dyjur. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly eight students from the Yellowhead school, accompanied by their teachers, Brian Gizzie and I'm not sure if the next one is Janet Green or Lynn Howard. Nonetheless, I appreciate them always anyway. The Yellowhead school has a great motto. That motto, which is certainly suitable for us here, is Make Good Decisions. I would ask the group to please now rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of 35 visitors from the Suzuki charter school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The Suzuki charter school is planning a grand opening of their new school in our community, the former Capilano elementary school, which was forced into closure by the Edmonton public school board this past spring. I hope the Suzuki charter school has many years of providing excellent education to students at this new location. The group is led today by teachers Miss Shannon Eremenko and also Miss Ashley Lloyd. I would ask the bright and polite grade 6 students to now please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 15 very special guests from the Public Affairs Bureau. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are Mr. John Dolphin, Mr. Jag Sandhu, Mrs. Jolayne Manning, Ms Alexandra Bain, Miss Sarah Lysakowski, Miss Marriam Adujan, Mrs. Candice Smith, Ms Karen Johnston, Ms Carrie Sencartier, Miss Lisa Glover, Mr. Ryan O'Byrne, Miss Wickens, Miss Jenna Turner, Mr. Scott Sehested, and Mr. Patrick Mears. I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent of mine. Krysteen Fitzgerald is a young police officer from my constituency who was diagnosed with relapsing/remitting multiple sclerosis in 2008. Unable to obtain traditional relief, Krysteen travelled to Mexico, where she had the CCSVI procedure concluded with great results. She is joined today by her mother, Carole, and they're here today as a testimonial for their hope that this procedure will be available here in Canada and in Alberta in the near future. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House visitors from my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They are five representatives from Archbishop O'Leary Catholic high school, which is celebrating their 50th anniversary this year as a school. I will speak more about that milestone celebration in a member's statement this afternoon.

As I mention their names, I would ask them to kindly rise, beginning with Mary Lou Forest, who has been the principal for four years at Archbishop O'Leary school, who is also going through some treatment for cancer at this time. Best wishes to Mary Lou Forest. The whole community is behind you on that, and our prayers are with you and your family. Tim Cusack is the acting principal. Leo Normandeau is a teacher at the school and has been a teacher since 1985. Line Savard is also at the school as head secretary since 2001. Ron Kutney, a former student who graduated from Archbishop O'Leary high school in 1964, has been a teacher at the school since 1987. Congratulations, and thank you for your service. I would ask all members of the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the child well-being initiative, CWBI, who are here today in an effort to shed light on the catastrophic issues of child poverty in Alberta. This is a multid denominational group who have provided each member with a symbolic doll bearing messages calling on the government to draft and execute a plan within a year toward eliminating child poverty. Would the members of the group please stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Dr. PearlAnn Reichwein, a professor who specializes in conservation, parks, and tourism history in Alberta. She has joined us today to express her concerns over Bill 29 and, frankly, her opposition to it. I would ask her, please, to rise. She has risen, actually, in the public gallery. Please, everybody, give her a traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House today Daniel Larson. Daniel is a fourth-year anthropology student at the U of A and has a focus in Levantine archeology. On campus he serves as the co-president of the Edmonton Hillel Jewish Students' Association, the umbrella representative body which advocates on behalf of Jewish students in the city, in addition to organizing Jewish educational, cultural, and social programming for the broader student population. Daniel has a keen interest in politics and wanted to accompany his friend, my legislative assistant, Jacque Lycka, on a trip to watch the question period and watch us in action here in the Legislature. If they would rise, please. They are in the members' gallery. Please, everyone, give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Archbishop O'Leary High School Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose earlier to introduce representatives from Archbishop O'Leary Catholic high school and congratulated them on their milestone anniversary of 50 years. It was my honour and privilege to be part of this very special milestone celebration on November 6 along with staff, students, and community members from the past and present. The celebration included an open house and anniversary mass where all former and current students, staff, friends, and many, many family members were welcome to participate in these special festivities. The football team, the Spartans, also hosted a special spirit day and alumni football game on October 21.

Mr. Speaker this high school has become an anchor in the north Edmonton community, opening its doors for the first time in 1960. All students who attended Archbishop O'Leary high school have experienced a long-standing tradition of academic and athletic excellence while continuing to receive an education that emphasizes strong Catholic values and a special sense of community amongst all students. As a parent of children who have attended this school, including members of my husband's family, I can honestly say that they received an education that is second to none. Students also have an opportunity to specialize their program at Archbishop O'Leary high school, which has always strived to tailor programs for all students to suit their interests.

The motto of Archbishop O'Leary high school is Viam Veritatis Elegi, we will seek the truth. I know that the students and staff both past and present have continued to live by this particular statement.

This school has played and will continue to play an integral role in the Catholic education system in north Edmonton.

I'd like to thank all students, staff, and families who have supported this particular school and the community. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today each member of this Assembly was presented with a small, colourful, handmade doll symbolizing children in poverty. I'd like to thank the United Church Women for reaching out to members of this Assembly and touching the heart, the heart of the matter. This child well-being initiative reminds us that child poverty remains a terrible reality, causing misery, disability, and untold loss of human creativity and potential. This travesty of leadership in Alberta, despite unparalleled wealth and resources, has grown in severity as evidenced in our food banks and our housing relief programs.

It's an issue that the Official Opposition has addressed many times in the Legislature. One of our long-standing policies calls for the creation of a child nutrition program to end hunger in children. For about $2 per student per day we could provide a healthy lunch for all the children at risk of malnutrition in Alberta. Could there be any better investment?

Substantial cuts to family support programs since the 1990s continue to contribute to illness, injury, and preventable problems in our health, education, and justice systems. All of us know that adequate food and shelter are the key elements of a stable family, employment, health, and achievement.

An Alberta Liberal administration would do much more, beginning with a comprehensive plan addressing contributors to child poverty with concrete targets and timelines to ensure progress on eliminating this scourge. We would also appoint an independent child and youth advocate reporting directly to the Legislature.

I hope that the child well-being initiative will help convince lawmakers and leaders that real action is needed now to combat child poverty. We live in a society prosperous enough to ensure that no child need live in poverty. What we lack is the determination to put our prosperity to good use. Children indeed are innocent victims. Let's all commit today to changing that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Children's Vision Initiative

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eighty per cent of a young child's learning experience is based on their vision. Our children learn through their eyes. This is why it's so important for all young children to have full eye examinations before they enter our school system. Alberta has recognized the importance of vision care in our children.

I'm pleased to rise again today to acknowledge the innovative Eye See, Eye Learn program. Eye See, Eye Learn is a program from the Alberta Association of Optometrists, funded by the government of Alberta, that educates parents on the importance of early eye examinations and that will provide a free pair of eyeglasses to every kindergarten student who requires them in most of Alberta's school districts.

Mr. Speaker, approximately 10 per cent of children start school with a vision problem, and this percentage doubles by the time they reach high school. The Eye See, Eye Learn program encourages all parents to have their child's eyes examined by an optometrist before they enter the school system so that they are able to reach their full potential right from the start.

Part of our province's commitment to ensuring that all of Alberta's children have the best chance to succeed is ensuring that all parents have access to the terrific resource. This is why the Eye See, Eye Learn program has reached out to our new immigrant populations by working with the Alberta Association of Optometrists and the Multicultural Health Brokers Co-op to provide information sheets in 12 languages, including English, French, Arabic, Farsi, Korean, Spanish, traditional Chinese, Hindi, Vietnamese, Filipino, Tagalog, Punjabi, and Somali.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans deserve an equal opportunity to thrive in our education system. I therefore would encourage all parents and guardians to take full advantage of the Eye See, Eye Learn program. Parents can visit www.optometrists.ab.ca for more information on this program or to find an optometrist near them. You don't need a referral to visit an optometrist in Alberta, and parents should be aware that eye examinations are covered by the province for all children below the age of 19.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud our government's vision in funding the Eye See, Eye Learn program and encourage all Albertans to take their eye health seriously. It's never too early or too late to have your eyes examined by an optometrist.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Elder Abuse Strategy

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to you about an issue that concerns me very much: elder abuse. I think everyone here would agree that seniors are vital members of our province and that, like all Albertans, seniors deserve to be treated with respect and with dignity. Seniors continue to give so much to Albertans, to our great province; they're our neighbours, our parents, our grandparents, our employers, our volunteers.

That's why it's an unacceptable statistic that up to 10 per cent of all seniors in our province are victims of elder abuse. Sadly, that number doesn't even reflect the numerous other cases that go unreported. Elder abuse knows no gender, ethnicity, income, or education level. It can take many different forms, from financial and physical to medication, sexual, emotional, and neglect. We know elder abuse happens, and that's why this government has worked to raise awareness and to foster prevention through efforts such as legislation like the Protection Against Family Violence Act and the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, supporting World Elder Abuse Awareness Day every year in June, funding shelters for seniors escaping from abusive situations, and involvement in partnerships such as the Alberta Elder Abuse Awareness Network.

I'm here today to tell you that we've taken a big step forward. On Tuesday the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports released a strategy that aims to prevent and address elder abuse. It's titled Addressing Elder Abuse in Alberta: A Strategy for Collective Action. It focuses on collaborating with community partners and all Albertans to work together to eliminate this devastating issue. We all have a role to play in preventing abuse, and the strategy speaks to the important part that communities and municipal and provincial governments must play.

Through my work as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta we'll continue to raise awareness of elder abuse. The strategy takes a comprehensive approach to addressing this complex issue. By working together with communities and governments, all Albertans will be able to assist.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Not only has the Premier lost the confidence of Albertans, but now he has lost the confidence of a respected member of his own caucus. To the Premier. Let's start with the basics: will the Premier accept that he is the one who bears responsibility for the mess in our hospital system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again we're referring to the ER wait times. This is, as I said, a problem in the province of Alberta, that I'm frustrated with, but also one across the country of Canada. There are solutions to it, and that is what Alberta Health Services has been directed to do; that is that to ensure to reduce emergency wait times, we have to find opportunities for people to access health through different means other than just the emergency response and also have more continuing care beds and a good community-based mental health program.

Dr. Swann: It was the Premier and the current Minister of Energy who created a health care bureaucracy clearly unable to fix these problems. Will the Premier acknowledge that creating Alberta Health Services has been a failure?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, by going to one board, we now have one CEO as opposed to 12 or 13, I believe, at one time. We also have reduced the number of accounting and payroll systems, all of those, to bring it down and take all of those savings and put them into the delivery of health care services. I believe at one time the estimate was around $800 million.

Dr. Swann: Well, how is it working, Mr. Premier? That's the question Albertans are asking, not: how many do you have?

Mr. Stelmach: It's actually working quite well because those savings have gone in. We will continue to find any efficiencies on the bureaucratic side of the delivery and put every penny we can into the direct, front-line services because that's where that money belongs.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government caucus is deeply divided over health care. One of its own members has now publicly stated that the Premier broke the written promise he made to doctors and to the people of Alberta in a letter of February 23, 2008. That member is right, as anyone who reads the letter will see. To the Premier: why did you break the written promise you made in February of 2008?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to a response to the emergency doctors during, I believe, the campaign, that made commitments to increase the number of nurses in the province, to put more money into health care delivery. Since then we continue to be the only jurisdiction in Canada that has a five-year funding plan in place, increased funding. Nobody has been able to make that commitment, and that allows our Alberta Health Services Board to build better plans for Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, that same member, an emergency physician, has written a warning to Albertans: “[I] do not feel comforted that healthcare will be any better with AHS’ inadequate plan to deal with the crisis . . . that we will be facing in the 4 winter months ahead.” If the Premier’s own caucus members are this worried and concerned about Alberta Health Services’ plan, how can Albertans have any confidence in what you’re doing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, let’s be clear. There are two elements in reducing ER pressures. The first, of course, is moving people as quickly as possible through ERs and making sure that there is appropriate accommodation for them in acute-care beds, a more permanent solution to the issue that they may be facing. The second is to make sure that we are reducing the number of people who access health care through the emergency wards throughout this province, and that is more community-based programs and more primary care networks. We’re up to 38 and growing. About 2 million Albertans now belong to a primary care network.

Dr. Swann: Well, one has to wonder how long this Premier is going to continue to stand up here and say the same things over and over again with no change in the front lines. Your own parliamentary assistant, an ER doctor, has lost trust. Will the Premier appoint a special nonpartisan crisis task force, which includes this parliamentary assistant with other health care experts, to fix this ER problem that Alberta Health Services has failed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the opposition is always looking at some other way of spending money in terms of looking to how we can best solve a situation. I have confidence in my caucus, I have confidence in my minister, I have confidence in my parliamentary assistant to make the best decisions. We are a family on this side of the House and will continue to be that family.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, I’m so glad to hear, Mr. Speaker, that they’re feeling like one big family. It’s so visible.

There were three suggestions from Dr. Soibelman, president of the AMA’s emergency medicine section, in the paper today. Your government has consistently ignored the wisdom and experience of front-line professionals, which is why medical staff are so low in morale presently in the health system. What action is the government taking in response to Dr. Soibelman’s advice? To the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: As I said before, in order to remove emergency wait times, we have to find more permanent solutions, meaning opening up more beds. Tomorrow the Alberta Health Services will be meeting with the emergency docs to discuss the proposal before they make it public on the Monday, I believe, of next week. They’re thinking of making it public once they discuss it with all of the health care providers.

The other is to increase home-care funding. They put in over $4 million in new dollars, about a thousand more homes, but there’ll be more to come in the very near future.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will the government accept the recommendation for diagnostic imaging services, at least, to be available 24/7 to get results quickly and get people in and out quickly?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, throughout most of the province we do have diagnostic imaging, you know, 24/7. I know in rural Alberta we have the capacity to call people back to the hospital to do the imaging. But we will do whatever we can to reduce the waiting lists and also to make sure that the doctors have the most up-to-date health information through imaging as quickly as possible so that they can make the diagnosis quickly.

Dr. Swann: Blah, blah, blah.

Mr. Speaker, we had a man commit suicide last week in the emergency department. We had a child die with a burst appendix in emergency in Edmonton these past few weeks. What is it going to take for this government to move on this critical issue in the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that a number of families have experienced tragic events in terms of loss of life, and our thoughts and prayers are with them.

With respect to the question raised by the member, I believe I clearly outlined what the Alberta Health Services board is doing and will continue to do. I know that the best way to see the survey, rather than looking at some numbers, is the satisfaction of Albertans as they see progress being made in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As much as this government tries to deny the ER crisis, it isn’t going away. Every day more and more emergency room doctors are speaking out. The Wildrose caucus knows there are far too many cases of patients who have been released by their ER doctors but are unable to leave the hospital because the funding for follow-up care is not allowed. To the Premier: will you please verify that approximately 150 patients at the Peter Lougheed hospital have been released by their ER doctor but can’t leave the hospital because the funding for care doesn’t follow the patient home?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I believe, over 4.3 million, 4.7 million new dollars are going into home care. That’s an additional 1,000 Albertans that can receive home care in their home. We’ll continue to put more resources into that area, but we also have to train more people at the same time. So that’s a continual effort of training more people in various health care capacities to provide the care that people need in their own homes or perhaps in a continuing care facility or in a mental health institution.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, our system is penny-wise and pound-foolish. We’ll pay for a respiratory therapist or drugs in the hospital but not if they go home. To the Premier again: are you aware that the funding is not allowed for the patients; therefore, they are kept in ER hospital beds for seven to 10 days because a respiratory therapist or drugs cannot follow that patient home? It’s a very simple thing to switch and allow it, and we’d save hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we have a better system in place, that’s growing throughout the province, and that’s the primary care networks. Most of them do have respiratory therapists, so if you're an asthmatic sufferer and you have some issue with respect to your respiratory tract, you can go directly to the primary care network. You don't have to go through a physician, but you can access that service in the 38 primary care networks, most of them in Edmonton and Calgary but also quite a number of them throughout rural Alberta.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the transitional nurses are not allowed to let someone leave the hospital unless there's proper care there. They don't have a respiratory therapist, they don't have drugs that follow them home; therefore, they're stuck for seven to 10 days in our emergency rooms. Will the Premier not designate a chief operating officer who has the authority to ensure that the funding follows the patient to wherever their designated home is?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that the opposition has, you know, a number of solutions to the ER issue. I outlined what we are doing as a government, but I can certainly understand the opposition's desire, especially that party, to use this issue as a means to take Alberta down the path of a two-tiered European health care system. I can tell you that we are not taking Albertans down that path.

2:00

Mr. Mason: Well, it's not for want of trying, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you that.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans should be able to trust the word of their Premier, but this Premier's term so far is littered with broken promises. It's not just the NDP that's saying that. His own parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness said this:

The Premier made a promise to the ER doctors in writing and has broken his promise not only to the ER doctors, but also to the seniors, the 1.8 million Albertans who present for emergency care and their 2 million family members, and to all frontline healthcare professionals.

My question is to the Premier. Why did you break your promise two years ago to ER doctors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I answered in the earlier question, I made a commitment to increase the number of nurses being trained in this province, to build the necessary infrastructure. Part of the way of resolving some of the ER situations is to have more continuing care beds. We will have our thousandth bed open this coming January. We're over 800 now. Our target is 1,300. So that is a good gain in continuing care. But we also have to remember that every month we see 2,000 seniors added to our demographics in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I got the e-mail from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness, and he says, and I repeat it again: "The premier made a promise to the ER doctors in writing and has broken his promise." My question to the Premier: is the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark right or wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I maintain my commitment to the emergency doctors. I said very early in the campaign of March 2008 that we're going to get everybody together to work towards one common goal, set aside our personal goals, set aside our differences. I can tell you that one good example is to have the United Nurses of Alberta come forward. They agreed to a zero, zero, and 2 per cent increase over the next three years. That's going to really help us out over the next year to meet many of the challenges we have in health care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I invite the Premier to step out of his message box and actually answer a question for once. The question is: is the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark right or wrong when he says that the Premier made a promise to the ER doctors in writing and has broken his promise? Is he right or wrong, Mr. Premier? Please answer that question.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member also has my reply, and he can see in that reply that what we wrote to the docs is increasing the number of people that are providing care in the hospitals and also to ensure that we maintain the infrastructure and build new infrastructure. I know we're going to take a lot of the pressure off in cancer treatment by adding three additional radiation vaults in Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Red Deer so that people don't have to drive hundreds of miles to Edmonton or Calgary for treatment. Those are the things that we're going to see, these big changes in Alberta that will improve our quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to ask about health care, but listening to the questions and the answers that have gone back and forth so far today, I am, and I'm going to ask my questions to the Premier. To the Premier: if primary care networks in this province are working so well, then why are so many sick Albertans falling through the cracks?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, they are working well, but the demand continues to grow for health care in this province. It's a matter of demographics, a matter of us doing more: more heart transplants, more heart surgeries, bone and joint replacements, many things that we're doing in larger number than we did before. I do know that primary care health networks are working because in just talking to those that are involved, the patients especially, the people who access services are very satisfied with the service they're receiving.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: if things are working so well except for this minor little annoyance that our demographics are changing and the demand is outstripping supply, if he can give us that answer today, why can't he and his government get ahead of this curve?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know why we want to point fingers at the seniors population and say: well, it's a minor issue. It's not a minor issue. We're all living longer. We're enjoying a good quality of life in the province, so let's not blame one demographic. We know that we're going to be living longer, of course, and we have to make those changes. As I said, 1,300 new beds added just this year alone with another thousand being added next year. That's 2,300 new beds paid for by the taxpayers of the province.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear. I wasn't blaming the province's seniors; I was blaming the Premier.

How much longer does the Premier expect Albertans of any age and stage in life to wait until things get better on the health care file? How much longer?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are improvements every day notwithstanding what you hear from some of the opposition members, but especially with the issues being raised here, yet calls from people that have had good access, have been dealt with with huge satisfaction levels, especially those that have been surprised with a diagnosis of cancer and have worked through therapy, radiation and are now here, healthy, to tell us the good parts of what we have accomplished.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Civil Forfeiture Program

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 this Assembly passed the Victim Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, and as you know, it enables the provincial government to ask the court for a civil order forfeiting to the province property either acquired by illegal means or used as an instrument of illegal activity. There's been quite a bit of comment recently about this program, and that's also prompted some questions in my constituency, the question being: so what are you doing with the money? What's happening with the money? I'd like to ask that question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the successful seizure of property and the sale of property by court order we've been able to establish the civil forfeiture fund. We've recently announced, just on Tuesday in fact, a $150,000 grant to the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters to develop pilot projects and added shelters in rural Alberta to deal directly with victims of domestic violence.

Mr. Olson: My first and only supplemental will be for the Solicitor General. It's good that we've got programs that are supporting survivors of domestic violence. My question is because of some recent concerns I've had from constituents, chilling stories about family violence, and they don't have confidence that the justice system can protect them from future violence. My question for the Solicitor General is if something more can't be done to intervene ahead of time rather than after the fact.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. There are some chilling stories out there, and sometimes the system can't respond quick enough to help people. That is why we established the ITRAC unit that operates under ALERT. It's a group integrated between RCMP, municipal police, and sheriffs, a multidisciplinary group that's very well trained and very well experienced, that provides threat assessments and risk management reports in cases of domestic violence and stalking situations. We've already assisted more than 400 people, provided 117, I think, formal threat assessments.

The Speaker: Is there an additional question?

Mr. Olson: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Child Poverty

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The child well-being initiative was launched three years ago in reaction to a dramatic increase in the number of children accessing food banks and housing programs. Sadly, this government's refusal to make child poverty reduction a priority has meant that the situation is no better today for the 78,000 Alberta children living in poverty. Affordable housing, a living wage, food security, and quality child care are essential pieces to achieve a reduction in poverty rates. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: will the minister commit to implementing a tangible plan to reduce child poverty within the year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this question. I appreciate the question, but I'd like to begin by thanking the guests that were introduced earlier for these precious dolls. I understand that 315 were made to create awareness of the reason why we need a poverty reduction strategy. Also, they were created with a prayer. I know I will cherish this gift, and I do look forward to meeting with this group later.

In answer to the question, as the member indicated, children are not poor; it's their families that are. We need to work together with all the ministries here that are involved in government in increasing the stability . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, I pledge my support to the minister of children's services in terms of trying to come together with a solution. I'll be glad to work with you.

To the Minister of Education: given that children have the right to achieve their full potential regardless of economic circumstances and that one of the most gnawing consequences of poverty is hunger, will the minister commit to implementing a school nutrition program so that no child goes to school in Alberta hungry?

2:10

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there is much good work happening across the province in the area of children's nutrition in schools. For example, in the Northland school division all of the schools that I've been to have kitchens and have programs in those schools. In many other schools there's a Breakfast for Learning program. So rather than building a big, province-wide bureaucratic breakfast program or child nutrition program that puts lunches in every school, I think the good work that happens in our communities needs to be supported. I do support it, both personally and as a department.

Mr. Chase: There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, about the good work being done by volunteer programs. It needs the co-ordination and the support of the Ministry of Education.

To the minister of health: given that poverty is the number one determinant of health, will the minister take the lead in ensuring the physical and mental well-being of Alberta's children?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of initiatives in that respect, and I'm working very closely with the Minister of Education as well as I am with other ministers because we recognize the importance of this area. In fact, it is one of the central planks of our first-ever wellness forum, that I'll be hosting on December 1, 2, and 3. We're bringing together educators, people from the municipal levels, obviously from the medical community care workers, and others to talk about a team-based approach that will help us achieve even greater results than we're already seeing today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

International Trade Strategy

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations tabled the province's new international strategy. I looked over the document, and it looks nice, but I'm more interested in the substance. To the minister: can she tell us what in this 40-page strategy is different or new?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to be an export-based economy, and this strategy outlines the kinds of things we're going to do, like engaging Albertans that live in other places to get involved in advocacy for the province, forming an internal network to make sure that we're not at cross-purposes between various departments in working together, and working with Alberta businesses abroad. We've had some great successes thus far, and expanding on this advocacy piece will be an important part.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First supplemental to the same minister: can the minister please outline how Albertans and how Alberta businesses were involved in shaping this strategy?

Ms Evans: Well, for one thing, Mr. Speaker, we now have a website, albertacanada.com, that gives us an opportunity for people to have input. The universities, the colleges, the cities, the regional economic development authorities, and the Chamber of Commerce were part of the discussion that helped us put together the materials that are in the report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second supplemental to the same minister. The report says that the province should expand the international offices when economically feasible. To the minister: when might that be, and where would these new offices open?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was asked that question today by the media, and the response I'll give him is the same I have now: until we are back in the black, until our province is seeing that we can grow programs, growing a program like our international offices, which might be very valuable to do and I thoroughly believe in, we'll have to delay until we have the resources. We have got Brazil, the Middle East, and India, where the Premier just was, that are very important trading nations. Opportunities for the future will simply have to wait until we have more resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Health System Acute-care Beds

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health and Wellness has stood in this Legislature day after day to read lists of new hospital beds and programs that he claims to have been opened. The problem is that there's growing concern that what the minister is really doing is opening beds in one area by closing them in another, like rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic. Total capacity isn't growing at anywhere near the rate the minister claims. So to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how many of these supposedly expanded services are really just reallocations of existing staff and beds?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would remember that one of the first acts that I did back in January or February was to ensure that 150 acute-care beds would not be closed in Calgary and approximately 150 or 160 acute-care beds in Edmonton would not be closed. Since then we've asked for more, in fact, to be opened. That's why I keep giving out these numbers, because they're not getting them.

Now, there are a few cases where some beds have been closed, and a commensurate same number might have been opened. The Peter Lougheed Centre is one such example. They closed 120 or 130 beds, somewhere in that neighbourhood, and they opened a brand new wing with the same amount. So there are certain circumstances . . .

Dr. Taft: The minister of health always seems to have this list of new beds to read from when he's cornered, but people are feeling he's played that game too long, and frankly nobody, not even his caucus, trusts him anymore. Will the minister of health quit playing his games and table the total list of acute-care beds by hospital so that we can see whether he's telling the truth or not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. The number of new transition beds that have opened are the numbers that I've been rolling out. The number of new hospice beds are the numbers I've been rolling out. There will be some detox beds. There are 21 brand new medical assessment unit beds, that were just announced last week, at the Royal Alex. Those are brand new beds. They also have six observational unit beds. Those are brand new beds. I don't know how much clearer you might want that to be. I could try and give you other numbers if time would permit.

Dr. Taft: Well, those brand new beds are being created because they're closing similar numbers somewhere else in the same facilities. Albertans put their lives on the line when they go to our hospitals, so will the minister put his job on the line? If the medical assessment units that have been opened at various hospitals are just reallocations of existing staff and beds instead of real expansions of total capacity, will he resign for misleading this Assembly?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, you know, the member is so far off base. These are net new beds in most cases. That is additional capacity that's being added. In fact, with respect to the 250 new beds that were announced back on October 20, that results in 230 new full-time equivalents having to be hired. That's new people. I don't know why he's continuing to mislead folks with the information, that is clearly false, which he's giving out. It's just not right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Michener Hill Village

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to hear from constituents and their family members who are concerned about stories they are hearing regarding care services at Michener Hill Village during this transition period. They want assurance that appropriate and adequate care is being provided. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what actions have you taken to assure families and the people of Red Deer that the safety and care of residents is absolutely secure at this facility?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the folks at Alberta Health Services, in fact, were asked to complete a site visit of the Extendicare Michener Hill centre. They did that yesterday, hon. member. They toured this brand new 280-bed facility. As part of that they went in there to look at the standards of care that were being provided and to see where improvements might need to be made. However, as with any major move such as this you have to allow a little bit of time to address some of the challenges that inevitably arise, and that is being done.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. These concerns have been ongoing since Michener Hill Village opened in September of this year. How can we assure residents and their families that any concerns going forward will be addressed promptly and to their satisfaction?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that, too, is in fact occurring. Alberta Health Services is continuously monitoring all of the sites, including this one. With respect to Extendicare Michener Hill, in fact, they have asked their patient concerns officer to become even more directly involved to ensure that the standards of care are being met so that the safety, security, and quality of service being provided is at the utmost. That is part of this advocate's role.

Mr. Dallas: My second supplemental is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What are you and your department doing to actively support the Michener Hill Village residents? Where are the details?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that the safety and well-being of all seniors in care is a priority for me and for this government. I understand that there are concerns, and these concerns are taken seriously. Michener Hill was inspected by my department when it opened, was in compliance, and will be inspected again very soon. I have visited Michener Hill several times and spoken to staff, residents, and their families, and many of them are very excited about their new home. I want them to know that my department will continue to monitor this facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, an ER doctor who I'd trust my son's life with and also the parliamentary secretary to the minister of health, made a comment and quite simply said that the Premier has broken his promise. My question is to the minister of health. I want to know: since the Premier has broken his promise, will you validate the very extreme and sincere comments by the faithful member in your caucus?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Premier broke any promise. In fact, which other Premier has had the courage to stand up and say that we're going to give health services in this province a five-year funding commitment? Which other province has done that? None, to my knowledge. Which other Premier has said we're going to have a five-year action plan to accompany that and aggressive performance measures, which are still to be coming forward? That's what's different today than a few years ago. Dealing in the past isn't going to solve today's problems. Let's deal with today.

Mr. Boutilier: I asked him if what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark had said was true or not. You're basically saying it's not true, if I understand you correctly. Will you answer the question? What the member wrote was correct, and will you indicate in this House to the people of Alberta that what he wrote was correct? I will wait here until hell freezes over for an answer, and then I'll fight you on the ice.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's so unfortunate when a person who has been elected to this Assembly is so desperate that they have to jump so low into the gutter to try and make a point. You know, it's just so unfortunate. I don't know what the hon. member might have written. I don't have that information whatsoever. What I do know is that there are some overcrowding issues in emergency rooms in some cases, and we're addressing those. There is a plan, and there will be even more progress between now and Christmas.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I will table that, given what the minister has just said. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark copied you on the e-mail, and you're saying you don't know what he wrote. Is what you just said in this House true?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, when this member gets so emotional, you never know what memo he's referring to or what exact e-mail he might be referring to. I get about 300 e-mails per day, and there are occasions when I'm a few days behind. That's just the reality of being in this office. However, if he wants to send me something over so that I can have a look at what it is that he's confusing himself about, I'll be happy to clarify it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Termination Benefits for Former Health Managers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last two years this lavish government set aside $45 million from the health budget to gold-plate the extra pensions of the 119 very lucky Health Services managers. Jack Davis was one of them, and he now receives a $22,000 pension for life from this government – $22,000 a month. To the minister of health: is he your friend? Why was this $45 million spent on pension top-ups when the needs of patients in emergency rooms were ignored and those needs were so urgent?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the details of the contract that he's talking about, but when a contract gets signed, then the ensuing administration has to honour it. If the numbers are correct – and I don't know if they are or not. That goes back to a previous era. I'd have to have a look at it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it's not a previous era. This minister signed off on the Alberta Health and Wellness annual report, and it's in that report. I would suggest you read it, sir.

Now, again, published reports reveal that in 1995 there was one hospital bed for every 400 Albertans, and now there is one hospital bed for every 515 Albertans. Why did this government fork over $45 million for gold-plated pensions and not for urgently needed hospital beds?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as of March 31, 2009, my records show there were approximately 7,700 acute-care beds, and as of March 31, 2010, that was increased by 100, up to 7,800 beds. Clearly, the numbers are moving in the right direction. But that's not the only part of it. There are all of these other beds. There are a number of brand new long-term care beds, designated assisted living beds, mental health beds, addiction beds, continuing care beds, palliative, and hospice. There are so many beds out there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that in the last 15 years as we've spent more money lavishly, we have less hospital beds for sick Albertans. Now, again to the minister: why was $45 million forked over in the last two years for gold-plated pension top-ups when the Norwood Glenrose long-term care facility, which is urgently needed here in Edmonton, was put on hold because there was no money left? You squandered it all.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear that the Health Services budget has received a very significant increase this past year. We've also taken over responsibility for $1.3 billion of a deficit that they had, and we've assured them of a five-year funding plan. It works like this: 2 per cent to account for inflation growth, 2.5 per cent that will account for population growth and the aging population factor, and 1.5 per cent more for innovation, new procedures, new techniques, new equipment, new pharmaceuticals. That's the stability and predictability that we need and want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Competitiveness Review

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last several months I have spoken to many business owners and stakeholders in my constituency in Calgary and across the province. Many have identified taxation and regulatory burden imposed at the municipal level as their biggest barrier to competitiveness. My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. As we go through reviewing the competitiveness of key industries in our province, are we looking at total tax and regulatory burden imposed on business, including those at the municipal level?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the answer is definitively yes. We are partnering with industry in the competitiveness initiative to look at tax and regulatory factors that do affect the competitiveness of Alberta's businesses in the global market. I expect that there will be a benchmark report released by the Competitiveness Council in the coming month that will show where we stand on tax and fiscal issues and regulatory issues relative to comparable jurisdictions. That will serve as a benchmark for where we go from here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: once this report is produced, how is the government going to reduce the regulatory and tax burden on businesses?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the same four task teams dealing in the areas of agriculture, grains, and oil seeds; petrochemicals; manufacturing; and financial services will give final reports in June of 2011, next year, with specific recommendations to deal with regulatory issues. Also, we have had, of course – this is not something new to the government of Alberta – the Regulatory Review Secretariat since 1999. It's been very successful in reducing the number of regulations in the past and more recently has undertaken to identify cost of regulation as one of the factors that needs to meet approval.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister tell this House what he's doing to ensure that municipalities are doing their part in making our province the best place to invest, operate a business, and create jobs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are working with municipalities to ensure that Alberta's property taxes stay generally lower than other jurisdictions, other neighbouring provinces. The present financial support that we give to municipalities allows them to do that. Unlike other jurisdictions, Alberta restricts the ability of municipalities to tax property by different classes. In Alberta businesses with major infrastructure must be taxed the same way and at the same rates as some smaller local merchants. We will continue to work with industry and municipalities to make sure that they remain competitive and provide a competitive environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Long-term Care Beds

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's response to a dire shortage of long-term care beds in this province is to pretend that people don't really need long-term care and to push private-sector assisted or supportive living beds instead, but I have had reports that 30 per cent of beds or more at the Sturgeon hospital and as many as 200 beds a day at the Royal Alex are taken up with patients waiting for long-term care beds. To the minister of health: since hospitals can only move a person from acute or subacute care to a long-term care bed, why is the minister only funding new assisted living care beds? Isn't the government the bed blocker?

2:30

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's partly true, but in fact people who are in acute care can also be moved to a transition bed, and that's why we have moved some people into transition beds. That's why in Edmonton, for example, we have about 71 more beds in acute-care hospitals that are comprised of transition beds or medical assessment unit beds or some other types of beds such as the medical observation unit beds, so as to take some pressures off emergency.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Transition beds are limited time, and you've got those transition beds by closing something else.

Now, wait times for ER in Red Deer are the highest in the province for regional hospitals. Will the minister order that the Valley Park Manor long-term care facility remain open to help seniors get off long-term care wait lists and open up hospital beds in Red Deer?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the staff working at the Red Deer regional hospital are doing a fantastic job in emergency and elsewhere. We were just in touch with them through my office a few days ago, and I have to tell you that on certain days this month they got it well settled. There were zero emergency in-patients on a day or two of those past several days, and they're moving in the very right direction with the way that they're providing care there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the minister of health's continuing care strategy, page 12, states that the province will propose incentives for outside partnerships for construction of supportive living accommodations and therefore won't create any new, additional long-term care beds, why is the minister pretending that he is creating long-term care beds when he is not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are. Just to follow through, Extencare Michener in Red Deer just created 280 beds, new beds. That's an additional capacity of about 60 beds, and many of those 280 beds are new long-term care beds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Commercial Vehicle Weight Regulation

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within Whitecourt-Ste. Anne hundreds of log haul contractors have millions of dollars of investments in their equipment. These folks are the wealth generators in this province. There seems to be a movement within Transportation to make these log contractors and their equipment obsolete, especially their log trailers that have track width less than 2.9 metres and were built prior to 2001. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. What's driving this ludicrous change?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell this hon. member that safety is very, very important to this ministry, and that just about drives everything we do within the ministry. Occupational health and safety had concerns about winter weight loads being hauled on trailers with narrower tracks, so a study was done that showed that the wider-tracked trailers were more stable for these heavier winter weights. The changes are being phased in over a 15-year period of time.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, here we go: another study. Boy.

Given that these trailers are meeting the safety standards and are very expensive to replace, will you find a way for this equipment to remain in service?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member brings up a very good point in that narrow-track trailers can be operated very safely within winter weights, but it's a simple matter that these wider-track trailers are even quite a bit more stable. That's one of the reasons that I agreed to extend the original 10-year phase-in until the spring of 2016. This will give industry some extra time to either replace those trailers or retrofit the axles that are on them. This is about finding a balance between safety . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member, please.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I accept that probably a good way to resolve this issue is giving them that extension.

Are there any new rules or regulations that you're considering that'll cause undue harm to this industry? I need to know that before I go home this weekend.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell this member – I want this member to know – that there's no bigger supporter of this industry than this government. I'd like to point out that it's just the winter weights on narrow trailers that are being phased out, not the trailers themselves. The industry does have a choice and can continue using the narrow trailers after 2016 if they're just hauling the standard weights. We consulted extensively – and I know you want me to sit down now.

Hate Crimes

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Children and Youth Services questioned my motivation for raising the concerns of the Devine family in this Assembly. I can assure her that my only motivation is that I'm trying to do my job, and it's time for the minister to start doing hers. Yesterday in this House the minister stated that her employees are doing good work, but in simple conversation with the Devine family this contradicts that statement. I'd ask: does the minister know what's going on in her department, or does she just not care about the facts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that my department, my staff are firmly focused on the best interests of children. I can also assure you I know that that is my job, that that is their job. I really think it's too bad that this member cannot make that same claim.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I have a sworn statement here that shows that after the Devines were victims of a vicious home invasion, your staff tried to bully the Devine family, alleging that their social activism detrimentally affected their abilities as parents. I call that victimizing the family, but you seem to think that's a job well done. How about finally admitting your mistake and apologizing to them?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, this member is asking me to take him seriously in bringing whatever it is that he's bringing to the floor of the Assembly in the way that he does. Yesterday in Hansard – and it was the day, as you know, that we were recognizing the rights of the child – this member called the situation that he just described now “absurd and, frankly,” that he finds it “a little bit comical.” I can tell you that there's absolutely nothing comical about this situation. Also, I can tell you the information that you have is inaccurate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, what I'd said was that the minister's response to me was absurd and comical, and I'll say that again. Her response today is absurd and comical as well. It's not dealing with this situation.

Instead of being able to help the police with their investigation or to comfort their battered family, the Devine family became the victim of a witch hunt by Children and Youth Services because of their beliefs. I want to know what the minister's justification is for violating Mr. and Mrs. Devine's fundamental freedoms, contained in section 2 of the Charter.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I go back to this, and I said this earlier, and you know this as well. Even for how you're bringing this to the floor of the Assembly, you were very clear about this. There was absolutely nothing that was in place or a process, policy, procedure that was violated in any way through this ministry. In fact, what you're bringing here is absurd.

I can tell you as well, Mr. Speaker, that my obligations are clearly spelled out in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and in FOIP legislation. It says that the minister shall preserve confidentiality with respect to personal information that comes to the Minister's . . . attention . . . and shall not disclose or communicate that information except in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Wintertime Highway Maintenance

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the first snowfall there's always a lot of adjustment needed by drivers to adapt to the road conditions, but the experience on highway 2 in the last two days begs some questions to the Minister of Transportation. Mr. Minister, has your department reduced winter maintenance standards on Alberta's busiest highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. In fact, our contractors have increased the number of plows and operators on Alberta's major routes in recent years. Thankfully, we had some advance warning of last night's storms, and our contractors were out there creating the best road conditions possible given the weather. Our methods and standards are so good that other provinces and countries have adopted them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, many of my constituents travel highway 2 on a daily basis and are very concerned about the amount of drifting on the highway and want to know why more isn't being done. Does your department have a policy on using snow fences or other methods to combat drifting?

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do use snow fencing in certain areas where drifting is quite common. The area that this member refers to is not traditionally that high a drift area, but when we get winds from unusual directions, such as what occurred last night by Leduc, we will get drifting there. My department and its contractors use a number of different tools in places where they will do the most good.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: what can be done, Mr. Minister, to ensure that plows respond earlier in a snowfall and don't wait until significant accumulations before they get out on the highways?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we know, there's a lot more technology that we have today. Our contractors use a lot of this advanced technology to help them respond proactively to weather conditions. We have over 75 road weather information stations on our highways that our contractors can access to help them better predict where and when the snow and ice will build up the most or likely be. In addition to the advanced technology, our contractors are out on those roads while the rest of us are sleeping. They get out there, and they check road conditions and get ready to deal with those conditions.

As I mentioned earlier, in my first answer, Mr. Speaker, there are more plows out today than there have been in the past.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. There were 106 questions and responses.

I'd just like to advise hon. members that on Monday international recording artist Gord Bamford will be in the Assembly to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

In a few seconds from now we'll return to our Routine, in about 15 seconds. We have a very tight 18 minutes ahead of us.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Calgary-North Hill Constituency Round-table

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As all hon. members know, the most important aspect of our job is to listen to our constituents. Lately there has been a lot of talk about how social media can make this an easier proposition, and in many respects that sentiment is true. However, I have found that nothing replaces face-to-face contact. Beyond the requirement to listen, it is also important for hon. members to facilitate and engage their constituents in important policy matters and discussions.

For these reasons I put considerable effort into periodically hosting round-table discussions. A week ago Wednesday I hosted the sixth round-table discussion since being elected to this House as the Member for Calgary-North Hill. Last Wednesday's topic was education. More specifically, we discussed ideas put forth in the inspiring action on education framework and future potential changes to the current School Act. Other topics have ranged from discussions on energy, the environment, the economy, provincial budgets, health care, even urban inner-city community challenges. These discussions are purposely focused and have provided me, the representative, with some very broad and specific knowledge about topics from the constituents that I serve.

In total approximately 50 community volunteers, opinion leaders, advocates, and activists in the Calgary-North Hill constituency have participated in one or more of these discussions. These individuals range from seniors, community association board members, high school students, small-business owners, school and parent council volunteers, locally elected representatives, and average citizens with extraordinary passions.

Mr. Speaker, as you are quite aware along with many hon. members of this House, no matter how hard we try, it's impossible to talk to each and every citizen in our constituency. However, utilizing a format such as a round-table discussion that includes a good cross-section of participants is a great opportunity to get feedback on important issues. I want to thank all of those that have participated not only for their time but their passion and dedication in making our province and the communities in Calgary-North Hill the best places to live, work, invest, and raise a family.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Cheremosh Ukrainian Dance Company

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are proud of the outstanding accomplishments of the Cheremosh Ukrainian Dance Company over the past 40 years. Many of us have enjoyed watching one or more of their exciting performances. Founded in 1969 by Chester and Luba Kuc, the Cheremosh Ukrainian Dance Company began with 19 dancers. The company has grown to include four performing groups, a dance school, and over 100 dancers at various levels.

Based in Edmonton, the company is a leader of Ukrainian dance in Canada. Cheremosh still passionately pursues the goals of its first artistic director, modernizing Ukrainian folk dance and conveying the history and values of Ukrainian people dramatically and effectively through dance. They entertain audiences and further the growth of the rich Ukrainian culture in Canada.

Since 1984 Cheremosh School of Dance has been hosting an annual festival. Every year more than 3,000 Ukrainian dancers gather to perform and share their passion for dance. The Cheremosh festival is one of the largest of its kind in North America. It is a rewarding, constructive, and enjoyable event highly anticipated by Ukrainian dancers of all ages. Through discipline, determination, and hard work Cheremosh has earned phenomenal local, national, and international success. The organization, mostly driven by volunteers, many of them former dancers, continues to grow and foster excellence in the richly intense energy and spirit of Ukrainian dance.

For over four decades Cheremosh has not only trained hundreds of dancers to perform; it has strengthened and satisfied their desire to understand and celebrate Ukrainian heritage and has nurtured a connection with roots steeped in stories and bright colours. Cheremosh has provided dancers, volunteers, and tens of thousands of Canadians who witness the unforgettable cultural entertainment experiences a glimpse of the rich mosaic of Canadian and Ukrainian culture.

We in the NDP caucus celebrate the Cheremosh Ukrainian Dance Company's milestone 40th anniversary. We look forward to Cheremosh continuing to thrive and inspire Albertans for decades to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

National Philanthropy Week

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year in November during National Philanthropy Week Albertans take time to recognize the contributions volunteers, donors, and philanthropists make to our province. While one can measure the amount of money donated or time given, it is those intangible effects of generosity and support that are so important to our communities. Whether it is through Alberta's enhanced charitable tax credit, the highest in Canada, or formally recognizing Albertans here in this Assembly, our government understands that at the heart of a healthy, vibrant province are the men, women, and youth who continually put community before self. The last Statistics Canada summary on charitable donations noted that Albertans made a $1.4 billion contribution in charitable donations in 2007, so it is apparent that Albertans are some of the most generous, giving people anywhere.

But in an ever-changing social and economic landscape charitable and nonprofit organizations are not without struggles. A group can only go so far with monetary support alone. I'm very proud that our government, through a series of ongoing consultations and dialogue with charitable groups across the province, has shown that in order to improve things, we must listen and work together. It will be through innovation and thinking outside the box that we will create a thriving charitable and nonprofit sector. A recent Globe and Mail article spoke about businesses forgoing typical cheque-writing to support charities. Instead, they're using their business know-how to create efficiency; have measurable, attainable goals; and leave a sustainable, lasting legacy to help those groups to thrive.

Mr. Speaker, my call to action for the members of this House and for all Albertans is to continue to give, continue to encourage youth to volunteer, and continue to help those in need. It is that spirit of generosity that builds and sustains healthy and vibrant Alberta communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to give notice that at the appropriate time I will ask that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the state of emergency medical services in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, November 22, 2010, motions for return 14 and 15 will be dealt with.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the following annual reports: the 2009 annual report from the College of Alberta Denturists, the 2009 annual report from the Alberta College of Medical Laboratory Technologists, and the 2009 annual report of the Alberta College of Optometrists.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies to the Legislative Assembly of a proposed petition to be presented. It's a request that the Assembly "use the present conditions in the lives of Alberta's children as the lens to view and revise its policies to eliminate child poverty and its many manifestations in Alberta."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

[interjections] I will save the others, Mr. Speaker, for another day.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're going through the tablings. If you have their names, continue and get the tabling out of the way.

Mr. Chase: Okay. It's quick. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your permission to do so. From St. John's, Newfoundland, John Jacobs; from Hammonds Plains, Nova Scotia, Michael Slusar; from the U.S. Leslie Waters, Christine Lynch, Lisa Jensen, Russell Schumann; and Andrea Pfeuti.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling today. It's an affidavit of Mr. Jason Devine that goes through in detail the incident that happened at his house and then his interactions with child services after.

Thank you very much.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point under Standing Order 7(6) could I ask the Government House Leader to please share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week beginning November 22 and the government business beginning that evening.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, November 22, in the evening we would anticipate dealing with second reading on bills 21, 22, and 29 and then in committee bills 17, 24, 26, and 27 and as per the Order Paper.

On the 23rd in the afternoon in Committee of the Whole we would anticipate spending time on Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, and, time permitting, Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010, and Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, and as per the Order Paper. In the evening in Committee of the Whole bills 21, 22, 28, 29, 17, and 26 and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, November 24, we would anticipate spending the afternoon on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, but as per the Order Paper. In the evening Committee of the Whole on Bill 17 and third readings of bills 20, 21, 22, 26, and 28, depending on earlier progress and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, November 25, in the afternoon third reading on bills 24, 26, 28, 29, depending on progress and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in about a minute and a half we're going to have an interesting question. The chair has ruled in the past that if he had to deal with a point of order or point of privilege and if it started before the 3 o'clock provision with respect to Standing Order 7, we would continue beyond that. In no other circumstances have we ever continued beyond 3 o'clock unless there has been a request made to continue to deal with the business identified in the Routine. We do have an application from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre under Standing Order 30. We will go beyond 3 o'clock. I must recognize now that I guess in less than a minute I'd have to get up and advise all members if I'm going to permit this to go on. This is the first time we've had this that I can recall. So I'm going to sit down and see if anybody is going to present any motion basically saying that we can go beyond 3 o'clock with a complete Routine.

Ms Blakeman: I would ask the support and permission of the House to waive the standing order referred to by the Speaker in order to proceed with the Standing Order 30 that I had given notice of earlier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has rightfully given notice for a Standing Order 30 application. Standing Order

7(7) says, "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." The Speaker has notified the Assembly, and a member has asked for unanimous consent to go beyond 3 o'clock to conclude this business. So I will ask the question. I will ask the question, only one question. Is any member opposed to us continuing the Routine beyond 3 o'clock? If so, say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please proceed.

Emergency Debate

Emergency Medical Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, and thank you for the support of the House to allow me to continue. I appreciate that. The text of the motion has been circulated to everyone, but to put it on the record, I'm asking under Standing Order 30 of our standing orders here that the ordinary business of the [House] be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the state of emergency medical services in this province.

Mr. Speaker, a similar Standing Order 30 request was brought to suspend the regular business of this House some three weeks ago, and since then we've been unable to find many improvements. Mostly there's been only further decay in the system. Indeed, doctors that I've consulted say that there are periodic improvements, but those are relatively transient and complicated often by other factors like training and availability of home care. I'm conscious of the citations available under Beauchesne and the House of Commons, that I am arguing the urgency of the matter, but the issue of a crisis in emergency care across Alberta is compounding itself, with the urgency of the situation continuing and exacerbating.

For example, Mr. Speaker, we have had a hanging in an emergency room, and this absolutely should not happen. Aside from what has happened to the individual and their family, this person was in a care facility. There was not capacity to adequately supervise that individual, so we have someone who was in obvious distress and in a moment of vulnerability was able to hang himself in an emergency department. Aside from what happened to that individual, just imagine being the staffperson who eventually found him.

We've had another miscarriage in a waiting room in Calgary. Now, that was brought to the attention of the government in the July 2008 memo from the ER doctors, and there has been no improvement and no change there. We've had a child dying in emergency with a ruptured appendix shortly after their arrival, and that reflects a failure to respond with full capacity. They did not have the adequate resources.

None of the 322 cases detailed by the ER docs recently are condemning in and of themselves, but the totality is that the system is not working. Other problems persist, like the number of doctors available, a lack of general long-term beds to discharge people to, and the lack of fulfillment of a mental health strategy.

I looked under the House of Commons 689 to 698 around urgent and important and requiring urgent consideration. While there was some consideration possible under the previously published projected government business, under the House leaders' business published today and circulated to everyone in the opposition and to members of the government caucus, that bill is not up for debate today. So under House of Commons on page 693 we are talking that the matter is related to a genuine emergency, and the importance and specificity of the issue is important. While we talk often about problems throughout the care system, we are dealing specifically here with a failure of resources, trained staff available, and ways of addressing the wait-list times in the ERs. That is immediately relevant and of attention and concern through the nation, which fulfills that part of the House of Commons requirements.

When I go to Beauchesne 387 and 389, indicating the primary concern and specifically whether there's opportunity for debate elsewhere, I have a long list that I usually run through for the Speaker, but I will note here that it's not before the courts, the ER issue was not specifically mentioned in the throne speech, there's no press release that I've seen, nor is there a budget that is going to deal with this imminently, no notification of a supplementary supply budget. Under opportunities for debate the Speaker himself often asks us to understand that Oral Question Period is not a place for debate. Under a government bill on the Order Paper we do have Bill 17. As I said, it's not on the House leaders' agreement of business today, and that bill specifically leaves all program details to regulations, so we have no idea how the government would respond specifically to this.

I also looked under Beauchesne 659 around second readings – and the second reading we've had earlier this week – specifically saying that this is about the whole principle; it is not regular to discuss in detail the clauses of the bill. When I look at section of 689, on Committee of the Whole, it indicates that there can be motions brought forward, but it is not on the Order Paper until next week, and we are not willing to let the intervening five days pass without the opportunity for more detailed debate on this specific issue. Based on the numbers that we are seeing for the last period of time, we essentially have a flatline in what's happening in our emergency. Even though the government has had this detailed since 2008, these lines are flat. So not enough is happening there.

The Royal Alex has the highest-volume ER in the province. The eight-hour response time over the last week has decreased, Mr. Speaker. According to the weekly emergency department length-of-stay summary, the wait times have increased. There's a percentage change there, and it's not to the good side.

Also, we're coming into the cold and flu season, where ERs are even more pressed dealing with the frail, the elderly, the homeless, and other disadvantaged, particularly the downtown emergencies. So the urgency of this issue continues for the House and for Albertans.

It's so urgent, Mr. Speaker, that a government parliamentary secretary has broken ranks to directly criticize the Premier, the minister, and the government. I can think of no better way to illustrate the seriousness of this issue. If I may quote directly from that member's memo, he says, please do not feel comforted that healthcare will be any better with AHS' inadequate plan to deal with the crisis [that's the ER crisis] and disasters that we will be facing in the 4 winter months ahead," referring, as I said, to an influx of the cold and flu season.

I ask the Speaker to please rule in favour of this motion and put the question to a vote of the Assembly. Thank you for hearing me today.

The Speaker: Let's really be brief – okay? – because I'm prepared to deal with this matter.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I don't think the system is in a crisis as has been described.

People need to know that there will be emergency care given to them if it's required. Nonetheless, I am prepared to support this motion, and I want to explain, very briefly, why. When a similar motion – and I don't know the exact wording of it – was brought forward on October 25, I knew that we would be bringing the Alberta Health Act into the Assembly and that there would be a chance to debate all of these issues. I was correct in assuming that, because the debate surrounding Bill 17 so far has been very varied, wide ranging, and so on.

Nonetheless, that was then, and this is now, as they say. We won't have another opportunity to meet in this Assembly for about four days as has been just mentioned. We had thought that we might do some additional debate on the bill last night. That was not able to occur because time was consumed with other important bills, and, similarly, it couldn't be scheduled for today. Nonetheless, I will support this motion, Mr. Speaker, for those reasons as well the fact that it would give us the chance to also clarify some of the misconceptions that some people may have. I'm sure there will be some new information brought forward as well.

It will give us a chance to talk in more detail about the plan that is coming forward to address this issue. I'll have a chance during the debate portion to talk about some of the directions that I have given, some of the requests I have given to Alberta Health Services, including things like the hiring of new staff, opening more new beds. We can talk a little bit more about some of the monthly averages, which are starting to come in the right direction. They're not moving fast enough for me to feel comfortable with it, especially with the flu season, which is now here. It wasn't here three weeks ago, but it's certainly here now, and we're seeing some cases. And I'll be able to elaborate a little bit on the discussion I had with the doctors.

So for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be very pleased to support this motion for a debate in this Assembly on the overcrowding pressures in some of our emergency rooms in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not going to recognize any other members on this point, please. I'm going to deal with the decision. We have a limited amount of time on Thursday afternoon. It's 10 minutes after 3. I will put the question, "Shall the debate in the urgent matter proceed?" because I've come to my conclusion that the request for leave is in order, but I want to have on the record why. First of all, the Member for Edmonton-Centre did meet the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office and the parliamentary authorities on the subject: Beauchesne in paragraphs 387 to 390 and pages 689 to 698 of the House of Commons.

I want to just clarify what happened on October 25. Basically, one of the rules says that you cannot deal with the same matter twice in the same session of the Legislature. On October 25 the House determined that the matter would not proceed, so in fact from that semantic thing we did not deal with it on that particular day.

One of the considerations that the chair must take into account with respect to all of this is the general willingness of the House to proceed with this debate. I indicated that I had already made up my mind before even listening to the arguments, despite the merit of the arguments, the background basis for this, including the fact that since we have started to sit this fall, there have been 54 questions in question period with respect to this subject, and there have been 108 supplementaries with respect to it. Clearly, that's 162 questions and responses on this one particular matter, notwithstanding that the Alberta Health Act has passed second reading and is in committee. There was an opportunity there. But it just seems to be of general willingness and interest because looking at the questions that were raised, they came from all corners of the House.

The situation is very, very simple. I shall ask the question, "Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?" after indicating the request for leave is in order. If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed. Each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes to do so until all who wish to speak have done so or until the normal hour of adjournment. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[Several members rose]

The Speaker: Without a count it's very clear in my mind that there are beyond 15, so I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to proceed with the debate. Then I will recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Did you allow me to speak first?

The Speaker: Absolutely. It's your motion. Go forward.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will cede my place to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. We're dealing with 10 minutes' speaking time, right?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed, for each individual that speaks.

The Speaker: Okay. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I can't think of anything more urgent that we discuss in our Legislature than this crisis in health care, that has been called close to collapse by a number of most revered professionals in the system.

I want to put a little context around it. I see emergency as the canary in the mine shaft. In that sense we have a whole system that is straining under poor leadership and poor management. The elimination of beds over the last 15 years; the lack of clear, distinct planning for dealing with the increasing pressures on the system; the inappropriate disruptions to the system; major reorganizations on three occasions in 15 years; and the failure of a particular structure now, which was based on no evidence and no world experience, have pushed us over the top in terms of the ability of a system to respond to either the regional or the more major urban issues that we've been dealing with with a growing and aging population, many of the things that we've heard so much about.

To get to the point, emergency room physicians, who are on the front lines of these issues, have said as far back as 2007, but in 2008 322 cases itemized as very poor care, unacceptable care, risky care, and preventable deaths went to the former minister of health, now the Energy minister, and to the Premier with specifics and requests for action. These were not even responded to. The emergency physicians did not get a response from that very serious request with itemized violations of basic medical care.

To bring us up to the present, there is an ongoing strain on the system, that doctors continue to report on, with intermittent deaths, in the case of a suicide. Indeed, it's my understanding that there were 12 suicides in hospital in these last four years. A recent suicide in the emergency department itself, a child with a burst appendix that did not survive within the emergency department because of lack of capacity to respond in time, and, frankly, the hundreds of cases that are reported by individuals to members about the suboptimal care, the delays, the frustrations in emergency departments for them and for their family members: this is real, human suffering that has not been seen in this province in the last 50 years. There is an urgent need, then, for action.

What is our solution? We have suggested a five-point plan called back to basics. Return to some regional delivery system. We cannot have one board managing a system of 90,000 employees across this province, ranging from prevention programs through early intervention, investigation, treatment, addictions, cancer, and end-of-life care. It is simply impossible to manage this from a single board.

The second recommendation is that we mobilize more family physicians. There are retired physicians. There are foreign-trained medical graduates who are prepared to do work in their communities and nurses who are retired and able to come to the fore.

The third has to do with long-term care beds. We have been at this for several years, and this government, in order to make short-term savings, is compromising the care for long-term individuals.

Home care services. These have been cut over the years, only recently put back on the front plate and being funded. If old people and disabled people are not supported in their communities, in their homes, they are going to end up in hospitals and in doctors' offices unnecessarily.

The fourth element is prevention. A lot of this is about early intervention, identification of problems, rehabilitation of people who shouldn't even be in hospitals and maintaining them as well and productive in the community.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the essence of what I think would solve the problem. In the most urgent of the cases we believe that a task force is now needed in the short term to move the system and the Health Services Board, that is not able to deal with this, clearly. After two years of flatlining, as we've seen, in emergency wait times, we need a task force made up partly of professionals in the system who see and deal with these issues on the front line. We need an array of experts that will advise this Health Services Board and this minister in the very short term to turn this around.

Christmas season is only going to increase the demands on the system, with possibilities of the flu pandemic, vehicle accidents: all kinds of potential problems that are only going to aggravate the situation. A task force is needed because, clearly, the existing advice and this existing board are not up to the task.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have received quite a number of notes. We will proceed in the following order for the next four: the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know this is a highly charged and emotional debate, and it's one that I'm going to enjoy listening to and participating in. I want to make a couple of remarks in this regard, specifically with respect to the overcrowding pressures that are occurring in some of our major acute-care centres in Edmonton and Calgary in particular. That is not to say that I'm not aware of some other locations such as Red Deer and so on where pressures also exist.

Nonetheless, I want to start by talking a little bit about the bottlenecks because this was the major subject of the discussion that I had with the head of emergency room doctors in Alberta just three weeks ago or so. Some of those bottlenecks we've already addressed, Mr. Speaker. We know, for example, that people who come into emergency rooms sometimes require overnight stay, what we call admitted patients or emergency in-patients. We also know that when the people then go looking to find a bed for them outside the emergency rooms, the first place they go is normally to the acute-care side of the hospital: where can we send these patients who need overnight accommodations?

However, when they get there, they find out that in many cases the acute-care beds are already full, so that's where some of the bottlenecks start to occur. That's why it's important to know that we have a plan this year to open 1,300 additional spaces in the community called continuing care beds. That's comprised of a different and a more comprehensive list of bed types: DAL, supportive living, long-term care, et cetera. However, we have 1,300 of those beds that are currently being worked on. Eight hundred, Mr. Speaker, have already been opened; 500 more will be opened very soon, before the end of March. That will help.

Similarly, a number of the statistics that I've already given I'd like to give again, just so people know that this issue is serious, and we're taking it seriously, and so is Alberta Health Services. We are working on it very aggressively. Those figures include the additional transition beds that were already opened at the Royal Alex and are helping. Obviously, there's more that still needs to be done, as our figures would show. We're talking about additional medical assessment unit beds, that I've talked about, that have opened there – 21 more of them have opened – four new transition beds at the University of Alberta hospital, another pressure point in the system; and as of just this week, I believe, 14 more transition beds that were opened at the U of A or will be within a day or two.

We're also talking about additional seniors' mental health beds that are going to be available at Villa Caritas, not just 106 but an additional 44 because that entire site now is going to deal with mental health beds.

In December 12 more detox beds will open in the community here in Edmonton.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, in Calgary. We know that at the Rockyview in September an additional 20 transition beds were opened, and an additional 32 transition beds were opened at the Peter Lougheed. We know that during the weeks of November 2 and November 9 a combination of 12 more transition beds were opened at the Foothills hospital in Calgary. We know that this week they're on track to open 12 more transition beds at the Rockyview hospital. We also know that by the end of this month 20 more hospice beds will be opened at the Peter Lougheed hospital and that by the Christmas period of December 15 an additional 26 transition beds will open at the Foothills.

There's a lot. I'm not going to read all of the good news, but there is something that is being done here. That's part 1 of the plan, to open up more beds to address what is some of the bottlenecks. Those beds are in the community, and some of those beds are in the acute-care hospitals, where emergencies are dealt with.

Secondly, I also want to talk about the additional staff that are being hired to deal with some of these issues; for example, staffing requirements for 250 beds that were announced on October 20 for Edmonton and Calgary for the period of October to December. We know that approximately 230 FTEs will need to be hired to deal with the additional beds that are being opened. Acute-care beds:

approximately 120 of them, Edmonton and Calgary combined. A total of 164 FTEs need to be added, and that will include RNs, LPNs, health care aides, allied health persons such as physiotherapists, other support staff, and so on.

There are a number of additional people that will be needed for the approximately 130 additional continuing care beds that are opening in that same period in Edmonton and Calgary combined. A total of 65 FTEs will be needed for that, including RNs, LPNs, health care aides, and so on. With 120 acute-care beds coming on, which are a part of the 250 I alluded to, about 164 FTEs will be needed there. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I want to move to the next point.

The next point deals with some of the monthly averages. I could tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the gains have not maybe been as great as any of us would like. But since we've looked at the September averages, looking forward to the first 14, 15 days of this month, I could tell you that the averages are starting to come down. They're coming down slowly, and they're not coming down in all cases – let's be clear – but they are starting to show signs of improvement.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Health and Wellness is that we do an even more aggressive job to bring those numbers down to where we really need to see them so that we can be better prepared as a health system to deal with what is sure to come, and that is the flu season. That will hit us. Well, it's already starting to hit us, but it will hit us even more. We're doing a lot to start moving those monthly averages down.

The first part is the beds. More beds in the community and more beds in acute-care hospitals, as I've said, will help.

The second part of this is to deal with other issues such as what's causing people to go to emergency in the first place. Now, there are two basic categories here that the doctors have explained to me, and remember that these are their words. Number one are the people with true emergencies. They have a real emergency need, and they should be going to the hospital, and they will continue to be given the best care possible when they do.

But then there's another group of people who perhaps don't really have emergency room types of situations, and they could be and should be going somewhere else. That's part of this Rubik's cube. They need to go to a doctor in some cases. Perhaps they need to go to an urgent care centre or to a medical clinic or wherever they need to go, but in many cases they can't access that particular system. In some cases in the province there might be doctor shortages, and we're addressing that as well. So it's not just one simple thing.

One thing that is going to help a lot is a third part. The third point is with respect to home care. Now, this came up in the House today, and the fact is that we're increasing home-care funding through AHS by about 7 or 8 per cent this year. It's one of the more significant increases in terms of that aspect of their budget, and there will be over $400 million that will be going toward home care. Now, that number without some relevance maybe doesn't connect with everybody the way that I would hope it might. What it means, Mr. Speaker, is that people who are in home-care services can expect to have better and more home-care service available for them. That will keep them getting the service they need, perhaps, in their homes versus having to go to emergency.

That doesn't mean that if they have an emergency, they shouldn't come to emergency. Of course they should. That's why we have two pilot projects in this respect. We have one in the Misericordia hospital since January, I believe, and one in Calgary. What it requires is for somebody from home care to be right there in the hospital emergency room doing their own sort of triaging, if you will, to help those people right away and then ensure that the plan is in place so that when they are discharged, they can go straight home and know that the supports are going to be there.

That leads me to my fourth point, and that is with the discharge protocols. We have to talk more with docs to see what kind of help we can get on rearranging our discharge protocols. At the moment it's seldom the case that doctors are discharging on Saturdays and Sundays. I mean, they need a break. They need some time off, too. We have to respect that. But if we could figure out a way to start discharging on Saturdays and Sundays, that would free things up for what is usually the busiest day in emergency, and that is Mondays. In other words, we could open up some beds by looking at discharge protocols that would speed that process along. That's another thing that we're working hard on.

My next point is with respect to the asks and the directions that I asked Alberta Health Services to pursue. I asked them to ensure that the performance measures surrounding people who are nonadmitted patients in emergency – in other words, those who do not require an overnight stay – should not exceed four hours of stay. Now, that's a target, Mr. Speaker, and that might have to have an ebb and a flow depending on certain overcrowding pressures that will occur from time to time. I've asked them to improve their protocols by Christmastime for that four-hour group and also for the targeted group in the eight-hour section. The eight-hour section: that group is people who will need an overnight bed for one or two or more nights.

So there's a lot being done, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. We have 61 minutes, and the next five speakers will be the following: the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, then Edmonton-Riverview, then Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, it saddens me that I have to stand up and once again debate the crisis situation in health care. Albertans are tired of waiting. They are tired of waiting for a family doctor. They are tired of waiting for an MRI. They are tired of waiting for their hip surgery. They are tired of waiting to see a specialist. They are tired of waiting to get seen in an emergency room and having to wait for hours. Quite frankly, Albertans are sick and tired of waiting for the care that they need.

Doctors and nurses and other health care professionals are tired of waiting, too. That's why they're coming to us, the Wildrose, and they're sharing their concerns, and they're sharing their heart-felt stories. They are sick of government promises as patients.

The superboard, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, has let Albertans down. The government has let Albertans down. The minister has let Albertans down. The PC caucus has let Albertans down, other than one brave MLA from Edmonton-Meadowlark.

3:30

Albertans are saying, Mr. Speaker, that they want this government to pay attention and they want this government to listen to what they have to say. Doctors and nurses, as I indicated, are tired of waiting. Albertans, quite frankly, are saying: show me the beds. No one can seem to give us an accurate count of beds that are available. How many are open? How many have been closed? All we hear is announcement after announcement. The acute-care bed ratio is 1.9 per thousand on average in Canada. In Alberta it is 1.2 currently, serving a population in Calgary of 750,000. We have over 1 million people there. Where are the beds?

Mr. Speaker, having been a minister of the Crown, I know how important accountability is. Albertans expect the buck has to stop somewhere. When there isn't any accountability, Albertans get lost in the shuffle. What I can tell you and what I've heard over the last many, many months is that Albertans want the department to run efficiently, they want the department to run with clear outcomes, they want the government to clearly assess needs, and they want the government to clearly set out priorities. More importantly, they want the Premier and the minister of health to answer the questions honestly.

What do Albertans want to see? They want a family doctor. They want cancer treatment in two weeks, not eight. They don't want to wait in pain for months or years to have a necessary procedure. They don't want to have to wait 18 months for a colonoscopy. They want to have a family doctor, and they want to be seen in the emergency sooner.

Let me give you an example of what I mean, Mr. Speaker, as MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek and as the health critic for the Wildrose. The Wildrose plan calls for immediate action of part-time and retired RNs and LPNs to staff ERs; increased administrative support staff for doctors and nurses, freeing up medical professions to focus a hundred per cent on their patients so they're not spending 10 per cent working on their computer as the new directive from Alberta Health Services. Designate a chief medical officer for every Alberta hospital, and empower them with the authority to make the decisions about the hospital units, even if it means usurping Alberta Health Services' directives. Move healthy seniors in hospitals waiting for home care, long-term care, or assisted living spaces along with nurses and support staff into, if we have to, temporary living accommodations until more permanent housing is available; accelerate the building of long-term care and assisted living facilities as well as home care.

Mr. Speaker, I can't praise enough the work being done by our medical professions. Our front-line staff work tirelessly to provide the care Albertans so urgently need day in and day out in this province. We also need to bring in different types of staff to relieve pressure in the system. Nurse practitioners are really underutilized in this province. They are highly experienced and educated professionals. They can take the pressure off our family doctors, and they can speed up access in our emergency rooms.

The minister often talks about needing more time or more progress to see that things are done. He's consulting. He's meeting. He's touring. People have basic questions for the minister: what is timely care? What is reasonable access? The Alberta Health Act bill puts that part in the charter but doesn't answer any of these questions. We've seen what this government has done before, quite frankly, and we've got lessons to learn from that. We've got the Mazankowski report. We've got the Kirby report. We've got the Graydon report. We've got summits. We've got meetings. We've got conferences. We've got committees. Albertans are tired. They want action, and they just want us to fix the system.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a few ideas of what will work, taken straight from the great advice this government has so wrongly ignored and what Albertans have told us: Albertans more than anything want choice. Right now they have to just take what they get. If they don't like their doctor and they want to find a different one, they don't have that choice. They can't even find a family doctor, quite frankly. Patients need to get the right care, at the right time, and in the right place.

There are some things that I have sometimes seen with my own mom, and, quite frankly, it's appalling. Hundreds of seniors are in hospital beds when they should be in a home. If funding followed the patient, that would happen. A sick patient would get treatment, not a chair in a hallway. A sustainable system needs the staff to run the system. We need doctors and nurses doing the jobs they've been trained for. We have doctors not being able to work because of doing manual data entry. We have nurses changing sheets. We need the right staff doing the job that they were trained to do. If we're going to look at sustainability, we must think about our senior population like my mom and, I suppose, many others who have moms. Those who have worked so hard in life need the proper care and the support that they deserve.

The government's records on seniors is dismal, to say the least. They brought out the drug plan, and that was a failure. The shortage of beds is appalling. Seniors' health is in a crisis also. Not only do we have seniors in the wrong bed and not getting the right care; they're now getting nicked-and-dimed to death. Nursing home residents are providing care to other nursing home residents because others are too poor to afford help taking their medication. Medication assistance from an LPN now costs a senior $260 a month. Bathing, Mr. Speaker, is $20 a bath. A night check from a PCN costs $7. Albertans don't want this. Albertans want solutions, and that's what we're hearing. They know how little home care is available. Seniors, as the Premier has gone on and on, want to stay in their own home or they want to stay together. Well, guess what? That's impossible because there's nowhere for them to go.

I have a mother in a seniors' home. I listen to the seniors at her seniors' residence. Seniors come into my constituency office to tell me what they're facing. Seniors are not being properly taken care of together. I'm dealing with a senior right now whose husband is a two-hour bus ride away from her because – guess what? – there's no room for him, and the facility they're currently in cannot take care of him.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are others that want to speak, and I know time is very valuable. I appreciate the member bringing this emergency debate forward. I hope that the minister is listening, quite frankly. You sometimes need to realize why God gave you two ears and one mouth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you left 15 seconds on the table; it's 10 minutes maximum.

I have a list of 17 members who want to speak. We have 40 minutes left, so we'll go in the following order for the next four or five speakers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon. I have a number of observations to offer, and perhaps the most important one arises as a result of the wording that is presented in this motion. The Member for Edmonton-Centre presented as the rationale for the motion for an emergency debate, "the imminent risk to the health and safety of Albertans due to the state of emergency medical services in the province." Well, Mr. Speaker, at least on my own behalf and on behalf of the members of this caucus I want to make it clear that I do not consider the health and safety of all Albertans to be at risk as a result of the current state of affairs in emergency medical services. [interjections] I think that's a bold allegation for which the members – that's their own wording – quite frankly, should be held to account.

If there is a duty of any of us sitting in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, it is, first of all, to recognize the tireless effort and dedication of the health professionals that deliver care in this province and all of the people that support them and, secondly, to express at least on our own behalf that we have confidence in the care that they provide, we have appreciation for their dedication to the people of this province, and we by no means believe that their work is in vain. [interjections]

3:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have such a shortage of time. I recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He has the floor. Let's listen.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, very much. I guess my second observation with the debate so far is that we appear to have a number of us standing here who have some ideas around policy options. There are basically two areas of concern, I believe, that we should be addressing.

The first, with respect specifically to emergency medical services in the province, is the question of how we are managing surge capacity issues in the system in response to some current conditions. Those conditions include a high number of visits to emergency rooms from people who don't have family doctors. They include the high occupancy of acute-care beds at the present time with people who are waiting for continuing care. They include a number of other factors, the resolution of which is directly tied to our ability to manage resources within the system, not the members of this House but the people that are appointed to deliver the care, the board members of Alberta Health Services, to manage those resources on a day-to-day basis in order to provide the surge capacity to ensure that people receive timely and appropriate care.

I believe and I know that members on this side of the House believe that the Minister of Health and Wellness has taken many, many very effective steps, provided the leadership that's necessary to Alberta Health Services to help expand that surge capacity. That's an important point. I won't take the time to go through the list of initiatives that the minister just mentioned, but of note: the addition of continuing care spaces in the province and the fact that we have 265 continuing care beds coming on stream this fall – interestingly, the 1,000th continuing care space to be opened this year will be opened in January – and the allocation of additional funding to increase home-care services that will supply a thousand Albertans this fall with home care, many of whom are people who are at risk of inappropriate admission to an acute-care bed through the emergency department without the availability of that additional home-care support; and many other factors.

Perhaps the most encouraging thing of all, Mr. Speaker, is a meeting that will occur tomorrow at the initiative of the board and management of Alberta Health Services with physicians, with nurses, with other health professionals and care providers to collaboratively examine other strategies that could be put into play to expand surge capacity at this critical time, particularly as we approach flu season. For that, I'm quite happy to leave the management of that issue to the minister and to those who are working under his direction.

The other issue, Mr. Speaker, though – interestingly, many members feel quite free to wax eloquent on questions such as the structure of the health care system, priorities, resource allocation decisions in the long term. I want to make one point, and that is that we've spent a week here focusing on some very specific performance measures introduced by the minister with respect to the time to be seen in an emergency department and the time to be admitted in the case of patients where an admittance decision has been made. Certainly, those are important indicators, but they are not the ultimate indicators of the health and performance of a strong, publicly funded health care system.

For that question – and I know the hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree with this – we have to look to the factors that actually drive emergency room wait times. I would suggest that those three are access to primary care; access to continuing care, leaving the question of the particular model of care aside for a moment; and, thirdly, access to mental health services, particularly for those patients who suffer from chronic mental illness and are endeavouring to live independently in the community. Again, without going through the minister's list of recent initiatives, I as a member of this House see tremendous hope in our progress on all three fronts.

Unfortunately for some members who want to continue to dwell on their perception of the adequacy of the day-to-day management of resources in the system and how we address that first issue of surge capacity, we have to wait a little longer, Mr. Speaker, to see the results of some of these initiatives.

In the area of primary care we're not talking about something the minister announced last week. We're talking about a historic agreement between the Alberta Medical Association, the former regional health authorities, and the government of Alberta in the trilateral agreement of 2003, which gave us primary care networks. For those that may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, a primary care network is a team of health professionals – I met many of them, including physicians but also including other professionals: nurse practitioners, dietitians, pharmacists, psychiatrists in the city of Edmonton, as a matter of fact 21 psychiatrists now providing services in primary care networks – essentially a home within the health care system both for people to access basic care in a community-based setting and also an opportunity for us to link other sectors that have a real impact on the social determinants of health.

My vision and, I know, the vision of many of my colleagues in the future is that we will begin to see housing organizations, vocational training organizations, other organizations that provide services that ultimately determine the health status of not just this generation but the future linked to those primary care networks as we continue to expand them.

If we consider the possibilities, Mr. Speaker, we're standing here today at a point where over 2 million Albertans live in a community that has a primary care network. We have some very important negotiations under way now for the new master agreement between the three parties I just mentioned, some discussions that will determine the future opportunities, I hope, for primary care networks. We can have hope that that very important influencer of ER wait times will be addressed.

The second area is continuing care. I want to say for the record, Mr. Speaker, that I spent the better part of the last spring and summer touring Alberta as part of a consultation exercise. I had the opportunity to talk to people, to visit a number of continuing care facilities. I think what's represented in the report that was tabled as a result of that consultation and the mechanisms in Bill 17 is that we do have an opportunity to move away from a health system that focuses on servicing the needs of institutions and providers and the transfer of funds to a system, particularly in continuing care, that is focused on meeting the needs of individuals and the families that support those individuals.

I am certainly open to a discussion of other potential models of continuing care that are person focused, that are family focused, to support the family that is helping to care for their loved one in that facility. I know that the health professionals across the province are very interested in doing the same.

The third area is the area of mental health. A lot has been said about mental health in this House, Mr. Speaker, during this session. I think we are doing much, much more. As I mentioned, we're providing more mental health services in the community through primary care networks. I think we need to look at other opportunities, not to fund more beds in institutions but to provide people with the services that they need and support them in managing their conditions and attaining the highest degree of independence that they possibly can in the community. We have all heard stories, and I'm sure many of us have observed first-hand the plight of many who suffer from mental illness in the community, the reliance that many of them place on emergency departments as a place to go, as a place to be recognized, as a place to express their concerns and to have their health needs met. That is a key driver, Mr. Speaker, of emergency room wait times for the future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, then Edmonton-Meadowlark, then Lethbridge-East, then Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this. I'm pleased that we finally have our opportunity to have an emergency debate on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a debate that is as much about politics as it is about policy. We've heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talk about all sorts of technical points, surge capacity, and so on, but I think it's important that we recognize some of the political elements in this debate and the history that is relevant to the situation we now find ourselves in. I think the history is very important.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that you can trust the Progressive Conservative government with our health care system. I think it's patently obvious that this is true. If you go back a few years, a number of years, to the Mazankowski report, which was brought forward by the then Premier Klein, it served as a blueprint for a number of things, including things like delisting of existing services, more user fees, and more private health care delivery. Of course, Mr. Mazankowski sits on the board of at least one large insurance company that would stand to benefit substantially.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think this is important, that we need to recollect that there are very powerful companies involved in insurance, in drugs, and in the provision of private health care that keep pressure on the government and on governments across Canada to increase the degree of privatization that exists in the health care system. Without understanding this, we can't understand the history of what appears to be a gross mismanagement over a long period of time of our health care system by this Progressive Conservative government.

It was followed by the third way. Of course, Premier Klein in response to me in the leaders debate denied that there was a secret plan to privatize health care, yet within a matter of months of that election we were again going down the road of a privatized, two-tier health system.

In the last election, of course, the Premier said very little about health care, but shortly after that election he unleashed the minister of health at the time, now the Minister of Energy, on our health care system, and the chaos that ensued made it very, very difficult for the health care professionals to continue their work. There was closing of acute-care beds, the suggestion that we should close Alberta

Hospital altogether, and there was a reversal of the government's stated position on long-term care during the election.

The Premier, of course, promised in his letter to Dr. Peter Kwan, president of the section of emergency medicine, of February 23, 2008, and I quote: government response to date has included $300 million in funding for over 600 new and 200 replacement long-term care beds across Alberta, and more are planned. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the NDP caucus was able to produce a report which is dated May 28, 2009, that says that the continuing care strategy targets a significant reduction in long-term care beds. Obviously, they're telling the doctors one thing, and they're doing something else.

I think it's really very much evident in the chaos that we've seen in our health care system that the elimination of the regional health authorities and its replacement with the Alberta Health Services superboard contributed very much to the problem. We went from trying to address a serious nursing shortage and a shortage of other health care professionals in our system to a couple of years ago all of a sudden deciding that we had too many nurses and we couldn't afford them. Now, my wife is a professor in the nursing faculty at the University of Alberta, and she had an entire fourth-year graduating class that could not get jobs because they had put on a hiring freeze, and in fact they were working very hard to reduce the number of nurses in the system through attrition, hoping to avoid layoffs, but, nevertheless, a reduction in nursing care.

Then came this budget, this budget that we're now working with, and the government again reversed itself with respect to that issue. Now again we're trying to address the nursing shortage, but of course we've lost a class, we've lost a year, and the chaos and the misdirection of this government continues to mount and to create more and more difficulties in the system.

One of the things that we talked about today and we've talked about earlier in the week is the attempts that had been made to create a community health centre in my constituency. We had a rally today at noon outside that facility, and there will be, certainly, more rallies. The objective of that facility was to reduce the pressure on the emergency room at the Royal Alex. While they have maintained and transferred the community health clinic to that building, they have yet to open the urgent care centre. That was designed to transfer or to reduce the number of patients in the emergency room that didn't need serious emergency care but needed urgent care, and 32,000 a year was the projection for that.

We've seen a reduction in long-term care, we've seen a tax on mental health care facilities in our province, we've seen good ideas that have been put forward by regional health authorities frozen by the Alberta Health Services and by this Progressive Conservative government, and it's no wonder that we're not making the progress that we want to see.

I don't want to just respond to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but I really do take exception to his suggestion that people are just playing games and that the problems that exist don't mean that Albertans are at risk. I just want to read some things. In September 2010 Shayne William James Hay, 34, hung himself in the Royal Alexandra emergency room. In February 2010 Shayne Alden Anonson, 44, hung himself in the bathroom at the Rockyview hospital. In January 2009 Nicole Theresa Laramée, 27, at Alberta Hospital strangled herself. In December 2008 Lorraine Adolph, 68, a psychiatric patient in Alberta Hospital went missing; her body was later found on the grounds.

Mr. Speaker, there are many more here on the list. People are in fact dying in our emergency rooms because of this crisis. It's more than government incompetence, but it certainly is that. When Dr. Parks first wrote to the Premier, he outlined I think in very clear terms what the problems were. The Premier responded, and I thought that the response from the Premier was actually quite good, that they would open acute-care beds and long-term care beds. But what happened was it was mere empty words, and the action that was needed has not actually started until quite recently, when the government was faced with this crisis.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it's got to the point where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who is the parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness, has said that the Premier broke his promise to the emergency room physicians made a year and a half ago. I think the fact that a government member who is an emergency room doctor and who is the parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness would in fact take that action shows just really how serious the rot is in terms of this government and its capacity to solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to all of the things that the minister of health was listing off. Some of these things have been offered and promised before and not delivered on. Maybe they'll keep their promise this time or perhaps not. I think the experience has showed us that it's unlikely that they will. I don't believe that this is just a policy debate. I don't believe that the minister is going to solve the problem. I don't believe that this Progressive Conservative government is capable of solving our health care crisis, nor do I accept that we should be dealing with more choice, as the Wildrose Alliance suggests. Mr. Speaker, I think the . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise, as all of the other participants have been, because I do believe this is an urgent issue and in far too many cases an issue of human suffering and an issue of life and death.

Over recent weeks I've had many, many reasons to be concerned about this urgent emergency in our emergency rooms. I've had a significant number of doctors contact me directly. These are not doctors, necessarily, who I've ever known before but doctors who are so exasperated that they pick up the phone and phone me or e-mail me or otherwise contact me as the health critic to express their deep, deep anger and concern about what's happening in emergency rooms.

We also can read some of the statistics that are published and see how our emergency rooms are performing: Red Deer, dismal – and it's not just the statistics; I actually get correspondence on this, which I have passed on to the MLAs from Red Deer in that particular example – the Royal Alex; the University of Alberta hospital, which is in my constituency, bursting at the seams; the Sturgeon in St. Albert; the Foothills in Calgary; and on and on it goes. The major urban and regional hospitals from Grande Prairie to the south are strained beyond the limits. It's well acknowledged that it's common in Alberta for hospitals to be functioning at over a hundred per cent capacity, so there is no surge capacity, to use the term that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford referred to. Where does it spill over? Into the hallways or the emergency rooms.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Sadly, I have to believe that all MLAs have had the kind of correspondence I've had from patients and family members of patients who have suffered badly in emergency rooms and who aren't going to take it anymore. Of course, as has been cited before, there have been quite a tragic number of deaths because of problems in emergency rooms.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark raised a concern in his e-mail that was circulated last evening about the upcoming flu season, and that's pending right now. That will add to the problem, and that's why we need to address this urgently.

As well, of course, if there's any kind of disaster – a bus crash or a plane crash or something like that, an explosion – we don't have the capacity in our emergency rooms to deal with it. We used to, but the long-term, grinding policies of this government have taken that ability away.

The outcome of this isn't just the suffering of the people in emergency rooms and the frustration of the staff. It's a loss of public and professional trust in this minister and in this government. As the public loses confidence, the nerves of this government get frayed, and that's showing in the responses we've seen in recent days. So much of this comes back to problems that could be addressed. There are solutions out there. The longer we delay them, the more difficult they become to implement. But there are solutions out there.

I mean, the Premier himself in a letter addressed to emergency room doctors during the last provincial campaign, February 2008, spelled out some of those solutions. He talked about expanding the number of health professionals. He talked about international recruiting of nurses, for example, and about expanding programs and facilities, but we've seen reversal and abandonment of those policies, which has fuelled anger and confusion.

I'll just give you, you know, a couple of examples for the record, Mr. Speaker. On the confusion around recruiting nurses, I'm reading from some notes here from about 18 months ago. We had been told by government agencies that there was a shortage of 1,400 nurses, and then suddenly, like that, the CEO of Alberta Health Services says: "No, there's no shortage of nurses at all. In fact, we have so many nurses, we're going to start terminating their positions." In a matter of weeks there was this huge U-turn taken on recruiting nurses. Well, are people confused? You bet they are. Are people jaded? Yes, they are. Well over $20 million was paid to buy out existing nurses.

Just as damaging, CARNA, the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, reported that 633 internationally trained nurses were eligible for short-term permits. They'd been identified, they were ready to go, and none of them were able to take positions. Now that is reversed, and suddenly we're in this mad dash to recruit more. It's because, frankly, I think this government just doesn't know what they're doing.

The pattern continues. It continues with capital expenditures. This minister promised in March to have the capital plans out for Edmonton and Calgary. Well, we're still waiting. It's soon going to be December. I need to put this to the minister. From page 12 of the continuing care strategy from 2008 this is an exact quote: "The number of long-term care beds would remain at the current number of 14,500 for the next several years." Now, there are semantic games that get played, and it's easy to get confused: long-term care, continuing care, supportive care, assisted living. The fact is that we are not seeing the investment in long-term care, what used to be called auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes, that is needed. Where are those people ending up? They're ending up in our acute-care hospitals.

These are all fuelling the problems. I really wish I had more time, but I'm going to just quickly wrap up by saying to this minister that it feels like every day in question period he's dancing, and I won't make that any more personal than that. He's avoiding the issues. Over and over he talks about the new beds that are opening without talking about the fact that in many cases those are just replacement beds. Villa Caritas: well, sure it's wonderful, except you know what? It's mostly replacing beds that are being closed. And it goes on like that. Likewise, all these new hires. Are we into net zero hiring? How many of those hires, Mr. Minister, are simply replacements of people who have left or retired or otherwise are out of the system?

Mr. Speaker, we have life-and-death issues in the system. There are solutions. I would ask the minister and I would ask the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who has some sway in this, and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and indeed all the government members to cut through the confusion, to take a courageous stand, to listen to the emergency room doctors, who are blowing the alarm as loudly as they can, and if necessary call to account the Alberta Health Services Board and CEO for failing the people of Alberta on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a particular question to you before I have to sit down. Many, many people, as you yourself have said, have indicated they'd like to speak to this. We are scheduled to run out of time in 20 minutes. I know it would take unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 30(5)(b), which would allow us, then, to continue this emergency debate until after 4:30. So I would ask you in my last moments up here if you would be prepared to ask the Assembly for unanimous consent to waive the time limit that stops us at 4:30.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Such a request, hon. members, will need two questions. One will deal with, if you look at your standing orders, 30(5)(a) and (b). The debate will conclude

- (a) when all Members who wish to take part have spoken, or
- (b) at the normal hour of adjournment in the afternoon on that day, whichever is first.

That's one of two standing orders that would have to be dealt with.

The other standing order that would have to be dealt with would be 4(2), which says:

When there is no evening sitting, at 6 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday or at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday, the Speaker adjourns the Assembly until the next sitting day.

There are two of them. One may be approved; the other one may be rejected. The one that would take precedence with respect to this would be the one dealing with it very clearly in the order, "The Speaker adjourns the Assembly until the next sitting day," which is 4(2).

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has asked that the Assembly deal with the unanimous request provisions that would have to be waived if we are to continue, I presume, until all members who wish to take part have spoken. I have 16 now on the list, and you can determine in your head what the time frame of that would be. Shall I proceed with asking such questions?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate where the member is coming from. I just want to make it clear that I'm sure there are people who have commitments that they must be at tonight. I know some people have airplanes to catch. I know that the weather is not good and that some people have difficult roads to navigate. As sympathetic as I am to the request – and I really am – I would hope that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sure there are a thousand considerations with respect to this. It just requires unanimous consent if the members are in favour of waiving Standing Order 30(5)(b), which says, "At the normal hour of adjournment in the afternoon on that day." If any member is opposed to waiving that – that is, that we would waive the 4:30 rule in this case – just simply say no.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Well, that ends that one.

The Speaker adjourns the Assembly until the next sitting day at 4:30. I presume that that one would be rejected as well. That the Speaker should not do that: that would be the question. Anybody opposed to the Speaker moving that, please say no.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Same thing. We're on until 4:30 p.m.

The next person that I'm recognizing, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Lethbridge-East, followed by Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Absolutely. What's the point of order?

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, just a point of clarification under Standing Order 13(2) on your reasons. If we're worried about the planes and the roads and so forth, can we not, then, extend the time, or do so when we get back, past the normal Routine on Monday?

The Speaker: The rules are very, very clear, hon. member. The standing orders are very clear, particularly 4(2).

I've recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Debate Continued

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour for me to join you and speak on this very important issue. I'd like to start off with a quote from Martin Luther King. "Our life begins to end the day we become silent about things that matter." I've spoken up – I think the whole world knows it now – on something that's really important and matters a lot to society. It matters a lot to me.

This issue is a nonpartisan issue. This has nothing to do with politics. Mr. Speaker, I'm in a unique position. I'm an elected representative of this government. I'm also an emergency physician. As a physician some politicians could think I'm conflicted because those can't mix. To be honest, I think politicians and doctors and health care professionals have the same goals in mind. As a physician I took an oath, the Hippocratic oath. "I will come for the benefit of the sick." I have a moral and ethical duty and responsibility to society as a physician and as an elected member of government to be honest to the public.

I'd just like to tell you a little story about my father. He was admitted a few weeks ago for four days to the emergency department at the U of A. He never saw an in-patient bed for four days. Definitive care was delayed because he never got to the specialists upstairs. Then he got sent home, and within 30 hours, on the day I was supposed to go to India, at 3 in the morning my mother called an ambulance. He had a heart attack. Thanks to Dr. Paul Parks and them clanging the bells, the emergency departments were decanted partially. He survived the heart attack, and he's back home now. He's had five near-death situations this year alone due to waits in the emergency room.

In 2007, when I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position, I called it a crisis on February 2. We had people dying in the emergency departments.

We had five deaths and about a hundred near deaths in the Calgary health region. We met with the Calgary health region, they called in the Health Quality Council, and they sucked blood from stone.

In the Capital health region on January 14, 2008, we clanged the bells through the Capital health region. We predicted an imminent death within 24 hours of this letter, and subsequently we had five to seven deaths and about 200 near deaths in the Edmonton region in one hospital alone or at least delays in care. Those are the 322 cases that were documented at the request of Sheila Weatherill and passed on to upper administration by the ER docs. They were documented at my request when I was the representative of the emergency physicians.

I won't get into problems because I don't have much time, so I'm only going to talk about solutions. The number one solution is simple. We must understand the problem. What I found out is that in health care, in the policy shop and the delivery shop, there are a lot of well-meaning individuals, hard-working individuals in management and front-line staff that are working hard each and every day to give it their absolute best. What I've also found out is that some people at the upper levels – to be honest, I don't know much about the oil industry, and I don't know much about agriculture, but I know a heck of a lot about my industry. Many people designing policy in health care really don't have a health care background, many people on the board have no health care background, and that's part of the problem. I'm just going to give you a few quick solutions immediately on this problem, not the whole system problem.

One, immediately we must convene the experts, which is Alberta Health Services and the board, the ER docs, the Alberta Medical Association leaders, the nursing leaders, and politicians from all parties. We must all put our political beliefs aside at this moment in time. Dr. Paul Parks is absolutely correct in his assertions.

Two, we must call in the Health Quality Council. Dr. John Cowell did a Health Quality Council report for the Calgary health region in 2007, and there are many good recommendations in that report that can be immediately implemented.

Three, we need to call in the SWAT team. The SWAT team would be made up of Dr. Chris Eagle, who was the Calgary health region's COO; Dr. Ken Gardener, who now is on the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Dr. Grant Innes from Calgary; Dr. Tom Noseworthy; Dr. Chip Doig; Dr. P.J. White from the AMA; and I think Janet Davidson would be a good mix. She runs a top hospital in Canada, in Ontario, the Trillium Health Centre. I'd be happy to work along with them.

It is a crisis. The problem is that many of my political colleagues are not physicians. They're not front-line health care workers. They get speaking notes from bureaucrats who have no health care background, and they really don't know. You can't blame them, actually. It's not their fault. The first thing I would do is do a partial implementation of a disaster plan in that we need to redeploy resources. We have God knows how many hundred RNs on Health Link. Let's get them off the call centres and get them in front of patients. Let's redeploy them into primary care networks, home care, and long-term care facilities.

We need to immediately decant the seniors from acute care ASAP. We have beds. We have long-term care beds. At one point in time a decision was made, when there wasn't much money for AHS. That problem has been solved by this minister and this Premier and this government. We have given lots of money and funding to AHS. I dug a shovel at the Villa Caritas in my area, at the Misericordia hospital. That should be used as a long-term care facility. I believe it's built; it should be used immediately.

Secondly, at the Royal Alex hospital, the women's pavilion, we have 150 empty beds. Since the Lois Hole hospital is open, they can be used as a transition unit immediately, but my understanding is that there is some legislation that needs tweaking and fixing. That should be used as a transition unit for DAL, assisted living. My understanding is that under legislation you have to have the regular staff. We need to immediately look at that and fix that.

Thirdly, home care. Home care, home care, home care is the real solution. There's a lack of good home care. There are a lot of good, hard-working people, but they're grossly underresourced. We have one of the worst home care systems in the country. Ontario and Nova Scotia have the best because the Red Cross and the Victorian Order of Nurses are involved. We need world-class home care. This is actually the solution.

Next, there were 1,000 Filipino nurses recruited. We couldn't afford to pay them. We have the money. Let's bring them in and redeploy them into this home care and into the beds.

4:20

Number eight, the primary care networks. We need to call in the AMA, Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness and redeploy the primary care networks into acute care. I'm doing a review, and to be honest, in principle it's good, but it's all wrong. The people that need to be rostered onto those primary care networks as a first priority are those patients who are discharged from acute care. They have no family doctor to follow up with. Therefore, we have a 16 per cent readmission rate. One out of six people end up back in hospital to begin that same darn journey again.

Two, elderly patients who don't have a GP need to be rostered second, right after these people, because they'll get sick, and they're going to be admitted.

Three, chronic disease patients who require care who will probably require hospitalization need to be on there.

Lastly, the healthy families. Don't put the healthy families in there first and the sick patients last. The biggest problem in acute care is that we've got too many sick people. It ain't the runny noses and sore throats causing the problem.

Number nine, prevention. Let's contact our school boards and workplaces and make sure everybody gets vaccinated this flu season. The fewer people that get sick, the fewer admissions in acute care.

Now, after that's done, we need to reassess and debrief, and we need to ensure that our medical system never ever faces this issue again, Mr. Speaker. This thing has been done every year by the emergency doctors for 10 years because this crisis happens every winter, and people die. To be honest, my poor government members have no idea because they're not doctors, and the regions have been covering this up for years.

Then we need accountability measures after this, accountability measures where those who administrate health care must be held accountable. I have the CAEP guidelines here. This needs to be the main accountability measure, the number one performance measure of this system. This happened in the U.K. They had hundreds of deaths, and the ER wait time for admitted people is the number one accountability measure for the whole health system in the U.K. Every other health service feeds into that wait time for admitted patients in the ED. It's not an emergency problem; it's a system problem.

One very important thing that the member here mentioned, mental health. The problem in mental health is that we have a lot of people whom we can't discharge to the street from Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Let's just rent a darn hotel and get them out and then build something for these poor people who are stuck in Alberta Hospital and can't get out.

Now, I'm going to be brutally honest here, Mr. Speaker. Some people may not like this. How did we get here? We got here because of a couple of knucklehead decisions: a knucklehead decision that cancelled Christmas dinner last year, a knucklehead decision to fire God's representative from the Royal Alex hospital, a knucklehead decision to disband the health ethics network and close Alberta Hospital.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. I'm sorry. The time has elapsed for your participation under the rules we have. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is beyond an honour to be able to stand up in this House and talk about this issue. It's also an honour to be able to follow someone who has – and I will use a polite term here – the backbone to stand up and be counted. That's what elected people are supposed to be doing, and no one in this House wants to stay past 4:30. "No. Why would we discuss something of any merit past 4:30? My God, we have to look after ourselves so we can be comfortable." I am ashamed of this House that they won't stay and argue this.

I could stand here for the next however many minutes it's going to be and go through all of the problems because every single one of you have got these examples of people dying and suffering that are in your constituency offices, and don't tell me that you don't because I know you do. Some of them come to my office when, in fact, you haven't done your job. This is not about all these examples. This is about following the lead of someone who has absolutely shown leadership for once in this House.

In fairness to this present government – in fairness – all of this mess was created with the previous government, but my disappointment is that this government knew it, denied that Bill 11 and the third way were absolutely the wrong way to go. Albertans did not want it; they made it very clear. They went ahead and did it anyway. My disappointment is that this government didn't have the backbone, that one of their members has just shown, to clean up the mess. This mess has been there – I did the MLA task force six years ago. It's the same mess. Don't tell me you didn't know about it.

The Alberta health bill is a good one, but it's a vision. How many times are we going to have visions? Visions are no good anymore. We have to have action. We cannot have people dying.

Long-term care beds. My hon. colleague from away has talked about transition beds and the legislation that would have to go with it, the type of people that would have to be trained to look after them. My mother has now passed, but I wouldn't want the cleaning lady looking after her. If she needed medical attention, I would want a trained RN that is there 24 hours a day, that can make the assessment that will keep her out of the hospital. Out of the hospital.

For people in our nursing homes, not in long-term care but some of the lodges and some of the designated assisted living, when somebody falls on the floor, there's no one to assess them. What do they do? They call 911. What is that costing the system?

Okay. I'm sorry, but I'm energized by an example of what a good elected person looks like. Although I know I've kind of ranted and raved, I didn't probably have the facts behind me that the hon. member has had.

Mr. Liepert: Good theatre.

Ms Pastoor: Absolutely. If there's anybody that does good theatre, it's the Minister of Energy, but because he doesn't use his outside voice, we can't hear what he's saying. Too bad.

We need to have backbone. We need to care. We need to do exactly what was suggested. This is not a partisan issue. I don't want to play two-bit politics. I want to be allowed to govern. And you know what? So do you guys. You were elected to govern, and you all know it – you all know it – deep in your hearts. Because you are all good people, you know you want to govern. You don't want to play two-bit politics, especially with people's lives. In my maiden speech I said that I hope that no one's parents in this House would ever become a commodity on a bottom line. Six years later, damn it, they are commodities on a bottom line, and it's your relatives that are there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Well, it looks like I have the enviable position of saying the last maybe final few words. There's lots I would like say, but I'm going to have to abbreviate my comments, Mr. Speaker.

I want to acknowledge the passion of all of the members of the House for this subject. I want to acknowledge the opposition members and their passion, but I also want to make the point that there's passion on this side, too. We care about the same issues . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, but according to our standing orders 30(5)(b) and 4(2) we will now stand adjourned until 1:30 Monday next.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, November 22, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 22, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, the Canadian Country Music Association male artist 2010 recipient, winner of the Country Music Television video of the year, album of the year winner as well as winner of the humanitarian of the year award, Mr. Gord Bamford, an Albertan, will lead us in the singing of our national anthem today.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee. [Applause]

The Speaker: Mr. Bamford, I know that you're used to a six-song set, but today that's where we're going to say thank you. Again, thank you for joining us today.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce four individuals today. My first guest has already been introduced personally to many of you today. We were privileged to have him sing our national anthem. I'll be doing a private member's statement a little while later. Now I would like Mr. Gord Bamford, the CCMA 2010 male vocalist of the year recipient, and his manager, Kelly Resler, to rise and receive the official warm welcome of this Assembly. Kelly is in the members' gallery. Stand up, please, Kelly and Gord.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased to introduce to you and through you my next guest, who is the first elected mayor of Lacombe, the newest city in Alberta. Steve Christie is truly community oriented. He has served on my constituency board for four years, two years as president. He has been on Lacombe council for the last six years and has served on the Lacombe volunteer fire department for over 11 years. I'm looking forward to a great working relationship with Mayor Christie and an exciting future for the city of Lacombe. He has brought with him the acting CAO of the city of Lacombe, Mr. Michael Minchin. I know that Michael's vast knowledge of municipal issues as well as his calm persona are a huge asset to Mayor Christie and the rest of council. Mayor Christie and Michael, who is in the members' gallery, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly as well.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure to be here to introduce some very, very special guests – where are they? – up in the gallery who are here from Julia Kiniski school. They're joined by their teacher group leader, Mrs. Susan Skillings. They represent a growing number of interested people who are here to watch and observe democracy in action. I would ask that all of our guests from Julia Kiniski school please stand and receive the warm ovation of the House. Welcome. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I met with the students that are in our gallery from St. Theresa school. They are knowledgeable. They're eager. They'll be here through the question period. They're accompanied by teachers Mrs. Earle and Ms McKinney, by parent helpers Mrs. O'Connor, Mrs. Hale, and Mrs. Szott. Fellow Members of the Legislative Assembly, please congratulate St. Theresa school for showing the initiative to come in today. Students, please rise.

The Speaker: Do you have another one?

Ms Evans: Yes, I do have, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce Russ and Grace Davidson, who are constituents of mine and residents in Sherwood Park. They've lived there for the last 39 years. Their combined residency in Alberta is 70-plus years. They have two sons diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. Tim recently obtained the CCSVI treatment in Mexico, and his life and quality of life have improved considerably. They are hopeful that the minister's announced review of this type of treatment will result in their capacity to see that for their other son. Both sides of the family are here, daughter and daughter-in-law as well. Colleagues, will you please welcome Russ and Grace Davidson to our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really proud to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 visitors who are joining us in the public gallery. To say "students" isn't quite correct, and I'll explain that. They are attending the Bredin Institute in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. These are international pharmacy bridging program students. They are international pharmacy graduates, and they are working towards their accreditation or licences. They are accompanied today by their group leader, Ms Cynthia Lambertson-Poon. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the congratulations and welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly some good folks from my constituency and one from Edmonton. Miss Vickie Jackson and Mrs. Kimberly Armstrong went to India to have the CCSVI operation. While Vickie has shown tremendous progress and success and is able to return to a quality of life that she had only dreamed of months ago, Kimberly is starting to move backwards. She has shown tremendous progress for two or three months and now finds herself in desperate need of the Doppler ultrasound. They find it frustrating that while they were very willing to go and receive the operation in India, they can't have the follow-up service that would seem to make sense as we put together the data that we need so that we can all tackle MS with a responsible go-forward so that they and their children or grandchildren won't be subject to the same debilitating disease it's become.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask Vickie Jackson, Kimberly Armstrong, and friend Larry Walton to please stand and accept the warm reception of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 14 members of the Smoky Lake ladies' health care auxiliary, led by their president, Diana Hryniw. These hard-working and dedicated ladies are committed to helping rural Albertans by assisting and working in conjunction with medical facilities in Smoky Lake. It's a real privilege to have them visit us here today at the Legislature. I'd ask them to rise and my colleagues to give them the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of our Assembly a member of the New South Wales Attorney General's department, Ms Michelle Browning. Ms Browning is a senior guardian with that department and is here to meet with our government officials on the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, which came into force last October.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times in this House, I'm very proud of this groundbreaking legislation, and I am pleased to say that it continues to attract international attention. Ms Browning received the Churchill fellowship to visit Canadian jurisdictions to learn about new models to bring back to Australia. I understand she's particularly interested in the supportive decision-making options available in the AGTA. Ms Browning will be meeting with officials in my department as well as with Alberta Justice and Alberta Health Services while she's here and with advocacy organizations such as the Alberta Association for Community Living. She is joined by Ms Brenda Lee Doyle, director of the office of the public guardian. They are both in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three very special individuals that have had and still have a close place in my life. The first one is my sister-in-law Ghislaine Muise. She is a long-term nurse here in Edmonton. The second one, as well another sister-in-law, Paulette Fortin, who has recently retired, has worked her full career with Telus. For both of them it's their very first time in the Alberta Legislature. They're both accompanied by my wife, Angeline. They're in the public gallery, and I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce two fine Edmontonians who are with us today in the members' gallery. Mr. Gordon Gordey has contributed 33 years of public service in arts, culture, and human rights in our province, serving with the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit. Also, as CEO of Shumka his 40-year experience as a dancer, writer, choreographer, and stage director was integral in developing Shumka's management and artistic goals. Also with him is his better half, his wife, Cathy Gordey, who currently works for research services at the University of Alberta. Prior to moving to the U of A, however, Cathy was a manager of various portfolios for the government of Alberta. I would like them both to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests to introduce to you today, and they are seated in the public gallery. I'll ask Ken and Ray to stand. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ken Babey and Ray "Rocky" Herrington. Ken is now in his 24th season as the SAIT Trojans' men's hockey coach. He is the winningest coach in Canadian postsecondary men's hockey league play. The team has won four consecutive titles, which is a tie for the league record. They are currently in their drive for five, and again they're at the top of the league's standings. Along with being head coach of the SAIT Trojans, Ken has been the athletic director at SAIT Polytechnic since 1997.

Ray Herrington is the team manager of the SAIT Trojans. Perhaps his interest in athletics comes from his extensive boxing background. A former Alberta Golden Gloves champion in '62-63, Canadian boxing champion in '63, and Canadian army boxing champion in '63-64, he also went to the Olympic trials for boxing in '64. He was inducted into the Canadian armed forces' sports hall of fame in 1993 and the SAIT wall of distinction in 1998. We affectionately call him Canvasback. Rocky is also the president of the Calgary Booster Club and has operated various fundraising projects, including social gatherings at Rocky's penalty box lounge. All proceeds from these projects have been donated back to the Trojans hockey team. They are rising, so I'll ask you to give them the warm traditional applause of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a constituent of mine, Miss Amy Prins. Amy is a student at NAIT in Edmonton, and she will be spending some time with me today and tomorrow learning about my role as an MLA. Amy is an incredibly bright young student, and I hope that she will enjoy her opportunity to watch question period and to sit in on some meetings with me. Amy is seated in the members' gallery. I'll ask Amy to rise, and let's all give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature guests from the Domagoj Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble of Edmonton. There are five representatives visiting us today at the Alberta Legislature who, along with their organization, were instrumental in hosting the 33rd annual western Canadian Croatian folklore festival in Edmonton earlier this year, which I will highlight in a member's statement today. I'd like to welcome the following guests, who are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names. We have with us today Doris Beljan, the Domagoj Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble president; Tanja Pavelić, secretary for the Domagoj ensemble; Slavka Milicević, treasurer for the ensemble; Zdenka Stipin, who is one of the Domagoj dance instructors; and Jozo Arar, a member of the Domagoj alumni association. You will notice that both Jozo and Zdenka are wearing the national costume of Dalmatia and the coast city of Dubrovnik. I would now ask that we all provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Joginder Dhillon, who I consider not only a friend but an older brother, and I want to stress the older part. He was an exceptional supporter of mine in the 2004 and 2000 elections, and I cannot overstate what a pleasure it has been to have him on my side. With him today is his son, Mr. Harvir Dhillon, who I am pleased to report is studying hard to be a doctor and will soon be helping to ease some of the pressures in our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, it is because of wonderful supporters like the Dhillons that I have the honour to represent the constituency of Calgary-McCall and to fight for very important issues facing not only Calgary-McCall but the whole of Calgary, issues such as the airport tunnel that, for the kind information of the Minister of Transportation, is called the airport underpass now, sir. I would ask my guests to rise now, and I would ask all members to extend the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a gentleman in the gallery who many years ago spent a lot of time in this building: Mr. Bob Giffin, who is the former executive director of the office of the Premier. In fact, it was Mr. Giffin that hired me to the role as press secretary back in 1980. I'd ask Bob to stand and be recognized by the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you a Swedish exchange student who is here on a Rotary exchange, Mr. Jonathan Arvidsson. Jonathan is currently attending Strathcona high school and is extremely interested in politics, so he came down to the Assembly to see how politics works. Jonathan is joined today by Fern and Danie Hardie, who are residents of my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been advised that the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit wishes to present a ministerial statement today. We will surely come up against Standing Order 7(1), which states: "At 1:50 p.m., Oral Question Period, not exceeding 50 minutes" shall commence. So in order to deal with this, we're going to have to deal with unanimous consent. Our tradition is that if I recognize the minister, under our rules a spokesperson from the Official Opposition can automatically have a chance to respond, and then we know that the request will be made for unanimous consent to have additional speakers.

We've arrived at this point, but I started this before the clock hit 1:50 p.m., so I will ask for unanimous consent for us to proceed with ministerial statements at this time. If so, we will deal with the two for sure, and then I'll have to ask the question again for additional ones. The question period will hence then be delayed by that amount of minutes. Is any member opposed to recognition being provided to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit to participate in a ministerial statement? If so, please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who has travelled the length and breadth of Alberta has no doubt been struck by the wealth of our agricultural lands. There are crops of all types, but more than any other crop we see fields of wheat. Perhaps we forget that these fields of wheat are fields of life, a living example of our great blessings in this land. We are so used to the presence of the stalks of gold that it takes a considerable effort to imagine them being taken away. Imagine an Alberta without wheat, without crops of any kind. It doesn't seem reasonable. Unfortunately, history has all too many examples of the unreasonable and the unimaginable becoming horrifying reality.

In November 2008 this House unanimously passed the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. The act commemorates one of history's darkest hours: the famine that ravaged the population of Soviet Ukraine between 1932 and 1933. This famine wasn't due to a cruel trick of fate or an aberration of the weather. It wasn't an act of God; it was an act of men. It was Joseph Stalin's totalitarian regime that pursued this murderous policy. This tragedy is known as Holodomor, which in Ukraine means extermination by means of starvation. Under Stalin's direction officials took the actions that brought misery and death to between 6 million and 7 million men, women, and children. The goal was to force Ukrainians to adopt collective farming practices and, ultimately, to destroy Ukrainian nationalism. It was a barbaric policy. People had to fill government quotas that left them with nothing to eat for themselves. Those who refused saw their crops confiscated and even their valuable seed grain taken away. Men, women, and children were executed for keeping so much as a handful of grain.

One Alberta survivor of the Holodomor, Olga Zazula, spoke to the Calgary Herald in 2008. She relived her grief as she spoke of losing her 5-year-old brother to the famine. Her father, who was head of his village, was in prison one day and was never seen again. She and her family were forced to eat grass, leaves, and tree bark. A neighbour even considered eating a dead rat. One chilling observation by a Soviet author was that before they died, people often lost their senses and ceased to become human beings.

The Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act recognizes the famine as an act of genocide. The memorial act designates the fourth Saturday of each November as Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day. It falls on November 27 this year. In Alberta our Ukrainian community will gather to mark this significant day and remember and honour the victims of the tragedy. I urge all Albertans to recognize this important day and, in doing so, to reflect on our individual and communal roles in the fight against racial, religious, and other forms of hatred.

On Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day we are reminded of our roles in resisting and overcoming injustice, intolerance, and indifference. We must do this locally and globally. We must never forget our responsibility to achieve a common goal of building societies which effectively protect and truly value human rights. We must never forget that our words and our actions can make the difference between justice and injustice, between joy and sorrow. We must never forget, Mr. Speaker, that those who forget history are doomed to repeat it. This is how we can truly honour the victims of this genocide.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with sadness that I rise on behalf of the Official Opposition. I certainly had the privilege earlier, at noontime, to witness the hon. Premier, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, and various other members of this Assembly pay respects to the Ukrainian community and to remember the horror that occurred in 1932 and 1933.

It's incredible to live in this province and to think that in parts of the Ukraine, with year after year of bountiful crops, the citizens, the farmers who grew them were restricted and limited. Those crops went to the Soviets; they did not stay behind for the farmers, not even a bit of seed to plant a crop the following year. We certainly have to remember. How we can truly honour the victims of this genocide is to ensure that food is never used again as a political or a military weapon. We must never allow food or the restriction or limitation of a food supply to be used for any means. Never should this occur again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, both the Member for Calgary-Glenmore and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood have requested that they be permitted to speak. We need unanimous consent of the House. If any members oppose, please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We stand here today joined as a community of Albertans who remember the victims of Holodomor and keep their memories alive through this remembrance.

When Ukraine was declared independent from the Soviet Union in 1991, little was known about Holodomor. Slowly stories emerged. We know that during that period of time tremendous suffering occurred: 6 million to 7 million men, women, and children died due to starvation. This was another horrendous act of genocide. Can you imagine helping to harvest the crops, the wheat, the grain and not being allowed to keep any of it? Barbaric regulations and quotas were put in place which enabled the government to confiscate the land and the produce from those who produced it. Imagine seeing your loved ones, your family, your friends, and your neighbours literally starving to death in front of you and being unable to do anything about it because you are too weak yourself. Mr. Speaker, this is something that we can't imagine anymore than to be burned. It's something that cannot be imagined by those who have not experienced it.

It is because of events like these that we keep the memories alive.

It is because of people like you, the Ukrainian people, both the survivors and the descendants, who are brave enough to speak out and tell the stories of the famine, that we are here today. It is because of your refusal to forget dear loved ones who died unjustly that we remember who we honour. They, like you, are now feeling free to share their story. You will tell the story for the ones that could not pass it on themselves, and we will listen.

I remember the quote from Socrates: there is only one good, knowledge; and one evil, ignorance. We must never forget that our words and our actions can make the difference between justice and injustice, between joy and sorrow. Our laws must protect our life, our freedom, and our property. Anything less is unacceptable. They are always passed off by tyrants as good for the whole. We must protect the individual before we can protect the whole of society. We must never forget. This is how we can truly honour the victims of Holodomor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Assembly. Today we mark Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day, taking place this weekend. The great loss and suffering that took place nearly 80 years ago, when millions of people in Ukraine were subjected to genocide, is one of the blackest calamities in our history. This is an important and sober commemoration for the many Albertans who are part of the Ukrainian community. On behalf of the NDP opposition and all New Democrats I express my sorrow at this terrible event.

It is not just an historic event in Ukrainian history. All of us need to see it as a powerful reminder of the importance of each of us always being prepared to speak up and defend human rights whenever they are under attack. What we permit to happen to others, no matter where they are, increases the danger for all of us. This memorial of a horrible time in modern history is a call to us to defend democratic principles and human rights wherever and whenever they are threatened.

I extend my sympathies to all those who suffered in Holodomor and to the many family members who lost loved ones. As we remember, we recommit to working for a just world. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier took the unprecedented step of updating his blog on Sunday night so that he could read a scripted, rehearsed statement scolding Albertans about theatrics. Is the Premier saying that the thousands of Albertans writing letters to the editor, calling MLAs' offices, even the emergency debate here in the Legislature and concerns about emergency care is theatrics?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wasn't blaming Albertans. Albertans are continuing to tell us that health care is important to them and that they want to see improvements. Right now everyone involved for a period of time was looking at each other and maybe pointing blame. What I've said is: look, the time has come. There was a very good meeting of health care professionals on Friday that talked about a good plan to be put in place, and I'm looking forward to the implementation of that plan.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, is the Premier, then, saying that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is not really concerned about health care but is engaged in theatrics?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're all concerned about health care together with all Canadians. This is a serious issue across the country, and that's why we'll continue here as a government to show leadership, to keep improving the system. We've already put more money in. We've opened up more continuing care beds, and we'll continue on with the plan.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans, including health professionals, are feeling a chill in the air. Will the Premier instruct Alberta Health Services to encourage health professionals to speak out with their ideas on how to make this system work?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, 100 or so health care professionals met last Friday. They put their heads together with the Alberta Health Services Board and have come up with, I believe, a very, very good plan. Now it's time to implement that plan and get on with it. That's what we're going to be doing.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Accountability in Health System Governance

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has been consistently failing Alberta's health care system. This gross, misguided experiment in creating one health region has failed. Its implementation has been disastrous, and sadly it has now become a tragic and rather bitter joke. To the Premier: will the Premier, who launched this experiment, bring it to an end through an orderly dismantling of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the reason we put all of the regions into one was to consolidate the operations – all the human resource departments, all of the auditing departments, the dozen or so CEOs that were scattered across the province – and to take those savings and put them into front-line services. That was roughly about $800 million. That's over and above the 6 per cent that we gave health care for this year and will continue for the next three years, followed by 4 and a half per cent for the next few years.

Dr. Swann: Well, whether he is simply a political scapegoat or not, Stephen Duckett has lost the confidence and respect of the health professionals in the system and is no longer fit to hold the title of CEO. Will the Premier order the CEO terminated?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, obviously, the party opposite has changed their mind. The colleague sitting next to the leader said at some point that I or the government or whoever was purposely setting up the CEO. Now all of a sudden they changed their mind over the weekend and want him removed. All I can say is that we'll continue to have very serious heart-to-heart discussions with the Alberta Health Services Board. It's something that Albertans certainly don't appreciate, and we've certainly heard from Albertans today and over the weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier not realize that by failing to hold Stephen Duckett accountable for the disrespect he's shown to Albertans, he approves of an action that insulted every single Albertan?

Mr. Stelmach: Dr. Duckett is an employee of the Alberta Health Services Board, and I'm sure that the board, as we speak, is looking at all of the information that's coming forward and will be making a decision. Again, following such intense meetings, good ideas flowing from the 100 or so professionals that met, Dr. Eagle's plan to communicate to all Albertans: that took second fiddle to the comments that were made, unfortunately, by the CEO.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The AMA president's letter released last Friday reads, "The delivery of health care in Alberta can continue to lurch from crisis to crisis to crisis, along with a superficial diagnosis and a patchwork of short-term 'solutions'." To the Premier: as part of a long-term solution to the ER crisis will the Premier appoint an emergency task force so that the real experts can get started on cleaning up the mess this Premier has created?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, these were health care professionals that got together on Friday and came up with a comprehensive plan, and now it's up to health care providers and the AHS Board to implement that plan. I would suggest that the sooner we get going on it, the better. I know that they're going to communicate the plan to all of the hospitals and get feedback so that they can implement it efficiently. Of course, a big part of that is to increase more community-based programs and also increase the number of continuing care beds.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we're calling for a task force because the Alberta Health Services Board has clearly shown itself inadequate to the task. We need a long-term task force to merge into a regional delivery system. Does the Premier accuse the president of the AMA of contributing to theatrics because he joined other Albertans in speaking the truth about this failed experiment?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again more chatter, more talk, more loss of focus on what the plan is and again looking and pointing fingers at each other. I've talked to the president of the AMA. He was very supportive of the plan. He thought it was a good plan to move forward. It's a first step. We've got to reduce the number of people that are accessing health through the emergency room, so personal care networks are going to be a huge component of that, and there are other solutions that AHS will announce very shortly.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the president of the AMA also stated in his letter that "the situation in emergency departments . . . is a symptom of a health care system in distress." Will the Premier acknowledge that Alberta Health Services has been a colossal mistake and commit to an orderly transition to a system that has local decision-making, guided by the professionals working in the system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, professionals do work in the system. These are the individuals that are delivering the solutions to many of the problems. But I can tell you that if he thinks we're going to go back to 300 hospital boards and 300 administrations, we're not. We're going to have people responsible in every hospital for the delivery and people accountable to the public. But to go back to 300 boards and add another $800 million worth of expenses and take it out of front-line service?

Member Suspension from PC Caucus

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are appalled at this government. What an absolute disgrace this has been, kicking your own emergency room doctor out of caucus right during an emergency room crisis. Shameful. And for what? Sticking up for the sick and the suffering and people dying in our emergency rooms. This Premier should be ashamed of himself. To the Premier: will you immediately apologize for this ridiculous decision that was made today? Absolutely shameful, sir.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think a very good example of theatrics.

In fact, every hour $300 million is invested in health care in this province. That will continue to grow with the program growth. But every time we just take time to point fingers at each other and take away from the progress that's being made – we have health care professionals ready to go, and I'm there to work with them together with our government.

Mr. Anderson: Not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this Premier has kicked the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to the curb for speaking out for sick seniors and now the same Premier kicks out an ER doc for speaking out for the sick and suffering Albertans in our emergency rooms, does this Premier give a tinker's damn about anything other than himself and getting his party back into power in 12 months? It ain't going to work.

Mr. Stelmach: That's quite an emotional statement, but it hasn't moved the plan ahead, and that's my focus here, to work with everyone to move the plan that was brought together by health care professionals last week. You know, we can point fingers at each other again and call each other names. What was done has been done. I can't retract what the CEO said. I can't retract what has been said before. All I know is that there is a plan in place; let's get on with it.

Mr. Anderson: You should be apologizing to every single Albertan and, certainly, to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Given that we live in a democracy that values free speech or is supposed to value free speech and is based on an MLA being able to represent his constituents with everything that he has, how can this Premier sit there and spit in the face of democracy, of free speech, and of an MLA representing and defending the people of Alberta to the best of his ability? How low will you go, Premier? This is absolutely shameful. You should apologize.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again we can talk about the decision that was reached today, but there is nothing holding any member back from talking about how to improve the health care system. The hon. member presented his point of view. Some of that has been incorporated in the plan, and that plan will be delivered by the health care professionals of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has just suspended his own parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness for speaking up against this government's disastrous handling of the emergency room crisis. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is a courageous MLA and health care provider who puts his constituents ahead of loyalty to a secretive and incompetent Tory government. Will the Premier apologize for penalizing the members of his caucus that speak the truth and, instead, finally take responsibility for the entire health care crisis that he has created?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a similar question as from the first questioner. It's very clear in terms of the plan that was put together over the weekend. We're now in a process of implementing that plan, and we will continue to implement it no matter how much the opposition tries to oppose it and create diversions. First and foremost, let's get on with the plan to ensure that every Albertan has an equitable opportunity in health care to enter the system appropriately within the right amount of time.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is tired of all the theatrics surrounding health care. To him it's just a soap opera, perhaps called As the Cookie Crumbles, but to most Albertans it's a life-or-death issue, and they're glad it's finally getting some public attention. But when a member of the government caucus tries to speak up, he gets kicked out of the PC caucus, just like that. To the Premier: why do you keep trying to sweep the emergency crisis and your job in creating it under the rug? Why are you silencing your own MLAs?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a plan that was put together last Friday. We will implement that plan no matter what the opposition tries to throw in front of government or in front of Alberta Health Services. It's very important that that plan is implemented, at least the beginning of it, because there's more to follow the week after and the week after that in terms of relieving the pressures on the emergency rooms. Like I said, it's community-based programs, and it's also creating more spaces for seniors so they have the proper accommodation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Well, the Premier seems to think our ER crisis is some sort of stage play. If so, it's a combination of tragedy and farce, Mr. Speaker. The author is sitting in the Premier's chair. Will the Premier admit that the decisions of his government have led directly to this ER crisis and that silencing his own parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness only further undermines morale among front-line health care providers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, everybody had an opportunity for input. I've listened to input coming from all groups: health care professionals, those that are advocates for health care in the province, people that were in the system, and people that just took the time to call and say, you know, "I had a pleasant experience." There are, obviously, many that haven't, especially waiting in emergency rooms. We're going to resolve the issue. Like I said before, we're going to try and provide equitable service across the province: three new cancer radiation clinics, in Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Red Deer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On Friday Alberta Health Services announced ER surge capacity protocols. Ideas may look good on paper, but implementation is everything. My questions will be to the Premier. These changes are to be implemented by next month in an organization that is itself in a management crisis. To the Premier: how are these changes possibly going to be implemented in an organization of 90,000 people in one month?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the plan was entered into by a number of health care professionals, who all had input. Now is the opportunity to disseminate that information to all of the health care providers in the province. That information will go out through the various groups that have responsibility in certain hospitals across the province. We'll also work with the long-term care association, that we continually build more beds and free up acute-care beds in the province. All of those things are part of the overall plan.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody believes this can be done in one month in an organization this size. Alberta Health Services' leadership, hand-picked by this government, is in disarray, but it takes effective leadership to implement these changes. To the Premier: does this government have a plan B when these protocols don't work out?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the plan that health care professionals put together – these are health care providers that came from different corners of the province and spent considerable time putting their ideas forward, looking at them, criticizing each other in terms of, okay, what is good, what is not good in our particular area. They came to agreement, and now is the time to implement it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it seems that Stephen Duckett gets a cookie while the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark gets the boot out of his caucus. Last week this Premier offered support to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, so what has caused the Premier to change his mind?

Mr. Stelmach: My support for the member has not changed. I made a commitment to the member that the discussions we had, because they were of a personal nature, will stay personal. That is the promise I made to the member, and I keep my promise.

The Speaker: The Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Oil Sands Development Communications Strategy

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the news today we saw that three federal government departments have been developing a communications strategy to deal with international global warming policies that target Alberta's oil sands. Therefore, my first question is to the Minister of Energy. How is the Alberta government involved in the development of this strategy that Ottawa is working on regarding our resource?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to see, as the member mentioned, that there is some work taking place at the federal level. I think it reassures us because to date the Prime Minister and senior federal ministers have not been proudly talking on the international stage about the responsible oil sands development. I think it's some 500,000 Canadians that work directly or indirectly in the Canadian petroleum industry, including about 15,000 who fly in and out of this province every week or two from east of the Manitoba-Ontario boundary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many hard-working and honest Albertans from the energy sector are frustrated with unfounded and unsubstantiated attacks on our oil sands, I'd welcome a better strategy that will yield more informed discussion. Can the minister tell us what level of co-operation he has with his federal counterpart and with the federal government in general on this issue?

Mr. Liepert: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, one of the federal cabinet ministers that is advocating on behalf of the oil and gas industry around the world is the federal minister of energy, Mr. Paradis from Quebec. He and I have agreed that we're going to work towards the development of a national clean energy strategy, and that'll begin next summer, when we host the federal-provincial ministers here in Alberta. I'm also happy to say that the ambassador to Washington, who's the former NDP Premier of Manitoba, has been a very strong advocate on behalf of the oil sands, and it's something that other members of this House could probably take some advice from.

Mr. Johnson: My last question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Many Canadians seem to feel that only Albertans benefit from the oil sands development. Can the minister tell us the extent of the benefits that our oil sands provide the entire country?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is correct. As I said in my previous answers, some 500,000 Canadians either work directly or indirectly in the oil industry in Alberta, and many of those come from east of the Manitoba-Ontario border, and that's not to mention all of the manufacturing jobs that are associated with the oil sands. As a result of that, the Alberta economy generates in the range of some $55 billion annually, and that pays for such things as health care, advanced education, and in some cases $7 daycare across the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning at the fiscal update we learned that the deficit has ballooned to over $5 billion. The province is expected to take in slightly more than $34 billion and, of course, spend $39 billion. My first question is to the minister of finance. The minister has stated that external factors are to blame for Alberta's deficit and that spending is the only thing that the government can control. My question is: where is the savings plan? When can we expect the savings plan from this government?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the deficit is now projected to be $5 billion, not $4.7 billion, but our actual spending is lower than was projected at budget time if you take away emergency and disaster spending. I'd ask the hon. member opposite: does he not want us to fund emergencies and disasters? Does he want us to take the money back from the flood victims, back from the forest fires, back from the drought victims? Where does he want us to cut the emergency spending?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of finance, with his big spending habits, can't justify disaster relief as the reason why we have a $5 billion deficit. That's false. It's your mismanagement.

To the President of the Treasury Board. The minister has said that the government is looking at further belt-tightening. I know that last year you showed leadership by finding $1.5 billion in savings from various ministries. What can the taxpayers expect from your department this year?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the title of our budget last year was Striking the Right Balance. We said at the time that it was a combination of looking where there were opportunities for revenue without raising taxes – and it was on an ongoing basis throughout all the government departments – where we could save money and deliver the services that we need to deliver more efficiently. That isn't done on the one day we deliver the budget. It happens every day that the public service goes to work, looking for better ways to deliver the services that Albertans want more effectively.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of finance. The minister has placed great emphasis on getting value for every dollar spent. We've just heard that. At the same time this government is passing legislation to increase the number of MLAs from 83 to 87, and we've seen an increase in the size of the cabinet since 2008. Could the minister of finance explain how increasing the size of government provides value for money for Alberta taxpayers?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, what I'll explain to the hon. member is that we've actually shrunk the size of government. As I speak today, there are 3,114 fewer employees in the government of Alberta than there were when the recession began. Government is shrinking in Alberta, not growing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Along the same lines, earlier today government released its second-quarter update, informing Albertans about the province's fiscal situation and forecast for the year ahead, including the fact that Alberta's deficit is now forecast at $5 billion for this fiscal year, up from $4.7 billion. My question to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise is: would the minister please explain why our deficit has increased? Did we not commit to holding the line on spending?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as I just finished explaining, in fact we did hold the line on spending. Our increase in the size of the deficit is due to emergency spending: $534 million for flood, drought, forest fires, and pine beetle. These are emergencies that we can't prevent, but we can help the people that suffer from them. We have held the line. If you hold that emergency spending to the side, our spending actually went down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: how does the government intend to cover the deficit for this year?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the good news is that in Alberta deficit does not equal debt. Because of the fiscal responsibility shown by a number of governments leading down to the recession in 2008, we went into this recession with $18 billion in the sustainability fund. Each of the three deficits to date have been offset by the savings from the sustainability fund. At the end of this budget year we project that there'll still be $11 billion in the sustainability fund.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: given that you mentioned uncertainty in global economic conditions affecting the government's bottom line, is it still realistic to expect that Alberta can be back in the black by 2012-13?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, will it be easy to stay in a balanced budget in 2012? No. Is it realistic? Absolutely, yes. If we hold the line on spending, if our revenue projections are accurate, which we think they are – they're in line with private-sector projections – we will be back in the black in two years. It's not only realistic; it's necessary. It's necessary to ensure that we do not end up running up debt. In Alberta the Premier has stated that he will not leave debt on the backs of the next generation. I support that. Everybody on this side of the aisle supports that, and we're going to hit that target.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

School Board Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago at the Alberta School Boards Association MLA breakfast the Minister of Education scolded naughty trustees for uniting with school councils and the Alberta Teachers' Association in opposition to his draconian educational cuts and clawbacks. By initially not honouring the weekly average earnings index, which determined teacher and staff increases, the minister threw a major wrench into budget preparation which lasted until July, forcing boards to redo their budget. To the minister: is the minister's proposal to appoint trustees just the latest punishment for their ongoing opposition to his educational freezes and cuts?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd love to answer that question, but I have to start with those rather ridiculous preambles. First of all, there were no draconian cuts in the budget last year to education. In fact, the budget went up. When I talked to school board trustees last fall, I wasn't lecturing them or beating them on the head; I was saying to them that what we had started with them was an intelligent and respectful discussion about how to deal more effectively and efficiently with the resources in the system because resources were tight. Secondly, I said to the school boards in the spring, after the budget, that we would honour our commitment to teachers.

The Speaker: I think we're going to get back to this.
The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Despite at least $8 billion remaining in the sustainability fund, is the minister planning again on playing the recessionary card to deny much-needed capital spending on new school construction and billions of dollars in accumulated school repairs?

Mr. Hancock: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, when the budget came down last year and it did not budget for the teacher increases that we had committed to, I made it very clear to the boards that we were still committed to providing them with those resources, and I asked them to budget on that basis. The fact that boards did not do that is not my responsibility. The fact that when we came through with the resources in July, which we said we were going to be doing, forced them to come back in the summer to do some more work on their budgets, is not my problem because I told them very, very clearly up front – and you can even read the Calgary Herald article, which said: read between the lines; the government is meeting their commitment.

Mr. Chase: I think we just saw a re-enactment of Pontius Pilate washing his hands of the matter.

Does the minister believe that parents, trustees, or teachers would tolerate his further interference in suggesting opening negotiations in the last two years of the five-year labour agreement? What is the minister's word or signature on a contract worth?

Mr. Hancock: A signature of this minister of this government is worth every bit. It can be upheld. We stand behind our commitments. We're standing behind our commitments with respect to that contract. But what I have done is asked the ATA and the school boards to come to the table to talk about how we can extend this period of time of the five-year labour peace that we've had so that we can continue to talk about what the importance and value of education is to Albertans, what education looks like as we go forward, and how we can do it better together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Landowner Private Property Rights

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent weeks there has been a blizzard of misinformation, even fearmongering, that the property rights of Albertans are threatened by recent provincial legislation, including the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: does the Alberta Bill of Rights take precedence over all other provincial legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the answer to the question is yes, absolutely. The Bill of Rights takes precedence over other Alberta legislation unless there's something in the legislation that says it does not. In this particular case it includes the Land Stewardship Act. The Bill of Rights absolutely overrides the Land Stewardship Act.

Mr. Prins: Again to the same minister: what does it mean when the Alberta Land Stewardship Act says that a regional plan may amend or even extinguish an existing approval?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we need to be clear about this because not only the members of this House but all Albertans need to understand that ALSA, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, cannot and does not take away or extinguish any land title or any mineral right that's held freehold.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how does the Alberta Land Stewardship Act affect Albertans' rights to compensation?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, this is another thing there's been an awful lot of misunderstanding about. ALSA, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, does not preclude any property rights owner, any Albertan, from receiving fair compensation. As a matter of fact, it guarantees fair compensation under any other act that already has compensation allotment in it. ALSA says that you will be compensated under the other legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Children in Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The children's advocate report is out, and even in its most sanitized form the news is not good. Since 2003 the advocate has been begging the government to do a better job supporting the most vulnerable children in government care, youth with complex needs. Seven years later the advocate tells us that no progress has been made. Why does the Minister of Children and Youth Services continue to ignore the youth in her care, who are the absolute most vulnerable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the advocate report reaches back eight months to March 2010 and addresses the previous year to that. In the eight-month period we have made significant progress. While I've been here in this ministry I've seen that. The advocate has given us good advice, and the recommendations that are made in the report make good sense about how our programs and policies can be improved and how they can better assist our families. I can assure this member that we are working toward that. I know that the members address complex needs, and we care.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been seven years that the advocate has been asking for this, so another seven months undoubtedly brings no change.

Given that the advocate reports also failure by the ministry to introduce the most basic of protections from the major safety breaches contained within the kinship program and given that the vast majority of the children in the kinship program are aboriginal, why did the minister refuse to act on the recommendations of her own hand-picked panel to provide specialized support to off-reserve aboriginal children and families?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to you earlier in the Assembly, what the member is referring to with kinship care is that there is kinship care; there is foster care. It is delivered by our child and family services authorities off reserve and by our delegated First Nations agencies on reserve. I am meeting once again with the delegated First Nations agencies this week because they have asked to be the ones to formulate the model that we put in place to address off-reserve care related to kinship care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, that doesn't address the specific recommendation.

Given that the advocate says that the 2009 budget was already shortchanging adolescents in care by cutting supports prematurely, including where the access to PDD funding was blocked because of the shortfalls in that ministry's budget, why is this minister standing by as the very neediest children in care fall through the ever-widening cracks created by her government's neglect?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that I do acknowledge this member's concern. I can tell you that in the spring session, if you'll recall, I did address the budget and monitoring the budget, making changes as they became necessary. In fact, in August of this year the Treasury Board did allocate a further 72 and a half million dollars to this ministry for child care and for child intervention, and that was to support our programs and services. Thirteen million dollars of that funding went to our family support for children with disabilities.

Peace and Police Officer Training Centre

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard that North Haverbrook finally got its monorail, so I thought I'd see if Fort Macleod might get a police college someday. When Fort Macleod was designated as the site for this training centre in 2006, everyone agreed that a single training facility was necessary. If that's still the case, why is construction taking longer than the completion of the Great Wall of China?

Mr. Oberle: I think I made it pretty clear the last time the hon. member asked some questions about this that I had made a promise to the people of Fort Macleod that I would work very hard to identify a need for a facility, and then I would work hard to get that profiled on the capital plan. I think the member probably read the newspaper articles, and he knows that's coming along, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did actually read in the Lethbridge Herald that you had some money for this project, but to be a little more specific, I'm sort of wondering how much is some money to get this project finally on the go.

Mr. Oberle: Well, see, Mr. Speaker, I knew he read the newspaper because that's where he does his research. We've identified some money for planning, and we're going to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Lethbridge Herald is a good place to get a good tip on what the government is up to, but can we expect a concrete date for construction and when this money will be allocated? And when you're meeting with the townspeople and their P3 partner next week, will you detail when this construction is finally going to take place?

Mr. Oberle: Well, if the member would think about that question for a minute, very obviously I don't at this moment have spending authority, so I could hardly announce any date. I'm working very hard. I've talked to people down in Fort Macleod. As he knows, I've talked to the media. I'm going to be talking more with the people in Fort Macleod. We're working on it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Chateau Estates Access Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For over two years I have been lobbying for the construction of a new road for my constituents in Chateau Estates. A few weeks back in this Assembly the Minister of Transportation said that the road would be ready by October 31. Can the Minister of Transportation explain why the road is not yet ready?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it was certainly our hope to have this road paved and open this construction season, but the paving of this road will not be completed until spring. Any transportation project completion dates always have the proviso of weather permitting, and if this hon. member has been outside lately, you can see that that white stuff that's on the ground doesn't go real well with paving. I'd like to point out that the . . .

The Speaker: We'll come back to you. Don't go away.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, if the road cannot be paved this year, can the minister at the very least make a commitment to my constituents to guarantee it will open as a gravel road sooner rather than later?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is yes. And again I'd like to tell this hon. member that he should maybe go outside and feel what that weather is like and understand that we probably can't pave. But we'll get right on that gravel.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I've been outside repeatedly, feeling what my constituents in Chateau Estates feel. When can this minister make a commitment for the completion of the gravel road?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as soon as the weather clears, we will have people out there working on that road.

I have to say that we're the money supplier on that particular road, and actually it's the county of Rocky View that's delivering the project. But we'll work with them and make sure that they get it done for the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Hospital Site Administrators

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forty days is a long time for an emergency response to a crisis. When someone is having a heart attack or a mental breakdown, they need treatment now, not in 40 days. Why does this government continue down a dead-end road and the bureaucratic doom loop of a centralized superboard? We need hospital administrators in place to make decisions, not more or new protocols. To the minister of health: are you telling Albertans that you have no competent people in your hospitals that you can put in charge to make the decisions tomorrow instead of waiting until January 2011 for a new protocol?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've indicated this before, but I'd like to just repeat it. Every one of the major acute-care site centres has a clinical lead and also a site admin lead. In other words, there are people with local responsibility that also have local authority to act. They don't have to wait until January. What we're talking about here today as a result of the November 19 meeting with over 100 AHS specialists is a set of new protocols to enhance and improve what's already there.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, a competent administrator needs to be appointed to manage our hospitals. When will the government follow our commonsense approach to appoint a chief administrator in every hospital with the actual authority, not written authority, to use their staff and resources to treat patients when they need it? They come in, and they cannot be treated.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, perhaps he didn't hear the answer to the last question. We have those people there now. As the result of the meeting on Friday, however, they're going to make significant improvements in the way that the patient flow is handled, in the way that additional units across the hospital will free up space to take in some of the people that are in the emergency wards today. There are specific percentiles. When they get reached, a new protocol kicks in. This is a very, very helpful system of improvement that will yield the results that we're all after.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, someone doesn't want to be a percentile before they can be treated. We need an administrator who can actually call in staff, open up beds, and do it now. The minister is obviously unaware of the real cost of keeping someone in a hospital simply because AHS policy refuses to vertically integrate their patient care to follow a patient home to convalesce with proper, necessary home care. A chief administrative officer would implement such a plan and integrate vertically all the way home. When will you appoint a chief administrator that can actually do all of these things from emergency rooms to home care?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, there is an executive team there that does exactly that. As a result of that executive team, I have to tell you that we're now going to be opening 360 net new acute-care beds across the province of Alberta. It's a wonderful announcement. As a result of that, we'll also be hiring 500 additional RNs to help staff those beds. This is all part of the plan. Those are net new nurses, so to speak, as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Education Curriculum

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. There seems to be a lot of pressure on schools to teach a wide variety of subjects such as Canadian history, financial literacy, grammar, home economics, industrial arts, heritage languages, et cetera. Has the minister reviewed the curriculum to determine if there is room to include and/or expand the teaching of some of these subjects within the current program?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last two years we've been engaged in a project we call Inspiring Education. The report came out, and it articulated a vision of three Es for education for the 21st century, to inspire and enable students to achieve successes and fulfillment as engaged thinkers, ethical citizens, with an entrepreneurial spirit. Those are the types of competencies that we need to have in our students. The next step in the process is to figure out how that impacts the development of curriculum and what we include in the curriculum in terms of what knowledge they need to know and what skills they need to have.

Mr. Allred: Following that, Mr. Speaker, does the Department of Education review and prioritize the importance of some of these subjects on a regular basis?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there's a constant process of reviewing and updating curriculum. It involves teachers. It involves stakeholders. It's a fairly comprehensive process. Again, as I indicated in my last answer, we have engaged in this process of Inspiring Education to say: what does 21st century education need to be, and what skills and attributes and knowledge do our students need to have to be successful both locally and globally? We will be reviewing curriculum going forward in that context and evergreening our curriculum in that context.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that it is impossible to include all of the desired courses in a 12-year school program, has the minister considered adding a 13th year to the school program?

Mr. Hancock: Short answer, Mr. Speaker: no. We wouldn't be adding a compulsory 13th year to the curriculum. There is, of course, no reason why a student can't take the courses that they want, take an extra period of time if they want. The school system is open to students up until age 19 at the present time. We are under discussion with the School Act, and there is a possibility that we could discuss whether that should be extended to 20 or 21, but the bottom line is that we will include the core courses that are needed for students to have the knowledge, skills, and attributes that they need to participate globally and locally in the economy, in their community . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July 2009 Transportation released two investment-grade reports on the benefits of high-speed rail service between Edmonton and Calgary. More than a year after paying the consultants close to a million dollars for these and one other, undisclosed report, the Minister of Transportation said that the province was considering its options. To the Minister of Transportation. A million dollars is lots of money for the reports. Has the government used the reports to make any decision, or are the reports now gathering dust on the shelves?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, we haven't made any decisions about actually moving forward immediately. We use the report when we do our own studies. We're still looking at high-speed rail between Edmonton and Calgary. Mr. Speaker, as you know, we've been in some difficult times here budgetwise, and we'll be looking at moving ahead with high-speed rail in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The president of the Alberta High-Speed Rail company told the parliamentary committee in Ottawa that he is planning to put a 300 kilometre per hour train on a dedicated passenger highway. Why do Albertans have to hear about an Alberta project through a committee in Ottawa? Why not, for a start, release the other report?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, he's done some research that I haven't seen about somebody reporting to Ottawa on when we're moving ahead with high-speed rail. I absolutely am not sure what he's talking about there.

Mr. Kang: Well, I think I know what I'm talking about, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Transportation. The estimates are that a high-speed rail line would cost 3 and a half billion dollars and give a $19 billion boost to the economy over its lifespan, not to mention the environmental, road safety, and job creation benefits. What is the minister doing to move this project forward?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got to say that he did say a few things there now that he knows what he's talking about. There was some truth in those statements he just made. I have to tell the hon. member that our next step is that I am looking into where we would put the corridors. We have already put in place two pieces of land in Calgary and in Edmonton, and we're looking at connecting those dots.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

NAIT Programs

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was with great disappointment and concern that I read recent reports that NAIT is considering cutting nine of its excellent postsecondary programs, programs like medical transcription, avionics engineering technology, and records management. My question today is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. The minister often talks about increasing options and opportunities for students, so why are programs being cut?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to be clear that no decisions about cutting programs have been made. I believe that NAIT is simply looking at the relevancy and effectiveness and demand for approximately nine programs. I think it's important that over time our institutions look at all of the programs that they offer to ensure that they are relevant, that they're serving Albertans, they're serving taxpayers. If NAIT or any other institution wishes to suspend a program, they do have to submit a proposal to the ministry for approval, and as I said, we have not received any.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like the hon. minister has final say in this particular process, so given that to be so, what are your decisions to be based on?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate that I have not received a proposal from NAIT. When institutions do submit proposals, the final decisions are based on a solid business case. That includes factors like the graduation rates, the enrolments, the needs of employers and Albertans. The most important factor is how the students in these programs are going to be accommodated, those that are enrolled, those that may want to enrol in them. We look at all of those factors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. If the programs are to be cut, what happens to those students that are currently enrolled in their first year or have just entered their second year of the program?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the impact on the student is the highest priority when an institution enters into a strategic review like this, and I'm sure that that's very high on the agenda of NAIT as well. Institutions have to identify in the proposal that they would eventually submit to the ministry the contingencies that they would use for their overall business case, grandfathering students that are in the program as an example. In the case of NAIT they have assured the department that any prospective students will have those contingencies and those protections.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Alberta Health Services President

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Stephen Duckett's cookie video has had over 70,000 hits on the web in three days. He's sort of on track to rival Lady Gaga and Justin Bieber. He's been on the TV news as far away as Europe. Unfortunately, Dr. Duckett has made himself a joke, which was made clear to me in many candid conversations in the last three days. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does this minister have full confidence in Stephen Duckett as CEO of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Duckett has an enormous responsibility. He made some inappropriate and very unfortunate comments. I have spoken with him about that. I believe his own board, to whom he reports directly, will also be speaking with him about it. I know he deeply regrets the comments. It's just unfortunate that it happened at a time when we had such good news to share with regard to emergency room protocols.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister didn't answer my question, so my question I will repeat. Is the Minister of Health and Wellness still saying he has full confidence in Stephen Duckett as the CEO of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I know that as part of Dr. Duckett's performance review the board will be speaking with him about performance measures that deal with quality, with access, with sustainability. Perhaps they'll even be talking about these comments. I don't know. That will be up to the board to deal with that. In the meantime we'll continue to focus on what we're trying to do, and that's to improve health care and health care outcomes for Albertans.

Dr. Taft: Well, I think the minister's responses speak volumes. Clearly, he does not have confidence in Dr. Duckett. Let me make a suggestion here. The second-quarter update provided today shows that Alberta Health and Wellness is underspending its budget by $184 million. Why isn't Alberta Health Services mobilizing all of its resources at its disposal to improve the health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the announcement that he's talking about, which our minister of finance made, refers to a deficit that perhaps may not have been as great as they were projecting, but I'll have the minister of finance augment, please.

The Speaker: I'm afraid the time is gone.

Hon. members, we've been able to recognize 19 members today. There were 114 questions and responses.

Before we continue with the Routine, I would like to advise all members that six years ago, on November 22, 15 of you were elected for the first time. I would like to extend congratulations to the hon. members for Foothills-Rocky View, Peace River, Calgary-West, Calgary-Foothills, Highwood, Calgary-Nose Hill, Calgary-Hays, Cypress-Medicine Hat, Stony Plain, Lacombe-Ponoka, Calgary-Lougheed, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, Calgary-Mountain View, Calgary-Varsity, Calgary-Currie, and Lethbridge-East. This is your sixth anniversary today. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore: one year ago today you were re-elected for the second time. Today is also the anniversary of his arrival in the world – what a day it was for his mother – of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll continue.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if it might be appropriate, before we start Members' Statements, given the time, to ask that we waive the rule that says we finish at 3 o'clock and allow Members' Statements to be completed in their entirety.

The Speaker: Do I take it that the Routine would then conclude at the conclusion of Members' Statements and the remainder of the Routine would just not be continued with?

Mr. Hancock: That's what I suggested, but perhaps it would be more appropriate to suggest that we complete the Routine.

The Speaker: So because we're coming up against Standing Order 7(7), which basically says that at 3 o'clock the Speaker shall notify the Assembly, there's a motion, which requires unanimous consent, that we would complete the Routine notwithstanding that we've passed 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Okay. We'll continue with Members' Statements, and we'll conclude directly at 3 o'clock. We will conclude then.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka with a member's statement, please.

Gord Bamford

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured now to rise and recognize Mr. Gord Bamford for his many achievements and accomplishments, not only for the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka but for this province and entire country. Gord grew up just outside of Lacombe, where his family recognized the importance of country life and community involvement. One of the most profound childhood experiences for Gord was 4-H, where he learned invaluable life lessons such as responsibility and leadership. He's a true country boy, devoted family man, skilled entertainer, and a very successful multi-award-winning Canadian country music artist. He has written and recorded songs with some of Nashville's greatest and has shared the stage with Reba McEntire, Tim McGraw, Brooks and Dunn, and the legendary George Strait.

Mr. Speaker, this year has been a phenomenal year for Gord: being named the 2010 Canadian Country Music Association male artist of the year award, receiving the Country Music Television video of the year for Day Job, album of the year as well as a humanitarian of the year award. Just recently the Lacombe Day-break Rotary Club awarded Gord the Paul Harris fellowship award for his generous support and humanitarian efforts.

Mr. Speaker, Gord is realizing his dream and using his success to create opportunity, strengthen community, and effect positive change for kids. For the past three years he has hosted the Gord Bamford Charity Golf Tournament. In 2009 he raised $170,000 for local charities, and this year $230,000 was generated to support charities such as Big Brothers & Big Sisters, Lacombe accessible park, Lacombe Athletic Park society, Ronald McDonald House in Red Deer, and the Make-a-Wish Foundation. As Gord so profoundly said: "It's not about making it, it's about making it matter."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize Gord Bamford for his accomplishments and his continued efforts in making it matter. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Savings Strategy

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first-quarter update forecast the value of the heritage fund at $14.1 billion. Two years ago last March the fund was valued at $17 billion. Let's compare the heritage fund's lacklustre performance to the Norway fund, which is now worth over $500 billion according to the Norwegian central bank. Norway's fund received its first inflow of capital only 14 years ago. They've saved $500 billion in 14 years while this government has managed to save only $14 billion in 34 years. What a difference. While Alberta can't even return the heritage fund to its 2008 value of $17 billion, Norway forecasts that their energy savings will grow by over $250 billion in the next four years to total $765 billion.

Research concludes that there is not a significant difference in oil and gas production in Alberta and Norway. In 2009 Norway produced about 2 million barrels per day, Alberta 1.9 million barrels per day. Alberta outperformed in 2009 when it came to natural gas production. It was almost 20 per cent more than what the Norwegians did.

Public debate on the petroleum fund in Norway has included a discussion on whether the country should use more of the energy revenues for the annual budget instead of saving for the future, whether the level of exposure to the volatile and risky stock market is financially safe, and whether the investment policy of the petroleum fund is ethical. These are just a few examples. The Norwegians have devoted a great deal of attention to this issue while Alberta's government has lagged behind.

Alberta Liberals have repeatedly encouraged this government to do a better job of saving for the future. Only the sustainability fund, an Alberta Liberal idea adopted by this government . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Domagoj Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege that I rise today to acknowledge and commemorate the 33rd annual Croatian Canadian Folklore Federation West Festival, which was successfully hosted by the Domagoj Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble and school of Edmonton, held over the May long weekend of this year in our capital city. For over 35 years the Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble of Edmonton, known as Domagoj, under the auspices of the Nativity of Mary Croatian Catholic Church, has exemplified an unwavering commitment to preserve the songs, dances, and national costumes of the centuries-old Croatian culture.

The Domagoj Croatian Folk Dance Ensemble is also a member of the Croatian Canadian Folklore Federation West, whose goal is to preserve traditional Croatian folklore and to share its rich cultural traditions at the national level. Since Domagoj's inception this ensemble has had a long-standing presence in our community by participating in major events in the city of Edmonton, which includes the 1975 opening ceremonies of the Edmonton Coliseum, known today as Rexall Place; the Commonwealth Games in 1978; and is one of the first cultural ensembles to proudly take part in Edmonton's first Heritage Festival.

Mr. Speaker, congratulations and best wishes to all of the performers, teachers, organizers, volunteers, families, and friends who through their tireless generosity, diligence, and dedication ensured an outstanding and very successful folklore festival for all to enjoy. The diverse cultural mosaic in Alberta, which includes the Croatian heritage and traditions, is truly a blessing for which I'm very grateful. Thank you all and God bless. [Remarks in Croatian]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on behalf.

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding

M14. Mr. Hehr moved on behalf of Dr. Swann that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence sent to the government between January 1, 2008, and September 10, 2010, from businesses and nongovernmental organizations regarding the government's funding of carbon capture and storage technology.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the carbon capture and storage fund is an enormous government expenditure and that it represents government's central response to climate change and that this technology still remains unproven and untested and that 2 billion taxpayer dollars are intended for this technology, Albertans need to know more. With Bill 24 there is no identification on when this long-term liability will be undertaken by the government in terms of when we're going to take it over from the industry. We may have discussed this with the private companies investing in new technology. Furthermore, there's a lack of clarity in how this money will be expended. Again, with assuming long-term liability for these potential products for the good of Albertans, there needs to be public disclosure of the correspondence that has occurred to date between industry and the government on CCS. We require information to understand the government's decision to undertake this liability.

It is for these reasons that we request copies of "all correspondence sent to the government between January 1, 2008, and September 10, 2010, from businesses and nongovernmental organizations regarding the government's funding of carbon capture and storage technology."

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, this motion for a return is – I don't know if I'd call it sneaky, but we'll call it sneaky on two accounts. What the opposition is wanting us to do is their research for them. We have the bill before the Legislature. We can debate it as much as we want. But if you heard the preamble by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, what he was really saying is: if you provide us with all this information, then you'll be doing all our research for us as part of the debate on the bill.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, it's sneaky because as a motion for a return this is a direct attempt to bypass freedom of information, and bypassing freedom of information, or the FOIP process, violates third-party confidentiality. The FOIP process is essential to ensure that third-party confidentiality is protected. This request is not for the government's information, but it's for all the public correspondence received from businesses and nongovernmental organizations related to carbon capture and storage technology funding, and it would be inappropriate for the province to release that information without the permission of all third parties.

Now, if the member is interested in really learning more about CCS technology and our work with industry, the member can access the Alberta Energy website. This website lists all the names of companies who have been asked to submit full-project CCS proposals. If there's an interest in more information about these projects, then it would be simpler to call these companies directly. The companies then could provide the information that the member is requesting. The information can also be requested through appropriate channels such as, as I said earlier, FOIP.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments, when we really get to the real intent behind this motion, it's that (a) they want us to do their research for them, and (b) they want to ensure that they bypass the FOIP process. So I would urge all members to reject this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This motion for a return is calling for transparency and accountability; it's not calling for a shortcutting of the information process. The information has obviously been collected by the government. Albertans are interested in the information, and it is our job to ask the government to provide that information to Albertans. We already know through Bill 24 that the government has committed $2 billion to sequestration, but what we don't know – and I'm not sure to what extent the government does know, but they could at least bring us up to date and Albertans up to date – is the cost of assuming the liability once the carbon dioxide is placed into the ground, hopefully there to stay.

The Minister of Energy suggests that this is an end run or that this is an alternative to the FOIP process. The FOIP process, Mr. Speaker, is a very lengthy undertaking. It's also a very expensive undertaking. The Liberal opposition caucus does not have the amount of money necessary either to FOIP all the documents or to do the research necessary. It's not as easy as the minister would have us believe, that we simply dial up the various individuals listed on the minister's website and ask them: what do you think?

The information has been gathered. It has been paid for by the taxpayer's dime, in this case probably several millions in terms of consultation efforts. We're simply saying that Albertans deserve to have that information. That's why we as the Liberal opposition are asking for the type of transparency and accountability that the Premier promised during his leadership campaign but, unfortunately, has yet to be delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close the debate.

Mr. Hehr: I'll reiterate a few of the points that my colleague from Calgary-Varsity made. If the information is there, I would believe it is in the best interest of all members of the House and, in fact, most people in the province of Alberta to receive this information, for all of us in the House to know what the government is undertaking, what liabilities we the people of Alberta are undertaking in carbon capture and storage and having that information to us from the companies themselves, who will have engineers who have worked on this correspondence, who have understood sort of the risks that they are passing along to the Alberta people and how this may affect us long term and why the government is undertaking this liability.

For one, we can say that we can go through the FOIP process, but again that is very difficult, very onerous, and very costly when the information is already compiled, already ready for Alberta citizens. If we could have that information, it would assist the Alberta people greatly.

[Motion for a Return 14 lost]

Nuclear Power

M15. Mr. Hehr moved on behalf of Dr. Swann that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence between Bruce Power and the government regarding proposals for nuclear power in Alberta for the time period between January 1, 2006, and September 10, 2010.

Mr. Hehr: Immediately following the last provincial election Bruce Power, a major Ontario-based nuclear power company, took over ownership of Energy Alberta Corp., a company that had made an initial proposal to build a nuclear power station in northern Alberta in Peace Country. In March 2008 Bruce Power filed an application with the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission to prepare a site for future construction of a nuclear power station. In January 2009 Bruce Power sent a letter to the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission announcing that it would be withdrawing its initial application as it had wanted to change the site in question. According to Bruce Power, local residents had great concern about the local aquifers, so BP wanted to shift away from that locale. Bruce Power has settled on the Whitecourt location, northeast of this initial site. The government has continually denied any request for information over this highly controversial topic.

Before we can even consider nuclear power as a potential energy source in Alberta, full consultations with the citizens of this province are a must. The issue deserves a full public debate where all arguments may be heard and the best decision can be made. This government continues to lack transparency in their plans for nuclear energy in Alberta, and in the public interest of Albertans we are requesting that correspondence between Bruce Power and the Alberta government become public.

To give Albertans a sense of the direction of this government, this administration needs to lay its cards on the table. It is for this reason we would ask for copies of “all correspondence between Bruce Power and the government regarding proposals for nuclear power in Alberta for the time period between January 1, 2006, and September 10, 2010.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I rise. This is not dissimilar to the last request. In fact, it's identical, again trying to get us to provide them with all of their research material, and this material, again, is available through the FOIP process. I won't say any more than that because I'm dying to hear the debate under second reading of a couple of private members' initiatives that the members of the third or fourth party over there denied unanimous consent for. They wanted to get on to the debate, so I'll let them get on to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I, too, am very interested in the private members' debate. However, it's privacy that we're talking about right now.

The information paid for by Alberta taxpayers should not be withheld, should not be used as a force against Albertans. I don't believe, hon. Minister of Energy and Mr. Speaker, that there is a more controversial concern when it comes to power production and dissemination than atomic energy and the potential use and placement of it. For the government to suggest that this is their information, privy to them, that even if we were to put forward a FOIP request, they would provide it to us, is ridiculous. So we did what was requested of us to do. We asked for transparency. We asked for accountability in the form of Motion for a Return 15.

This business of tilting the playing fields. “Because we have all the information, we will control that information, and we'll hold our cards very tightly to our chest because we don't believe, in our omniscient opinion, that it is any of your business” is basically what the Minister of Energy is saying. It's not just Liberal business or information for the hon. members of the Wildrose or the NDP or our independent Member for Calgary-Currie. It's information that is very vital to the health and well-being of Albertans in general.

While the majority of countries in Europe, with the notable exception of France, are moving away from nuclear energy – Germany, for example, being one of the fastest retreaters from nuclear energy – the mere thought that it's being proposed for Alberta, even if it's changed to the Whitecourt area, which is less on the fault lines than was previously proposed, is a major consideration.

Bruce Power backed out, which I'm thankful for. But until Albertans have a sense of where this government is going with future energy production, they have a right to be concerned. If the Minister of Energy is not willing to provide that transparency and accountability, then I suppose we will go through the FOIP process, but I believe it's not only a waste of time but a waste of money. It should be information readily available to all Albertans. We shouldn't have to be standing up in this House through a motion for a return requesting that information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude the debate.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the nuclear question is one of the most important debates the Alberta people will have. Any way the Minister of Energy could facilitate this being an open and honest debate and assisting members of this House, all members of this honourable House, with retaining all this information and having all of this information, I believe, would serve its citizens well. I reiterate that I believe our motion for a return is for the benefit of all Albertans, not merely to give our researchers a break. Why go through the FOIP process when this seems like a simple thing that the Alberta people would be most interested in?

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Don't shake your head, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo closed the debate.

[Motion for a Return 15 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 206

Utilities Consumer Advocate Act

[Debate adjourned November 15: Ms Notley speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Seven minutes, hon. member. Proceed.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was last speaking about this issue last Monday, obviously, which would make sense, and had risen to speak, generally speaking, in favour of the notion of having a Utilities Consumer Advocate and having that Utilities Consumer Advocate report to the Legislature.

Let me start just ever so briefly. You know, I'm certainly pleased that the Member for Calgary-McCall has put forward this bill. I think it's a good bill. I do need, of course, to suggest that it's not a bill that I would like for us to have a requirement for. It's a bill that arises from the unfortunate fallout from the extremely poorly thought-out decision of this government to embark upon a program of deregulation.

While I appreciate the Member for Calgary-McCall coming forward now and bringing forward this motion, it does of course remind me that when this program was first pursued by this government back in the mid-1990s, members from the Member for Calgary-McCall's own caucus, unfortunately, at the time supported the process of deregulation and advocated in favour of it. I am pleased that they have now reached the point where they acknowledge the error of their ways, and it's really unfortunate that members opposite, members of the government, are not prepared to also acknowledge what an unfortunate turn of events deregulation has been for Alberta consumers.

Having said that, I think that it's really important as well that we talk about why it is we need to have a Utilities Consumer Advocate actually report to the Legislature. I think, if anything, that the events of today are yet another example of why it is that we cannot expect this government to let anybody within their circle speak out openly without fear of reprisal, without fear of having their message sanitized or massaged or limited in some way even where that speaking out might be in the best interests of Albertans. I mean, we've clearly seen that this government is more interested in controlling the message than it is in addressing the substance of that message and engaging Albertans in an effort to reach the best outcome that might come from having a thorough conversation about whatever that message is. Instead, we spend a lot of time massaging the message, spending way too much money on public relations campaigns, in some cases even arguably putting out misinformation through those public relations campaigns. It's all about spin and message and very little about actually fixing the problem.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

What we do know is that Albertans pay, generally speaking, the highest utility rates in the country and that they have been subject to some really quite horrendous hard-sell tactics on the doorstep by the companies that are now in that field. The government's response has been half-hearted and milquetoast at best in terms of protecting consumers even in that setting. We've got this long-standing problem with the rates simply being too high and us now having given up the ability to manage that. We have the spectre of this government under the previous Premier handing out huge cheques to consumers on the eve of elections to try and cover up the fact that deregulation was such a negative development for consumers. Now we have, you know, hard-sell tactics on the doorstep with respect to consumers, who are unable to really wade through the complexity of the market. This is what, of course, the government calls choice, but really all it is is a lack of choice and being forced into the position of having to spend much more for a very basic service than should ever have been the case. That's because of a really, really unwise and ill-thought-out policy decision on the part of this provincial government.

Certainly, having the consumer advocate report to the Legislature would assist somewhat anyway in this long, sorry tradition of people internal to this government being punished in some way for attempting to speak out about systemic concerns and problems that they identify in the course of their work within the government. We really do have a long and sorry tradition in that respect in this province. You know, we don't have whistle-blower legislation, which, of course, is something that we've long advocated for. We steadfastly refuse at this point to expand the reporting process of many sort of internal advocate types to the Legislature because we'd much rather make sure that the ministers' offices and their associated communications people can massage whatever types of reports come out if, in fact, they do come out. That, of course, is combined with having a freedom of information regime that allows the government to exempt practically every piece of internal information from disclosure simply by calling it advice to the minister, which is much of what the current utilities advocate information can be characterized as.

We do want to support this movement towards enhancing the independence of the Utilities Consumer Advocate as put forward by the Member for Calgary-McCall. We're in support of the broader jurisdiction and the range of content that is offered up by this legislation. I think that's also an improvement. I would have liked to have seen the enforcement ability of the consumer advocate as outlined in this act be slightly stronger. Nonetheless, fundamental to the rationale behind this act is the notion of independence, and I can think of no better day than today to talk about how much we need to support the opportunity for people to be independent within this government and speak openly as a result.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East on Bill 206.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. This bill would establish the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, which would be tasked with providing information to electricity and natural gas consumers. Furthermore, the Utilities Consumer Advocate, UCA for short, would investigate consumer complaints regarding natural gas or electricity. In short, this bill seeks to protect consumers from unfair business practices by giving them an avenue to voice their complaints. This bill offers a good solution.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is no problem to solve. The Utilities Consumer Advocate as it exists today already protects consumers with a collaborative approach. The advocate receives input and guidance from an experienced advisory board, which contains representatives from a range of consumer groups. These representatives are residential and small-business consumers from throughout our province. They then work in collaboration with the department in order to protect Albertans from utility issues, including poor billing practices and inappropriate sales tactics.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this government has shown its dedication to protecting residential and small-business consumers. It is sometimes difficult for small-scale consumers of natural gas and electricity to have a voice if they feel they have been treated improperly. The Utilities Consumer Advocate has given Albertans this voice, but not only does it give Albertans a voice; it also ensures that Albertans are aware of the current state of the natural gas and electricity market. By the end of 2010 the UCA will have attended a total of 40 trade shows, exhibitions, and other events throughout this province. It also provides up-to-date pricing information on its website.

In my experience talking with some of my constituents, I know that finding information on current natural gas and electricity prices is sometimes very difficult. The Utilities Consumer Advocate alleviates some of these difficulties by providing Albertans looking for information on electricity and natural gas prices with a destination to find this information.

Clearly, the UCA has done nothing short of an outstanding job of being accessible to all Albertans. It has done more than simply inform consumers; it has played an active role in responding to consumer complaints in a responsible manner. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in the last year the UCA has held nearly 100 hearings before the Alberta Utilities Commission. Overall, the combined efforts of the UCA and other intervenors at the rate hearing reduced the price of electricity and natural gas charged by utility companies.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to implement stand-alone legislation when the UCA already does an admirable job of protecting consumers. Importantly, the advocate does not simply concern itself with problems when they arise. It also prevents future problems by working with consumer groups when there are common interests, and this improves the efficiency of regulatory interventions on behalf of all consumers.

Regulatory intervention is an unfortunate yet inevitable process. It is our duty as a government to step in when it becomes apparent that an individual or corporation is using the system to gain an unfair advantage, and this government has shown its commitment to enhancing the efficiency of this process as it relates to intervention in the natural gas and electricity market. We have done so by creating and maintaining the Utilities Consumer Advocate. It has worked diligently to introduce good evidence supporting consumer requirements in the regulatory process. In short, Mr. Speaker, it gives consumers a collective voice that individuals alone do not possess. The Utilities Consumer Advocate gives a voice to consumers by working closely with industry in order to ensure that consumers are represented.

Mr. Speaker, the Utilities Consumer Advocate already does a commendable job in protecting consumers with a collaborative approach, and this bill does not improve that status quo. Therefore, I will not be supporting this bill, and I urge all members of this House to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you wish to join in 206? I checked the list. You have already spoken in the second reading.

Mr. Hehr: It was such a good bill that I wanted to speak twice, but I understand.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill in second reading? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to speak today to Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act. It's brought forward, as we know, by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. As you know, this bill seeks to create the office of a Utilities Consumer Advocate, which would be responsible for providing information and guidance to small electricity and natural gas consumers throughout Alberta. In addition, this Utilities Consumer Advocate as provided for in the legislation would review the effectiveness of government responses made by the Alberta Utilities Commission. The Utilities Consumer Advocate would also have to report annually to this Assembly.

Essentially, this bill seeks to provide better protection for consumers of electricity and natural gas in Alberta, but, with respect, when I look at the bill, I see a piece of legislation that attempts to solve a problem for which a solution already exists. Here in Alberta we already have the Utilities Consumer Advocate, which has done commendable and effective work in protecting electricity and gas consumers all around the province. The current Utilities Consumer Advocate provides a voice to electricity and gas consumers in Alberta. The Utilities Consumer Advocate has the power to investigate, mediate, and make Albertans' voices heard by both government regulators and the utilities industry. At the end of the day the Utilities Consumer Advocate puts Albertans first and promotes their best interests. The Utilities Consumer Advocate helps these consumers make informed choices regarding their energy options.

3:30

It's clear that Albertans are contacting the Utilities Consumer Advocate and feel that it can protect their best interests. I'm pleased to say that the Utilities Consumer Advocate has protected Albertans from substantial rate increases by intervening in approximately 100 gas and electricity proceedings in front of the Alberta Utilities Commission on an annual basis. It's been the voice of small energy consumers in Alberta since its inception, and Albertans have recognized this. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall would be interested to know that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is contacted by an average of 250 consumers every day. That translates into tens of thousands of calls on an annual basis. It's clear that Albertans know who to contact. They know that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is providing them with a voice and protecting their interests.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate is also constantly working to further educate Albertans on the services offered by their department. For example, in 2006 Albertans told this government that they wanted to know more about the energy options available to them. They also wanted to know how they could better manage their energy use and where to go for help. This led to the redevelopment of the Utilities Consumer Advocate website. The government conducted consumer research to pinpoint the kind of information that is important to consumers, and the redeveloped website certainly helped address those needs.

Currently the Utilities Consumer Advocate is running a consumer awareness campaign. This campaign includes a wide variety of tools, including video and their user-friendly website, that touch on a variety of issues. These issues include how to read a meter, how to read your electrical bill, and a simple explanation of the electricity market, just to name a few. This campaign is designed to reach out to Albertans who may not know that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is a powerful resource that will assist them in making informed decisions regarding their energy options.

Mr. Speaker, not only does the Utilities Consumer Advocate protect and educate consumers, it also investigates complaints. A major part of protecting consumers involves investigating their complaints and responding appropriately. Over the past seven years 414 investigations have been conducted against energy marketers. These investigations are carried out on behalf of the consumer to protect their best interests. From these 414 investigations 193 enforcement actions have taken place. These actions range from warning letters to criminal prosecution. In addition, Service Alberta already investigates complaints from Albertans regarding consumer business transactions that are covered by the Fair Trading Act.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate has a long track record of providing a voice to Albertans and protecting their interests in a wide variety of ways. It has been a valuable tool and voice for thousands of Albertans, and I commend this office on their dedication and commitment to protecting Alberta's energy consumers and assisting Albertans to make informed decisions about their energy choices.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall believes that this bill will go a long way to protecting consumers. I would, however, respectfully submit that the current Utilities Consumer Advocate is already doing this. Albertans are using the Utilities Consumer Advocate because they know it provides them with a voice, they know that it provides numerous educational tools, and because they know it has their best interests in mind.

I would like to thank the member for introducing this legislation because it's given us all an opportunity to consider and contemplate the important work that the Utilities Consumer Advocate has done, but unfortunately I, as would be obvious by now, will not be able to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and join second reading debate on Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. Bill 206 seeks to create the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA. The proposed UCA would be responsible for providing information and advice to small consumers of electricity and natural gas in Alberta. The bill also tasks the Utilities Consumer Advocate with investigating consumer complaints and reviewing the effectiveness of government responses to recommendations made by the Alberta Utilities Commission. If this sounds familiar, it's because the government has already created the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall is proposing through this bill that it would make the Utilities Consumer Advocate an officer of the Legislature. In addition, the proposed UCA would have to report annually to this Assembly.

I presume this bill is attempting to fix the Utilities Consumer Advocate. But, Mr. Speaker, the current UCA is protecting Albertans from substantial price increases, it is educating Albertans on energy use, and it gives small energy consumers in this province a voice. The current Utilities Consumer Advocate is working for Albertans, so creating a new stand-alone act that changes a system that Albertans are using and have responded positively to is redundant.

The current UCA's annual budget is $8.5 million. This is made up of industry funding split between two sources: 80 per cent of the funding for the UCA comes from the Balancing Pool, and the remaining 20 per cent comes from AltaGas and ATCO Gas.

Mr. Speaker, currently the Utilities Consumer Advocate is part of the budget of Service Alberta. Within the budget of Service Alberta our government can adequately prioritize utility matters against other critical issues in Alberta such as education and health care.

Bill 206 will increase costs associated with the Utilities Consumer Advocate as under the proposed act the advocate would be an officer of the Legislature. Repositioning this department will increase the number of staff costs associated with reporting. This government has prioritized its spending, focusing on core programs that Albertans value. Budget 2010 increased funding for priority areas, including $2.1 billion more for Health and $250 million more for school boards. This government recently announced that it would provide additional funding to school boards for teacher salaries. Funding for seniors benefits, AISH, and PDD was protected during the downturn. There is a long list of programs and services that this government has been able to increase or maintain funding for during this economic downturn due to a long history of fiscal restraint.

Mr. Speaker, the current Utilities Consumer Advocate fields thousands of calls on a yearly basis. They provide Albertans with resources to learn about electricity and natural gas, and they provide educational tools that empower consumers. This government is already ensuring that consumers are protected and focusing on core programs that Albertans value.

With that being said, I will not be supporting Bill 206, and I urge all members not to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have on my list here three members: Edmonton-Ellerslie, Calgary-Bow, and Edmonton-Rutherford. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act, being brought forward by the Member for Calgary-McCall. I would like to thank the member for bringing this forward.

The purpose of this bill is to create an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA, which would provide information and advice to small electricity and natural gas consumers in the province. It would also review the effectiveness of government responses to recommendations made by Alberta Utilities Commission. In other words, Mr. Speaker, what this bill is trying to do is introduce more government regulation to the electricity and natural gas sector, regulation that Alberta does not need. Currently our government's regulatory review process is looking to streamline regulation, and Bill 206 goes against this streamlining by creating a redundant regulatory body which our government already has.

Before I begin to go any further on this matter, let me be clear that I believe that consumers in the electricity and natural gas sectors should feel safe and should feel protected. However, that protection should not come in the form of yet another bureaucratic layer of government that will merely be duplication of an already-existing regulatory body.

Alberta already has a sound regulatory system in the electricity and natural gas sector to protect consumers, which is the existence of the Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate. There is a framework in place that balances the interests of consumers and utilities. This framework is almost an identical replica of that of the existing UCA. For example, one of the services that UCA intends to provide is giving consumers the information they need to make informed choices about how to purchase electricity and natural gas.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the notion that consumers should be informed and educated about purchasing utilities. The only problem I have is that the existing UCA lists informing and educating consumers about electricity and natural gas issues as one of their main responsibilities. It is the same service just worded differently, so why do we need it twice? Also, the Regulatory Review Secretariat already leads regulatory reform within the government of Alberta and works to support the government's goals and priorities. It does so by placing an emphasis on the development of quality regulations and motions, on the impact of regulation on stakeholders. The streamlining of the regulatory review process does not weaken consumer protection; it makes it easier and less confusing.

The Regulatory Review Secretariat developed guiding principles of regulation which include, first, necessity, meaning that strong evidence is needed before regulating, ensuring that existing regulations remain relevant through ongoing review; second, effectiveness, which implies that a results-based approach and the design of regulation will ensure that regulations adequately comply with the enforcement; thirdly, proportionality, stating that the government should regulate as lightly as possible and use alternatives when possible; and, finally, transparency, stating that government should consult widely before regulating or changing regulations. This is evidence that the consumers of the utilities sector are being protected, just not with redundant legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the next point I would like to talk about, which goes hand in hand with streamlining the regulatory review process, is Alberta's commitment to staying competitive in the business market. In this Assembly our government recently implemented the Competitiveness Act, which furthers this government's commitment to make Alberta one of the most economically competitive places in the world. Under the act the province is also committed to creating the conditions that will attract new businesses, innovators, and the next generation of entrepreneurs. With stronger competition comes a stronger economy and a better quality of life for all Albertans.

It would make no sense to endorse Bill 206, a bill that preaches more regulation, in a time when we are trying to maximize competitiveness. All this will do is burden the utility companies with another complication in trying to perform their business. It would hinder investment and result in higher rates charged to consumers.

Alberta is fine the way it is, Mr. Speaker. Under the current regulatory regime in the electricity and natural gas sector Alberta has the best of both worlds. We have a regulatory structure that protects our consumers to the fullest extent while at the same time not burdening the market with unnecessary regulations that do nothing but waste time and money. Given the way that the regulations in the electricity and natural gas sectors currently stand and this government's current objective to generate an even better economy, there's no need for the UCA to interfere. Albertans simply do not benefit from this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-McCall for giving me the opportunity to express my views on why we should stay the course with our current regulation practices in the electricity and natural gas sectors. With that being said, I cannot support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act. The objective of this bill is to create an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This bill is not necessary as we already have an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA. Therefore, another office would only create confusion, red tape, and bureaucratic redundancy.

Moreover, Bill 206 proposes to give the UCA broad powers to inquire and investigate, including seizure powers and powers to hold hearings and to compel witnesses. This is inappropriate as these powers affect Albertans' rights. It is unusual to give such powers to a body that's not carrying out quasi-judicial functions. In addition, Bill 206 would allow the UCA to investigate complaints about the fairness of Alberta Utilities Commission hearings. This is wrong as the UCA is a party to a hearing before the Alberta Utilities Commission, and as such it would be improper for it to investigate the fairness of Alberta Utilities Commission hearings.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary to discuss the role of the current UCA as well as the support that the office provides to consumers so that members of this Legislature clearly understand that an advocate already exists. The current UCA is the voice of small energy consumers in Alberta. It offers mediation services between consumers and the electrical or gas industries. Furthermore, the UCA office intervenes in regulatory hearings to represent the interests of residential, farm, and small commercial consumers. The UCA works with other customer groups where there are common interests to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of regulatory interventions on behalf of consumers.

Providing support is a priority for the UCA. For instance, the UCA has offices in Calgary and Edmonton to provide support to consumers. In fact, the UCA is contacted by an average of 250 consumers every day. It deals with consumers' concerns about utility companies and helps them make informed choices about their energy options. In general, the majority of calls are from consumers seeking information about the utilities options when they're moving or setting up new accounts. Also, many calls are related to service disconnections and people seeking information about contracts.

In fact, the volume of calls to the UCA represents less than 2 per cent of all calls received by Service Alberta's information call centre. Mr. Speaker, in the past seven years the UCA has investigated 414 consumer complaints against energy marketers and has carried out 193 enforcement actions, ranging from warning letters to criminal prosecutions.

To further raise awareness and increase its presence in Alberta, on July 5 the UCA opened a new Calgary office to industry and government officials. Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that the UCA is supporting a growing number of Albertans, and here are a few examples. It receives nearly 40,000 phone calls from consumers to the main information line, a 30 per cent increase from the previous year. The UCA website received more than 35,000 visits, a 20 per cent increase from the year before. The UCA is in contact with Alberta consumers through letters and e-mails received as well as office visits and trade shows.

The UCA registered in just about a hundred hearings before the Alberta Utilities Commission in 2009-10. Overall, the combined efforts of the UCA and all intervenors at rate hearings reduced the rate increases requested by utility companies. Throughout the quarter the UCA was active in an average of more than 30 Alberta Utilities Commission proceedings. This is major work that's being done in this province.

The UCA utilizes the services of a number of legal counsels and consultants to enable it to participate effectively in this large volume of activities. However, not all utility applications are dealt with through litigation processes. In fact, many are dealt with through negotiations, which tend to be less costly than the litigated processes.

Mr. Speaker, the point of this whole speech is to point out that Alberta already has a Utilities Consumer Advocate office, and the office of this UCA is clearly doing a great job fulfilling their role and mandate. For this reason alone I do not support Bill 206 as it's not necessary and would only detract from the great work that the current UCA is doing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am also pleased to join debate today in second reading of Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act. The intention of this bill, as we know, is to create an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. The bill would create an additional regulatory layer that seeks to supervise an established and successful advocate for Albertans. The protection and education of utility consumers is very important, but this bill, I believe, is redundant as Alberta already has an office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA as commonly known. The proposed advocate already exists and plays a vital role in the education of utility consumers in Alberta.

Consumer education in regard to utilities is extremely important, as I think all members of the House would agree. Albertans have a voice when it comes to these matters, and the UCA is that voice. Mr. Speaker, the current UCA is a tool which Albertans may use for issues regarding utilities and for receiving education about utilities in this province. In today's high-technology world accessibility has become a growing concern. The ability of Albertans to contact the UCA is taken extremely seriously. That is why there are a multitude of ways in which consumers can contact the existing UCA. They may contact them via phone, in writing, in person, or through its website.

Mr. Speaker, the Utilities Consumer Advocate provides information and advice and represents Albertans' interests regarding electricity and gas markets in this province. In addition, the information consumers can access through the UCA could be as straightforward as explanations of utility bills and even rate comparisons, but the UCA is readily available, and it is accessed regularly by individuals seeking guidance on making informed decisions about their energy options.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate is in fact contacted by an average of 250 consumers every day, and over the course of a year the UCA fields nearly 40,000 phone calls from consumers. These phone calls come from all areas of the province, and the highly qualified staff of the UCA deal with a myriad of issues concerning utilities in Alberta. Not only do consumers have the ability to call the UCA; they may also access its website. The website, Mr. Speaker, logs over 35,000 visits a year. The website has been designed in a visitor-friendly format. It was reviewed as recently as September and provides even greater access to information today.

Having a Utilities Consumer Advocate is important to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and to further promote awareness of the services it offers, a television advertisement has begun airing on six television networks province-wide. The advertisement directs consumers to the aforementioned website, where they can find helpful information regarding utilities in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, along with the television advertisement the Utilities Consumer Advocate launched a consumer awareness campaign earlier this year. The campaign is targeted toward promoting an increased awareness of the UCA so that consumers know they will have an advocate or a voice who will give them unbiased information regarding utilities. In 2010 alone the advocate attended 35 trade shows throughout the province to help raise awareness levels in our province.

The relationship between utility providers and Alberta consumers, municipalities, and industry is pivotal. To ensure these relationships remain stable and healthy, the UCA has created a stakeholder relations team. This team provides information on issues and seeks opportunities to actively work together to benefit small consumers. Mr. Speaker, in the past year the stakeholder relations team has met with stakeholders in Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Strathcona county, Vegreville, St. Albert, Leduc, and Nisku. This team's role is integral to making sure that the right environment is in place for both consumers and utility providers across Alberta.

Utility consumers have a right to access information that will help them make smart choices when dealing with utility providers. That is why in March 2010 the UCA opened an office in Calgary to increase its support to consumers. This office not only provides another outlet in which access to utility information may be found; it also strengthens the role of the advocate in southern Alberta. This Calgary office complements the existing Edmonton office in providing support to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, through an open dialogue with consumers the UCA helps ensure that Albertans are both informed and educated about their various utility options. Accessing information from the UCA is only a phone call or in many cases a click away.

Mr. Speaker, while I believe the intention of the bill is right and I believe that the Member for Calgary-McCall means well in proposing the bill, I would urge that the creation of an alternate body to the UCA which would do the same thing as the Utilities Consumer Advocate currently does is not only fiscally irresponsible but also redundant. The office of the UCA is doing an exemplary job fulfilling their obligations to the utility consumers in this province, and it is important that Albertans have a reliable and transparent entity to turn to when looking at their energy options. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is that entity. In my view, there is no need to fix or alter this body as proposed by Bill 206. The UCA continues to play an important role in educating consumers on their utility choices, and we should not meddle with that success.

Given that, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that I cannot support Bill 206 and would urge all members of the House to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 206? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really glad that I got a chance to get in here and speak to my colleague's motion on consumer advocates because I'll tell you that in this province as a consumer some days I feel like I'm out there all alone. [interjection] And guess what? I am.

Just a couple of points that I wanted to raise about the idea that's been proposed in Bill 206, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Act. Overall, I do agree with this. Let me back up and start from the beginning. Sometimes I wonder if I'm a changeling in Alberta. I definitely was born in Alberta, but I don't believe in deregulation of utilities. Because utilities are so critical to keeping us alive in this winter climate, I think utilities should be publicly owned and controlled. But that's not happening here in my beloved province, so I'll just have to suck that one up and carry on. That is where I come from, so you'll understand where the rest of my argument is.

I was here for sort of the stage 2 of the electricity deregulation, much to my horror, because that, I swear to you, has not been a great deal for Albertans. I'm sure every MLA gets e-mails from people, and if you read the venting columns in the newspaper – wowee – you find this issue in particular coming up all the time. That's the one where people say: "How the heck is it that I could have incurred $6.52 worth of electrical use in a month and then I'm charged" – and I'm sorry that I don't have all the proper names in my head; I'll just make them up, but they'll be close enough so people will know what I'm talking about – "a transfer fee and then I'm charged an administration fee on the transfer fee and then I'm charged a delivery fee and then an administration fee on the delivery fee and at the end of the bill I've paid $72.59 for my $6.52 worth of electricity? What the heck is going on?"

Everybody in Alberta feels like that. Like, what happened? I'd love to be able to go to someone, phone them up, and say: could you tell me whether we were always paying all of that for electricity and now they've just broken it out so we can truly sob over all of the extra charges in here, or did somehow those extra charges creep in when we deregulated and separated all of the strands of delivery so that each piece of it could charge us for what they were doing before? You can't get that answer from the government currently. I think you do need someone that stands as an advocate between the people and the provider, and it's not the government. So I'm very much in favour of what the Member for Calgary-McCall has proposed.

In my caucus we always allow independent thought. I'm sorry. That was just the tiniest little dig, Mr. Speaker, and I'll move right along here. We have free votes on private members' business, so if I might make a few suggestions to my colleague that I just picked up as I went through the act, just a couple of things that I noticed.

On page 3 of the act in section (e) – and I'm not going clause by clause; I'm just vaguely referring by waving the paper around that there might be something in the act in second reading, as we're discussing the principle of it, that would talk about reviewing the adequacy and nature of government response to a commission decision, which I find sort of a strange requirement. I always, just for my own amusement, of course, flip things around and go: okay; if I was government – it's the golden rule principle, really – would I be happy about having to conform to that kind of regulation? Because it's asking that office to somehow rule on the government's adequacy, I think that's very difficult to tabulate or make a decision on. I think we might want to look at that one if we get to Committee of the Whole.

The second area is page 4 under the oath. Now, somebody could correct me on this one, but the way this was written – if it was lifted from another act, then we're probably good, but if it wasn't, it's talking about: whoever is in the advocate's office cannot disclose any information except that provided by law. Those are the kinds of clauses that get you in trouble because if somewhere else in the law you haven't provided for every possible opportunity to speak if they need to, you're in trouble because then you're going to be forever going back and amending every little act in order to actually get your piece to work, so we might want to look at that one as well.

On page 6 it talks about provision of funds to a particular independent agency. Again, I'm playing the golden rule here and flipping it over and going: okay; if I was on the government side, would I be happy about this? I would be ecstatic because if I didn't like the utilities advocate office, I could just not fund them. What that clause essentially says is that provided that there's money that's been voted by the Legislature, then it can be disbursed for various reasons, and then it goes on to list the reasons. I think we need to be careful about how that clause is worded because I ran the Advisory Council on Women's Issues for a number of years here in this province, and that was how they got us. That's eventually how they silenced us. They just withdrew our funding, and then there was no money left for an office or to pay anybody or the per diems for the council members or anything, and that was the end. So we need to be a bit firmer about how money is provided; that money would be provided, for example.

I think the last thing also appears on page 6 if you wanted to go into the fine detail, but of course I'm talking about the principle here. It is around putting in a clause that would require the government to respond within a certain period of time. I would suggest that in the annual report it actually list how long it's been that the government has taken to respond to one of the recommendations from the Utilities Consumer Advocate because that does give you a sense of how slowly or quickly the government is moving on a recommendation.

After years and years and years in this House of watching where there are difficulties – for example, the Auditor General's reports. If you go and look at where particular suggestions have been made repeatedly over the years, you'll find that there's actually a philosophical difference usually in the government, that they don't believe in doing something they've been told, or it's difficult and cumbersome. With enough work eventually all of those things can be overcome, but it does help you identify where there is a roadblock that needs to be worked on with a bit more care and attention than just telling the government: do this. It's a good way of measuring whether there's a deeper problem on hand there.

I hope you'll allow me or you don't mind my making a couple of suggestions that we can work on when we get to Committee of the Whole on this bill. Overall, I do think this is a good idea because I can't say that the current one that is inside of the department and reports directly to the minister – where we have tried to make use of that office through my constituency office in trying to assist constituents, we haven't always met with the success that we were hoping to meet with. So I think this might be preferable.

That's not to say that the staff there aren't doing a good job, but they may not be in a position to react to me as an MLA or sometimes an opposition MLA. That certainly happens where a government minister says: you're going to deal this way with government members and that way with opposition members. That's just inappropriate, and I think we would want to lift something like this out of that and not allow it to happen.

So vote for Bill 206. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other hon. members wishing to speak on Bill 206?

Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, do you want to close the debate, then?

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to stand up and speak in favour of Bill 206. The other day I was giving all the reasons for Bill 206. As I said, I have nothing negative to say about the current Utilities Consumer Advocate or any of her staff, and I'm sure she's committed to serving consumers as best as she can. We are not here creating another layer of bureaucracy; we are just strengthening what we have with this bill. That's why this bill was put forward.

Bill 206 would only empower the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate by giving them more tools to do their important work for Albertans. Right now, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the Utilities Consumer Advocate is an employee of the government, and their staffers are employed by the government, too, and that is under Service Alberta. Until just recently the Utilities Consumer Advocate was not even a full-time job but one of many hats worn by the deputy minister or an assistant deputy minister or, in other words, someone who directly works for the Minister of Service Alberta.

As an officer of the government the position of the Utilities Consumer Advocate can be eliminated at any time, Mr. Speaker. Their staff can get let go if their budgets are severely cut. Their reports can be edited by government bureaucrats, if they are allowed to release the reports at all. So there are issues with the present Utilities Consumer Advocate office, and they cannot even speak to the media or to the public. Sure, they may be doing a fine job, but they are still maybe restrained in lots of areas from fully doing their job.

Albertans deserve consumer protection, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that they are not overcharged for utilities and related services. When I read my bill, I wonder, too, how many charges are there, and I just can't figure it out. Most of the time I'm not even in my apartment. Like, you know, I come back after two weeks, three weeks, and I still get the bill for 35, 40, 50 bucks although I haven't used any power, maybe just for the fridge only, and that's it. The interests of the consumers are so important that they should be represented by an office that is independent of the government. Albertans deserve reliable, understandable consumer information and to have their interests represented at regulatory hearings.

The term of the office of the advocate, I suggest, will be five years, Mr. Speaker, and the Legislative Assembly or the Lieutenant Governor in Council have the ability to suspend or remove the advocate.

The responsibilities of the advocate include but are not limited to representing the interests of electricity and natural gas consumers in proceedings of the Alberta Utilities Commission and other relevant bodies. They will be providing consumers with independent, impartial information about utilities regulations and enforcement, receiving consumer complaints regarding electricity and natural gas provision by the public utilities, investigating complaints about fairness regarding decisions of the commission, reviewing the government's response to decisions of the commission, and educating consumers about electricity and natural gas. Although I heard that, you know, some of the things are getting done, Mr. Speaker, this is just giving the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate more teeth to do their job properly.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we will not be creating another layer of bureaucracy. That's the main complaint I heard from the hon. members from the other side. It will just give more power to the Utilities Consumer Advocate and make it more open and transparent and protect the consumers of Alberta. For those reasons, I urge all the members of the Legislature to support Bill 206.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now put the question.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 206 lost]

Bill 208 Recall Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on Bill 208.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel like today is a historic day with the things that have happened, with the MLA being kicked out of caucus, with government out of control. The question is: how do we get control of the people that we've elected? That's what Bill 208, the Recall Act, is all about.

I believe this is one of the most important bills we will debate in the Legislature because it goes to the very heart of what it is we as elected members are entrusted with. This bill is entirely about accountability, accountability to the people who actually elected us to this House. The election of MLAs to this House represents a sacred trust between voters and the individuals they select to be their voice to or within government.

Representative democracy is one of the cornerstones of a free society, and there must be a true connection between citizens and their representatives in order to ensure good government. But what happens when that trust and when that connection is broken? What options do citizens have to restore their voice? Unfortunately, in Alberta the answer to that question is nothing. There's nothing that they can do until the next election.

Under our current system there is no true accountability between MLAs and their constituents between elections. If an MLA does something to break trust, whether that's supporting an unpopular policy, position, or bill or breaking an election promise or has simply proven to be an ineffective representative, citizens are completely powerless to replace the MLA. Let me discuss a few . . .

Mr. Liepert: Or cross the floor. Why don't you put that in there?

Mr. Hinman: So pass the bill. The hon. Minister of Energy says that they cross the floor. I would say: so pass the bill. We would be happy to vote for it. That's why we're presenting this bill to the House.

Citizens are completely powerless to replace their MLA or the Environment minister, let alone the Energy minister. Let me discuss a few scenarios that I hope will give members pause to consider supporting this bill. Right now an MLA can break an important election promise mere weeks into a five-year mandate, thereby breaking the trust of voters, and not have to face the people who elected him or her until the next election. Perhaps they don't want to be re-elected, so they can go on their own agenda. Those voters would also be forced to live with an MLA whom they can no longer trust. They'll be less inclined to work with that MLA over the duration of the term, and the MLA risks losing touch with his or her community.

Again, MLAs can conceivably lose interest in a job weeks into a five-year term and be missing in action until the next election. That's a long time for citizens to go without proper representation. [interjection] The Energy minister certainly is having his little fits here today, and that's good. He's aware and awake. A great fear of recall, I'm sure. A former health minister. I mean, what a disaster that has been. How many times would he have been recalled if we had had this bill in this sitting?

MLAs may deceive or cover up past actions that would give voters a good reason not to vote for them and face no immediate repercussions should those truths be revealed after they are elected. Unfortunately, politicians who misrepresent themselves to the voters during an election campaign are a fact of life. We could never make a law to outlaw politicians who deceive, but we could certainly make a law that would empower citizens to recall politicians who do. That's what Bill 208 is mainly about, giving citizens a mechanism to ensure good representation between elections and empowering citizens with a way to stop bad bills that are before the House.

There's much more to recall than the actual act of recalling a politician. I believe that having a law in place will lead to a host of improvements in our democracy. Right now, especially under this government, strict caucus discipline has stripped away accountability from MLAs and left their constituents without a proper voice. MLAs are expected to represent party interests first, constituents' interests second if at all. We have seen earlier today what happens when MLAs dare speak out against their own government when that government fails to act in the best interests of the people they represent. They are kicked out of caucus. We saw it last summer with the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We saw it today with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Under the threat of being recalled, government MLAs might think twice about supporting a bad or unpopular policy or bill. I am sure that there are more than a few members on the other side of this House, particularly in rural areas, who would have voted differently on Bill 50 if their constituents had the power to recall them. There is no question that this government would not have taken years to change the new royalty framework, a very bad piece of legislation. That hurt thousands of Albertans, and many entrepreneurs lost their business.

Bill 50 is actually a perfect example of why recall legislation is urgently needed. This bill bestowed on government the power to unilaterally expropriate lands they deem necessary for power lines. As every rural MLA in this House knows, the bill was massively unpopular. I'm sure every single one of them received calls from their constituents asking them to vote against it. But that's not how this place works, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't matter what constituents want; it only matters what the party wants. MLAs who were explicitly and overwhelmingly told to defeat the bill ended up supporting it because the accountability is in the wrong place. If that's not dysfunctional democracy, I don't know what is.

Bill 208 would have gone a long way towards Bill 50's rightful defeat. Instead, we are stuck with another bad law, that is foisting billions and billions of taxpayers' dollars on a massive infrastructure project that isn't even needed. Again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre just said about adding to that bill: she wonders where all of the add-ons come from.

The current culture of caucus discipline is contributing to bad legislation. MLAs answer to a small group of political leaders who can and often do devise bad laws and bad policy. We need to make MLAs accountable to their constituents first and foremost. That's exactly what Bill 208 would do.

Some in this House may be concerned that having a recall law could lead to frivolous recall campaigns motivated by more personal reasons than matters of public interest. Bill 208 contains the right safeguards against such instances. A notarized petition with the signatures of 33 per cent of that constituency's population, collected within a 60-day period, must be presented in order for a recall and a by-election to take place. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. This is a very high threshold. There would simply be no way for a personal or narrow-minded recall campaign to garner that kind of support.

Given that 33 per cent often exceeds voter turnout in some Alberta constituencies, this threshold would likely only be reached in the event of an urgent matter of public interest, like Bill 50 or Bill 29, that have been thrown in front of this House. They're thrown out quickly, and there's little time for debate or for people to get forces motivated. To them I would say this. We need to have something in place that makes us accountable to the people who voted for us, not just on election day but on every day in between. As I have explained, there are many reasons why voters may come to realize that they elected the wrong person to represent them in the Legislature, and right now they have no way of making that change.

Accountability is critical in all walks of life, in business, and is, I believe, most important for a great representative government. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, the power must rest with the people, not just once every three or five years but every day. When people have no voice, they have no interest. When one has power and authority, one will use it when needed. I would argue that the people of Alberta would engage in politics at a much higher level if they had a process to control elected representatives when they go astray. It seems evident to myself, having been in this House for several years now, that the lack of accountability is our biggest problem. We have elected representatives that, although they may understand the bill, are told by the party: "This is the best we can do. You need to support it. You're not allowed to speak out." Again, we see that we have to suffer here in the province.

I'd like to talk a little bit about our health care system and why accountability is so important. The previous health minister created a superboard, a superdisaster. There was nothing the people of Alberta could do about that, though, until the next election, and that they will do in the next election.

We need accountability when bad bills come forward. There's no way for the people to stop it. Bill 29 is a classic case of where Albertans are outraged, and this government in the short time period of two weeks is going to want to thrust that bill through, and they have the numbers to do it. But if, in fact, the people from Calgary-Shaw want to start a petition tomorrow to recall that minister, I believe that minds would be changed at the level of accountability.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 is about accountability. It's about an open and honest and clear government that is always accountable to the people because the people ultimately hold that power. During an election they turn that over to an elected representative but with recall at any time, for whatever reason. When an MLA is out of touch, they can be recalled and held accountable. That's the most important thing with a good democratic government. Are we and can we be held accountable?

I would urge all members to vote for this. We look forward to the debate and hope that it passes so that we're all more accountable to the people we've been elected to represent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members who wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a privilege for me to rise and speak to Bill 208, the Recall Act. I would really like to applaud the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this bill forward as it has given me a great deal to think about and to look at, some of the pros and cons of this tool, which, by all means, would be very appealing to many members of our community.

We look at some of the highlights of this bill. Recall is a procedure whereby constituents have the power to remove a member of the provincial Legislature before his or her term has expired. It is a system where voters can in effect re-elect their representatives in the Legislature through this electoral procedure, this power of removal. It's granted to do a reverse by the people. Depending on which way you see it, this sends more direction to allow individuals to control the members they elect to this Assembly, to have an ability to punish members of this Assembly who, in their view, are not following what the constituents want or, from what they believe, the members of the community want their MLA to do.

There are some proposed safeguards in here. You would need 33 per cent of the eligible voters in a constituency to be required to sign a petition, and they would have to sign it within six months. You wouldn't have a petition that could run for three and a half years, and then all of a sudden: "Hey, we reached that threshold. Finally, we can get rid of the guy." It has to be a concerted effort, put forth in a very short, distinct period of time. So there are some limitations or some safeguards put into this bill.

I would also note that a former Liberal, Mr. Gary Dickson, brought forward a similar measure in 1993. He put forth this initiative, and some people know the history of this. Mr. Dickson was actually the former MLA for Calgary-Buffalo and is now working in the hon. minister of housing's home province of Saskatchewan as their Privacy Commissioner. So there are lot of tie-ins here. I also note that Percy Wickman spoke in favour of this bill. His son, Ron Wickman, here in town does tremendous stuff on behalf of the disabled community in designing wheelchair-accessible homes and things of that nature.

Nevertheless, returning to this bill, I do note that some Liberals were in favour of this back in 1993. As I've thought about this, I really have at the end of the day come to it that in our system of government our voters should go to the polls, in my view, knowing that they are going to elect a member for a certain period of time. Recall may allow for, I guess, in certain instances a member to be pulled or something of that nature, but in my view I don't know if it serves the best interests of a democracy under our system of government.

Let me put forward an example. Alberta actually fooled around with this in 1934. The hon. Mr. Aberhart implemented this legislation in 1937, and then, lo and behold, the first person that it was used against was Mr. Bill Aberhart. Okay. So here you have it. The leader of the province, who immediately tries to do something, immediately has this legislation used against him. You can see times where this will occur to an hon. Premier, whatever party that happens to be, where immediately with an unpopular piece of legislation, something that may have to be directed for the long run, the citizens may for a temporary period disagree with it, and that will raise the ire of 33 per cent of the constituents and hold the Premier to a by-election.

In my view, it would be holding the government hostage from decisions that they would have to make, and it would be in the name of sort of doing it – I can see recall being used countless times: very few government members on the front bench against a government backbencher or, in fact, an opposition backbencher. It would ruin the ebb and flow of our democratic principles.

In my view, our electorate is smarter than that. They're going to be able to judge an MLA they send to the Legislature on the basis of a four-year term, not on the whims of a one-time bill or their anger of the day. They have a longer view of what, in fact, democracy is. I figure they'll be able to look at a member, look at the government, and say: is this what I want? Sometimes the member they get is the member they elect, and sometimes the government they get is the government they elect, and that's the way it goes. I simply don't see for the betterment of democracy or the smoothness of actually running what is often a difficult business, running a province, that to allow this bill to go through would make it any easier.

Nevertheless, I do applaud the member, and I did think long and hard on this. There were some advantages. But at the end of the day, although I might sometimes disagree with the government of the day, I have no doubt the belief is that it is very difficult to govern, and this wouldn't make it any easier.

I thank you for allowing me to speak on this issue. I would urge all members to speak against the proposal for those reasons I have listed, but I applaud the member for bringing the action nonetheless.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the next hon. member on my list is the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and debate at second reading Bill 208, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. This is a very hard-working member of this Assembly, and I respect his comments while I may disagree with them. The bill sets out a procedure by which an elected MLA could lose his or her seat in the Assembly based on a petition signed by 33 per cent of the electorate in any electoral division. I want to again thank the people that assisted the member who sponsored this bill, but I cannot support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I've listened with great interest to the argument from the bill's sponsor as well as from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I find it interesting that the member makes this passionate call for recall when all the members sitting next to him had the opportunity to make their own recall instead of crossing the floor. Interestingly enough, using Alberta's current electoral process would have given voters the choice of who their representatives in the House should be rather than them simply moving from one party to another. There's a very little bit of irony in this that I again find interesting to observe.

There's quite a bit of history on recall in this province, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has alluded to. Interestingly enough, when I was doing some research on this, I found out that Hansard, in fact, only goes back to 1971. It's very difficult to get anything from Hansard before 1971. I did find a bit of information from 1972, though, from a very distinguished member of this House who was a former cabinet minister under the Social Credit government. Hansard April 6, 1972:

I am just going to say this, if you put all the silly little arguments aside, and if you think about it, maybe the people would like to know that there is an election every four years. We have already pointed out that the campaigning starts the minute this House starts.

I have to say that I would agree with that. The next election does begin the day after the previous one. Of course, we're about two and a half years into this cycle, here. I have to say that these are very wise words.

The point: the current system holds all members accountable to their constituents. We're all accountable on a daily basis. If we decide to run again, we're all accountable on the day of the next election. I agree with the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The voters often are a lot smarter than the media or whoever else may give them credit for. They're ultimately our bosses. The words that I was speaking earlier, though, speak to the concept that Albertans make their decisions in the totality on the slate of candidates' own position on the issues when they vote in an election. Bill 208, I would have to say with respect, flies in the face of the point being made by the member that I quoted from 1972. His confidence, rather, was that the electoral system was evident in its words.

As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo stated, it was the same Social Credit Party that brought in recall legislation and then moved it out when they were, in fact, the governing party. Well, I guess they recalled the recall. Obviously, that's not how it was intended. History has actually shown that when recall is initiated on a particular issue and not really on specific actions of an elected member – I look no further than our neighbours to the west around the issue of their harmonized sales tax. That's been a very difficult point in that government. Of course, in Alberta we have no sales tax, and we'll bring in no sales tax. They actually did bring in a harmonized sales tax, and now a special-interest group is utilizing B.C.'s recall process to target government MLAs. I don't agree with a sales tax, Mr. Speaker, but it doesn't make for a very stable government when you're only debating that one single issue. I doubt that the B.C. government is actually getting anything done at this given time. So the motivation that they have behind the recall in B.C. right now is, again, the issue and not necessarily the conduct of the members in that Assembly. This is a consideration that I hoped the sponsor of this bill could have clarified a little bit more in his earlier comments.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to raise one more point on the merits of the current system of electing or, in this case, removing members from this Assembly. There are currently four major parties in Alberta, so theoretically you could win an election with 26 per cent of the vote. At any given time you could theoretically have 74 per cent of the people wanting you out. This is a recipe for absolute electoral anarchy. This is democracy in action, the current system that we have, and I believe Albertans see more merit in ballots cast than signatures on a petition. I know I'm not alone in this sentiment.

I am a former member of the federal Canadian Alliance party and, of course, still a member of the Conservative Party of Canada. At one of their first conventions in Montreal – I believe it was in March of 2005 – the issue of a recall policy was put before the members. I actually got up to speak against it at that time as well. We were successful; it was actually removed. It's not something that's palatable in a nation or in a province. It may look good on paper, but it's not something that has ever been good in practice in this country. I raise this point as arguments will be made that other jurisdictions have recall, so I guess we have to follow that one as well. B.C.'s, as I mentioned, came in 1991, when Mike Harcourt had taken over.

So with respect to the member for Calgary-Glenmore, Mr. Speaker, my argument is backed again that other jurisdictions have removed recall or that recall has not been a successful circumstance in that particular jurisdiction. This is a concept that may seem appealing to some but may not serve the best interests of the voters.

I'm not going to make a financial argument because that's like saying democracy is costly. It does cost money to heat this building, to pay all of our salaries, to go to the polls. I'm not going to make that argument. This in and of itself is not good for the democratic process.

I'm sure other members in this House will debate recall in other jurisdictions again, but I don't think that that's a good comparison. There are a number of instances where an elected official was recalled but only to be re-elected in a subsequent by-election, and there are also just a few points of consideration for Bill 208, as I had mentioned.

I'd like to again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this bill forward. His commitment to democracy is laudable, but I respectfully say again that this is not something that we should be pursuing in Alberta. I'd like to again acknowledge the people who helped draft this bill. They no doubt also have a passion for citizen engagement, and I'm happy to have this debate at all. That notwithstanding, I'm going to reiterate my position of not supporting this legislation and indicate that the when three members of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore's caucus, to my knowledge, were part of the government caucus either this term or in the past, I was unable to find anything of when they were in favour of recall.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That ending was perfect because I'm going to remind him of when I did speak in the Legislature on the issue of recall.

It's my honour to speak to Bill 208, the Recall Act, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. This bill will allow constituents to recall an MLA who has failed to live up to their promises. Legislation like this has been proposed in the House in the past. Are you listening? I spoke for it then, and I speak for it now.

In 1996, Dr. Nicol, then the Member for Lethbridge-East, put forward Bill 206, and I had this to say.

I believe there is no better way to meet the concerns of Albertans about accountability in political life, and it proves to our voters that we take their concerns and their views seriously. Bill 206 in my mind will help put the trust of the electorate back into the Legislature.

If there's one thing I believe in after all my time in government, it's accountability. If someone doesn't deliver on their promises, they should lose their privileges.

Bill 208 addresses the weaknesses in our system. It allows not only the members to stand up but the people of Alberta to stand up and be heard. The bar is set quite high by the contents of this bill. Some will say: won't we have numerous elections? No. The recall bill will require 33 per cent of eligible voters. Another obstacle to recall is the issue of money. To be truly grassroots, you need to keep money as separate as possible, and the member that just spoke brought that up. The rules are clear in this bill. No one can be paid. We can't have a process hijacked by special interests. People are concerned about money in regular politics. It can't be said that money will control the recall process; it will be truly a grassroots movement.

People who are against this bill make an argument to me all the time. They say: you wouldn't have crossed the floor if this bill was in place. Of course I would have. If this bill was in place, I would have done the same thing all over again. I followed my convictions, and the people of Calgary-Fish Creek would have supported me.

I can tell you what would have been different if a bill like this was in place. This government wouldn't have passed some of the legislation it did. Bill 50 took the rights from property owners, and it put them in the hands of cabinet. Public consultation has been reduced to the point of uselessness. Rural Albertans are furious. Quite frankly, a lot of government members wouldn't have voted for that bill if this legislation was in place.

The people of British Columbia have had legislation in place for years. The power of recall is obvious to everyone. The current government in British Columbia misled the people it was supposed to represent. Because of its laws upset citizens didn't have to wait until another election. They could take action right away, and they did. The momentum that built has led to the Premier of British Columbia resigning. I know how much that must scare this government, and it should.

As I travel this great province, I hear frustration all over the place. Many have put their frustration to great use. The Wildrose caucus stands here today stronger than ever because of the fears this government has for the people of Alberta. I find it strange, though, that people have to start an entirely new party to make real change and impact in politics. It shouldn't be that way. I talk to my constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek, and they can't believe how hard it is to get real representatives in the Legislature. What constituents want is an elected member that stands up for what they believe in. They want a member that is accountable, and quite frankly the people aren't getting what they want or they're not getting what they need.

The current health care debate is an example. The member for Edmonton-Meadowlark voiced his concerns over the way the emergency room crisis was being handled for over two years. The member is still an emergency doctor. He knows the issues intimately and expertly, yet he was silenced by this government and now given the boot. How very sad. There is no issue closer to the hearts of myself and Albertans than health care.

The government has shot down recall legislation before. Why is it so afraid to allow the recall of a member? I think it's because they realize that the power rests with government when it should be in the hands of the people. The grassroots are where the real Albertans are. They're not in the Premier's office. My constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek tell me that they want a member that truly represents their issues. This Legislature is based upon the fact that one member represents one area. While they are free to contact any MLA, their first point of contact is the member's office in their constituency. Albertans take pride in their communities, and they take pride in their neighbourhoods. It means something to have a spokesperson for their area. Even if a constituent voted for a party that did not win in their riding, they still take great pride in being part of that political process. They want to say to this MLA that they're proud of him or they're proud of her. But sometimes they lose respect and pride. There are some people that get into office and don't take it seriously. Sometimes they just ran for the party and didn't expect to win. Maybe they just didn't know what they were getting into. Other times they are just really selfish. They want the perks of the office, and they forget about the important responsibilities.

So what are constituents supposed to do? We have a first past the post system. A member doesn't need to win a majority of the votes.

They just need one more vote than second place. No system is perfect, but people certainly want to know why improvements aren't being made. The people of Alberta don't want to wait four or five years for another general election. It is said in politics that a week is an eternity. We've been in the session less than one month, and much has happened just on the health care file. Years is too long to wait when the people are being let down by their MLAs. Quite frankly, the people in this province demand better. Some MLAs misrepresent themselves in the public square. There is a great deal of power that is entrusted to this Assembly. Some bad apples out there will do or say anything to get in. What happens if someone lies and gets elected based on these lies and then the truth is revealed mid-term? Public pressure is a powerful force, but the rule of law is stronger.

The people I talk to want engaged representation. When there are five years between elections, it is easy for an elected member to lose enthusiasm for the job mid-term. Motivation isn't a problem for me because I, quite frankly, am more energetic than ever, but it's easy to get comfortable and ride out the term. Albertans demand safeguards in law that ensure that they have the best representation that they can get.

In closing, I fully support Bill 208, the Recall Act. I supported legislation like this before, and I continue to do so now. When Albertans are outraged, they deserve a democratic outlet, not a letter to the editor. If a member doesn't do the job they promised to do, Albertans need a way to get rid of them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have on my list, in the sequence of the notes I received, the hon. members for Edmonton-Centre, Lethbridge-West, Airdrie-Chestermere, Calgary-Mackay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to get up and speak in second reading to Bill 208, the Recall Act, proposed by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I think this discussion is part of a wider discussion that is reflecting the public's perception that they don't have control over their elected official. We're certainly witnessing this Tea Party phenomena in the U.S., but as I listen to what they're actually asking for or expecting, we get not very clear direction. Frankly, I don't know that what's being suggested by that group is very helpful to their elected representative in trying to represent them. I do see this as part of a larger issue around people's misunderstanding or lack of understanding around how the process works and their frustration that they can't make their elected person change the way they're presenting or reacting to an issue.

The Member for Calgary-Glenmore started out by saying: "Well, there's nothing the public can do. That's it. They're stuck for five years. Shut the door. It's over." I just don't find that to be the case. I think, you know, that where I've had people complain to me about the actions of a member, whether in the government caucus or in my caucus, I've directed them to the whip, who has a job that is about ensuring discipline in caucus, but that also means the discipline of the caucus and making sure that their members are representing them well outside of that caucus.

I can think of examples where there was an elected member who didn't keep office hours and was very hard to get hold of. There was a fuss made in that government caucus to the individual, and he was told that he should have an accessible office, where people didn't have to phone up and make an appointment. I can think of other ones where there have been complaints about it. I mean, let's be realistic here. I think that the public does have a number of different ways of trying to achieve some kind of resolution if they're very unhappy with the way their elected member is responding to them. The whip is one of them.

Complaining to the leader is another one. Again, that leader doesn't want the hassle. We actually had somebody thrown out of my caucus because they just took up so much of the leader's time in trying to resolve the difficulties that this person had created that finally they were asked to leave the caucus that I'm in. So appealing to the leader is another way.

You can appeal to the other caucus members. I think that if I'm hearing things correctly today, there was a decision made by caucus to discipline one of their members. In a larger parliamentary way there's the – I'm not going to get the name of this committee right – privileges and elections, printing and something committee, which is a formal way that you can protest the behaviour of one of our elected members. A committee does review their actions, and there is discipline meted out from that.

Never underestimate the power of public pressure. Never. I've seen public pressure turn all kinds of things around in politics in Alberta, you know, and with the public pressure, if there is enough public pressure, along with that always comes media spotlight. That can certainly change someone's behaviour or have them back off or be able to help the caucus or the whip or whatever convince the individual that that's not the direction that they want to be going in or that they're not representing people adequately.

So to say that there's nothing that people can do, I just don't buy that. There is lots that people can do and do do, and I have examples of everything, actually, that I just discussed there.

I heard another member talk about, "Well, you know, you can get elected and just disengage after a few weeks," which strikes me as very odd. I'm sure that all those that are from the class of 2008 would agree with me that you don't even know what's going on after a few weeks, never mind disengaging. You're full of things that you need to learn and do and fill out and get on top of. It's a beehive of activity, so I don't know how you could disengage unless it was with the assistance of some sort of chemically altering something. I can't see you disengaging after a few weeks or, you know, even after a few years.

I mean, what I've seen is that it takes you a good couple of years to really learn the rules here, where you start to groove along with the Routine and the rhythm of the House. You might get to that point and go: "You know what? I really hate this stuff. I've learned how to do it, and it just does not work for me." Fair enough. I've had a caucus member that felt that way. He still tootled along for the remaining year and a half doing his job and then just didn't run again. But the idea that someone would just check out – well, if they're that miserable, they're going to quit the darn job and go and do something else. They're not going to sit there in the back row twiddling their thumbs and being grumpy. Why would you bother? Life is too short.

Or even the idea that someone didn't expect to get elected and then did get elected. Again, I've served with individuals. I remember looking at one person on election night, and I thought: wow, their eyes are like saucers. You know how they talk about how somebody's eyes are like saucers? This guy's eyes were like saucers. He clearly did not think he was going to get elected. He did, and he was the most engaged, energetic, enthusiastic member of my caucus for that term. You know, why would you run if you didn't want to get elected? I'm sorry, but that just seems such an enormous amount of time and energy and money and that of your family. Why on earth would you get into that if you didn't at least have some ideas of what you would do when you got elected?

I've checked their petitioning process, that's described in Bill 208, against some of the others, and 33 per cent is not a high enough percentage. Most of the good – well, no; let me be careful here. I would venture to say that if you look at how many members were elected by around 50 per cent, you've got people that are on the right vibe with their constituency. They do reflect the views of the people who've elected them, and they're going to weather that storm.

I am so fortunate and so honoured to represent the people in Edmonton-Centre, who are an unending source of enthusiasm and advice and guidance for me, and I so love representing them. We're on pretty much the same vibe, so we don't counter each other. Actually, never. I get a few people who disagree with the way I've gone on something, but overwhelmingly I get people saying: "That's what we wanted. Thank you very much. That's exactly where you want us to go." So I think that the recall of 33 per cent is far too low.

The other part of this is around that package. The only part of that kind of Tea Party, democratic, far right-wing package I hear talked about that I am interested in is citizen initiatives, which gets an idea onto the floor of the Assembly. On the other stuff, about proposals, I just look to the U.S. and go: they're in gridlock in California because of those direct proposals and direct votes.

Look at what Envision Edmonton did to the city of Edmonton, for God's sake, and how much money it cost us for a petition process that was not even in order. What you end up with, bottom line, is that the one with the most money wins, and that is not democracy. So I find that this package of stuff, which includes recall, generally comes from people who want things their way, and they will get money behind them to make it their way, and that to me is not democracy. You should be able to have a good debate with no money on either side. These usually involve somebody pushing a particular idea who's got the money to get it out there, who's got the money to hire the people, the office to print the stuff. That's not why we're in here.

I'm not in favour of Bill 208. You gathered that.
Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can see by the clock that I won't have too long to speak before we move into motions, so I'll be very brief. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing forward Bill 208, the Recall Act.

In starting my discussion, I want to talk about something that happened in Lethbridge, and it was a very unfortunate event. A little over a month ago we had a municipal election, and we had a group of municipal councillors elected. During that election the public was very clear that they wanted to see some change and that they wanted some things to happen. We had a gentleman that was duly elected, in fact, in second place with very strong support, and before being able to be sworn in, the gentleman passed away. It's never happened before in Alberta. Mr. Robert Babki, an attorney, retired in Lethbridge, a family man and a grandfather and a lawyer and a community advocate who put his heart and his life into running for council, passed away, and they had the memorial service today.

I'm only bringing this up because it bears very much on the issue at hand. Since that has happened, I have had innumerable calls. I have e-mails, I have people coming into my office, and each and every one of them says the same thing. They say: "Greg, you know, with all due respect, we just had an election. We selected the people we want to serve us. We don't need to be spending another hundred thousand dollars to run another election. We have had our say." I believe that's what Albertans believe. We're a fiscally responsible province. I'm a fiscally responsible conservative, as is this party. I believe that I fit very nicely with the views of the people in this province that are fiscally responsible, and those folks have told me that they don't believe that those kinds of expenditures are appropriate. They would prefer to see us do our job to represent the citizens.

I believe that a big part of it – and I agree with what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo said and Edmonton-Centre as well – is that it's so critically important to listen to the people you represent. It's about doing the job the best you can, and you can't be held ransom to small interest groups or to making one decision that's maybe a little bit unpopular. You have to be able to do what's right. You have to be able to do what's best. Every four years the citizens have an opportunity to weigh all of the things that you did: the good, the things they agreed with, the things they didn't. They can view whether or not they believed that you listened carefully to what they said, and then based on all of that, they're going to make a decision whether you have a right to represent them again or not. I believe that it's critically important that that position be held, that we have the opportunity to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I won't be voting in favour of Bill 208, and I would ask all of the other members to please vote against it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 5 o'clock, so the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded. We'll continue Bill 208 at the next opportunity.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Vehicle Inspection and Maintenance Program

512. Mr. Vandermeer moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider implementing a vehicle inspection and maintenance program requiring vehicles to undergo regular inspections and repairs when necessary to reduce automobile-generated emissions.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and open debate on Motion 512. This would ultimately help improve the air quality in Alberta. Undergoing vehicle inspection and repairs would benefit the environment.

In 2002 Climate Change Central completed a study examining methods for potential greenhouse gas reductions on Alberta roads. The study focused on vehicle inspections and maintenance programs. Unfortunately, despite emissions standards for new vehicles becoming more stringent over the last two decades, urban air quality has not improved. According to Climate Change Central this discrepancy probably occurs because after two years of use vehicles no longer meet the original standards. This decline can arise for several reasons such as failure to adhere to a manufacturer's maintenance schedule; improper adjustments of fuel mixture, spark timing, or other engine emission parameters; premature failure of emission control devices; and/or deliberate removal or disabling of emission control devices.

An IM program can help avoid these problems. Mr. Speaker, there are many versions of IM programs. There isn't one set way to implement the program. There are more than 35 IM programs in the United States, and there are two in Canada. The two programs in Canada are in Ontario and British Columbia. These two programs have similarities but also very many differences. I am not proposing that we adopt the IM programs in Ontario or B.C. This motion is merely urging the government to consider implementing a vehicle IM program that requires vehicles to undergo inspections and repairs when necessary to reduce automobile-generated emissions.

Motion 512 does not get into specifics, but there are a few options available. For instance, one option would identify vehicles that have higher emissions output than normal vehicles of the same age and type and would require that they be repaired prior to the transfer of title. This option would reduce smog-causing emissions from vehicles that are 10 years or older by having them undergo inspections and necessary repairs. There could also be a program for heavy-duty vehicles such as large trucks and buses and a program for light-duty vehicles. This would include passenger cars, vans, light trucks, and sport-utility vehicles. Licensed technicians would perform the inspections at licensed vehicle facilities. This would mean an automotive repair facility or service stations with repair shops.

The IM program would also exempt certain vehicles from the program as well as include a repair cost limit and a conditional pass to recognize that there are some owners who cannot afford to fully repair vehicles that do not meet emissions standards. The repair cost limit would ensure that motor vehicle emissions are lowered while limiting the financial burden upon the vehicle owners. Vehicle exemptions would take into account that not all vehicles should fall under the program.

Mr. Speaker, again, these are just options. The specific program details would be left to the government to decide. With this motion I would like to start the debate around implementing an IM program that would ultimately improve Alberta's ambient air quality. Moreover, not only is the health of our environment important but also the health of Albertans. This motion may help ensure that smog does not become a serious health issue in the future.

Furthermore, licensed inspection technicians may find safety issues with the vehicle while performing the emissions inspections. If vehicles are inspected, deficiencies are more likely to be caught and fixed. This could include faulty brakes or engine problems, which would seriously put the driver and passengers at risk if not caught and repaired.

Mr. Speaker, this motion would benefit the environment, health of our future generations, and improve the quality of the vehicles on Alberta roads. For this reason I am proposing Motion 512 and look forward to the comments of my colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to acknowledge that I saw a few members. I have a list here: Edmonton-Centre, Airdrie-Chestermere, Wetaskiwin-Camrose, Calgary-Glenmore, Strathcona, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Hinman: As well as Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. I'll add on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to my feet and support a motion brought forward by the government member from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. This is an idea that is well used in other places, it's not costly to implement, and it very much falls in line with the kinds of things that we've been suggesting from the Liberal caucus, the Official Opposition caucus, for some time.

Part of what I've been trying to get people to understand is that you don't have to spend a ton of money to reduce your impact on the planet and on greenhouse gases. Often I find that the government doesn't get involved in things because it seems like such an overwhelming, big project with so much money involved, but it doesn't have to be. Frankly, the way to tackle a really big project is usually by breaking it down and doing it incrementally. This is an excellent idea for an incremental change.

We've seen them operating in other places. The one I looked at was Ontario's drive clean, which is a mandatory vehicle emissions testing program very similar to what the member has already been describing. There's a light-duty drive clean. There are exemptions for that. There's an appeals process if people disagree. There's a heavy-duty vehicle program. There are testing requirements for model, year of vehicle, et cetera, et cetera. It's been running for quite a while there, and, you know, we should be able to take advantage of their best practices.

There are others in the country if we want to look at them, B.C.'s as well. Their program is called AirCare and has been running since 1992. So they've had lots of practice at this.

I think there are other things that can also be done by the government that's in the same level of an incremental change, a fairly small change, and a personal change that individuals can take on. It has been my experience that the public is very willing to do stuff. They really understand the issue and the impact of use of fossil fuels and are willing to do quite a bit. The challenge to us as legislators seems to be about designing programs that are accessible enough and easy enough, if I can use that word, that people will take it on.

As an example, I'll talk about the city of Edmonton's recycling program. You know, aside from the opportunity it gives me to boast about the city of Edmonton's world-renowned recycling and composting program, we learned a lot of lessons from that. When people were initially asked to separate paper and other kinds of paper like your cardboard and tin cans and plastic, some people took it up. But it didn't get a huge, enthusiastic uptake on it. You know, it did require some thought. You had to get the right kind of bins. Then somebody would steal the damn bins from the back of your house. So it didn't work as well as they had hoped.

Then you could mix it up a bit more. Finally, they said: "You know what? We're spending so much time going through the way people have separated this and fixing it, we might as well just do it from the get-go." So they started a blue bag program. The blue bags are available at every store. Glad makes them. All kinds of well-known names make the blue bags. All we ask is that they're blue. The householder or the individual can use those blue bags. They just put all of their recyclable stuff in it. The paper, the cardboard, the metal, the plastic: just chuck it all in there. Don't separate it. Don't fuss about it. You don't have to squish it or anything like that. Just put it in the darn blue bag and put it out back with the garbage. That worked because it was really, really easy. It was easy to get the bags. It was easy to do it. You just put it out back at the same time as the garbage. All of a sudden the uptake on this program was amazing.

[The Speaker in the chair]

If we do the same kind of thing with vehicles – and this does require people to actually take their vehicle somewhere, you know, to a recognized location, to have these particular tests and suggestions done – and find ways to make it as easy as possible for folks, there will be enormous uptake on it.

Just a couple of other things that I want to mention that I think go hand in hand with this. Actually reducing people's use of fossil fuel driven vehicles is also a part of this, working with municipalities around cycling and walking infrastructure for people to use those venues as commuting, not just recreational, not just walk to the store but actually walk to work or cycle to work. You can cycle to work quite a distance, but it's no fun when you've got to battle the semis on the same road and deal with the potholes and the gravel. You are looking at a different infrastructure here. Again, incremental movements really help. The bikes that you can buy are made for this kind of riding. A lot of things have changed along with this.

That's also what's happening to the vehicle. We will slowly move out of this, and eventually we will all be here with either hybrid cars or probably electric cars or some other version of biofuel cars. I don't know how long that's going to be, but it will start to move in that direction. Really, what we're trying to do with the cars that would fall under what's been proposed here by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is to take the worst offenders, which are, generally speaking, older cars, and try and get people to get them tested and make use of the suggestions.

While I'm at it, the easy part of this is the regular maintenance of your vehicle. One of the biggest problems is underinflated tires for bad car mileage. Now, this is not hard. People should be able to keep their tires inflated to a proper pressure. If you don't know how to do it, just ask, and some helpful soul will help you on how to measure and get it up. That's one of the worst offenders for getting better mileage on your car.

The other one is changing your oil so that the engine runs properly. Again, it's not difficult because in this day and age unless you really want to change your own oil, which you can do, generally speaking you drive into a place and somebody does it while you read the paper, and you drive out the other side, and it's done. This, again, is pretty easy. If you do it on a regular schedule – you know, every spring and fall or whatever – and use the proper kind of multigrade oil that the manufacturer is suggesting for that particular vehicle, you're way ahead of the curve on this one. You've already done a lot to have a better running, cleaner running vehicle that gets better mileage and puts less crap into the air.

I was going to make one other suggestion in that, checking all of the other systems, which again they'll do at the same time as you go through the oil changing place. They will check various other levels of stuff that you put in your car and check the tail lights and all of those kinds of things, brake systems. That will also assist you.

As we look at what we can all do here, I think this is an excellent suggestion. It is incremental. If we combine that with things like cycling and walking infrastructure, with things like using the Green TRIP money for more LRTs in the urban areas, for more public transit in urban and in rural areas – let's even go further and look at high-speed rail, especially if we look at the maglev system, the magnetic levitation system.

We should also consider lower speed vehicles to be allowed on the streets. Right now we don't, but as we start to consider – and they're running some pilot projects of having lower speed limits in certain districts – that may possibly work in with that as well.

So I do encourage everyone to support the member's Motion 512. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, then Calgary-Glenmore, then Strathcona.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to stand up and speak to this motion. I will not be supporting this motion. This is being penny-wise and pound-foolish. A bill that comes stemming from this motion, the only people this is really going to affect, in my view, depending on how the bill was written, of course, are the people who can least afford it.

You know, we talk a lot about being competitive in Alberta and making sure we have a low tax regime and so forth, and obviously that's important. Businesses drive the economy, small businesses drive the economy, and we need that. But we also have to be wary, of course, of those who are struggling and who don't have a lot of money.

I remember when I was – it wasn't too long ago; I guess 12 years ago – in university. My wife and I were just newlyweds at the time. We didn't have much. We didn't have hardly anything. We lived down in the U.S. at the time, that was where I did my undergrad school. In that state they had a law that was similar to this; in other words, it was an emissions standards law. You had to go in every year, and you had to get your car checked. They would stick a rod up the tailpipe, and you'd run your car, and they would check how your emissions were.

Anyway, I had an old, old car. I can't even remember what it was. It was just a terrible vehicle. It would overheat all of the time. It was used. It was probably at the time at least 15, 16, 17 years old. It was just an absolute clunker, but it was cheap. I got it for like 500 bucks, so I was using it. I mean, we were living on basically student loans, and I worked part-time at a hockey arena. You know, you're trying to put yourself through school and all that sort of thing. That was something we valued in our family, to kind of pull yourself up by your bootstraps and get yourself through school and so forth because you would appreciate it more. So we tried to do that through scholarships and working and living frugally.

I remember it was very frustrating because, you know, there would be hardly anything left at the end of the month to do anything with. We certainly didn't go to many movies or much of that sort of thing. We really were struggling to put money together. A big part of the maintenance, of course, was this car that would keep overheating. Of course, I bought all of the manuals so that I could try to repair it as much as possible on my own. I'm a hopeless mechanic, so it wasn't a very fruitful exercise.

I do remember one time when I went in there, and they said – first, we had to spend the money. It wasn't a ton of money, but for me it was a ton of money at the time. It was like 50 bucks to get this thing checked. The first time was fine, but the second year I remember going back to get it checked because you had to do it annually, and it failed the test. So I had to get some work done on it, and I just simply could not afford it. I actually had to take out a loan from my parents. It wasn't very much. I think it was only like 400 bucks or 500 bucks, but I had to take out a loan and get it repaired. The exhaust system needed some patching up, so we got that done. Of course, I'm lucky that my parents could afford to give me a $500 loan. I certainly know that there are many people out there that can't afford that and that don't have people that they can just go ask for money from.

I really think that all this law is, essentially, is a fee on the poor, people who can least afford it, seniors that have fixed incomes who are driving older cars. I think of my grandparents right now on a fixed income. They drive a very old car. They keep it up meticulously as much as possible. It's a very old car, and I doubt it has very good emissions standards, but they use it. They make do with it, and that's good. They can't afford to have an extra 50 bucks a year to inspect the thing, and then who knows what the repair costs would be if it was a problem.

Again, to me, I understand the spirit of the bill. No one likes smog in our cities. I know that California has these same tests. They have a huge smog problem. I understand that. I really do. I think the intentions behind it are noble. I'm not decrying that. I know that this hon. member, for a fact, wouldn't do anything that would intentionally hurt people, certainly not the poor. I know that's not the intent of this legislation, but I think that the unintended consequences of this bill are that. It will do very little to help our environment.

I mean, most people can afford to drive cars that are either new or new used, I guess you could say, five years or newer. Most people can afford to purchase cars like that, and those cars have, you know, very little emissions that go out of their tailpipes relative to older model cars and trucks and vehicles. So this won't affect most of us. It depends, of course, on what the bill says eventually, if it gets implemented. If it's a bill that says that we have to get an annual emissions check, then that's going to be a huge pain for Albertans. It's 50 bucks out of everyone's pocket every year, or, depending on it, it might be even more. I'm not really sure what the charge is for that right now. It's probably higher than 50 bucks. That's what it was back when I was in school.

I would suggest that it would mean an extra tax on everybody, but the people that could least afford it are the people on small incomes. On top of that, if problems were discovered with the emissions, the people that would have the most problems passing these emissions standards tests would be people who aren't wealthy, who aren't even middle income. It would be poor people, people that have older cars. So I really think that if this was ever turned into a bill, you know, it would hurt the people that can least afford it.

There's also the question, too, of big government and intrusive government. It seems that every time we turn around in this Legislature, there's a new law that is being proposed that limits our freedoms or takes away our rights. We see this with property rights legislation: bills 50, 36, and 19. We see this with, my belief is, although, respectfully, I know that the Wildrose caucus had two that voted for and two that voted against, Bill 16, the cellphone law. Of course, we have free votes in this caucus. I know it's a novel concept. The point is that there's the safety vest registry. You know, you have all these different laws and initiatives that are coming forward that I believe are just too far. It's just Big Brother wanting to do too much and getting too involved in our lives.

This is just a little thing, right? It's an emissions check. It seems harmless enough, right? I mean, you've got people who want to make sure that we don't have smog and pollution in the air. But let's be clear what this is. I mean, this is a very small percentage of vehicles that would not meet these tests, but they would literally all be confined to people who probably could least afford it. I just think that that's the wrong way to go about it.

If we want to curb emissions of all kinds – pollutants, emissions of all kinds – then what we need to be looking at is, obviously, more mass transit. I think it's a very good idea, work towards that. That means properly funding our municipalities and decentralizing a lot of decision-making with regard to infrastructure to our municipalities. That would allow them to put in place the types of mass transit infrastructure that would have a real positive effect on reducing emissions, reducing smog, reducing particulates and other pollution, and then . . . [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, might we revert briefly to the introduction of some very special guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Thank you very much. In all three galleries – the public, the members', and the Speaker's galleries – are municipal representatives. They come from a number of municipalities just a little north of the city of Edmonton. I'd like to introduce them to you. They are here this week to attend the 2010 Alberta Urban Municipalities Association convention, taking place in Edmonton November 23-25, and I'm just really delighted that they've taken time out of their convention schedule to be with us today. As I call on them, if they would rise: from the town of Barrhead, led by His Worship Mayor Brian Schulz, a delegation of municipal representatives; from the town of Westlock, led by His Worship Bruce Lennon, a number of representatives from that municipality; from the town of Morinville, led by Deputy Mayor Paul Krauskopf; from the town of Swan Hills; from the town of Legal, led by His Worship Albert St. Jean; and from the village of Clyde, led by Deputy Mayor Diana Vosseler. I'd ask them all to rise now and receive the very, very warm recognition of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Vehicle Inspection and Maintenance Program

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak with respect to Motion 512. I just want to repeat it because it's the wording of the motion that leads me to want to support it.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider implementing a vehicle inspection and maintenance program requiring vehicles to undergo regular inspections and repairs when necessary to reduce automobile-generated emissions.

The intention of the motion, obviously, is to encourage the government to implement a vehicle inspection and maintenance program, or an IM program as I'll refer to it, and may then require vehicles to undergo regular inspections or repairs when necessary. The program would identify vehicles that have higher emissions outputs, perhaps because of comparison to other vehicles of the same age or type. I know that, as we've already heard actually, there could be concerns about this motion, concerns about this kind of an initiative for reasons of cost, inconvenience, possibly even difficulty in implementing. But I think it's a motion worthy of our careful consideration because what it's doing is urging the government to consider implementing such a program, and given the challenges we have with our environment and health issues and so on, I think it's reasonable that we should be taking a close look at this.

There are many possibilities as to how such a program could be implemented; for example, regular annual inspections, which I can see some people having concerns about. I do understand, however, that it's not uncommon for even vehicles of only a couple of years in age quickly becoming inefficient and having problems in terms of their emissions, so that may be an argument for fairly regular checks.

Another way, I think, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has suggested, is possibly when ownership of a vehicle is being transferred. That would be a sound way to make sure vehicles are being checked at least periodically. I guess the question is: is it worth the cost, the inconvenience, and some might say, the hassle?

I would say that it's, again, pretty much accepted that vehicle emissions are a significant source of pollution, certainly in our province and most definitely in other jurisdictions. In Alberta's urban areas vehicles account for approximately 40 per cent of nitrogen oxides and 30 per cent of volatile organic compound emissions. Province-wide vehicles account for approximately 15 per cent of nitrogen oxides and volatile organic compound emissions. These inspections are important because, obviously, the fewer vehicle emissions, the better the ambient air quality, and improving air quality is certainly something that's essential in protecting our environment and improving public health. Reducing unnecessary greenhouse emissions through such a program would help decrease ground-level ozone and smog, and we know that those are hazards that have been linked to acid rain and other forms of environmental damage. It's also worth noting that our population in Alberta is increasing, so this could become an increasingly serious issue.

But it's not only an environmental issue; it's certainly linked to the health of Albertans as well. Obviously, poor air quality makes it harder for a person to breathe. It can irritate an individual's lungs and airways, worsen chronic diseases such as heart disease, bronchitis, emphysema, and asthma. These are severe health issues that can be a huge burden on the lives of Albertans. Asthma alone is one of the leading chronic diseases for Alberta children, for example, and it's also very harmful to lungs and bronchial tubes. Air pollution can play a major role in asthma due to the fact that children breathe faster and spend more time outdoors doing strenuous activities. I understand that studies have shown that even modest increases in air pollution can cause small but measurable increases in emergency room visits and hospital admissions.

The point I'm trying to make is that even a small improvement in air quality would be beneficial to the people in our province. If an inspection and maintenance program can help reduce these greenhouse emissions and improve our air quality, then I believe that a program like this may be justifiable. Obviously, however, it wouldn't be the only solution. It would be one of a range of things that we have to do and remain vigilant on in order to maintain air quality in the province. I believe that it certainly bears further scrutiny, and that's why I'm going to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: There are five additional speakers that I have on my list, and we'll go forward with the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, then Strathcona, then Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, then Calgary-McCall, then Calgary-Fish Creek. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for bringing forward this motion. I know that it's with great concern for the environment and the desire to make things better here in the province that this motion has been brought forward. I'd just like to speak a little bit, though, on the depth and the scope of this motion and the problems that it would cause. Like I say, I can understand his desire for it, but I cannot vote for this motion because of, I believe, the damage that it will cause to those who can least afford to take their vehicles through an inspection station.

There are a very small number of people who actually drive these older vehicles. There are probably a larger number of vintage vehicles in the province than there are old vehicles on the road that are operating poorly. I know, you know, back in the '70s and '80s when you were driving in town, we saw lots of puffers and smoke coming out, and it was appalling. You'd get behind some of these vehicles, and it would choke you up. But it's not a common dilemma that I see on the roads very often anymore, and when I do see a vehicle that's old and rusted out and running poorly, usually you can identify with the person driving that vehicle that they're doing this as a last resort, that this is the only thing they can own and operate because of the circumstances that they're in.

To me, when you generally look at people that are doing things that we might think, "Oh, let's raise the standards and stop them from doing those activities," there are generally two reasons why they do that. One is a lack of education. I think we're doing a great job here in the province of educating people about the importance of having a well-run vehicle. You know, if the timing is out and it's rough, you get poor mileage. I think most operators that are operating their vehicles notice that where they used to get 6 litres to the 100 kilometres, now they're at 7 or 8, and their vehicle is running rough. They realize the economic advantage of going in and getting their vehicle tuned up and getting new spark plugs and getting it timed if it's needed.

How many times in our lives have we run into a new problem and looked back and said: if only I had 20/20 hindsight, I wouldn't have done that. Education is critical. I think we do a pretty good job here in the province of getting that out there, the importance of having a well-run vehicle. Again, our mechanics and those shops that we take our vehicles to, they are very good usually at telling people that, you know, you need to have your timing belt changed, you need new spark plugs, whatever it is.

The other dilemma – and this is the bigger area, I guess, I want to address – is that those people that are driving these are really in economic hardship, whether it's a single mother trying to take her child to a soccer game or some other thing, to have that mobility of moving them around, whether it's a senior who's on a fixed income and, again, not able to buy a newer vehicle. The numbers are really very small. I don't know. Perhaps the hon. member has some numbers that he could present to present his case on why we need to do this.

It has been mentioned about the amount of pollution that comes out of our vehicles, and it is a lot. It has an impact in our cities. I've been an advocate for a long time to burn propane and natural gas. I remember when the propane people came and visited me back in, I think, 2005-2006, and they were talking about the new technology and direct injection and those dilemmas.

Why do we want to target a group of people who are suffering economically, in all likelihood, with an old vehicle? If they had the economic means, there's absolutely no question that they would update and drive a new vehicle. They don't have that, so why would we want to target them and then have a bunch of allowances inside this bill that might say: oh, if you have economic hardships, then it's okay; you can continue on driving this. I have concerns about that.

We talk about incremental changes, and we often talk here in this House that, you know, well, it doesn't matter how much it costs if we can save one life. It does. It's where we deploy that money where maybe we can save a thousand asthma patients rather than just save one life by changing a small incremental law.

I think that if we're serious and we're wanting to really address the nitrous oxide, the VOCs, or the volatile organic compounds, those things, what we should be looking at is changing the taxes, changing the incentive to move to a cleaner fuel, a one-carbon fuel rather than a multicarbon fuel, because that reduces all of the pollutants that we really know cause the problems. So I would urge the member and all members in here to vote against this motion. It's not in the proper direction where we really can make some major steps forward.

If our environment is, in fact, what we're trying to approach here, we can look at running natural gas vehicles, liquefied natural gas.

There are many new options that are out there that give us great opportunity. Think of the change – we talk about the change – if we were to switch our coal generation to natural gas generation. We'd also have a huge, significant change if we were to become a nation – and we have an abundance of natural gas – that says: "You know what? We want natural gas powered vehicles here in the province." Set up a system. I remember ATCO in the '70s tried to make the push to do that. Again, the resistance kind of came back, and tax laws changed.

We can and we should enhance the idea of a better, cleaner fuel, but that better, cleaner fuel isn't a 5 per cent ethanol injection into our gas. It's actually using methane, the one-carbon fuel that really reduces all of the organic compounds, that reduces the nitric oxide. All of those problems that we really are concerned with, the smog, are doable by changing to a cleaner fuel.

I would urge all members to not vote for Motion 512. We can look at other ways to make major changes to the pollution going on in our major cities especially and not target a small group of individuals who, through economic conditions or perhaps educational ones, are still running these old vehicles. There are not that many on the road. This would be very cost prohibitive to many people. Even young individuals who are going off to university often drive an old vehicle because that's all they can afford to get around in. They might only fire it up once every two weeks, yet it's critical for them to be able to get around and to make it to the different functions or classes that they need to. Perhaps it's an evening class and they don't want to have to ride the bus when they've left the university late. There are many reasons why people drive these older vehicles. This motion is targeting those that drive them.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I just don't feel, overall, if you weigh the pros to the cons on this, that there is a major benefit where we can say: "Oh, let's move forward. We can see a huge decrease in the amount of pollution. We can feel for those people with asthma that can't walk on the streets." Let's target it at a bigger picture, a greater impact on the pollution and the smog that we have in our cities. I hope that we'll consider looking at burning a one-carbon fuel rather than a multicarbon fuel.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a list here, so I'll just follow the list. The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and speak to Motion 512. This motion does have significant importance to Alberta due to the fact that throughout the province private vehicles generate 7,073 kilotonnes of greenhouse gas emissions, according to a study done by StatsCan in 2007. There's no doubt that the use of vehicles in Alberta has become a way of life, and they are essential for almost all of our residents so that they can perform the day-to-day tasks that require them and their families to be mobile.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 512 urges the government to consider implementing a vehicle inspection maintenance, or IM, program. Under this proposed legislation vehicles would undergo regular inspections and repairs when necessary to reduce automobile-generated emissions. The IM program would allow for certain exemptions as well as include a repair cost limit. The wording of this motion does not specifically lay out how an IM program would have to be implemented.

I believe it's important and would be beneficial to examine other jurisdictions to learn the specifics of their IM programs for comparison. Mr. Speaker, currently both B.C. and Ontario have functional IM programs in place to reduce smog-causing trucks, cars, and buses. For instance, Ontario's drive clean program states that a vehicle must have an emissions test in order for registration to be renewed beginning five years after its production. I know there are many similar programs in the U.S., especially California. In addition, if a vehicle requires an emissions test, a reminder would be sent to the owner as part of their vehicle licence renewal application from the ministry of transport, so there are no surprises or inconveniences. Similarly, an emissions test is also required for an ownership transfer for vehicles with a model year older than the current calendar year. This ensures the buyer's purchase of a passing vehicle.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario's drive clean program has standards for both light duty vehicles such as passenger cars, vans, light trucks, and sport utility vehicles and a program for heavy-duty vehicles such as large trucks and buses. It's also important to note that vehicles of the 1997 and older model years are exempt from testing as well as all hybrid vehicles. Additionally, vehicles designated as historic, light duty commercial farm vehicles, kit cars, and motorcycles are also exempt.

Ontario's drive clean program takes into account that some owners of light duty vehicles cannot fully afford to repair or replace their vehicles to meet the emissions standards. That is why Ontario has included a repair cost limit, or RCL, in its policy framework. This allows vehicles not meeting emissions standards or which fail their retest to be issued a conditional pass report. In the incident that a person's vehicle receives a conditional pass report, they may renew their registration without having their vehicle fully repaired. Ontario's RCL places a maximum of $450 on what a person must spend on emission-related repairs.

Just in reference to what the members for Airdrie-Chestermere and Calgary-Glenmore had said, there is a cost attached to driving a vehicle. No, not everyone can afford that cost, but in this country most people can. Speaking from experience as a General Motors dealer for a lot of my life, yes, there is a percentage of people that can't afford it, but there is also a percentage of people, Mr. Speaker, that simply choose not to do that maintenance. We've got to keep our vehicles safe, and we have to be responsible for our environment, so there's a line there.

British Columbia also has an IM program. There are similarities between the Ontario program and the B.C. one, but there are differences also. The IM program called AirCare was adopted only in the lower Fraser valley because of its dense population and increasing emissions concerns. The vehicles that are included in the AirCare program are all light-duty vehicles, 5,000 kilograms and under. As of 2009 some of the vehicles that are exempt from B.C.'s AirCare program include 2003 or newer model year vehicles, so seven years old, vehicles with vintage plates, motorcycles, snowmobiles, amphibious vehicles, ATVs, farm fleet and agriculture vehicles, and hybrid vehicles. Those vehicles that fail an AirCare tailpipe test have higher than normal emissions output than vehicles of the same age and type.

The RCL in B.C. are in place to ensure that motor vehicle emissions are lowered while also limiting the financial burden on vehicle owners. In the case that a vehicle is not worth repairing, the ministry recommends removing that vehicle from use. Mr. Speaker, the Ontario and B.C. IM programs are examples showing that there are many ways for IM programs to be implemented.

The Alberta government would have to clearly define which vehicles would be included in the inspection and maintenance program and which vehicles would be exempt. Furthermore, considerations need to be made with regard to RCL and when and how often it's necessary to be inspected and repaired.

I would like to thank the hon. member for introducing this important matter, which has given us the opportunity to discuss it further. Again, I don't think it creates any unnecessary hardship for the vast majority of Albertans, and it is important that vehicles are maintained safely and that we do whatever we can reasonably do for a reasonable cost to protect our environment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to be brief. It's surprising the amount of e-mail and calls that we've received on this little motion, which in my time in the Legislature is somewhat unusual because a lot of times Albertans don't pay a lot of attention to the private bill process or motions. While I believe Motion 512 is well intended and it's aimed at cleaning up the environment, in my mind it singles out low-income Albertans, especially seniors. That's where I have a problem, actually, with this particular motion.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to bring you to one of the constituents who has brought this to my attention. He's a sweet, sweet, old senior, and his name is Milo. He came to my office in his well-maintained, older car to share how the government affects him and how he felt about the motion. Milo, or Mr. F., as we like to call him, uses his well-maintained, old car to drive Mrs. F. to church. He also drives her to the doctor because her health isn't good. He also takes her to the grocery store. People like Milo and his wife both live on seniors' fixed income, and he's very, very concerned about what this motion is going to do to his older, well-maintained car.

The other interesting thing that I'm getting a lot of calls on – and I'm not sure if the member is aware of this – is from Albertans who feel they're being targeted. They collect classic, antique cars. They take their little collector car, their little antique car out on a Sunday drive, or they participate in classic car shows. We happen to have a condo in Radium, and it always seems to be the weekend that we're up in Radium when they have their big classic antique car show, and it brings people from all over. You have these proud people displaying their old, classic cars, and I have to admit that I love watching Barrett-Jackson, and I love seeing some of those old cars roll in to get auctioned off. Those are the type of people that feel that they're going to be penalized by this motion, so it would be interesting to hear what the mover has to say about that.

The majority of the cars on the roads are newer models, and the people that we've talked to with these older cars are well intentioned. They take very good care of their cars, and I refer to the seniors or the car collectors. I'm not a car person, Mr. Speaker. I drive a reliable car, a 2006 RAV4, and I have to have on the record that I love my RAV. It gets me back and forth to Edmonton on the Queen E II all the time very faithfully. It's a car that I really, really enjoy driving. One of the things that was brought to our attention on this particular motion is the brand new cars that they then spend thousands and thousands of dollars souping up and the emissions that they spew out as they're driving down the highway. Like I said, Mr. Speaker, I'm not a car person. I honestly can't tell one car from another other than a RAV because I'm a RAV driver, and I do know what a Mustang looks like because they're pretty hot cars.

While I appreciate what the member is trying to bring forward and I think it's admirable, just at this point in time my job is to represent the people in Calgary-Fish Creek. Actually, as Wildrose members we get a lot of correspondence every day from Albertans, and it's sometimes a little overwhelming just trying to keep up. They have indicated to us as a party that they do not want us to support this bill. As a caucus we believe in democracy, and we believe that our role is to represent Albertans and bring forward their views.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I will not be supporting this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak in favour of Motion 512. I've been hearing comments pro and con. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was talking about Mustangs. Maybe she owned one in her younger days. Maybe that was a souped up car for her. My buddy had a Camaro, you know, and we used to have fun driving those old Mustangs and Camaros around, but I think I'm getting a little grey, too, so I stay away from those souped-up cars.

Ms Blakeman: Why?

Mr. Kang: I'm concerned about the environment now, Laurie. In our younger days we do foolish things.

This motion makes sense because time and again we hear that there's a small number of cars which don't meet – maybe, you know, they've got high emissions. This motion, if adopted, I don't think will affect very many people. When the vehicles change hands, there could be – you know, when we're buying a house, we put all kinds of conditions: the fence has to be fixed; the driveway has to be fixed. If you adopt this motion and somebody is buying a car, they could put the condition: have the car brought up to snuff, and only then we will buy it. It will not be too long before, you know, all cars will be meeting the standards.

We've got to pay the price to keep our environment clean. We want to breathe clean air. Poorly maintained vehicles can boost fuel consumption up 15 per cent, and that will significantly increase greenhouse gas emissions. As Environment Canada says, the benefits of better fuel economy will exceed costs by 3 to 1. Twenty-seven per cent of countries' greenhouse gas emissions are produced by cars and trucks and trains and ships. That's a high number, Mr. Speaker. The feds have implemented high-efficiency standards, and the industry expects they will be required to make an average improvement of 20 per cent, likely, by 2017.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but Standing Order 8(3) provides five minutes for the sponsor of the motion to close debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The goal of Motion 512 is clear: to improve the air quality of Alberta for present and future generations. The motion wording is broad and general, allowing a variety of ways for this goal to be achieved. In this way the government would have the opportunity to develop a made-in-Alberta vehicle inspection maintenance program. For debate purposes one option is to require vehicles older than 10 years to undergo an inspection before the title is transferred.

To answer some of the questions from Airdrie-Chestermere and Calgary-Glenmore, it's not the idea of this motion to test vehicles every year or, as in B.C., every second year. That's not the idea. It's also not the idea for antique vehicles. There would be exemptions for those vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, I know that protecting the environment is one of this government's priorities. Therefore, I look forward to Alberta's future as I know this government will continue to protect Alberta's water, land, and air. Regardless of whether this motion passes here today in the Assembly, I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding Motion 512 and believe it was an important discussion to have in this Assembly. I would like to thank my colleagues in the Assembly who participated in this motion debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 512 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Mr. McFarland in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 21 Wills and Succession Act

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Zwozdesky]

The Acting Speaker: Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour and privilege to speak on this bill, especially with the hon. member presiding from the chair. This, again, is in second reading. I've had numerous opportunities to speak about this bill. Again, I applaud the member who has brought this forward as the proposed changes to the act reflect the changing social values in Alberta as well as the evolving estate planning practice, and you see some really positive stuff happening here.

We on this side of the House agree with the vast majority of the changes. I believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated that there were a few language issues involved with the bill but merely on the direction of same-sex parenting and that, in her view, the bill could have been improved on, but we'll look for that in future legislation. Other than that, the bill really changes very few things. It helps things along and, in particular, changes a few rules, from when I was in law school, on survivorship. It makes it more clear and sensible, especially if two or more people die.

I see that the hon. Minister of Justice remembers that question on her wills and estates exam, too – you remember that, right? – when two people die at the same time. Yes, every law student who has gone before us remembers that question. The answer has now been changed. I think it's a very good rule that has been changed.

Needless to say, this is good stuff, and we support it on this side of the House. We hope it leads to more clarity amongst the profession as well as people who are having their wills and having their issues looked into after the fact when that is necessary.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to very briefly indicate my support for Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act. My brother-in-law, a very respected professor from Carleton University and a top consultant when it comes to recidivism and criminal law, died recently. His wife, being the executor of the will, is currently going through the process and the complications associated with it. My wife is the second executor. If the clarity that is brought out in Bill 21 was applied to the process that my brother-in-law's estate is currently undergoing in Ottawa, the process would be considerably simplified.

There is such a tremendous amount of grief associated with a death that anything that will improve the understanding and the processing of wills and successions is to a degree going to begin the healing process associated with the death and loss. Bill 21 accomplishes that, bringing into account the various types of families and the sometimes tricky nature of succession, especially when there's been more than one marriage and children associated with different mothers. It adds to the complications.

I thank the hon. mover of this Bill 21 for helping to clarify the confusion.

The Acting Speaker: Member, I just need a little clarification. Have you spoken, or are you wishing to address the amendment?

Ms Notley: I was hoping to speak on the bill. I haven't spoken.

The Acting Speaker: Very good. Then we'll hear from Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak on this bill in second reading. My understanding is that this bill is designed for the most part to update the legislative regime that supervises the disposition of assets in the event of a death. It does appear to be designed primarily, you know, to amalgamate and streamline legislation that would cover matters of wills, intestacy, beneficiary designations, survivorship, and family support in those cases where the will does not provide for same. My understanding is that most of this update does pretty much reflect all the work and the recommendations that were performed by the Alberta Law Reform Institute.

There were a couple of questions or concerns that I had that I will put out there, and I suspect the sponsor of the bill will definitely respond to these, based on my experience with the sponsor of the bill. Basically, one possible point of concern is that which relates to the issue of the status of the bill on those occasions where the will is amended without necessarily following the standard forms and procedures, in particular where it is amended that way and you're attempting to give meaning, as it were, to the last wishes of the testator.

In the past it used to be the case that the will was invalidated if a witness to those changes was also a beneficiary. Now we see, of course, through this change that the will itself would not be invalidated. While there is, I believe, the attempt to invalidate the particular disposition to that witness within the will, the question becomes whether or not there may still be occasions where the witness or others who are around the testator when the will is changed may be able to have greater opportunity to influence the outcomes of how the will is ultimately constructed.

This, of course, is an issue simply where we are concerned about, you know, a growing section of the population which is aging, and certainly the member who sponsored this bill is aware of the many concerns around the rights of seniors as they relate to trusteeship and the ability of seniors to have their desires reflected in these kinds of legal documents without being in some way negatively influenced by those around them, potentially people around them that might be taking advantage of them.

While I appreciate that, on the one hand, waiving the need to go through or adhere to certain forms as strictly as you might have otherwise is desired to ensure that those last wishes are reflected, I'm concerned, I guess, a little bit about balancing that against the opportunity to have the last wishes influenced by those who are in a position of care around that testator and ensuring that there remain safety valves, as it were, for that particular process. That's probably the only concern that I'd be interested to hear from the sponsor on when he has an opportunity to respond.

The only other question I had, really, related to the issue of what happens with the changes with respect to survivorship, where you have two parties who pass away at essentially the same time. The previous rule was that the party who was the youngest is deemed to have been the second person to pass away, and thus the distribution flows on that basis. Now it appears as though they're being treated as though both are, from what I can tell, the second person to pass away, so I'm not quite sure what the impact is of that new rule on the disposition of the familial assets.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The reason that this is important, of course, is because the question becomes – you know, most wills have this written in, as the sponsor would know. But in cases where it's not written in, if spouses don't pass away together, the assets of one automatically go to the other, and then the second one has the decision about how those assets are distributed to remaining beneficiaries. If the alternative distribution mechanisms between the two spouses are in conflict and they're both deemed to have effectively been the second person passing away, how is that net group of assets distributed?

That's just a question. It's sort of like one of those fun questions or not-so-fun questions that many of us had to suffer through in law school. I look forward to having the sponsor of the bill explain the implication of that change in a bit more detail because as we went through the briefing notes that we received from the ministry in our office, we weren't quite clear on what that actually meant once we sort of worked through an example. We'd be seeking clarification on that one.

Notwithstanding that, because this appears to reflect the recommendations put forward by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and because it does for the most part appear to simply be a matter of streamlining, we are prepared to offer our provisional support for this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 22

Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Zwozdesky]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: A clarification: Bill 22?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'll be brief. Regardless of whether we have an opinion on new types of families, the demographic of the husband to the wife and the children has changed tremendously over the years. One of the reasons I support Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is the fact that this act recognizes the new demographics in families. Alberta has one of the highest if not the highest divorce rates, and beyond a doubt it has high rates of family violence. The idea that our parents experienced, where for the most part they stayed together over their time and they raised their children and they were around to support their grandchildren: as I say, that demographic has changed.

One of the changes that's taken place besides the increase in common-law families is the increase in same-sex couple relationships. Whether or not it's a same-sex couple or the traditional male and female situation, the ability to have assisted human reproduction does change the possibility, and Bill 22 takes this into account. In order to address the growing reliance on assisted human reproduction and to recognize the children who are a product of this birthing method, the ministry has proposed through this bill the following policies in order to provide greater clarity regarding issues of parentage.

Where assisted human reproduction is used and there is a proper combination of biology and consent, couples using AHR can become the legal parents without any added need to begin adoption proceedings as long as one partner or spouse can show a biological connection to the child and the other individual consents to being a parent. In the case of a single individual using assisted human reproduction, that person may become the legal parent without another legal parent being recorded.

As a result of the above changes, same-sex couples who use assisted human reproduction will receive more complete recognition as legal parents in accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights. I very much welcome the fact that Alberta has become more understanding of a variety of relationships and, through law, accepting of the fact that a couple, as I say, no longer bears the traditional definition of our parents. I'm proud to say that in my 41 years of marriage to my wife, Heather, when I look around, I see that we're the anomaly as opposed to the rule of law these days.

Therefore, I appreciate very much the fact that Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, recognizes what is in the best interests of the parent, whether it be a birth parent or someone who has sufficient love to indicate their desire to be a parent. Regardless of the various combinations their right to have and to love and support their children is recognized in law. I very much appreciate the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for recognizing the changing face of Alberta's parenthood and families and doing so with an updated version of what constitutes a family and support for members of that family, in particular the children.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure as well to rise to speak in second reading of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This bill, I guess, is designed to amend three existing acts to ensure that children who are born through assisted human reproduction have certainty about their legal parents and also, as has already been mentioned, to abolish the status of illegitimacy. As well, the bill would also make several changes to the powers of the maintenance enforcement program.

Now, there are certain components to this bill which I think are positive. Unfortunately, there are also a couple with which I have some concern, so I'll try and go through each of them in general terms in terms of what our concerns or accolades are.

First of all, I think it's really important to congratulate the government in terms of moving forward with making changes regarding assisted reproduction and recognizing the greater role that that plays in our society. This bill will ensure that determining the parenthood of a child conceived through assisted reproduction is now easier and that there'll be less work and paperwork and all that kind of stuff required with respect to making those parents adopt the children who are conceived through alternative means. This act reflects the evolving picture of our families here in Alberta, and in that sense it is certainly a positive thing. It also, of course, eases the process for single parents and for same-sex couples, and of course any change in statutes that reflects equality in terms of recognizing the parental authority of same-sex couples is also to be commended.

I would, however, like to repeat a couple of the concerns that were identified by previous speakers with respect to the fact that the act still fails to, shall we say, neutralize the language within itself as it refers to the parents of children. In particular, I think it is possible to talk about parents without necessarily talking about a mother and a father and, in so doing, to recognize and demonstrate respect for the concept of equality and for the fact that families in today's society do look different. They don't always include a mother and a father. They may well include a mother and a mother, they may well include a father and a father, and that's fine. That's what families look like. That's what we've said – well, that's what some of us have said, anyway – should be perfectly embraced and accepted within our society.

We need to continue to be vigilant to eliminate vestiges of a previously more archaic view of these issues. Unfortunately, by not updating the language in the course of making these amendments with that view in mind, we have failed to meet that particular objective. I would much rather see the government amend this legislation in the few cases where it's necessary – and I think they could probably do it without a tremendous amount of difficulty – just to get to the point where we can speak about parents as we talked about the families this act has implications for.

Now, the other thing within this act that is potentially a problem, of course, is the proposal within the act to change the way in which parents become guardians of their children and, in particular, how the noncustodial parent acquires guardianship rights. The status quo, shall I say, is that there needs to be a fairly rigorous assessment of the relationship between that parent and the child for whom they seek guardianship to ensure that the guardianship is an appropriate designation.

This act purports to change that process quite substantially and, instead, to simply have guardianship allocated on the basis of whether the potential guardian has the desire to become a guardian. I think that we really need to consider the implications of this change. I know that in the past the statement has been made: oh, this is just leveling the playing field, and this is just going to ensure that, you know, both parties to the parentage, shall we say, of the child are invited to become part of the process.

I had one person suggest to me in my consultations the following scenario. Mom and dad meet some night, and the result of said meeting is a child, but mom never sees the dad again. Then a few years down the road or a few months down the road or however long the dad develops a new world view of things, shall we say, and becomes very concerned, for instance, about types of medical treatment which they would approve for their child. Four or five years later the child is in the hospital, needs a blood transfusion, and the second parent, who has up to that point never had any kind of parental relationship with the child, either financially or in any other fashion, because of this new set of beliefs arrives on the scene and says, "I now would like to demonstrate my willingness to be a guardian," applies to become a guardian, and starts suggesting that the child cannot receive that particular medical treatment.

Now, that's perhaps an exaggerated example, but it's the kind of example that does show that there is value in assessing the relationship between the child and the parent who seeks guardianship and that it is not a one-way relationship and that simply expressing a desire at some point down the road to take on that role of guardian is not a completely foolproof way of assessing whether designation of that person as a guardian is, in fact, advisable in that particular circumstance.

You know, this is something that is in most cases going to undermine the rights of the custodial parent. In most cases that is the mother. It's fine that we do everything we can to promote maximum involvement of noncustodial parents with the raising of the children, but we need to at the same time respect the relationship that develops between the custodial parent and the child.

We need to ensure that we don't inadvertently provide incredible levels of authority to the noncustodial parent simply because we're working so hard to establish some form of equality that we then significantly negate and undermine the authority that ought to flow to the custodial parent due to their relationship with that child. So I'm quite concerned, really, about this trend that appears within the act, and I certainly would like to hear more from the government about why it is we shouldn't be concerned about this and why it is they felt that it was appropriate to move to this new approach for establishing guardianship and, in particular, for establishing the authority of guardianship over that particular child.

When you consider, you know, the kinds of things that come up, medical treatment is one example. Travel is another example. Moving the parent and the child to another jurisdiction is a very common example. What exactly does handing over guardianship that easily to a noncustodial parent do to those kinds of rights of the custodial parent? Are we suddenly going to find custodial parents effectively serving at the whim of the noncustodial parent in terms of whether they can move to a new province or move to a new town or move to a new country simply because the noncustodial parent has expressed a willingness to become a guardian and, in so doing, then gives to themselves the authority to say no to moving the child, letting the child go to a certain school, letting the child have a certain medical treatment, et cetera? I am quite concerned about that.

The final element of the act, which my preliminary consultations appear to support, are the changes to the maintenance enforcement program. I will admit I was a little bit concerned when I first saw that we were going to start spending all this time seeking information on the creditors – i.e., the receiving spouse, in most cases the mother – and ensuring that we're combing through their finances with much more rigour than we ever have in the past. I'm told that in practice the implication of this is that by doing this we assist and promote and encourage having both parties bring the exchange of dollars into the system as opposed to having the system unable to get the contributing parent to make their payments, and then the receiving parent accepts much less outside of the maintenance enforcement process. Then what happens is that the contributing parent is able to use this so-called contribution as a means of challenging the maintenance enforcement program's efforts to collect the full amount. It becomes difficult for maintenance enforcement to mediate if they don't have the information of both parties to the arrangement.

I am told by some that this, in fact, will ultimately ensure that there are more tools for maintenance enforcement to collect the full amount of payments from the contributing parent that are owed to the receiving parent. With those assurances in mind – and I hope that they are correct – we do not have any difficulty with that and, in fact, think that it may be a wise move.

With those preliminary concerns noted, I will take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions or comments.

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to join the debate on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

Bill 29
Alberta Parks Act

Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 29, Alberta Parks Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

[Adjourned debate November 17: Mrs. Ady]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just to refresh members' memories, the amendment to hoist Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, was proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar last Wednesday evening, and given the hour it was adjourned, as was indicated, by the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

The hoist amendment is basically the third strike, as we all know, but it's important to very quickly go over the first two strikes that were attempted as rational alternatives. The first was proposed by myself, and that was a reasoned amendment. What it stated was that at this time there has been insufficient consultation with the public; therefore, the feeling is that the public's best interests are not recognized in the bill as it currently exists. That failed miserably, based on the majority of government members voting against it.

So the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie brought forward the middle-ground position. That middle-ground position was: let's refer it to committee because the committee has the option of calling in a variety of publicly interested groups, the equivalent of holding public hearings. It's a very transparent, accountable process because there is a Hansard for the meetings. Invitations are sent out to a wide variety of individuals and groups notifying them well in advance of the possibility to participate in the democratic process, to have their say as opposed to just simply putting something on an online website. Now, unfortunately, the wisdom of the many in terms of the committee process was lost in favour of the wisdom of the one in terms of ministerial discretion or the wisdom of a small group in the form of the Lieutenant Governor in Council or cabinet.

So here we are, Mr. Speaker, at the hoist. The hoist basically is the last attempt in the second portion of debate, second reading, to give the government a chance to do the right thing and determine that this bill not be read at this time. Of course, what we're hoping for is that in the interval the type of consultation that did not go into the preparation of Bill 29 would occur, that the public hearings would take place with the involvement of the public, who have just recently, within the last two weeks, started to wake up to the loss of their public rights and their public governance over parks.

Because this wasn't part of the consultation process, it wasn't brought up about advisory councils or designated alternative groups that would privately manage public lands, not only privately manage it but be able to charge the public for access onto their lands because now the private operator has taken the control that once was part of the public domain. So these came as surprises, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of the public is not aware of them. The people who are most tuned in, the people who have concerns about ecological reserves, wilderness areas, and protected areas, are aware. They're the people whose concerns I have tabled over the past week, four and a half pages worth on Thursday. But the general public has not become aware of this concern, and to a large extent it's going below the radar. This is what I've called a sleeper bill.

Now, I do appreciate the fact that there have been two articles in the Rocky Mountain Outlook that have raised the alarm. I appreciate the fact that there was an article by Kelly Cryderman of the Calgary Herald that raised the alarm or indicated a slight ringing that something was out of place. I thank the Edmonton Journal for the editorial this past weekend indicating the problems associated with ministerial discretion as opposed to the public domain of the legislative debate. For the most part it's individuals such as Sam Gunsch, a representative of the Sierra Club, who again is in our gallery because of his concerns about, basically, the privatization movement into parks, the loss of governance over public lands, the generic nature of lumping recreation in with preservation of ecological reserves.

I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, for the sake of Albertans who wish to enjoy parks in a variety of ways that this legislation will get hoisted so that more thought is put into regulations, for example, that have yet to be determined. The minister has said: well, give me the right to have an open book, and I'll write the rules as we go along, and I'll share those rules with you when it's appropriate for you to know what is on my mind. That's not democracy.

For that reason and many reasons like it I don't want to lose the opportunity to debate this bill in the future. I want this bill improved to the point where it has public acceptance, and therefore I am calling for it to be hoisted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's 29(2)(a) for five minutes of questions and answers. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, my riding of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is, of course, the home to Alberta's largest national park, Wood Buffalo, which I'm proud to represent. While not under provincial jurisdiction it is very important and a reason people move to an important riding in northeastern Alberta. I have to ask the hon. member on the important points that he made today, though – we know that the park is certainly full of wildlife. You can see the bison, the moose, the black bears, and the wolves. I haven't seen any mallards lately or things like that that are going on. I do know the minister of finance talked about mallards today, being not a fiscal hawk but a fiscal mallard. The park, I must say, is also home to endangered species like the whooping crane. In fact, dating back to 1983, the park was declared a UNESCO world heritage site for its biodiversity.

I have to say that an important question that I welcome from the Member for Calgary-Varsity on the very important points that he brought up is what he sees as an alternative to what is being proposed. Clearly, this is another example of an action by an old and tired government of 40 years that has simply run out of ideas, and I'd be very interested in understanding the ideas that you would like to advance relative to Bill 29.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has pointed out the close proximity of Wood Buffalo national park. It's important to note, Mr. Speaker, that national parks make up 8 per cent of the land usage of this province, and even though we've had changes in federal government, the democratic process is working in that we don't have the same federal government for a 40-year period. As a result, the strength of the legislation protecting national parks is considerably superior to that of what we're seeing proposed in Bill 29 for provincial parks. We have the wonderful parks such as Wood Buffalo, such as Jasper, such as Waterton, such as Banff, and thank heavens that they have national governance in legislation, I might note, as opposed to regulation.

My concern is that this government does not see the value of ecological reserves, of protected areas, of wilderness parks such as Siffleur, White Goat. As a result, the protection of the ecological quality, that so many Albertans have said is a priority over simply recreational activities, is lost. They're given the same value regardless of their importance in terms of wildlife connectivity, the Yellowstone to Yukon, the notion that unless species have a chance to breed outside of their immediate area, there is the possibility of a decline in the quality of the animal produced. Without those protected areas that guarantee that animals can travel, we're going to see what happened most recently in Banff park, where an avalanche practically wiped out what little remained of the woodland caribou herd. Therefore, unless we recognize the importance of protecting these endangered species such as the grizzly, this legislation that is being proposed equates riding an ATV with protecting woodland caribou or the grizzly or the swift fox.

Mr. Speaker, we need legislation that is at least as protective for the provincial scene as that afforded by the national government. I thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for raising the point that this protection is considerably inferior to that of national standards.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? We still have a few seconds.

Seeing none, the chair just wants to read the names of hon. members who wish to speak on the amendment: the hon. members for Calgary-Currie, Calgary-Glenmore, Calgary-Fish Creek, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, Airdrie-Chestermere. I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In reference to the Member for Calgary-Varsity's comments about the value of wilderness areas for both humans and wildlife, that's the sort of thing that we hear from time to time, and we don't always reference where it comes from. I think that it's important that we reference where that comes from on a day such as today, so I intend to do that in explaining why I will support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's amendment to hoist Bill 29.

It was 38 years ago this very day, November 22, 1972, that the province of Alberta moved to preserve three great swaths of unspoiled wilderness on the eastern boundaries of the Rocky Mountains. The Ghost River, White Goat, and Siffleur wilderness areas had already been established about a decade earlier by the Social Credit government of Premier Ernest Manning, but it was the government of Premier Peter Lougheed, the first in an all-too-long line of PC governments, that enshrined their preservation in the Wilderness Areas Amendment Act of 1972, providing in legislation, Mr. Speaker, the highest level of protection available in this province.

Dr. Allan Warrack was Premier Lougheed's minister of lands and forests, and here's how he explained it on November 22, 1972, when he moved third reading of Bill 93, The Wilderness Areas Amendment Act, before it was passed into law. That's right. Thirty-eight years ago today, this Legislature was debating the 93rd bill of that session, and here we are debating the 29th. I think that's interesting, how little work we do relative to what legislators used to do in this Assembly. I quote from Hansard that day:

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Minister of Telephones and Utilities, Mr. Werry, that Bill No. 93, The Wilderness Areas Amendment Act, 1972 be read a third time.

I have on the occasion of second reading, Mr. Speaker, had an opportunity to describe the principles involved in these amendments. Important as they are, I think I can, in the light of brevity, not dwell on them in any detail other than to note quickly that there was the maximum size removal, there was the firming-up of the boundaries for the three wilderness areas that Alberta shall now have, and thirdly, the implementation of the controlled buffer zone concept as a part of the wilderness areas concept.

And then he went on.

The one thing that I would like to do however in addition, Mr. Speaker, is add a description that I have thought about as it pertains to wilderness areas, and that is, for the citizens of this province and this country and indeed our visitors to have the opportunity for the quiet enjoyment of nature. This is possible in wilderness areas that are not encumbered by mechanized activities of any kind. This opportunity is one that people want. It is a reasonable thing for people to want as they maintain a balance in their lives, having regard to the intensity of their schedules at some times, the activities that they need to carry forward with their own responsibilities in society, and that opportunity for retreat. Even though, for some, the use of it may be relatively infrequent . . .

Relatively infrequent.

. . . it is still an opportunity that is there and would not be there if we did not have The Wilderness Areas Act and if we did not have Bill No. 93, The Wilderness Areas Amendment Act to finalize these matters; to have three wilderness areas in the Province of Alberta for people to enjoy that opportunity for quiet communication with nature; and to do so unencumbered by any mechanization that would detract from that quiet enjoyment of nature.

This would be the extent of my remarks in summary, Mr. Speaker, having regard to Bill No. 93.

Hansard then notes, "The motion was carried, and Bill No. 93 was read a third time." There was no one who spoke in opposition to it that day 38 years ago, November 22, 1972.

I think it's worth noting that Bill 93 finalized the protection of these wilderness areas from industrial use and indeed, really, any high-impact human use. The Lougheed government removed pre-existing petroleum and mineral leases from the wilderness areas in exchange for new leases elsewhere. Shell was one of the oil companies involved in this. There were a couple of others as well, I believe. There was among our lawmakers then, Mr. Speaker, a deep understanding – a deep understanding – of the value of wilderness and of preserving our natural heritage. Protecting our most special landscapes in perpetuity seemed like a good idea at the time.

Mr. Speaker, if you've ever wondered how long forever is, just ask the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. She's currently trying to steer this bill through the Legislature, and if the minister succeeds in that, the answer to the question of how long forever is will be 38 years. Bill 29 purports to do you and me and visitors to this province from out of province a big favour. It will clarify park use for the public by consolidating and replacing three separate pieces of legislation to simplify the classification system and bring all the lands governed by those acts under the minister's administration.

On the surface it is a compelling argument. Over the years we have developed in this province a spectrum of green space categories ranging from highly protected to more recreation oriented: ecological reserves, wilderness areas, wildland provincial parks, provincial parks, natural areas, provincial recreation areas. We talked about some of these classifications the other night, Mr. Speaker, when we were debating this bill and the other amendments to it. In fact, Bill 29 removes the legislated protection that wilderness areas, ecological reserves, and wildland provincial parks now have – removes it – and proposes one catch-all park category, leaving it up to the minister to decide the level of protection in zones that are not defined in the bill. It gives the minister the authority to permit industrial or tourism developments inside any park, including the wilderness areas. I know she says that she's not going to do that, and we're supposed to take her at her word, but we don't have to take anybody at their word under existing legislation because it's right there written into law. It removes the certainty of long-term protection that seemed like such a good idea 38 years ago.

In reality, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's current classifications are consistent with national and international protected area standards. What's most regressive in this bill is that it removes from Alberta law the commitment to making protection of a park's ecological integrity the first priority in management, a monumental step backwards for Alberta's wilderness. That monumental step backwards comes at a time when our reputation is under attack around the world. Is it truly difficult for people who live here or people who visit here to figure out what we can or cannot do in all of our different categories of green space? Not really. The AlbertaParks.ca website clearly spells out everything for anybody who's interested in going and looking there. The minister has done a rather good job, or her staff have, on that website.

Mr. Speaker, Premier Lougheed and his lands and forests minister, Allan Warrack, understood the value of protecting our most special landscapes in perpetuity. Premier Stelmach and his parks minister will dismantle that legacy with Bill 29. Lougheed and Warrack got it right 38 years ago – 38 years ago today. If they proceed tonight in the Legislature, this government is about to get it irreversibly, irretrievably wrong. It is time to withdraw Bill 29 and get back to nature, and that is why I will be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciated the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie's comments about an area that's so important to all of us. But even more importantly, it is said that a province without a history is a province without a heart. Clearly, the hon. member has indicated how much heart we do have in Alberta, being the first province in all of Canada to have a Ministry of Environment. At the time both SRD, Sustainable Resource Development, and the Ministry of Environment were all one ministry. What a novel idea. Just like as we talk about parks, parks is one idea, and actually it is one idea that is an Alberta value. As the hon. member mentioned earlier, Premier Lougheed, being the first Premier to come forward with the Ministry of Environment, had a vision, but he was mirroring what Albertans believed in in terms of their commitment to the environment, their commitment to parks, their commitment to the wilderness and Mother Nature, and, I might say, the mother ship.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. member. As we go forward, I know that he also has a better road map in terms of how we protect and how we sustain our parks to ensure that the men and women that are in this Assembly representing constituents will be able to guarantee that their families will continue to enjoy the very parks that we call home, that we have a history of. We do not want to lose that history. So to the member: I'd be interested in his comments relative to the importance of that sustainability and protection of that pristine, shall I say, geographical makeup that he made reference to in his original comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the hon. member, there are probably some things in life and in our business in this Legislature that we do that are as important, but I can't think of anything that's any more important for a very simple fact, a very simple reason. Once you build on something natural, once you take nature away from that area, it is gone forever. Now, nature, being a pretty resilient thing, will bring back something. We've all watched – I'm not sure what cable station it's on, whether it's TLC or Discovery Channel or National Geographic, one of those – that program, that series, about the day the people disappeared, and it's all about the concept of what would happen if, magically, all humanity simply disappeared from the Earth, but all other life forms continued on. How long would it take until all of our human-engineered systems broke down? How long would it take until nature reclaimed New York City or Calgary or Edmonton or wherever? In many respects, in some ways it wouldn't take very long at all. It would start within days, but nature won't necessarily bring it back the way it was.

It's fair to point out as well that the way it is today, even in its native, natural state, untouched by human hands, is not the way that it will be a hundred or a thousand or a million years from now. Nature is an evolving concept, but nature has more smarts about how that should work than the brightest human beings, hon. member, in my opinion. What we're good at as a species is cutting down, tearing down, re-forming, rebuilding, paving over, taking what was here to begin with and using it and reshaping it for some purpose of ours.

Obviously, over the last however many hundreds of thousands or millions – I think the oldest hominid found so far in the Great Rift Valley in Africa is about 4 million years old. Let's say that we've existed in some form standing on two legs, two feet, for 4 million years now. Obviously, over that period of time our ability to manipulate tools, to think problems through to a solution, and so on and so forth has worked just great for us, and in some cases it has worked just great for other species as well, but in many cases it's worked great for us at the expense of whatever nature put here.

Mr. Speaker, when William Cornelius Van Horne was the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he said: if we can't bring the mountains to the people . . . [Mr. Taylor's speaking time expired] Ah, darn. That was good. Maybe somebody else will ask me another question.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment and why it's so important that we take this bill off the table and go back to, I guess, restructuring and asking: what is it that we're really trying to do with our parks here in Alberta?

It's interesting that one of the anti campaign advertisements that was going on out there was trying to tell people not to come and visit Alberta and the beautiful, pristine parks that we have. They're world renowned; they're one of a kind. Of everything from Waterton park to Writing-on-Stone up to Wood Buffalo in the north Albertans are very proud, and they love their parks. It's a sad day when all of a sudden without any notice, without any consultation with numerous groups and Albertans as a whole Bill 29 was thrown in front of this Legislature and wanting to be pushed through in a short period of two or three weeks maximum. It's been quite astounding. I think I've received 362 e-mails today to my constituency office from people very concerned with Bill 29.

It's very clear, Mr. Speaker, that the government has not done its job on Bill 29. It's trying to force it through in short order and through night sittings, and this is not in the best interest. Once we turn back or we pass this bill and we empower the minister to make broad, sweeping deals on our parks, whether it's allowing an individual to put in a beautiful cabin on a pristine lake, saying that this is good for tourism, whatever it is, there's no going back. We need to be very careful, and this bill is not being very careful. It's just a trust-me bill. We can't even trust this government to look after the people in our emergency rooms. They talk about percentages. They have protocol that kicks in after eight hours.

What's going to be the determination on what the minister decides with our parks? Who she knows? What she wants to do? Who's going to be the next minister? All of these are huge concerns for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and we need to address this problem, but we need to address it properly. Having a few night discussions on how poor this bill is going to serve and protect our parks in the future isn't going to cut it.

There have been amendments. People have tried to bring forward various amendments to the bill. We've failed. This should have gone to committee. This should be studied longer. This is a last attempt by those of us in this Legislature who want to not only preserve our parks but preserve the purpose of this House, to come in and to debate bills, to make them public. This is a bill that is of such importance, Mr. Speaker, that it really should have been tabled in the spring so that people could have had all summer to go around and to discuss and to dissect and to look at what the pros and the cons are.

There are just so many areas where, again, it is just wide open on what the latitude of the minister of parks can do in the future, and that's just unacceptable. We need legislation that is not arbitrary. We need people to know and to understand which parks are protected in which manner, whether it's pristine wilderness or whether it's going to be a recreational park, whether or not trails are going to be allowed in there for RVs. Perhaps it's just going to be horseback or on foot. All of these things have been set up. There has been a great deal of study and research and thought put into the various parks that we have here in the province, and all of that is going to be swept aside with this bill. It's unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that this government in the best interests of Albertans and our parks will realize this and that we can vote to hoist this bill. I don't know how we can emphasize more how important it is.

I have to say that it has just been overwhelming, the number of e-mails and phone calls from Albertans that have come into my office who are very, very concerned with where we're going on this bill. One of the universal points that they bring out is: why would you empower the minister in such a way that the minister of parks and recreation could change the use of any park at any time through order in council merely because, in a minister's opinion, this is a good thing to do? It might be a good thing to do for the minister, it might be a good thing to do for the minister's friends, but is it a good thing to do for Albertans?

Conversely, perhaps it is something that is good for Albertans, but why wouldn't we go through the proper process? Why wouldn't we have legislation that would change or protect a park have to come through this House, with the arguments brought forward?

Again, probably the most important thing, Mr. Speaker, is the time allotted to these new bills that are brought forward for Albertans to see across this great province. Two weeks is not enough time. Three weeks is not enough time. We're not going to have proper evaluation of this bill. We're not going to be able to hear the response of Albertans.

Perhaps, again, another most concerning part is that we just really do not know. This is an arbitrary bill that allows the future of our parks to be held by one individual, and that individual is the minister of parks and recreation, which is unacceptable to the people of Alberta that I've talked to, the people that have sent messages and e-mails to me. I would once again plead with many of the members that have already spoken on this bill to ask the government to vote to hoist this bill so that it might have proper consideration, that it might be rewritten in such a way that Albertans will have comfort and know our parks are protected, that it's not left to one individual.

There are just so many areas. When you think of the beautiful parks, the opportunities that we have there, to think that, wow, all of this is going to be at the discretion of one person to decide what goes forward. Perhaps that minister has a great friend who wants to build a cabin in the Willmore wilderness and to be able to fly in and take his elite friends hunting and not have to hike in or pack in on a horse a great distance. Perhaps what they're going to do with this bill is use it on the other side, this two-edged sword, and that is that an oil and gas company that has put a lot of money up front wants to explore an area, and the minister is going to come in and literally take that back with the option of no compensation and say: oh, we're going to develop a park here. This is a two-edged sword. It can work against those people who own land, and it can work against our parks that the government currently protects.

That's why this bill really needs to be hoisted. When you look at it from one side of the spectrum to the other, there just are no pluses in this bill unless, of course, we want a king to declare where the parks are, who can hunt in those parks, what animals can and will not be hunted. Again, that's going into fish and game, those areas. This bill is truly far too vague and gives far too much latitude and power to the minister.

Again, it leaves those of us in opposition to this bill very little to do other than to continue to talk. Many people will say: "Oh, you're costing taxpayers money. You shouldn't be debating late into the evening." This is the last defence that we have for our parks, and that is to talk and to talk and to talk about this. Some of it might seem like it's repetitious, might be upsetting to some people because they just want to get on and to be able to do this and not be challenged. "Why do you go through this long, drawn-out process trying to delay a bill?" The reason why, Mr. Speaker, is because this bill is wrong. I believe the majority of Albertans feel this bill is wrong.

It goes back to another episode that we just had earlier this month, where the Minister of SRD flippantly said: "Oh, it's great for Alberta to change some rangeland into some potato land, and we've been doing this for a hundred years. It's within my jurisdiction. I can just do that." There was a huge uproar, and that individual, that company, withdrew that request.

It's hard for the people to just continually have to rise up and to fight these things time and time again. We need better government. We need better laws. We need better debate on these laws. We need a better process. All of these things are being thrown out the window with this bill, and we just have to again urge the members of this government to hoist this bill and realize that it is inadequate.

We'll do a proper consultation with the people of Alberta, and more importantly we'll pass a bill that is legislation and not empowering a minister. We do not want that. This is a constant problem this government seems to be looking at, whether it's the health minister, the Environment minister, SRD, the Energy minister. They want to empower these offices so that they can arbitrarily change what is going on. It's just not good for Alberta. It's not good for investment. It's not good for landowners to wonder: boy, are they going to come in and declare my land part of a parkland, and are they going to extinguish my rights? What a word to have, I guess, in a few of their bills: to extinguish landowners' rights. Something that this government continues to do is extinguish the rights, the legislation, the purpose of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I will close with that and ask that people will vote in favour of this amendment, that we might not step back, I guess, 38 years of precedent that's been here in the province. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the hon. member could maybe speak a little bit more about what other bills or what other legislation are examples of where the minister has been given broad-reaching powers and they have abused it. I started thinking, you know, that another one of these is the land-use framework and some of the dangerous things that are coming out of there. In principle, with the land-use framework it seems like, you know, everybody wants to make sure certain places are protected and so forth, but there are just such broad powers in there that it seems to me there's a real danger.

You can already see some of these dangers happening as you discuss with different municipal politicians, specifically in the rural areas, about the land-use framework and you see these plans being made. I know the one up north had some issues where, you know, it doesn't quite jibe with the actual leases up there. There's a conflict between the plan that was put out and some property rights. What are some examples that you see in that regard of a minister having too broad a discretion?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. That's an excellent question, and it is a concern. There are two ways in which the ministers can broaden their scope. One is through legislation like Bill 29, where they literally say that it's at the minister's discretion. Again, it's been a long time in SRD, where the minister has the authority to buy and sell Crown land as it wishes at the minister's discretion. Perhaps last year, though, was the worst year in Alberta history, where we had a number of bills. Bills 19, 36, and 50 all empowered the minister to basically bypass the courts, to bypass a needs assessment, to bypass the Legislature by declaring these things needful for the good of society. What I want to say is that as good an intent as it is, that intent is wrong. I think the best way you can sum that up is with the simple: power corrupts; absolute power corrupts absolutely.

Perhaps, I guess, on the little broader side, where they've done this is in the centralization of power. Where Alberta has been hurt the most on this is through the disbanding of locally run hospitals and the fact that now we have one individual that's been appointed or hired by this government. Literally, for a while there were no expenditures that he didn't sign off on. It's a broad sense, but when they empower one individual, when they centralize power and decision-making in a minister's office or with a few bureaucrats, it's never in the best interest of the people. They might be trying to act in the best interest, but they always fall short.

Like I say, the area where I'd be most concerned, which isn't actually legislation – well, it is – was when they, you know, created the superboard. Again, they put all that power and decision-making into one little appointed body and said: we know what's best for health care in Alberta. We can see what a disaster that has been. I mean, they talk about giving five-year funding. Well, why would they keep talking about that all the time? When you look at the last five years, they always increased funding as it was. It's a failed system.

This is going to be a failed system as well if they give that power to the parks minister. We need to be concerned and to vote no against Bill 29 in its current state. It just is not going to enhance our parks or protect property rights going into the future.

The minister can just, like I say, at the stroke of a pen take property and say: oh, this is the fair amount. Or, vice versa, they could allow someone to come in with commercial development to an area that's been protected for decades and say: well, it's for the betterment of Alberta; we're going to get a few bucks here. Or perhaps they're going to have a few friends that can enjoy some pristine wilderness and be able to fly in to a beautiful cabin that's been built.

I hope that answers the hon. member's question. We need to very wary of empowering ministers with that type of authority.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to rise this evening and express my support for the amendment that's currently before the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we are on Bill 29.

Mr. Mason: We're on the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, of course, the amendment to Bill 29, the hoist amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I rise to indicate support for the amendment relative to Bill 29, that in fact this bill not now be read. I think that it is an appropriate amendment. I commend the member for bringing it forward, and I wholeheartedly support it.

Mr. Speaker, we should always try and strike the right balance between individual and private interests and the interests of all of us together. It is a role, in my view, of government to ensure that that balance is maintained. We don't want to interfere with people's ability to create jobs and to create wealth and to do all of the things that keep the economy moving forward, but at the same time we need to protect the longer term interests of the public, of all of us, not just for our generation but for every generation to come. The network of legislation that currently exists surrounding parks in this province and wilderness areas and so on has done that. It has helped to provide that protection and to protect that balance that needs to exist.

What this bill is, fundamentally, in my view, is an attempt to eliminate bit by bit, piece by piece all of the checks and balances that prevent the development of commercial and industrial activities in our protected areas and in our parks. It's clear to me that this is a systematic attempt to make sure that, whether it's the oil industry or a recreational company or tourism interests, they will have the ability to override the long-term protection that is afforded to our natural areas in this province.

A few examples. There's a new purpose that's been added to this bill, which is in 2(3)(d), "providing for a range of outdoor pursuits and recreation and tourism development opportunities within the Alberta parks system that contribute to Alberta's overall growth and prosperity." It further goes on to talk about "providing lasting protection for provincially . . . unique or significant recreation and tourism features."

Mr. Speaker, in the current legislation neither prosperity nor tourism is mentioned. I think that's quite deliberate and quite appropriate because the purpose of the legislation that currently exists is to protect natural areas, including protecting them from the overdevelopment of recreational facilities and tourism. Those things can be a threat to our natural areas if they are developed to excess, and I think that the protections here, the balance here is lost.

In the present wilderness act wilderness areas and ecological reserves are afforded the highest level of protection possible. They will be abolished, and these criteria are not replicated in the new legislation anywhere.

There are multiple examples that I could give if we went through in detail. Hopefully, we'll be able to do that in committee if this motion, unfortunately, should fail. The legislation is replete with systematic removal of protection for our wilderness and parks areas. Mr. Speaker, I think we should not pass this; this is an ill-advised piece of legislation.

I've said on a couple of earlier occasions that the suite of bills that the government has brought forward in this session contains some of the most onerous, badly drafted, and ill-thought-out pieces of legislation that I have yet seen in the 10 years that I've been here. I think that it's important that we pause, reflect, make sure that the public is fully aware of what's going on.

While the minister has talked about the wide consultation and so on, she has neglected to point out that in a survey of Alberta public opinion in August 2007 by Ipsos-Reid 85 per cent of both visitors and nonvisitors to our parks said that while both are important, protecting the natural environment should be a higher priority for Alberta's parks than providing recreation.

Mr. Speaker, this says nothing about industrial activity in the parks, especially the development of oil and gas and mineral resources and so on, that is going to become much easier to get approved under this act. In fact, I believe that if the government had no intention of approving those things, they wouldn't be changing the legislation to allow them to do so. The very fact that they are now attempting to change the legislation to give this capacity to the minister to approve these things, to streamline those approval processes and make sure that these kinds of things can happen, is because they intend to do so.

Mr. Speaker, that would be very, very consistent with this government's approach. Underlying all of it, underlying everything this government has done, it is about allowing a free hand or as free a hand as possible for the development of mineral resources of this province by private concerns, most of whom have very, very close financial and other political ties with the Progressive Conservative Party, that forms this government. I think we need to understand why this is happening and what some of those political relationships are because unless we understand those political relationships, we can't understand why the government would be bringing forward legislation like this.

Mr. Speaker, the present system is not overly complicated or confusing, as the minister has tried to tell the House. It clearly protects parks and sets out clear criteria for ecological conservation. It clearly delineates five basic categories of protected areas, listed from the lowest extent of protection to the highest; that is, recreational areas, heritage rangelands, provincial parks, ecological reserves, and wilderness areas. It clearly restricts the development of land, roads, and resources in these areas and sets out clear penalties for disturbing the natural landscape. There are clear protections for flora, fauna, and ecology.

What is clear about the new Alberta Parks Act is that it will ease commercial land, road, and resource development and erode democratic representation for Albertans. Clearly, the minister will receive excessive powers to decide the fate of Alberta's parks alone and secretly, so the future of Alberta's parks and the wildlife and wilderness in them is becoming more uncertain.

What's unclear is what protections will exist in the new park system. Unclear is the future of the boundaries of Alberta's parks, the meaning of the designation of a park, and protections within each of four zones still to be stipulated. It's unclear whether the public has the ability to effectively voice their concerns, and it is unclear what recourse Albertans have should the choices of the minister be unclear.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is seriously flawed, and I think it's important that we recognize – and I'm going to quote here – that those public organizations most concerned with the protection of natural areas in our province have come together and have issued some joint statements.

I have here a release from the 12th of November from the Federation of Alberta Naturalists, the Sierra Club of Canada, Stewards of Alberta's Protected Areas Association, and the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. They take strong exception to this bill, and they call for it to be stopped. One person speaking on behalf of the Sierra Club, Diane Pachal, said that "if Bill 29 isn't stopped, Save Our Parks Week will need to be an annual event throughout Alberta." They are specifically calling to have the bill withdrawn by the Tourism, Parks and Recreation minister and are calling on Albertans to save their parks by e-mailing and faxing their MLAs and the Premier with copies to us, the opposition parties, throughout the debate that's now taking place on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we need legislation which provides for the protection of parks in perpetuity for wildlife and to ensure that future generations enjoy it in the same condition that we have enjoyed it. We need to leave it for them just the way we found it, and that will become impossible if this particular legislation is passed because this legislation is designed to give a green light to development in our parks. Whatever the minister might say, whatever the government might say, the fundamental underlying objective of this bill is to permit that which is not now permissible, and that is the development of roads, the development of petroleum and other resources, the development of tourism, development of all kinds, basically to allow development in the parks.

Now, the minister says that's not what she wants to do. Then my question is: why is she asking for the power to do it? Why is she asking for unaccountable, excessive authority to override many of the protections that we have had provided to us by previous governments?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to give the PC Party as the government of this province a little bit of credit here. Way back – wait for it, hon. members. Wait, wait, wait a minute. Way back when I was a university student, and that's a while ago – that will tell you how long that is – the Progressive Conservative government was a new and relatively progressive government that swept aside Social Credit and swept aside old ways of doing things. It was a modern government which was in touch with the people. But that was nearly 40 years ago, and it's a long time since they were innovative, progressive, and in touch with the public in this province. They've been coasting a long time, and they have changed. They are no longer a party that will stand up and extend protections for our natural areas.

They don't have a progressive vision anymore. The conservatives are ruling the roost, and the really real conservatives, the really conservative conservative ones, have joined us on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind members that the root of conservative is conserve, and I think there is some value in conserving some of the best things that we have in this province. Surely this is one of the most beautiful, environmentally diverse provinces in all of Canada. There is so much for us to protect, and we should ensure that we do hand over these benefits, these wonderful resources to future generations. It's not our right to consume everything and leave nothing for the generations to come but massive liabilities, yet that seems to be the direction that we're taking.

I thank all hon. members for their kind attention.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to ask the hon. member – he's been here for 10 years, as he mentioned, and I'm just wondering if he could think back in his years of experience here. You started to mention a little bit about what the minister could do, but what are some of the worst-case scenarios that you would envision that a minister with Bill 29 under their belt or under their jurisdiction – what would be some of the biggest mistakes that you think this government is capable of doing, and why do we need to hoist this bill?

Mr. Mason: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy – happy – to do that. You know, a worst-case situation is that there could be an oil exploration company or a company that wants to develop assets like coal-bed methane or any number of things like that in a pristine wilderness area. And say – I know it's far-fetched – but just say that they'd given several thousand dollars to the Progressive Conservative Party in the last election, and suppose they had the minister's ear. Suppose they sent the minister on a fishing trip on the west coast for three days of salmon fishing. I know this is far-fetched. I know it's far-fetched, but theoretically, at least, it could happen, and then the government and the minister allow something that for 50 years the government has prevented and has prohibited because they knew that their job was to protect these areas for future generations.

But along comes a company that can make several million dollars in a quick turnaround on their investment, and they really, really want to go ahead, and the minister is sympathetic for some reason. Well, then, the minister could allow it, and we could see very, very long-term, permanent damage to the ecology, to the wildlife, even to the potential tourism value or recreational value of that particular part of Alberta. And that, you know, Mr. Speaker, could happen. It actually could happen, and we shouldn't assume that it's just a fantasy of the hon. member or of myself.

Mr. Anderson: I just wanted to know more about this. I have this mental picture in my mind about you in university, and I was just wondering if you could tell us a little bit about those days and if you ever had a chance in those days to go out and enjoy the nature that you're now here fighting to protect. What did you enjoy doing in nature during those times, during your university days?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I will say that in those days, Mr. Speaker – and I appreciate his interest in those days – I very much enjoyed nature when I was a young man. I continue to do so, and I think that we should do everything possible to protect nature in our province. I think that's our obligation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. My question is relative to the member who made reference to being in university. There was reference made to the minister of finance and him being a professor and teaching you at that time. I'm not sure if that's true or not, but I have to ask you. I know that the minister of finance had a ponytail. Did you have a ponytail when it came to enjoying the actual nature and protecting the very thing that our children and grandchildren enjoy?

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'll try and turn it into something, you know, remotely resembling the topic at hand, Mr. Speaker. No, I didn't have a ponytail, and I have never been an adherent of the Calgary school, I hate to inform the hon. member.

I'm sorry. I'm having trouble making this relevant, Mr. Speaker, so I'll just sit down.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the hoist amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do say that's a tough act to follow after listening intently.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be really brief here. I want to stand up in regard to the amendment that has been brought before us in regard to hoisting the bill. I have to say that I support that. I have been honoured to be a member of this House for a great period of time.

Mr. Boutilier: Since 1993.

Mrs. Forsyth: Since 1993. Nothing like aging you.

I happen to be the member that carries the name of Calgary-Fish Creek, which I'm incredibly proud of, a provincial park in an urban setting. I can tell you that nothing – nothing – sets the constituents off more than a subject about: don't touch our park in Calgary-Fish Creek. Then it carries on to other parks in this wonderful, wonderful province.

People have, as my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore said, inundated us with e-mails. I, like him, have probably received well over 300 e-mails. I also have had the opportunity to get people to respond on Twitter and Facebook. And they have responded on Facebook. They're also responding on my web page, which means they have a bit of work to do because to respond to my web page, they have to fill out a contact sheet so that we know exactly where they're coming from, and we have received tons of e-mails on my web page also.

I think what bothers me most about Bill 29 and what people are telling us is the lack of consultation. In fact, it's been quite shocking to people that prior they felt that there was consultation done. It's the ministerial power that has all of a sudden been granted to a minister to be able to make all of these changes and then just come up with this: well, trust me. Well, I can tell you as a former member of that government for many years and crossing over to the Wildrose in January that “trust me” doesn’t work. It just doesn’t work.

We can see, again, what’s happened today in regard to when the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark took on the “trust me” and spoke out on behalf of emergency and was reassured by the Premier and the minister last week that as an emergency physician they were willing to listen to him. Now we see where we are today, where he has been booted out of cabinet.

You know, if the minister could show to us the evidence of what consultation was done, I would probably feel a little . . .

The Deputy Speaker: On the hoist amendment?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, and I’m going to be speaking on this bill again.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I need to get on the record that Calgary-Fish Creek does support the hoist amendment but quite frankly does not support Bill 29 as it’s written. We will be providing some amendments, and I’m sure that in working with the opposition members, we will be talking about more amendments. But as the bill is written, and as has been explained before, the bill is flawed. It is seriously flawed.

I can’t understand, when the government talks about open and accountable and they talk about the love of the land, why they would bring a piece of legislation that, in my mind, is so flawed. Actually, it’s to the point that it’s ridiculous, and they want people in this Assembly other than the government side to, first of all, support the piece of legislation. What’s more surprising to me than anything is that they want Albertans to buy into this piece of what I would consider crappy legislation.

On that, I will sit down, and I will listen to some of my colleagues and hear what they have to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. A question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The hon. members of this House have seen me stand up throughout the past week – and I would have stood up again today given the opportunity – tabling concerns over Bill 29 that I have received not only from Albertans but from throughout North America and across Europe over concerns about the loss of Alberta’s pristine wilderness and its governance. My questions to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: how important in terms of expressing concerns is the tabling process, and will members of the Wildrose Party be tabling concerns that individuals have sent to them to express their abhorrence of the moving from legislation into regulation that Bill 29 represents?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I would suggest, Member, that probably a lot of the tablings that you’ve already done we’re in receipt of because I know that on some of the ones that I’ve got here, you’ve been CCed. So I would gather that probably a lot of the e-mails and letters and phone calls that you have already tabled we are in receipt of. I can certainly see that you’ve been CCed on a lot of the ones that we have. Will we be tabling the e-mails or the letters or the phone calls we received? You know, I don’t want to be critical, but I think there are other things that we could better spend our time on than the tabling, but we will continue to speak out on behalf of the e-mails, the phone calls, and the letters that we have received.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish

Creek: do you think it’s important that people’s voices, specifically attributed voices, be heard in this Assembly? Are you worried that that ability to have individuals’ concerns expressed will be lost with Bill 29 moving from legislation to regulation?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I understand where this hon. member is going, and I appreciate what he’s trying to do. As I explained, I’ve been a member of this Assembly for many, many years.

I have no problem tabling anything if the person who’s writing me or phoning me says: I want you to specifically table something. I will be tabling something in this Legislature on Wednesday at the request of the people that I have met with that wanted me to specifically table something. I, quite frankly, as a member of the opposition and, I’m sure, this member of an opposition have not got the time, with the budget that we have been given by the members of this Legislature and by Members’ Services, for the staff to take the time to phone all of the individuals that have written me and e-mailed me to ask for their permission to table. We have staff right now, our two little researchers, working hours and hours and hours trying to provide us with at least briefing notes and maybe some half-speeches.

Again, I appreciate where he’s going. I have no problem tabling on behalf of people that have asked me to table, but for the people that have e-mailed me or written, I’m not tabling without their permission.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to get on the record in support of this hoist motion and to acknowledge that this bill is very important to Albertans. The fact that we’ve had four people sitting in the gallery all evening speaks to that the commitment to public lands is universal in Alberta, and it’s nice to see the public taking a very strong position both in writing to us and in actually showing up and listening to what I hope is an informed debate.

I just want to say a couple of things. Trust, again, is the big issue in Alberta, and this government does not have the trust of the people. This particular bill could have slipped through under a Lougheed Progressive Conservative government. They would have seen the intent. They would have seen the commitment of these men and women to the long-term well-being of public lands. Without a land-use framework yet in place, without a clear commitment to water and the vital role that water has in this province, and without a clear commitment to species protection and habitat preservation, it’s clear that this government has a long way to go to rebuild the trust of Albertans and where they’re trying to go with Bill 29. There’s no way that we would be credible if we allowed this bill to go forward, and I hope the other side, the government, is realizing this from both their own e-mails and from what we’re trying to tell them in this debate.

I won’t drag it out. There’s a clear need to rethink this bill. In the interests of Albertans and in your own political interests for the future, this bill has to be hoisted. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My question is to the hon. Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Do you think the former minister of sustainable resources was heading in the right direction when he put water first in terms of six regions in this province and the overarching legislation began with water and moved forward from that position?

9:20

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. I gave the minister at the time our qualified support for this important new venture into land-use planning. What a concept: plan for the priority issues across the province; think about resource development, competing interests; focus on water as the primary generator of all human activity. I still honour the minister for setting the standard in the country for that. I hope he will have some influence in moving this forward because it does seem to have stalled, and there is a real need to move that land-use framework forward in the interests of all Albertans. Water is the fundamental question around which the planning has been established, and we need to see that go forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the representative from Calgary-Mountain View: do you believe that the land-use framework should have come first as an overarching piece of legislation, before Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, or Bill 50 with transmission lines was brought forward? Has the government sort of piecemealed a series of circumstances rather than dealing with the entire land-use framework?

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question. In fact, it has repeatedly been an issue in this Legislature that we're concerned about the delays in creating a framework for development in this province, setting the priorities. There is such a race now for development in this province to try to get ahead of the land-use framework, to try to subvert any regulations or priority designations that the land-use framework would be putting into place. Indeed, the issues around jurisdiction and park identification and levels of protection are part and parcel of what the land-use framework was designed to put in place. So, indeed, we were hoping that this would move forward and we'd have the public debate, that we'd have the land-use framework in place and we could make sensible long-term decisions based on a very progressive-thinking land-use framework.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When I spoke to the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, and Recreation during constituency week, her reason for pushing Bill 29 through with such speed was that she couldn't afford to wait for the land-use framework to be developed. Do you see anything in Bill 29 that would legitimize this rush to have it passed?

Dr. Swann: An excellent question. I don't see the pressure to get Bill 29 through. I think there are clear guidelines around the different levels of land use, park and protected area use, at the present time. The only reason I can think that might require such urgency would be another agenda, and we've already heard tonight a lot of different theories about what that agenda might be. But it doesn't appear that the priority is long-term habitat protection, species protection, and the protection into perpetuity of our most pristine and important lands and parks in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

All right. The chair shall now call on the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the hoist amendment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand tonight in this House and speak to Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. Alberta's bread and butter are its natural environment. As a former minister of the Crown for the Klein government I can say that nothing is more important to the people of Alberta, having been the first province in all of Canada under the leadership of Peter Lougheed to recognize the value that Albertans have for the environment, something, I might say, that another statesman in our province, former leader Preston Manning, clearly has recognized and understands, the importance of our environment.

My riding of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: it remains an honour and a privilege to serve the good people of that area, who contribute so much to this province, and all we ask for is a bill that simply makes sense. I might say that this bill in its present form clearly does not capture that spirit dating back to the early 1970s. In fact, if anything, we are losing something.

My riding of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, as I mentioned earlier, has the largest national park, Wood Buffalo. Not only that, I'm proud to say as the former mayor that chose to name our regional municipality after that national park, Wood Buffalo, that while not under provincial jurisdiction, it is important and a reason people move to what I believe to be an important riding in Canada, the economic engine of Canada but also with that important balance of sustaining our environment, recognizing the importance of the environment, recognizing the importance and our commitment we must have to our children because each and every one of us as family members often takes our children to parks. In fact, with a three-year-old son and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere with four boys aged one, three, four, and six, plus or minus a half-year or so in there, I would say that we tend to spend a lot of time at parks. Parks are very important. Prior to becoming a father, I never recognized how parks play an important role for families, and families are so important to this province. I think all members of this Assembly can agree with the fundamental premise that for the family the ability of sustaining our parks into the future is so important.

What is most important is that you can witness the beauty in the Peace- Athabasca delta, one of the largest freshwater deltas in the world. I'm proud to call both the northeast and northwest parts of Alberta in my constituency, which spans over 69,000 square kilometres. I want you to know that the park is brimming with wildlife. You can see bison, moose, black bears, wolves, and even ducks. This park is also home to endangered species like the whooping crane. Back in 1983 – if I could go back for a moment to that time – the park was declared a UNESCO world heritage site for its biodiversity. Back in 2007 it came to light that the park is home to the world's largest beaver dam. What's more Canadian than that, I have to ask you? The beaver, of course, is on the back of our nickel, and it clearly is an important, rich heritage for all of us. Right here in our own province of Alberta we recognize the important value.

Now, I want you to know that I see no irony that the economic engine of Canada, the oil sands, is also home to Canada's largest national park. The people of Fort McMurray clearly value their outdoors. The Clearwater and Athabasca rivers run through my constituency in the lower Athabasca, and it's important to say that people from all over Canada come to kayak and come to canoe these great waters. I've lived in Fort McMurray for well over 30 years, and I will say that my three-year-old son, who calls Fort McMurray his home, enjoys the outdoors so much. We visit parks very often in our city, that we refer to as Fort McMurray/Wood Buffalo, and the entire region. Now, maybe we're not playing as much outside today based on the weather.

Having said that, I'm deeply concerned about the direction this government is going with our provincial parks, if this minister is to be believed, and traditionally we tend to give people the benefit of the doubt. We often say: fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. Now, this is just simply, as has been quoted, a bit of housekeeping legislation. Nothing to see here, Albertans. Nothing to worry about. We're just dusting the shelves with this housekeeping legislation, cleaning up a bit. But I can tell you that I don't believe that this is housekeeping. This is a major renovation. In fact, it's not just a renovation; it actually, I believe, could be more of a deconstruction of something that we have enjoyed for so long. The point of this bill is to bring it in line with poor legislation known as the land-use framework, which, I believe and I'm proud to say, the Wildrose caucus will repeal when it becomes the governing party of this province. It will repeal it.

Another issue that is so important and very much a great concern for us is ministerial power. I can draw upon my time in government as a minister of the Crown for almost eight years in four different ministries. I tell you that this can be extremely difficult. It can be frustrating having to balance all of the stakeholders, including employees and citizens and special interests and even those people that are part of the PC Party. But you know what? That's the job of a minister of the Crown. It's your job to take the time to meet with groups and people and citizens from all corners of this great province of ours, that we call home, that will be impacted by ministerial decisions and new legislation on what is being offered.

If you don't want it, step down so someone else can do the job, but don't write yourself a new job description with superpowers. It's really similar to what was done with the Alberta superboard under the former minister of health, who, of course, came in and appointed his gang to be the superboard. That will be another bill, another superboard legislation that we will immediately repeal. We believe we have a better plan. We are not old and tired. In fact, after 40 years I believe that the new ideas that we bring to the table are something that simply have been lost.

This bill will give the minister – and this is my major concern – the power to change anything he or she wants in any provincial park without any consultation. Let me repeat that again. This bill will give unilateral decision and power to the minister, where he can do that without coming back into this Legislature. In fact, if this bill is successful, it will without question, I believe, create concern for my children and grandchildren and many people who love our parks, that we enjoy.

This is profound. If the minister wants to put a recreational trail through your land, the minister can do so without any accountability. If the government wants your land for parkland, they can just simply take it. The only process in place will be placing a piece of paper on a minister's desk. I have to ask you this. The way our parks should be managed: is this the way you would like them to be managed as Albertans? The message I have received back is an unequivocal no. Managed at the desk of some bureaucrat that will just slide a piece of paper in front of a minister: I do not for a moment accept that.

I believe that in any 21st-century democracy there needs to be a healthy tension between the minister's office and the bureaucracy. We do not want the inmates to be running the asylum, and I often hear from Albertans that that is the view of how this government of 40 years is running. The inmates are running the asylum. With some ministers, I'm proud to say, I have a comfort that they can provide that healthy tension and keep what I call bureaucrats in check and provide a safety net to ensure, but not all ministers across the way are like that. That's where the concern is being raised with this legislation. There are cabinet shuffles, cabinet ministers are kicked out, other ones are brought in, but clearly the bureaucracy will be around for a long time.

I fundamentally believe that there is not that healthy tension that should be in any modern-day bureaucracy in government right now, and I believe that ultimately there is no safety net. There is a total disconnect, not only a disconnect but a canyon leap, in terms of what is versus what used to be in a government that used to listen to Albertans.

Back in the early '70s you had a Premier named Peter Lougheed, who, in fact, would listen to Albertans. What we have seen evolve over the last 40 years is a government where the canyon has grown wider and the gap has gotten bigger. Now MLAs cannot even speak on behalf of their citizens for fear of being kicked out. We saw that in this very House on this day, November 22, 2010. This day is remembered in history for many reasons, the first being the assassination of an American President in 1963. Today we saw an assassination of an MLA in terms of him and his voice being assassinated by one person on that side, the leader of the government. I want to say that having in fact gone through what I've seen take place here a year and a half ago, it alarms me that in no way, shape, or form do you or will you remember who your bosses are. The bosses of this province, that we all represent in here, something that this party and that party and this independent and that party have not forgotten, are the people of Alberta. They are our bosses.

I looked with interest at the review this afternoon, when the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, in fact, asked questions this afternoon to the chief executive officer of Executive Council, and he asked the Premier specifically on the shamefulness of what took place today. Well, what would ever give us confidence that something would ever change when we see an MLA trying to do his job and ultimately being booted out of his caucus? That's shameful. It's interesting today that the Premier chose to say that it was a caucus decision. It's unanimous as well according to the whip, the Member for West Yellowhead. He said that it was unanimous. I do not believe that Albertans believe that. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, on the hoist amendment.

Mr. Boutillier: On the bill that I'm speaking to, the importance of trust, the importance of our parks, the importance of representing your constituents: I am, Mr. Speaker, talking about the importance of my constituents.

Back in the early '70s Peter Lougheed was still connected to the people of Alberta. He consulted with them. He asked them. He wasn't threatened by new ideas. He actually embraced new ideas. He welcomed people that challenged him as a leader because he thought that if everyone was thinking the same, then nobody was thinking. Well, over here today, when the whip, West Yellowhead, said that it was unanimous, I guess that if everyone is thinking the same, then nobody is thinking. That's the concern with Bill 29.

It's clear to me that what took place here today speaks to the fact that Albertans no longer have a voice when it comes to providing input, and we have a Premier that does not want to listen to Albertans when it comes to the issue of parks. I think this bill is something that needs to go back to the people of Alberta, and the people of Alberta are our bosses, not someone with a fancy title on Executive Council.

I will say that I believe that governments, hopefully, will never make decisions that are willy-nilly. Lately we've seen a whole lot of willy-nilly over on that side from the front benches. That's unfortunate because when I really look at what is taking place today in this bill that's being proposed, I find it interesting that Sustainable Resource Development mused in public about 32 per cent. You ask: how much? Thirty-two per cent of the lower Athabasca region in my constituency will be moved into a conservation zone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for listening to my important points.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments, questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Having been in this House for six years, I recall the time when the honourable representative, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, was actually a Minister of Environment within the Klein government, which he referenced. Now, frequently when that minister rose to answer questions, he would talk about such things as water for life, which was a concept of his predecessor, Lorne Taylor. He always talked about water first. His favourite expression, almost a mantra which he repeated, was blue gold.

Now, if we look at the eastern slopes, the area from which we draw most of our water, we can look at Banff and then move south through to Waterton. Waterton used to include approximately 16,000 square kilometres of what we're proposing to return to park status, and that's the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp. Within those eastern slopes, what the Nature Conservancy refers to as the last five miles, is the greatest amount of water that we have left in this province. I'm just wondering. Not only is that an important area for sources of water, but it's an absolutely essential animal corridor for the Yellowstone to Yukon, that I referred to earlier. How important, hon. representative of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, is the protection of the eastern slopes through parks legislation, in your opinion?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brings up such an important point. It really is the mantra that we make reference to as the mother ship and as a former Minister of Environment.

The comment about the Yellowstone to Yukon and wildlife and the protection of our wildlife is so important. He has rightfully indicated that this particular bill that we see today, with the eastern slopes – and I had the honour, like him and many members in this House, to visit the eastern slopes – is something of great concern.

Even more so is the issue of blue gold, the water that we speak of, that the hon. member had also rightfully mentioned. I often had used the example, coming from the oil sands capital of the world, that if you were in a desert and you had a barrel of water or a barrel of oil, which would you prefer? I think the answer to that is quite understandable and what all Albertans would prefer, and that is the value of our water.

I also might say that I had the honour of serving under a former Minister of Environment, the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House. As a young MLA that, in fact, left as mayor to become an MLA back in 1997, almost going on 14 years ago, I had the extreme privilege of serving under him in the Rocky Mountain area and as an SPC chair, as we were called back then. I might say that having worked with so many people, there is no one who knows more about the environment than the hon. member from Rocky. I want to recognize him for that and his excellent work. I can say that we agreed on many issues, and I learned a lot. Clearly, I was dripping behind the ears back then, in 1997, as a former mayor, but I can say that this bill, obviously, I would assume, is something that raises the eyebrows of many people on that side because we expect more from government.

Also, to be a minister, you know, you don't have to be smart. You just have to be good friends with the chief of staff. That's all you have to do. Clearly, you know, times have changed, and times have changed so much that today there are some good ministers and there are not-so-good ministers. I'll let the people of Alberta determine who they are, but as we go forward, I can humbly say that this issue of parks is so important to all Albertans . . . [Mr. Boutilier's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise once again on this bill and along with all of the other speakers offer my support for the amendment to Bill 29 put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think it's critically important that members in this House give serious consideration to voting in favour of this amendment, and the reason for that is that this bill is really a bad one. It's just not good for Alberta. It is not good for Alberta's future, and it is also quite profoundly disrespectful in many ways of Alberta's past.

I was just looking on the website for Alberta Parks. They do such a grand job of touting the wonderful history of this government and each of the years in which the various and sundry wilderness areas were established. I'm talking in particular about the establishment of the Ghost River wilderness area, the Siffleur wilderness area, and the White Goat wilderness area. These were all areas that were established and protected through legislation, not through regulation but through legislation. They're all areas that were established, actually, even before the current government was in government. They were established back in the 1960s.

Yet – yet – this government proposes to remove the legislative protection of these wilderness areas through the introduction of this parks act. This represents a profound – a profound – step backwards in terms of our protection and our respect for the need to maintain the natural and ecological integrity of these important areas. They are a part of our history, and they're a part of the previous generation's history and the generation's history before that. My hope is that they would be a part of future generations' history. Instead what we've done is that we are proposing through this piece of legislation to give unfettered authority to whatever minister of the day to make whatever changes he or she would like to make to parklands throughout the province, including these wilderness areas.

You know, the government often accuses opposition members of being overly paranoid and overly convinced of a conspiracy where really none exists, that really, in fact, everything is just in the best interests of Albertans, and why are we so darn negative? But then if that were the case, my question is: why would the government not grandfather all of these areas in this new legislation? Why would this new legislation not start by saying that under no circumstances are the current wilderness areas or the current ecological reserves to be touched or changed in any way, shape, or form? Why don't they do that? That would go so far in terms of allaying the fears of the so, so, so many Albertans who have contacted members of this Assembly to lay out their concerns about and their objection to this bill. Yet they didn't do that.

It seems to me that in failing to do that, you know, sometimes silence speaks louder than words. It is not unreasonable based on the past history of this government's conduct for concerned Albertans, Albertans who care about the integrity of our ecological and wilderness lands, to think that the government intends, in fact, to change the way in which they manage either the disposition of resources within these protected areas or the growth and development of tourism and construction and development in relation to these areas.

And all the minister is able to offer to us is: "Well, I've consulted lots of times before, and it's very possible that I'll consult again. You know, I like consulting, so I don't understand why people here are concerned." This is the kind of answer we get, which is really somewhat insulting to members of this Assembly because we know, for instance, that while the government has consulted on their Alberta parks policy, there was absolutely no consultation about this change, about what we see in this act. There was no consultation on that, Mr. Speaker. So let it be very clear that the minister is really and truly not telling the whole story to Albertans or to members of this Legislature when she suggests that there has been a lot of consultation on this act.

They have consulted on pieces of the policy, but they never consulted with Albertans about eliminating legislatively protected wilderness areas, wilderness areas that have existed since the '60s and the '50s, and replacing them with an amorphous parks zone, which may or may not allow certain types of development depending on what side of the bed the minister wakes up on on any given morning and who most recently took her out for dinner, bought her Lady Gaga tickets, or took her fishing.

The fact of the matter is that Albertans have every, every right to be concerned about this. It is a tremendous slap in the face of the history of this province when you look at how we have in the past made good progress in terms of our approach to parks management and to parks establishment and to ecological reserves and all of that kind of thing. Instead, what we're doing is taking a gargantuan step backwards, and all we're told by this government is: cross your fingers, close your eyes, and trust us. That is ridiculously insulting to the Albertans who care so deeply about this issue.

You know, I found this very interesting. I was looking on the parks website, and I'd like to just sort of read from what still exists on the website. Apparently it has not yet been re-edited to provide for the new regime that the government wants to put forward. They say:

Throughout its formative years, the main focus of Alberta's parks and protected areas network was recreation. [However], in recent years, public interest has focused on preserving the province's natural heritage as a legacy for future generations.

So the people who work for parks themselves understand that that is the focus, understand that that is the interest that attracts the majority of attention of concerned Albertans and that that is the direction that Albertans want to go in.

Yet, notwithstanding that, we seem to be moving back, taking a step back 40 years, where now what we need to be doing is balancing against recreational needs and tourism needs and prosperity needs. I almost wonder: did we sort of accidentally step into a time machine and wake up on the set of Leave It to Beaver or something? You know, I don't understand why it is that the government wants to take us so far back when we had previously made progress and have since then.

Also, in reading on this website, I read about sort of the history behind the special places and the work that was done there. Again, the website does a lovely job of talking about the copious amounts of consultation that went into the designation of the 81 new and the 13 expanded preserved sites since the mid-90s. They talked about, you know, putting out a number of possible special place designations and advertising it widely and going into each community and inviting community members to come and talk about that and setting up a multistakeholder committee that then reviewed these special place designations. The multistakeholder committee consisted of representatives from environmental groups and preservation groups and recreational groups and industry groups, and they all talked amongst each other, and there was a tremendous amount of consultation.

Those special places, those 81 new spaces and those 13 expanded sites, can now be changed with a stroke of a pen, without any consultation, without any legislative requirement to consult. All they have to do is give 60 days' notice, and Bob's your uncle; off we go. It's done. Again, this represents an incredible departure from the culture and the institutional commitment towards community consultation and engagement on this issue that is so meaningful to so many Albertans. I'm once again extremely disappointed by that.

I did note, though, that I did find it very interesting that in looking at this little piece here about the special places and the new designations, I was in fact mistaken. I thought that we were on the verge of – and I guess we have now named a new riding after the former Premier, but I thought to myself: sheesh, whatever happened to former Premier Getty? I found that, indeed, no Tory Premier is left behind, much like the no child left behind program in the States, and that, in fact, we do have the Don Getty wilderness park. How could I have missed that? Thank goodness we have in fact managed to memorialize every prominent Tory without exception. Nonetheless, even there I don't know how much consultation went into the name, but at least there was consultation into the establishment of that area.

One of the things that, again, as I said before, is really concerning is that right now as things stand, exploration and the working of minerals is precluded in ecological reserves and wilderness areas and the Willmore wilderness park. Yet the only piece of land that remains unscathed through this legislation is Willmore wilderness park. The rest of it is subject to the new four-zone program that the minister is going to come up with behind some closed door some morning and without any further consultation or without any legislative requirement for further consultation. I'm very concerned about what this means for the balance between exploration and development in this province and preservation of our wildlands and ecological reserves.

We know that in Alberta there is a profound pressure for the government to side with industrial development at all costs and that that's essentially the choice they have made in every forum when given the opportunity. We also know that there is tremendous pressure for the government to succumb to residential and tourism development in areas that would otherwise be protected. This is not surprising. This is a province where there is industrial growth and then there is population growth.

So now, you see, the decisions become a bit harder. Now it becomes even more necessary than it was 40 years ago for the government to stand up to these pressures and say: "You know what? When we said we wanted to leave a lasting legacy for generations to come, when we said that 35, 40 years ago, we actually meant it. So you know what? We're still going to administer our parks and our ecological reserves and our wilderness areas on the basis of what we said so grandly 40 years ago." The hard decisions come as the pressure increases, but that doesn't mean that the hard decisions aren't just as important now as they were when they were first made. It's very disturbing to see that at the first possible opportunity the government is rushing to give itself permission to run away from the hard decisions and to capitulate to whatever interest group may or may not come to meet with them behind closed doors about the designation of lands and the use of lands across the province.

This is why this piece of legislation is so bad. We have decades and decades of work that has gone into preserving the integrity of our wilderness areas and our ecological reserves and our parks, and we are planning on doing – well, we don't know what we're planning on doing, but we know that because the minister is not making any assurances around protection in a legislative fashion, we have reason to be concerned.

You know, the minister says: well, we need to do this because we really need to streamline our parks management system. And I've got to say that I'm not talking to people who said: gosh, you know, we're so much in need of streamlining. I'm not talking to people within the stakeholder communities who said: if anything gets done this session, it's got to be this government moving forward with that parks streamlining.

Mr. Mason: Streamlining.

Ms Notley: Streamlining. There were no chants, people in the streets screaming: streamline, streamline, streamline. No. Strangely, there weren't.

In fact, the stakeholders in this area said that never once did the streamlining issue feature in any of their conversations with the minister. So I think the whole concept of streamlining is something that was actually cooked up somewhere deep in the Public Affairs Bureau to give the minister something to say when people challenged her for her decision to throw away 45 years of environmental protection in this province. I think the streamlining issue is nothing more than communications bafflegab that's being used to defend what is otherwise an exceptionally negative and destructive policy change that is pursued by this government.

The minister really has done very, very little to convince us that that which we see is worthy of continuation. [Ms Notley's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes of questions and answers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

10:00

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was a very accurate introduction of my constituency.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona if she believes that streamlining is part and parcel of eliminating the various barriers to development that exist in the legislation. In other words, streamlining is not simply unifying the acts and so on but is actually to streamline – that is to say, make easier – the process of allowing development in our parks and natural areas.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. That is where he's from. That was a very good question because, in fact, it really is about making things easier. It's about a continuation of a trend, which a number of Members of this Legislative Assembly have already identified, a trend which is being pursued quite aggressively by the members of this government towards taking everything off the legislative floor, taking it out of statute, and moving it behind closed doors to the backrooms of this government and ensuring that decisions can be made quickly and efficiently without that annoying little feature of democracy and engagement and responsiveness and all that kind of stuff.

Instead, you know, you can meet with your developer and promise him you'll get it all fixed and then write up your regulation and off you go to Executive Council and boom – again, as I say, Bob's your uncle – no need to respond to the concerns raised by the public, no need to have any form of accountability in the Legislature. All of that, of course, makes the goals that this government is pursuing much easier, and what we've seen over the last few years is that the goal of this government is to exploit the environment and ecological integrity in wilderness areas at any possible opportunity.

That's the kind of thing that, typically, Albertans don't support. We know from this government's own polling, which was discussed at their recent convention, that Albertans don't actually support this; Albertans actually do support the concept of protecting the environment. Albertans are actually even prepared to jeopardize current jobs let alone future jobs if it means protecting the integrity of the environment, not that they necessarily need to. They really strongly believe in the sanctity of our environmental surroundings, yet this government does not. They would rather not have to face those Albertans every time they undercut yet another environmental resource. This is about streamlining the process of ignoring the wishes of Albertans and meeting the needs of their friends in industry on an as-needed basis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two quick questions for the representative for Edmonton-Strathcona, my home-away-from-home MLA. Do you consider a 60-day notification of proposed park changes without a guarantee of acting on the consultation as sufficient public involvement? With regard to streamlining, do you consider this more ministerial fantasy as opposed to a real concern of Albertans? Do you think the hon. minister of tourism, like former Prime Minister Mackenzie King, is consulting spirits?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, let me just start with the first question raised by the Member for Calgary-Varsity around the whole issue of the 60 days' notice. I think the 60 days' notice is insulting. I think it's insulting to Albertans. The fact that they put nothing else in that legislation to talk about the mechanism of consultation, the obligations vis-à-vis what they hear back, the sort of responsiveness that ought to be incorporated into that, an opportunity for transparent hearings as incorporated to, you know, the 60-day notice: I think it's not good enough.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak to this hoist amendment brought by my colleague for Calgary-Varsity and to note how over the course of my last three years I have come to recognize that member's passion for the parks, his dedication to the parks, and his commitment to see them last for future generations. He speaks often of his passion for these places and his passion for bringing his family there. Although I do not get to the parks very much, I know from his passion how important they are to the Alberta people, and I would just like to note that here today on the record.

I have listened to the concerns brought up by many of the members here tonight, and I have listened intently to the debate. All of the members who have spoken so far have made good points, and they have given us much to think about tonight. In particular, I really appreciated the historical vignette given by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, which rivalled that of the Speaker. If we look at that, how he went back and researched that 38 years ago today some of this legislation was brought in that clearly marked what we were going to do and what areas of this province we were not prepared to compromise, not prepared to give in to whatever the pressures of the day were, not give in to the pressures of business or hunters or whatever you may have. We just weren't prepared in these areas to go any further. It was really wonderful, actually, to hear how that legislation came into being 38 years ago and how it was meant to last for all time.

While I was sitting here listening to a lot of the speeches, I couldn't help but be drawn back to the movie The Godfather, part 1. First, the godfather got shot, then Sonny got shot at the causeway, and Michael went back to the old country. But at the end of the thing when they're making up and five families had been at war for what had seemed like a long time, the godfather gets up and says: "How did we get here? What happened to get us here?"

I can imagine 40 years from now, when we look at what could possibly happen with this legislation, with ministerial consent to whatever the pressures of the day are, whether they be from an oil company, whether they be from an individual, whether they be from a recreation group – and I have no doubt that these pressures are severe and that they can be put on a government member or, in fact, a cabinet minister with great zeal – allowing allow that individual to have with the stroke of a pen the ability to change what 38 years ago we weren't prepared to do on what seems like a case-by-case basis, like, "Well, we'll just go into this pristine area once, and we'll get out the coal resources there because there's a lot there" or "We'll only go once over into the other side of the province because there might be some shale gas there, and there's a real big player; by golly, we need it," to make that on a case-by-case basis, saying, "Well, yeah, I guess they are a certain ways apart."

Then all of a sudden you have a recreation group, possibly four or five years later, when the clean-up and all that stuff really has gone on and no one is really thinking about it anymore, so: "Yeah, maybe this is another good idea. We can go into this area. Nothing's really gone wrong, and no one is really talking about those two things anymore. Maybe this is another thing that we can do here in these once-pristine areas." I think we can see that possibly happening with that bill. I think we can see it happening with the regulation moving with the stroke of a pen. Where it was once stated in legislation that we will not do this, we will now make these decisions behind closed doors. I can see the pressure mounting on the minister to maybe not always do what could be in the best interests of our future generations on that.

Just going back to the vignette of what was happening 38 years ago in this province to have seen us enact this legislation, that's why I tried to put myself back 32 years ago, to 1972. I was turning four that year. I was born in 1969 in the Holy Cross hospital, so putting myself back in that time is difficult, but I do know some of that time period. We had a Lougheed government that had taken over from a Social Credit government, that many view today as essentially a Liberal government under a different name. I'm not going to debate that. Whatever it was, it was seen as a slightly different government than what had gone on in the past. Possibly some of these members back then, maybe Senator Ghitter and people like that who sat in that caucus, looked around at what was happening.

Well, we had had the oil explosion, of course, in the '30s, the '40s, and the '50s. Oil and gas was becoming a very busy commodity and very important to our bottom line, and they were obviously having pressures. Maybe they were seeing some abandoned wells around. Maybe they were seeing some spills that were not getting cleaned up. Maybe they were just concerned that we seemed to be going in this direction. There's got to be a place for both business and our animals and our wilderness. So they said: "Hey. We've got this oil and gas, and, by golly, it's great to have it, but we want to have some of this for the future, and there are certain things that we're not willing to compromise. There are certain things we will not do."

That is where, I believe, they came up with some of this legislation that was passed into place 38 years ago, that we're going to seemingly wipe out inside of three or four days on the legislative charts here without any public consultation, without any need to let people know about the significant change in legislation that is about to occur in how our rules and regulations happen. That's what I think may have been going on in the mind of those individuals, those men and women who were making that legislation. There were certain things they were not prepared to compromise.

Now, let's advance 40 years in this province. You know, we haven't done a great job of, I guess, changing the oars from an oil and gas economy. Maybe the people have gotten more used to oil sands and tailings ponds and us making our living off the petroleum industry. Fourteen per cent of our population directly get their income from it. Probably up to 50 per cent of our population relies on a healthy oil and gas industry to make a living. That's a heavy responsibility on one issue. Nevertheless, I think there are certain things that we shouldn't compromise on, that we shouldn't go forward and change, legislation like this and how we must protect our pristine areas.

Let's also talk about 1972. You know how many people this province had in 1972? One point seven million people – 1.7 million people. Now, in 2010, we have approximately double that, 3.5 million people. So I think about that.

An Hon. Member: It's 3.7 million.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, hon. minister. We're at 3.7 million people; double and a bit is where we are now.

I think about that logically for a second. Would those extra people have more challenges? Is Alberta faced with greater impacts on its environment or lesser? Clearly, the answer to me is greater. You know, some people might even say that here in Alberta, in fact the rest of the world, we're at almost a tipping point, a tipping point of how much we're going to change the land for other uses to live the extraordinary lifestyles that we do. Sir, I do not want to go back to live in a tent. I realize that there have to be limits to that argument as well. Nevertheless, I look at this as saying that we could be at a tipping point here. We're at 3.7 million people. Obviously, more challenges exist with us living friendly with our land, with us living in harmony with nature if the argument could be made that we are at all.

I look at this as maybe being a time when legislation would need to be strengthened in terms of environmental protection, what we as people and as members of this honourable House are not prepared to do. It would look to me like this is a natural time in our history, when we have the eyes of the world looking at us, when maybe we're not getting a fair deal on the oil sands in that from extraction to wheels it's really not that different from other extraction methods. Really, at the end of the day it's not that different. So why wouldn't we as a community, as legislators say: "Let's give some protection to that industry. Let's remain conservative in our approach to what we're going to do in terms of our pristine, natural areas."

I think it may be a wiser course of action that we do that in this case, that we can look people in the eye and say: "Hey. Listen here, rest of the world. We have 47,000 hectares of land that we say we will not do a thing to. We will allow our wildlife and our water and all that stuff to go uninhibited by industry." There's something to be said for that. Looking at the rest of the world: how much land have you designated that will not be touched? I think having us err on the side of caution would not be the worst thing.

So I do find this bill highly, highly concerning. I believe it goes in the wrong direction of where we as a province should be going, where the will of the people actually is on environmental protection in, especially, our pristine wilderness areas that are going to be changed in this bill. For some of the reasons I stated before, I'm highly concerned by the executive power placed in the minister's hands. I believe those lobbyists, the people who come into the minister's office, often with a good idea, often not wanting to do any harm, often saying that the value is there, that the citizens will get their pound of flesh, and that they will clean things up, are too easy to buy into for legislators. I know as a human being that if I was the minister, with pressures put on me like that, I would rather have legislation that said, "Sorry; I can't do this," not one that says, "Well, maybe I can do it." Those pressures can mount, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I bring those up as some of the things that possibly people in 1972 were thinking about, protection for future generations. I believe those arguments are still as valid today, if not more so, as they were in 1972, when those members enacted the legislation, that these are simply areas that we will not go past, not for X, Y, or Z; we simply will not do that.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this bill. I hope the government members will listen to what some of the people have said here.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. One of the trial balloons the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation launched this summer was the idea of privately run for-profit recreational trailer parks on public land being granted a 99-year lease. Are you concerned about the loss of public land, public participation, input, and governance with the regulations of Bill 29?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I appreciate the question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity because it highlights some of my concerns with this bill, the inordinate amount of power that we are placing in one ministry to change things with the stroke of a pen. I was born at night, sir, but not last night, and I believe there is tremendous pressure put on ministers of the Crown when they have tremendous power and the ability to do things without public consultation, without rules and regulations, without the need to consult with the people. Those concerns have been highlighted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's question. We have a great deal now that can be done to public lands, lands that were considered pristine, lands that former members of this House deemed as being Alberta treasures, lands that we would not do anything to under any circumstances regardless of whether it made sense economically, okay? I believe the hon. member highlights that by his question, and I thank him for it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given the example of the government so willing to turn over Crown land to a potato farmer who was going to take out I believe it was 66,000 acres of what had been traditional grazing land, do you have any hope or faith in what could happen to our limited 4 per cent of provincial parkland given the examples we've seen with Crown leases and a willingness to turn supposedly protected grazing land into unprotected, open-for-profit developments?

Mr. Hehr: You highlight, again, a very important point. We had some property in southern Alberta which was pristine grassland or the remainders of a pristine area that was going to put up for sale for a potato farm, essentially potato chips. I think it highlights the fact that we may be at a tipping point on these things. How much do we need? How many potato chips do we need and all that stuff? How many decisions can be made behind closed doors by ministries, whether it's the minister of SRD or whether it's the minister of parks and recreation like we have in this bill?

Regardless of whether I think this minister is going to say no or not to development issues that come up is really immaterial, sir. What has changed, Mr. Speaker, is that now I don't only need to have confidence in this minister; I need confidence in the next 40 – okay? – because this has not been protected for the next 40 or maybe less than that. Maybe I'm exaggerating slightly for the benefit of the members in this honourable House. Maybe the next two or three have a different view or maybe don't value the environment as much as this parks and recreation minister may.

So it's immaterial whether I trust her judgment or trust the next minister's judgment. The thing is that we're not going to be able to discuss it in this House when we go on a case-by-case basis to possibly cherry-pick okay projects – a drilling rig here, a sour gas well over there, an ATV track over here – and we gerrymander decisions of what we think may be okay on a case-by-case basis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: On the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and rise and speak to this bill and speak against this bill. I think that, absolutely, beyond any shadow of a doubt the current minister of tourism and parks is very, very – she loves our parks for sure. She's very protective of them, and I sure don't see her as someone who is going to undermine the protection of our parks in any way, shape, or form herself. That's not the problem we have. I think pretty much a unanimous criticism of the opposition on this issue is that she's not going to be the minister forever.

You know, things change, obviously. There could be big changes coming. Who knows what happens, whether it's a new minister, a new government, whatever it is? The fact is that there is going to be a different minister and a different cabinet and a different government going forward from time to time, from year to year. So we've got to make sure that we don't give too much discretion to a certain group of people, either a Premier or a minister or a cabinet or even a caucus, give them authority to make unilateral decisions about something as precious and as important to Albertans as our parks.

Obviously, we have beautiful national parks in Alberta – I mean, I'm slightly biased, as we all are here – I would say probably the most beautiful and majestic parks in the world, national parks with Banff and Jasper. I spend much of the summer in there with my boys and Anita, and they are just an awesome, awesome place to spend time in and bond and enjoy nature and everything that it has to offer. The fact that they're in our own backyard is just – I mean, we really are spoiled to have such a treasure, such a jewel right in our own backyard. People spend their whole lives, some of them, planning a trip just to come to those parks for a week or two in their entire lifetimes, and here we get to see them every day. Well, from my house you can literally see our parks every day from a distance, and spending time there: it's only 45 minutes away. There is no doubt that those are important.

Now, of course we're not talking about our national parks with respect to this bill. We're talking about our provincial parks and our recreational areas and so forth. Those areas are amazing, too. I think of Peter Lougheed provincial park, the amazing area that is, and K Country, all the time I have had the opportunity to spend there. In fact, there is a little book I bought when I was really young. It had kind of a list of 200 really awesome hikes in the Canadian Rockies. I'm pleased to say that I'm over halfway through the list, and the goal is to – I'm going to have to redo it because I'm going to have to go through it with my kids now. Most of those hikes in that particular book are actually not from our national parks but our provincial parks and recreational areas.

There are many more parks, obviously, provincial parks that we have. There is no reason to list them all. These really are jewels. I think everyone in this Assembly believes that. I don't think that anyone would say that they don't value our parks. Certainly, they wouldn't say that if they had any desire whatsoever to get elected again because I think Albertans overwhelmingly support our parks and recreational areas, both national and provincial, and they expect their politicians and their representatives to be protective of those things. It shouldn't be any surprise that we're having such a long debate on this subject because it means a lot to the people that we represent and a lot to Albertans.

Again, as much as we know, we would hope, that the people in this Assembly respect our provincial parks and recreational areas, I think it's unwise to put into the minister's hand or the government's hand the unilateral authority to change designations, to change boundaries, to change whatever they'd like with regard to recreational areas. Now, of course, this is probably one of those outcomes where it's kind of in line with the land-use framework. Under the land-use framework again we see an issue where we have given far too much power into the hands of the minister and, by extension, the bureaucracy. That's just a very unwise thing.

I think it's absolutely the wrong thing to do, to give such unilateral power to the minister and therefore the bureaucracy, because we really do risk people coming in for whatever reason, whether it be for economic reasons or political reasons, and all of a sudden one day, you know, a little chunk is taken out of a park: oh, it's just 50 square kilometers or 20 square kilometers or whatever; it's not that much. They shave a little part off here. No one will notice. Pretty soon someone else does it, and someone else does it. "Oh, well, we've got a patchwork here, so we'll just change the zoning or change the designation on the whole kit and caboodle. There we go." We've lost a park. We've lost a portion of a park.

I just think that that's too much power to give the executive branch of government, cabinet. I think that if you're going to mess with our parks, if you're going to try to mess with our parks – obviously, the government is the government, and they can pass legislation tomorrow, I guess, if they wanted to, to get rid of all of our provincial parks, but they would at least have to come here and make that proposal. It would have to be public, and we could debate it in the Legislature, and of course it would come under incredible opposition. But if you just allow somebody the authority to in the middle of the night change a border or change a designation or what have you, I just don't think it's a very wise thing to do to give the executive branch of the government that much power. They should have to come to the legislative branch, the people's representatives, and have the people's representatives debate and make a decision.

You know, it goes to a larger pattern with this government, frankly. It's almost like the House – and I know this; I spent two years in that caucus – is this necessary evil that they've got to go through to get their legislation through. They have to go through all the little steps: "Yeah, yeah, we'll deal with that and this, and we'll just go through it. Yeah, we've got to deal with it." They don't like that. They don't like the fact that they have to go through the House, so as much as possible – you see it with their legislation – they're always enshrining more and more power with the executive branch of government, in the Premier's office, in the office of the minister. With every piece of legislation – the land-use framework, Bill 19, the land assembly act, Bill 36, Bill 50, and, of course, Bill 29 – whatever it is, there's this constant push to make things easier for the government, to streamline the process, they always say, to make it so that it's less cumbersome. They put all these powers in the executive office.

I understand for little things. You know, maybe there's a place for that, for the odd things. Obviously, we don't want to be in here 365 days a year passing legislation, but we're not even close to that right now. We're right now in one of the shortest sessions in recent history in this Legislature, the shortest amount of time sitting in the Legislature over this past year. So we're not at that point. I think that maybe one of the reasons it is the shortest is because they are enshrining so much power in the executive branch. You can just get an order of Executive Council, and it's done. That's not democracy.

You know, we've got to be accountable for the decisions that we make, and the government needs to be accountable for the decisions that they make, and part of that process is coming through this House. Again, if it was a little thing, if it was just – well, I guess there are a whole bunch of little things that can be done with orders of Executive Council. But on something as important as parks I think it's absolutely critical that the government has to come back before this House and put it to a vote of the people's representatives. I think that Albertans expect this.

I mean, we really have received a lot of mail on this issue. People are nervous and, I think, rightfully so. If you think about, you know, the Minister of SRD musing about the land-use framework up in the north there, the little group that's meeting there to come up with the regional plan has come up with a plan. There are a lot of conflicts up there, a lot of conflicts with existing licences and other things that are already in place there. Well, under the land-use framework the minister is going to have the power to sort all that out.

Some of his comments the other day in musing about, you know, how those leases will be handled and so forth make me uneasy, probably because that minister was also one of the individuals in charge of implementing the disastrous new royalty framework. We saw one of the worst policies in this province's history incorporated by that minister, so I'm a little bit uneasy when he starts talking about changing land-use designations and superimposing a regional plan over existing property rights. I think we know from experience that he's not really good at assessing the unintended consequences.

Again, we have a situation here where there are going to be quite possibly unintended consequences from this bill, and one of them is that it gives the minister too much power. I could just see, you know, where you have in future a kind of a minister who isn't on top of the file as well as he or she should be and some bureaucrat coming in and saying: "Okay. We need to make this and this change. It's important, it's easy, and it's not worth going through the Leg. process. That will be too complicated." I could just see someone signing off on that without much thought, and the reason is because I saw that. I think we've all seen it.

If you have a minister who doesn't really know what they're doing and is not on top of their file, it's amazing how the bureaucracy can drive the government and can essentially run the government in that portfolio. That's why we have a check and balance called the Legislative Assembly. It is there to make sure that all legislation passed is in line with what the people's wishes are for their province.

I hope that this government can show some modicum of humility and realize that maybe they've overstepped their bounds here and that maybe it would be wise that we don't give this power to the minister to impose and to have the ability to change our parks and the boundaries and their designations and everything else related to that, that they can see the value in coming back to this House and trusting the people's representatives. I think that that would be a much wiser course of action for this government to undertake.

I will be supporting the amendment, and if that amendment doesn't pass, then I will not be supporting this bill as written. It's just another example of a trust-us law, as I said, that loads up ministerial powers.

The other issue I have with it is that, you know, there's not really evidence of what the consultation process has been, and I think we see that with our e-mail boxes filling up on this issue. There just wasn't a very large consultation process done. In fact, when our researcher was getting briefed on this bill, it was almost like the deputy minister got defensive in talking about that.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Prior to politics you practised law. University of Calgary law professor Fluker has indicated both in letters and on his blog how poorly thought-out this legislation is. If Bill 29 is passed in its present form, do you anticipate legal challenges to these regulations, and if you feel comfortable, what areas of this bill might not stand up to legal scrutiny?

Mr. Anderson: It's a good question, hon. member. It kind of goes back to what we were talking about with the Minister of SRD's comments a couple of weeks ago on the north Athabasca plan – I can't remember what it's called – the regional plan up there, on having to superimpose that plan over existing property rights, licences, leases, et cetera, that are already in place. We all know what kind of legal liability could occur if that's not handled just right. The same thing applies here. If you give a minister the opportunity to unilaterally change the designation in certain areas, that affects people's rights. Also, there are all kinds of environmental issues there: water issues, land issues, air issues if it's some kind of industrial development. There are all kinds of things that could result in huge legal penalties and legal proceedings. Absolutely, the danger is definitely there for that. That's what happens when you don't have proper consultation.

We saw this with the royalty framework, again, the made-in-Alberta NEP. It was one of the worst policy disasters in the history of this province economically. The reason it was so brutal and harmed so many people and harmed our economy so deeply was because of the lack of consultation that occurred prior to it. Industry was being ignored. You had our small-business owners and entrepreneurs being ignored. I remember the statements that came out of this government. It really did sound like some government from another country that didn't quite understand the principles of free trade and business and free markets. It's almost like they were oblivious to them. They didn't understand the need for certainty in the markets when you're trying to attract capital to your jurisdiction. They didn't understand that capital is fluid and can cross borders quite easily.

It was almost beyond their comprehension that someone would take billions of dollars, like Encana did, and move them over to a different place in the United States and invest those dollars there instead of Alberta. "Oh, my gosh. We had the gas. They're going to pay to drill for it. They're going to drill for it. No problem." Well, no. It doesn't work that way. They go to where the best deal is to be made.

You didn't have this consultation, and you had this complete lack of understanding of business and, specifically, of the energy industry. It cost thousands and thousands of jobs, and we all know people that were laid off because of it. It cost the province billions in revenues. We're starting to see a slow climb out of that. Most of those punitive changes have been reversed, thanks in large part, no doubt, to the party which I belong to. [interjections] They're still in denial. That's okay. They're still in denial and still awake. That's good for us. Keep it up.

The fact is that the reason that very poor mistake was made was because they failed to do the proper consultation. They failed to ask the people that knew what they were talking about before they charged ahead and did their little deed. I see the very large similarities now with this bill. They've made a decision without any kind of consultation, without any kind of speaking with experts and affected stakeholders and just regular Albertans, for crying out loud, just people that care about our parks.

You know, there's an old adage: if it ain't broke, don't fix it. I mean, we have some of the best parks in the world here in Alberta. Obviously, there are improvements to be made, no doubt. But why would we put those up and leave to chance these parks being changed by a minister by giving her such great . . . [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other hon. member that wants to speak, before I call the vote, I just want to remind that this is a hoist amendment to the bill. A feature of the hoist amendment is this: if it is carried, that's the end of the matter and the bill disappears from the Order Paper. If it is defeated, the question is immediately put to the motion for second reading of the bill. Having that understood, the chair shall now call the question on the hoist amendment.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The bill is passed. [interjections] You're too late. I looked at you to see if anybody wanted to stand up, and nobody wanted to stand up. It's already been declared. [interjections] Hon. members, it's 11 o'clock at night, so please stay calm.

11:00 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24 Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Does any hon. member have any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chair, thank you. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Bill 24. I'm hearing from Albertans who are concerned about property rights in this province, whether it's Bill 19, 36, 50, or those on the Order Paper today; that's 26, 29, and this one, Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. The government keeps trying to make laws that enable it to act more efficiently but which trample the rights of Albertans. People are getting tired of the government disregarding rights and seeing rights as a nuisance, not as something to respect.

This bill is probably the most extreme example, really. While pore space isn't a resource most individuals have much use for, obviously there is an important use for it if we are going to go ahead with carbon capture and storage. The government wants to begin storing things in these spaces and doesn't want to go through the hassle of getting permission or using only Crown land, so government takes the pretty audacious step of declaring that it owns all pore spaces. It's that simple. Every one in the province: it all belongs to the minister of the Crown, and as the owner he can pump whatever he wants to into it whenever he wants to, and you have to make way.

The minister says that the ownership wasn't clear and insists that it's not confiscating anything. This isn't a matter of interpretation, Mr. Minister, it's wrong because by common law, unless the laws say otherwise, the landowner owns everything down to the centre of the Earth. That means if the law does not say that the government owns spaces under your land, which it doesn't, it belongs to the landowner. Common law makes interpretations like this all the time to apply itself to things the law did not previously make clear.

Now, of course, in Canada our property rights are not as strong as they could be, so the government can change the laws pretty easily like they are here, when there is a clear public purpose. But they shouldn't pretend that they are just clarifying when they are in fact claiming something that wasn't theirs before. Instead, they should come clean and say: "Look. We need to get at the best pore spaces in the province to store carbon dioxide. Because of these difficulties that will arise if we need to get permission from every single landowner near the spaces and because we are confident that the inconvenience and long-term dangers are small, we are just going to claim it. We don't like doing this, but here's our rationale."

If they respected Albertans, Mr. Chairman, they would go on to say: here's the benefit to Albertans, so here is why we're not going to compensate those who own the land even though they have a reasonable claim to the spaces to begin with. People might be able to understand and respect this, but instead this government just claims it and pretends there is no possible dispute. If they really respected property rights, they would say: here's a small amount of compensation we will offer for the use of pore spaces to those owning the land around it. Many people in rural areas are suffering, Mr. Chair, and this would be a way of helping them instead of snubbing them. Given the $2 billion amount we've dedicated to this project, this would surely be a drop in the bucket.

We might even find that people in certain areas would be willing to invite companies to use the spaces under their land. Instead, this government takes another step down its path of trampling property rights without any consultation and without any public justification. Maybe that's because they know there's a dispute about the reason that they are doing this, Mr. Chair.

In addition to concerns about property rights I've been hearing concerns from many Albertans, especially in Calgary-Fish Creek, about whether this carbon capture plan really makes sense. They're just not sure about it, Mr. Chair. They know we need to have a strong environmental record, but they think clean air and water and beautiful parks for recreation are priorities. I have a beautiful park in my riding, and it sits on the Bow. We want a clean, beautiful park where we can breathe the air and a clear Bow River running along it.

If companies were dirtying our air, water, or land, you can bet we wouldn't stand for it, but if you tell us they all need to trap their carbon dioxide the same way we exhale as we walk through parks, we're going to have a lot of questions. People from Calgary-Fish Creek support business, but they don't want industries making our province dirty in any way. They just aren't so sure that carbon dioxide is what's important. They aren't persuaded that this huge undertaking is going to make a meaningful contribution to the planet. They worry that it's a huge expense, and the idea of a tanker truck driving around the province to put pure carbon dioxide in the ground raises a lot of questions.

I agree with these concerns, and I think there may be better ways to spend this money, whether it's on transit, reducing traffic jams, or even the high-speed rail the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake gets so excited about. Or maybe there should be a tax incentive to encourage all companies and individuals to invest in more efficient technologies so Alberta can have more output with less input.

I am opposed to this bill because I am very uncomfortable with it on the grounds of property rights and on the grounds of the questionable project it paves the way for. I agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore that we should have a world-class forum so that we can decide the best investments, regulations, or deregulations the Alberta government should be making to protect our environment and make the most of our resources at the same time.

Mr. Chair, I'm looking forward to the discussion. I know that we're going to be bringing several amendments forward, and I imagine the opposition is, too. I'm looking for a good debate. I'm looking for the minister to stand up and respond on this piece of legislation and answer the questions that Albertans need to have answered.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've circulated to you an amendment to Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, and would ask you to distribute it. I'll talk to it once it's distributed.

Thank you.

The Chair: All right. We will pause a moment for the distribution of the amendment paper.

Please proceed, hon. member.

11:10

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are many strong aspects of this bill on carbon capture and storage. It helps identify a number of important legal and ownership issues, liability issues. One of the things it doesn't address, unfortunately, is that the public needs to have some input into the decisions around this bill, and this amendment is designed to enhance the bill. As proposed before section 124, we would like to see the addition of a section to foster public input.

It seems to be a recurring theme in this Legislature that this government wants to pass legislation that minimizes or places barriers before public input. We would like to remind the government that this is still a democratic country and that we want to see and encourage greater citizen involvement with these issues.

Under the first instance,

123.1(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall not make any regulation under this Act unless

- (a) the Minister has published a notice of the proposed regulation on the public website . . .
- (b) the notice complies with the requirements of this section,
- (c) the time period specified in the notice, during which members of the public and stakeholders may submit comments, has expired, and
- (d) the Minister has reported to the Legislative Assembly in accordance with subsection (4).

In addition,

- (2) The notice referred to in subsection (1)(a) must contain
 - (a) a summary of the proposed regulation and the proposed text of it;
 - (b) a statement of the time period during which members of the public and stakeholders may submit written comments on the proposed regulation to the Minister and the manner in which the comments must be submitted;
 - (c) any other information that the minister considers appropriate.
- (3) The time period referred to in subsection (2)(b) must not end until at least 30 days after the Minister gives notice.
- (4) After receiving the comments submitted under subsection (2)(b), the Minister must report to the Legislative Assembly on what, if any, changes to the proposed regulation the minister considers appropriate.

This, Mr. Chairman, is all in the name of trying to raise awareness and engagement and ensure that the kind of decisions around ownership, liability, and public right to know and to have property rights respected is addressed in a more open fashion.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Speaking to the amendment, a number of members in this Legislature are old enough to remember a '60s pop song entitled It's My Party, and I'll cry if I want to. Well, Mr. Chair, I'm going to change that song to, "It's my birthday, and I'll try if I want to, try if I want to. You would try, too, if it was your birthday, too."

The whole basis of argument in the six years that I've been a member of the Legislature has to do with what is being proposed in amendment A1 to Bill 24, and that is the erosion of democracy, the erosion of legislation, the desire of the government to seize control, whether it's through a centralized superboard or, in this case, putting unbelievable powers in the hands of either the minister or, in this specific case, the Lieutenant Governor in Council. So as an opposition, believing in the democratic process, we consider this movement behind closed doors from legislation into regulation, from the public domain into ministerial whim to be unacceptable not only to members of the opposition but to Albertans in general.

The idea of actually representing our Albertans' viewpoint seems to have been completely lost to members of the government, who no longer feel it's necessary to involve the public through legislative debate. "Just, you know, give us the power. We'll operate in some cases as benevolent dictators, in other cases just simply dictators."

Earlier today we recognized, we held a memorial service for the victims of the famine in 1932-1933, Holodomor, and the subject of that memorial service and what was pointed out in numerous speeches was the problems with dictators, the notion in the historical sense of Holodomor that Stalin ignored his people's wishes and attempted to wipe out an entire race of Ukrainian people. What is happening tonight is not the starvation of individuals in terms of preventing them from having the necessities of life, but they are being prevented from having the necessities of democracy.

Amendment A1 to Bill 24 is basically a cry, albeit somewhat in the wilderness as we approach midnight on November 22, that legislation has to prevail, that the combined wisdom of the House is better than a ministerial desire, an order in council, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the cabinet. Why should Albertans trust that this government, which has already committed $2 billion into sequestration, will not continue to bleed taxpayers dry when it comes to the liability associated with hopefully keeping CO₂ under the ground in pores? Pore can also refer to poor legislation, and that is what is happening tonight with Bill 24 and the recognition in this amendment that the minister can do what they very well please.

Democracy in this province continues to erode. What little opportunities there are to stand up and debate are being removed one bill at a time. Earlier tonight we talked about Bill 29. You could practically pull any number out of the hat over the last six years, as I say, that I've had direct experience with this Legislature, and you would see a movement to reduce the input Albertans have in the governance of this province. Mr. Chair, this is shameful. When all the members of the government unanimously stand up and say the people's wisdom, the people's value, the people's need for democratic debate counts for nothing and they put themselves on the record as saying regulation trumps legislation, then individuals living in this province should be worried about what little control they have left of the governance of this province.

I don't know if there will be a wake-up call for government members. I know there will be one come the next election, but beyond that, where will be the Damascus moment, the recognition that things must change? Mr. Chair, despite the fact that opposing the government is the equivalent of almost spitting into the wind, if we don't stand up in opposition, things will be rammed through that much faster. So it is our elected duty as opposition members chosen by our constituents as opposed to their choice of government members to bring a message to the government that this is unacceptable.

I'm very proud as the representative for Calgary-Varsity to carry that message to this Legislature and say that regulation without input, without the test of public hearings is basically regulation without representation. The last time I checked, we were still in a representational democracy. We see movements in the States, the Tea Party, trying to regain what is felt are lost democratic opportunities. While I am opposed to an awful lot of what's going on with the Tea Party, I see the frustration that they have experienced, the loss of the ability to represent the voters and have their concerns taken into account.

Mr. Chair, I am hoping that within my term I will see the government doing what's best for the people instead of what's best for individuals who have lobbied the government successfully to participate in part of this $2 billion contracting out for the sequestration of CO₂. Lord help Albertans into the future if sequestration doesn't work and they're on the hook for the liability associated with the leaking.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to rise and speak to amendment A1 on Bill 24, and I'd like to speak in favour of this. There are many amendments that will be coming forward this evening. This is one of many, but the thrust of this amendment, though, is: are we doing proper consultation? This government's track record on consultation has not been that good, and when they do have consultation, they don't listen, and that's a problem. There's been a disconnect for some time now, and I don't see it changing, but we in the opposition will do what we can to filibuster these poorly written, poorly thought-out, and poorly proposed bills that really will not serve the best interests of the people of Alberta.

I guess I'd like to go back and refer to the first consultation that this Premier did, and that was on the proposed fair share legislation. They went out. They put together a committee of five so-called experts, experts in the wrong field – they didn't realize what they were actually asking – but, nevertheless, five experts that the government put together for a panel to listen on whether or not we were getting our fair share from the oil and gas royalties in the province because there was a concern that we were shorting the people of Alberta approximately $1.4 billion. There were many stakeholders that came and made presentations, and again the problem with their consultation was that many of those stakeholders were confined to a very short presentation time on a very complex issue.

I hate to even mention the thought, but carbon capture and storage makes all of the other things that we've had in front of us pale in comparison. This is like going into grade 1 versus getting a doctor's degree in geology. This is a very, very complicated procedure that we don't know the long-term results of. There's been an awful lot written on both sides. It's interesting that Shell, in their homeland, just got defeated. The sequestration plan that they had to pump CO₂ 20 miles into a cavern was defeated there by the government, that said: "You know what? We don't have the answers to know." So I would say that not only do they need to have the public consultation; they really need – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek alluded to this earlier – a world-class forum. We need to bring in the experts from around the world and look at the complications of CO₂. We need to ask the big questions, not just the little questions on saying: how do we put some CO₂ in the ground? The real question is: is CO₂ even feasible to put in?

Let's just talk here in Alberta first. Our 240 megatonnes that are produced every year here in the province: I have yet to see any plan that shows the capability of even putting 50 per cent of that into the ground, yet we're gung-ho in this province in seeming to appear to be doing something, but it hasn't been thought out all the way. How many times have we heard in the last six years that they have no plan or that they have planned to fail because they've failed to plan the end result of what they're doing?

Premier Klein always talked about the unintended consequences. He was in the Premier's seat for a substantial amount of time, and he was faced with that dilemma many times, where they passed a bill only to realize: oh, we should have thought this through. As human beings one of the blessings that we have is deductive reasoning to ask: what is the consequence of this bill? We know that this immediate action today is going to happen, but what happens tomorrow and the week after that and a year and a decade and a century later?

It's interesting. I believe it was March 2009 that The Economist put out an article on CO₂ sequestration and just talked that, you know, it's way too risky and unknown. They at that point estimated that 60 per cent of the CO₂ that we put into these caverns will have escaped within 100 years. If, in fact, CO₂ is the great dilemma facing this Earth and that's what is going to be the cataclysmic cause, according to Al Gore, to raise the sea level 20 feet, flood out millions if not billions of people, you still have to ask the question: how do we best spend the money to adapt to this changing world?

I was just looking at a chart earlier this evening – and I'll see if I've actually still got it up here – where they were discussing the long-term climatic change on Earth. This chart goes back 900 million years. It's amazing to see the cycle of the warming and cooling on Earth in the last 900 million years. To think that we in this last 25 years have caused the change, one has to stop and say: well, are we really looking at the big picture?

The IPCC came up with their climate change panel and wanted to look at this. It's interesting that they said: we just want to look at the last 250 years and see if we can link CO₂ to the climate changes. It's interesting because when you look at some of these experts that have been studying Earth going back, you know, 900 million years, they say that the IPCC is studying 250 years, or just .000027 per cent, of the 900 million years of estimated temperature changes, temperature ranges from 28 degrees centigrade to 2 degrees centigrade with an apparently regular oscillation of about 150 million years. They go on to talk about the big picture and what are possibly some of the bigger things that we should be looking at.

In 1959 Edward Ney proposed that if climate sensitivity were related to the changes in density of tropospheric ions, it would indicate a solar climate link. The most likely explanation for changes in tropospheric ionization is variation in the rate of cosmic rays entering the atmosphere. The question is: what causes the variation? What they went on to look at and say there is that not only does the Earth revolve around the sun, but the sun revolves around the Milky Way Galaxy. It has a 150 million year revolution time period, and as it's going through there, it goes through the various spiral arms, which have intense cosmic rays and have a huge variation on the Earth. At times the ionization is 2.5 times higher in the different cycles.

If we were to have a public consultation, there are experts that could talk about these things and say: "What is the big picture here? What is it that we're trying to accomplish? Can we, in fact, accomplish what we're setting out to do?" That's what we need to be so, so very careful about because of the incredible amount of money that this government is wanting to put into CO₂ sequestration. Ask whether or not it's viable. There's no question that those companies that have received, you know, the first $700 million, $800 million, in fact, are challenged on whether or not we should be doing this. They, of course, say: well, yes, we should be doing it.

11:30

The Chair: Hon. member, we're talking about the amendment, not the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We're talking about the importance of consultation. There is no expertise here in this House to say: "Oh, we know the answer here. Let's spend $2 billion to pump CO₂ or plant food into the ground and solve our climate dilemma. There is no question."

I think that the one thing that there is consensus on, which climate change people seem to fail to recognize, is that the Earth's climate does change. But that isn't the end or the beginning of the debate. What we need and why this amendment is so important is because we need that consultation from experts. We don't need to debate three nights here and think that we've come up with the answers for the future of this province on CO₂ and be able to hold up a banner or a piece of paper, like Chamberlain when he came home from Italy, and say, "Oh, I've signed a deal with the devil – oh, I mean Hitler. There's no problem now. We can go on." That's what this is. This bill is signing a deal with the devil, the devil in the details. We don't know them.

Why we would spend so much taxpayers' money without a proper consultation is just critical. We're talking a huge percentage of the budget. You know, when you look at our budget, half of it goes to health care. This government has certainly blown that. They didn't do consultation or any thinking on what to do. They just initiated a superboard and thought that was a superneat idea – "We'll have supercontrol, and off we'll go and solve the problems" – when all they've done is exacerbated the problems. That's the same thing.

Again, we're talking about consultation, Mr. Chair. It's the same dilemma that we face here. They've come up with this super idea to take a very small percentage, five megatonnes out of 240 megatonnes, and pump it in the ground, and we're going to be able to hold up this paper to wave to the rest of the world and say, "What great people we are here in Alberta; we're solving the climate change dilemma," when we haven't even really started to scratch the surface by asking what is causing climate change. Is it the CO₂? We're talking about a trace gas, a trace gas of 300 to 400 parts per million in the atmosphere.

Again, it's just pitiful to me that we have gone after this gas and claimed it a pollutant or a toxin or a dangerous gas when, in fact, that's what is unique about our planet and why we have plant life. CO₂ is critical to that. If I remember my old high school biology, six molecules of CO₂, six molecules of H₂O, a little bit of sunlight produces six sugars, I think C₆H₁₂ or something along that line, and some oxygen, which is critical in our atmosphere. The fresh and clean oxygen that we get is from the plants that are feeding on CO₂. Yet we've gone after this like this is the villain of climate change. What we need to do is to have a public consultation. We need to bring in the experts and ask them, "What do you feel is causing this?" and not just go to Al Gore and say: oh, what kind of a movie have you made?

It's interesting that last week, when he was speaking over in Europe, he said: well, you know, first-generation ethanol plants I never really should have voted for, but you have to realize that I wanted to be the President of the United States and my Tennessee farmers really wanted ethanol from corn, so I voted for it. You need to ask the same question. Why has he been going around fearmongering in the world about the measured increase in CO₂? I think it's because he wants to put a lot of money in his pocket.

It's funny that, you know, the one side says: "Oh, you know, it's big oil. It's this. It's that." It's got this conspiracy when, in fact, I really think, if you look at it, the real conspiracy is those who say that CO₂ is the devil that's causing this climatic change and we have to eliminate it. I think that if you actually look and analyze each of those individuals and those groups, they're making far more money, far more profits than any of the other opponents of CO₂.

The purpose of this amendment is to say that we don't have the answers. This government isn't necessarily right in what it's doing, and what we really need to do is to have some consultation. Once again, when we look at that consultation, I still have a problem because 30 days isn't enough time – it's a start – to make such a huge decision that's going to have repercussions for years and years.

I just want to go back again and talk about the budget. We're talking $15 billion for health care, $6 billion for education, and then we've got this huge one coming in, $2 billion. Again, the government always wants to point out: well, this is over several years; this isn't all at once. But once you start this, if we trigger it, what have we got to do to keep pumping this into the ground? Again, I think that with public consultation it's amazing some of the directions that they'll talk about and show.

The thing that probably strikes me the most about this technology is the fact that we have to increase our energy consumption by 25 to 30 per cent just to have enough power to pump it into the ground. That's a tremendous increase in the amount of power that we need to generate in order to capture this. One has to give their head a shake and say: well, have we even thought about that? That doesn't even start to address the cost of building pipelines. CO₂ is caustic. If it gets in with any water, it becomes carboic acid. It will destroy the pipes. The stainless steel pipes that are required to transport CO₂ are expensive. So not only do we consume a lot of energy – again, if you're concerned, you know: how much stainless steel do we need to put together? How many miles of pipeline, and what's the purpose?

Then it goes back to what so many members here in the opposition have talked about, you know: what is the science? Is it actually safe to pump this under high pressure into caverns below people's property and be able to say that, yes, it's safe; we don't need to worry about it? That isn't proven. Again, what this bill is looking at saying is: we'll take the litigation and the liability on the people as a whole and not worry about it.

So I have to speak long and hard about the importance of this amendment. I would hope that everybody would vote for it, that we would go out and have public consultation, allow not only the public but go out – and, again, I still think the most critical thing we can do is to call a world-class forum. Let's look at the costs; let's look at the alternatives. We're not even looking at the alternatives. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview the other night talked about reducing our power consumption in those areas and to spend this money – I say, you know, that we could greatly reduce some of the pollutants that we know our coal-fired plants are putting out by merely taking this money and buying those coal plants and converting to gas-generated and combined-cycle plants, which would actually reduce the number of known pollutants in the air. Yet that doesn't seem to be part of the discussion. We're not looking for solutions.

As we try and look at the big picture, ask the questions, and do the deductive reasoning, this bill doesn't stand up to the test of spending that much money and saying: "This is a great idea. It's a great opportunity. Let's go full-steam ahead, full CO₂ compression ahead. We're going to be the flagship that leads the world in CO₂ sequestration."

Again, just a simple question that should be asked in the public consultation is: is it feasible? Do we even have the geological formations to pump 240 megatonnes of gas every year into the earth here in Alberta? The government with this bill wants to claim all the pore space throughout the province basically so that if they find what they think is a good and foolproof facility to take that, then the question is: well, how much pumping can we do?

11:40

Mr. Chase: It's a "pore" idea.

Mr. Hinman: It is. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has pointed out, it's a "pore" idea.

Yes. I see the chair pointing again to the amendment. We're talking about the importance of consultation – that's what this amendment is – and all of the different areas that we should and need to consult on. This is not a simple little bill that is changing our clocks from daylight savings to mountain standard. This is a bill that is going to have repercussions on for decades down the road. We're going to have repercussions on our budget for years and years to come, yet none of those questions are being addressed. They haven't been answered. The government continues to bring forward these poor bills, and they don't even present to Albertans: "Here's the science. This is why we're doing this. This is why we feel it's important that we change the legislation on how we're handling CO₂ here in the province of Alberta."

It's just so critical that we get it right. This is a huge step. You know, are we going to head north, or are we going to head south? If we go too far north, some might say: well, it's okay; it'll melt by the time we walk there, and we'll have vineyards in northern Canada. I don't think so. I think that we need to re-evaluate and look at what we're trying to do. What are the problems that we're facing? What are the challenges here in the province of Alberta? There's no question that we're being challenged with our oil and gas development, but the reality is, Mr. Chair, that we're not going to switch to a new energy in the next five years or seven years or 10 years.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, when the Leader of the Opposition circulated his amendment, I took a look at it, and it was given due consideration. I might have even been in a position to recommend acceptance of it, but I've just been talked out of it by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. You know, there's a saying that more people talk their way out of this building than talk their way in. I think we've just heard one that's on his way out.

I guess if we want to reasonably consider some amendments, we can do that, but based on what I've heard, everything from admitting that the purpose of this is a filibuster to comparing it to the Ukrainian genocide and Hitler and on and on and on, I would suggest that we do not accept this amendment.

Ms Notley: Well, with all due respect to the last speaker, I actually am rising in support of this amendment, and here's why. The amendment simply suggests that there be greater public engagement in the regulation-making process around the carbon capture and storage process, which in and of itself is extremely involved.

You know, when I first saw this proposed amendment, I decided to take a look at what the regulations were that this amendment was attempting to compel the government to discuss at some minimal length with Albertans. The amendment itself is suggesting that before the government can go behind its traditionally closed doors and make a number of regulations, instead the government needs to publish a notice of the proposed regulations and then set out the time period within which the public can respond, and then the minister has to report to the Assembly about the regulations.

Of course, this requires the whole matter to at least ever so briefly come before this House as opposed to having it stay behind the closed doors of the Conservative government's cabinet room. That's valuable, particularly if the regulations that we're talking about are not purely administrative in nature. So I thought to myself: well, self, let's look at what the regulation-making authority is that they are purporting to give to themselves under this piece of legislation. So I went to section 124 in the act and took a look at that, and there's quite a bit there. Here's what the government wants to be able to do at the cabinet table, behind closed doors, without any consultation with Albertans. They want to make rules respecting the requirements for applicants for any kind of agreements under what would be the section of the mines act, I guess, to conduct risk assessments before being granted an agreement.

Risk assessments. You know what? That's kind of an important issue because the science out there vis-à-vis the ability to engage safely over the long term with carbon sequestration is not clear. Certainly, it's not clear with respect to the different environments within which carbon might be sequestered, nor is it clear with respect to the impact that that sequestration may have on our water supply, for instance, just as an example.

The whole idea of a risk assessment being conducted before industry goes off and starts pumping carbon into whatever the heck it is they plan to pump it into, you know, is kind of a good idea. But then the idea that we're not going to talk about what that risk assessment looks like here in this House but, oh, no, no; we're going to write a cheque for $2 billion. Then we're going to go behind closed doors, and we're going to say, "You do whatever risk assessment we decide to come up with," without ever consulting with the public, and you're off to the races. Well, I mean, even for this government that is new level of embarking upon ridiculously unsafe and potentially risky and far-reaching industrial activity and supporting it without talking to Albertans about what this means.

I think that the government should have to come back to this Legislature before they make regulations around what a risk assessment would look like. Would they have to talk to people in the community? Would they have to consult with scientists? Would they have to talk to anybody other than the industry that's proposing to be able to engage in the sequestration? Would they have to do anything other than roll the dice and say, "Well, it's not our issue anyway because we're going to hand liability over to the taxpayer ultimately so, you know, whatever"? I mean, what's the risk assessment going to look like? Maybe they'll just write a regulation saying: "You know what? Throw the dice three times, and if it turns up this way, then you're good to go." We don't know, which is why it should come back to the Legislature because this is a really, really important issue.

What else is the minister going to get to make his own rules around? Well, the minister is going to be able to make his own rules around the closure plans for industry once they've established a well or once they've engaged in some form of sequestration, what that looks like and what monitoring plans should look like. Will they monitor once a year? Will they monitor once a decade? Hey, once a century? Let's ensure that they monitor once a century. We'll write that regulation out. We'll do it at the cabinet table, and we will not bring it to Albertans for them to render any decision on.

How about the question of how often they need to report about their plans? Do Albertans get to know about it? Or is it going to be yet another one of those things that is hidden from Albertans because it might possibly have an impact on the competitiveness of business? Albertans can't know about that because it could have an impact on the company's bottom line. Yet it's something that's kind of integral to the safety of our environment and the health of our children and all these kinds of things. You know, once again the government wants to make regulations around that kind of issue behind closed doors without bringing it back into the House to talk to Albertans. Well, that's unacceptable.

Here's one. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the injection of captured carbon dioxide. So the whole new world of mining through CCS injection: we're just going to govern that through regulation that we write at the cabinet table without ever talking to Albertans about it. Well, that's just great. I mean, really, this is a new low for this government, I have to say.

Oh, here's a good one. The government will make regulations respecting the remedial actions that a lessee shall undertake, including regulations respecting when they might need to do a remedial action plan, what that plan would look like, when they have to submit and have the plan approved, when they can amend the plan, and the reporting requirements around that plan. So does the government have to tell taxpayers and citizens about what kind of remedial action an oil company or some other industrial player needs to take once they've engaged in sequestration and, heaven forbid, they have somehow disrupted the environment in the course of doing that? Well, we don't know what they need to do because that's what the minister gets to decide behind closed doors after consulting with his or her friends in industry and — here's the most important thing — without talking to Albertans about it.

In fact, this government is so interested in making sure that they don't talk to Albertans about it that we are having this debate at 10 minutes to midnight — 10 minutes to midnight — on a Monday night. How ridiculous is that? This House has sat a combined total of maybe 16 weeks this year. It is the shortest session, probably, of any Legislative Assembly in the country. The government should be utterly ashamed of how scared they are of this Assembly and how far they will go to hide what they are doing and to shorten the Assembly so that they can stay away from question period one extra day because the minute they come into the Assembly, it starts looking bad for them. Stuff starts blowing up all over, and files start blowing up. There's a press scrum every day, and it's not looking good for them. How do we answer that? Well, we have one of the shortest sittings in the country, if not the shortest. We try to pack everything into a four-week session in the fall, which is, again, shameful, and we decide that we're going to debate this rather meaningful and important piece of legislation at 10 minutes to midnight for no particular reason.

I could kind of get this if we'd been at it for, you know, a number of weeks, but, no. We've barely been in the House. You guys are so scared of the public and so scared of having this stuff talked about in the open that we are here at 10 to midnight. One of the things we are doing while we're here at 10 to midnight is giving you guys regulatory authority to move forward on this bill without ever having to have a conversation that is on the record for Albertans to read or see ever again. That's why the amendment that's been proposed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is so important, because that would require this government, God forbid, to inch their way ever so cautiously and fearfully back into the Assembly and actually have to talk to Albertans about these extremely consequential changes and proposals that they are considering giving themselves the authority to make under cover of night through this piece of legislation.

So what else is it that they are wanting to do without ever talking to Albertans about it and making sure that we talk about this tonight at 10 to 12 on one of the few days that the Legislature has actually sat this year? Well, they want to be able to make regulations regarding the overall closure of a sequestration initiative. They want to make regulations regarding the $2 billion fund, regarding the administration of the fund, regarding what the minister can or can't do with the fund, regarding fees into the fund. That's good. We're going to put $2 billion of taxpayers' money into a fund, but we are not going to articulate how that's to be used in legislation. Wow. That's really quite something.

Then the other one that I find — well, of course, we've also gotten into that they want to make regulations about liability, but we will talk about that a little bit later. The other one that I really find interesting is that what they want to be able to do is to make regulations regarding the monitoring of wells and facilities that must be conducted before and after a closure certificate is issued.

Now, with something as simple as conventional oil this government has dropped the ball with respect to the remediation of orphaned oil wells. We have a huge unfunded liability throughout this province because we have failed to obtain adequate security from industry to cover the remedial costs of the simple conventional oil extraction processes that we have approved over the last 50 years, relatively simple oil extraction, conventional oil. We've got a huge unfunded liability to government. Even in that case, with the nothing-but-successful state of the oil and gas industry over the last 50 years, we have still somehow managed to fail to extract adequate financial security from this industry to deal with that outstanding liability.

Now what we want to do is take $2 billion of taxpayers' money and give it to industry for a process which most scientists will tell you is experimental at best, which may well have profound consequences to our environment, to our water supplies for beyond generations to come. And we want to do all of that through regulation. We want to do it behind closed doors, and we absolutely do not want this Legislature to ever turn its mind again to how it is that we are going to ensure that they monitor and plan for the safe closure of these wells or these initiatives.

This amendment that's being proposed is actually quite a modest amendment in many regards. Honestly, had I had the chance to think this amendment through and write up such a one myself, I probably would have made it a great deal more rigorous. I would have asked for more notice. I would have stipulated in more detail the consultation process.

What I do like about this is that once the regulation is posted and consultation is completed and input is received, the minister is compelled to come back to the Legislature and at least make a report. Presumably, the intention is that they have to make that report before they can actually enact the regulations, so it allows for some time for the public to respond. I'd still like to see some mechanism to ensure that it's actually debated, and I'm not quite sure how I'm going to do that.

I do applaud the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for attempting to do what's being done here in terms of putting some type of limitation on this emperor-like authority that the minister would like the members of this Assembly to give him with respect to this both very costly and also profoundly impactful initiative that he would like Albertans to fund, both in terms of their immediate dollars as well as the long-term liabilities to their health and safety.

For that reason, I do very much support this amendment, and I anticipate voting in favour of this amendment.

But I really have to say that I'm quite disappointed and really quite surprised to see the members opposite playing the kinds of games that they're playing tonight by ramming this thing through, commencing debate on this bill at 11 p.m. – at 11 p.m. – after the Legislature did not reconvene until October 25, when all of the opposition members were quite happy to be told that we were going to reconvene in the second week of September because, we were told, there was so much important work to be done in this session. So it was really important for us to roll up our sleeves and come back early and really be the good legislators that we are.

Instead, no, no, no. No, we actually could spend another six weeks travelling around, doing a whole bunch of stuff and staying away from any unplanned media events or any kind of open challenge to the merits of their plans, and instead we would limit the legislative session this fall to a mere six weeks. Or what is it? We had two before we broke, and now we're at three: five weeks this fall. That, of course, after we ended in April after a mere two months in session this spring. But I guess it's really, really important that we debate this at midnight because there are just not enough hours in the day and not enough days in the week and not enough weeks in the year, especially when, as I say, we have a government that is so fearful of coming into the Assembly and engaging in an open and moderately accountable form of governance.

That's what we have to say on this. At this point I will once again congratulate the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and indicate that the NDP caucus will be fully supporting this amendment.

The Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: On the amendment. All right. Bill 24. We we're talking about consultation here, which is the gist of this amendment, and we've been talking about consultation a lot today, or the lack thereof, by this government.

I just had to get up after hearing the gibberish coming from over there from the Minister of Energy talking about how . . . [interjection] You know, I'm glad you're watching the press clippings. That's good. You should keep hearing those footsteps. It's going to be a long night, so get comfortable.

Here's the issue. We keep on passing bills in this Legislature without doing proper consultation on them, and it really doesn't make a whole lot of sense. [interjection] One of the members over there says that we've done more consultation than anybody. Well, if you did so much consultation, you wouldn't have so many people always in an uproar, starting with the new royalty framework, to Bill 50 to Bill 36 to Bill 19 to Bill 29. Bill 17 is coming down the pike. You're losing MLAs left, right, and centre, and the reason you're doing it is because you don't do consultation. If you did consultation, you wouldn't have so damn many problems over there holding on to good people. That's the problem.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, just a point of order. I believe the word "damn" is prohibited under Beauchesne 489.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, speak to the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: It's about public input, getting public input. Public input: a synonym for input, consultation. It's not that difficult to get your head around, well, for most people, anyway.

The problem this government has is that they forge ahead without thinking, without consulting, without having public input, which is what this amendment is about, public input. That's the problem. We see it again and again and again. We just saw it earlier with Bill 29. We go through Bill 29, and they just come up with this new idea that we're going to give the minister all these different powers so that the land-use framework can be implemented as the bureaucracy wants without the problem of having to go to the Legislature and putting their ideas to a vote.

We see it here with carbon capture and storage. There's been no proper public consultation done. I mean, you're talking about science. Yes, for sure, it's been used for enhanced oil recovery. No doubt about it. No one disputes the fact that it's been used for enhanced oil recovery. Absolutely. But never on a mass scale to the degree that we are talking about here has it ever been used. We're not talking about, you know, getting a little bit of oil out of an abandoned well or out of a well that has been left. We're talking about storing massive – massive – amounts, unprecedented amounts of a potentially deadly gas, if it's in high concentrations, in the ground on a massive scale.

I mean, we do not know the effects of this because it's never been done before on this scale. We've seen it used for enhanced oil recovery. We've not seen it stored under the ground to this degree, and it could be very dangerous, Mr. Chair. You know, it worries me, and it worries Albertans. I mean, there are stories. Obviously, if anybody has done any kind of research on this, you have these CO₂ bursts that have occurred in a couple of places in Africa, for example, where naturally occurring CO₂ is released. People die from it. It can happen. We're talking about pumping incredible amounts of this gas into the ground and concentrating it. You know, is it theoretically not supposed to be released? I guess so. But theory is one thing, and reality is another thing, especially when something is unproven, like this is. We also don't understand exactly, when you get so much of this concentrated in a single spot, how it affects the aquifer. We don't quite know that yet because it's never been done on the scale that we're talking about here.

There are all these different questions, not to mention the horrendous cost involved to the taxpayer. I tell you what I'd like to get public input on. The amount of money that this minister and this Premier are investing in carbon capture and storage: is it worth it? Is it worth it to spend this kind of money, $2 billion, on essentially an unproven science, at least unproven to this degree that they're talking about here, with this massive amount of storage of CO₂, as opposed to enhanced oil recovery? Is it worth $2 billion in grants to corporations to pump CO₂ into the ground? I mean, it's just beyond belief.

With all of the things that are happening in our health care system and in our education system and all the different priorities, the massive $5 billion book deficit, a $7.7 billion cash shortfall that we're funding by draining our sustainability fund, which was at $18 billion and is now projected to be $10 billion by the end of this year, the new debt that we're incurring, $3 billion this year alone, all this stuff, well, that's what I'd like public input on, Mr. Chair. Part of public input is taxpayers. I'm sure the Taxpayers Federation or CFIB or some other entity would want to have public input into these projects as they come forward and certainly into this bill.

That's a problem because I'm extremely confident that if this did go to the public and the public was asked, "Is this an appropriate way to spend $2 billion?" I am sure the public would come back with the input of: "No, it's not. It's a waste of money. It's an absolute waste of money." Of those that, you know, think that cutting emissions of CO₂ is exceptionally important, I think that even the majority of those people would still think that this is not worth the $2 billion. They would want to see it spent on other things, things that are going to actually cut down on pollution overall and actually might do some good for society like mass transportation and increasing that sort of thing or retrofitting homes with panels or something like that. Even people who think that we have to slash our emissions a great deal: those folks think it's a waste of money, too.

Obviously, some of the companies like it because, hey, it's free money. Stick it into the ground; you could use it for enhanced oil recovery. You know, what the heck? This government has been back in the business of business for so long that I think they forget what it was like before. But it's a great deal: "We can get all of this good money. We can pump it into the ground. We can get a little bit of oil, a little bit of money out of it. Super. Great." Well, I don't think taxpayers think it's that good of a deal. If it's such a great idea, well, then let the companies do it themselves. Let them make the investment and pump the CO₂, pump the living daylight out of CO₂ into the ground, as much as they bloody well want, get as much oil out of the ground as they could possibly ever desire with this technology if it's such a good technology.

If we had public input on that, if we actually put it to the taxpayer for public input, I think they'd say that this is garbage, that we shouldn't be investing in this. Clearly, we should be investing in other things if we're going to cut emissions, and we shouldn't be wasting it on this. I think that if we did public input, they'd say: "You know what? We need to worry about our emergency room crisis. We need to worry about making sure that all these empty hospital rooms that we have out there are fully staffed with nurses and doctors." I think the public input would be that that's where we would want the money spent, not $2 billion on sticking hot air into the ground.

I think that if you did some public input and public consultation, people would say: "You know what? We need schools for our kids. We don't need $2 billion spent on pumping hot air into the ground." I think that if you did some public input and public consultation, you would see that most of the folks you consulted with would say: "You know what? I'm actually worried about the debt load that we're leaving on our kids."

Apparently, we've decided, you know, that we're going to spend all the money in the here and now, and we don't give a rat's you-know-what about our kids' future. We're willing to go $5 billion into the hole this year, actually $7.7 billion if you include the cash deficit. That's what we're willing to do, and $2 billion of that, over the next however long it's going to be that they're going to spend on it, is going to be spent on pumping CO₂ into the ground.

I mean, it's just public input. If this government ever did it on this issue, it would clearly come back that this is not worth the money. It's a ton of money. Now, people will say: well, it's only a hundred million dollars this year. Well, a hundred million. Good grief. That's a ton of money this year. That's a lot of money. Jeepers, how many schools is that? That's seven, eight, nine schools – right? – something like that. It's a ton of infrastructure. That's also an amount that you can take off the debt. Not only that, but it's a hundred million this year, and next year it's supposed to be more, and the year after that it's really ramping up.

I really think that it is a huge mistake to invest this type of money on a corporate granting scheme to some of the richest corporations in Alberta. Public input would definitely bring this out, I think. I mean, there's no doubt in my mind. It just shocks me. There are people over there in that caucus who I really thought were conservative. What conservative in their right mind – I think public input would bring this out – would want to spend $2 billion on a project like this? I guarantee that if they did a public consultation, the answer that would come back, without any doubt in my mind, is: "No, we don't want you to spend this money on this type of thing. It is ridiculous to spend this kind of money on this."

That's a problem. If you consulted the taxpayers of Alberta and they were allowed to bring forward their thoughts, I'm positive that they would say: not worth it. The government says: oh, we need to do this, you know, so that we can all feel good about it, and we can do our advertising, and our American customers will still buy our oil. It's like they're immune, or they don't read the newspaper or something like that. We just had a shift of historical proportions in the United States. We had there, I think, the biggest swing in seats since 1932. One of the main issues there – there were a couple of them – one of the big three, was the cap and trade, the cap and taxes, as they call it down there in the U.S. Because of that switch, that cap and tax idea was rejected overwhelmingly by the American people.

If anything, the Americans are convinced – our biggest customer is convinced – that they don't want anything to do with these ridiculous carbon emissions and, you know, taking them down using a cap and trade bill or anything else, for that matter. They don't want big government subsidies dedicated to this type of thing, to carbon capture and storage and all these things. It's not a priority for them. When people say, "Well, we're doing this carbon capture and storage in order to appease our American customers," that's garbage. That's not what's happening down there. That agenda has been rejected, and until it's back on the table again, why are we spending money like drunken sailors trying to appease people that are no longer in power? Nancy Pelosi is not the Speaker of the House anymore. Sorry.

An Hon. Member: She is till January.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's right. She is till January. You're correct on that. That's good.

In January she won't be anymore, so why are we doing all this to appease someone that's not going to be in power in the House? It doesn't make any sense. What we should be doing is concentrating on our people here in Alberta, concentrating on what their needs are. Should we lower pollution? Absolutely we should lower pollution, so let's focus our monies and our energy on lowering real pollutants. Let's spend some money on that. That's all right. There's a balance that has to be put into place, so let's do it, but let's focus on things like good infrastructure that's actually going to take people and workers from point A to point B. That's good infrastructure. That's infrastructure spending that we should be making, investments we should be making, and we do that by decentralizing out to the municipalities and allowing them to spend the money without us holding their hand. They will make those investments in mass transit, and they will make those investments in making our infrastructure greener.

So, yeah, those are all very important things that we can do, but we can't do it if we don't do proper public consultation. I mean, that's the key, hon. member. It really is. We talked earlier about the public consultation that's needed for consulting the taxpayers on such a gross waste of money and how even the NDP, even though they agree that we need to massively slash carbon emissions, thinks that this is a waste of money. You know you've really blown it when even the NDP thinks this is a complete boondoggle. I mean, that really does say something. All you need to know on that.

I really do not accept the premise that we do this in order to advertise or show the world that we're serious about tackling climate change. I mean, we can get into the science about what part is settled in that debate and what part is not settled. I know that makes everyone very uncomfortable because we don't want to ever talk about something that meaningful that could affect the direction of the entire world, you know, the entire world economic system. Sure wouldn't want to discuss something like that. We just have to kind of – whatever is politically correct, that's all we'll ever say.

For those of us who believe that it's important to make sure we take a very measured response and that any response that we do take to reducing our emissions should be aimed at very practical solutions that actually improve people's lives and reduce harmful pollutants to people's health, you know, this is definitely not the answer. Again, I think it's very clear that if they did a consultation, a proper public consultation, there is no doubt in my mind that the answer that would come back is: no, this is an absolute waste of money, total waste of money. Until this project gets cancelled, we're going to continue to stand in this Legislature until the cows come home and say that it's a waste of money.

I tell you, you talk to Albertans on the doorstep as you go door-knocking, and they talk about the need for new schools in their community. They talk about the need to get more docs and nurses in the empty buildings that we keep building that don't have anybody in them, for health infrastructure. They talk about the need for that, but never have I said: "You know what we really need to do? We really need to spend $2 billion on pumping CO₂ in the ground. That's what we need to do. What a great idea that is." I mean, it's absolutely asinine, just so ridiculous that we would spend taxpayer money. All the hard hours that go into earning money and paying taxes, and we take it and just flush it down the pipeline to the CO₂ toilet. That's what this is. This is really a CO₂ sewage system that we're creating here. It's like a big septic tank. Yeah, and it's just not very cool.

You know, it's one of those things where I think that as Albertans get to know how wasteful this project is, and they already are, they will absolutely reject it. I think that if there was proper consultation done, that that would be the verdict. It's too bad, you know, because I would really like – in some ways, if MLAs were able to speak up for their constituents and they were able to actually come into this House and freely say, "You know what; sorry; I know I'm a part of your government, but this is BS; my constituents absolutely do not want this to be something that we spend money on," I think that you would need a little less public consultation because people would actually come here and represent their constituents and say: "You know what? This is a gross waste of taxpayer dollars." Oh, time is up.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to speak to the amendment to Bill 24 which has been proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. I just want to indicate that I'm going to be supporting this amendment. It has, you know, a number of advantages. It provides for some very, very rigorous public consultation, ensures that the public has clear notice of whatever regulations the government is considering, and requires them to actually make sure that the public is aware of that. Those are all good things because I also feel that this particular project, this program of the government of spending $2 billion on carbon capture and storage, is a waste of taxpayers' money and potentially a big boondoggle.

I've spoken about it already, so I'm not going to speak at length about this, only to say that even the Wildrose Alliance, at least some of whose members do not actually believe in a human-induced climate change, if you can believe it, despite all of the science, thinks that this is a wasteful project. If even the Wildrose Alliance is saying that this is a waste of money, those members – I mean, I know there's a former Environment minister who has a more scientific view of climate change, but there are a couple of Flat Earth Society characters here that don't actually believe in human-induced climate change. If even those members of the Wildrose Alliance are against this project, you know that it's a bad project and a waste of time.

So I would urge all hon. members to support this particular amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much. It absolutely amazes me, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and the very astute comments that he just made relative to this issue. I can say that wonders will never cease in terms of what is taking place and occurring across Alberta. Certainly we can feel the change that is in the air, based on what people are saying in coffee shops. I might add that this amendment that's put forward is really about trying to close the gap between government and what people are saying.

In actual fact, I think perhaps the members across the way will agree to this amendment; they will agree with the idea of consulting with the very bosses that own this resource. The bosses are the people that give each and every one of us in this Assembly the honour and privilege to represent them and to listen to them. Consequently, I believe it's a fundamental principle and pillar of most political parties. It seems to me that this bill, the cavern and the canyon that exists and the gap between what Albertans are saying in coffee shops versus the legislation that we see here – at no point were they consulted. They were ignored. How often can you ignore and how often can you pretend to not listen to your bosses? This is a prime example of that.

We believe that this amendment should clearly be a very noble and principled approach to consulting with Albertans. So to the hon. members across the way, I would only hope that, since they do have the majority of 68 members in here, they give serious thought to this reasoned amendment, this reasoned amendment being that of consulting with Albertans. I don't know any elected official that would want to see this cavern and this gap continue to grow even further.

I think we saw that earlier today, when you had an MLA in the caucus decide to speak on behalf of his constituents and the result was: no, you have to toe the line of the government. Ultimately, when you toe the line, you ignore your bosses, and that is very unfortunate. In fact, often some refer to it as a dilemma. You get elected by your bosses, the voters, you come here, yet someone seems to have forgotten that the gap continues to grow wider in terms of what Albertans are saying and what is going on in the coffee shops and the legislation we see in front of us.

On this day, November 22, now November 23 as it's past midnight, I can only say that there is no doubt in my mind that this will be a pivotal moment in the future of this province. I think the price of this moment will come about a year and a half from now, in March of 2012. So this is friendly advice to the governing party with the majority: it's time for you to consult and listen to Albertans. That's why each and every member of this House, especially on the governing Conservative side or, I should say, the PC side, not the Conservative side – because, really, we speak for the conservatives in Alberta today. We speak for them because it's true Alberta values – true Alberta values – that really are values that are a pillar of this great province.

In fact, even Peter Lougheed back in the early '70s believed in true conservative values. He believed in consulting with Albertans, and that's just simply not happening today. It's the Ed way or the highway. Raj Sherman found that out today, and I discovered that, to my pleasant surprise, last summer.

The Chair: Hon. member, you should not use the names of members. And we're talking about the amendment.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, I apologize. On the amendment.

I want to clarify, though, on the public consultation, that I'll certainly be consulting with Dr. Raj Sherman . . .

Mr. Anderson: No, no. Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'm sorry. I've read his name so much today in the media, and it's not printed as Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Having said that, I think that on the amendment at some point – we really should get back to standing rules where we talk about people's names because rather than Edmonton-Meadowlark, it seems to be closer to the way people talk in coffee shops. Maybe that's something for further review in terms of the standing orders.

Mr. Anderson: We'll do that in 14 months.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah, in 14 months we'll do it for sure.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is about consulting with Albertans. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has, in my judgment, truly not forgotten who his bosses are. This amendment will restore the confidence in consulting with Albertans, asking the bosses what they think of a bill that, in my judgment, will jeopardize the future of Albertans. And for those that have young children, clearly, we are concerned about not only our future with our children and grandchildren but future generations.

At this time our party believes in energy solutions. This is not an energy solution. To the Minister of Environment, who is here this evening, in my community of Fort McMurray it used to take 40 years to be able to get a reclamation certificate. I'm very proud of the great work of our first company in oil sands, then called the Great Canadian Oil Sands, now referred to as Suncor, who, in fact, are receiving their reclamation certificate after only 40 years.

This amendment on consulting with Albertans: Albertans would say that we want to be assured of the future in the oil sands and the future in the environment and that the future of sustaining the environment is absolutely critical for the future of this great province of ours. But, please, it's time to narrow the gap as opposed to widening it. This legislation, failing to consult with Albertans, the failure of this government to believe that they can't simply just go forward and that they're smarter than Albertans is unacceptable.

Mr. Chair, I believe that the future of our province when it comes to issues such as the amendment to consult with Albertans is very, very important. We need to look, really, deeper into the issues. As we look into the issues that face our sustainability in the future, it's very important. Do we know what this bill will do when it comes to sustainability? I don't think that we have the answers to that.

The problem today is that we continue to see more and more consuming capital, not income. If you're consuming capital but not the income, you are really putting the province as a whole and its natural resources at a deficit. I believe that in this situation that's exactly what's taking place. I believe that it's important to heighten the discussion. I believe that there's an excellent point in this, that our collective demands on nature's capacity for renewal are being exceeded annually by a certain percentage. On this basis we want to ensure that we don't extract from Mother Nature and Mother Earth and, as I used to refer to it, the mother ship. We don't want to consume capital. We don't want to consume capital because if you're consuming capital, clearly, you are taking away from what the Creator has created.

The echo that you heard was not from the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. That was an echo from paper that I had on my microphone. That's comforting to know.

That's one small step of narrowing the gap between what people are saying in coffee shops versus what we need to be really looking at in the long term.

Now, let me just draw to you a few other comments that I think are very, very important. The legislation that's in front of us is something that we really, really need to examine more closely. Let me give you a few other examples. We want to ensure that there is not what I refer to as joined-up thinking. If everyone is thinking the same, then no one is thinking. So one has to look across the way and wonder: how can a caucus be unanimous when there are 68 elected MLAs? Does that represent the view of Albertans? I think that that's where the gap exists, when you have 68 MLAs, when you have a whip from West Yellowhead saying: it's unanimous; we all think the same way. Yet at the same time Albertans, based on the 600 posted comments tonight, clearly do not think the same way. Look out. You haven't seen anything yet.

Joined-up thinking, I believe, is a weakness when it comes to legislation such as this because joined-up thinking says that we're all thinking the same based on what we're being told as opposed to what our bosses are saying. I believe that you want to ensure that you have active discussion, discussion that will consult with Albertans.

What's missing in this particular issue tonight is the fact that there is not simply any type of tension. There is no type of disagreement. So when I hear the whip from the other side say, "It's unanimous; all 68 of us are thinking the same way," one has to question the fact: have you been listening to what your constituents, your bosses, have been saying? It is the people of Alberta that have the true power, not someone with a fancy minister title, not someone in an Executive Council, not someone with a title who forgets who their bosses are.

As we go forward, we truly have to examine, you know, the insight that is provided from what our people of Alberta are saying. That's for the betterment for our children.

Now, one of the chief architects of our present economic model, in my view, based on this true Conservative party, was Adam Smith, and this year happens to be the 250th anniversary of the publication of his Theory of Moral Sentiments. Some of you, many over there, perhaps might have read . . .

The Chair: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, we're talking about the amendment here. The topic of it is public input and all the list of causes here, so please refer to it.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Can I take the opportunity under the public consultation on this issue in making reference to Adam Smith? It happens to be the 250th anniversary. I say that because under public consultation Adam Smith believed, believed clearly, his Theory of Moral Sentiments, in which he sought to define the balance between a private right and natural freedom. It's interesting tonight on this bill under a public consultation that he was another one who recognized that although individual freedom is rooted in our impulse for self-reliance, it must be balanced by the limits imposed by natural law. Natural law, let me say, talks about this very principle tonight of consultation with the public because it must be balanced by the limits imposed by natural law.

I am very concerned that a bill that takes CO₂, puts it in the ground, and fails to consult with the true owners of our democratic freedoms that we have is missing the point because I believe it's tipping the balance, it's tipping the limit, and it also is tipping the moral sense relative to the principle. In all of these principles under Bill 24 we must have a sympathy to all of these things, and it is this sympathy that binds communities together.

What I am concerned about under Bill 24 tonight is the failure to consult because when you have a failure to consult, you have a failure to represent your constituents. Clearly, we are continuing to see more and more examples of that. Rooted – rooted – in our impulse for self-reliance, it must balance those limits imposed by natural law. That's what's missing in this failure to consult. There needs to be exactly and specifically the public's right and responsibility to be consulted with. This is not being adhered to in this motion tonight. Therefore, the existence of what is being done tonight is a disconnect with the very owners who we should be listening to.

I think tonight the bill clearly should be amended to ensure that there is a consultation with the public, so I think it's mandatory for this government, as much as they have 68 members, to truly come forward and support this amendment. I'm sure tonight they will do the correct thing because at the end of the day we want to ensure that there is an organic grammar of harmony when it comes to what is taking place between the public, the bosses, and the existing governing party. So if you're failing to come forward with the organic grammar of harmony which is infused with the awareness of its very own being that Adam Smith talks about, then you're failing the very fundamental principle of conservatism.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I believe we are losing the historic moment. If this motion and this bill tonight and the amendment to this Bill 24 is lost, then clearly the gap will continue to widen. If the gap continues to widen, then we will lose our interconnectedness with our communities. We will continue to lose that important function of creation with harmony existing between all things and all people, and our communities will be lost. The very 68 MLAs that purport to represent their constituencies will have to go back . . .

An Hon. Member: There are 67 now.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, I'm sorry. There are 67 now: 72, 71, 70, 69, 68, and now 67. Watch out. That gap will continue if you're not listening to your owners.

Therefore, it's important tonight, in my view as a former Minister of Environment, that we need to build a foundation, a foundation of consulting with what I refer to as our natural House, and the natural House is our communities.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that, ladies and gentlemen in this Assembly tonight, you'll do the right thing. You'll do the right thing of clearly taking this amendment and supporting it. Surprise us all – surprise us all – in terms of how we go forward.

Mr. Chairman, tonight in the amendment to Bill 29, we need to truly learn . . .

Mr. Hinman: Bill 24.

Mr. Boutilier: I was making reference to Bill 24. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is always willing to help, and I appreciate his long-term view of showing an interest in the importance of sustainability. But that's what we want to guard against.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I do know I have a few more moments. Having said that, I believe that I will now take my seat and allow my distinguished colleagues . . . [interjection] I see someone across the way was clapping their hands when I said that I would take my seat. Please raise your hand, who was clapping.

Mr. Anderson: They were excited to hear you, Guy. They wanted more, much more.

Mr. Boutilier: Okay. I will continue.

The Chair: Hon. members, speak through the Chair, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Through the Chair, Mr. Chairman, I will continue on.

I believe that this fails to demonstrate an elegant piece of long-term thinking. That's what this fails to do. I believe that . . . [Mr. Boutilier's speaking time elapsed] With that, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for listening.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It's such a short debate we're having on such an important issue. Again, to speak about the importance of public input is paramount. I have to respond to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who brought in the flat Earth theory that I'm not sure he subscribes to or whether he thinks he's falling off of the edge of the Earth. I wonder how many people in Alberta are going to have a medical flatline for lack of public consultation. This, again, is the purpose of this amendment. It's the question that we need to do. The fact is that we're getting e-mails here, and it's my honour to be able to respond and to give the public consultation now, while this bill is being debated in the Committee of the Whole. It's important that we get a few more things on the record on why public input is so important.

There are numerous people throughout the province here that are very concerned about the direction this government is going, the tax dollars they're spending. Again, that's a whole public consultation that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere brought up. Are we going to ask the taxpayers if, in fact, this is a priority when we have failure in our emergency rooms, we have failure for our seniors to have facilities for them to go to, and we have failure for those that have mental health issues? Yet we have $2 billion to pump CO₂ into the ground, to take plant food and put it into the ground.

Another interesting question that this world-class forum should be having is that the slight rise in the CO₂, from about 300 to 380 parts per million, has actually increased agricultural production, the agronomists feel, between 10 and 15 per cent. What are we looking at? If we have a food shortage, perhaps this is the actual answer versus the problem. It's interesting, though, the huge debate on this that the public would be able to put in to such a forum, to such a venture of this government, to actually listen. But, again, I can understand why many people feel: well, why bother?

It was interesting, when I was out door-knocking, the number of people that asked the question: "Well, why should I bother voting? You're all the same when you get in there. You don't listen. You do what you want to do, and there's a disconnect." We need to stand up for the good policies, good economic policies, to stand up for the good programs that we have for our education, for our health care. It's that public consultation. How much time is actually being spent going door to door and asking people, you know: what are your priorities? How many people have actually sent out a questionnaire to our constituents saying: "What are your priorities? Are you in favour of spending $2 billion on CO₂ sequestration?"

When you put out the list of priorities and ask them what they want, I can assure you that the number one priority for the people in my riding is infrastructure. They need a ring road in southwest Alberta. This government – again, another area where it has failed – didn't do the proper consultation with the First Nations. They didn't come up with a credible contract. They didn't say: you know, we will try to get you more land. Even when they do the consultation, they fail often to listen to that consultation.

Mr. Chair, public consultation is critical. It's something that needs to be addressed, but again many Albertans feel: "What's the point of this government doing public consultation? They're not going to listen to us anyway." They didn't listen to the vast majority of people that made presentations to the new royalty commission, and they went ahead against the overwhelming evidence that was presented to them.

Another area here that's very disappointing is that there are no members of the government standing up and speaking and putting forward their reasons, their research on why they say that we should be sequestering CO₂ into the ground. It's also interesting that there is very little that's actually going to enhanced oil recovery. What are the limitations? How much can we use? What percentage can we use? There are just so many areas on public consultation that I am remiss almost to give up the floor for another amendment because it's going to be hard to be able to have so many things that we can draw on to ensure that this bill receives public consultation through tweeting, through Facebook, through e-mails.

Mr. Anderson: You should see all the people who read about CCS on here.

Mr. Hinman: The hon. member is receiving some from Airdrie-Chestermere.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll sit down. I urge this government to vote in favour of this amendment. We need to have more public input. We need to have more expertise input. What we really need is a world-class forum. We need to ask the question: what is the end result? What are the unforeseen consequences of us starting down this road of spending billions of dollars? What's the maximum that we hope to be able to pump into the earth? What's the extra energy that we're going to have to consume in order to do this? There are so many questions that are not answered.

If they were answered, I believe that what we would do is have a change in direction and realize that there are better areas to try and clean up our air, to clean up our land, to clean up our water. I've spoken many times about it, but it's a new energy policy. We should be looking at one-carbon fuels, natural gas, not multicarbon fuels. We could do a much better job of having an impact on our environment if we actually focused on those areas where we can make the biggest change. Pumping CO₂ into the ground is going to consume energy, consume taxpayers' money, and do very little to change what they are claiming to do, and that's to reduce the temperature increase here on Planet Earth.

I'll see what other members here have to discuss on public consultation. I see some anxious to get up and speak on it.

12:50

The Chair: Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I thoroughly enjoyed the debate that we're having this evening. I found it to be interesting, to say the least. As much as I would love to stay and hear from the opposition with more amendments, that I understand are coming, some of us have work to do tomorrow. I would then suggest that perhaps we should try and get a little bit of sleep before we show up for work in the morning. For that reason, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

The Chair: We need a motion to rise and report.

Mr. Renner: And I will also move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 24. I wish to table copies of the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, now I move that the House adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:53 a.m. on Tuesday to 1:30 p.m.]
